ors., Respondents.

Hindu law—Will—Construction—Bequest to widows by Mithila Hindu—Interest given whether absolute or limited—"Malik," "malkiyat," meaning and effect of—Danger of construing one Will by reference to another—Translation of vernacular documents, challenged in the High Court—Proper procedure.

The term "malik," when used in a Will or other document as descriptive of the position which a devisee or donee is intended to hold, has been held apt to describe an owner possessed of full proprietary rights, including a full right of alienation, unless there is something in the context or in the surrounding circumstances to indicate that such full proprietary rights were not intended to be conferred. But the meaning of every word in an Indian Will must always depend upon the setting in which it is placed, the subject to which it related, and the locality of the testator from which it may receive its true shade of meaning.

Where a Hindu governed by the Mithila School of Hindu Law purported by his Will to confer on his wives "full power and all proprietary rights (malkiyat) over all his moveable and immoveable properties":

Held—That the rights intended to be conferred included full rights of alienation.

It is always dangerous to construe the words of one Will by the construction of more or less similar words in a different

Will which was adopted by a Court in another case.

Proper procedure where the correctness of the official translation of a vernacular document is challenged in the High Court indicated.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 23rd February 1917 of the High Court, Patna, which affirmed a judgment and decree, dated the 9th April 1914 of the Subordinate Judge, Darbhanga.

On 5th June 1864 he entrusted the management of his property to his wives by a document which is called a deed of "atainama."

On the death of Bachcha his widows succeeded to his property, and acquired by purchase other property after his death.

In 1910 the surviving widow Musammat Sasiman purported to alienate certain of these properties, and the suit was brought by the presumptive reversioners of Bachcha for a declaration that she had no power to effect any such alienation.

The trial Judge made a declaration in favour of the Plaintiffs and the decree of the lower Court was upheld by the High Court on appeal. The widow appealed from the decree of the High Court to His Majesty in Council. The facts of the case are fully set out in the judgment of the Board.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with Mr. H. N. Sen) for the Appellants contended that under the deed of June 1864 the widows took full proprietary rights. The expression "malik" is fully discussed in Musammat Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (5). Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v.

Shewukram (1). The estate that was intended to be conferred must be ascertained by looking at the whole Will. Under the Mithila Law in Behar a widow takes an absolute estate in moveables, so that by inheritance she would take an absolute estate in the moveables and a limited estate in the immoveables. In this case the testator intended her to take the same estate in both the moveables and immoveables.

[SIR JOHN EDGE referred to Amarendra Nath Bose v. Shuradhani (6) and Fateh Chand v. Rup Chand (7).]

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C.—I do not intend to try and construe one Will according to the words of another; the only point is the principle of construction to adopt.

[SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.—It is sufficient for you to argue that the widows took a life estate with full powers of disposition. You need not contend that they took an absolute estate.]

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. also referred to Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 627.

Mr. H. N. Sen following: The form of marriage here was the "asura" form, an unauthorised form, after which the wife had greater powers over property. Banerjee on Stridhan and Marriage, 1st Edn., pp. 333 and 408.

Mr. B. Dubé for the Respondents:—It was never the case that this was a life estate with a power of transfer. There is no power of alienation given here.

The real intention was that the widow should have only a widow's estate. The real meaning of the words in the Will are "The Musammats after my death have all and complete rights of a land-holder in every circumstance." The grant of the powers of a land-holder does not necessarily imply powers of alienation. Reference was made to Lalit Mohun Singh Roy v. Chukkun Lal Roy (4), Musammat Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (5) and Fateh Chand v. Rup Chand (7). In each of these cases the words were different. Here the words do not increase but merely set out an estate which is no more than a widow's estate. The mention of part of the property as ancestral is an indication that the testator wished it to remain in the family. Under Hindu law there is a presumption that a wife has no power of disposal over a gift from her husband unless it is given to her in unequivocal terms. Reference was also made to Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (1), Janki v. Bhairon (11) and Shib Lakhan v. Tarangini (12).

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. in reply, referred to Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 664. The word "malik" does not give an absolute estate which cannot be cut down. The word "heir" in all these documents merely means successor, and the cases show that "malik" imports proprietorship which may be increased or limited by the context.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—The suit in which this appeal has arisen was brought on the 12th August 1912, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga in Behar, by the Plaintiffs, who are the presumptive reversioners of Bachcha Chowdhury, deceased, who in his lifetime was a landholder in and a resident of Mouzah Subhankarpur in Tirhoot. Bachcha Chowdhury died in 1865. The principal Defendant is Musammat Sasiman Chowdhurain, who is the surviving widow of Bachcha Chowdhury. His other widow was Musammat Subast Chowdhurain; she died before suit. Bachcha Chowdhury died possessed of considerable moveable and immoveable properties, which, on his death, came into the possession of his widows. Part of Bachcha Chowdhury's immoveable property was ancestral, and the remainder of it had been purchased by him.

Musammat Subast, shortly before she died, executed, on the 12th February 1887, an instrument by which she bequeathed her half-share in the property to Musammat Sasiman.

The suit relates to the nature of the title of Musammat Sasiman to the immoveable properties of which her husband, Bachcha Chowdhury, had died possessed, and to the nature of her title to other immoveable properties which she and Musammat Subast, or one of them, acquired by purchase, it being alleged by the reversioners that those immoveable properties which were acquired by the Musammats were purchased by them with moneys saved from the usufruct of the immoveable properties of which Bachcha Chowdhury had died possessed. The object of the suit is to obtain a declaration that Musammat Sasiman neither had nor has any power to alienate any of the immoveable properties. Her right, if any, to alienate, except for necessity, depends upon the nature of her title. Musammat Sasiman and some of the other Defendants are Appellants here. The Plaintiffs and others of the Defendants are the Respondents.

The Hindu family to which Bachcha Chowdhury had belonged was governed by the law of the Mithila School of Hindu Law. Bachcha Chowdhury had separated from that family. The suit and this appeal depend upon the true construction of a testamentary document which, although described as an atainama (deed of gift), must be regarded as a Hindu Will, which Bachcha Chowdhury made on the 5th of June 1864. On behalf of the Plaintiffs it is contended that the Musammats took no greater interest in the immoveable property which had belonged to Bachcha Chowdhury in his lifetime than that allowed by the law of the Mithila to the widow of separated and childless husband. On behalf of Musammat Sasiman and those claiming under her it is contended that she and Musammat Subast took in that property under the Will a full, absolute, and heritable interest as proprietors, with full rights of alienation, and not merely the interest of Hindu widows under the law of the Mithila. If her contention as to the construction of the Will is correct, this suit must fail, and should be dismissed, and it would not be necessary to consider whether the immoveable properties which were purchased by the Musammats, or either of them, were purchased with moneys derived by them after their husband's death from the usufruct of the immoveable properties which were left by him.

According to the official translation of the Will of the 5th June 1864 (15th Jeth 1217, F. S.), Bachcha Chowdhury stated that :—

He then mentioned lands, some of which were ancestral lands, and others of which he had purchased, and stated, as was the fact, that :

“the ancestral and purchased properties are held and possessed by me, without participation or interference on the part of any person”— and proceeded :

“I, the declarant, have no issue; I have to obtain bliss in the next world, caused to be sunk several ponds, and have constructed a temple of Sri Murli Manohar Ji within the compound of my own house, at a considerable cost; I often remain ill, although at present I am well, still on account of having no child, and placing no certainty in life, I intend to go on pilgrimage to Kashi and other places. Therefore I, the declarant, of my own accord and free will, in order to avoid future disputes and to perpetuate my name, gave all the mouzas in entirety or in part, both ancestral and purchased, thika properties, and all goods, and assets, articles of copper and silver, elephant, oxen, she-buffaloes, and all other properties, to both my first and second wives, Musammat Subast Chowdhurain and Musammat Sasiman Chowdhurain, who after my death will be heirs to all the moveable and immoveable properties. It is desired that the said Musammats by holding possession and occupation of all the moveable and immoveable properties should pay the Government revenue thereof, and they should collect rent of, and keep watch over, the mouzas either in entirety or in part and scattered lands, orchard, oxen, and elephant, etc., and they should give alms and charities. The said Musammats, after my death, shall have, in every way, full power and all proprietary rights over all the moveable and immoveable properties, and they should, under the deed executed by me, pay, annually, Rs. 360 to Musammat Lachhmi Chowdhurain, widow of my brother Dulār Chowdhury, until her death for her maintenance, and by this deed the said Musammats should get their names recorded in the Government Sherista in the columns of proprietors. To this I, the declarant, neither have nor shall have any objection. I have, therefore, given into writing these few words by way of a deed of Atainama so that they may be of use when required.”

Their Lordships have quoted from the translation which was made of the Will by the official translator in India, but it is admitted on behalf of the parties to this appeal that the vernacular word which has been translated as "gave" should have been translated as "give."

The important words in the Will which, in the official translation have been rendered as giving to the Musammats after the testator's death "in every way, full power and all proprietary rights," are in the vernacular Kuli o Kuh haqay Malkiyat har bal akhtear Mosammat Majkuran Ko Hasil hai, and were understood by the Trial Judge as a declaration by the testator of the rights which the Musammats would have in the properties by inheritance after his death, and not as giving them any greater right in the properties, or implying that they should have any greater right, such as a right of alienation, except for necessity. The Trial Judge, by his decree of the 9th April 1914 made a declaration in favour of the Plaintiffs as reversioners. From that decree Musammat Sasiman appealed to the High Court.

The appeal to the High Court was heard by Chapman and Roe, JJ., and was dismissed by the decree of that Court of the 23rd February 1917. The leading judgment in the High Court was delivered by Roe, J., with which Chapman, J. concurred. Mr. Justice Roe was of opinion that in one respect the official translation of the Will of the 5th June 1864, was not quite accurate. In his judgment he said :—

"A more accurate translation of clause beginning 'The said Musammats after my death . . .' would be—'And in respect of all the moveables and immoveables after my death all and complete rights, the power of a landholder in every circumstance, accrues to the said Musammats.' The Urdu words which I have translated 'accrues' are 'hasil hai.' The Urdu word which I have translated 'of a landholder' is 'Malikiyat.' There is no such word in the language. Either the long a is a mistake or the word is a manufactured word. The point has been pressed at some length in the argument. It is not to my mind material. 'Milkiyat' or 'Malikiyat' would equally imply something appertaining to a Malik. The word 'Malik' means literally one who holds mulk or land. The translation with the amendments which I suggest represents the terms of the Deed."

There does not appear to their Lordships to be any material difference in that respect between the official translation and that suggested by Mr. Justice Roe. In their Lordships' view they mean the same thing. But if they materially differ, their Lordships hold that they must accept the official translation as correct. If that translation was incorrect there was ample opportunity to have it judicially corrected in the High Court after evidence as to its correctness or incorrectness had been taken and recorded in the Court in which the correctness of the official translation was challenged. The Judicial Committee has no means of enquiring into the correctness of an official translation of a document in a vernacular language of India, except by sending the case back to the Court with a direction to make such enquiry. It is not necessary to adopt that course in this case.

The following decisions, which it has been contended should guide their Lordships in construing this Will, have been cited in argument at the Bar. Their Lordships may observe that it is always dangerous to construe the words of one Will by the construction of more or less similar words in a different Will, which was adopted by a Court in another case. Their Lordships will briefly refer to the decisions which have been cited in the order of their dates.

In 1874, in Moulvie Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewulkrum (1), which came on appeal from the High Court of Calcutta, and related to the construction of a testamentary document executed by Roy Hurnarain, a Hindu of Behar, the Board held that :—

“In construing the Will of a Hindu it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with respect to the distribution of property. It may be assumed that a Hindu generally desires that an estate, especially an ancestral estate, shall be retained in his family; and it may be assumed that a Hindu knows that, as a general rule, at all events, women do not take absolute estates of inheritance which they are enabled to alienate.”

The Board, having regard to those considerations, and to the document as a whole, all the expressions of which should be taken together, held that Hurnarain, in using the expression “except Musammat Ranee Dhun Kowar aforesaid, none other is or shall be my heir or malik,” intended that Ranee Dhun Kowar should take in his property “a life interest immediately succeeding him, without that interest being shared by her daughters or by any other person,” but that she should not take an absolute estate which she should have power to dispose of absolutely. The Board so decided, although it held that there were expressions in the document which, if they stood alone, showed that Hurnarain intended to make an absolute gift to Ranee Dhun Kowar. She was the widow of Hurnarain's deceased son, by whom she had had two daughters, who were living at the date of the document, and were named in it.

In 1875, in Musammat Kollany Koer v. Luchmee Pershad (2), which depended on the construction of a Hindu Will, and came to the High Court at Calcutta on appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sarun in the Patna Division of Bengal, and related to the title to immoveable property, Romesh Chundar

Mitter, J., in his judgment, from which the other Judge who heard the appeal, Glover, J., did not dissent, held :—

“Therefore the primary matter for our consideration is the language of the Will, or the words in which it is expressed. As far as the words go, I think it is plain that the testator intended to make an absolute gift of his property in favour of his widow and his daughter. He says that after his death they shall be (maliks), and his entire estate shall devolve upon them.”

Mr. Justice Mitter considered that there being nothing to show a contrary intention, the words which were used gave an absolute estate, and not merely the estate of a Hindu female, to the testator's widow and daughter.

In 1884, Sir Richard Garth, C. J., and Cunningham, J., in Punchoo Money Dossee v. Troylucko Mohiney Dossee (3), which was an appeal from a decree of Wilkinson, J., in a suit on the original jurisdiction side of the High Court at Calcutta, and related to a Hindu Will, held that the description in the Will of a devisee, a woman, as malik, did not necessarily import an intention of the testator that by his Will an absolute or proprietary interest should pass to her.

In 1897, in Lalit Mohun Singh Roy v. Chukkun Lal Roy (4), which was an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Calcutta, which had reversed a decree of the District Court of Hooghley in a suit which related to a Hindu Will, the Board held that the words of gift in the Will to the effect that the donee shall “become owner (malik) of all my estate and properties” conferred an heritable and alienable estate in the absence of a context indicating a different meaning.

MUSAMMAT SASIMAN CHOWDHURAIN v. SHIB NARAYAN CHOWDHURY.

Rabi Nath Ojha (5), in an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Allahabad which had affirmed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur in a suit which related to a deed of gift or testamentary instrument, by which a Hindu gave to his first and second wives and daughter-in-law respectively certain immoveable property, reserving to himself a life interest, but directing that after his death they shall be "malik na khud ikhtiyar (owners with proprietary rights)," the Board said:—

"This case of Lalit Mohan Singh Roy v. Chakun Lal Roy (4) seems to adopt and apply the same view of the word 'malik' as was taken in the Calcutta case of [Kollany Koer v. Luchmee (Prshad (2))], with the result that in order to cut down the full proprietary rights that the word imports, something must be found in the context to qualify it. Nothing has been found in the context here or the surrounding circumstances, or is relied upon by the Respondents, but the fact that the donee (Surajmani) is a woman and a widow which was expressly decided in the last-mentioned case not to suffice. But while there is nothing in the context or surrounding facts to displace the presumption of absolute ownership implied in the word 'malik,' the context does seem to strengthen the presumption that the intention was that 'malik' should bear its proper technical meaning.

In Musammat Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (5), the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur, who tried the suit, had held that Surajmani took a Hindu widow's estate, and was incompetent to alienate it, and the High Court on the appeal held:—

"that under the Hindu law, as interpreted up to the present in the case of immoveable property given or devised by a husband to his wife, the wife has no power to alienate, unless the power of alienation is conferred upon her in express terms. The learned Vakil for the Appellants (Surajmani and others) contended that the words of the document we have to consider, and that we have cited above, did expressly convey such power, or at any rate that from them the intention of the executant to confer a power of alienation was evident. We cannot so hold."

In 1909, in Amarendra Nath Bose v. Shuradhani (6), Mookerjee, J., held that the expression "malik like myself" in a Hindu Will, as describing the position which the donee would occupy, was an indication that the testator intended the donee to take an absolute interest in the property devised, but that the word "malik" by itself would not indicate that more than a limited interest was intended to be conferred.

In 1916, in Fatch Chand v. Rup Chand (7), in an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Allahabad which had varied a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur in a suit which related to the title to immoveable property, the Board held that the words in a Hindu Will "I have bequeathed Mauza Khudda to Musammat Gomi . . . after my death she shall be owner in possession (malik-oukiz) of the entire property in Mauza Khudda aforesaid," conferred full ownership upon the devisee, there being in the Will, in the opinion of the Board, nothing from which a contrary intention of the testator should be inferred.

It appears from some of the decisions to which their Lordships have referred and from the judgment of the Board in Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab (8) (not yet reported) that the term "malik," when used in a Will or other document as descriptive of the position which a devisee or donee is intended to hold, has been held apt to describe an owner possessed of full proprietary rights, including a full right of alienation, unless there is something in the context or in the surrounding circumstances to indicate that such full proprietary rights were not intended to be conferred, but the meaning of every word in an Indian Will must always depend upon the setting in which it is placed, the subject to which it is related, and the locality of the testator from which it may receive its true shade of meaning, and their Lordships can find nothing in the quoted decisions contrary to this view.

Mr. Justice Chapman, in his concurring judgment in this suit said: "As regards the word 'malik,' I trust that a word in such common everyday use in this part of the country (Behar) will not be converted by the decisions into a technical term of conveyancing." At least outside the Presidency towns of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, the art of conveyancing is but little understood in India, and the drafting of documents, including Wills, is generally of a very simple and inartificial character. See the observations of the Board in Gokuldoss Gopaldoss v. Rambux Seochand (9) and in Syed Mahomed Ibrahim Hossein Khan v. Ambika Persad Singh (10).

In the present case the term "malik" does not occur in the Will, but the word "malkiyat," which has been rendered in the official translation as "all proprietary rights," does, and Mr. Justice Roe, who did not accept the official translation as literally quite accurate, considered that a mistake in the spelling of the word had been made, or that the word was a manufactured word. His opinion was that whether the intended word was "malkiyat" or "malikiyat" it meant the same thing—that is, the power of a landholder and he stated that "malik" means literally one who holds land. Their Lordships cannot construe the words of the Will giving to the Musammats, as the testator's heirs, all his moveable and immoveable properties, as interpreted by the declaration that after his death they "shall have, in every way, full power and all proprietary rights over all the moveable and immoveable properties," as meaning anything less than that they should hold in his properties full and complete rights as proprietors, including full rights of alienation, and that was, their Lordships infer, what the testator intended.

Their Lordships will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed with costs, and the suit should be dismissed with costs.

PANNA LAL BISWAS v. PANCHU RUIDAS.

Plaintiff was dispossessed from some lands by the Defendant in April 1904 and in June 1904 the lands were attached under sec. 146, Cr. P. Code owing to disputes between the parties. Plaintiff brought the present suit for recovery of possession in May 1916. The lower Courts held that Plaintiff had title but that the suit was barred by limitation :

Held—That, the suit though framed as a suit for possession cannot be treated as such, because the possession was not with the Defendant, but with the Magistrate who was not and could not be a party to the suit. The article therefore applicable to the suit was Art. 120 of the Limitation Act and not Art. 142.

GOSWAMI RANCHOR LALJI v. SRI GIRDHARJI (1), RAJA OF VENKATAGIRI v. ISAKPALLI (2) and BROJENDRA KISHORE ROY v. SAROJINI ROY (3) referred to.

The position of the Magistrate was that of a stake-holder and during the continuance of the attachment the property was in legal custody which must be held to be for the benefit of the true owner, i.e., the Plaintiff. And the possession of the Magistrate being in law the possession of the true owner, the Defendant's possession was determined upon the Magistrate's taking possession under the attachment, in other words, the Plaintiff must be taken to have been restored to possession constructively on the date of the attachment. He therefore got a fresh starting point for purposes of limitation, and the case can be treated as one of continuing wrong within the meaning of sec. 23 of the Limitation Act. The suit was therefore not barred by limitation.

This was an appeal preferred on the 15th of November 1919 against the decree of Paresch Nath Roy Chaudhury, Esq., 2nd Additional District Judge of Zillah 24-Paraganas, dated the 9th of August 1919, affirming the decree of Babu Kumud Kanta Sen, Munsif, 2nd Court at Barasat, dated the 31st of July 1918.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of the Plaintiff's title to the land in dispute, and for recovery of possession of the same with mesne profits.

It appears that in consequence of disputes between the Plaintiff's predecessor and the Defendant the land was attached under the provisions of sec. 146, Criminal Procedure Code, on the 10th June 1904. The Plaintiff's mother brought a suit in 1904 for declaration of title to the land, but that was dismissed on the ground that she was benamdar for her husband. The Plaintiff's father subsequently brought a suit in 1907, but it was withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit. The Plaintiff then brought the present suit on the 2nd May 1916 alleging that the cause of action arose on the 10th June 1904, the date of the attachment.

It was found by the Court of first instance that Plaintiff had proved his title to the land, but that he was dispossessed in April 1904, i.e., some time before the date of attachment by the Criminal Court under sec. 146, and that he could not get a fresh start for limitation from the date of attachment and accordingly dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by limitation. On appeal also the learned Subordinate Judge held that the suit was barred by limitation.

It is contended on behalf of the Plaintiff-Appellant that the Plaintiff having been found to have title to the land, the legal possession of the land must be taken to have been with him during the time the land was in the possession of the Magistrate and that therefore the suit was not barred by limitation.

The suit as framed was one for recovery of possession. There is some divergence of opinion upon the question whether such a suit is one for possession, or for a mere declaration. The Allahabad High Court in Goswami Ranchor Lalji v. Sri Girdharji (1) held that it was the former and therefore governed by the 12 years' rule of limitation. In Raja of Venkatagiri v. Isakpalli (2), it was held, dissenting from the above view, that the suit was one for declaration and governed by Art. 120, and further that there was no continuing wrong. In our Court also, in the case of Brojendra Kishore Roy v. Sarojini Roy

(3), it was held that the actual possession being with the Magistrate and not with the Defendant, the suit could not be treated as a suit for possession, and was not governed by Art. 142 of the Limitation Act, and must be treated as one for declaration of title under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The learned Judges were of opinion that although the suit was brought more than six years after the attachment, the case could aptly be treated as one of continuing wrong within the meaning of sec. 23 of the Limitation Act, and was not therefore barred.

We agree with the view that the suit though framed as a suit for possession cannot be treated as such, because the possession is not with the Defendant, but with the Magistrate who is not and cannot be a party to the suit. The article therefore applicable to the suit is Art. 120 of the Limitation Act. Then the question is whether the case can be treated as one of continuing wrong within the meaning of sec. 23. In Brojendra Kishore's case (3), it was so treated, but there the Plaintiff was deprived of the enjoyment of the property by the Defendants attempted interference with his possession in consequence of which the Magistrate intervened and attached it, and there was a continuing wrong from the date of the attachment. There was in that case no dispossession prior to the attachment by the Magistrate, and the cause of action might be said to have accrued from day to day commencing from the date of the attachment. In the present case the Plaintiff was dispossessed in April 1904, i.e., about two months before the date of attachment which took place on the 10th June 1904. The cause of action therefore arose in April 1904, and the suit was brought not only more than six years after but 12 years after that date.

PANNA LAL BISWAS v. PANCHU RUIDAS.

Unless therefore the Plaintiff acquired a fresh starting point from the date of attachment the suit would be barred under Art. 120, and even under Art. 142.

The position of the Magistrate no doubt was that of a stake-holder [see Khagendra Narain v. Matangini (4)] and during the continuance of the attachment the property was in legal custody which must be held to be for the benefit of the true owner [see Beni Prasad v. Shahzada Ojha (5) and Rao Karan v. Raja Bakar Ali (6)]. The question, however, is what was the effect of the attachment so far as the possession of the land was concerned. In the case of Raja of Venkatagiri v. Isakpalli (2), it was held that "for purposes of limitation the seizin or legal possession will during the attachment be in the true owner and the attachment by the Magistrate will not amount either to dispossession of the owner or to his discontinuing possession." In the present case, however, as stated above the Plaintiff the true owner was dispossessed of the land before the attachment. Limitation having commenced from the date of such dispossession, the fact of attachment would not give him a fresh start unless it had the effect of determining the Defendant's possession.

In the case of Ramsamy v. Muthusamy (7), it was held that where property is seized by a Magistrate, the property passed into legal custody and such custody is for the benefit of the rightful owner. It was further held that time begins to run against such owner only when by an erroneous order of the Magistrate the property is delivered to some other person, and it is so even when such other person had been in wrongful possession previous to the seizure by the Magistrate. In that case the property seized was paddy, and the Magistrate made it over to the other party. We refer to the case for showing that notwithstanding the Defendant's wrongful possession previous to the seizure of the Magistrate, it was held that the possession of the Magistrate was for the benefit of the rightful owner and that a fresh cause of action arose when the property was delivered to the Defendant by an erroneous order of the Magistrate.

As pointed out in Trustees, Executors and Agency Company v. Short (8), if a person enters upon the land of another, and holds possession for a time and then without having acquired title under the statute, abandons possession the rightful owner, on the abandonment is in the same position in all respects as he was before the intrusion took place. Here there was no abandonment. Possession was taken out of him by the Magistrate who held it for the true owner. But at the date of the attachment, the Plaintiff was out of possession only for about two months, he had therefore a subsisting title at that time, and if the Magistrate's possession was constructive possession of the true owner, the case might come within the principle of the case of Secretary of State v. Krishnamoni (9), where it was held that dispossession by the vis major of floods had the same effect as voluntary abandonment. If the possession of the Magistrate was in law the possession of the true owner, as we think it was, the Defendant's possession was determined upon the Magistrate's taking possession under the attachment, in other words, the Plaintiff must be taken to have been restored to possession constructively on the date of the attachment. He therefore got a fresh starting point, and that being so, the case would fall within the principle of Brojendra Kishore's case (3), and the case can be treated as one of continuing wrong under sec. 23 of the Limitation Act.

In the case of Deo Narain v. Webb (10), it was no doubt held that limitation having already commenced to run from the date of actual dispossession, the Plaintiff could not have a fresh start of limitation from the date of the subsequent attachment by the Criminal Court, but the effect of the attachment upon the question of possession so far as the true owner is concerned which was dealt with in the cases cited above does not appear to have been considered by the learned Judges.

The result is that the decrees of the Courts below are set aside, and the suit is decreed to this extent that Plaintiff's title to the land will be declared. Regard being had however to the frame of the plaints, we direct that each party bear its own costs throughout.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 1918 of 1918.

CHATTERJEA, J.	ANNODA MOHAN ROY
CUMING, J.	[CHOWDHURY, Defendant,

Judgment,	OFFICE LD., Plaintiff,

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 41—Rights of a mortgagee purchaser in execution of a decree upon a mortgage by a widow in whose benami her husband had purchased the property—Rights of a purchaser in execution of a money decree against the husband—Such purchaser if estopped from disputing the rights of a mortgagee purchaser—Ponâ fide transferee for value without notice, actual or constructive.

A Hindu husband purchased some lands in the name of his wife, who after his death mortgaged them, and the mortgagee purchased them at a sale held in execution of the decree obtained upon the mortgage. In the meantime the lands had been sold in execution of a money decree against the husband and taken possession of by the decree-holder purchaser. The mortgagee purchaser thereupon sued for a declaration that the lands belonged to the wife and for possession. The kabuliyats, toujis, counterfoil rent receipts stood in the name of the wife and the mortgagee had taken the mortgage in good faith after making proper inquiry:

Held—That so far as there were occasions for doing so, the husband held out his wife as the real owner, and therefore the purchaser in execution of the money decree against the husband, being the successor-in-interest of the said husband, was estopped from disputing the title of the wife and should not be allowed to defeat the rights of the mortgagee who is a transferee in good faith from the ostensible owner without notice, actual or constructive, of the husband's title. The mortgagee was not bound to inquire into the financial position of the husband at the time when the purchase was made in the name of the wife.

Subordinate Judge of that District (Babu Debendra Nath Banerjee), dated the 30th June 1917.

The facts of the case are briefly as follows :—One Krishna Nath purchased some lands in the benami of his wife Anandamoyee and died shortly after leaving Anandamoyee his widow and a daughter. The Respondents took a mortgage of the lands from Anandamoyee and her daughter, and at a sale held in execution of the decree obtained upon the mortgage purchased them on the 6th November 1913. In the meantime the lands were attached in execution of a money decree at the instance of a creditor of Krishna Nath and were sold and purchased by him on the 5th June 1905. He obtained possession of the lands and continued in possession. The Respondents after purchasing the lands in execution of their mortgage decree were resisted in taking possession by the aforesaid purchase in execution of the money decree. Hence this suit was brought by the Respondents for a declaration that the lands belonged to Anandamoyee and for possession of the same. The first Court gave a decree to the Plaintiffs-Respondents for possession subject to the right of the Defendant No. 1 (purchaser in execution of the money decree) to redeem the mortgage. On appeal the District Judge held that the Defendant No. 1 was estopped from denying that the lands belonged to Anandamoyee and gave a decree to the Plaintiffs for possession of the lands. Against that decision the Defendant No. 1 preferred the present appeal to the High Court.

Babus Gunada Charan Sen and Jyotish Ch. Sircar (for Babu Bimal Ch. Das) for the Appellant.

The lands in dispute in this case originally belonged to two ladies. They executed a kobala in favour of one Anandamoyee the wife of one Krishna Nath Ghose in January 1898. Shortly after, Krishna Nath died leaving Anandamoyee his widow and a daughter Rohini who is no party to the suit.

The Plaintiffs who are the Respondents before us, took a mortgage of the lands in dispute from Anandamoyee the widow of Krishna Nath Ghose and their daughter Rohini Dassi on the 23rd June 1902, and at a sale held in execution of the decree obtained upon the mortgage purchased them on the 6th November 1913. In the meantime the lands were attached in execution of a money decree at the instance of a creditor of Krishna Nath. Anandamoyee preferred a claim on the ground that it was her stridhan property which however was disallowed. The lands were accordingly sold in execution of the money decree and purchased by the Defendant No. 1 on the 5th June 1905. He obtained possession of the lands and continued in possession. The Plaintiffs having purchased the lands in execution of his mortgage decree, were resisted in taking possession by the Defendant No. 1. This suit was accordingly brought by the Plaintiffs for a declaration that the lands belonged to Anandamoyee, and for possession of the same. Subsequently the Plaintiffs applied for amendment of the plaint to the effect that if the lands were found to belong to Krishna Nath and not to Anandamoyee, the latter had legal necessity to mortgage the lands.

The Court of first instance found that the lands were purchased by Krishna Nath with his own money in the benami of Anandamoyee, that the money was raised by her upon the mortgage for legal necessity, and as the Defendant No. 1 was not made a party to the suit brought by the Plaintiffs on the mortgage, that Court gave a decree to the Plaintiffs for possession subject to the right of the Defendant No. 1 to redeem the mortgage.

On appeal the learned District Judge agreed with the Court of first instance in holding that the lands were purchased by Krishna Nath in the benami of his wife Anandamoyee, but he was of opinion that the Defendant No. 1 was estopped from denying that the lands belonged to Anandamoyee, and accordingly reversed the decree of the Court of first instance, and gave a decree to the Plaintiffs for possession of the lands. The Defendant No. 1 has appealed to this Court.

The first question for consideration is whether the Defendant No. 1 was estopped from disputing the absolute title of Anandamoyee to the lands. The ground upon which the learned District Judge found the question of estoppel in favour of the Plaintiffs was that Krishna Nath by purchasing the property in the name of his wife had put her forward as the ostensible owner with an intention to deceive any person who had a claim to his estate, and the Plaintiffs having but the money on mortgage on the strength of the kobala which stood in her name, the Defendant No. 1 as the successor-in-interest of Krishna Nath was estopped from denying that the property was the stridhan property of Anandamoyee. The learned Judge relied upon the case of Luchman Chunder Gossain v. Kalli Charan Singh (1) in support of the view taken by him.

The question is whether the learned Judge was right in the view he took of the case.

We think that the case falls within the principle enunciated by the Judicial Committee in the case of Luchman Chunder (1) 12 W. R. 292 (1878).

Gossain v. Kalli Charan Singh (1). There the property was purchased by the father in the name of the mother and their Lordships observed :—

“That was a misrepresentation of the father by means of which the widow after his death was enabled to sell the property. It was said that the minor would not be bound by the acts of the father before his death. Suppose the father had actually sold this property to the mother and had made a misrepresentation by a deed of sale, would not the minor son have been bound by that deed, although the father might have some secret understanding with the mother that it was purchased in her name benami for the father? It appears to their Lordships that there was a misrepresentation by the father in allowing the property to be taken by the wife under a deed of sale, representing that the purchase-money was her stridhan, and in all his acts, both public and private, during his lifetime, representing that the property was his wife's. After that representation on the part of the father, his heirs were no more entitled to recover than the father would have been in his lifetime. The heirs were as much bound by the misrepresentations made by the father, as the father would have been if the wife in his lifetime had actually sold the property to a bona fide purchaser. In such case the father could not have recovered the property from the purchaser; and it appears to their Lordships that the minor claiming by descent from the father is equally bound by those misrepresentations, and that he cannot, as heir to the father, set up that that property belonged to the father, when the father could not in his own lifetime, under similar circumstances, have set up that the property belonged to him.”

This case was considered in the case of (1) 12 W. R. 292 (1878).

ANNODA MOHAN ROY CHOWDHURY v. NILPHAMARI LOAN OFFICE, LD.

Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (2). In that case, their Lordships observed at page 305: "In the case of Luchman Chunder Gossain v. Kalli Charan Singh (1) a similar state of facts occurred, for there, as here, the mortgage was granted by the widow after her husband's death. But in that case the husband, Ubotar Singh, had never himself held the title to the property there in question in his own name. The title was derived from a third party and taken directly to his wife, and, according to the narrative of the conveyance, the price was paid from her stridhan fund. He was never in possession of it. His wife took possession and retained it, and, as stated by the High Court in their judgment in the present case, by a long series of public acts and declarations, he did all he could to cause his wife to bear towards the public the character of owner. There were thus continuous declarations and acts by the husband calculated to cause any person dealing with the widow to believe that she was and had been the proprietor in her own right and in possession of the property purchased."

In the present case, as in Luchman Chunder's case (1), Krishna Nath the husband of Anandamoyee had never himself held title to the property in his own name. The title was derived from a third party and taken directly to his wife.

It was contended before us that in Luchman Chunder's case (1), the Judicial Committee relied not only upon the fact that the kobala was taken in the name of the wife, but also upon the fact that there were continuous declarations by the husband that the property belonged to the wife. In the present case there was no mutation of names, but the property here was lakheraj, and there could be no mutation of names either in the Collectorate or in the Zemindar's sherista. The kabuliyats, toujis, and counterfoil rent-receipts stood in her name, and it does not appear that there was any occasion for Krishna Nath making any other declarations that the property belonged to Anandamoyee. But the case does not rest merely upon the facts stated above.

The case was remanded for a finding upon the question whether the Plaintiffs in this case when they took the mortgage did so in good faith without any notice (actual or constructive) of the title of Krishna Nath to the property. Actual notice the Plaintiffs admittedly had none. The learned Judge has no doubt held that they had constructive notice; but in the first place he has misconstrued the document upon which he relies in support of his finding, and secondly, the facts found do not justify the inference that there was constructive notice. He finds that an officer of the Plaintiff Loan Office went to the village, looked at the kobala and other papers, namely, certain kabuliyats, toujis and rent-receipt counterfoils and found that they were given in Anandamoyee's name. The learned Judge, however, was of opinion that the kobala shows that Anandamoyee's husband paid part of the price of the property—about Rs. 250-7 as., which the vendor owed him at the time. That clearly is based upon a misconstruction of the kobala. The kobala states that the price of the property was fixed as Rs. 1,500 out of which Rs. 518-12 as., which was due to one Mahammad Mafat-ulla was to be paid by the vendee, that, out of the balance, viz., Rs. 981-4, which was received through her husband Krishna Nath, Rs. 250-7 as. was paid to him (Krishna Nath) in satisfaction of the debt due under his decree to him, and that the balance Rs. 730-13 as. was received by the vendor in cash. This does not show that

Then, the learned Judge points out that Krishna Nath had previously purchased a share in the property, and the learned Judge says that the Plaintiff Loan Office should have inquired into Krishna Nath's financial position at the time when the purchase was made in the name of his wife.

We do not see, however, why it was necessary for the mortgagee to inquire into the financial position of Krishna Nath. We do not think that the facts found lead to the inference that the Plaintiffs had constructive notice of the title of Krishna Nath.

Krishna Nath purchased the property in the name of his wife directly from a third party, he himself acting as the agent of the wife in the transaction; and so far as there were occasions for doing so, he held her out as the real owner. The learned Judge finds that the Plaintiff made enquiries though he was in error in holding that Plaintiff should have enquired into the financial position of Krishna Nath. We think that, in these circumstances, the Defendant who is the successor-in-interest of Krishna Nath should not be allowed to defeat the right of the Plaintiffs who are transferees in good faith from the ostensible owner Anandamoyee without notice of Krishna Nath's title. As stated above we are of opinion that upon the facts found the learned Judge is not right in holding that the Plaintiff Company had constructive notice of the title of Krishna Nath.

In the result, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

A decree declared the right of the decree-holder to recover possession of certain property subject to the right of the judgment-debtor to redeem on payment of a certain sum within six months of the date of the decree. Against that decree, the judgment-debtor appealed and the decree-holder filed a petition of cross-objection, but both were dismissed and the decree of the first Court confirmed. Then within six months of the date of the Appellate decree but more than six months after the date of the original decree, the judgment-debtor paid into Court the sum necessary for the redemption. The decree-holder applied for execution of the decree:

Held—That where in a suit on a mortgage the decree of the Appellate Court simply dismisses the appeal leaving the decree of the first Court untouched, the time for redemption runs from the date of the decree of the first Court.

The facts will appear from the judgment.

Babu Manmatha Nath Ray for the Appellant.

Rabu Atul Chundra Dutt for the Respondents.

This is an appeal against an order dismissing an application for execution. The decree-holder obtained a decree declaring his right to recover possession of certain property subject to the right of the judgment-debtor to redeem on payment of a certain sum within six months of the date of the decree. Against that decree, the judgment-debtor appealed and the decree-holder filed a petition of cross-objection. Both the appeal and the cross-objection were dismissed and the decree of the first Court was confirmed. Then within six months of the date of the Appellate decree but more than six months after the date of the original decree, the judgment-debtor paid into Court the sum necessary for the redemption. The only question for determination in this appeal is whether the lower Courts were right in holding that the judgment-debtor was in time. In our opinion, on the authority of the decisions of this Court, we must hold that this appeal must succeed. In the case of Bholanath Bhattacharjee v. Kanti Chunder Mookerjee (1), the learned Judges held that where in a suit on a mortgage the decree of the Appellate Court simply dismissed the appeal leaving the decree of the first Court untouched, the time for redemption would run from the date of the decree of the first Court. In that case, Maclean, C. J., decided the appeal on another ground. But, in a later case, Faizuddi Sirdar v. Asimuddi Biswas (2), the same learned Chief Justice expressly stated when the same point arose again that he entirely agreed with the view taken by Mr. Justice Bannerjee in the case of Bholanath Bhattacharjee v. Kanti Chunder Mookerjee (1) above referred to. In that case, the decree of the lower Court directed that the Defendants might pay up the mortgage decree of the Plaintiffs within six months and retain possession of the land and that, in default, the Plaintiffs would get khas possession and it was held that the six months' time allowed to the Defendants should run from the date of the first Court's decree and not the date of the Appellate Court's decree. This view is also supported by the decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Ramaswami Kone v. Sundara Kone (3). In that case also, the objection taken on behalf of the Respondent in the present case is met; for at p. 32 of the report of that case it was held that it was not open to the learned Judges to construe such a decree in one way when the condition was imposed on the Respondent in the appeal and in another way when it was imposed on the Appellant. This, we think, is the right view and is in no way affected by the fact relied on by the Respondent that the decree-holder filed a petition of cross-objection denying that the judgment-debtor had any right of redemption. On behalf of the Respondent, reliance is placed on the case of Satwaji, Balajirao Deshamukh v. Sakharilal Atmaramshet (4). In that case, we are unable to understand the reasons given for distinguishing the case of Bholanath Bhattacharjee v. Kanti Chunder Mookerjee (1) already referred to. The decision in that case is contrary to the decisions of the Calcutta cases which we are bound to follow. It is also contended on behalf of the Respondent that the decree-holder should have raised the objection to the redemption when he received notice of the payment of the money into Court. It was open to the decrec-holder to ignore that payment and apply for execution of the decree on the ground that the payment was not made within the time fixed for the redemption of the property. Taking this view, we decree this appeal and set aside the decisions of the lower Courts. The objection made by the judgment-debtor in the execution proceedings is overruled and the execution will proceed at the instance of the decree-holder according to law. The Appellant will get his costs in this Court as well as in the Courts below. We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at one gold mohur.

Per GHOSE, J.—But if the Magistrate finds that there is a real or substantial question to be tried out between the parties he ought, in the exercise of his discretion, to stay his hands and not proceed any further after making the conditional order under sec. 133.

Per SANDERSON, C. J.—The Magistrate, if he does not think the claim well-founded though he considers it made in good faith, may in his discretion allow the Defendant a reasonable time to assert the claim by a civil suit and if he does not go to the Civil Court within such time or fails there the Magistrate has jurisdiction to continue the proceedings under sec. 133, Cr. P. C.

Per TEUNON, J.—In the exercise of his discretion the Magistrate may take the course indicated above. Sub-sec. (2) of sec. 133 does not however appear to favour any reference of parties to Civil Court.

Per RICHARDSON and NEWBOULD, JJ.—The Magistrate may, if he does not think the claim well-founded though he considers it made in good faith, allow the Defendant a reasonable time to assert the claim by a civil suit.

Per GHOSE, J.—The Magistrate is entitled to continue the proceedings where the objector shows nothing more than a mere belief in the claim of right put forward. He is not entitled to direct the objector to go to the Civil Court because in his opinion the claim of right cannot be ultimately maintained.

Per SANDERSON, C. J. and TEUNON and GHOSE, JJ.—The case of BELAT ALI v. ABDUR RAHIM (4) was on the facts of that case rightly decided.

This was a Rule granted on the 21st June 1921 against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Alipur (Mr. P. Sen), dated the 25th May 1921 in proceedings under sec. 133, Cr. P. C.

The Rule came on for hearing before the Criminal Bench which, by its order dated the 23rd August 1921, referred the case to a Full Bench.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The ORDER OF REFERENCE was as follows :—

NEWBOULD and SUHRAWARDY, JJ.—This rule is directed against an order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Alipore in proceedings under sec. 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Ali Naskar and others instituted proceedings under that section against the Petitioners before us, Ram Sagar Mondal and another person, alleging that they had obstructed a public road. Ram Sagar Mondal showed cause denying the existence of the alleged public road and setting up a claim to the land in dispute. On the 15th April last, the Magistrate passed the following order :—

"I have heard the Vakils for both the parties. The second party contend that in a criminal case I held that there was no pathway, so the conditional order ought to be discharged. The Vakil for the first party has urged that this was a case of assault and my finding ought not to bind the present parties. I have given a careful consideration to the arguments advanced. I am of opinion that the claim of the second party though not substantiated is not mere pretence and is not raised to oust the jurisdiction of this Court but it is raised bonâ fide, so I think that following the ruling laid down in Manipur Dey v. Bidhu Bhusan Sarkar (1), I will give the second party a chance to go to the Civil Court. The second party should file a case within reasonable time and I allow them time till 25th May 1921 to do so, and if the second party does not go to the Civil Court within this time, the trial will be continued. Put up on 15th May 1921." The Petitioner did not go to the Civil Court and on the 25th May, the Magistrate refused to reconsider his order and directed witnesses to be summoned. On behalf of the Petitioner it is contended that on the Magistrate's finding that the Petitioner's claim was bonâ fide his jurisdiction under sec. 133, Criminal Procedure Code, came to an end and he was not justified in continuing these proceedings, because the Petitioner failed to bring a suit in the Civil Court. On behalf of the Opposite Party it is contended that the finding that the claim, though made bonâ fide, was not substantiated, justifies the Magistrate's order which is supported by decisions of this Court. There is ample authority for the general proposition that in proceedings of this nature a bonâ fide claim of right raised by the person who is alleged to have obstructed a public way ousts the Magistrate's jurisdiction. This rule is clearly stated in Queen-Empress v. Bissessur Sahu (2) which has been frequently followed. But in the case of Lukhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukher- jee (3) a distinction is drawn at p. 578 between a claim of right which the Magistrate thinks well-founded and claim of right which the Magistrate does not think well-founded but considers to have been made bonâ fide. It was laid down that in the former case the Magistrate will take no further proceedings but in the latter he should allow the Defendant an opportunity of asserting his claim by Civil proceedings and that if he does not go to a Civil Court within a reasonable time or fails there the Magistrate will proceed.

We doubt the correctness of this view of the law. It seems to us that once the Magistrate has found that claim of right is made in good faith by the Defendant he should stay proceedings under sec. 133, C. P. C. We think it would be a waste of his time for him to enquire whether the Defendant's claim is well-founded when he has no jurisdiction to decide the question of right. Also it appears to us unfair that a person in possession of land under a bonâ fide claim of right should be compelled by the Magistrate's order to be the Plaintiff in a civil suit to maintain his right. A Magistrate might have doubts as to the bonâ fides of the Defendant's claim and give him an opportunity of bringing a suit in order to prove his good faith but that is quite a different matter from compelling the Defendant to institute a suit after the Magistrate has held that his claim is made bonâ fide.

In Lukhee Narain's case (3), it was found that the Magistrate was justified in coming to the conclusion that the claim of right was not bonâ fide raised and his order directing the removal of the obstruction was upheld. But though the remarks are an obiter dictum they have been followed and effect given to them in at least one decision of this Court, Belat Ali

v. Abdur Rahim (4). In that case the same point arose as arises in the present case and the learned Judges, who upheld an order of the Magistrate similar to that passed in the present case, cited the remarks in Lukhee Narain's case (3) in support of their decision. It is therefore necessary to make a reference to a Full Bench to give effect to our opinion that the Magistrate's order is wrong.

It is not necessary to cite a large number of cases in which the broad principle, that a bonâ fide claim of right ousts the Magistrate's jurisdiction under sec. 133, C. P. C., has been affirmed. In many of them Lukhee Narain's case (3) has been relied on in support of this principle without any reference to the exception introduced by what may be called the doctrine of two degrees of bonâ fide. In one of them Nasiruddi v. Akiluddi (5), Prinsep, J., who was one of the Judges who decided Lukhee Narain's case (3) held that the Magistrate's order should be set aside on a finding that the plea was raised in good faith without any reference to the distinction between such a plea that is well-founded and one that is not well-founded. None of the other High Courts in India appear to have made such a distinction. It will be sufficient to cite those cases of this Court in which this distinction has been considered. In Mukanda Lal Dey v. Haribole Saha (6), Banerjee and Stevens, JJ., at the conclusion of their judgment reserved their opinion on this point. Manipur Dey v. Bidhu Bhusan Sarkar (1) is the case relied on by the trying Magistrate. There, though Sharfuddin, J., in his judgment held that the party should be referred to the Civil Court if the claim is not substantiated though raised bond fide Teunon, J., while holding that the Magistrate must decide whether the question was raised in good faith stated that he did not agree in all the reasons advanced by his learned colleague. The case of Peary Lal Mullik v. Surendra Krishna Mitter (7) and (8) came up to this Court twice. In this case the Magistrate's order was similar to that passed in the present case. On the first occasion Richardson and Shamsul Huda, JJ., held that the Magistrate should not have passed the order in the form in which he made it without taking evidence and remanded the case. On the second occasion Shamsul Huda and Ghose, JJ., held that the claim was based on substantial grounds and that it was not "necessary to consider whether, if and when a claim is found to be bond fide and not a mere pretence to oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Court it is necessary to consider further, as appears to have been laid down in Lukhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee (3), whether the claim is well-founded, and if not well-founded whether the Magistrate has a right to direct one of the parties within a reasonable time and on his failure to do so to resume the proceedings." We may also refer to the case of Kamini Kumar Biswas v. Emperor (9). There the Magistrate passed an order suspending proceedings for one month to allow the Defendants an opportunity of establishing their claims in the Civil Court and cited Lukhee Narain's case (3) in support of this order. The Magistrate's order was set aside by Rampini and Sharfuddin, JJ., on the ground that the Petitioner's claim appeared to be bond fide. It therefore appears that though the general rule has been frequently applied, some doubt has been felt as to the correctness of the dictum which makes an exception by distinguishing well-founded and ill-founded bond fide claims. The point is one of considerable importance and as we doubt the correctness of the decision in the case of Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4) a reference to a Full Bench is necessary and we refer it accordingly. We formulate the points to be decided as follows :—

When in proceedings under sec. 133, C. P. C., arising out of an alleged obstruction of a way used by the public, the Defendant sets up a claim of right which is found by the Magistrate to be made in good faith, is the Magistrate's jurisdiction entirely ousted?

Or can the Magistrate, if he does not think this claim well-founded though he considers it made in good faith, allow the Defendant a reasonable time to assert this claim by a civil suit and if he does not go to the Civil Court within such time or fails there, can the Magistrate continue the proceedings under sec. 133, Criminal Procedure Code? Was the case of Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4) giving effect to the dictum in Lukhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee (3) rightly decided?

On the case coming before the Full Bench.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mookerjee (with Babu Srish Chandra Biswas) for the Petitioner.—When not dealing with matters which primarily come within its purview there are some limitations to the exercise of jurisdiction by the Criminal Court.

There is a well-known principle which implies an ouster of jurisdiction of Justices, the moment it is proved that the claim set up by the Defendant is a bonâ fide one—Paley on Summary Convictions; Craies on Statutes, Vol. II, p. 472.

On this principle, Chap. X of the Code of Criminal Procedure should be construed and the Courts have also for about 50 years followed that principle in dealing with cases under sec. 133, Cr. P. C.

This principle is not to be found in the section itself but a rule of natural Justice not militating against the particular statute should be given effect to. It affects the property of subjects. I am entitled to tell the Court that it has no jurisdiction on the ground that it is my property and the public have no right over it. If my claim is a bonâ fide one the Magistrate must stay his hands and proceed no further. I have every right to challenge the Magistrate's jurisdiction by showing I have a bonâ fide claim.

It is wrong to say that as there is no statute to that effect the principle cannot be invoked in this country. It is a principle of natural justice and of construction of statute which is applicable to every civilised country unless there is anything repugnant in the statute-book of that country.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—What they say is that in the circumstances the Magistrate ought not to make an order under the section.

This is not a question of jurisdiction nor do the cases go to that length. What they say is that although Magistrates have power they should not exercise it when a bonâ fide claim is raised.]

The decision in Lukhee Narain's case (3) is wrong when it says that the Defendant should be referred to the Civil Court. Up to this there was no decision that the party setting up the claim is to go to the Civil Court. It will be sufficient if you hold that the Magistrate ought not to proceed, in which case the Magistrate cannot refer me to the Civil Court.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—If he has jurisdiction he can exercise it in exceptional cases.]

Yes. For example in cases of emergency but if it is a bonâ fide claim there can be no exceptional case.

The artificial distinction between well-founded bonâ fide claim and ill-founded bonâ fide claim is incomprehensible. It is an impossibility to say that a claim is bonâ fide but not well-founded.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—I can't understand it.]

This distinction does not appear to have entered the minds of any Judge of any other High Court.

Reg v. Sandford (35) gives only a test of bonâ fides.

RAM SAGAR MONDAL v. ALI NASKAR.

Your opponent really accedes to this but he objects to the passage at p. 573.]

[SANDERSON, C. J.—What should be the form of the order, i.e., to drop the proceedings altogether referring both parties to the Civil Court or stay the proceedings and refer the Defendant to the Civil Court?]

That depends on the facts of each case.

Reference to Paley, 8th Edn., p. 164 shows that even when title is in issue, Justices may decide.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mookerjee replied.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a reference to a Full Bench by my learned brothers Newbould and Suhrawardy, JJ. The questions which are submitted are,

1. "When in proceedings under sec. 133, Criminal Procedure Code, arising out of an alleged obstruction of a way used by the public, the Defendant sets up a claim of right which is found by the Magistrate to be made in good faith, is the Magistrate's jurisdiction entirely ousted?"

2. "Or can the Magistrate, if he does not think this claim well-founded though he considers it made in good faith, allow the Defendant a reasonable time to assert this claim by a civil suit and if he does not go to the Civil Court within such time or fails there, can the Magistrate continue the proceedings, under sec. 133, Criminal Procedure Code?"

"Was the case of Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4) giving effect to the dictum in Lukhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee (3) rightly decided?"

The following facts may be taken from the case:—

"This rule is directed against an order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Alipore in proceedings under sec. 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Ali Naskar and others instituted proceedings under that section against the Petitioners before us, Ram Sagar Mondal and another person, alleging that they had obstructed a public road. Ram Sagar Mondal showed cause denying the existence of the alleged public road and setting up a claim to the land in dispute. On the 15th April last, the Magistrate passed the following order:—

"I have heard the Vakils for both the parties. The second party contend that in a criminal case I held that there was no pathway, so the conditional order ought to be discharged. The Vakil for the first party has urged that this was a case of assault and my finding ought not to bind the present parties. I have given a careful consideration to the arguments advanced. I am of opinion that the claim of the second party though not substantiated is not mere pretence and is not raised to oust the jurisdiction of this Court but it is raised bona fide, so I think that following the rule laid down in Manipur Dey v. Bidhu Bhusan Sarkar (1), I will give the second party a chance to go to the Civil Court. The second party should file a case within a reasonable time and I allow them time till 25th May 1921, to do so, and if the second party does not go to the Civil Court within this time, the trial will be continued. Put on 25th May 1921." The Petitioner did not go to the Civil Court and on the 25th May the Magistrate refused to reconsider and directed witnesses to be summoned."

On behalf of the Petitioner it was contended that on the Magistrate's finding that the Petitioner's claim was "bona fide" his jurisdiction under sec. 133, Criminal Procedure Code, came to an end and he was not justified in continuing the proceedings, because the Petitioner failed to bring a suit in the Civil Court. On behalf of the Opposite Party it was contended that the finding that the claim, though made bonâ fide was not substantiated, justified the Magistrate's order which is supported by decisions of this Court.

The case of Lukhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee (3) is referred to in the case as follows :—" But in the case of Lukhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee (3) a distinction is drawn at page 573 between a claim of right which the Magistrate thinks well-founded and a claim of right which the Magistrate does not think well-founded but considers to have been made bonâ fide. It was laid down that in the former case the Magistrate will take no further proceedings but in the latter he should allow the Defendant an opportunity of asserting his claim by civil proceedings and that if he does not go to a Civil Court within a reasonable time or fails there the Magistrate will proceed."

The two learned Judges doubted the correctness of this view of the law and consequently they made this reference to the Full Court.

With regard to the first question, in my judgment, the first step to be taken is to examine the sections of the Criminal Procedure Code, applicable to this matter, which are secs. 133 to 139 and to interpret these sections according to the natural meaning of the language used.

I do not propose to discuss these sections in detail. It is sufficient for me to say that if the ordinary and natural meaning is given to the language used in these sections, in my judgment it is clear that the Magistrate had jurisdiction thereunder to decide the case even though a claim of title was raised by the Petitioner, and even though, as the Magistrate held, the claim was "raised bonâ fide" and "was not a mere pretence and was not raised to oust the jurisdiction of the Court."

It was, however, argued on behalf of the Petitioner that it had been held in England that, when the title to property is in question, the exercise of a summary jurisdiction by Justices of the Peace is ousted, and it was further argued that the same principle should be applied to the sections now under consideration. It was also urged that the principle is a principle of natural justice and should be applied unless an exception is made in the Act.

I cannot accept these arguments. In the first place I do not agree that the rule laid down in the English cases should be taken to bind the Court in construing the Indian Act in question. Secondly, it is to be noted that the Code of Criminal Procedure is an Act for consolidating and amending the law relating to Criminal Procedure, and in my judgment the principle of construction laid down by Lord Herschell in the case of the Bank of England v. Vagliano (10) and affirmed by the Privy Council in Narendra Nath Sircar v. Kamalbhashini Dasi (11) should be applied to this Act. The passage in the latter case is as follows :—" It is hardly necessary for their Lordships to do more than express their concurrence with the judgment of the High Court. But they think it may be useful to refer to some observations in a recent case before the House of Lords as to the proper mode of dealing with an Act intended to codify a particular branch of the law. "I think," said Lord Herschell in the Bank of England v. Vagliano (10), "the proper course is in the first instance to examine the language of the statute and to ask what is its natural meaning uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law and not to start with enquiry how the law previously stood, and then assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered, to see if the words of the enactment will bear an interpretation in conformity with this view. If a statute, intended to embody in a code a particular branch of the law, is to be treated in this fashion, it appears to me that its utility will be almost entirely destroyed, and the very object with which it was enacted will be frustrated. The purpose of such a statute surely was that on any point specifically dealt with by it, the law should be ascertained by interpreting the language used, instead of as before, roaming over a vast number of authorities in order to discover what the law was, extracting it by a minute critical examination of the prior decisions" Applying that principle to the sections of the Consolidating and Amending Act now under consideration, and giving to the language of the sections the natural meaning, in my judgment the Magistrate had jurisdiction to decide the questions before him, even though the Defendants in the proceedings before the Magistrate set up a claim of title to the land in question.

Numerous cases were cited to us during the course of the argument, and it is said that there is a discrepancy to be found between the decisions of this Court. I think that to some extent there is a discrepancy. But on the whole, in my judgment, the weight of the decisions is in favour of the view which I have expressed.

Angelo v. Cargell (12), the Court, when dealing with a section of the Criminal Procedure Code then in force, held that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to decide whether the place was a thoroughfare and whether there was an obstruction, though the Defendants claimed the land as their own property. The sections then under discussion do not differ materially from the sections now under discussion and the Advocate-General appearing for the Defendants in that case, raised in his argument the identical points which have been raised on behalf of the Petitioner in this case, yet the Court held that the Magistrate had jurisdiction.

In Lukhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee (3), which was decided in 1888, the decision, in my judgment, implied that the Magistrate had jurisdiction though the learned Judges stated that this Court in revision in several cases had given directions as to the mode in which the Magistrates should exercise their powers. The following passages in the judgment may be referred to page 570: "The ground upon which these decisions have proceeded is that there is no provision made in Chap. X of the Code for an enquiry into disputed questions of title; and that it cannot be held to have been the intention of the legislature that questions of this nature raised bonâ fide should be finally decided in a summary manner and to the exclusion of any recourse to the Civil Courts. These decisions go, not actually to the jurisdiction of the Magistrates, as the English rule referred to does, but rather to the mode in which, in revision, this Court has held that the Magistrate should exercise their powers, following the principle of the English rule so far as may be;" page 573:—"Our observations in this judgment are of course directed to that part of sec. 133, which relates to the case now before us and deals with obstructions to public ways.

We may observe that in cases in which danger to public health or safety is involved, we by no means suggest that the Magistrate is fettered, in the exercise of the powers given to him under these sections, by the considerations to which we have adverted." It seems clear that if the Magistrate has jurisdiction in cases, where public health and safety are endangered, he must also have it in cases where they are not endangered, for the jurisdiction to deal with the two classes of cases is conferred by the same words in the Act.

These passages seem clearly to imply that the Magistrates had jurisdiction, but that this Court had from time to time given directions as to the mode of exercising that jurisdiction. It is to be noticed that the learned Judges in the last mentioned case drew attention to the case of Chuni Lal v. Ram Kishen (13) whereby it was decided that the right of an owner of land to bring a suit under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act against one of the public, who formally claimed to use such lands as a public road and who has thereby endangered the title of the owner, is not barred by an order of a Criminal Court under sec. 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

In the Queen-Empress v. Bissessuar Sahu (2) the learned Judges held that the Magistrate "ought not to have made the order if there was a bond fide contention on Bissessuar's part that the path was not a public way" and the learned Judges quoted with approval the passages from the judgment in Lukhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee (3). The headnote of that case seems to me to go further than the actual decision.

Again Fakir Mullick v. King-Emperor, (14) (decided in 1916) is in my judgment a decision confirming my view that the Magistrate had jurisdiction even though a bond fide claim of right had been set up.

It was, at the end of the argument, practically conceded that to say that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction or "that the Magistrate's jurisdiction was entirely ousted" was putting the case too high, but the argument was urged that under the circumstances of the case the Magistrate ought to have stayed his hand and should not have proceeded with the enquiry when he found that the Defendants were putting forward a claim of title in the land, bond fide, and the Magistrate should have allowed the parties to litigate the question in the Civil Court.

In my judgment therefore the first question should be answered in the negative.

The second question may conveniently be divided into two parts. With regard to the first part the learned Vakil for the Petitioner did not complain of the ruling at p. 571 in Lukhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee (3) which runs as follows:—

"Where such a question is bond fide raised the Magistrate ought not to make an order under this section of the Code; he should allow an opportunity for the determination of the question by the Civil Court." But objection was taken by the learned Vakil to the passage at p. 573. "If the Magistrate does not think this claim well-founded, so far as he can judge, but considers that it is made bond fide, he should allow the Defendant an opportunity of asserting it by Civil Proceedings." It was urged that the Defendants who might be in possession of the land, should not be forced into the position of Plaintiffs in a civil suit to maintain the claim of right. It was argued further that the distinction between an ill-founded bonâ fide claim and a well-founded bonâ fide claim is unintelligible. In my judgment there is considerable force in those arguments: At the same time I am unable to say that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make the order of 15th April 1921. It seems to me that it was a matter for the discretion of the Magistrate. He had apparently on that date, on the materials then before him, come to the conclusion that the claim of title set up by the Defendants had no substance in it, although he believed that the claim was not set up as a mere pretence. Having given the Defendants an opportunity of instituting a suit in the Civil Court, of which the Defendants failed to avail themselves, the Magistrate proposed to enquire further into the facts of the case. In view of the judgment which I have already given on the first question I am unable to say that he had no jurisdiction to continue the proceedings under sec. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

With regard to the case of Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4) which is the subject of the second part of the second question, in my judgment, it cannot be said, having regard to the facts of that case, that it was wrongly decided.

It is necessary for the Court to decide whether the rule in this case should be made absolute or discharged. The Magistrate, as I read his judgment, came to the conclusion, on the materials then before him, that there was no real substance in the claim of title, and consequently in my judgment, the Rule should be discharged.

TRUNON, J.—In this matter the facts have been sufficiently set out in the order made by the referring Bench and also in the judgment of his Lordship the Chief Justice. It is therefore unnecessary for me to recapitulate them.

In the many cases decided under Chap. X of the Code of Criminal Procedure there has been considerable conflict of judicial opinion, and much that is not to be found in the sections themselves has been imported into them by the Courts.

In a case such as the present it appears to me that there are but two questions for the Magistrate (or for the jury, if under secs. 135 and 138 a jury be substituted for the Magistrate) to decide namely, (1) whether the way in question is one which is or may be lawfully used by the public and (2) whether such way has been unlawfully obstructed. These two questions should be decided on evidence in the same manner as any other questions arising in Criminal proceedings. There appears to me to be no reason why in a codifying enactment such as the Code of Criminal Procedure we should introduce any rule of interpretation borrowed from English law. It is also not for us, but for the Legislature, to say whether questions of title should or should not be decided in the Courts of Magistrates. When in proceedings under sec. 133, a claim of private title is asserted the good faith or bad faith of the Defendant raising this plea in my opinion is immaterial. There is no reference to good faith in the sections themselves and if on evidence the Magistrate (or the jury) be satisfied that the path is a public path, the Magistrate should act on that decision and conclude the controversy for the time being. The Defendant if aggrieved still has his remedy in the Civil Courts.

Whether in any individual case before making his conditional order absolute, the Magistrate should give the Defendant an opportunity of establishing by suit his claim of private title is at most a question of discretion and I am not prepared to lay down any general rules for the exercise of such judicial discretion. I may however point out that sub-sec. (2) of sec. 133 does not appear to favour any such reference of parties to the Civil Courts.

In the result I should answer the question referred to us, which I take to be three in number, as follows:—To the first question my answer is 'No.' To the second question my answer is that in the exercise of his discretion the Magistrate may take the course indicated in the question.

To the third question my answer is that I am not prepared to say that on its own facts the case of Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4) was wrongly decided.

For the reasons given I agree in discharging this rule.

RICHARDSON, J.—Sec. 133 and the following sections of the present Code substantially repeat the corresponding sections of the earlier Codes. The word 'thoroughfare' however, used in the Codes of 1861-1869 and 1872 is replaced in the Codes of 1882 and 1898 by the expression 'way which is or may be lawfully used by the public.' The purpose in view is the removal of unlawful obstructions from public ways and the abatement of certain other nuisances affecting the public health or safety such as the carrying on of a trade "injurious to the health or physical comfort of the community." Proceedings are initiated by a conditional order in appropriate terms. If the order is not obeyed, inquiry may follow whether it is a reasonable and proper order or not, the result depending on the finding arrived at upon that issue. The enquiry may be made, at the choice of the Defendant, by a Magistrate or by a jury.

(4) 8 C. W. N. 143 (1903).

The first and principal question referred to this Bench may be thus stated: Whether a conditional order having been made for the removal of an alleged unlawful obstruction from an alleged public way, the Magistrate's jurisdiction to proceed further is ousted if the Defendant raises a bonâ fide claim of right or title.

Under the Code of 1861-1869 it was held that it was for the Magistrate to determine whether a way was or was not a "thoroughfare" [Becharam Bhattacharji (15) and Angelo v. Cargelt (12)]. But under the Code of 1872 there seems to have been either an abrupt transition to a different view or a reversion to some earlier view; witness the observations of Pear, J., in Umesh Chandra v. Ichannath (16), less than two years after Angelo's case (12) and without any reference thereto, and see also Pettambur Jugi v. Nasaruddy (17) and Re Chundernath Sen (18).

The view then taken was apparently determined by two considerations. In the first place the power given the provision in the two earlier Codes corresponding to sec. 147 in the latter Codes, enabled a Magistrate to intervene in any case of dispute concerning a right of way, public or private. The provision was not restricted, as it now is, to disputes likely to lead to a breach of the peace. In the second place it was doubted at the time whether an order made by a Magistrate under what I may call the sec. 133 procedure would be conclusive in the Civil Courts on the question of highway or no highway. There was some conflict of opinion and it was not till 1888 that the point was decided by a Full Bench in favour of the Civil Court [Chunilal v. Ram Kishen Shahu (13)]. Upon these considerations, it was laid down that where there was any dispute concerning the existence of a "thoroughfare" the Magistrate should follow, not the sec. 133 procedure; but the different procedure appropriate to cases of dispute under which the Magistrate's final order would be subject, by express enactment, to the result of proceedings taken in a competent Court by a party aggrieved.

Sec. 147 assumed in the relevant particular its present form in the Code of 1882 and this change in the law made it clear that sec. 147 and sec. 133 were entirely independent provisions and that neither section could be used to throw any light on the interpretation of the other, the object, scope and language being totally different. If there was any over-lapping, that merely meant that in some cases where a public way was concerned, the Magistrate might have alternative procedures open to him. At the same time there was no reason why the restricted operation of sec. 147 as compared with the corresponding previous provision; should of itself enlarge the powers given by sec. 133. It became necessary, therefore, to re-examine the position and this was done in Lukhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee (3), which has since been treated as the leading case.

The judgment then delivered has already been referred to and I will only say that, as it seems to me, the learned Judges attempted to find a basis for previous decisions in the rule or maxim of English Law, that "where the title to property is in question, the exercise of a summary jurisdiction by Justices of the Peace is ousted." (Paley on Summary Convictions, 8th Edition, p. 157). It is this maxim which they set before themselves as one to be followed in India "so far as may be." The difficulty lies in this qualification, as the Magistrate cannot in the same case both have and not have jurisdiction. No satisfactory conclusion can be reached without considering whether the maxim should be, not partially, but wholly accepted or rejected.

The maxim is probably due in its origin to conditions which no longer obtain. There was a time when few Justices of the Peace had any training in law. Formerly also statutes were less scientifically drawn than they now are and were in consequence more loosely interpreted according to their supposed reason or equity. An illustration lies ready to hand in the deer-killing case cited by Paley on page 158, where Holt, C. J., said this:—

"Thus if there was a dispute about the limits of a walk in a forest and one claims as part of his walk what is in fact a part of the division of another, and accordingly kills deer there, the case is out of the intent of the Act, though plainly within the words. The intent is to punish rogues and vagabonds and not persons who by mistake exceed what the law warrants." [R. v. Speed (19)].

But however the rule originated, it has been explained in more recent times as a presumption applicable to the construction of statutory powers conferred on Justices of the Peace—a presumption which may or may not be displaced by the language employed. In R. v. Cridland (20), Crompton, J., said "Being an old maxim of law, which has been so generally applied for ages, we must assume that it is still intended to be applied by every Act relating to such matters, though not specifically mentioned," and in White v.

Feast (21), Blackburn, J., was explicit. "All summary jurisdiction," he observed "is the creation of statute and on the principle that title would not be intended to be decided by an inferior tribunal, there has arisen the well-established rule that every statute giving summary jurisdiction has the implied restriction as to title and the Justices must hold their hands if a bonâ fide claim of right is set up. On the other hand, in some statutes, as the Highway Acts, the terms used show that the Justices were not to hold their hands even if a right were set up."

No doubt the Justices were supposed to know all about the local highway and one reason why in my opinion this presumption should not be intruded into the Criminal Procedure Code, is that I doubt whether it has been consistently applied in England. It was not applied for instance in Williams v. Adams (22) and Ex parte Vaughan (23), while it was applied in R. v. Justices of Dorset (24) and R. v. Stimpson (25). At any rate where it is not applied, the Justices retain full jurisdiction of the nature affirmed in R. v. Bolton (26) and where it is applied the jurisdiction ceases on a bonâ fide claim of title being raised.

In England, again, the superior Courts derive their jurisdiction to decide questions of right and title from the common law and may at one time have regarded encroachments with suspicion. The jurisdiction of the Indian Courts from the highest to the lowest depends on statute. No doubt Civil Courts of various grades have been created for the special purpose of deciding questions of right and title. But as time goes on, various powers may be conferred either on existing Courts or on newly created Courts outside the range of the ordinary Civil Courts. If the presumption that none but a Civil Court is to decide a question of right or title is admitted in one case, it may be extended to other cases and to other tribunals created, it may be for some particular purpose or to administer some particular Act. Quite recently a tribunal was created by the Calcutta Improvement Act for purposes of that Act and only the other day the President of the Tribunal was vested with certain powers to deal with rents in Calcutta. Indian statutes being of the modern character, it seems to me wholly advantageous and desirable that they should be interpreted by the ordinary canons without resort to an adventitious presumption recognised it may be, in England, but not sanctioned by general principle and not authorised by anything in the Indian General Clauses Act, which is itself, so far as it goes, a statutory Code of construction. It is for the Legislature when it creates a new jurisdiction to define and limit the extent of that jurisdiction, as it does, for example, in the Small Cause Court Acts, and when the question arises what powers are or are not conferred, the answer ought to be found within the four corners of the statute.

In conferring powers relating to land or any other subject-matter on Magistrates, it is easy to say, if that is the intention, that the Magistrate's jurisdiction is ousted if a bonâ fide claim of right or title is raised, or, the restriction may be qualified so that the Magistrate's jurisdiction will not be affected unless the claim made is not merely bonâ fide, but also fair and reasonable [cf., White v. Feast (21) and R. v. French (21)].

and scheme of these sections, it is clear that the question of public way or no public way, if it arises, is directly involved in the enquiry which the Magistrate or the jury have to make. To use words which occur in the cases, the question is an essential element in, or goes to the foundation and merits of, the enquiry. Even therefore if this were an English statute it might well be debated whether the Magistrate had not a complete jurisdiction. But if, as I think, the language should be interpreted without any presumption one way or the other, it is plain that the Magistrate or the jury have full jurisdiction to deal with a question of right or title for the purpose of determining whether a conditional order is reasonable and proper. The jury, where there is a jury, would presumably be persons acquainted with the locality, the Legislature relying not on their knowledge of law but on their local knowledge.

That construction is supported by the authority of Sir Richard Couch, C. J., in Angelo's case (12), though the learned Chief Justice did not consider the question of ouster of jurisdiction now raised. It is strange that Angelo's case (12) does not appear to have been cited in argument or referred to in any subsequent case before the present. The case was decided as I have mentioned under the Code of 1861-1869. I do not know whether the subsequent enlargement of the revisional jurisdiction of this Court was a factor in altering the course of opinion. Under the Code of 1861-69, the High Court could only intervene in respect of error in law. Under later Codes the High Court in revision may question "the correctness, legality or propriety" of any finding, sentence or order of an inferior Court and make an appropriate order.

If then the Magistrate has this jurisdiction, it is difficult to justify the general instructions laid down in Lukhee Narain's case (3), dictating how he should act in the exercise of his discretion. Such rules, with all respect, trespass beyond the legitimate sphere of interpretation and revision into the sphere of legislation. It is "wrong in principle for any Court or Judge to impose fetters on the exercise by themselves or others of powers which are left by law to their discretion in each case as it arises." [Saunders v. Saunders (28)].

The instructions involve the distinction referred to in the second question submitted between bond fide claims of title which are well-founded and bond fide claims which are ill-founded. This distinction was a new departure, which has not met with undiluted favour. [See Mukunda Lal Dey v. Haribole Shaha (6) and Peary Lal Mullick v. Surendra Krishna Mitter (8)].

I do not say that an order giving a Defendant whose claim the Magistrate considers ill-founded a limited opportunity to go to the Civil Court is not within the Magistrate's jurisdiction, but he also has jurisdiction, and in some cases it may be his duty, to act himself on his own finding that the claim is ill-founded. It is matter for his discretion. As I apprehend, it would in the same sense be within the Magistrate's discretion in such cases to terminate his proceedings leaving it to either party desiring to do so to seek a remedy in the Civil Court in the usual way. All that can be said beforehand is that the existence of a bond fide dispute of title may be an element for the Magistrate's consideration.

Then, again, there is the difference which the learned Judges authorise between the treatment of obstructions to public ways and the treatment of the other nuisances specified in sec. 133, which affect the public health or safety. In the case of these other nuisances, the learned Judges say, the Magistrate is not to be fettered in the exercise of the powers given him by the considerations applicable to obstructions to public ways. This difference of treatment is not easy to support. Questions of right, if not of title, may arise for instance in connection with the issue whether some trade should or should not be carried on in some locality. That no real distinction exists is shown by the fact that in one or two subsequent cases (no doubt of an exceptional character) this doctrine of urgency has been extended to obstructions to public ways though nothing in the way of danger to the public health or safety seems to have been involved [Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4) and Pakir Mullick v. R. (14)].

It cannot be said that the possibility of a conflict between the Civil and the Criminal Courts was eliminated by the judgment in Lukhee Narain's case (3). Even under the procedure there laid down a Defendant might neglect the opportunity given him of going to the Civil Court pending the Magistrate's proceedings. But he might still succeed, after the Magistrate had made a final order against him, in establishing in the Civil Court that the way was not a public way. Would the Magistrate be bound by the Civil Court decree? Sir Richard Couch thought that the Civil Court had no power, in effect, to reverse the Magistrate's order because otherwise there might be a conflict of jurisdiction. "The consequences of that," he said, "would be that there might be another order by the Magistrate, another jury appointed, another similar finding, and then another suit, and so on. The law does not allow that" [Meechoo Chunder Sircar v. Ravenshaw (29)]. The Full Bench in Chuni Lal's case (13) overruled the view that the Magistrate's order could not be brought in question in the Civil Court, but were silent as to the effect of conflicting decisions. It may be that few Magistrates would go against a decree of the Civil Court. The danger may be remote. Nevertheless it exists and in some combination of circumstances the point may arise and cause difficulty.

In my opinion the attempt made in Lukhee Narain's case (3) to find a half-way house between holding that the Magistrate has no jurisdiction where a bonâ fide claim of title is raised and holding that he has full jurisdiction, placed the law on an unsound and uncertain basis. There can only be two alternatives, either the Magistrate has this jurisdiction or he has not. If he has the jurisdiction, it is beyond the province of this Court to curtail it. And the real difficulty in choosing between the two alternatives for the purpose of answering the first question submitted is this, that in actual practice the distinction which Lukhee Narain's case (3) draws between well and ill founded claims has been generally disregarded, and the raising of a bonâ fide claim of title has been treated, apart from exceptional cases decided on the ground of urgency, as being in itself an effective bar to the Magistrate proceeding further, [cf., R. v. Bissessur Sahu (2), Preonath v. Gobordhone (30) and Kamini Kumar Biswas v. Emperor (9)]. The case is often cited and profession is made of following it, but in general the result has been as I have said. In that state of things my doubt has been whether this Bench should radically alter a practice which goes back to the Code of 1872 or whether it should be left to the Legislature which is understood to be engaged in the revision of the present Code, to put its intentions beyond all doubt. On the whole however for the reasons which I have endeavoured to express I agree with my Lord and Teunon, J., that the first question referred to us should be answered in the negative. If it were answered in the affirmative further questions would arise which need not now be considered as to the time at which the objection to the Magistrate's jurisdiction should be taken and as to the position of a jury where the claim is made after the case goes to them. Subject to what I have already said I agree that an affirmative answer should be returned to the first branch of the second question. Further than that I express no opinion in regard to Belat Ali's case (4).

I agree that in the result the rule should be discharged.

NEWBOULD, J.—There is very little difference in practice between the rule of English Law that a bonâ fide claim of title ousts the jurisdiction of Justices proceeding in a summary way and the effect of decisions of this Court in revision that a Magistrate should stay his hand when in proceedings under sec. 133, C. P. C., he finds that a claim of title is raised bonâ fide. No reference was made to this distinction when the case was argued before my learned brother Suhrawardy, J. and myself. Had there been we should have framed the questions which we referred for decision by a Full Bench differently. The form in which we have put the questions requires a decision on the point of ouster of jurisdiction. Now that I have considered these questions from the point of view of a member of a Full Bench and am no longer bound to follow previous decisions of Divisional Benches, I am convinced that there is no ouster of jurisdiction. I have read the judgment which my learned brother Richardson, J., has just delivered and find myself so entirely in agreement with his views that I do not think it necessary to say more than that I fully agree with that judgment.

GHOSE, J.—The questions referred to the Full Bench for determination are as follows:—

"When in proceedings under sec. 133, Cr. P. C. arising out of an alleged obstruction of a way used by the public, the Defendant sets up a claim of right which is found by the Magistrate to be made in good faith, is the Magistrate's jurisdiction entirely ousted?"

Or can the Magistrate, if he does not think this claim well-founded though he considers it made in good faith, allow the Defendant a reasonable time to assert this claim by a civil suit and if he does not go to the Civil Court within such time or fails there, can the Magistrate continue the proceedings under sec. 133, Criminal Procedure Code? Was the case of Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4) giving effect to the dictum in Lukhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee (3) rightly decided?"

The present reference has arisen out of an application to this Court under the provisions of sec. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by one Ram Sagar Mondal, described as one of the second party, against whom proceedings under sec. 133,

RAM SAGAR MONDAL v. ALEK NASKAR.

Cr. P. C. had been instituted on the complaint of one Alek Naskar and several others. It was alleged that Ram Sagar Mondal and another person had included within their homestead a portion of a public road and had erected a cowshed thereon. Ram Sagar Mondal showed cause denying the existence of the alleged public road and setting up a claim to the land in dispute. The Magistrate was of opinion that the claim of Ram Sagar Mondal, though not substantiated, was not a mere pretence and had not been raised to oust the jurisdiction of the Court but that it had been raised bond fide. He thereupon directed that the second party should go to the Civil Court within a date fixed by him, namely, within the 25th May 1921, and that in the event of the second party not going to the Civil Court within the said period, the trial should be continued. The Petitioner did not go to the Civil Court and thereupon the Magistrate directed witnesses to be summoned. On behalf of the prosecution it was contended before the Division Bench and also before us that on the Magistrate's finding that the Plaintiff's claim was bond fide, his jurisdiction under sec. 133, Cr. P. C. came to an end and that he was not justified in continuing the proceeding, under sec. 133, Cr. P. C. simply because the Petitioner had failed to bring a suit in the Civil Court. On behalf of the Opposite Party, the contention was put forward that, having regard to the findings arrived at by the Magistrate, the jurisdiction of the Magistrate had not been ousted and that he was justified in making the order in the manner in which he did.

In order to appreciate the contentions set out above, it is necessary to refer to the terms of sec. 133 and of the sections which follow in Chap. X of the Criminal Procedure Code and to some of the more important cases decided under sec. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The sections, it need hardly be stated, have to be interpreted according to the natural meaning of the words used. Sec. 133, so far as it relates to the case before us, lays down that whenever the Magistrates mentioned in the section consider on receiving a police report or other information and on taking such evidence, if any, as they think fit, that any unlawful obstruction or nuisance should be removed from any way, river or channel which is or may be lawfully used by the public or from any public place, they may make a conditional order directing the removal of such obstruction or nuisance or directing the person responsible for the obstruction or nuisance to appear before a Magistrate and move to have the order set aside or modified in manner indicated in the statute. Sec. 134 deals with the service of notification of the conditional order made under sec. 133. Sec. 135 lays down the courses open to the public against whom the conditional order has been made. He can either perform the act directed in the conditional order within the time limited therein or appear and show cause against the conditional order or he can apply to the Magistrate to appoint a jury to consider whether the conditional order is reasonable and proper. The procedure which is to be followed in the event of the person affected failing to take advantage of the provisions of sec. 135 and also in the event of the person affected following the provisions of sec. 135 is indicated in secs. 136 to 141 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Further, in cases where there is likelihood of imminent danger or injury of a serious kind to the public, the Magistrate is empowered by sec. 142 to issue, whether a jury is to be or has been appointed or not, such an injunction to the person against whom the conditional order has been made, as

It may be noted in passing that sec. 133 of the present Code of Criminal Procedure corresponds to sec. 521 of the Code of 1872 which again correspond to sec. 308 of the Code of 1861. Under the Code of 1872 it was held by this Court that in proceedings under sec. 521 of that Code, if a claim of private right were set up in respect of what was alleged to be a thoroughfare or public place, the Magistrate could not make any order under sec. 521 and the following sections, but was to proceed under sec. 532 (which corresponds to sec. 147 of the Code of 1882 and of the present Code), so that the person claiming such private right should have an opportunity of having the question raised by him duly enquired into and determined. It is unnecessary to refer to the cases in support of this view; they will be found collected in the case of Chandra Nath Sen (18). The ratio of the decisions was that it was no part of the duty either of the Magistrate or of a jury acting under sec. 526 of the Code of 1872 to determine the rights of parties in property. Then came the Code of 1882 and in the case of Basaruddin v. Baharali (31), Mr. Justice Wilson observed as follows:—"It has been more than once held by this Court that the powers now embodied in secs. 133 to 137 with regard to the obstruction of public ways, are not to be exercised where there is a bonâ fide dispute as to the existence of the public right. In the present case it is plain that the right of way is really in dispute, and that its existence is at least open to doubt. No order, therefore, can be made under the sections referred to, until the public right has been established by proper legal proceedings, Civil or Criminal." It is to be remembered that the Code of 1882 and the present Code of 1898 did not and does not in sec. 147 as in sec. 532, the corresponding section of the Code of 1872 give a Criminal Court power to deal with such a matter. The case in Basaruddin v. Baharali (31) was followed without any discussion in Askar Mea v. Sardar Mea (32) and Lal Meah v. Nazir Khalasi (33).

In Lukhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) the question was discussed at some length and the cases under the Code of 1872 were referred to. It was pointed out by Prinsep and Pigot, JJ., that in accordance with the last mentioned decisions it had been held by this Court that a Magistrate proceeding under the like sections of the Code of 1882, was not, when a bonâ fide claim of title was set up, to proceed to make an order but was to allow the party setting up such a claim to substantiate it if he could do so by Civil proceedings. It was further pointed out that there were no proper provisions in Chap. X of the Code of Criminal Procedure for an enquiry into disputed questions of title and that it could not have been held to have been the intention of the legislature that questions of this nature raised bonâ fide should be finally decided in a summary manner and to the exclusion of any recourse to the Civil Courts. In the case in Lukhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) the learned Judge after pointing out that these decisions in question did not go to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate but only to the mode in which Magistrates should exercise their powers, observed further as follows on p. 571:—

"When such a question is bonâ fide raised, the Magistrate ought not to make an order under these sections of the Code, but should allow an opportunity for the determination of the question by the Civil Court.

The claim of title, must, however, in order that it should be allowed to have this effect, be bonâ fide and not a mere pretence to oust jurisdiction, and it is for the Magistrate to say whether the claim is bonâ fide or a mere pretence. The Magistrate cannot, of course, in determining this, decide contrary to the facts that the claim is not made bonâ fide, but must have reasonable and proper cause for his decision, which will be subject to revision by this Court. The rule, however, that a bonâ fide claim of title ought not to be determined in summary proceedings before the Magistrate is subject to this, that the objection must be raised by the Defendant at or before the hearing; he can not be heard afterwards to object to the result of proceedings to which he has deliberately submitted himself."

The principle thus laid down in Lukhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) has been followed or referred to with approval or has been acted upon in numerous cases in this Court and does not seem to have been questioned at all in subsequent cases; but the controversy, such as it has been, has raged round a distinction drawn on p. 573 of Lukhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) between a claim of right which the Magistrate thinks well-founded and a claim of right which the Magistrate does not think well-founded but considers to have been made bonâ fide. The remarks last referred to, have been considered in several cases as has been pointed out in the referring order; they have been followed and effect given to them in the case of Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4).

Lukhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) that a bonâ fide claim of title ought not to be determined in summary proceedings before the Magistrate is often described as amounting to this namely that the Magistrate, having jurisdiction to enter upon the enquiry and having rightly entered upon it, becomes incapacitated to proceed because some fact appears which ousts his jurisdiction. No doubt it is a principle of the English Common Law that the jurisdiction of Justices is ousted by a bonâ fide claim of title on the part of a Defendant; but it is to be noted that in England it has been held that although a claim of title is put forward bonâ fide by the Defendant, if such a claim is necessarily involved in the very question which the Magistrates have to decide, their jurisdiction is not ousted [R. v. Bradley (34)]. In this country we have to proceed upon the words of the statute as we find them. Now excess of jurisdiction may either exist at the time when the Magistrate embarks upon the enquiry under sec. 133 and when the conditional order is made and in that case there is no jurisdiction to hear the case at all—a contingency which is excluded by the terms of the statute itself, or it may crop up in the course of the hearing. When the Magistrate embarks upon an enquiry under sec. 133, Cf. P. C., there is clearly no want of jurisdiction as has been shown above; and having regard to the very careful and guarded language used by the learned Judge in Lukhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3), I find it difficult to say that the assertion of a bonâ fide claim of title ousts the jurisdiction of the Magistrate in the sense in which the expression is used and understood in England. One test for ascertaining whether a matter is within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate or not is to consider the nature of the arguments used against the Magistrate. If there was no jurisdiction the Magistrate ought not to have entered into the enquiry at all; but if the argument is that the Magistrate's authority is not fettered in any way in cases where danger to public health or safety is involved but is fettered in other cases, it is quite clear that the Magistrate has jurisdiction. Where a Magistrate decides one way when he ought to have decided another way, that is not, in my opinion, absence or want of jurisdiction. The manner in which the Magistrate's discretion ought to be exercised in a particular set of circumstances is a different matter altogether and has nothing to do with questions of jurisdiction. In my opinion there cannot be any manner of doubt having regard to the provisions of sec. 133 that the Magistrate has complete jurisdiction when he makes the conditional order under sec. 133. If the person, against whom the conditional order has been made, has a bonâ fide claim of right, he should draw the attention of the Magistrate to it at the earliest possible moment. On such a claim being put forward it is for the Magistrate to say whether the claim has been advanced before him with some show of reason and whether it is something more than a bare assertion; in other words it is for the Magistrate to say whether there is a real or substantial question between the parties to be tried out. If the Magistrate is of opinion that there is such a question, he ought to stay his hands at once and take no further action in the matter but refer the parties to the Civil Court. Whether or not the claim can be ultimately maintained in the Civil Court is altogether another matter; it is not for the Magistrate to enquire into all the circumstances to see if it is impossible. But if the claim of right put forward is of a character unknown to the law, the Magistrate is under no obligation to stay his hands although it is bonâ fide, in other words a mere belief in a right, although bonâ fide, ought not to be sufficient to induce the Magistrate to stay his hands. This does not mean, however, that the Magistrate is to embark upon a prolonged enquiry into what has been described as the degrees of bonâ fides in the claim of right advanced before him. For instance, where the encroachment or obstruction complained of is upon a way admittedly public, there cannot be any question that the Magistrate must proceed beyond the stage of the conditional order, even if a claim or right were put forward by a person believing in the claim.

The view taken above is not inconsistent with what has been held to be the proper procedure to be followed in cases of emergency where there is likelihood of imminent danger or injury of a serious kind to the public. Indeed the Magistrate's discretion in cases of danger to public health or safety cannot be fettered as is amply recognised at page 573 in Lukhee Narain v. Ram Kumar (3).

I therefore answer the first question by saying that if the Magistrate finds that there is a real or substantial question to be tried out between the parties he ought in the exercise of his discretion to stay his hands and not to proceed any further after making the conditional order under sec. 133. In my opinion it is not a case of ouster of jurisdiction and there is no ouster of jurisdiction.

I answer the second question by saying that the Magistrate is entitled to continue the proceedings where the objector shows nothing more than a mere belief in the claim of right put forward. The Magistrate is not entitled to direct the objector to go to the Civil Court because in his opinion the claim of right cannot be ultimate.

RAM SAGAR MONDAL v. ALEK NASKAR.

ly maintained. So far as the case of Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4) is not inconsistent with the above view, it was rightly decided. As regards the matter out of which the present reference has arisen, I read the Magistrate's order as meaning that he was of opinion that no real or substantial question of title between the parties had been raised before him. If I am right in this interpretation of the Magistrate's order, it follows that the Magistrate was not bound to stay his hands. In this view of the matter I would discharge the rule which was issued by the Division Bench.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE

No. 170 OF 1919.

MAHAMED KAMEL and

MOOKERJEE, J.

BUCKLAND, J.

27, January

ors., Plaintiffs,

Appellants,

v.

HAJI HEDAYETOLLA,

Defendant, Respondent.

Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 253, cl. (10)—Dissolution of partnership by death of a partner—Execution of a trust deed by a partner, the other partner affixing his signature as an attesting witness, if can be treated as a "contract to the contrary"—Representatives of deceased partner, if entitled to profits of the business continued by the surviving partner.

A partnership business was carried on by two persons, one of whom died in August 1915. On the day previous to his death he executed a trust deed for continuance of the business after his death and the other partner affixed his signature thereto only as an attesting witness, but after the execution of the deed said that he would not carry on the business unless his remuneration was fixed. The trustees too subsequently refused to carry on the business. The surviving partner continued the business alone.

Held—That by the execution of the trust deed and the signature of the other partner as an attesting witness thereto, there was no concluded "contract to the contrary" within the meaning of sec. 253 of the Contract Act, and the partnership was dissolved by the death of one of the partners in August 1915 by virtue of the operation of cl. (10) of the section.

Held further—That as to the profits made out of the business by the surviving partner subsequently, the latter was bound to share them with the representatives of the deceased partner, after making all just allowances including fair remuneration for his management, in accordance with the maxim accessorium sequitur suum principale.

AHMED MUSAJI SALEHJI v. HASHIM EBRAHIM SALEJI (1), BROWN v. D. TASTER (2) and YATES v. FINN (3) and other cases referred to and discussed.

This was an appeal against the decree of S. P. Bakshi, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Birbhum, dated the 5th of April 1919.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Joges Chandra Roy and M. A. K. Fazlul Huq and Babus Probodh Chandra Kar and Atindra Nath Mukherji for the Appellants.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiffs in a suit for dissolution of partnership, for appointment of a receiver and for incidental reliefs. The partnership business was carried on by Fazil and Hedayetulla. Fazil died on the 3rd August 1915 leaving the Plaintiffs as his representatives, who commenced the present litigation on the 13th September 1916 with a view to take the partnership accounts. The District Judge has made a decree for dissolution and has directed the accounts to be taken from the 11th October 1913 to the 3rd August 1915 inasmuch as the accounts had been settled up to the 10th October 1913. He has, however, omitted to give directions as to the profits which may have resulted from the business subsequent to the death of Fazil and this raised the real point in controversy in the present appeal.

We are of opinion that there is no room for doubt or discussion that the partnership was dissolved by the death of Fazil on the 3rd August 1915, by virtue of the operation of cl. (10) of sec. 253 of the Indian Contract Act. It has no doubt been suggested on behalf of the Appellants that there was a contract to the contrary and reference has been made to the terms of the trust deed executed by Fazil on the day previous to his death. It is asserted that by that deed the trustees had been appointed by Fazil to carry on the business and that Hedayetulla had assented to this arrangement. But Hedayetulla was not a party to this deed; he appears to have affixed his signature thereto only as an attesting witness. The deed, on the face of it, consequently, does not show that Hedayetulla had assented to this arrangement and that there was a contract to the contrary within the meaning of sec. 253. On the other hand, the oral evidence shows that Hedayetulla was not an assenting party. After the execution of the deed, Hedayetulla is reported to have said that he would not carry on the business jointly unless his remuneration was fixed, and subsequently the trustees appointed by the deed did in fact refuse to carry on the business. It is impossible in these circumstances to hold that there was a concluded agreement between Fazil and Hedayetulla such as would nullify the effect of the rule contained in cl. 10 of sec. 253 of the Indian Contract Act. We must hence proceed on the assumption that the District Judge has correctly held that the partnership was dissolved on the 3rd August 1915.

The Plaintiffs have argued that as the business has been carried on since the death of Fazil, the Defendant who has carried on the business is bound to account for the profits made and to share them with the Plaintiffs. In support of this position, reliance has been placed upon the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Ahmed Musaji Salehji v. Hashim Ebrahim Saleji (1). In our opinion the Plaintiffs are entitled to share in the profits made out of the business since the death of Fazil. The principle applicable to cases of this character was enunciated by Lord Eldon in Brown v. D. Taslet (2). There on the death of one partner the surviving partner retained the capital and employed it in the trade. He was ordered to account for the profits derived from it and to make proper allowance for the management of the business. A similar view was adopted by Hall V. C. in Yates v. Finn (3), where he stated the correct principle to be applied (in the absence of the other special circumstances affecting the rights of the deceased partner on the one hand and the surviving partner on the other) in the following terms:—"The representatives of the deceased partner are entitled to say to the surviving partner: You have been using our testators' money in trade, and making profits by the use of it, and we are therefore entitled to an account of the profits you have made by continuing that money in the concern and trading with it." The profits may well be regarded as accretions to the property which has yielded them and ought to belong to the owner of such property, in accordance with the maxim accessorium sequitur suum principale—the accessory right follows the principal; see Crawshaw v. Collins (4) and Heathcote v. Hulme (5). It may be observed that the rule thus laid down has been incorporated in sec. 42 of the Partnership Act, 1890. The provisions of that Act are not applicable in this country; but the rule itself is manifestly consistent with the principles of justice, equity and good conscience.

The result is that this appeal is allowed in part and the decree of the District Judge varied. A direction will be inserted in the decree to the effect that accounts be taken of the profits of the business since the death of Fazil on the 3rd August 1915 up to the date when the final decree is made, all just allowance including fair remuneration to be allowed in favour of the Defendant for managing the business. The Plaintiffs as representatives of Fazil will be entitled to the same share as Fazil would have taken if the partnership had not been dissolved. The profits will be assessed on the basis of what may be found due to Fazil at the time of his death. There will be no order for costs in this appeal.

BUCKLAND, J.—I agree.

Judgment, 14, June.

BIPRADAS PAL CHOWDHURY, since deceased (now represented by Manmatha Pal Chowdhury and ors.), Appellants,

v.

KAMINI KUMAR LAHIRI and ors.,
Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 161 167—Suit by purchaser of putni taluk at rent sale to eject persons holding land as lakhiraj from time immemorial—Onus of proving origin of lakhiraj since creation of taluk—Adverse possession, if incumbrance.

In a suit under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act by the purchaser at a rent sale of a putni taluk which was created in 1807 to recover lands which the Defendants were holding as lakhiraj for periods greatly exceeding twelve years, and apparently from as far back as anything could be traced:

Quære:—Whether an interest not directly created by the taluqdar but allowed to grow up by his sufferance and negligence is an incumbrance as defined in sec. 161 of the Act.

But assuming for the purpose of the decision that it was:

Held—That it lay upon the Plaintiff to show an origin of the holdings as lakhiraj, either by creation or by the sufferance of a putnidar subsequent to 1807, the proper presumption being that they ran back to a period antecedent to the creation of the putni taluq.

These were two appeals consolidated by the High Court, the first, No. 12 of 1920, composed of 63 appeals, and the second, No. 65 of 1920, of 88 appeals. Both appeals had been consolidated by an Order of His Majesty in Council. The first consolidated appeal was from one judgment and 63 decrees, dated the 29th May 1917, of the same High Court, which affirmed one judgment and 63 decrees, dated the 30th August 1915, of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Nadia, who had affirmed one judgment and 64 decrees, dated the 17th September 1914, of the Munsif of Ranaghat, District Nadia. The second consolidated appeal was from one judgment and 88 decrees, dated the 12th February 1914, of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, which reversed two judgments, dated the 2nd and 19th June 1911, and 88 decrees, made by the District Judge of Nadia, on appeal from five judgments and 103 decrees, dated the 28th August 1908, the 23rd September 1908, the 12th December 1908, and the 22nd December 1908, and the 15th February 1909, of the Munsif of Krishnagar, Nadia, who had dismissed 103 suits filed by the Plaintiff.

The judgment of the said High Court in the consolidated appeal No. 65 of 1920 was the governing judgment on which the decision of the High Court in the other appeal, No. 12 of 1920, was based. It is sufficient therefore to refer in some detail to the proceedings in that appeal only.

The main questions raised on the present consolidated appeals were, first, whether in view of the pleadings and of the findings of the Courts below, the High Court was competent to decide the appeals before them on points raised for the first time; secondly, whether the tenures which the Defendants-Respondents claimed to possess in the lands in dispute are incumbrances within the meaning of sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885; and, thirdly, whether the suits filed by the Appellants are barred by the Indian Limitation Act or by any other law.

* The facts which gave rise to the litigation may be shortly stated as follows:—In or about the year 1799 Taruf Santipur comprising 38 villages was settled by Government with Maharajah Tej Chandra Bahadur of Burdwan who was then in possession of the said Taruf, which was recorded as Towsi No. 474 of the Nadia Collectorate, paying a specified annual revenue. Since its creation in the manner aforesaid the said Zemindari passed through several hands, and came ultimately to be owned and possessed by Babu Prasanna Kumar Tagore. The said Maharajah Tej Chandra Bahadur having taken the permanent settlement made a permanent putni settlement of the entire Taruf Santipur, and on the 26th June 1807, he accepted a *putni kabuliya*t from one Ramesh Chandra Mukerji. The said putni interest passed through several hands and came ultimately to be owned and possessed by Babu Haridas Roy and others, and while they were in possession of the putni villages, the Tagores instituted suits for rent in respect of the putni, and obtained decrees against the putnidar, and in execution thereof brought the said putni to sale under sec. 165 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, and the Plaintiff Bipradas Pal Chowdhury purchased the putni free of all incumbrances. Out of the aforesaid 38 villages some 18 of them, including Simulia, Raghunathpur, and Chandkuri, were let out in darputni, and the Plaintiff after his purchase served notices upon the dar-putnidar and other subordinate holders annulling the incumbrances. The present Respondents put forward claims contending that the lands held by them were not mal or revenue-paying, but lakhiraj lands, and that the rights and interests which they possessed therein could not be annulled by the said Plaintiff, who thereupon instituted the present suits on various dates, ranging from the 8th November 1907. The cause of action in all the suits was the same. Reference may be made to Suit No. 92 of 1908, which was filed on the 8th November 1907. In his plaint the Plaintiff stated the facts summarised above, and claimed to annul the incumbrances and to recover possession of the lands held by the Defendants. The Plaintiff dated his cause of action as accruing from the 28th November 1899, which was the day of his purchase at the auction sale.

The Defendants filed a written statement in which their main pleas were the following :—(1) That the lands in question were lakhiraj lands and not mal lands; (2) that the Plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation; (3) that their tenures were not incumbrances which the Plaintiff could annul by law.

The suit (92 of 1908) was tried by the Munsif of Nadia, along with the remaining 102 suits, which had been filed by the Plaintiff. The learned Munsif divided the suits into five groups; and he framed the following issues in the first group :—

(1) Is the suit not maintainable by reason of the fact that a record-of-rights is being prepared in relation to the disputed lands?

(2) Is the suit barred by the general or any special law of limitation?

(3) Do the lands in suit appertain to putni tenure alleged to have been purchased by Plaintiff? Or are they lakhiraj lands as alleged by Defendants? Is the putni tenure not a valid one?

(4) Did the Plaintiff purchase the tenure free of all incumbrances?

(5) Were Defendants served with a notice under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act? Was the notice sufficient and legal? Was such notice necessary?

(6) Is Plaintiff entitled to khas possession and mesne profits? What amount, if any, should he recover as such profits?

(7) What other relief, if any, is Plaintiff entitled to?

After examining evidence produced by the parties the learned Munsif delivered five separate judgments on the dates already mentioned. The judgment in the first group was delivered on the 28th August 1908. He found the first issue and the second part of the second issue in favour of the Plaintiff, and the first part of the second issue and the third issue in favour of the Defendants. He held that the Plaintiff's suits are not barred by the special law of limitation mentioned in sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885. But he held that the Plaintiff had failed to prove that the lands in question were revenue-paying lands at the time the mahal was permanently settled, and that the Defendants were trespassers. He therefore held that Art. 121 of the second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, had no application, and that the Plaintiff's suits were barred by limitation. He therefore made 103 decrees dismissing the Plaintiff's suits without determining the remaining issues.

The Plaintiff filed 103 appeals in the Court of the District Judge of Nadia from the decrees of the said Munsif, and the said District Judge delivered one judgment on the 31st July 1909, dismissing the appeals. The Plaintiff appealed from that decision to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, which delivered judgment on the 11th May 1910, allowing the appeals of the Plaintiff and remanding the cases to the said District Judge to rehear them according to law.

On remand the learned District Judge tried the 103 appeals in two batches, one of 5 and the other of 98. In the second he delivered judgment on the 2nd June 1911, and in the first a separate judgment on the 19th June 1911. He allowed the 94 appeals, and dismissed the rest. He held that the evidence produced by the parties established that the lands in question were revenue-paying and not lakhiraj lands, and that the subordinate rights held by the Defendants in those lands were incumbrances which had been annulled by reason of the sale for arrears of rent. He also held that the suits are not barred by limitation, and said as follows:—

“It was said that the Plaintiff's suits were barred by limitation. But in view of my findings, as noted above, the Defendants in all the suits, except Suit No. 678, must be held to be trespassers, and Plaintiff's suits having been instituted within 12 years from the date of his purchase of the putni taluq free from all incumbrances, the suits must be held to have been in time [Nafar Chandra Pal Chowdhury v. Rajendra Lal Goswami (2)].”

The District Judge accordingly made decrees allowing 88 appeals of the Plaintiff, and from those decrees the Defendants appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, which delivered one judgment on the 12th February 1914. The Judges of the High Court did not enter into the merits and facts of the cases because they were of opinion that the suits were barred by limitation. They assumed for the purpose of argument that Art. 121 of the second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, was applicable to a case in which a purchaser of putni taluq sold for arrears of rent sues to avoid incumbrances. But they held that “if a Plaintiff relies upon Art. 121 of the second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, he has to establish that the incumbrance he seeks to annul is due to adverse possession which commenced after the creation of the putni.” The District Judge has not found that in the cases before us the adverse possession of the Defendants, and their predecessors, commenced after the creation of the putni. The High Court took the view that there was evidence upon the record to show that the adverse possession of the Defendants and their predecessors had commenced before the creation of the putni, and that in any case the Plaintiff had failed to prove affirmatively that his case came within Art. 121. They summed up their findings in the following terms:—“In these circumstances, we are of opinion that the Plaintiff has not established that the possession of the Defendants commenced after the creation of the putni or that the proprietor of the estate was in possession at the time when the putni was granted. Consequently, the interest acquired by the Defendants cannot be deemed to be an incumbrance within the meaning of Art. 121, nor is it an encumbrance within the meaning of the first clause of sec. II of Reg. VIII of 1819. In this view the decrees made by the District Judge cannot be supported. . . .

“In the cases before us, the Defendants have been unquestionably in possession for more than twelve years antecedent to the suit. The Plaintiff, therefore, had to make out an affirmative case to take his suit out of the Statute of limitation, and he based his case on the ground that the cause of action arose on the 20th November 1899, on the assumption that Art. 121 of the second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act was applicable. But it cannot be disputed that the cause of action did not arise on the 20th November 1899.

“If the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act are applied, as they must be applied, the position of the Plaintiff becomes even more difficult than it is if reliance is placed only upon Art. 121 of the second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act on the groundless assumption that the sale took place under the provisions of the Putni Regulation. We may add that the restriction mentioned in sec. 195, cl. (c) of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not touch the question of the applicability of sec. 167 to the lands in suit." In the result the High Court made decrees allowing 88 appeals of the Defendants and dismissing the Plaintiff's suits with costs.

In the first consolidated appeal, which comprised 63 appeals, the Additional Subordinate Judge of Nadia and the said High Court delivered judgments on the 30th August 1915, and the 29th May 1917, respectively. Both Courts followed the previous decision of the High Court in the second consolidated appeal.

The Appellants appealed from the said decree of the High Court to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. (with Mr. B. Dubé) for the Appellants.—The first proceedings were under sec. 102 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885.

The Defendants say they hold the land by valid title dating from before 1790. The main issue was, were the lands held by Defendants mal or lakhiraj. The other issue was limitation. The Munsif held that the Defendants had not established these as mal lands. This was confirmed by the District Judge. It came, for findings again before the District Judge and his finding was, except in 8 cases, that the lands were mal lands. The High Court decided on the ground that the suit was barred by the Statute of limitations, and did not touch this question at all. They say that under Bengal Tenancy Act, you can only annul encumbrances by giving notice within a year of the knowledge of the encumbrances. There is no doubt that there was this mal land or lakhiraj land at the time of the quinquennial settlement.

Refers to Art. 121 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act and Hurryhur Mookhopadhyaya v. Madub Chunder Baboo (1).

If you decide on the merits against the Appellants then no question of limitation arises. If for the Appellant, then limitation arises. "The question now is whether the lands in suit formed part of the mal lands of the village." Bengal Reg. X of 1793 (preamble). Prior to this a settlement was made with zemindar. Lakhiraj lands were excluded. Reg. XIX of 1793 (preamble) and para. 10. These sections on the question of presumption came before the Board. See secs. 159 and 166 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. No issue on the question of knowledge.

Judgment of High Court is erroneous and does not give any reason and is insupportable if the District Judge is right (sec. 103). On the question of adverse possession, the High Court is wrong Secretary of State for India v. Chelikani Rama Rao (3).

Relied on the finding of fact by District Judge that these were mal lands. These lands were the mal lands of the zemindars at the time of putni settlement.

Why should there be a presumption that these are lakhiraj merely because they did not pay rent for 55 years. The lakhiraj lands were entered as such in the Government Register under Reg. VIII of 1800.

Reg. V of 1816 again repeats the same provision. Sec. 7 of this regulation lays down the duties of the Kanungo.

BIPRADAS PAL CHOWDHURY v. KAMINI KUMAR LAHIRI.

The question of onus is fully dealt with in Hurryhur Mookhopadiya v. Madub Chunder Baboo (1).

LORD PHILLIMORE.—The Plaintiff in the Courts below, now represented by the present Appellants, was the purchaser at a public auction of the putni taluq Taraf Santipur, the property having been put up to sale in execution of a decree for rent. When he came to take possession he found that in thirty-eight villages, the tenants, with some small exception, set up a claim to hold their lands as revenue free or as lakhiraj. He accordingly served notices under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 upon one hundred and three occupiers, treating the interests which they claimed as incumbrances upon his purchase, which he had power under the various sections of the Act to avoid or annul. As they persisted in their claims he instituted in the Court of the Munsif, one hundred and three suits which were heard together.

During the somewhat protracted litigation which followed, fifteen of these suits were disposed of, and do not now come before their Lordships. The remaining eighty-eight are the subject of the first appeal, and there is a further batch of appeals represented in the second consolidated appeal also before their Lordships. The principles governing all these cases are the same, and the decision in one would cover the rest.

The case made by the Plaintiff is that the putni taluq in question was created in 1807, that it was put up for sale on the 2nd October 1899, and was bought by him free of incumbrances; that the lands in question were not registered as lakhiraj and were in fact mal lands, and that any right of the occupier to hold revenue free must be derived under some grant made by the taluqdar, and that this would be an incumbrance upon the taluq which the Plaintiff would be entitled to avoid or annul.

The defences in general form were that no zemindar, putnidar or darputnidar had been in possession of the land within twelve years, and the claims therefore, were barred by limitation; that the lands never were mal lands; that they had in fact been registered as lakhiraj; and certain other objections not material to be discussed in the present judgment.

When the case came for trial before the Munsif he decided in favour of the Defendants and dismissed the various suits, and on appeal the District Judge confirmed his decision. The matter was then taken to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, which Court remanded the case to the District Judge for rehearing the parties upon the evidence, and then addressing himself to the determination of the questions of law, intimating that the whole case would be open before him, and that every question of fact and law that arose for consideration upon the issues must be decided.

On this second hearing the District Judge, who was not the same as the first District Judge, went very carefully into the evidence, and took the view that the burden of proving that the lands were mal lands lay upon the Plaintiff, but that he had discharged it except in eight suits, in which he held that the Defendants had proved that their lands were lakhiraj. The ground on which he rested his view that the onus was in the first instance upon the Plaintiff was that these suits were not suits "for the resumption of lakhiraj lands, but for the eviction of the persons holding them, on the ground that they are trespassers, and therefore had not right or title to hold them."

The materials put before him were partly documentary and partly oral. The Plaintiff relied upon the Pergannah register kept under Reg. VIII of 1800, the Kanungo register prepared and kept under regulations of 1816 and 1819, the register kept under the Land Registration Act of 1876, and copies of the Thak Maps and Thak Statements. In none of these were the lands in question shown to be lakheraj, although there were instances in which other lands were mentioned as being lakheraj. This was all the evidence which he gave. He did not show that any rent had ever been received in respect of the lands in suit. The way in which the learned District Judge accounted for this is as follows :—

"It must be remembered that the Plaintiff is a new-comer having purchased the putni at an auction sale only recently, and when it is borne in mind that some of the outgoing putnidars are at the back of the contending Defendants, there is nothing extraordinary in the fact that Plaintiff could not produce any collection papers to show that any rents have ever been realised from the Defendants for the lands in suit. I therefore hold that the Plaintiff by producing series of Registers and Thakbust Maps and Thak Statements, and showing that the lands in suit do not find any entry in any of these documents as lakheraj succeeded in discharging the onus upon him, sufficiently to shift it on the Defendants to prove that the lands they hold are lakheraj lands."

The documentary evidence which the Defendants relied upon was the quinquennial Register, the Teraj Statements and the Taidad Registers. The learned District Judge thought that no useful assistance could be obtained from the two former; but with regard to the Taidad Register, he gave it force wherever the lands could be identified. He thought that there was sufficient identification in eight cases and he decided these in favour of the Defendants. All the rest he decided in favour of the Plaintiff.

The eighty-eight Defendants who had been unsuccessful appealed to the High Court. The High Court first dealt with the application of Art. 121 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act, which provides that suits to avoid incumbrances in a putni taluq sold for arrears of rent must be commenced within twelve years from the date when the sale becomes final and conclusive, and therefore by inference permits suits to be brought within that time. But the learned Judges observed that the adverse possession contemplated in these cases is possession which commenced after the creation of the putni tenure. They say truly that the principle is that the purchaser of the putni taluq at such a sale as the present takes the taluk in the state in which it was initially created; and after assuming the correctness of some decisions to which they refer, they add :—

"The purchaser takes the property not free merely of all incumbrances that may have accrued upon the tenure by the act of the defaulting proprietor, his representatives or assignees but also free of the interest acquired by an adverse possessor who has been able to acquire such interest by the inaction of the defaulting proprietor." But they add: "This doctrine is plainly limited in its application to cases where the adverse possession, commenced after the creation of the putni. In a case in which the proprietor of the estate is out of possession, he cannot, merely by the device of the creation of a subordinate taluk arrest the effect of the adverse possession which has already commenced to run against him, and such possession would be effective not only as against the subordinate tenure holder, but also as against the superior proprietor. Consequently, if a Plaintiff relies upon Art. 121 of the second Schedule of the India Limitation Act, he has to establish that the incumbrance which he seeks to annul is due to adverse possession which commenced after the creation of the putni." They then point out that "The District Judge has not found that in the cases before us the adverse possession of the Defendants and their predecessors commenced after the creation of the putni. On the other hand, there is ample evidence that the adverse possession of the Defendants and their predecessors commenced before the creation of the putni. There are traces on the record to show that there had been assertions of hostile title before the putni itself was created."

The High Court accordingly reversed the decision of the District Judge and dismissed all the suits.

The estate of the superior Zemindar was created in 1799 and even assuming that there were no lakheraj lands at the time of the creation of that estate, there would be room for the growth of interests by adverse possession between 1799 and 1807; and as the High Court observes, on the assumption that the possible interests acquired by the Defendants by adverse possession constitute incumbrances which can be annulled, the defect of the Plaintiff is that he has not established that the adverse possession of the Defendants and their predecessors commenced after 1807.

It is here that the strong body of oral evidence, to which the learned District Judge apparently paid little attention, comes in. There is a mass of evidence to show that the Defendants and their predecessors had occupied the lands in question revenue free for periods greatly exceeding twelve years, and there was no evidence of any suggestion in cross-examination to which their Lordships' attention could be drawn to show that this occupation had begun at any particular period. Apparently it went back as far as anything could be traced.

In the absence of any indication that these holdings as revenue free tenures had an origin either by creation or by the sufferance of a putnidar since 1807, their Lordships think that the High Court was right in saying that the proper presumption was that they ran back to a period antecedent to the creation of the taluk, or to put it in another way, that it lay upon the Plaintiff to show an origin subsequent to the creation of the putni taluk if he were seeking to avail himself of sec. 167 of the Act, and to annul these interests as incumbrances. In effect the judgment of the learned District Judge had given no weight to the evidence of possession. Whether this possession is to be attributed to the fact that the predecessors of the Defendants were in by title lawfully created before the grant of taluk in 1807, or to be attributed, as Counsel for the Appellants insisted must be the case (if they were to prevail), to interests lawfully created before 1790, or is to be attributed to adverse possession acquired before 1807, makes no difference in the legal result.

The principle upon which their Lordships should proceed has been well expressed in the case of Hurryhur Mookhopadiya v. Madub Chunder Baboo (1).

"Again, their Lordships think that no just exception can be taken to the ruling of the High Court touching the burthen of proof which in such cases the Plaintiff has to support. If this class of cases is taken out of the special and exceptional legislation concerning resumption suits, it follows that it lies upon the Plaintiff to prove a prima facie case. His case is, that his māl land has, since 1790, been converted into lakheraj. He is surely bound to give some evidence that his land was once māl. The High Court, in the judgment already considered, has not laid down that he must do this in any particular way. He may do it by proving payment of rent at some time since 1790, or by documentary or other proof that the land in question formed part of the māl assets of the estate at the Decennial Settlement. His prima facie case once proved, the burthen of proof is shifted on the Defendant, who must make out that his tenure existed before December 1790.

"It may be objected that the result of this ruling may be that Plaintiffs will sometimes fail, where under the former and looser practice they would have succeeded in assessing or resuming the land. But this can only happen by reason of the inability of the Plaintiff to give prima facie proof of the facts which is the foundation of his title; a circumstance not likely to occur unless the Defendants, or those from whom they claim, have been long in possession of the tenure impeached. Nor is it, in their Lordships' opinion, to be regretted if, in such cases, effect is given to those presumptions arising from long and uninterrupted possession, which were heretofore excluded only by the exceptional procedure applied to resumption suits under the Regulations, which have now been decided to be inapplicable to suits of this nature, and by relieving Defendants from the burden which every year made it more difficult to support."

It is right to add one observation.

The case proceeded in the Courts below upon the footing that an interest, not directly created by the taluqdar, but allowed to grow up by his sufferance and negligence is an incumbrance within the definition given to that word in sec. 161 of the Act. There is apparently a current of decisions in India to this effect, and their Lordships have, for the purpose of their judgment assumed, as the Judges in the High Court assumed for their judgment, that this is correct. But it must not be taken that their Lordships have expressed a final opinion upon the point, it being unnecessary that they should do so.

One further point remains. In order to be in a position to use the powers of sec. 167, the purchaser must act "within one year from the date of the sale or the date on which he first has notice of the incumbrance whichever is the later." The Plaintiff here did not act within one year from the date of the sale; but it is suggested that he did act within one year of his having notice. No point to the contrary was made in the Courts below the High Court, and no issue was taken. In these circumstances the High Court thought itself entitled to act upon probabilities and to hold that the Plaintiff must have had notice more than a year before he acted, and to decide against him on this ground also. Their Lordships cannot agree with this course of action, and if the point were now of importance they would have acceded to the application of the Appellants, and remitted the case in order that an issue as to this point might have been stated and found. But as for the reasons already given they think the Plaintiff has failed on the main point, it becomes immaterial to have this issue decided. Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise his Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed. There being no appearance for the Respondents, there will be no question as to costs.

BAWA MAGNIRAM

SITARAM,

Appellant,

v.

SHETH KASTUR-

and anr., Respondents.

Hindu law—Temple property, permanent lease of, questioned after 100 years—Presumption that alienation was lawfully made.

The disability of a shebait of a Hindu Deity to make a permanent grant of endowed property is not absolute.

BAWA MAGNIRAM SITARAM v. SHETH KASTURBHAI MANIBHAI.

Although the sheddait for the time being has no power to make a permanent alienation of such property in the absence of proved necessity for the alienation, yet the long lapse of time between the alienation and the challenge of its validity is a circumstance which enables the Court to assume that the original grant was made in exercise of that extended power.

CHOCKALINGHAM PILLAI v. MAYANDI CHETTIAR (1) followed.

The above principle was applied in the present case of a permanent lease of temple property which was challenged after the lapse of 100 years, when it had become completely impossible to ascertain the circumstances which caused the grant to be made.

The importance to parties to litigation in India of defining at the earliest moment and in the simplest terms the exact character and extent of the dispute which is going to be made the subject of litigation adverted to.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court, Bombay, dated the 22nd December 1916, dismissing an appeal from the Court of the District Judge, Ahmedabad, dated the 27th October 1914, which reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad, dated the 10th February 1913.

The suit was brought by the Plaintiff (Appellant) to recover possession of a "wadi" outside the Delhi Gate at Ahmedabad.

The "wadi" was, on the 17th June 1756 conveyed to the deity Shri Ranchodji through one Sultansinghji as a "pasayta" or assignment of rent-free land for religious purposes.

In 1824 the following document was passed to Bai Krishnabai the wife of Sultansinghji by one Vakhatchand an ancestor of the Respondent.

(1) L. L. B. 19 Mad. 485 (1896).

Shri (i.e., prosperity.)

On the 8th of Maha Vad of the Samvat Year 1880 the day of the week Sunday (22nd February 1824) (this rent-note) is passed to Bai Krishnabai wife of Chowbdar Sultansang Maharajji by Shet Vakhatchand. Khushalchand. To wit: You have given a field and a well as "Dharmada" (i.e., charity) to the temple of Shri Ranchhodji, I have taken the said field and well (on lease) for making "Wadibag" (lit. a garden). In respect thereof I am to pay from year to year Rs 40 (in words) forty in cash of the Shakkai Currency for one year in your presence to the Sadhu who performs the worship at the temple of Shri Ranchodji. Should I fail to pay the amount as above written I am to take off and remove the structure which I may have raised and also the trees and seeds which I may have planted and sown and to hand over the field and well to (the authorities of) the temple of Shri Ranchodji. On (the security of) the said field and well Bawa Kisandas has borrowed from me Rs. 95-ninety-five of the Shakkai Currency. As to that I am to deduct Rs 10 and pay Rs 30 to you (for each) 1 one year. On the Rs 95 being paid up in full, I am to pay rupees forty for 1 one year as above stated. And in case the Government or any other person causes any hindrance or obstruction in connection with this field and well I am to hold you responsible therefor. What is thus written is agreed to

It is largely on this document that the Respondents relied—in support of their claim to be permanent, and not annual, tenants as alleged by the Appellant.

BAWA MAGNIRAM SITARAM v. SHETH KASTURBAHAI MANTEHAI.

In 1909 the Appellant was authorised by the District Judge of Ahmedabad to lease the "wadi" to the Jehangir Vakil Mills for 999 years and it was in order to vindicate his title and give possession to the mills that the present suit was brought.

The trial Judge held that the Defendants (Respondents) were annual tenants and that no notice to quit need be given them as they had repudiated the Plaintiff's title.

This decree was reversed on appeal by the District Judge of Ahmedabad and the High Court of Bombay confirmed the decree of the lower Appellate Court.

The Plaintiff now appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. Upjohn, K. C. (with Mr. E. B. Raikes) for the Appellant.—There are two main points in this appeal. (1) Was the lease a permanent one? (2) Was the lessor absolved from giving notice to quit? The main question is the construction of the rent note passed to Krishnabai.

It could not be a lease in perpetuity; if it purports to be so it was beyond the powers of the "shebait" to grant. It contains no words importing perpetuity. The rent is a yearly one. There is express power to determine the tenancy on failure to pay rent and the object is agricultural, i.e., to make a garden.* The District Judge has held this to be a building lease because there is a direction to remove a structure. This is not a fair interpretation of the terms of the grant. Musammat Bilasmoni Dasi v. Rajah Sheo Pershad Singh (2), Toolshi Pershad Singh v. Rajah Ram Narain Singh (3) and Lala Beni Ram v. Kundan Lall (4).

An important consideration in construing such a document is what are the powers of the lessor. A shebait cannot legally alienate. Maharanee Shibessporee Debia v. Mothooranath Acharjo (5). See too Fateh Chand v. Rani Kishan Kunwar (6) and Vidya Varusi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (7).

Even giving the lease the longest operation it could have, at any rate after Krishnabai's death it would become a yearly tenancy.

Mr. E. B. Raikes (following):—On the question of notice, no notice to quit was necessary because the Respondents had publicly stated that they had a permanent lease. Vikrama Deo Maharajulum, Maharaja of Joypore v. Rukmini Pattamaha-devi (8).

The evidence goes to show that the lease was granted, if not by a shebait, at any rate by some one in a fiduciary capacity. The grant of 1756 is plainly for religious purposes. So that the grantee holds in a fiduciary capacity for the performance of the ceremonies.

Apart from the question of proper notice, I am in any case entitled to come here and ask for a ruling on the question of whether the tenure is or is not permanent.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with him J. M. Parikh) for the Respondents.—The deed must first be construed. If that is in my favour the question then arises as to the grantor's power to grant a permanent tenancy. If the lease is ambiguous then the fact that for a great number of years it has been treated as permanent is evidence that it was intended to be permanent. Upendra Krishna Mandal v. Ismail Khan Mahommed (9).

In the document the only provision for a termination of the tenancy is on failure to pay rent. The purpose of the lease is for making "wadibag," i.e., a garden house, and the Government records show a bungalow on this property in 1836 and 1857. The temple on the property is a Jain temple erected by the lessees. They would not have erected such a building unless they considered that their tenure was permanent.

Reference was made to Nabakumari Debi v. Behari Lal Sen (10). The point as to whether grantor had power to grant a permanent lease was not raised in the lower Courts. A shebait can in special cases grant a permanent lease. From lapse of time and from the fact that this point was not raised, it may be assumed that the original grantor did have power to grant a permanent lease.

Banga Chandra Dhur Biswas v. Jagat Kishore Chowdhuri (11), Murugesam Pillai v. Manickavasaka Pandara (12) and Vidya Varusi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (7).

If it had been pleaded that the grant by Krishnabai was invalid I say this is barred by limitation. Indian Limitation Act, IX of 1908, Art. 134. He also referred to:—Chockalingham Pillai v. Mayandi Chettiar (1).

Mr. E. B. Raikes replied.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—Their Lordships have come to a clear opinion upon the merits of this appeal, and as it relates to the possession of land, they will not reserve the expression of the advice that they will tender to His Majesty.

The Appellant is seeking to obtain possession of a piece of land some 5½ acres in extent, that is situated near the Delhi Gate of the city of Ahmedabad. That the Respondents are in possession by themselves or their tenants is not in dispute; it is indeed the foundation of the Appellant's claim, for the proceedings out of which this appeal has arisen were instituted by the Appellant as Plaintiff claiming to recover possession of the property upon the ground that the only right of the Respondents is as tenants from year to year, a tenancy which had been duly determined by notice, or in the alternative, that the conduct of the Respondents rendered it unnecessary that the Appellant should take any further steps to secure its determination.

The land in question was granted on the 17th June 1756, to one Sultansingh Maharajji for the deity of Shri Ranchhodji; in other words, the grant was a grant to a named person for a defined religious purpose.

On the 22nd February 1824, this land was dealt with by way of lease; the document recording the transaction takes the form of a recognition by the tenant of the rights that have been granted and its informality is largely responsible for this dispute. It states that it is a rent note given to the wife of Sultansingh Maharajji, the grantee under the original grant; that the tenant has taken the field and well for making a garden, and that in respect thereof Rs. 40 a year is to be paid. There then follows an important provision. The money is to be paid, not to the lady who made the grant, but to the Sadhu who performed the worship at the temple of the deity, and the explanation of that is to be found in later clauses of the deed, by which it appears that one Bawa Kisandas, who had undoubtedly some official capacity in connection with the temple, had borrowed money from the lessee, and the amount of that loan being Rs. 95, the lease provides for its liquidation by the lessee retaining Rs. 10 a year until the discharge took place. There is also a provision that if the rent is not paid, the lessee should be at liberty to remove the structures which he may have placed upon the property, and also the trees and seeds. Their Lordships think this means that, in the event of the rent not being paid, re-entry will be possible, and that if re-entry is attempted the permanent structures which the lessee has erected may be removed by him. There are no words whatever in the document that suggest any other right of re-entry on the part of the lessors, nor is there anything in the actual language that gives much assistance in determining what the effect of the document might be. It has been argued that the object of taking the lease, which is said to be the making of a "wadibag," renders some assistance, as the meaning of wadibag is a garden, which it was intended to use for the purpose of adding thereto a house, and that in consequence the grant was for building purposes. Their Lordships cannot, however, find anything that will give them any material assistance in this or any of the descriptive words. All that can be said is that there are two constructions, and no third, to which the document lends itself; the one that the tenancy recognised was a tenancy from year to year; the other that it was a permanent lease, which could only be terminated by non-payment of rent. After this lease had been granted, certain buildings were undoubtedly erected upon the land. What the nature of those buildings may be it is not easy to determine, and it appears that whatever they were they have been allowed to fall into disrepair. Their Lordships do not think that the Respondents can gain much assistance from inviting attention to the actual structures that exist upon the property as it stands now. Certainly no case can be established that would stop the lessors from asserting their right to possession, if under the terms of the document as construed by the circumstances known, that right exists. The evidence is unvarying to this effect—that from 1826 down to the time when this dispute arose, the tenants have been in continued and undisturbed possession of this land at the original rent, and that there is no case made of any act done or any document signed which suggests that during the whole of that period either one party or the other regarded the right of the Respondents as anything short of permanent. There is, indeed, both in 1829 and in a receipt for rent as late as 1906, the use of the word "sadarmat," which has satisfied the learned Judges in the Court below that the tenure was intended to be permanent. It is a matter of extreme difficulty for their Lordships here to give with confidence decisions as to the exact meaning of words in a language with which they are unfamiliar, and they always place the greatest reliance upon the learned Judges in India for the purpose of affording them an exact and accurate interpretation of any word that may be in dispute. They do not, however, in this case, intend to rest their opinion upon the use of this particular word. It may have been accidental, it is certainly not conclusive.

Apart from any inference due to the use of this word, their Lordships think that the terms of the document which, as pointed out by the learned District Judge, may not be satisfied if the tenancy were one from year to year, coupled with the fact that notwithstanding the low rent, which was never changed, the property has been in fact dealt with by the lessees on three separate occasions, in 1872, in 1888, and in 1900, by being sub-leased for substantial periods of years at increased rents, a circumstance which it is not unreasonable to assume must have come to the knowledge of the lessors at some time or another, and that no dispute has arisen as to their right to make such grants or to remain in occupation until the present time, is sufficient to justify them in saying that the memorandum signed on the 22nd February 1824, was intended to record a transaction by which a permanent right to occupy was conferred upon the Respondent's predecessors in title. With regard to the litigation that took place in 1893 for the purpose of partitioning the lessees' interest, it is only necessary to say that having examined all the details which are most carefully investigated by Mr. Mohile, the Additional First-class Subordinate Judge by whom this case was originally heard, their Lordships agree with him and the learned District Judge in appeal that nothing was then decided which bars the present litigation or prevents the Defendants from asserting their rights.

It is, however, further urged on behalf of the Appellant that if such be the meaning of the document, effect cannot be given to it because the property dealt with was property devoted to religious purposes, so that the power of leasing would not extend beyond the granting of a lease for the life of the head of the religious charity, whoever it might be, for the time being. There is no doubt great force in that argument, but it is subject to two defects. The first is that it certainly is not plain that the original lease in 1824 was made by any body in the position of a shebait at all, because the note is given to the widow of the original grantee, and although it might have been fair to assume that the original grantee was intended to hold as a shebait, even if the widow could hold the office, it was not in virtue of that capacity that she granted the lease. Further, the disability of a shebait to make a permanent grant is not absolute.

In the case of Chockalingham Pillai v. Mayandi Chettiar (1), it was pointed out that although the manager for the time being had no power to make a permanent alienation of temple property in the absence of proved necessity for the alienation, yet the long lapse of time between the alienation and the challenge of its validity is a circumstance which enables the Court to assume that the original grant was made in exercise of that extended power. Their Lordships have no hesitation in applying that doctrine to the present case. If in fact the grant was made by a person who possessed the limited power of dealing under which a shebait holds lands devoted to the purposes of religious worship, yet none the less there is attached to the office in special and unusual circumstances, the power of making a wider grant than one which enures only for his life. At the lapse of 100 years, when every party to the original transaction has passed away, and it becomes completely impossible to ascertain what were the circumstances which caused the original grant to be made, it is only following the policy which the Courts always adopt, of securing as far as possible quiet possession to people who are in apparent lawful holding of an estate, to assume that the grant was lawfully and not unlawfully made.

both the grounds that have been mentioned this appeal must fail, and they have only to add that if in truth the real complaint that the Appellant desired to bring forward was a complaint based upon the limited power of the original grantor, such a case ought to have been carefully stated in the original plaint, and certainly urged before the High Court as a substantial reason why leave to appeal should have been granted. The absence of this circumstance has not had any influence upon their Lordships' conclusion. They only refer to the matter for the purpose of attempting once more to call the attention of parties in India to the importance of defining, at the earliest moment and in the simplest terms, the exact character and extent of the dispute which is going to be made the subject of litigation through the various Courts and upon which this tribunal ultimately advises.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

SARAT CHANDRA GUPTA, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
KANAI LAL CHAKRA-BARTY and anr., Defendants, Respondents.

Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 91, 95 and 120, sec. 18—Suit for setting aside or cancelling a written instrument on the ground of fraud and declaration of title—Deed if need be set aside when instrument void ab initio.

Plaintiff prayed inter alia (1) for a declaration that a deed of gift was void and inoperative in that the donor signed the deed believing, owing to the fraud and misrepresentation of the donee, that it was only a power of attorney, and (2) for a declaration of title in certain Government Promissory Notes, the subject of the deed of gift. The deed was signed on the 12th July 1906 and the donor came to know of the fraud on the 23rd January 1915, and the suit was instituted on the 22nd December 1919.

Held—That the three years' limitation provided by Arts. 95 and 91 of the Limitation Act did apply to the suit, inasmuch as the principle laid down in FOSTER v. MACKINNON (1), that the alleged deed is no deed was applicable so that the deed being void ab initio did not require to be set aside or cancelled.

Held, further, with reference to the relief sought for in cl. (2) of the prayer, that Art. 120 of the Act would apply and that sec. 18 would prevent the period of limitation from running until the fraud became known.

Messrs. P. N. Dutt and S. K. Chakraborty for the Respondents were heard in reply.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Buckland whereby he dismissed the suit, on the ground that it had been brought out of time. There was no investigation of facts. The case was decided upon the facts which were stated in the plaint. Having regard to those facts stated in the plaint the learned Judge came to the conclusion that the suit was barred under the Art. 95 of the Indian Limitation Act, holding that the suit was a suit for relief on the ground of fraud. It is, therefore, necessary to refer to the plaint to ascertain the facts which were therein relied upon. It was alleged that one Nanda Kissors Ganguly died on the 2nd day of June 1892, that by his Will he devised to his widow Ranganmoni Debi certain premises Nos. 27/1 and 27/2, Soorti Bagan Lane and a life interest in certain other premises No. 3, Soorti Bagan Lane, and that by the Will he left the latter property No. 3, Soorti Bagan Lane, to his nephew Kanai Lal Chuckerbutty after the termination of the widow's life interest. The original Plaintiffs in this case were Ranganmoni Debi (the widow) and Sarat Chandra Gupta and the original Defendant was Kanai Lal Chuckerbutty to whom I have just referred. But in August 1920 Ranganmoni the widow was struck out as a Plaintiff and was added as Defendant. It appears that Ranganmoni took possession of the property of her husband after his death and was in possession of the property in question Nos. 27/1 and 27/2, Soorti Bagan Lane, until the time the property was acquired by the Calcutta Improvement Trust. It was then alleged in the plaint that in June or July 1906 the Defendant Kanai Lal Chuckerbutty induced the widow Ranganmoni Debi to sign a document and certain allegations with regard to the necessity for the document for the purpose of the management of the estate were relied upon. But the most important allegation was an allegation that relying upon the representation of the Defendant Kanai Lal Chuckerbutty, Ranganmoni Debi put her mark upon a paper which she was told by the Defendant Kanai Lal Chuckerbutty was a power-of-attorney and would enable the said Kanai Lal to institute suits for rent on behalf of Ranganmoni and that she signed it under the belief which was brought about by Kanai Lal that the document which she signed was nothing more than a power-of-attorney. It was further alleged that in June 1913 the premises were acquired by the Calcutta Improvement Trust and a sum of Rs. 10,000 was awarded as compensation and that such sum is now lying invested in Government Promissory Notes in the Bank of Bengal to the credit of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal, that thereupon claims were made in respect of the said premises before the Improvement Tribunal by Ranganmoni and also by Kanai Lal Chuckerbutty and others. It was then alleged that an award was made by the President who directed that the compensation money should be invested in Government securities and the interest should be paid to Ranganmoni during her life, and that after her death the amount would be dealt with according to law. It was then alleged that during these proceedings Ranganmoni ascertained for the first time that the document, which she has signed in 1906 under the belief that she was signing a power-of-attorney was as a matter of fact a deed of gift and exchange whereby she purported to convey to the Defendant Kanai Lal Chuckerbutty the premises Nos. 27/1 and 27/2, Soorti Bagan Lane, subject to a right in herself to hold and occupy the premises during her life in exchange for the vested reversion of Kanai Lal Chuckerbutty in the other premises, namely, No. 3, Soorti Bagan Lane. Then the other material fact is that after this, namely, on the 23rd of November 1918, Ranganmoni assigned to the Plaintiff all her right title and interest in respect of the Rs. 10,000 and the Government Promissory Notes representing that sum of Rs. 10,000 together with all interest for valuable consideration covenanting with the assignee that she would give him all assistance which would be necessary for the purpose of instituting suits for a declaration of Ranganmoni's absolute right in, and over, the premises and to the Rs. 10,000. The plaint then set out the alleged deed of July 1906 after stating that enquiries had been made in the Registration Office. The suit was instituted on the 22nd of December 1920. In the suit it was submitted that the deed of exchange and gift was wholly void and inoperative and that the Defendant Kanai Lal Chuckerbutty never acquired any right title or interest in the said premises or in the Rs. 10,000 and it was stated that Ranganmoni was prevented by the fraud of the Defendant from acquiring any knowledge of the real nature of this deed and her right to institute the suit until the 23rd January 1915; and that consequently the cause of action arose on the 23rd of January 1915. Those are all the facts to which I need refer. The first prayer of the plaint was for a declaration that the said deed of exchange of 1906 was void and inoperative; secondly for a declaration that the Plaintiff Sarat Chandra Gupta was absolutely entitled to the said sum of Rs. 10,000 in Government Promissory Notes now lying in deposit at the Bank of Bengal and for other receipts to which I need not refer. First of all it is necessary to say that of course the Plaintiff the assignee Sarat Chandra Gupta is in no better position than his assignor Ranganmoni Debi. The question is whether the learned Judge was right in holding that Art. 95 applies to this case on the ground that this is a suit asking for relief on the ground of fraud. The learned Counsel for the Appellant has argued that the relief asked for in this case is a declaration that the Plaintiff is absolutely entitled to the sum of Rs. 10,000 in the Government Promissory Notes and that the first paragraph of the prayer might have been struck out of this plaint altogether that it would no doubt have been necessary for the Plaintiff to prove the facts stated in the plaint but that no relief need be granted by the Court except the relief which is asked for in the second paragraph, namely, a declaration that the Plaintiff is entitled to the money represented by the Government Promissory Notes. That argument is based upon the ground that the deed of July 1906 was void and inoperative ab initio, that it was not merely a contract which was voidable at the instance of Ranganmoni but that it was no deed at all on the ground that Ranganmoni when she executed it thought that she was executing a power-of-attorney whereas by the fraud of the Defendant she was induced to execute a deed whereby the property was conveyed to the Defendant. We must approach this case upon the assumption that the allegations in the plaint are correct because so far there is no proof in this case. We must therefore assume for the purpose of this judgment that Ranganmoni signed this document under the belief that she was signing a power of attorney, whereas she was induced by the fraud of the Defendant to execute a deed of exchange and gift thereby alienating the property from herself to the Defendant subject to a life interest. I of course express no opinion as to what are the real facts in this case. I am giving this judgment upon the assumption that the facts alleged in the plaint are correct. Upon that assumption the deed was no deed, because Ranganmoni thought that she was signing one thing whereas as a matter of fact she was signing another and the principle which is applicable to this case if that assumption is made is the one which is laid down by Mr. Justice Byles in Foster v. Mackinnon (1). The allegation here is that the deed of July 1906 was void on the ground that the mind of Ranganmoni did not accompany her signature or mark, in other words that she never intended to sign and therefore in contemplation of law never did sign the deed to which her name and mark were attached. If then the allegation amounts to an assertion that the transaction which took place in July 1906 resulted in no deed being signed by Ranganmoni then the only declaration which the Plaintiff would require in this case would be the declaration which is asked for in para. 2 of the prayer. It would be necessary as I have said before for the Court to come to a decision on the facts as regards this transaction and if it came to a decision that in law the deed of exchange and gift was not executed by Ranganmoni, then all that would be necessary would be for the Court to declare that the Plaintiff is entitled to the money. It is not a case where the contract is voidable in which case the Court would have to make a declaration that the deed should be set aside. On the facts assumed there would be no necessity for such a declaration for the Court would have come to the conclusion that in law Ranganmoni had not executed the deed of exchange and gift. Consequently in my judgment the contention of the Appellant in this case would be correct, viz., that the relief which is sought for is the declaration which is asked for in para. 2 of the prayer of the plaint. That being so Art. 120 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act would apply to this case and inasmuch as it is alleged that Ranganmoni's rights were concealed from her by the fraud of the Defendant until the 23rd of January 1915, sec. 18 of the Limitation Act would have effect and the period of limitation would not begin to run until the 23rd of January 1915. The period of limitation prescribed by Art. 120 is six years. This period would not expire until January 1921 and inasmuch as the suit was brought on the 22nd of December 1919, in my judgment the suit would be brought in time. Consequently this appeal is allowed with costs, the order of the learned Judge dismissing the suit is set aside and in view of this judgment the case is remitted to the Court of first instance to be tried on the merits. The costs of the first hearing in the Court below will abide the result of the further hearing and in the event of the suit not being further tried such costs will be in the discretion of the Judge on the Original Side.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree. It seems to me that modern decisions founded in principle on the cases of Rani Janki Kunwar v. Raja Ajit Singh (2) and Malkarjan v. Narhari (3), lead to the following result. If a Plaintiff comes into Court to have a particular written instrument set aside or (3), the presumption cannot be of such great weight as would be the case if the entry were with regard to matters which are rightly and properly included in the record-of-rights. The non-production of papers by the Plaintiff coupled with the statement of the Defendant was sufficient to rebut the statement in the record-of-rights.

BIPRODAS PAL CHOUDHURY v. AZAM OSTAGAR (1) discussed.

These were appeals against the decrees of E. Milsom, Esq., 2nd Additional District Judge of Zillah Mymensingh, dated the 31st of July 1919, affirming the decrees of Babu Atul Chandra Banerjee, Munsif, 3rd Court at Mymensingh, dated the 22nd of July 1918.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

No. 1777.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the learned Second Additional District Judge of Mymensingh ; and, the suit was brought for the purpose of obtaining khas possession of the lands in dispute.

The Defendant in one case was Brindaban Chandra De Sarkar, and the Defendant in the other case was his wife : and, it has been found that she was a benamdar for her husband, and the two cases have been treated as if Brindaban was the occupier of both the pieces of land.

The first Court dismissed the suit : and, upon appeal to the lower Appellate Court, the decision of the first Court was upheld, and the appeal was dismissed.

The case raises a point of considerable interest, inasmuch as the record-of-rights which was published in February 1918 described the character of the holding in each case as Chandina, an expression which in this part of the district was, apparently prior to the entry in the record-of-rights, unknown. There was a considerable discussion as to what was the meaning of the word, but the learned Additional Judge for the purpose of his judgment said that he was prepared to hold, though with a certain amount of doubt, that the view urged by the Plaintiff was correct, namely, that by Chandina the settlement authorities meant bazar land not subject to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The first point, that the learned Vakeel for the Appellant has urged, is based upon sec. 103B (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act which provides that "Every entry in a record-of-rights so published shall be evidence of the matter referred to in such entry, and shall be presumed to be correct until it is proved by evidence to be incorrect : " and, the argument was to the effect that the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court had ignored that section and held that in this case the entry in the record-of-rights created no presumption. The words of the learned Judge may be cited : he said, "whatever land is dealt with by the settlement authorities as falling under the Tenancy Act, the law says that the various entries made are to be presumed correct until the contrary is shown. But I know of no authority for the view that if the settlement authorities decide that the land is not held under the Bengal Tenancy Act at all, the view should be deemed correct." My learned brother and I have had some difficulty in understanding how this entry came to be made by the Revenue Officer if the word "Chandina" is to be taken to bear the meaning which the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court put upon it. If the Revenue authorities understood that it meant bazar land which was not subject to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act at all, it is difficult to understand why they entered it upon the record-of-rights which was made in connection with lands which are subject to the Bengal Tenancy Act. The explanation of it may be that the Revenue Officer had not then the advantage which the two lower Courts had, of the discussion as to what the word really meant, and the entry may have been made under a misapprehension as to the real meaning. However that may be, the entry was made, and there it stands: and, the question is whether the learned Vakeel for the Appellant is right when he says that a presumption must be made that this description of the holding is correct until evidence is given to prove the contrary.

Dr. Basak, the learned Vakeel for the Defendant, has contended that the learned Judge was right in holding that no presumption arose for the reason that sec. 102 of the Bengal Tenancy Act describes the particulars which are to be recorded in the record-of-rights. It describes the classes of tenants with which the record-of-rights is to deal; and, for the purpose of seeing what classes of tenants are to be dealt with he referred especially to cl. (b) of sec. 102, and he urged that it is only with regard to what I might call proper entries, i.e., the entries which ought to be made and could be made in accordance with the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act that the presumption which is referred to in sec. 103B (3) would arise. No authority directly upon this question has been cited to us, and consequently it is not unreasonable to assume that the learned Judge was correct when he said "I know of no authority for the view that if the settlement authorities decide that the land is not held under the Bengal Tenancy Act at all, the view should be deemed correct." The only authority, in any way touching the question, which was cited to us, is the case of Bipradas Pal Choudhury v. Azam Ostagar (1), a decision of my learned brother Mr. Justice Woodroffe and Mr. Smither when he was acting as a Judge of this Court. There Mr. Justice Woodroffe, said, "The Legislature contemplated I think that only three classes of tenants should be regarded as holding lands within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act, viz., a tenure-holder who has been held to mean a person collecting rents from raiyats, raiyats holding lands for the purpose of cultivation and under-raiyats holding under them." Again he said, "There seems to me no doubt that in its general scope the Bengal Tenancy Act is law for agricultural landlords and tenants." Basing his argument upon that, the learned Vakeel for the Defendant has supported his proposition that if an entry has been made in the record-of-rights with regard to land which does not come within the scope of the Bengal Tenancy Act and with regard to which the Revenue Officer had no jurisdiction to make the entry, no presumption arose under sec. 103B (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I am not prepared to go so far as to say that in this case no presumption arose from the entry in the record-of-rights, but I am prepared to say that the presumption cannot be of such great weight as would be the case if the entry were with regard to matters which are rightly and properly included in the record-of-rights. In this case, the first Court went so far as to hold that the entry was clearly wrong. Upon that point the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court has not expressed any definite opinion, as I understand, because he came to the conclusion that no presumption ought to be drawn from the entry. But he discussed the evidence and came to the conclusion that if he had to rely upon the statement of the Defendant alone he would have had difficulty in finding in favour of the Defendant. He, however, drew attention to the fact that the Plaintiff was a landlord with large possession and it was an extraordinary thing that the papers which would have shown the origin and the nature of the tenancy had not been produced. That was the point upon which the first Court relied to a large extent, and held that the non-production of these papers is to be regarded as a matter which must weigh heavily against the Plaintiff's case. Taking that together with the evidence of the Defendant, the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court came to the conclusion as I read his judgment that the Defendant had proved that the statement in the record-of-rights was rebutted and that the lands in question were either jote lands or homestead lands. Consequently, the first point, in my judgment, which the learned Vakeel for the Appellant urged is not sufficient to justify us in allowing this appeal or even in directing a remand.

(1) I. L. R. 46 Cal. 441 (1918).

Then there was a further point which the learned Vakeel raised. He urged that the facts were not sufficiently found by the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court. He referred to the finding that the lands must be taken either as jote lands or as homestead lands and that the finding that the lands are homestead lands, by itself, is not sufficient, because in order to bring them within the purview of the Bengal Tenancy Act they must be homestead lands occupied either in connection with agriculture and for purposes of agriculture. In my judgment, although the learned Judge's words are not quite as definite as they might have been, reading the judgment as a whole I have no doubt that the learned Judge meant to find and did find as a matter of fact that the lands were agricultural lands and that the homestead was used in connection with agriculture to some extent. I come to that conclusion upon the words of the judgment itself and I am fortified in that conclusion by the finding of the first Court that the Defendant actually used these lands partly for shop and partly for raising crops. Under those circumstances, the finding of the lower Appellate Court is sufficiently definite: and, I think that the learned Judge found that the holdings were not Chandina but that they were holdings which came within the purview of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and consequently the Plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for possession in accordance with the claim which he preferred.

The result is that in my judgment, for the reasons that I have given, the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

The other appeal will follow the event of this appeal, and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

CHOTZNER, J.—I agree.

APPEAL FROM ORDER

No. 355 OF 1920.

CHATTERJEA, J.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Sch. III, Art. 6—Application for execution more than three years after the date of a rent decree, if barred, when there were acknowledgments within three years of the date of the decree—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 19, if applies to cases under the Bengal Tenancy Act—Bengal Tenancy Act, sec. 184, scope and effect of.

PARESH NATH PAL CHOUDHURY v. ISMAIL SARDAR.

A rent decree for less than Rs. 500 was passed in January 1916, and application for execution was made in March 1919. There were some acknowledgments of liability within three years of the date of the decree:

Held—That sec. 19 of the Limitation Act applies to such cases, and an acknowledgment of liability under that section made by a judgment-debtor, in respect of the decree-holder's right to execute a rent decree, gives the decree-holder a fresh starting point for counting the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 6 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

HARIHAR LAL v. GUNENDER PERSHAD (1) followed.

This was an appeal against the order of A. L. Mukherjee, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Nadia, dated the 2nd of July 1920, reversing the order of Babu Bepin Behary Mukherjee, Munsif, 1st Court at Krishnagar, dated the 7th of August 1919.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment.

Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitra for the Appellants.

Babus Satindra Nath Mookerjee and Satis Ch. Munshi for the Respondents.

The question involved in the appeal is whether the application for execution of a decree is barred by limitation.

The decree was one for rent and the amount for which it was passed was less than Rs. 500. It was dated the 27th January 1916.

The present application for execution was made on the 28th March 1919, i.e., more than three years from the date of the decree. The decree-holder, however, relied upon certain acknowledgments of liability within three years of the date of the decree, and the Court of first instance held that such acknowledgments saved limitation.

On appeal the learned District Judge held that sec. 19 of the Limitation Act was inapplicable to the case as it was a decree for rent which is governed by the special limitation prescribed by Art. 6, Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

There is no doubt that under Art. 6, Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the period of limitation is three years from the date of the decree, and sec. 184 of that Act lays down that any application made after the period of limitation prescribed in Sch. III annexed to the Act shall be dismissed although limitation has not been pleaded. Sec. 185, sub-sec. (1) lays down that secs. 7, 8 and 9 of the Limitation Act, 1877, shall not apply to the suits and applications mentioned in sec. 184. Sub-sec. (2), however, provides that subject to the provisions of this chapter, the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, shall apply to all suits, appeals and applications mentioned in the last foregoing section. Under that sub-section, therefore, it appears that sec. 19 of the Limitation Act would apply to a decree for rent.

Art. 6, Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that where the judgment-debtor has by fraud or force prevented the execution of the decree, the period of limitation shall be governed by the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, but it does not follow that in cases where there is force or fraud the general provisions of the Indian Limitation Act (other than those mentioned in the sec. 185 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act), will not apply. The article merely says that the period of limitation shall be governed by the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877. The question appears to have been considered in the case of Harihar Lal v. Gunender Pershad (1). The learned Judges held that an acknowledgment of liability, under sec. 19 of the Limitation Act made by a judgment-debtor, in respect of the decree-holder's right to execute a rent decree gives the decree-holder a fresh starting point for counting the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 6 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It is contended on behalf of the Appellant that, if the decree-holder is allowed a fresh starting point for limitation for the execution of a rent decree from the date of acknowledgment under sec. 19 of the Indian Limitation Act, it would affect or alter the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 6 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

As pointed out by the learned Judges in the case cited above, "the answer to this would seem to be that the acknowledgment under sec. 19 does not affect or alter the period of limitation so prescribed, though it may seem practically to do so, but only gives the decree-holder a fresh starting point for counting the period prescribed by Art. 6, Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act which the judgment-debtor has himself given him by petitions containing the acknowledgments of his debt.

We are accordingly of opinion that sec. 19 of the Limitation Act applies to such a case.

It is contended on behalf of the Respondent that there was no acknowledgment of liability within the meaning of sec. 19 of the Limitation Act.

It appears, however, that the judgment-debtor expressly admitted that there was an instalment decree in favour of the decree-holder, that several instalments had already been paid, that the instalment for Pous remained unpaid but as it had not become due, the decree-holder could not proceed with the execution. That was a sufficient acknowledgment within the meaning of the section.

It is contended that the admission should be confined to the actual amount payable for the Pous instalment. But there was an acknowledgment of liability under the decree and that we think, is sufficient for the purpose of the section.

The result is that the order of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs here and of the lower Appellate Court, the costs in this Court being assessed at one gold mohur.

The execution of the decree will be proceeded with.

RULE No. 524 OF 1921.

SUHRAWARDY, J.

SITAL PROSHAD
PODDAR, Petitioner,
v.
KAIFUT SHEIKH,
Opposite Party.

Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889) - Necessity of a certificate in case of a son belonging to a Mitakshara family - Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 22 - Addition of Plaintiffs after period of limitation, if a sufficient ground for throwing out the suit as barred without any finding as to whether the added Plaintiffs were necessary parties.

In the case of a family governed by the Mitakshara law a son can maintain a suit for debts owing to his late father without a succession certificate under Act VII of 1889.

A finding that some of the Plaintiffs were made parties after the period of limitation is not sufficient to hold the suit barred. There may be circumstances in which addition of parties subsequently brought on the record may not be essential and may be merely for the protection of the Defendant and therefore there should be a finding as to whether the added parties are necessary parties to the suit and if not whether the suit can proceed without them.

THAKURMANI SINGH v. DAI RANI KOERI

(1) KISHAN PRASAD v. HAR NARAIN SINGH
GURUVAYYA GONDA v. DATTATRAYA ANANT (3) referred to.

This was a Rule granted on the 5th August 1921 against the judgment of the Small Cause Court Judge of Lalbagh (Babu Satish Ch. Chakerbutty), dated the 13th June 1921.

The Plaintiff brought the present suit in the Court of the Munsif of Lalbagh exercising Small Cause Court jurisdiction for realisation of some debt owing to his father. The suit was dismissed on the grounds that the suit was not maintainable without a succession certificate, and that as some of the Plaintiffs were made parties after the period of limitation the suit was barred under sec. 22 of the Limitation Act. Against this decision the present Rule was granted by the High Court.

Babu Apurba Charan Mookerjee (for Babu Khitish Ch. Chakrabarti) for the Petitioner.

No one appeared for the Opposite Party.

This Rule is directed against the order of the Munsif of Lalbagh exercising Small Cause Court jurisdiction dismissing the Plaintiff's suit on two grounds : first, that the debt was owing to the Plaintiff's father and therefore the suit is not maintainable without a certificate under Act VII of 1889, and secondly that as some of the Plaintiffs have been made parties after the period of limitation the suit is barred under sec. 22 of the Limitation Act.

With regard to the first point it is now beyond controversy that in the case of a family governed by Mitakshara law, as the Plaintiff's family appears to be, succession certificate is not necessary before bringing a suit of this nature.

As regards the second point the learned Munsif says : "The co-parceners were made parties on 6th June 1921. The suit was on that date clearly barred." This finding, in our opinion, is not sufficient to hold the suit barred. There may be circumstances, as existed in various cases [See the cases of Thakurmani Singh v. Dai Rani Koeri (1), Kishan Prasad v. Har Narain Singh (2) and Guruvayya Gonda v. Dattatraya Anant (3)] in which addition of parties subsequently brought on the record may not be essential and may be merely for the protection of the Defendant. It is therefore desirable that the learned Munsif should come to a finding as to whether the added Plaintiffs who, we are told, are minors are necessary parties to the suit and if not whether the suit can proceed without them.

We therefore make the Rule absolute, set aside the decree of the Munsif of Lalbagh exercising Small Cause Court jurisdiction, dated the 13th June 1921 and send back the case for trial in accordance with the above observations. We pass no order for costs.

[APPEAL FROM ALLAHABAD.]

LORD SHAW.	MUSAMMAT KAMA-
LORD PHILLIMORE.	WATI, Appellant,
MR. AMEER ALI.	v.
1921,	KUNWAR DIGBIJAI
21, June.	SINGH, Respondent.

Purdanashin lady, deed by—Duty of disclosure of donee to donor of character of transaction—Failure operates to nullify transaction, apart from fraud—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), secs. 2, 331—Person dying a Christian, succession to, if governed by Hindu law when he lived like a Hindu.

The parties to a contract may stand in such a relation as (apart from fraud or of conduct partaking of the quality of fraud), may give rise to an obligation on the part of one towards the other, failure to fulfil which will be a ground for rescission of the contract and for the consequent remedies. NOCTON, v. ASHBURTON (1) referred to.

The donee from a purdanashin lady stands towards her in such a relation that it is his duty to see that she fully understands the transaction.

The release in question in this case was set aside as the duty of disclosure resting upon the donee had not been discharged.

Succession to the estate of a person who died a Christian is governed by the Indian Succession Act, and cases such as ABRAHAM v. ABRAHAM (3) and RADHIKA PATTI MAHA DEVI GARU v. NILAMANI PATTI MAHA DEVI GARU (4), which preceded the Act, cannot be relied on to modify or interpret it.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 30th January 1917 of the High Court at Allahabad, reversing on appeal a judgment and decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Moradabad, dated the 12th August 1915.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment.

Mr. B. Dubé for the Appellant.—On the question of burden of proof, relied on Sajjad Husain v. Wazir Ali Khan (2). The burden clearly had not been discharged in this case.

Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondent.—Referred to Abraham v. Abraham (3). Act 21 of 1850. Radhika Patta Maha Devi Garu v. Nilamani Patta Maha Devi Garu (4), Re: Joseph Vathiar (5), *Ponnusami v. I cannot put it higher than this. It was known both to Kamawati and her husband that there was a case that the deceased was a Christian. Both Kamawati and Bhagwati must have known what it was that was compromised as Bhagwati refused to sign the deed on the ground that her allowance was insufficient.

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 30th January 1917, of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces at Allahabad, which reversed a judgment and decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Moradabad, dated the 12th August 1915.

lant, as the sister's daughter of one Kunwar Randhir Singh Sahib, deceased, to recover from the Respondent (who, as his surviving brother, was in possession of his estate) a one-twelfth share of that estate. To this one-twelfth share the Appellant would be entitled to succeed under the provisions of the Indian Succession Act. This would be so, Kunwar Randhir Singh having died a Christian, and the Act accordingly regulating the succession to his estate. An argument will be hereafter noted which challenges this proposition and alleges that in the circumstances of Randhir and his family it must be concluded that the Indian Succession Act does not apply to his case, and that the succession to his property is governed by the Mitakshara Law.

The Defendants, however, substantially found their case upon the existence of a deed, dated the 29th April 1912, whereby the Plaintiff is alleged to have relinquished all her rights in respect of her inheritance. It is part of the plaint accordingly to have this deed declared invalid. Its annulment was decreed by the Subordinate Judge, but the High Court have upheld it.

The deed is short, and is in the following terms :—

"We, Kameshar Nath, son of Chaudhri Bhagwan Singh, Taga by caste, old resident of Saharanpur, at present residing in Tajpur, district Bijnor; Bibi Kamawati, wife of Kishore Singh, Taga by caste, resident of Alaudinpur, district Bijnor; and Bibi Bhagwati, widow of Sher Singh, deceased, Taga by caste, at present residing in Tajpur, district Bijnor, declare as follows :—

"As regards the property left by Kunwar Randhir Singh, deceased, 'rais' of Sherkot, district Bijnor, there was a dispute between his own brother, Kunwar Digbijai Singh and Musammat Hira Dei. The matter was amicably settled and a compromise was written on the 27th of October 1908, and registered in the office of the Registrar of district Moradabad, on the 31st October 1908. Under it monthly allowances were also fixed for us, the executants, out of the estate of Kunwar Randhir Singh. Now, there is again a dispute about his (Kunwar Randhir Singh's) estate between the aforesaid two persons. And it is alleged on behalf of Musammat Hira Dei that we, too, have a right in the estate of Kunwar Randhir Singh. Therefore, admitting the compromise, dated the 27th October 1908, we, the executants, while in a sound state of mind, and without being tutored or induced by anyone, willingly and voluntarily covenant and write that except the monthly allowances of Rs. 50 assigned to each of us, executants Nos. 1 and 2, and the monthly allowance of Rs. 100 assigned to me, executant No. 3, by Kunwar Digbijai Singh, of his own accord, according to the custom of the family, out of the estate of Kunwar Randhir Singh, deceased, under the aforesaid compromise, we have no kind of claim of inheritance, etc., in the estate of Kunwar Randhir Singh. Kunwar Digbijai Singh is the owner of the entire estate of Kunwar Randhir Singh, 'rais' of Sherkot, district Bijnor. We have, therefore, executed this deed of relinquishment in respect of every kind of property left by Kunwar Randhir Singh, that is, in respect of zamindari property and houses, etc., in order that it may be of use in time of need. If any of our representatives brings any claim at any time it shall be false.

"Dated the 29th April 1912. By the pen of Abdul Karim, scribe."

The deed is signed—

"Kameshar Nath Singh.

"Kamawati, in autograph.

"Bhagwati, in autograph."

It will be observed that the sole counterpart for this relinquishment by the Appellant of her share in the estate is a monthly allowance of Rs. 50, which is said to be "by Kunwar Digbijai Singh, of his own accord, according to the custom of the family."

It is abundantly proved that during the lifetime of the deceased, and since his death, there was according to custom given this trifling maintenance allowance to this lady, and the insertion of it in the deed was simply the insertion of the only possible item that was available which would stand as the semblance of a consideration for the document.

It is essential in such cases to consider what was the relation in which the parties stood to each other, because, for the reason so clearly pointed out (especially in the judgment of Viscount Haldane) in Nocton v. Ashburton (1) there may, quite apart from any question of fraud or of conduct partaking of the quality of fraud, arise from these relations an obligation by the one party towards the other, the failure to fulfil which obligation will be a ground for rescission of the contract and for the consequent remedies.

The point is clear and need not be laboured. In Lord Haldane's language :—

"Such claims raise the question whether the circumstances and relations of the parties are such as to give rise to duties of particular obligation which have not been fulfilled."

Their Lordships hold this doctrine to be imbedded in the law both of this country and of India. It is, however, an interesting question to see how the essentially equitable principle which it expresses applies to the relations of parties in the present case.

So far as the Appellant is concerned, one outstanding fact to begin with is that she is a pardanashin lady, and the deed was signed within the parda. In the second place, she is married, but her husband was not communicated with when her signature was obtained, nor were the merits or expediency of any such transaction discussed with him. In the next place, the lady while relinquishing her entire share in a valuable estate (her twelfth being estimated at roughly between Rs. 20,000 and Rs. 30,000) had no separate advice in the transaction whatsoever. Finally, the deed was framed by or by the authority of Digbijai Singh, a co-heir in the property and also the possessor of the whole of it, and Digbijai took no steps or precautions in the direction of having independent advice of any kind furnished to the lady who was relinquishing all her property in his favour.

The deed, in short, is a deed substantially without any consideration by a donor of her entire property in favour of a donee who, or whose representatives, submit the prepared document to her and obtain within the parda her signature. It is the established law of India in these circumstances that the strongest and most satisfactory proof ought to be given by the person who claims under a sale or gift from them that the transaction was a real and bonâ fide one, and fully understood by the lady whose property is dealt with. The cases upon the subject were discussed and the law as thus cited was repeated in Sajjad Husain v. Wazir Ali Khan (2).

When, however, the law is that the lady must fully understand the transaction, this is but a secondary way of saying that it is the obligation of the donee in any transaction proceeding from her to see that she does so understand it. The relations of parties demand that this duty be performed, and when Courts of Law declare that the onus rests upon the donee of showing that he did so, that, of course, is founded upon the fundamental fact that it was his duty to do it. If accordingly this obligation thus arising out of the relations of the parties be not fulfilled, the case for rescission and consequent remedy is clear.

These principles applied to the present suit, while leaving the case important, very largely remove all difficulties from it, and had it not been for the judgment of the High Court, to which allusion will presently be made, it would have been unnecessary for their Lordships to deal with the subject in more than a few further words.

The potent consideration which assists the mind in this case is that the Appellant whose deed is under challenge not only is not proved to have had explanations in the full sense required by law of the effect and purport of the deed, but it seems also to be beyond question that she had no knowledge whatsoever of the extent of the property to which she was relinquishing all right. The Board inclines to the view that all that was ever given as an explanation of her being asked to sign the deed was that it was said to be required in order to make her sure of always getting her Rs. 50 a month. But the fact that Randhir Singh was a Christian, and that, consequent upon that, his intestate estate fell to be distributed under the Indian Succession Act, and that—further consequent upon that—she was entitled in her own right to one-twelfth of that wealthy person's estate—not one of these facts was ever brought home to her mind or even suggested. It is quite unnecessary to pursue the details, because this outstanding feature of the case makes it impossible to sustain a transaction in which the duty of disclosure resting upon the donee was clearly not discharged. This deed of relinquishment was taken from her when in point of fact she did not know what she was giving away.

There are many other elements in the narrative which would produce points of attack upon the deed : but their Lordships content themselves with holding that in substance they are in agreement with the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge who has analysed the case with great patience and reached upon it what, in the view of the Board, is a sound conclusion.

With regard to the judgment of the High Court, it would rather appear that the learned Judges would have been entirely of the same opinion with regard to the deed in issue, viz., that of the 29th April 1912, had it not been that they were in their view compelled to a different conclusion by reason of occurrences four years earlier. They say, in short :—

“ We think that if nothing happened prior to the 29th April 1912, the Plaintiff would have been entitled to far more time for reflection and to independent advice before she could be called upon to execute a deed relinquishing her rights. The learned Judge seems to have approached the consideration of the case having regard only to what occurred in 1912. If this is the proper point of view from which to approach the consideration of the case we think that the decision of the Court below might be correct.”

It is necessary accordingly to consider what had happened in the year 1908. In the opinion of the Board there is not sufficient justification for the reflection made upon the Subordinate Judge by the High Court that he has approached the consideration of the case without having taken fully into view what had happened in that earlier year. On the contrary, in view of this reflection, their Lordships have carefully considered the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and have been struck with the careful review which he gives of all the circumstances which occurred in that year leading up to and including the preparation of a deed of relinquishment. Their Lordships agree with that analysis. That deed of relinquishment was equally with the one under consideration (viz., that of 1912), the subject of the obligations of disclosure, independent advice, and the like, which have already been alluded to; and, as in the later case, there is no trace of the obligation having been fulfilled or even regarded. Furthermore, neither she nor her husband signed it. Her name appears upon it as that of an attesting witness, but she denies her signature.

The deed of October 1908, was the subject of discussion in the judgment delivered by Sir John Edge on this Board on the 21st May 1917. It appears that a copy of it was alleged to have been made upon stamped paper:—"It has been traced to the possession of the Defendant, who has given no satisfactory explanation as to what has become of it," and strong observations were made as to the untrustworthiness of Digbijai's account.

So far as the effort made in 1908 was concerned it failed, and the interests of the wife of Kunwar Randhir Singh were separately compromised. So far as the sister, Bibi Bhagwati, was concerned, she refused to be a party to it or to execute it and so the transaction fell through.

In these circumstances the Board is somewhat at a loss to understand the view of the High Court that the deed of 1912 was a ratification of the transaction of 1908. Instead, however, of the Subordinate Judge having ignored that transaction, he has in several pages of his judgment given, in their Lordships' opinion, a full and sufficient analysis of the evidence regarding it, and it appears plain that it could never be relied upon as having either been the means of conveying the requisite information to the Appellant of her rights or of extracting from her any relinquishment thereof. Probably if the attention of the High Court had been more fully directed to those parts of the Subordinate Judge's opinion which have just been alluded to, his judgment on the whole case might have been affirmed. In the Board's opinion that judgment was right.

It is only necessary in a few words to allude to an argument submitted to the Board by the learned Counsel for the Respondent, the object of which seemed to be to suggest that, even accepting the view that the deceased was a Christian, still he had by his acts made such an indication as the law would respect, to the effect that his succession was not to be governed by the Indian Succession Act. Their Lordships can give no countenance to such a principle. It is unavailing to quote the cases of Abraham v. Abraham (3) or Radhika Patta Maha Devi Garu v. Nilamani Patta Maha Devi Garu (4). These cases preceded the Indian Succession Act and cannot modify or interpret it.

By sec. 2 of that Act it is enacted:—

"Except as provided by this Act, or by any other law for the time being in force, the rules herein contained shall constitute the law of British India applicable to all cases of intestate or testamentary succession."

This is the general rule, and the exception which bears upon the present case is sec. 331, which says that:—

"The provisions of this Act shall not apply to intestate or testamentary succession to the property of any Hindoo"

If, accordingly, the late Randhir Singh had remained in or become a convert to Hinduism, the exception would apply.

The question accordingly is, was the late owner of this estate, or was he not, a Hindoo? If he was, the Mitakshara law would apply. If he was a Christian the Succession Act rules would apply. The matter has been fully investigated. Among other things, for instance, in the words of the Subordinate Judge:—

"The Plaintiff has proved the baptisms, marriage and burial certificates of the deceased: vide evidence given by the Chaplains Father J. Chrysostom and Father

(3) 9 M. I. A. 195 at p. 245; 1 W. R. P. C. 1 (1863).

MUSAMMAT KAMAWATI v. KUNWAR DIGBIJAI SINGH.

Angelo and by F. O'Neill, barrister-at-law. The above evidence proves beyond doubt that Kunwar Randhir Singh in his latter portion of life was a Christian and died as a Christian."

It is unnecessary to dwell upon the subject, because in a former litigation the Respondent himself admitted these facts.

But the argument is that, notwithstanding this, the Hindu law of succession shall apply to this deceased's estate. A situation of nothing but confusion could be thus produced. The plain law of the Succession Act would be eviscerated, and in each case enquiry might have to be entered upon as to whether a deceased subject of the Crown wished or by his acts compelled that the law of the land should not apply to his case. A particular subject can settle that in India, as in other parts of the Empire, by exercising—whatever be his religion—his power of testacy, and definitely declaring how he desires his affairs to be regulated so far as his own individual property is concerned. In this case Kunwar Randhir Singh did not do so, and it is not for a Court to enter upon an examination of his conduct so as to prevent the Indian law of intestate succession getting its full and proper application.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed, that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge should be restored, and that the Respondent should pay the costs of the appeal.

KHAW SIM TEK and

v.
CHUAH HOOI GNOH
NEOH, Respondent.

Straits Settlement, Ordinance No. 6 of 1896, sec. 10—"Specific purpose," meaning of.

"A "specific purpose" within the meaning of sec. 10 of the (Limitation) Ordinance No. 6 of 1896 of the Straits Settlements (which in terms corresponds to sec. 10 of the Indian Limitation Act), must be a purpose that is either actually or specifically defined in the terms of the Will or settlement, or a purpose which, from the specified terms, can be certainly affirmed.

The statement in BALWANT RAO v. PURAN MAL (2), that the purpose of following the property in the hands of the trustees referred to at the end of the section must be the purpose of restoring it to the trust which is specified in the earlier part of the section, provides a sound and critical test by which to consider whether or not any particular trust is within the provisions of the section.

This was an appeal from the unanimous judgment of the Court of Appeal of the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements (Ebdon, Sproule and Farrer-Manby, JJ.), given on the 12th August 1919, confirming the judgment of Woodward, J., given on the 14th November 1918.

The facts of the case material to this report will sufficiently appear from the judgment of their Lordships.

The question at issue was one of limitation based on sec. 10 of the Limitation

Messrs. Disturnal, K. C. and Guvin Simonds for the Respondent.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—The real question that arises on this appeal is whether the Respondent is disentitled by lapse of time from maintaining the proceedings which she instituted on the 25th February 1916, for the purpose of obtaining (1) a declaration as to the effect of a gift for yearly and other sacrifices contained in the Will of a testator who died on the 25th May 1882, and (2) the distribution of the estate upon the footing that the gift was void and the property so given passed to the next of kin. The Will is in Chinese form, and was made in 1874; the original has been lost, and there is nothing but a translation by a former interpreter of the Court in Penang by which it is possible to ascertain its contents. So far, however, as the critical question in this case is concerned, the translation, as it is before their Lordships, is adequate for the purpose. The testator provided that his property was to be dealt with by payment of a very large number of pecuniary legacies, and after they had been paid and satisfied, the residue was to be divided into 60 shares. As to sixteen of those 60 shares he directed that they should be the means of his maintenance during his life-time, and should be "Kong Lin for yearly and other sacrifices" after his death. Both by cl. 4 and by cl. 22 of the testator's Will it appears that he contemplated that this residue should be left undistributed for sixteen years. It is unnecessary for their Lordships to say definitely whether the directions that he imposed upon his executors in this respect were in the nature of a mere appeal to their discretion or created an imperative trust, since for the Respondent's purpose the most favourable assumption is that the period of sixteen years was a definite period definitely fixed before which no division of the estate could take place, and for the purpose of this decision their Lordships will accept this view. At the expiration of sixteen years the testator declares by cl. 22 that the income of the shares shall "begin to be my sons and grandsons (or grandchildren) Kong Lin for yearly sacrifices as well as for sacrifices in spring and autumn." The Plaintiff is the legal representative of a granddaughter of the testator, her grandfather, the testator's son having died in the testator's life-time. Her claim, therefore, is as the legal personal representative of one of the female next of kin of the testator, and in this capacity she instituted these proceedings, asking that the gift of these sixteen 60ths of the residue to the Kong Lin should be declared void and distributed among the next of kin. Among other answers to that claim the Appellants urged that the right to bring the action is barred by virtue of the Statute of Limitations which exists in the Straits Settlements. The ordinance in question is Ordinance No. 6, 1896. This provides by sec. 4 that:—

"Subject to the provisions contained in secs. 5 to 25 inclusive, every suit instituted after a period of limitation prescribed therefor by the Second Schedule hereto shall be dismissed provided that limitation has been set up as a defence."

By Sch. II there is a provision in Art. 99 that a suit for obtaining a legacy or for a share of a residue bequeathed by a testator or for a distributive share of the property of an intestate cannot be maintained after the lapse of twelve years from the time when the legacy or share becomes payable or deliverable. Mr. Upjohn contended that in any circumstances that period must have elapsed before this suit was instituted. If it be taken from the date of the death, of course it is obvious that it has long gone by. If a further period of sixteen years be taken and the calculation is assumed to date from the period of division fixed by the testator for the estate, still the suit is out of time, for the period expired in 1898; but finally if it be taken, as has been urged on behalf of the Respondent, that it should be at the period when the trustees had in accordance with the trusts of the Will so dealt with the estate that it was ready for division, then again the Plaintiff is out of time, for elaborate accounts were prepared on the 15th January 1904, in which a full and proper allocation of the shares of the residue applicable for this rotation of the Kong Lin was set apart and fixed. Their Lordships think, therefore, that it is unnecessary for them to decide which of those three periods is the right one to fix, because whatever period may be taken the Plaintiff is too late. Their Lordships cannot support the view which appears to have found favour with the learned Judge before whom the case was first heard that the time runs from the date when the clause is construed by a competent Court, nor that suggested by Ebdon, J., in the Court of Appeal that the time fixed is when the intestacy is declared by a decree established beyond appeal. The intestacy, if it exists, has existed throughout, and the distributive share of one of the next of kin has been his to claim from the time when the intestacy arose and not when it was declared. The Probate gives no efficacy to the provisions of the Will; it is merely proof of the contents, and their Lordships think Ebdon, J., was in error in saying, "When a Will has been admitted to probate its provisions stand good unless and until they are avoided by the declaration of a competent Court." Such provisions could be ignored from the outset, and the declaration of the Court is merely as to how the Will ought to have been construed throughout, nor is it necessary that "a suit to recover such a share would have to be preceded by a suit to attack the Will." But it is then urged that the exception referred to in cl. 4 of the Ordinance of 1896, making the times in the schedule subject to the provisions of secs. 5 to 25, enabled the Plaintiff to maintain the suit because sec. 10 provides that:—

"Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained no suit against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose or against his legal representatives or assigns (not being assigns for valuable consideration) for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property shall be barred by any length of time."

The contention is that in this case the property was vested in trust for a specific purpose, because in the event of the sixteen 60ths being declared to have been gifts for a purpose that failed, they became vested in the trustees' hands in trust for the next of kin, and in support of that contention reference has been made to the old and well-known case of Salter v. Cavanagh (1), which has been subsequently followed, though with some hesitation, in other authorities. So far as that case is concerned, apart from an argument as to the meaning of cl. 22 of the Will, it affords him no assistance, for the principle that underlies that authority is this: that if property be set aside by a testator from the general body of his estate and vested in trustees upon certain trusts, which upon the face of them are inadequate to exhaust the whole of the property, there remains as to the balance a trust impressed upon the trustees in favour of the next of kin or the heir at law, a trust for the purpose of which you have to do no violence whatever to the language of the Will, for which it is unnecessary to disregard any intention or desire that the testator has expressed, for which it is only necessary to imply that when the testator knew, as he must have done, that the specific purpose to which the property had been devoted did not exhaust the whole trust estate, the balance would of necessity be held by the trustees for the heir at law or the next of kin.

(1) 1 Dru and Walsh 668.

In this case the only way in which the next of kin can, apart from cl. 22, assert their position is by defeating the provisions that the testator has made in his Will. It is only upon the hypothesis that those provisions are bad that his interest arises, and it is in the opinion of their Lordships impossible to say that in those circumstances the property was vested in trust for a specific purpose in which the next of kin was in any way interested. A specific purpose, within the meaning of sec. 10, must, in their Lordships' opinion, be a purpose that is either actually and specifically defined in the terms of the Will or the settlement itself, or a purpose which, from the specified terms, can be certainly affirmed. The statement which was made on the authority of Balwant Rao v. Puran Mal (2) that the purpose of following the property in the hands of the trustees referred to at the end of sec. 10 must be the purpose of restoring it to the trust which is specified in the earlier part of the section is in their Lordships' opinion a sound and critical test by which to consider whether or not any particular trust is within the provisions of the section. Their Lordships therefore think that so far as the general claim of the next of kin is concerned on the hypothesis that the gift is wholly void, the Statute of Limitations affords a complete and effectual bar, and this view appears to be in agreement with that of Sproule, J. But it was then urged that there was an alternative view which arises upon the face of the Will by which it may be said that the Plaintiff was in fact entitled under the benefit of the trust contained in cl. 22. This proposition was only raised at the end of the earlier argument, and certainly found no part in the original claim. There was therefore some technical difficulty in the way of the Respondent, but their Lordships were anxious that a matter which had come from such a distance and is of such importance to the parties should not be imperfectly considered, and therefore they heard all that could be urged upon this later branch of the case, but in truth when it is examined there is very little that can be said. Cl. 22 provides that at the expiration of sixteen years the shares "shall begin to be my sons and grandsons Kong Lin for yearly sacrifices as well as sacrifices in the spring and autumn." The copy of the Will before us has the words "or grandchildren" added after the "grandsons," but whether or no that was the real interpretation of the word it seems difficult to ascertain, because the word in the previous cl. 21, which has been the subject of interpretation and has been held to include grandchildren, has not necessarily the same meaning in cl. 22, and their Lordships think there is much weight in the statement made by Mr. Justice Ebdon, who must be much more familiar with the local circumstances than their Lordships can possibly be, when he pointed out that the sacrificial rites which are imposed upon the property and for which, under cl. 22, the beneficiaries there mentioned are to use the estate, are rites for which the daughter is a useless person. To use the language of the learned Judge, he says :—

“ ‘She is useless for the purpose of ancestor worship which requires male issue,’ and he says again that ‘the phrase itself which was assumed to mean grand-children, including daughters, might, on careful consideration, be shown only to mean sons and grand-sons for the reason that daughters have no place in Chinese succession.’ ”

This is a cogent argument to show that in cl. 22 there never was any intention that a grand-daughter should be included. If, however, the clause is capable of such a construction as the two other learned Judges in the Court of Appeal appear to hold, there still remains the difficulty that the gift is not to the class beneficially but to perform ceremonies which it is said render the gift void, so that even on this hypothesis the Respondent is not seeking to restore the property to the trust but to take it away, and consequently sec. 10 is inapplicable. It follows, therefore, that the Respondent is unable to escape from the general effect of the Statute of Limitations, and that this suit was instituted too late for it to be capable of being entertained by the Court before whom it was brought.

For these reasons their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the suit should be dismissed, that this appeal should be allowed with costs, and that the decree of the 12th August 1919, except so far as it dealt with costs, should be set aside.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

‘ SUIT No. 284 OF 1921.

BUCKLAND, J. } REKHABCHAND DOOGAR
1922, } v.
23, February } J. R. D’CRUZ.

Calcutta Rent Act (III of 1920), sec. 11, Proviso, “bonâ fide” and “required,” meanings of—Sub-sec. (5) “pays rent to the fullest extent allowable by the Act,” when rent has not been standardized—Sub-sec. (4) “refused to accept the rent offered,” tenant if bound to offer and have a refusal every month, to be entitled to deposit rent with the Rent Controller.

The Defendant was a monthly tenant under the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff in 1919 wanted to let out the premises to a third party and gave Defendant notice to quit, to which the Defendant paid no attention. The Plaintiff subsequently wanted rent at the rate of Rs. 150 per mensem and the Defendant agreed to pay Rs. 110 per mensem, which the Plaintiff refused to accept and the Defendant deposited the rent with the Rent Controller. In November 1920, the Plaintiff gave the Defendant notice to quit as he required the premises for his own use and occupation and as he had made arrangements for letting out the residential house in which he had been then living. The Defendant did not quit and therefore the present suit was brought. In the suit the Plaintiff’s evidence was that his wife having given birth to a child and suffered from malarial fever thereafter on account of the insanitary surroundings of their residential house, was advised by the doctor, who treated her, to remove to the house in suit. The doctor gave his evidence and substantially corroborated the Plaintiff.

Held—That the Plaintiff could not be said bonâ fide to require the house for his own use and occupation. The reason given in the notice of November 1920 was that he required the house in suit because of some arrangements he had made with some other tenants for letting out his present residential house and not that he required it on the ground of his wife's health. In the said notice no reference was given to the personal aspect of the matter, but it was based entirely upon the arrangements made with some other tenants.

To allow a landlord who has premises sufficient for his requirements to eject tenants because he chooses for his own convenience or profit to deprive himself of the use of the premises which he is occupying would be to defeat the objects of the Act.

It is not sufficient that a Plaintiff in order to defeat a plea under the Calcutta Rent Act should merely say that he desires the premises bonâ fide for his own occupation. The word in the Act is not "desire" but "require." This involves something more than a mere wish and involves an element of need to some extent at least.

It is not necessary for a tenant to offer rent to his landlord every month and obtain every month a refusal from him before he is entitled to pay to the Rent Controller. The tenant is justified in paying the rent to the Controller month by month once there has been a refusal by the landlord to accept it.

As the rent had not been standardized by the Rent Controller nor had there been any agreement between the parties to pay increased rent, the question as to whether the Defendant had paid rent to the fullest extent allowable by the Act did not arise.

The Defendant was therefore entitled to relief under the Calcutta Rent Act and not liable to be ejected.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. K. Ghosh and Mr. N. K. Chatterjee, Counsels, appeared for the Plaintiff.

Mr. A. N. Chaudhuri and Mr. Surita, Counsels, appeared for the Defendant.

BUCKLAND, J.—This is a suit to eject the Defendant from certain rooms in the Plaintiff's house and premises No. 39 Lower Circular Road, and also for damages.

The Defendant was a monthly tenant under the Plaintiff, the rent alleged in the plaint as payable being Rs. 90 a month. On the 30th November 1920 the Plaintiff through his attorney gave the Defendant one month's notice to quit, that is to say, on the 31st December 1920. The Defendant did not quit the premises and the Plaintiff has therefore brought this suit.

This is one of four suits all standing on the same footing, in which the relations between the parties were the same, but the other three have failed because the parties have unsuccessfully pleaded the Rent Act, as they had not complied with the provisions with which they had to comply before they were entitled to the benefit of the Act. In this case also the Defendant has pleaded to be entitled to relief by reason of the Calcutta Rent Act, and the following issues were settled:

1. Does the Plaintiff bonâ fide require the premises for his own occupation?
2. Has the Defendant paid the rent due by him to the fullest extent allowable by the Calcutta Rent Act by the 15th day of the month next following that for which the rent was payable in accordance with the provisions of sec. 11, sub-sec. 5?
3. Has the Plaintiff refused to accept the rent offered, and has the Defendant duly deposited it with the Rent Controller under sec. 11, sub-sec. 4?

4. Is the Defendant entitled to relief under the Calcutta Rent Act?

The real controversy in this case has centred on the first issue, for, under the Calcutta Rent Act, assuming that a tenant complies with those provisions to which reference is made in the other issues, a tenant is not entitled to the benefit of the Act where the premises are bonâ fide required by the landlord either for purposes of building or re-building or for his own occupation. In this case the Plaintiff says that he requires the premises for his own occupation, and in order to support that he has made a statement in his notice to quit where he says through his attorney :

"My client requires the said premises No. 39 Lower Circular Road for his own use and occupation inasmuch as he has made arrangements for letting out his present residence No. 37 Canning Street and wants to remove to his said premises No. 39 Lower Circular Road in Calcutta on the 1st day of January 1921."

What is the Plaintiff's evidence as to this? He says that the Defendant has been in possession of the premises since June 1916, and in or about September 1919 he gave notice to all the tenants in the house because he says he wanted to let out the whole house on a lease to Macfarlane & Co. The tenants did not quit and his negotiations with Macfarlane & Co. fell through. After that he entered into negotiations with the Government of Bengal. He wanted to give the whole house to one man, and the Government wanted it for a Survey office and negotiations ensued. Thereupon he again gave notice to quit to the tenants but they paid no attention to that either. In the end in the month of August the arrangements with the Government had to be cancelled as vacant possession could not be given. But meantime there had been friction between the landlord and his tenants in this house, which, I should explain, is divided into some six or seven flats, because he was trying to get rid of them and also because they made complaints with reference to the water supply. It appears that the friction reached such a stage that the parties found their way into the criminal Courts, but the proceedings were eventually dropped.

It is obvious that up to the beginning of August 1920 there was no question whatever of the Plaintiff desiring to eject the tenants because he required the house for his own occupation, and his evidence makes that clear beyond all doubt. Then he says that in the middle of September 1920 his wife gave birth to a child and that thereafter she suffered from fever for which she was attended by a Dr. Banerjee, who has been called as a witness in the case, and that owing to the insanitary conditions due to the presence of a hide godown at the back of the house in Canning Street where the Plaintiff resided, and smell, and the fact that the locality was ill-ventilated, the doctor advised him to go where they could get more light and air. The Plaintiff showed him the house in Circular Road of which the doctor approved. When exactly that took place is not clear. The doctor himself said he could not give the exact time but that it happened two or three months after the Plaintiff's child was born. The doctor says that the Plaintiff's wife suffered from malarial fever and uterine trouble, and that therefore he gave the advice that the Plaintiff should remove.

It has to be observed that that is not the reason alleged or even remotely suggested by the Plaintiff in his notice to quit given on the 30th November. The reason there given is that he required the house for his own use and occupation, inasmuch as he had made arrangement for letting out his then residence No. 37, Canning Street and therefore wished to remove. The evidence as to this is that on or about the 12th October 1920 the Plaintiff made an arrangement with Messrs. R. D. Cooper & Co., of which firm Mr. Cooper has been called, whereby the Plaintiff let out to Messrs. Cooper & Co., the whole of the first floor in No. 37, Canning Street at Rs. 1,250 per month. Possession was promised on the 1st January. But meanwhile the arrangement was that possession would be given of the front large hall and the adjoining rooms and the verandah as from the 15th October for which a charge of Rs. 650 per month would be made until the whole flat was available. At or about the same time the Plaintiff also let a portion of the premises to some other company which has been referred to as the Hume Pipe Company. So the position was that he was depriving himself of a considerable portion of the space in his own house in No. 37, Canning Street where he had lived for four years in order to make it over to these mercantile firms or companies.

These are the circumstances with which I have to deal. I find considerable difficulty in appreciating in the Plaintiff's favour the complete change of front from August to the time when the notice to quit was given. I cannot in my mind dissociate what occurred up to August when the Plaintiff wanted to let out the house in No. 39, Lower Circular Road to one tenant from what occurred later. When the notice to quit was given no reference was given to the personal aspect of the matter, but it was based entirely upon the arrangements made with these other tenants for No. 37, Canning Street. It seems to me that the Plaintiff has here made his requirement of the premises in suit on the ground of his wife's health because he feels that the other grounds would not be sufficient to entitle him to say that he bond fide requires the house for his own occupation which it is necessary that I should find for him to obtain an order for possession. From this point of view I am not at all satisfied as to the bond fides of the Plaintiff. Without asserting that he is deliberately untruthful, he has to my mind strained the circumstances in his own favour to the utmost limit. I do not think it is enough that a Plaintiff in order to defeat a plea under the Calcutta Rent Act should merely say that he desires the premises bond fide for his own occupation. The word in the Act is not "desire" but "require." This in my opinion involves something more than a mere wish and it involves an element of need, to some extent at least. I am unable to see that there is any need on the part of the Plaintiff. He did not put his wife's health forward as a ground for his requirement until later, and so far as his requirements arose from other circumstances, he put himself in the position in which he found himself by letting out part of his residential house in No. 37, Canning Street to these mercantile firms and companies, as I believe, for the purpose of obtaining a substantial rental. I do not think that I should be right in holding that a landlord who has premises sufficient for his requirements should be allowed to eject tenants because he chooses for his own convenience or profit to deprive himself of the use of the premises which he is occupying, and then to say to his other tenants "having deprived myself of the use of the premises which I have hitherto occupied, I therefore require the house in which you live for my own occupation and I now propose to eject you." This, in my judgment, would be to defeat the objects of the Act and I do not think that in such circumstances a landlord can be said bona fide to require the premises for his own occupation. I therefore find that the Plaintiff does not bona fide require the premises for his own occupation.

With regard to the second issue—Has the Defendant paid the rent in accordance with the provisions of sec. 11 (5) of the Calcutta Rent Act, and did the Plaintiff refuse to accept it and was it duly deposited under sec. 11 (4)—the Defendant has said that for February, March, April and May 1920 he paid the Plaintiff by cheque, but that the rent was not accepted and thereupon it was paid to the Rent Controller. It has been argued that it is the duty of a tenant to offer rent to his landlord every month and obtain every month a refusal from him before he is entitled to pay to the Rent Controller. I cannot conceive that it was intended by the Act that such a farce should be gone through every month when the relations are such that the landlord refuses to accept the rent, and I think the tenant is justified in paying the rent to the Controller month by month once there has been a refusal by the landlord to accept it.

It is further submitted that the Defendant has not paid the full amount of the rent. In this connection it is right that I should refer to an application which was made at the very last possible stage, i.e., immediately before learned Counsel for the Defendant was about to sum up. In the plaint it is alleged that the monthly rental was Rs. 90. In the written statement it is stated that in May 1920 the Plaintiff demanded rent at the increased rate of Rs. 150 a month. The Defendant refused to pay it and offered three month's rent at the rate of Rs. 110 a month, which he says was the standard rent. The rent in point of fact has not been standardized and there had been no order by the Rent Controller fixing the standard rent. The Defendant also in the course of his evidence relating to the time when MacFarlane & Co. were on the scene, said that MacFarlane & Co. wanted Rs. 115 a month, and he offered to pay and actually did pay Rs. 115 in December 1919 and January 1920, after which the Plaintiff would not accept the rent. Upon these materials, and though the Plaintiff himself did not say anything about a variation of the agreement as regards the amount of rent, I was asked to allow the plaint to be amended. But the amendment asked for is not a purely formal matter as it was asked for in order to give a further ground to the Plaintiff to defeat the plea under the Rent Act. Learned Counsel for the Defendant was willing to concede it, had it been merely formal and only related to the question of amount, as the Defendant has in fact been paying Rs. 110 to the Rent Controller, but in the circumstances stated he objected to the figure being altered to Rs. 110; and having regard to the stage at which it was asked for, I refused to allow the amendment to be made. But even so, dealing with the facts as they are, I find no evidence of any agreement between the Plaintiff and the Defendant to pay more than Rs. 90 a month. I have referred to all the items of evidence and statements in the pleadings to which my attention was drawn by learned Counsel for the Plaintiff, and though in fact the Defendant did pay Rs. 110 a month to the Controller, I gather that he did so because he wished to put himself on the safe side having regard to the provisions of the Calcutta Rent Act as to the standard rent, but it does not appear that there was any agreement between the parties that the rent should be more at any time than Rs. 90 a month.

I find that the Plaintiff refused to accept the rent offered and that the Defendant has duly deposited it with the Rent Controller, under sec. 11 (4).

In these circumstances the second issue with reference to sec. 11 (5) of the Calcutta Rent Act does not arise.

The Defendant is entitled to relief under the Calcutta Rent Act, and the result therefore is that this suit will be dismissed with costs on Scale No. 2.

Though the evidence was recorded almost entirely in the suit against Mrs. Mendies (No. 274 of 1921), as directed at the conclusion of my judgment in that suit, it should be treated as having been taken in this suit and costs will be taxed accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 11—Res judicata.—Sec. 92, suit by public, if barred by the decision in a previous suit between a Manager appointed under the Religious Endowments Act and some claimants as Mohants.

A Manager was appointed under sec. 5 of the Religious Endowments Act of 1863 in respect of a temple, and thereupon a person claiming to be a Mohant or Dundee of the temple instituted a suit for establishment of his title. There were three Defendants in the suit, viz., the said Manager, his successor in office and another rival claimant to the office of Dundee. The suit was decreed. During the pendency of the suit the public brought the present suit under sec. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, but the District Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the trial of the question raised in the present suit was barred by the result of the decision in the previous suit which was pending at the date of the institution of the present suit.

Held—That the decree in the earlier suit though operative against the Manager appointed under sec. 5 of the Religious Endowments Act as also against the rival claimants, could not possibly operate to defeat a suit by members of the public instituted under sec. 92, C. P. C. Sec. 92 contemplates the administration of a trust created for public purposes. Such administration may include the removal of an existing trustee, the appointment of a new trustee or both. In such a suit it may be held that the endowment was not of such a nature, as to attract the operation of the provisions of the Religious Endowments Act 1863, and that the appointment of the Manager under sec. 5 of the Act was without jurisdiction and so forth.

This was an appeal against the decree of G. N. Roy, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Hooghly, dated the 27th of May 1919.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. Chuckerbutty and Mr. H. D. Bose and Babus Manmatha Nath Mukherjee, Santimoy Majumdar and Pramatha Nath Bandopadhyay for the Appellants.

This is an appeal by the Plaintiffs in a suit instituted by them under sec. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908 with regard to what is known as the Guptipara temple. The District Judge has dismissed the suit on the ground that the trial of the question raised herein is barred by the result of the decision in an earlier suit which was pending at the date of the institution of the present suit. It appears that a Manager was appointed in respect of this temple under sec. 5 of the Religious Endowment Act, 1863, and that thereupon the first Defendant who claims to be a Mohunt or Dundee of the temple instituted a suit for the establishment of his title. In that suit, there were three Defendants; namely, one Rajendra Nath Roy who had been appointed as Manager under sec. 5 and had been subsequently removed, Raghu Nath Banerjee, who was his successor in the office of Manager and Nil Gopal Chatterjee, who was added as a party on his own application inasmuch as he asserted that he was a rival claimant to the office of Dundee. The members of the public made an attempt to intervene in the suit but the attempt was unsuccessful. When the matter was brought up to this Court Mr. Justice Fletcher, who delivered judgment held that the members of the public were not entitled to intervene and that their remedy would be by way of a suit properly framed and instituted for the purpose. Thereupon the present suit was instituted on the 9th October 1917 with the consent in writing of the Advocate-General under sec. 92 C. P. C., of 1908. During the pendency of the present suit the previous suit instituted by the first Defendant under the provision of sec. 5 of Act XX of 1863 was decreed by the Subordinate Judge on the 19th February 1918. By that decree it was declared that the then Plaintiff was the duly constituted Mohunt of the temple and that he was entitled to the possession of the Maths, Thakurs and the properties moveable and immoveable belonging thereto. That clearly is a decree which though operative against the Manager appointed under sec. 5 of Act XX of 1863 as also against the rival claimant who intervened of his own accord could not possibly operate to defeat a suit by members of the public instituted under sec. 92, C. P. C. Sec. 92 contemplates the administration of a trust express or constructive created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature. Such administration may include, amongst other reliefs, the removal of an existing trustee, the appointment of a new trustee or both. In the case before us, there is apparently a controversy whether the endowment was of such a description as to attract the operation of the provisions of Act XX of 1863. If it were held that the endowment was not of such a description the appointment of a Manager under sec. 5 would be without jurisdiction, and the decision in a suit instituted under that section against the Manager could not possibly bind the members of the public who desired to have the character of the endowment investigated under sec. 92 of the Code. We may further point out that it would be open to the Court in a suit properly framed under sec. 92 to hold that the contesting Defendant was the Mohunt properly appointed and that there was no reason for his removal. On the other hand the Court might hold that he was not the properly constituted Mohunt and that he was not the proper person to be appointed for the benefit of the trust. We are of opinion that nothing has happened in the previous suit, which was decided by the Subordinate Judge on the 19th February 1918 which debars the investigation of the questions raised in the present suit.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the case remitted to him to be tried on the merits. The Appellants are entitled to their costs of this appeal. The hearing fee is assessed at ten gold mohurs. The costs of the proceedings in the Court below will be in the discretion of the Court after the suit has been tried out. Until further orders of the District Judge the Defendant No. 1 will continue to act as Receiver. The Appellants undertake not to execute the decree for costs obtained by him, until the disposal of the suit.

CHATTERJEA, J. PANTON, J. 1921, 16, December.	}	SAIBESH CHANDRA SARKAR, Defendant, Appellant, v. SIR BEJOY CHAND MAHATAP BAHADUR, Plaintiff, Respondent.
--------------------------------------------------------	---	----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), sec. 11—Apportionment of compensation by Collector—Sec. 18 and proviso to sec 31, cl. (2), maintainability of a separate suit by a person dissatisfied with the apportionment but who did not ask for reference to "Court."

Some lands were acquired for a Railway and the Collector, after serving notice under sec. 9 of the Land Acquisition Act, on the zamindar and the putnidar, apportioned the compensation half and half between them. Neither party applied for any reference to Court under sec. 18 of the Act, and the putnidar withdrew the amount awarded to him. The zamindar thereupon brought a suit for recovery of the amount withdrawn by the putnidar on the ground that under the putni kabuliyat, the putnidar was not entitled to any portion of the compensation money:

Held—That the zamindar having been served with notice under sec. 9 of the Act was bound to apply for a reference under sec. 18 when he was dissatisfied with the award, and he cannot maintain a suit in the ordinary Civil Court to re-open the question. The Act creates a special jurisdiction and provides a special remedy. And ordinarily when jurisdiction has been conferred upon a special Court for the investigation of matters which may possibly be in controversy, such jurisdiction is exclusive and the ordinary jurisdiction of the Civil Court is ousted.

BHANDI SINGH v. RAMADHIN ROY (1), STEVENS v. JEACOCKE (2), WEST v. DOWNMAN (3) and RAMA CHANDRA v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL (4) followed.

Under the third proviso to sec. 31, cl. (2), a person who was a party to the apportionment proceedings cannot re-open the question by a regular suit. The proviso must be given a limited application, and it applies only to cases where the person was under a disability or was not served with notice of the proceedings before the Collector.

The facts of the case will fully appear from the judgment.

Babus Jogesh Chandra Roy and Sambhu Nath Banerjee for the Appellant.

Babu Sarat K. Mitra for the Respondent.

This appeal arises out of a suit for refund of money which had been allowed as compensation for certain lands acquired under the Land Acquisition Act and withdrawn by the Defendant.

It appears that the lands in question were acquired for a Railway. The Plaintiff (the zamindar) and the Defendant, (the putnidar) were served with notices under sec. 9 of the Land Acquisition Act. The Collector apportioned the compensation half and half between the zamindar and the putnidar. Neither party applied for any reference under sec. 18 of the Act and the putnidar withdrew the amount awarded to him by the Collector. The zamindar thereupon brought the suit out of which this appeal arises, for recovery of the amount which had been withdrawn by the Defendant, on the ground that under the putni kabuliyat, the putnidar was not entitled to any portion of the compensation money. The defence inter alia was that the Plaintiff ought to have applied for reference under sec. 18 of the Act and that no separate suit lies. The Courts below have overruled that contention and the Defendant has appealed to this Court.

Sec. 9 of the Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894) provides for notice being given by the Collector to all persons known or believed to be interested in the land acquired. Sec. 11 provides for inquiry by the Collector into the objections (if any) which any person interested had stated pursuant to the notice given under sec. 9 to the measurements made under sec. 8, and into the value of the land, and into the respective interests of the persons claiming the compensation, and further provides for an award being made by him under his hand of—

- (i) the true area of the land;
- (ii) the compensation which in his opinion should be allowed for the land; and
- (iii) the apportionment of the said compensation among all the persons known or believed to be interested in the land, of whom, or of whose claims, he has information, whether or not they have respectively appeared before him.

Sec. 12 lays down (1) that such award shall be filed in the Collector's office and shall, except as hereinafter provided, be final and conclusive evidence, as between the Collector and the persons interested, whether they have respectively appeared before the Collector or not, of the true area and value of the land, and the apportionment of the compensation among the persons interested (2) that the Collector shall give immediate notice of his award to such of the persons interested as are not present personally or by their representatives when the award is made.

Under sec. 18 any person interested who has not accepted the award may, by written application to the Collector require that the matter be referred by the Collector for the determination of the Court, whether his objection be to the measurement of the land, the amount of the compensation, the persons to whom it is payable, or the apportionment of the compensation among the persons interested. This application for reference is to be made within the time fixed by sub-sec. (2) of that section. Sec. 30 provides that if any dispute arises as to apportionment of the compensation or as to the persons among whom it is payable, the Collector may of his own motion refer such dispute to the decision of the Court. The "Court," means the principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction unless the local Government has appointed a Special Judicial Officer to perform the functions of the Court under the Act, and the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure are to apply to proceedings before the Court under the Act.

The Act creates a special jurisdiction and provides a special remedy. And ordinarily when jurisdiction has been conferred upon a special Court for the investigation of matters which may possibly be in controversy, such jurisdiction is exclusive. [See Bhandi Singh v. Ramadhin Roy (1)].

It is an established principle that where by an Act of the Legislature powers are given to any person for a public purpose from which an individual may receive injury if the mode of redressing the injury is pointed out by the Statute, the ordinary jurisdiction of Civil Court is ousted and in the case of injury the party cannot proceed by action [see Stevens v. Jeacocke (2), West v. Downman (3) and Rama Chandra v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (4)].

A difficulty, however, arises from the proviso to sec. 31, cl. (2) which lays down "provided also that nothing herein contained shall affect the liability of any person, who may receive the whole or any part of any compensation awarded under this Act, to pay the same to the person lawfully entitled thereto." There was a similar proviso to sec. 40 of Act X of 1870 and the proviso was considered by the the Judicial Committee in the case of Raja Nilmani Singh Deo Bahadur v. Ram Bandhu Rai (5). In that case the Appellant Raja Nilmoni Singh was a party to the apportionment proceedings under sec. 38 of Act X of 1870 and it was held that he could not reopen the question by a regular suit. Their Lordships with reference to the proviso observed: "Such a proviso, which appears to have been but a repetition of a provision in a previous Act in pari materia, is necessary in this as in almost all acts of a similar character. It is necessary for the Government, or the persons or company entitled to take property compulsorily, to deal with those who are in possession, or ostensibly the owners; but it may happen, and frequently does happen, that the real owners, possibly being infants or persons under disability, do not appear, and are not dealt with in the first instance; and therefore a provision of this sort is necessary for the purpose of enabling the parties who have a real title to obtain the compensation money. Their Lordships went on to observe that the proviso applied only to persons whose rights had not been adjudicated upon in pursuance of the secs. (38 and 39). This is the passage on which reliance has been placed in Punnabati Dai v. Pudmanand Singh (6) in which it was held that as between the claimants inter se an award by a Collector under sec. 11 of the Land Acquisition Act does not amount to an adjudication of any question regarding the apportionment of compensation adjudged under the Land Acquisition Act, and that any such question can be determined only by the Civil Court.

In that case the learned Judges observed:—"Their Lordships decided the case of Raja Nilmani Singh v. Ram Bandhu Rai (5) under the old Act X of 1870, and the proviso that their Lordships had to construe is word for word the same as the last proviso to sub-sec. 2 of sec. 31 of the present Act, and their Lordships' referring to an adjudication in pursuance of secs. 38 and 39 go clearly to show that it is an adjudication of the Civil Court upon a reference by the Collector that their Lordships had in view."

It is to be observed, however, that the Collector under Act X of 1870 had no power to decide the question of apportionment in any case. Whenever there was any question of apportionment, he was bound to refer the matter to the Court, i.e., the Civil Court, and the Civil Court had to decide the matter under secs. 38 and 39 of the Act. This appears to be the reason why their Lordships in Raja Nilmani Singh's case (5) referred to the adjudication under secs. 38 and 39.

Under Act I of 1894, compulsory reference was abolished, and the Collector has full power to deal with the question of apportionment under sec. 11, and his award, subject to the other provisions of the Act, is final under sec. 12, no doubt, as between the Collector on the one hand and the persons interested on the other. The person aggrieved by the award whether his objection be to the measurement of the land, the amount of compensation, the persons to whom it is payable, or the apportionment of the compensation among the persons interested may apply to the Collector for a reference to the Court. The "Court," by which is meant the principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction or a Judicial Officer specially empowered to perform the functions of the Court, under the Act has to decide the questions referred to the Court. That being so it is not reasonable to hold that the Act while creating a special Court to decide such questions intended an adjudication of any question relating to apportionment by the Ordinary Civil Courts. The proviso as it stands under the present Act, or as it stood under the old Act, is very general in its terms. Admittedly it cannot be given effect to in its entirety: it cannot be held that a suit lies notwithstanding a reference to the Court upon the application of a party under sec. 18 or by the Collector of his own motion under sec. 30. The proviso therefore must be given a limited application, and we think that it applies only to cases where the person is under a disability or is not served with notice of the proceedings before the Collector.

In the case of Punnabati Dai v. Pudmanand Singh (6), cited above the learned Judges, although they referred to the contention that there being a special remedy provided by the Act, the general remedy was not available, did not discuss the question, and the observations of the Judicial Committee in Raja Nilmani Singh's case (5) as to the persons to whom the proviso was applicable do not appear to have been considered by them. Then again, the contention raised in that case that a separate suit if allowed would enable a party to avoid the limitation prescribed by sec. 18, namely, six weeks from the date of the Collector's award where the party was present before the Collector, or six weeks of the receipt of the notice from the Collector, or six months from the date of the Collector's award, whichever period shall first expire, was disallowed on the ground that there is no limitation prescribed for a reference under sec. 30. Sec. 30, however, applies only to a reference made by the Collector of his own motion presumably before the final award is made; whereas sec. 18 deals with a reference upon an application made by a party. For the above reasons therefore and with all respect to the learned Judges we are unable to follow the decision in the case of Punnabati Dai v. Pudmanand Singh (6).

In the case of Hurmut Jan Bibi v. Padma Lochan Das (7), the Plaintiff who brought the suit was no party to the apportionment proceeding, and Wilson, J. pointed out that "apportionment of the compensation is intended to be a proceeding distinct from that of settling the amount of compensation under the previous provisions of the Act and any dispute as to the apportionment is only decided as between those persons who are actually before the Court. A separate notice therefore of the apportionment proceedings is requisite to bind any person by those proceedings and where such a notice has not been served, any person interested, although served with notice of the proceedings for settling the amount of compensation, cannot be considered a party to the proceedings for apportioning it." The decision was under the old Act (Act X of 1870), and apportionment proceedings under that Act were taken before the "Court" under secs. 38 and 39 of the Act.

We quite agree in holding that where a person has no notice of the apportionment proceedings, he cannot be bound by the award or by the decision.

In the case of Bhandi Singh v. Ramadhin Roy (1) certain persons who were parties to a land acquisition proceeding being dissatisfied with the apportionment of the compensation money made by the Collector obtained a reference to the Court under sec. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act; but as they did not appear at the hearing before the Court it was struck off. It was held that the suit instituted by them in the Civil Court for the apportionment of the compensation money was barred under sec. 103, C. P. C., as the procedure to be observed by the Court is the same as that laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure. In that case Mookerjee, J., discussed the question whether, when special jurisdiction had been conferred, such jurisdiction was exclusive or not, and came to the conclusion that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court was exclusive. He, however, expressed an opinion, having regard to the provisions of sec. 31, cl. (2) and the decision in the case of Raja Nilmani Singh Deo Bahadur v. Ram Bandhu Rai (5) that a question as to the persons to whom compensation is payable or its apportionment among the persons interested may be determined either under a reference as contemplated by sec. 18 cl. (1) or by a suit at the instance of a person lawfully entitled to it as against another who has drawn the compensation money but that if a party has once availed himself of a reference to the Court under sec. 18 he cannot again ask for an injunction to litigate the same matter in the ordinary Civil Court. In that case as stated above, the Plaintiff had obtained a reference under sec. 18, which was dismissed for his non-appearance. Consequently no suit was maintainable. It was unnecessary therefore to consider whether the special Court under the Land Acquisition Act, and the ordinary Civil Court have or have not concurrent jurisdiction, and it is to be noticed that the observations of their Lordships in Raja Nilmani Singh's case (5) as to the persons to whom the proviso is applicable do not appear to have been considered by the learned Judges.

Although the Legislature has created a special Court (the principal Court of original jurisdiction or a Judicial Officer specially empowered to perform the functions of a Court under the Act) to adjudicate all questions of apportionment upon a reference made within the period fixed by the Act, the effect of holding that such Court and the ordinary Civil Courts have concurrent jurisdiction will be that a party may institute a suit even in a Munsif's Court, (in cases where the amount in dispute does not exceed Rs. 1,000) and that long after the periods prescribed by sec. 18. The Act expressly provided that any party dissatisfied with the award of the Collector as regards apportionment, may apply to the Collector for a reference under sec. 18 and on such a reference he can get relief in the same way as he can do in the ordinary Civil Court as the procedure in the Court under the Act is the same as in ordinary Civil Courts with a right of appeal to the High Court. It would not be reasonable to hold that the Legislature having provided a special remedy in the Land Acquisition Court intended to make it optional with a party to apply for a reference under sec. 18 or to institute a suit in ordinary Civil Court. The scope of the proviso may be amply satisfied by holding that it applies only to particular persons. The Collector under sec. 9 has to serve notices upon the persons known or believed to be interested in the land. There may be persons who are not known to the Collector and who might not be in possession, and the interests of this class of persons are protected by the proviso to sec. 31, sub-sec. (2)

We are of opinion that the Plaintiff having been served with notice under sec. 9 of the Act was bound to apply for reference under sec. 18 when he was dissatisfied with the award, and he cannot maintain a suit in the ordinary Civil Court.

In this view it is unnecessary to consider the question whether the word अपेक्षित in the kabuliyat includes land taken for the purpose of a Railway.

We accordingly set aside the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the suit, but we direct each party to bear his own costs in all Courts.

Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 169, cl. (c)—"Rent," whether includes interest—Period up to which the decree-holder is entitled to rent—Sec. 67, scope and effect of.

Certain putnidars obtained a decree for rent of a darputnai, which they got sold in execution, and the sale was subsequently confirmed. After the rent decree was satisfied, the putnidars applied for payment to them (out of the surplus sale proceeds) of the rent which had fallen due between the institution of the suit and date of the confirmation of sale and claimed interest on the said rent:

Held—That the putnidar was entitled to rent only up to the date of sale.

BIJOY CHAND MAHATAP v. SHASHI BHUSAN BOSE (1) followed.

As soon as rent falls due and is not paid, it becomes an arrear under sec. 54 and carries interest under sec. 67. The money payable as interest, therefore, becomes part of the rent. The Legislature could never have intended in sec. 169, cl. (c) to exclude interest accruing upon the rent and to put the decree-holder under the necessity of bringing a fresh suit for the interest only.

RAM LAL DAS v. BANDIRAM MUKHOPADHYA.

BIJOY CHAND MAHATAP v. S. C. MUKERJEE (2) and PROFULLA TAGORE v. MATAB-UDDIN (1) followed.

This was an appeal against a decree of G. B. Mumford, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Birbhum, dated the 11th June 1917, affirming a decree of Babu Dehabrata Mukerjee, Munsif of Suri, dated the 22nd July 1916.

The facts material to this report will appear from the judgment

Babu Anilendra N. Roy Choudhury for the Appellant.

Babu Uma Ch. Laha for the Respondent.

This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of Rs. 547 as. 5 principal and Rs. 23 as interest thereon under the following circumstances.

The Defendants Nos 1 to 6 were putnidars who obtained a decree for rent of a durputni against Defendants Nos. 7 and 8. The taluk was sold in execution of the decree on the 2nd July 1912 and the sale was confirmed on the 8th March 1913. After satisfying the rent decree, there remained in deposit in Court Rs. 2,506 as surplus sale proceeds. The putnidars applied for payment to them, (out of the surplus sale proceeds), of the rent which had fallen due in respect of the tenure between the institution of the suit and the date of the confirmation of sale, obtained an ex parte order and withdrew the sum of Rs. 547 as. 5 for arrears up to the date of the confirmation of sale.

The present suit was instituted by the Plaintiff on the allegation that the Defendant No. 8, one of the durputnidars, had mortgaged his durputni interest to the Plaintiff and the latter had obtained a mortgage decree which was partially satisfied by the sale of other properties and that the mortgage lien over the property sold had been transferred to the surplus sale proceeds.

Two questions were in dispute in the Court below. The first is whether the Defendants were entitled to arrears only up to the date of sale and not up to the date of confirmation of sale, and the second whether they were entitled to any interest on the rent which fell due between the date of the institution of the suit and the date of sale.

The Court below has held that the putnidar was entitled to rent only up to the date of sale and having regard to the decision of this Court in the case of Bijoy Chand Mahtap v. Shashi Bhusan Bose (1) the learned Pleader for the Appellant could not press his objection on this point.

The only question which has been argued before us is whether under the provisions of sec 169, cl (c) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the landlord is entitled to interest on the rent

Now, the word 'rent' is defined in sec. 3 of the Act as "whatever is lawfully payable or deliverable in money or kind by a tenant to his landlord on account of the use or occupation of the land held by the tenant," and sub-sec. (3) of sec. 54 of the Act lays down "any instalment or part of an instalment of rent not duly paid at or before the time when it falls due shall be deemed an arrear." Sec. 67 provides that "an arrear of rent shall bear simple interest at the rate of 12½ per cent. per annum from the expiration of that quarter of the agricultural year in which the instalment falls due to the date of payment or of the institution of the suit whichever date is earlier."

The question whether the word 'rent'

in sec. 169 include interest has been considered in three cases in this Court. In the first case Maharajadhiraj Bijoy Chand Mahtap Bahadur v. S. C. Mukherjee (2) decided by Ghose and Caspersz, JJ., the former observed "speaking for myself I may say that the Legislature could never have intended when using the word 'rent' in sec. 169, cl. (c) to exclude the interest accruing thereupon and to put the decree-holder under the necessity of bringing a fresh suit for the interest only."

In the next case of Manindra Ch. Nandy v. Asra Mahmud Mandal (3), decided by Mr. Justice Brett, on the 29th April 1908, the learned Judge held a contrary view.

In the third case of Profulla Nath Tagore v. Matabuddin Mandal (4) Fletcher and Smither, JJ., following the case of Bijoy Chand v. S. C. Mukherjee (2) held that rent would include interest. It is true that the learned Judges treated the observation of Ghose, J., in the case of Bijoy Chand Mahtap Bahadur v. S. C. Mukherjee (2) as a decision of the Court and as clear authority in favour of the landlord. As a matter of fact, the case was decided upon an admission of the judgment-debtor that the claim of the landlord to the interest was a just one and Ghose, J., himself pointed out that upon the petition as presented by the judgment-debtor admitting the justice of the Plaintiff's demand, no question of the character that was raised by the Subordinate Judge, should have been raised and discussed. Then he made the observation which we have quoted above. It was, therefore, an obiter and Mr. Justice Brett in the unreported case we have referred to, also pointed out that it was an obiter of Mr. Justice Ghose. But although that is so, we are inclined to accept the view taken by Ghose, J., in that case followed by Fletcher and Smither, JJ., in Profulla Nath Tagore's case (4).

We have been referred to sec. 161, cl. (c) which runs as follows: "The terms 'arrear' and 'arrear of rent' shall be deemed to include interest decreed under sec. 67 or damages awarded in lieu of interest under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 68." It is contended that had the word "rent" included interest thereupon, there would have been no necessity of adding cl. (c) to sec. 161. But as soon as rent falls due and is not paid, it becomes an arrear under sec. 54 and carries interest under sec. 67. The money payable as interest, therefore, becomes part of the rent. Cl. (c) was probably added to sec. 161 to make the point clear.

However that may be, we agree in the view taken by Ghose, J., that the Legislature could never have intended in sec. 169 to exclude the interest accruing upon the rent and to put the decree-holder under the necessity of bringing a fresh suit for the interest only.

For these reasons, we think that the decision of the Court below is wrong. The appeal is allowed. The Appellant will be entitled to full costs of this Court. There will be costs in proportion in the lower Court.

The cross-objection is not pressed and is dismissed.

NATHU KHAN,
since deceased (now represented

lants,

v.

THAKUR BURTO-
ors., Respondents.

Transfer of Property Act (IX of 1882), sec. 53 (1) (g), sub-sec. (2)—Sale free from incumbrances of property subject to mortgage charges—Incumbrances discharged by purchaser—Right of purchaser to be indemnified—Payment of incumbrances by purchaser, if voluntary—Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 69—Arrangement by vendor with a third party to pay off incumbrances, if enforceable by purchaser, when no trust created.

Where a deed of sale of properties which in fact were subject to mortgage charges contained an express declaration that the property was sold free from incumbrances, the vendor was, under sec. 51 (1) (g), sub-sec. (2) of the Transfer of Property Act, liable to the purchaser for moneys paid by the purchaser either for redemption of the mortgages existing on the property purchased at the date of the purchase, or for purchase of the properties on sales under such mortgages or to prevent such sales.

Scintilla:—It is difficult to accept the view that purchasers of a property are not compelled to pay off mortgagees who have obtained decrees for sale, even though a sale is not immediately threatened.

Where after the sale the vendor sold another item of property to a third person, and it was agreed between them that the latter should discharge the incumbrances on the property which the vendor had sold to the first purchaser free from incumbrances:

Held—That a suit by the first purchaser against the second purchaser for recovery of the amount of the incumbrances was misconceived, the former being no party to the latter's purchase deed and no trust having been thereby created in his favour.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal (Chaudhuri and Newbould, JJ.), dated the 19th February 1919, which reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Hazaribagh, dated the 19th March 1917.

The suit in which this appeal was preferred was brought by the Plaintiffs (Appellants) to recover the sum of Rs. 11,141 and for other relief.

Lakhpatt Nath sold certain properties to Nathu Khan and others, free from incumbrances.

In fact these properties were encumbered, and in order to get the incumbrances discharged, the vendor sold other properties to Bindesri Charan who was to pay off the incumbrances on the first set of properties as a part of his purchase price. Bindesri failed to pay and Nathu Khan was forced to pay off the mortgages in order to save his property from being sold. He then instituted a suit against Lakhpatt Nath and Bindesri Charan.

The main questions that arose for determination were:—(1) Whether Nathu Khan was entitled to recover from Lakhpatt Nath the money so paid by him to avert the sale.

(2) And whether in the circumstances he was entitled to a charge on the second set of properties which had been recovered by Lakhpatt Nath from Bindesri Charan.

The Subordinate Judge held that Lakhpatt was liable to recoup the Plaintiff and ordered the sale of the properties that had been sold to Bindesri if the amount were not paid.

NATHU KHAN v. THAKUR BURTONIAH SINGH.

The High Court (A. Chaudhuri and Newbould, JJ) held that the payments had not been made under compulsion and that Nathu Khan was not entitled to any charge on the properties sold to Bindesri.

Mr Kenworthy Brown for the Appellants—Lakhpit Nath had covenanted to give a title free from incumbrances and became liable to Nathu Khan for the money expended by the latter in the discharge of the mortgages.

Bindesri Charan held the lands conveyed to him in trust to discharge the mortgages. On the cancellation of the conveyance the lands reverted to Lakhpit subject to the rights of the Appellant.

Reference was made to Sec 69, Indian Contract Act and secs 55, (1) (g) and (2) of the Transfer of Property Act.

The Respondents did not appear.

LORD BUCKMASTER. On the 6th September 1904, one Lakhpit Nath sold to Nathu Khan, Gurb Ali Khan, Badhan Khan and Ramzin Khan, three monzahs, situate in the zemindari of Bigda at the price of Rs 19,000. Nathu Khan is dead and his representatives together with the other purchasers are the present Appellants. The purchase price was to be discharged by the cancellation of certain debts due from the vendor to the purchasers and as to the balance in cash. The purchase deed contained the express declaration that the property was sold free from incumbrances and consequently by sec 55 (1) (g), sub-sec (2) of the Transfer of Property Act the vendor must have been deemed to contract with the buyers that he had power to transfer the property so sold, and consequently that the property was free from burdens. In truth there were existing upon the estate considerable charges and it appears that the vendor recognising this fact and being anxious to secure their liquidation on 7th September 1904, entered into an arrangement with one Bindesri Charan. This took the form of a sale by the vendor to Bindesri Charan of another estate for a sum of Rs 82,200, the purchase price to be discharged by the payment of a considerable number of debts, which included among others those owing upon the property already sold to Nathu Khan and his co-purchasers. Had Bindesri carried out the terms of that arrangement no dispute would have arisen, but unfortunately he did not and as the mortgagees who held the prior charges upon the property sold to Nathu Khan and others proceeded to extremities and took steps to realise their securities by sale, Nathu Khan, apparently alone but probably on behalf of all the purchasers paid three separate sums of Rs 1,287 Rs 37,000 and Rs 1,616 in order to clear the property and no part of these moneys has been repaid to them. About these facts there appears to be no doubt, for although the High Court from where this appeal proceeds appears to have doubted whether the property was actually subject to an effectual order for sale, yet the fact that it was subject to the mortgages appears reasonably clear. After the payments had been made, Nathu and his co-purchasers instituted a suit against Bindesri, Lakhpit, who was Defendant No 2 to the proceedings, and others, asking for the recovery of the sums paid against the properties and persons of the Defendants. The plaint was a clumsy document, and the suit as against Bindesri was misconceived, for the Plaintiffs were no parties to the deed of 7th September 1904, and no trust was thereby created in their favour. The real case was a personal claim against Lakhpit, and this is in fact included in the general confusion of the suit. A subsequent suit was also brought by Lakhpat Nath against Bindesri Charan and Nathu Khan and his co-purchasers and others to obtain rescission of the sale of 7th September 1904, on the ground that Bindesri Charan had wholly failed to comply with the obligations that he undertook for Nathu Khan; the purchaser was made a party to this suit which was compromised before trial and the compromise became incorporated in a decree under the seal of the Court of the 20th July 1908. It is unfortunate that this decree is couched in language which renders it extremely difficult to give a fair grammatical construction to all its terms, but their Lordships think that none the less its purpose is clear and the obscurity is doubtless due to the fact that it represents the actual agreed terms of the parties which have not been put into plain legal phraseology. The decree provides for the return of the properties sold to Bindesri, subject to a condition expressed in the words :-

"That in case the Defendant No. 2 becomes liable to Nathu Khan and others (Plaintiffs in suit No. 122 of 1907), in the final decree in that suit, that sum will be payable by the Plaintiff to those Defendants, and the property which is the subject of this suit will remain charged with this debt payable to those Defendants."

The effect of this order was as follows: that if Lakhpat Nath, who, notwithstanding the fact that he was Plaintiff, because he was Defendant No. 2 in suit No. 122 of 1907, is referred to as the Defendant No. 2, becomes liable to Nathu Khan and others who are the Plaintiffs in the Suit No. 122 of 1907, in the final decree of that suit, that sum—that is the sum for which he is liable—will be payable by him Lakhpat Nath to Nathu Khan and others and the property the subject of the present suit will remain charged with the debt payable to those Defendants. The confusion in this decree is due to the fact that while it refers to the suit instituted by Nathu Khan against Lakhpat Nath and others to obtain a declaration of liability, it introduces the description of the parties alternately by virtue of their capacity in that suit and their capacity in the suit which is being compromised, with the result that the same person becomes the Defendant and the Plaintiff in the same sentence. Their Lordships having carefully studied the language of the decree are satisfied that the interpretation that they have placed upon it is correct and indeed it is the only interpretation that could give reasonable effect to the claim that Nathu Khan possessed against Lakhpat Nath at the time when the suit was set on foot. The suit referred to as No. 122 of 1907 was the suit brought by Nathu Khan and others asking for relief against Lakhpat Nath in respect of payments to which reference has been made and it is the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. Lakhpat died before this suit came on for hearing, his heir was added in his place, and the learned Subordinate Judge held that as he derived benefit from the payments made by the Plaintiffs, it was equitable that the Plaintiffs must be recompensed, and he ordered sale of the properties that had been sold to Bindesri, if the amount were not paid.

Upon appeal the High Court held that the Plaintiffs were not compelled to make the payments to avert the sale and that they were not entitled to any relief.

Their Lordships find it difficult to accept the view that purchasers of a property are not compelled to pay off mortgagees who have obtained decrees for sale, even though a sale is not immediately threatened, but it appears there were questions about the nature of the sales not explained to their Lordships which may have caused misunderstanding on this head.

NATHU KHAN v. THAKER BURTONAPPI SINCH.

The present Appellants are themselves responsible for what occurred, for there would have been no difficulty in obtaining relief had the section of the Transfer of Property Act to which attention has been called been placed before the Court. It is plain from that section that as Lakhpat Nath had bound himself to deliver the property free from incumbrances, and had only delivered it subject to the charges which Nathu paid, Lakhpat was therefore liable for the monies paid by the purchaser in order to clear his title. If that simple view had been presented to the Court of first instance and to the High Court, their Lordships see no reason to doubt that the matter need not have proceeded as far as this Board; but the Courts below appear to have been confused with the effect of what had taken place and they do not seem to have had their attention directed either to the statute or to the decree although the compromise was mentioned. It may be that as the decree was made after this suit was instituted, its execution might have been a difficult matter in the present proceedings, but with that their Lordships do not intend in any way to interfere. All that they think the Appellants here are entitled to is (a) a declaration that in the circumstances Lakhpat Nath did become liable to Nathu Khan for the monies paid by Nathu Khan either for redemption of the mortgages existing on the property purchased by him on the kobala of the 6th September 1901, at the date of such purchase, or for purchase of the properties on sales under such mortgages, or to prevent such sales; and (b) that the person mentioned in the decree of the 20th July 1908, as the Defendant No. 2, was intended to be Lakhpat Nath. Their Lordships for these reasons will humbly advise His Majesty that the judgment appealed from should be set aside and the decree of the learned Judge of first instance be modified by the introduction of the above declaration that Lakhpat was liable to the Plaintiffs in the suit for the monies paid under either of the above heads, and if any dispute exists as to such payments an enquiry must be directed to ascertain the facts. The Appellants will have their costs in the Courts below. There will be no costs of the appeal.

No. 126 of 1920.

MOOKERJEE, J.
PANTON, J.

Heard, 13, 14, 16, and 17, June.
Judgment,
18, August.

NIBARAN CHANDRA
MUKERJI and anr.,
Appellants,
v.
NIRUPAMA DEBI and anr., Respondents.

Purdanashin lady, document executed by—Principles which should guide Court—Independent and competent advice, meaning of—Necessity of greater caution in cases where person benefited holds fiduciary position—Misrepresentation or fraud, proof of, not essential—Joint family—Sovereignty, if effected by deed of settlement by widow entrusting reversioner with management for a term—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 91, applicability of, when Plaintiffs seek possession on declaration that Defendants' document of title wholly void—Time from which limitation runs when deed voidable—Karta of joint Hindu family, nature and extent of his accountability.

On the death of a member of a Hindu joint family a deed of settlement was executed by the guardian of the widow who was at the time a minor, the effect of which was to place the properties of the minor inherited by her from her husband in charge of her husband's brother who was the reversioner on certain terms. After the widow had attained majority a deed of settlement for the life of the widow was executed by her in favour of the sons of her husband's brother who was now dead. The widow brought a suit for partition of the joint family properties and for other incidental reliefs on declaration that the last deed of settlement was void and inoperative:

Held—That it is well settled that the Court when called upon to deal with a deed executed by a purdanashin lady must satisfy itself upon the evidence, first, that the deed was actually executed by her or by some person duly authorised by her with a full understanding of what she was about to do; secondly that she had full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction into which she is said to have entered; and thirdly that she had independent and disinterested advice in the matter.

In the class of cases where the person who seeks to hold the lady to the terms of her deed is one who stood towards her in a fiduciary character the Court will act with great caution and will presume confidence put and influence exerted, and in cases where the person who seeks to enforce the deed was an absolute stranger and dealt with her at arm's length the Court will require the confidence and influence to be proved intrinsically.

In dealing with these cases, the Court must have regard to the intellectual attainments of the lady concerned and will naturally be disinclined to set aside the deed where she is proved to have been of business habits, to have been literate and to have possessed a capacity to judge for herself.

These, however, are only general principles and there is grave risk of failure of justice, if they are moulded into inelastic formulas or crystallised into inflexible rules and treated as of universal application, regardless of the special facts and surrounding circumstances of the concrete case which requires adjudication.

Independent and competent advice does not mean independent and competent approval but signifies at any rate advice removed entirely from the suspected atmosphere and conveyed in the clear language of an independent mind, free from taint of interests, to the party acting, regarding the precise nature and consequence of the transaction. In cases of this class, there need not necessarily be misrepresentation by one party to the other to invalidate the deed; if there is any concealment of material fact, any failure to disclose material information or any just suspicion of artifice, the Court will interfere and pronounce the transaction void and restore the parties as far as possible to their original rights.

Held—That as the family was joint and there was a nucleus of joint property the burden was on the party setting up a case of separate estate to establish his allegation.

That the first deed of settlement was in essence a deed of management and did not cause a severance of the family, the title to the half-share inherited by the Plaintiff from her husband never having rested in her brother-in-law.

Held, upon the evidence—That the disputed deed of settlement was understood by the lady to be a deed for five years whereas in reality it was a deed operating for her life; that she had no independent advice; that the extent of the income and the value of all the joint properties, moveable and immovable, were not disclosed to her, and that the effect of the deed on her rights was never brought home to her.

That the deed actually executed by the lady having been fundamentally different from the deed she intended to execute and thought she executed was void and inoperative and that being so no question of limitation arose.

Art. 91 of the schedule to the Indian Limitation Act has no application to a case of this description where a suit is brought for possession and partition upon declaration that an instrument under which the Defendant claims is void.

That, on the supposition that the deed needed being cancelled, the Defendants had failed to prove that the Plaintiff acquired full information of the true state of facts at a time too remote to allow her to maintain the suit.

In an ordinary suit for partition, in the absence of fraud or other improper conduct, the only account the karta is liable for is as to the existing state of the property divisible, the parties have no right to look back and claim relief against part inequality of enjoyment of the members or other matters. But the karta is the accountable party, and the enquiry directed by the Court must be conducted in the manner usually adopted to discover what in fact the property now consists of, not what the karta says it is.

This was an appeal from a decision of Babu Lal Behari Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge, Hooghly, dated 14th April 1920.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

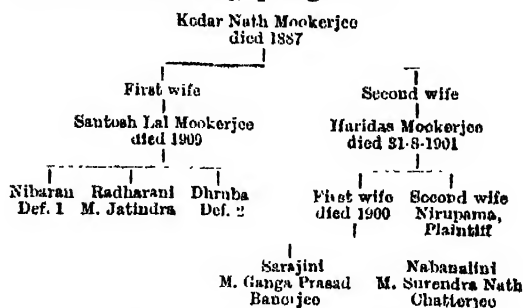

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitra and Babu Hiralal Sanyal for the Appellants.

Babu Pyari Mohan Chatterjee for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The subject-matter of the litigation which has culminated in this appeal is the estate left by one Haridas Mookerjee who died on the 31st August 1901. The relationship of the members of the family to which he belonged may be gathered from the following pedigree :—

Kedar Nath Mookerjee, the founder of the family, left two sons by two wives, namely, Santosh Lal Mookerjee and Haridas Mookerjee. Santosh Lal Mookerjee left two sons, Nibaran Chandra Mookerjee and Dhruva Pada Mookerjee, who are the Defendants in this suit. Haridas Mookerjee left a widow Nirupama who is the Plaintiff in this litigation, and two daughters Sarajini and Nabanalini by a predeceased wife, a cousin of Nirupama. At the time of the death of Haridas Mookerjee his second wife Nirupama had not yet attained majority. On the 5th May 1905, Tripura Charan Chatterji, her father, made an application to the District Judge under the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, to have himself appointed as guardian of the person and properties of the minor. The order was made in due course on the 26th May 1905. The correspondence, which took place at that time between Tripura Charan Chatterjee and Santosh Lal Mookerjee and has been produced in this case, leaves no room for doubt that the application was encouraged by the brother-in-law of the lady who was also the immediate reversionary heir to the estate of her husband. The reason why he keenly interested himself in the matter of the guardianship application becomes manifest when we examine the events subsequent. On the 21st September 1905, the guardian applied to the District Judge for permission to lease out the property of his ward to the reversioner Santosh Lal Mookerjee. The District Judge asked for specific information as to the terms, the period of the proposed lease and the annual rent reserved thereunder. The information was not supplied and the petition was dismissed on the 7th November 1905. On the 15th November 1905, the District Judge recorded an order that as no property was to be leased out for more than five years, his sanction was not necessary, and the guardian was at liberty to make such arrangements for the maintenance of the minor and the management of her property as might be deemed to be for the benefit of the minor and her estate. Thereafter, an application appears to have been made to the District Judge for permission to make a settlement of the estate of the minor for her life; this was refused by the District Judge on the 8th February 1906. On the 1st May 1906, a document was executed by Tripura Charan Chatterjee in favour of Santosh Lal Mookerjee which has been described in these proceedings as a deed of settlement for a term of five years. The effect of this deed was to place the properties of the minor inherited by her from her husband in charge of the reversioner, who undertook to pay her a fixed allowance and to bear the expenses of the marriage of her second step-daughter. The deed was to continue in operation from 17th November 1905 to the 16th November 1910. On the expiry of the term of this deed, the parties apparently reverted to the previous state of things which continued for more than two years. On the 22nd June 1913, Nirupama, who had meanwhile attained her majority, executed a deed in favour of Nibaran Chandra Mookerjee and Dhrubapada Mookerjee who had succeeded to the interest of their late father Santosh Lal Mookerjee in the family estate. This deed, which is described as a deed of settlement, was closely modelled on the deed of the 1st May 1916 with two fundamental differences, namely, first, that the settlement was not for a term of five years but for the life of the lady and, secondly, there was no provision for the marriage expenses of the step-daughter whose marriage had already taken place in the interval. On the 20th June 1918, Nirupama instituted the present suit for partition of the joint family properties, for accounts, and for incidental reliefs, on declaration that the deed of the 22nd June 1913 was void and inoperative in law and had in no way affected her interest in the family estate as heir-at-law to her husband. The Defendants repudiated the claim substantially on the ground that the Plaintiff was bound by her deed and could not claim joint possession or partition of what had in essence ceased to be joint family estate. On these pleadings twelve issues were raised by the trial Court; of these, reference need be made only to four:—

(1) Is the suit barred by limitation?
(2) Are the properties in suit the joint family properties of the parties or are any of these the self-acquired properties of the Defendants and their father?

(3) Is the settlement deed of the 22nd June 1913 tainted with fraud and undue influence?

(4) Are the Defendants liable to render accounts to the Plaintiff? If so, for what and up to what period?

The Subordinate Judge has held on the evidence that the deed was obtained from the Plaintiff under circumstances which did not make it binding upon her, a parda-nashin lady, and that in fact she was not aware of the contents of the document which she believed was a deed for five years, similar to the deed which had been previously executed by her father. The Subordinate Judge has also found that the properties in suit were joint properties of the two sons of Kedar Nath Mookerjee or were accretions thereto made by the use of the joint family funds. The Subordinate Judge has further held that the Defendants were bound to render accounts of the cloth and grocery shops which belonged to the family, such accounts to be rendered from the date of death of their father till the dates when the shops were closed. In this view, the Subordinate Judge has decreed the suit and directed the appointment of a Commissioner to make the partition and to take the accounts. On the present appeal, this decree has been assailed by the Defendants on the grounds, that the deed was fairly taken from the Plaintiff and was binding upon her, that the deed could not be set aside after the lapse of the period of limitation prescribed for the institution of a suit for that purpose, that the effect of the deeds of the 1st May 1906 and 22nd June 1913, was to cause a disruption of the joint family, so that the properties acquired after the date of the first deed could not be deemed to possess the character of joint family properties, and, finally, that the Defendants were not liable to render accounts.

The substantial point in controversy is, whether the deed of the 22nd June 1913 is a fair transaction which binds the Plaintiff as a purdanashin lady. Before we investigate the attendant circumstances, we may conveniently recall the cardinal tests which must be applied to determine the operative character of deeds taken from purdanashin ladies who are unable to protect themselves. It is well settled that the Court, when called upon to deal with a deed executed by a purdanashin lady, must satisfy itself upon the evidence, first, that the deed was actually executed by her or by some person duly authorised by her, with a full understanding of what she was about to do; secondly, that she had full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction into which she is said to have entered; and thirdly, that she had independent and disinterested advice in the matter. The leading judicial decisions which recognise these principles are collected in the judgments of this Court in Mariam Bibi v. Ibrahim (1), Krishna Kishore De v. Nagendra Bala Chaudhurani (2) and Salish Chandra Ghose v. Kalidasi Dasi (3). On examination, these decisions will be found to fall broadly into two groups, namely, first, cases where the person who seeks to hold the lady to the terms of her deed is one who stood towards her in a fiduciary character or in some relation of personal confidence; and, secondly, cases where the person who seeks to enforce the deed was an absolute stranger and dealt with her at arm's length. In the former class of cases, the Court will act with great caution and will presume confidence put and influence exerted; in the latter class of cases, the Court will require the confidence and influence to be proved intrinsically. This is a fundamental distinction which does not appear to have been always kept in view, with the result that observations made in the one class of cases have been applied without scrutiny to the other class of cases. Illustrations of the confusion, which has resulted from this failure to discriminate between the two classes of cases, are furnished by the decisions nection to the two decisions of the Judicial Committee in Bazlur Rahim v. Shamsunnessa (29) and Girish v. Bhuggobutty (30). In the former case, where the transaction was between a husband and a wife, their Lordships observed that the burden of proving the reality and bona fides of the purchases pleaded by her husband was properly thrown on him. In the latter case, which was one of a death-bed gift in favour of the donor's brothers in their wives' names to the exclusion of her husband's adopted son, their Lordships pointed out that the Judicial Committee and the Courts in India had always been careful to see that deeds taken from purda women had been fairly taken and that the party executing them had been a free agent and duly informed of what she was about. The substance of the matter then is that the fairness of the bargain is the crucial test. This principle runs through the later decisions of the Judicial Committee, though the rule is more specially enforced in cases where a fiduciary relation involving trust and confidence is shown to exist. Fazzul Hossain v. Dhara Sundari (50), when he stated that the circumstances under which a parda-nashin woman agrees to transfer property in which she is interested, must be carefully examined, in order to ascertain that she had independent advice and that the lady had sufficient intelligence to understand the relevant and important matters, that she did understand them as they were explained to her, that nothing was concealed and that there was no undue influence or misrepresentation. The principle thus enunciated was adopted as the basis of the judgment pronounced by Sir John Edge in Matilal Das v. Eastern mortgage and Agency Co. (51). It will be observed that the Court must thus have regard to the intellectual attainments of the lady concerned and will naturally be disinclined to set aside the deed where she is proved to have been of business habits, to have been literate and to have possessed a capacity to judge for herself. *Sunitibala v. NIBARAN CHANDRA MUKERJI v. NIRUPAMA DEBI.

crystallised into inflexible rules and treated as of universal application, regardless of the special facts and surrounding circumstances of the concrete case which requires adjudication.

The case before us belongs to the first class mentioned above, where the persons who seek to hold the lady to the terms of her deed stand towards her in a relation of personal confidence. Santosh Lal Mookerjee, who had taken the first deed from her father, was the elder brother of her husband and the head of the joint family at the time. Nibaran Chandra Mookerjee and Dhrubapada Mookerjee, who took the second deed from her, were the sons of the step-brother of her husband, and the management of the family estate would devolve on them after the death of her brother-in-law. She was on the best of terms with them, and would, according to the normal structure of a joint Hindu family, look upon them as her natural protectors in whom she might repose confidence properly to safeguard her rights. In such circumstances, the elementary principle formulated in sec. 111 of the Indian Evidence Act would become applicable, namely, that where there is a question as to the good faith of a transaction between parties one of whom stands to the other in a position of active confidence, the burden of proving the good faith of the transaction is on the party who is in a position of active confidence. Whenever a person derives a benefit under a deed, if any confidential or fiduciary relation subsists between the parties, the Courts so far presume against the validity of the instrument as to require some proof, varying in amount according to circumstances, of the absence of anything approaching to imposition, over-reaching, undue influence, or unconscionable advantages. In the case before us, there is the significant fact that the executant of the deed was a lady of weak intellect, the daughter of an insane mother, and at the time of the transaction was an illiterate girl-widow who had just come of age. In such circumstances, it would be the imperative duty of those who took the deed from her to keep her at arm's length and to take every possible precaution to make sure that she received independent advice, understood the relevant and important matters, and appreciated the true effect of the deed or her rights, and further that nothing was concealed from her, nothing was misrepresented to her, no undue influence was exerted on her. The Defendants asserted that these conditions were substantially fulfilled, because the lady herself offered to execute a deed of settlement for life and acted under the advice and guidance of her father. The lady, on the other hand, maintained that she understood that the deed was to be operative for five years only, like the deed previously executed by her father. The Subordinate Judge has accepted her version, and we see no reason to differ from his view on this point. The testimony of Jatindranath Banerjee, Nirmal Chandra Banerjee and Nibaran Chandra Mookerjee makes it abundantly clear that Tripura Charan Chatterjee, the father of the lady, obtained the signature of her daughter to the deed, but the document was not explained to her nor was she advised as to the effect of the disposition on her interest. The father was plainly not in a position to give independent advice to his daughter. He held an appointment at Krishnagar; his widowed daughter resided in the interior of the District of Hugli; thus his own vocations made it impossible for him to look after the estate of his daughter. He had, besides, through the good offices of Santosh Lal Mookerjee, acquired some properties at Howrah, the ancestral place of residence of the family of his deceased son-in-law. For the management of these properties, he had to rely in a large measure upon Santosh Lal Mookerjee and his sons, the present Defendants. He was thus under considerable obligation to them and could not afford, in his own interest, to lose their co-operation, much less to incur their displeasure. That he was in a situation of embarrassment is plainly indicated by the correspondence which passed between himself and the Defendants, who were by no means punctual in the discharge of their pecuniary obligations and preferred to retain in their hands, as long as they could, notwithstanding the insistent demands of Tripura Charan Chatterjee, money payable to him or to his daughter. We are of opinion that the surrounding circumstances unmistakably point to the conclusion that Tripura Charan Chatterjee was by no means free to act solely in the interest of his daughter, and the fact cannot be ignored that even after disputes had arisen and this litigation had commenced, he and his son have been on friendly terms with the Defendants. We cannot further overlook that, shortly after the death of his son-in-law, he had applied to be appointed guardian of the person and property of his daughter, not so much for her benefit as for the advantage of Santosh Lal Mookerjee who was anxious to have control over the share of his step-brother in the family estate. There is no room for doubt that the proceedings in Court on that occasion were engineered by Santosh Lal Mookerjee. If then we consider the conduct of Tripura Charan Chatterjee in connection with the guardianship proceedings, and the execution of the two deeds of settlement, there can be little doubt that his acts have not been guided solely by an anxious desire to protect the interest of his widowed daughter. In our opinion, the Subordinate Judge has correctly held that the lady had not independent advice, as the interest of her father was bound up with that of the Defendants.

There is no room for controversy that this absence of independent advice has been detrimental to the interests of the Plaintiff. When the second deed of settlement was executed, its provisions and their true effect were not explained to her. What is of equal importance is that she was not apprised of the extent, value, and income of all the joint properties.

Neither the deed of the 1st May 1906 nor the deed of the 22nd June 1913 correctly enumerated and valued all the joint properties, moveable and immovable. This, indeed, is not a matter for surprise, because the Defendants have strenuously maintained that, if not all the properties acquired after the death of their uncle, at least those acquired after the execution of the first deed, did not form part of the joint estate. We hold accordingly that the disputed deed of settlement was understood by the lady to be a deed for five years whereas in reality it was a deed operative for her life, that she had no independent advice, that the extent, income and value of all the joint properties, moveable and immovable, were not disclosed to her, and that the effect of the deed on her rights was never brought home to her. It is consequently impossible to say that she had independent and competent advice, which, as observed by Fletcher Moulton, L. J., in In re Coomber (55) no doubt does not mean independent and competent approval, but signifies, at any rate, advice removed entirely from the suspected atmosphere and conveyed in the clear language of an independent mind, free from taint of interests, to the party acting, regarding the precise nature and consequence of the transaction. In cases of this class, there need not necessarily be misrepresentation by one party to the other to invalidate the deed; if there is any concealment of material fact, any failure to disclose material information or any just suspicion of artifice, the Court will interpose and pronounce the transaction void, and will, as far as possible, restore the parties to their original rights, because equity demands in such circumstances the most abundant good faith in the transaction between the parties. We affirm without hesitation the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge that the disputed deed of settlement does not bind the Plaintiff. Clearly no question of estoppel, acquiescence and waiver arises. The Plaintiff no doubt received from time to time maintenance allowance from the Defendants. Such allowance, however, would be payable whether the deed was for five years as the Plaintiff supposed it to be, or for life as in fact it was. There is no indication that the Plaintiff ever accepted these sums with knowledge that the terms of the deed were in reality different from what she understood them to be.

We have next to consider whether all the properties in suit are joint properties. The Subordinate Judge has answered this question in favour of the Plaintiff. The properties which were inherited by Santosh Lal Mookerjee and Haridas Mookerjee, the two sons of Kedarnath Mookerjee, were indisputably joint. There is also no doubt that the two brothers lived as members of a joint Hindu family; the elder was manager of the zemindars at Bhastara and Naib of the Srimanis at Mandalghat; the younger lived at home, worked as gomasta in a neighbouring village and looked after the joint family business in grocery, cloth, iron, ploughs, spades, oilcake, money-lending and sale of stamps. The properties acquired during this time were prima facie joint properties of the two brothers. The burden in such circumstances lies on the party setting up a case of separate estate to establish his allegation, as the family was joint and there was a nucleus of joint property. See the judgment of Lord Robertson in Anand Rao v. Vasant Rao (56), affirming the decision of Jenkins, C. J., in Wasant Rao v. Anand Rao (57). This also accords with the view indicated by Couch, C. J., in Taruk Chandra v. Jogeshwar Chandra (58) which was followed in Gobind Chunder v. Doorgaprosad (59) and Sasimohan v. Akhil (60), although the contrary opinion had been expressed in Bholanath v. Ajodhya Persad (61) and Dinanath v. Hari Narayan (62); see also Bodh Singh v. Ganesh Chandra (63), Atar Singh v. Thakur Singh (64) and Ramanath v. Kusum Kamini (65). The Defendants endeavoured to rebut this presumption by proof that some of the properties were acquired by Santosh, and others by Nibaran and Dhruba from their separate funds. Evidence was led by the Defendants to show that they and their father had separate debtors and that the properties were purchased in satisfaction of the debts due from such debtors as also from the sale proceeds of the paddy realised from them. This theory of separate debtors and separate accounts, however, completely broke down, when it transpired that the accounts of the money-lending business were mixed up with the accounts of the undoubtedly joint cloth and grocery shops. The Subordinate Judge has carefully scrutinised the account books, and has correctly summed up his conclusion in the finding that the story of separate money-lending business is a myth. It is, we think, fairly clear from the evidence that Santosh and Haridas had a joint money-lending business, though some of the transactions stood in the name of the former and others were in the name of the latter. After the death of Haridas the business was managed by Santosh and the present Defendants. The acquisitions made from this source were obviously impressed with the character of joint family properties. It was ingeniously argued, however, by Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter that the first deed of settlement effected a disruption of the joint family and that whatever properties were acquired thereafter belonged to the elder branch of the family represented by Santosh Lal Mookerjee. This contention is fallacious; for the deed of settlement was in essence a deed of management and did not cause a severance of the family; the title to the half share inherited by the Plaintiff from her husband never vested in her brother-in-law. He became entitled only to hold possession for a term of five years and to apply the income in the prescribed manner. In such circumstances, the principle deducible from the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Surajnarain v. Iqbul (66), Girija Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj (67) and Kawal Nain v. Budh Singh (68) can be of no assistance to the Defendants. We need not now examine whether the act of the guardian was really beneficial to his ward or whether it was so detrimental to her interests as to amount to a fraud on her; Hunooman Persaud v. Babooi Moonraj (69) and Lala Bunseedhar v. Bindesree (70). This much is incontestable that what the grantee undertook to carry out in terms of the deed was the minimum he was under an obligation to perform as the head of the joint family, namely, to maintain the widow and to give in marriage the daughter of his deceased step-brother. The result of the transaction was to enable him to appropriate a considerable portion of the income of the joint family properties, much in excess of what would be his legitimate share on partition. It would be contrary to elementary notions of justice, equity and good conscience to hold that by an appeal to any supposed principles of Hindu jurisprudence the head of the family could, in such an event, treat the joint family as dissolved and the profits in his hands made available for his personal benefit, to be transferred "self-acquisitions." We hold accordingly that the Subordinate Judge has correctly held that all the properties in suit, whether acquired during the lifetime of the two sons of the founder or of the Defendants, are joint family properties and are liable to be partitioned as such.

On the facts found, no question of limitation obviously arises. If we adopt the view that the deed actually executed by the lady was so fundamentally different from the deed she intended to execute and thought she executed, it is void and inoperative. Art. 91 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act has no application to a case of this description, where a suit is brought for possession and partition upon declaration that an instrument under which the Defendant claims is void; Baniku Behari v. Krishnā Gobinda (71), Sanni Bibi v. Siddik Husain (72), Oriental Bank Corporation v. Fleming (73) and Dagdu v. Bhana (74). On the other hand, if we adopt the theory that the deed must be cancelled in a suit instituted within three years from the date when the facts entitling the Plaintiff to have the instrument cancelled became known to her, the burden lies heavily upon the Defendants, who obtained the deed by misrepresentation, to prove that the Plaintiff acquired full information of the true state of facts at a time too remote to allow her to maintain the suit; Rahimbhoy v. Turner (75). This they have failed to establish, and the allegation of the Plaintiff as to the date when she discovered the fraud committed upon her stands un rebutted.

Finally, objection has been taken to the direction given by the Subordinate Judge which calls upon the Defendants to render accounts of the cloth and grocery shops from the death of their father till the shops were closed in 1912 and 1913 respectively. Reliance has been placed upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in Sookhomoy v. Monohurri (76), where Sir Richard Couch referred to the earlier decision of the Judicial Committee in Soorjeemoney v. Dinobundhoo (77) and observed as follows with reference to an order for adjustment of accounts made by the Courts in India: "It is not intended that the different payments, by the manager, of moneys taken out by the members of the family, should be enquired into, but it is to ascertain what portion of the savings of the family or the accumulations which have been made, the Plaintiff would be entitled to." This is settled law, as is clear from the decisions in Parmeshwar v. Gobind (78), Bhawani Prashad v. Juggerath Shaha (79), Haridas v. Narottam (80) and Balkrishna v. Muthusami (81) and as we read the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, he did not intend to depart from such a well-recognised principle. In an ordinary suit for partition, in the absence of fraud or other improper conduct, the only account the karta is liable for is as to the existing state of the property divisible; the parties have no right to look back and claim relief against past inequality of enjoyment of the members or other matters. But the karta is the accountable party, and the enquiry directed by the Court must be conducted in the manner usually adopted to discover what in fact the property now consists of, not what the karta says it is.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs and hearing fee Rs. 300.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, r. 2—Certification of payment out of Court to decree-holder—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 20 and Arts. 174 and 181—Period of limitation for certifying payment of money payable under a decree—Such certification if can be made in the application for execution.

In a mortgage suit the preliminary decree was made in May 1912, and the final decree in January 1916. In August 1919, the decree-holder applied for execution and sought to escape from the bar of limitation by reference to a payment alleged to have been made by the judgment-debtor in October 1917. The lower Courts dismissed the application for execution as the alleged payment had not been certified or recorded under Or. 21, r. 2 of the C. P. Code:

Held—That Art. 174 of the Limitation Act is applicable only to a case under sub-r. (2) of r. 2 of Or. 21, i.e., where the judgment-debtor moves the Court for recording a payment as certified. The only article applicable in the case of a decree-holder certifying a payment to Court is Art. 181. The Code does not prescribe that such application must be distinct from an application for execution of the decree and there is obviously no objection to a combined application embodying a two-fold prayer, namely, first that the alleged payment be recorded, and secondly, that the decree be executed for the balance of the judgment-debt. Therefore if the application for execution is made within three years from date of the said payment, it is not barred by limitation.

This was an appeal preferred on the 17th January 1921 from a decision of G. Mumford, Esq., District Judge, Dinajpur, dated the 6th October 1920, affirming that of Babu Jagadish Chandra Sen, Munsif, Dinajpur, dated the 18th December 1919.

The facts of the case are briefly as follows:—In a certain mortgage suit the preliminary decree was made on 8th May 1912. This was followed by the final decree on the 15th January 1916. On the 11th August, i.e., more than three years after the date of the final decree the decree-holders applied for execution, and to escape the bar of limitation referred to a payment alleged to have been made by the judgment-debtor on the 25th October 1917. The Court of first instance held that the alleged payment which had not been certified or recorded under Or. 21, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, could not be recognized and dismissed the application as barred by limitation. This decision was affirmed on appeal by the Dis-strict Judge. Hence the present appeal to the High Court.

Babu Girijya Prosanna Sanyal for the Appellants.

Babu Jotindra Mohan Chaudhury (for Babu Phanindra Lal Moitra) for the Respondents.

This is an appeal by the decree-holders from an order of dismissal made on application for execution of a mortgage-decree. The preliminary decree in the mortgage suit was made on the 8th May 1912. This was followed by the final decree on the 15th January 1916. On the 11th August 1919, the decree-holders applied for execution. This application was prima facie barred by limitation under Art. 182 of the schedule to the Indian Limitation Act. Consequently, the decree-holders sought to escape from the bar of limitation by reference to a payment alleged to have been made by the judgment-debtors on the 25th October 1917. The Court of first instance held that the alleged payment which had not been certified or recorded under Or. 21, r. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, could not be recognised and dismissed the application as barred by limitation. This decision of the primary Court has been affirmed by the District Judge. We are of opinion that the view taken by the Courts below cannot be supported.

Or. 21, r. 2 consists of three sub-rules. Sub-r. (1) deals with the case where the decree-holder seeks to certify a payment made to him out of Court by the judgment-debtor. The sub-rule provides that where any money payable under a decree of any kind is paid out of Court or the decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree-holder, the decree-holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree and the Court shall record the same accordingly. Sub-r. (2) deals with the case where the judgment-debtor seeks to inform the Court of a payment alleged to have been made by him out of Court to the decree-holder. In this event, the judgment-debtor may inform the Court of such payment and apply to the Court to issue a notice to the decree-holder to show cause on a day to be fixed by the Court why such payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified, and if after service of such notice the decree-holder fails to show cause why the payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified, the Court shall record the same accordingly. Sub-r. (3) finally provides that a payment or adjustment, which has not been certified or recorded as aforesaid, that is, at the instance of either the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor, shall not be recognised by any Court executing the decree. Let it be conceded that sub-r. (3) is expressed in wider terms than the corresponding provision of the Code of 1882, which laid down that a payment or adjustment not certified should not be recognised as payment or adjustment of the decree. But this does not solve the problem raised before us. The question is, whether the decree-holder can certify the alleged payment in the manner attempted in his application for execution. In this connection it is important to observe that Art. 174 of the Limitation Act is applicable only to a case under sub-r. (2) of r. 2. That article provides that an application for the issue of notice under the Civil Procedure Code to show cause why any payment made out of Court or any money payable under a decree or order should not be recorded as certified shall be made within 90 days from the date when the payment or adjustment made. This is clearly not applicable to a case under sub-r. (1). We must consequently consider whether there is a period of limitation for an application by a decree-holder, who has received payment from the judgment-debtor out of Court, to record the payment. Plainly, the only article applicable is Art. 181 which provides that an application for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in this schedule shall be made within three years from the time when the right to apply accrues. The right of the decree-holder to apply accrues as soon as he receives payment, because from that moment he is under an obligation to certify the payment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree. In the case before us, the alleged payment was made on the 25th October 1917. Consequently it was open to the decree-holder to apply to the execution Court within three years from that date to record the payment. The Code does not prescribe that such application must be distinct from an application for execution of the decree and there is obviously no objection to a combined application embodying a two-fold prayer, namely, first that the alleged payment be recorded, and secondly, that the decree be executed for the balance of the judgment-debt. This view has been adopted by this Court in the cases of Lakhi Narain v. Felamoni (1), Khatibannessa Bibi v. Santhialal Nahotu (2) and Harendra Chandra Bhattacharjee v. Gagan Chandra Das (3). That the decree-holder is not bound by the rule of limitation applicable to the judgment-debtor, has also been recognised in a series of decisions of this Court, namely, Lakhi Narain v. Felamoni Dassi (1), Khatiban- nessa Bibi v. Santhialal Nahotu (2), Harendra Chandra Bhattacharjee v. Gagan Chandra Das (3) and Jotindra Kumar Das v. Gagan Chandra Pal (4). A similar view has been adopted by the Patna High Court in Shaikh Elahi Bukhsh v. Nawab Lal (5), by the Madras High Court in Masilamani Mudaliar v. Sethu Swami Ayyar (6), and by the Bombay High Court in Pandurang v. Jagya (7). Our attention has, however, been drawn to two decisions of this Court where an apparently different conclusion was reached. The first of these cases, Bireswar Mookerjee v. Ambica Charan Bhattacharjee (8) need not detain us, because the ex parte judgment in that case was recalled on an application for a re-hearing by the Opposite Party in the rule upon whom no notice had been served, and the case was subsequently decided on another ground. But we may point out that the facts of that case were of a very special character and even on the view which we take the result would not have been different. In that case, the decree was made on the 24th November 1909. The application for execution was presented on the 7th June 1916 and was prima facie barred by limitation. To escape from the bar of limitation, the decree-holder relied upon two payments alleged to have been made by the judgment-debtor on the 8th October 1912 and 9th June 1913. In respect of the first payment, dated the 8th October 1912, the prayer to have it recorded (as contained in the application, dated the 7th June 1916 for execution) was barred by limitation under Art. 181. In respect of the second payment, dated 9th June 1913, the application was not so barred, but that payment, even if recorded, would clearly be of no avail by itself to save from the bar of limitation a decree, dated 24th November 1909. The second case brought to our notice is Bahuballabh Roy v Jogish Chandra Banerjee (9), where it was ruled that the decree holder can certify payment made at any time, subject to the ordinary rule of limitation that the certification must take place within such time as is required to save the application from being barred by limitation. It may be doubtful whether the application mentioned is the application for execution, or the application to have the payment recorded; the latter interpretation would be in harmony with the provision in Art 181 which prescribes the only restriction upon the right of the decree-holder to bring the payment to the notice of the Court. In these circumstances we must hold that the balance of judicial opinion is in favour of the view that the present application for execution is not barred by limitation.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the Court below set aside and the case remanded to the Court of first instance in order that the Court may investigate whether the alleged payment was in fact made and whether the requirements of sec 20 of the Indian Limitation Act have been fulfilled. The Appellants are entitled to their costs both here and before the District Judge. The costs of the Court of first instance will abide the result. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at one gold mohur.

Civil Procedure Code (Act I of 1908), Or. 34, r 3—Mortgagor's right to redeem by offering payment after the date fixed for the same, but before the final decree for foreclosure is passed.

A preliminary decree for foreclosure was passed on 5th October 1917, and six months' time was allowed i.e., up to 5th April 1918. On the 9th April 1918 the decree-holder applied to make the decree in the foreclosure suit final and notices were issued on the mortgagors fixing the 1st May 1918 as the date for passing the final decree. Before the final decree was passed, the mortgagors, on the 15th April made an application to the Court to pay off the decretal amount. On the 1st May 1918, the Court rejected this application and passed the final decree.

Held—That the mortgagors were entitled to redeem at any time before the final decree was passed. The right of the mortgagors to redeem was not extinguished until the final decree was passed.

Babus Jogesh Ch. Ray and Chandra S. Sen for the Appellant.

This appeal arises out of a suit for foreclosure of a mortgage by conditional sale.

A preliminary decree for foreclosure was passed on the 5th October 1917 and six months' time was allowed, i.e., up to the 5th April 1918. Before the date fixed for payment, the mortgagor sold the property to one Lakhi Charan Shaha on the 19th March 1918. It is said that this Lakhi Charan attempted to deposit the decretal amount but that it was refused. On the 9th April 1918, the decreeholder applied to make the decree in the foreclosure suit final and notices were ordered to be issued on that day on the Defendants fixing the 1st May 1918 as the date for passing the final decree. Before the final decree was passed, the Defendants, mortgagors on the 15th April made an application to the Court to pay off the decretal amount and also asked for an extension of time for the money to be paid. On the 1st May 1918, the Court held that the Defendants could not get permission to deposit and that the time for payment could not be enlarged unless the Defendants proved their allegations in the petition and accordingly passed the final decree in the suit. That decree was affirmed on appeal by the learned District Judge, and the Defendants have appealed to this Court.

We think that the Defendants were entitled to redeem at any time before the final decree was passed. As stated above, although 5th April 1918 was fixed for payment under the preliminary decree, the right of mortgagors to redeem was not extinguished until the final decree was passed. No doubt, if the mortgagors wanted an extension of time fixed for payment, it would have been necessary for them to show good cause for such extension. Where, as in the present case, notwithstanding the expiry of the time allowed by the preliminary decree for payment, the final decree had not been passed, we think that the mortgagors had a right to redeem before the passing of the final decree. [See Parvash Nath Majumdar v. Ramjadu Majumdar (1) and Alimeia Chowdhury v. Roshun Ali Matbar (2)]. The order under Or. 31, r. 3, cl. 2 was not made until the 1st May and the Defendants wanted to deposit the decretal amount on the 15th April. The final decree was not drawn up and signed till the 8th May 1918.

In these circumstances, we direct that the case be sent back to the Court of first instance in order that the Defendants may deposit the amount due under the decree, including all the costs incurred by the Plaintiffs in the Court of first instance, within one month of the arrival of the order in that Court; and upon that being done, the final decree for foreclosure will be set aside with costs of this Court and of the lower Appellate Court.

If the money is not deposited within the time specified, this appeal will stand dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 20—Unsettled payment of an instalment decree, if saves limitation—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, r. 3—Certification of payment, if can be made at any time.

After the passing of an instalment decree, some instalments were paid within three years of the date of the decree. The payments were not certified to the Court before the application for execution but were certified by a petition presented after the application for execution was made and made a part of the said application. The said application for execution was made more than three years after the date of the decree, but within three years from the dates of the said payments.

Held That the payments, which were evidenced by letter written and signed by the judgment debtor having been made within three years of the decree and within three years of the present application for execution, and they having been certified by a petition which was made a part of the application for execution, the application for execution was not barred by limitation.

LAKHI v. FELAMONT (1) KHATIBANNESSA v. SANCHIA (2) and several other cases referred to

This was an appeal preferred on the 10th of August 1920, against the order of Babu B. Mukherjee, Additional Subordinate Judge of Zillah Faridpur, dated the 8th of May 1920, affirming the order of Babu Amulya Kumar Guha, Munsif, 2nd Court at Chikandi, dated the 19th of September 1919.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babu Bhagirath Ch. Das for the Appellant.

Babu Asitranjan Ghose for the Respondents.

The question involved in this appeal is whether the application for execution of an instalment decree is barred by limitation. The decree was passed on the 21st of December 1914, and provided for the payment of Rs 800 odd in six instalments, namely, Rs 141 odd for each instalment, from 1322 B. S., the whole amount to be due with interest in default in payment of any instalment. The application for execution of the decree was made on the 1st April 1919, that is more than 3 years after the date of the decree. But the decree-holder relies upon three payments, namely, the instalments for 1322 and 1323 in full, and Rupees 100 (only) in respect of the instalment of 1324. The Court below held that the payments were proved, and that the application for execution was not barred by limitation. The judgment-debtor has appealed to this Court and the question to be determined is whether the payments, not having been certified to the Court before the application for execution was made, the application for execution was barred by limitation.

It has been held in a number of cases that payments may be certified in the application for execution of the decree. [See Lakhi Narayan Ganguly v. Felamont Das (1) Khatibannessa Bibi v. Sanchia Lal Nahata (2) Bahuballabh Roy v.

Jogesh Chandra Bannerjee (3) and Sheikh Elahie Bux v. Nawab Lal (4)]. The part payments and the certification must however be made before the application for execution is barred. See the cases cited above, and Jatindra Kumar Das v. Gagan Chandra Pal (5) and Harendra Chandra Bhattacharjee v. Gagan Chandra Das (6). It was pointed out in the last case that although the decree-holder may either apply to certify payment before the execution or may do so in his application for execution of the decree, the provisions of sec. 20 are in no way affected. In some of the cases cited above the payments were made by way of interest, or if there was any part payment of the principal it appeared in the handwriting of the debtor, and it was held that the application was not barred.

In Bahuballabh Roy v. Jogesh Chandra Bannerjee (3) the application for execution was held to be barred by limitation. It does not appear that the payments were made within three years of the date of the decree and within three years before the application for execution. The learned Judges affirmed the principle that the decree-holder can certify payments at any time, but that the certification must take place within such time as is required to save the application from being barred by limitation. Fletcher, J., who was a party to the decision was also a party to the decision in the case of Lakhi Narayan Ganguly v. Felamoni Dasi (1) in which it was held that a part payment before the decree is barred, saves limitation.

decree was made on the 24th of November 1909 and the application for execution of the same was presented on the 7th of June 1916. Two payments were alleged to have been made in 1912 and 1913 respectively, neither of which was certified to the Court. The learned Judges held that the payments or adjustments could not be recognised by the Court executing the decree. They pointed out that Or. XXI, r. 2, cl. (3) of the Code of 1908 is different in terms from sec. 258 of the Code of 1882, which provided, that a payment which had not been certified, could not be recognised as a payment or adjustment of the decree, while the present case provided that a payment which has not been duly certified shall not be taken into account by any Court executing the decree, and that this alternation in the language justifies the inference that an uncertified payment or adjustment cannot now operate to prolong the period of limitation for an application for execution of a decree under the Limitation Act.

There is no doubt that unless the payment is certified such payment cannot be taken into account by the Court executing the decree. The question, however whether the certification can be made, not only at the time the payment is made, but subsequently, that is, at any time before the application for execution is barred was not considered in that case. Moreover, in that case the judgment-debtors were infants, and the persons who were said to have made the payments were not the lawful guardians of the minors within the meaning of sec. 21 of the Limitation Act. That being so, they were really no payments which could save limitation.

In the present case, on the other hand, the payments are evidenced by letter written and signed by the judgment-debtor himself, they were made within three years of the decree and within three years of the present application for execution, and the payments were certified by a petition presented on the 26th July 1919, which was made a part of the application for execution. Having regard to the facts of the present case and the weight of authority on the point, we think the application is not barred by limitation. The appeal must accordingly be dismissed, with costs, two gold mohurs.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION]

REV. NO. 30 OF 1922.

WALMSLEY, J. AMINULLA and ors.,
SUHRAWARDY, J. Petitioners,
1922, v.
27, January. THE EMPEROR,
Opposite Party.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 147. out of six accused persons three found to have a common object different from that set out in the charge - Legality of conviction of any of the six accused - Court's duty in cases where near relatives want to compound cases

Six accused persons were convicted under sec. 147, Indian Penal Code and sentenced to 15 days' imprisonment. In the charge the common object was stated to be to assault the complainant. During the pendency of the case the complainant wanted to compound the case but the Magistrate did not allow him to do so. In his judgment he found that three of the accused assaulted the complainant and the other three accused went to snatch away the cattle of the complainant in common object with that of the other accused persons:

Held—That there being a difference between the common object found by the Magistrate in the case of three of the accused persons, there were not five persons that shared in the common object set out in the charge, and the ingredient of an offence under sec. 147, I. P. C. was wanting. Therefore the conviction under sec. 147 against all the accused must fail.

It is a great pity, when parties, who are apparently nearly related to one another, succeed in patching up their quarrels that the Magistrate should not do what he can to restore peace and good will.

This was a Rule granted on the 10th January 1922 against the decision of L. Barrows, Esq., Additional Magistrate of Chittagong, confirming that of Moulvi Sidiq Ahmad, Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Chittagong, dated the 4th November 1921.

The facts will appear from the judgment.

Babu Ram Dayal De for the Petitioners.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The Petitioners have been convicted under sec. 147 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to fifteen days' rigorous imprisonment each. In addition, two of them Nur Ahamed and Aminulla have been convicted under sec. 323, I. P. C., and sentenced to fifteen days' rigorous imprisonment and Faizulla under sec. 324, I. P. C. and sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment. The rule was issued on three grounds. The first relates to the conviction under sec. 147, I. P. C. The learned Judge (?) drew up a charge in which the common object of the unlawful assembly was stated to be to assault Akamuddin and Mukhleswar Rahaman. In his judgment he finds that three of the accused persons did assault Akamuddin and Mukhleswar. As to the other three, that is, Manirulla, Mohabbat Ali and Kasim Ali, he says: "there is no positive evidence on the record that they took any serious part in the marauding or caused injury to any person, although I am perfectly satisfied that they went with the other three accused to snatch away the cattle of the complainant."

common object with that of the other accused persons." Clearly, there is a difference between the common object mentioned and the common object he finds in the case of these three persons. If the common object of Faizulla, Nur Ahamed and Aminulla was to beat Akamuddin, then there were not five persons that shared in the common object and the ingredient of an offence under sec. 147, I. P. C. is wanting. It is a great pity that so many Magistrates when dealing with charges under sec. 147, I. P. C. are careless in setting out the common object and in directing their attention to whether that particular common object is proved or not. On this ground, the conviction under sec. 147, I. P. C. against all the Petitioners must fail.

The learned Magistrate concedes that the additional sentences passed under secs. 323 and 321, I. P. C., on three of the Petitioners cannot stand with the sentence under sec. 147, I. P. C. With the conviction and sentence under sec. 147, I. P. C. removed, it becomes a question whether on the third ground the conviction of hurt should be allowed to stand. I find that the complainant put in a petition on the 5th of August last saying that he did not wish to go on with the case. So far as the charge against Nur Ahamed and Aminulla is concerned, he had an absolute right to compromise the case on the charge of simple hurt. In the case of Faizulla, the complainant had no such absolute right: his power to compound was subject to the Magistrate's approval. But, in this case, the learned Magistrate did not say anything about whether he approved or not. He simply says that he heard the Court Inspector. It is a great pity when parties who are apparently nearly related to one another succeed in patching up their quarrels, that the Magistrate should not do what he can to restore peace and good will. I think the Petitioners Nur Ahamed and Aminulla should be acquitted of the charge under sec. 323, I. P. C., on the ground that the complainant did not wish to proceed any further against them, and, so far as Faizulla is concerned, taking into consideration that he has already undergone some days' rigorous imprisonment and the complainant did not wish to proceed against him either, I think in his case too the conviction and sentence under sec. 324, I. P. C. should be set aside. The result is that the rule is made absolute and the convictions and sentences passed on the Petitioners are set aside.

SRI VIDYA VARUTHI
THIRTHA SWAMIGAL,
Appellant,

v.

BALUSAMI AYYAR and
ors., Respondents.

Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 134, 144, sec. 10—Permanent lease by Mohant of Mutt without necessity—Lessee if acquires title by adverse possession after twelve years—Shebait or mutwalli, if trustee—Legal powers of Mohant and sajjadanashin—Application of rules of English law by analogy in such cases condemned.

Neither under the Hindu law nor in the Mahomedan system is any property "conveyed" to a shebait or a mutwalli, in the case of a dedication. Nor is any property vested in him; whatever property he holds for the idol or the institution he holds as manager with certain beneficial interest regulated by custom and usage. The shebait or the mutwalli is not a "trustee" as understood in the English system though in any specific property is specifically entrusted to such a person for specific purposes, he might be regarded as trustee with regard to that property.

Where the head of a Mutt gave a permanent lease of property which had been granted for the general purposes of the Mutt and no necessity for the alienation was established:

Held—That Art. 134 of the Limitation Act which is controlled by sec. 10 of the Act did not apply to the case as the property in question was not properly specifically “conveyed” to the Matathipathe “in trust.” Also, that the rent reserved in the lease was not “valuable consideration” within the meaning of the article.

Held, further—That as, according to the well-settled law of India, a Mohant is incompetent to create any interest in respect of Mutt property to endure beyond his life, the possession of the lessee did not become adverse within the meaning of Art. 144 of the Limitation Act until he died, and the acceptance of rent by his successor being properly referable only to a new tenancy created by himself, which it was within his power to continue during his life, the possession of the lessees did not become adverse again until his death.

The legal position of Mohants, shebaitis, sajjadanashins and mutwallis discussed.

Ordinarily speaking, the sajjadanashin has a larger right in the surplus income than a mutwalli, for so long as he does not spend it in wicked living or in objects wholly alien to his office he, like the Mohant of a Hindu Mutt, has full power of disposition over it.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 19th October 1916, which substantially reversed a judgment and decree, dated the 29th October 1914, of the temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramanad.

The sole question on the present appeal was whether the Plaintiff-Respondent, Balusami Ayyar, was entitled to a declaration that he was the permanent lessee of the agricultural land in dispute. The High Court answered it in the affirmative, and the Subordinate Judge in the negative.

The material facts which gave rise to the litigation were as follows:—By a deed, dated the 17th March 1891, Sri Vidya Srinivasatheertha Swamigal, who was the head of a Mutt called Sri Vyasaraya, and, as such, the predecessor-in-title of the Appellant, granted a permanent lease of the land in dispute at a fixed rent to Venkitaraya Chariar, Plaintiff No. 2. The land was the endowed property of the deity Sri Gopalakrishnaswami worshipped in the said Mutt. The lessor put the lessee in possession of the land in terms of the grant, and received the rent as agreed.

On the 27th September 1902, the lessee sub-let the land to Venkitasami Naicker, Defendant No. 1, for 10 years commencing from the 1st of October 1902, for the aggregate rent of Rs. 1,315 paid in cash. The sub-lessee, i.e., Defendant No. 1, was then let into possession of the land which he covenanted to restore to his lessor after the expiration of the term of the lease, i.e., the 30th September 1912. The sub-lessor was to pay the annual rent reserved by the permanent lease, and the sub-lessee was to pay the municipal tax and quit rent, etc. The sub-lease was in the name of the Defendant No. 1, but it was for the benefit of Defendant No. 2 as well.

By a sale-deed, dated the 21st February 1905, the original lessee Venkitaraya Chariar (Plaintiff No. 2) and his son Venkitanarayasimha Chariar, (Plaintiff No. 3) conveyed all their right and interest in the land in dispute to Balusami

Ayyar (Plaintiff No. 1), for the sum of Rs. 4,475. The "title deeds, viz., one perpetual lease-deed executed on 17th March 1891, by the said Vidya Srinivasatheertha Swamigal, the receipts showing the payments of the amount of lease, one counter-part lease-deed obtained on 27th September 1902, executed by the lessee Venkitasami Naicker and one agreement obtained executed by the same person on the 29th idem," were duly delivered to the vendee.

The head of the said Mutt, Sri Vidya Srinivasatheertha Swamigal, died shortly after granting the permanent lease of 1891, and was succeeded by Vidya Samudra, who held the office for over 12 years. On the death of Vidya Samudra, Defendant No. 26, Srimath Sri Vidya Ratnakara Thirtha Swamigal, became head of Mutt in 1906. The endowed properties of the Mutt were actually managed by the Government of Mysore on behalf of, and as agent of, the head of the Mutt. The Mysore Government administered the trust estate by its Muzarai Department, which received the rent of the perpetual lease from Plaintiff No. 1 up to 1910.

The Mysore Government appointed one Raghavendra Rao to look after the land in dispute, and he for the first time put forward the plea that the land in dispute being endowed property, the head of the Mutt was not competent to grant a perpetual lease thereof without legal necessity which did not exist, and that the permanent lease was not binding on Vidya Ratnakara Thirtha Swamigal, Defendant No. 26, the head of the Mutt in 1910. In other words he refused to recognise the perpetual lease of 1891 in favour of the Plaintiffs, and actually executed a lease of the land in dispute on the 28th November 1911, in favour of Defendant No. 1, Venkitasami Naicker, and Defendant No. 2, Sankaralingam Pillai, who were as already stated the sub-lessees of the Plaintiffs. It was a lease for 17 years from the 28th November 1911, till the 28th November 1928, at the rent of Rs. 130 per year. The sub-lease which the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had taken from the Plaintiffs was still running on the 28th November 1911.

The Plaintiff No. 1 complained and sent a registered letter to Defendant No. 1, who in his reply of the 28th January 1912, repudiated the Plaintiff's title to the land in dispute and contended that the perpetual lease of 1891 was invalid and inoperative, and that he was not the sub-tenant of the Plaintiff's but the lessee of the head of Mutt, i.e., Defendant No. 26, under the document of the 28th November 1911. The Plaintiffs thereupon instituted the present suit on the 5th March 1913. In their plaint the Plaintiffs set forth the facts mentioned above. The real claimant was Plaintiff No. 1, who claimed the right of a permanent lessee.

The principal Defendants were Nos. 1 and 2 and No. 26, those numbered 3 to 25 are covered by Defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Defendant No. 26 was the head of the Mutt and on his death the present Appellant had been substituted in his place. It was pleaded on his behalf that the permanent lease of the endowed land was invalid and was not binding on him; that each succeeding head of the Mutt was entitled to disregard the permanent lease and to deal with the land in dispute according to law, and that the Plaintiff No. 1 was not a permanent lessee by prescription or otherwise.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were the sub-lessees of the Plaintiffs under the lease, dated the 27th September 1902, for 10 years, and they are also the lessees of Defendant No. 26 under the lease, dated the 28th November 1911, for 17 years. These two Defendants filed separate written statements denying the claim of the Plaintiffs. Defendant No. 1 also pleaded that the permanent lease of 1891 was invalid; that Plaintiff No. 1 was not a purchaser for value, and that the Plaintiff was neither entitled to possession of the land nor to a declaration that he was a permanent lessee thereof.

The following issues were framed on the pleadings :—

“(1) Whether the permanent lease of the suit property of 1891 by Sri Vidya Theertha Swamigal in favour of the second Plaintiff is valid and binding on the 26th Defendant?

(2) Whether the first Plaintiff has acquired by adverse possession a valid title to the suit property as against the 26th Defendant?

(3) Whether the first Plaintiff's purchase is bona fide and supported by consideration?

(4) Whether any and which of the Defendants is estopped from questioning the Plaintiffs' title?

(5) Whether the lease for 17 years of Defendant Nos. 1 and 2 from the 26th Defendant, is legal and valid and binding on the first Plaintiff?

(6) Whether the second Defendant had a joint interest with the first Defendant in the lease, dated the 27th September 1902?

(6A) Whether the Plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 are necessary parties, and the suit is not bad for mis-joinder of parties and causes of action?

(6B) Whether the first Plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of the agreement, dated 29th September 1902 between the second Plaintiff and the first Defendant and whether the agreement is enforceable in law?

(7) Whether the first Plaintiff is entitled to any and what damages claimed in the plaint and from which of the Defendants?”

After recording and examining evidence, oral and documentary, the temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad delivered judgment on the 29th October 1914. He found the first, second, fourth, sixth and seventh (B) issues in the negative, and the third, fifth, and a part of the seventh issues in the affirmative. He held that the said permanent lease was invalid and not binding on the head of the Mutt, and that although Plaintiff No. 1 was a purchaser for value, he did not possess the right of a permanent lessee in the land by prescription or estoppel or in any other way. He concluded his finding thus :—

“Thus it is clear that while the head of the Mutt has absolute control over the income of the Mutt properties, he has no right to alienate any property of the Mutt so as to bind his successor. Then the permanent lease granted by Srinivasa Theertha under Ex. A to second Plaintiff could not be held to be binding on his successors. The 26th Defendant became head of the Mutt only in 1906 as admitted by Plaintiffs' witnesses. The so-called adverse possession by first Plaintiff must commence only from 1906 as against the present head. Admittedly, the first Plaintiff has had no possession at all, ever since he took Ex. E from second Plaintiff as first Defendant has been enjoying the plaint property under a lease from the second Defendant since date of Ex. D and D1. It is also clear from the evidence of the second Plaintiff as the Plaintiffs' first witness. It is thus clear that first Plaintiff has not perfected his title by adverse possession for over 12 years as against the present head of the Mutt, the 26th Defendant.”

The learned Subordinate Judge nevertheless held that Plaintiff No. 1 was entitled to recover the municipal tax and quit rent which he had paid on behalf of Defendant No. 1, as well as damages from Defendant No. 1 for not delivering cocoanut keethu, etc., in accordance with the terms of the sub-lease for six years from 1907 to 1912.

The result was that he made a decree "that the first Plaintiff do recover from the first Defendant Rs. 116-6 6 in respect of quit-rent, etc., and cocoanuts, etc., claimed in the plaint, and that the Plaintiffs' suit in all other respects be, and the same hereby is dismissed, and this Court doth further order and decree that the Plaintiffs do bear their costs and that the first Plaintiff do pay the Defendants' costs."

From the said decree the Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Madras, and Defendant No. 1 filed cross-objections which were not pressed at the hearing of the appeal. The High Court delivered judgment on the 16th October 1916. It recorded that "the main contentions on behalf of first Plaintiff are (1) that the permanent lease was binding on the grantor and his successors, (2) that a valid title had been acquired under the provisions of the Limitation Act, and (3) that the Defendants were estopped from denying the first Plaintiff's title. The findings of the learned Subordinate Judge are against the Plaintiffs-Appellants on all three points."

The High Court rejected the first, and upheld the second contention of the Plaintiff. In the course of his judgment Mr. Justice Burn (Sadasiva Ayyar, J., concurring) said as follows:—

"In the present case I entertain no doubt that it was the intention of the grantor to create a permanent lease and that second Plaintiff intended to take and did take the lease as a permanent one. His subsequent dealings with the property support this view. The grantor died a few months after the execution of Ex. A.

During the 14 years that his successor held office the second Plaintiff continued to hold on the terms of the lease-deed. I would respectfully follow the view enunciated by Mookerjee, J., in the case referred to and hold that the second Plaintiff perfected his title to a permanent lease as more than 12 years elapsed since the grant. The lessor intended to grant, and the lessee intended to acquire, an interest greater than the transferor was competent to alienate and all the requirements of Art. 134 of the Limitation Act, No. IX of 1908 have been complied with.

"The above finding is sufficient for disposal of the appeal, and it is therefore unnecessary to consider the question of estoppel, which is raised by the Appellants. . . .

"In the result, I think the appeal should be allowed and first Plaintiff given a decree for possession of the property and a declaration that he is a permanent lessee. He will also be entitled to mesne profits from first October 1912 till delivery. These profits will be recoverable from Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and will be determined by the lower Court and embodied in a supplemental decree. Having regard to the uncertainty of the law in this Presidency prior to the judgment of the Privy Council, I think the parties should bear their own costs in both Courts."

The High Court made a decree accordingly, and from that decree the present Appellant alone has appealed to His Majesty in Council.

of the Madras High Court. A further stage in the same case came before the Madras High Court on 5th December 1916 [vide 32 Mad. L. J. 278] after it had been referred back to the Subordinate Judge for findings. It came on appeal before the Board which delivered judgment here on 7th June 1920 [Nataraja Thambiran v. Kailasam Pillai (24)]. The head of the Mutt was not a trustee of the endowment. Ram Parkash Das v. Anand Das (1).

Can property forming part of an endowment be said to be part of a trust? Art. 134 does not apply. Kailasam v. Nataraja (4), Full Bench deals exhaustively with the law on this subject.

[LORD DUNEDIN.—The question put there is “Is he a trustee or a life tenant?” And the answer of the Full Bench is that he is neither.]

Statute of Limitation does not apply. Muthusamiar v. Sreemethanithi (10) is a case which decides that alienation of head of Mutt is similar to that of a widow. Permanent lease is outside the powers of the head of a Mutt. He is not strictly a trustee.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with Mr. Narasinhani) for the Respondents.—The question is what is the nature of this particular grant. These are inams (free of revenue) lands given to the Mutt. The person is a trustee and there can be no doubt of this, when one looks at the settlement register. The trustee is a Mohant, and the grant was for certain specific purposes. Then does he fall under sec. 134? This article has been applied by every High Court and by this Board. See Abhiram Goswami's case (7) and Iswar Shyam Chand Jiu v. Ram Kant Ghosh (25), also in Dattagiri v. Dattatraya (14) by Jenkins, C. J.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—Is there any beneficiary who could challenge this within the period?]

Yes, under sec. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Advocate-General or any two worshippers with his leave. Act XX of 1863.

The only difference between Dattagiri v. Dattatraya (14) and this case is in the nature of the alienation. Nilmongy v. Jagabandhu (19) and Behari Lall v. Mahammad Mutthi (17).

Inam Register in Inam Rules (Subdivisional Officer of Board of Revenue in 1889) r. 3, cl. 1. This inam was one for charitable or religious purposes.

[Mr. Clauson.—This body is situated in Mysore.]

But the property is in Madras.

[LORD SHAW.—You have to go, as it were, to the home of the trust. This is in Mysore.]

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—If a piece of English land is subject to a Scotch trust, a suit would lie here, but the law applicable would be Scotch law.]

Either limitation runs from the beginning or from the accession of the next trustee or the Statute of Limitation could never apply: Prosunno Kumari v. Golab Chand (20); Kailasam Pillai v. Nataraja Thambiran (4) was a reconsideration of Vidyapurna Swami v. Vidyandhi

Rameswar Malia v. Sri Sri Jiu Thakur (26). Art. 131 applies, if not, then Art. 144 applies.

Mr. Clauson, in reply. — First this is not a case where the property is vested on a strict trust. Subordinate Judge and High Court find this.

The position is analogous to that of a corporation sale. Any alienation is good as against him if in excess of his powers but not against his successor. Nataraja Thambiran v. Kailasam Pillai (24).

In the case of properties like this no Statute of Limitations applies. Art. 131 does not apply as this does not fall under either of the categories in that section. There is no cestui qui trust. Adverse possession runs against each trustee in turn as he becomes the head of the Mutt, but the next one is not affected by this.

See sec. 28 of the Limitation Act. Adverse possession began to run against me only from the date when I became the head of the Mutt.

There is no adverse possession as each Mohant accepts the lease and gives a fresh lease, as it were, although, each such lease is invalid. Each Mohant may be considered to give a fresh lease by continuing the tenant in possession, but the lease is good as against every Mohant who receives rent and allows him in possession. When you come to a limited owner like this, the lease may be good as against him but not against his successor. Muthusamiar v. Sreemethanithi (10). The head of a Mutt is not a trustee within Art. 131. This was decided in Kailasam Pillai v. Nataraja Thambiran (1) and affirmed here on appeal.

Narayan v. Shri Runchandra (16) went on the supposition that the original lessee was not a trustee (p. 376 bottom). Dattagiri v. Dattatraya (14) proceeded on the assumption that the property (367) was never trust property. "Shebait" is only an officer or manager.

See Abhiram Goswami's case (7), Isvar Shyam Chand Jiu v. Ram Kant Ghosh (25) and Muthusamiar v. Sreemethanithi (10) is exactly similar to the case of three tenants for life the first of whom grants a lease and the others accept it. Miller, J.'s judgment at 361.

This case proceeds on the analogy of a lease by a Hindu widow. The lease is voidable and not void.

Art. 134 does not apply because there is no special trust. Kailasam Pillai v. Nataraja Thambiran (1).

The endowment was made more than 200 years ago and there was no idea of creating a trust.

Adverse possession cannot be established and lessee does not claim that my client ever accepted him as the tenant.

Mr. DeGruyther.—Mitra's Limitation, Vol. I, pp. 160 and 161. States this as settled law in India: you can claim to be a permanent tenant and set up adverse possession as such.

Mr. DeGruyther.—Refers to Narayan v. Shri Runchandra (16). A permanent lease granted by a Mohant has always been treated as void and not as voidable except perhaps in Muthusamiar v. Sreemethanithi (10). In every single case, the Board has treated a permanent lease by a Mohant as void.

In both cases in 27 Bombay the property was given to the Mutt and in both cases the Mohant has been treated as a trustee. (See 27 Bombay, top of p. 367).

MR. AMBER ALI.—The suit that has given rise to this appeal relates to certain lands lying in the town of Madura in the Madras Presidency which admittedly belong to an old Mutt (Math) situated within the Mysore State. The origin, development, and raison d'être of these Mutts have been discussed in a number of cases decided in the Madras High Court to some of which their Lordships propose to refer in the course of this judgment. In their general characteristics they are almost identical with similar institutions in Northern India and in the Bombay Presidency. The heads of these foundations bear different designations in respect of the rights and incidents attached to the office; the difference arises from the customs and usages of each institution. The superior of this particular Mutt has been called in these proceedings Matathipathe and sometimes Pandara Sannadhi, which their Lordships understand connote the same idea of headship. At the time this action was brought, the 26th Defendant held the office of Matathipathe. He has since died and the present Appellant is the head of the institution. In 1891 one Srinivasa was the Matathipathe and he on the 17th March of that year granted to the 2nd Plaintiff, a near relative, a permanent lease of the lands in suit, on a small quit rent of Rs. 24 a year. Shortly after the grant of the lease Srinivasa died, and was succeeded by one Samudra, who held the office until 1906. On his death the now deceased Defendant No. 26 became the head. In 1902 the 2nd Plaintiff subleased the lands to the 1st and 2nd Defendants for a period of ten years.

Since 1905 the Mutt has been under the management of the Mysore State under a power of attorney, executed at first by the Matathipathe Samudra and afterwards by his successor; in favour of the Dewan and his successors in office. About the same time the 2nd Plaintiff conjointly with his son (the 3rd Plaintiff) assigned their right and interest in the lands in suit to the 1st Plaintiff. It is in evidence and, so far as appears from the judgments of the two Courts in India, does not appear to be contradicted, that it was only in 1908 that the representative of the Dewan acting under the power granted by the Matathipathe became aware of the transaction of 1891 under which the Plaintiffs claim title. The sub-lease created in 1902 by the 2nd Plaintiff in favour of the 1st and 2nd Defendants was to have expired in 1912. But before its expiry they obtained a lease for 17 years from the representative of the Dewan. They are now in possession of the lands in suit under this lease. The Plaintiffs are and were at the time they brought their suit on the 5th March 1913, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Madura, admittedly out of possession. The present action is for declaration of title and for ejectment and possession, principally directed against the Matathipathe as the head of the Mutt and the 1st and 2nd Defendants lessees holding possessions under him. The other Defendants have been joined as parties apparently in consequence of certain rights they possess or exercise under those Defendants.

The Plaintiffs base their title on two grounds: Firstly, that the permanent lease under which they claim was created under circumstances that would bind not only the grantor but all his successors; and secondly, that even if the lease was not valid they had acquired a title under the Statute of Limitation by adverse possession for over twelve years from the date of the grant.

Their case throughout has been that Srinivasa was a "trustee" and that all his successors are "trustees," that the lands were granted on a "specific" trust, and that consequently under Art. 134 of the 1st schedule of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) they have acquired a good title against the Mutt.

The Matathipathe controverted both allegations. He denied that the alienation by Srinivasa was of such a character as would bind the Mutt; he further denied that he and his predecessors were "trustees" of the Mutt or that the 2nd Plaintiff or his assignee had acquired any right to the Mutt lands by adverse possession. On these contentions, two points arose for determination which are embodied in the first two issues. The trial Judge after giving the substance of the 2nd Plaintiff's evidence and of the other witnesses, formulates the position which the pleader took up.

"He contends," says the learned Judge, "that the plaint property is trust property set apart for the worship of the titular deity of the Mutt, that the head of the Mutt is a trustee merely, and that the permanent lease to 2nd Plaintiff is an alienation of Mutt property and that 26th Defendant at this distance of time could possibly have no right to such property. The alienation being ab initio void, the 26th Defendant had no right to plaint property as he succeeded only in 1906 and 1st Plaintiff had perfected his title by adverse possession for over twelve years."

The Subordinate Judge negatived this contention; he held upon the admissions of the 2nd Plaintiff that the property in suit was "ordinary Mutt property" and was not set apart on any specific trust; that the head of the Mutt was not a "bare trustee," as it was admitted that the income was at his absolute disposal and that "none had a right to question him about it."

He found also that the 2nd Plaintiff took the lease with full knowledge of the character of the endowment and had learnt on enquiry that "he could not safely purchase it."

With regard to the question of estoppel arising from the alleged acceptance of rent by the 26th Defendant as the Plaintiffs contended, the Subordinate Judge held:—

"In fact the 1st Plaintiff never paid money as rent and the 26th Defendant or his agent never accepted payment with knowledge that the payment was as rent for plaint property. In these circumstances, I find that these Defendants are not estopped from denying Plaintiff's title. I find this issue against Plaintiffs."

He accordingly dismissed the suit save and except in respect of a money claim against the 1st and 2nd Defendants.

The Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court of Madras, which reversed the trial Judge's order and decreed the claim. The learned Judges do not negative the finding of the first Court that the 2nd Plaintiff took the lease with notice. But they considered that the matter in dispute fell within Art. 134 referred to above. They summed up their conclusion in the following words: "that the lessor intended to grant, and the lessee intended to acquire, an interest greater than the transferor was competent to alienate, and all the requirements of Art. 131 have been complied with."

The findings of the learned Judges on the issue relating to limitation and the acquisition of right by adverse possession require notice. They deal first with the question of justifiable necessity, which they decide against the Plaintiffs. They say, "there is no doubt that the head of a Mutt cannot in the absence of necessity bind his successors in office by a permanent lease at a fixed rent for all time." And then add: "There is no allegation, much less proof, of any such necessity. The first contention must be rejected."

They then proceed to discuss the nature of the endowment in question and the position of its head. Their finding on this point is important; they say as follows

"In connection with the second point a question arises as to the nature of the endowment and the position of the head of the Mutt in relation to it. The exact terms of the original grant are not in evidence. It was conceded in argument that the grant was made by one of the Naioken dynasty of Madura. The case for the Appellants is that the endowment was for a specific purpose, i.e., for the worship of Gopalakrishnaswami, who is described by Defendants' 1st witness as the 'titular deity of the Mutt.' The evidence does not support this contention and it has been found against in the Lower Court. A statement made by a local agent of the Mutt during the Inam Commission inquiries is relied upon for the Appellants. It was apparently unsupported by any documentary evidence. The description of the Inam as given at the close of the inquiry is that it was granted 'for the support of Vyasaraya Matam' (Ex. L). Compare also description in Ex.

F. The evidence for the Defendants is that the income from this property is not appropriated to any particular purpose but forms part of the general funds of the Mutt. I think the grant must be held to have been made for the general purposes of the Mutt."

They thus concur with the first Court that there was no "specific trust" which was the foundation of the Plaintiff's case. But after examining some of the judgments of their own Court, they apparently felt constrained to hold that the decision of this Board in Ram Parkash Das v. Anand Das (1) had crystallised the law on the subject, and definitely declared the Mohant to be a "trustee." It is to be observed that in that case the decision related to the office of Mohant, but in the course of their judgment their Lordships conceived it desirable to indicate inter alia what upon the evidence of the usages and customs applicable to the institution with which they were dealing, and similar institutions, were the duties and obligations attached to the office of superior; and they used the term "trustee" in a general sense, as in previous decisions of the Board, by way of a compendious expression to convey a general conception of those obligations. They did not attempt to define the term or to hold that the word in its specific sense is applicable to the laws and usages of the country. As pointed out by their predecessors in Greedhari Doss v. Nundhissore Doss (2) "The only law as to these Mohants and their functions and duties is to be found in custom and practice, which is to be proved by testimony." Generally speaking, however, the duties and obligations resting on the superior indicated in Ram Parkash Das v. Anand Das (1) do not seem to vary. In this particular institution the position of the Matathipathe in relation to the Mutt was clearly established by testimony and concurrently found by both Courts. But the learned Judges misapprehended their Lordships' judgment and proceeded to hold that as Srinivasa who granted the permanent lease was a "trustee," his act fell under Art. 134. To this article their Lordships will presently refer. Before doing so, however, they consider it necessary to observe that there are two systems of law in force in India, both self-contained and both wholly independent of each other, and wholly independent of foreign and outside legal conceptions. In each there are well-recognised rules relating to their religious and charitable institutions. From the year 1774 the Legislature, British and Indian, has affirmed time after time the absolute enjoyment of their laws and customs so far as they are not in conflict with the statutory laws, by Hindus and Mahomedans. It would, in their Lordships' opinion, be a serious inroad into their rights if the rules of the Hindu and Mahomedan laws were to be construed with the light of legal conceptions borrowed from abroad, unless perhaps where they are absolutely, so to speak, in pari materia. The vice of this method of construction by analogy is well illustrated in the case of Vidyapurna Swami v. Vidyavidhi Swami (3), where a Mohant's position was attempted to be explained by comparing it with that of a bishop and of a beneficed clergyman in England under the ecclesiastical law. It was criticised, and rightly, in their Lordships' opinion, in the subsequent case, which arose also in the Madras High Court, of Kailasam Pillai v. Naturaja Thambiran (4). To this judgment their Lordships will have to refer further later on.

It is also to be remembered that a "trust" in the sense in which the expression is used in English law, is unknown in the Hindu system, pure and simple. J. C. Ghose, "Hindu Law," p. 276. Hindu piety found expression in gifts to idols and images consecrated and installed in temples, to religious institutions of every kind, and for all purposes considered meritorious in the Hindu social and religious system; to Brahmins, Goswamis, sanyasis, etc.. When the gift was to a holy person, it carried with it in terms or by usage and custom certain obligations. Under the Hindu law the image of a deity of the Hindu pantheon is, as has been aptly called, a "juristic entity," vested with the capacity of receiving gifts and holding property. Religious institutions, known under different names, are regarded as possessing the same "juristic" capacity, and gifts are made to them eo nomine. In many cases in Southern India, especially where the diffusion of Aryan Brahmanism was essential for bringing the Dravidian peoples under the religious rule of the Hindu system, colleges and monasteries under the names of Mutt were founded under spiritual teachers of recognised sanctity. These men had and have ample discretion in the application of the funds of the institution, but always subject to certain obligations and duties, equally governed by custom and usage. When the gift is directly to an idol or a temple, the seisin to complete the gift is necessarily effected by human agency. Called by whatever name, he is only the manager and custodian of the idol or the institution. In almost every case he is given the right to a part of the usufruct, the mode of enjoyment and the amount of the usufruct depending again on usage and custom. In no case was the property conveyed to or vested in him, nor is he a "trustee" in the English sense of the term, although in view of the obligations and duties resting on him, he is answerable as a trustee in the general sense for mal-administration.

The conception of a trust apart from a gift was introduced in India with the establishment of Moslem rule. And it is for this reason that in many documents of later times in parts of the country where Mahomedan influence has been predominant, such as Upper India and the Carnatic, the expression wakf is used to express dedication.

But the Mahomedan law relating to trusts differs fundamentally from the English law. It owes its origin to a rule laid down by the Prophet of Islam; and means "the tying up of property in the ownership of God the Almighty and the devotion of the profits for the benefit of human beings." When once it is declared that a particular property is wakf, or any such expression is used as implies wakf, or the tenor of the document shows, as in the case of Jewan Doss Sahu v. Shah Kubeer-uddin (5), that a dedication to pious or charitable purposes is meant, the right of the wakf is extinguished and the ownership is transferred to the Almighty. The donor may name any meritorious object as the recipient of the benefit. The manager of the wakf is the Mutwalli, the governor, superintendent, or curator. In Jewan Doss Sahu's case (5), the Judicial Committee call him "procurator." It related to a Khānkāh, a Mahomedan institution analogous in many respects to a Muti where Hindu religious instruction is dispensed. The head of these Khānkāhs, which exist in large numbers in India, is called a sajjāda-nashīn. He is the teacher of religious doctrines and rules of life, and the manager of the institution and the administrator of its charities, and has in most cases a larger interest in the usufruct than an ordinary Mutwalli. But neither the sajjāda-nashīn nor the Mutwalli has any

It was in view of this fundamental difference between the juridical conceptions on which the English law relating to trusts is based, and those which form the foundations of the Hindu and the Mahomedan systems that the Indian Legislature in enacting the Indian Trusts Act (II of 1882) deliberately exempted from its scope, the rules of law applicable to wakf, and Hindu religious endowments. Sec. 1 of that Act, after declaring when it was to come into force and the areas over which it should extend "in the first instance," lays down, "but nothing herein contained affects the rules of Mahomedan law as to wakf, or the mutual relations of the members of an undivided family as determined by any customary or personal law, or applies to public or private religious or charitable endowments" Sec. 3 of the Act gives a definition of the word "trust" in terms familiar to English lawyers. It says:—

"A 'trust' is an obligation annexed to the ownership of property, and arising out of a confidence reposed in and accepted by the owner, or declared and accepted by him, for the benefit of another, or of another and the owner; the person who reposes or declares the confidence is called the 'author of the trust'; the person who accepts the confidence is called the 'trustee'; the person for whose benefit the confidence is accepted is called the 'beneficiary'; the subject-matter of the trust is called 'trust-property' or 'trust-money'; the 'beneficial interest' or 'interest' of the beneficiary is his right against the trustee as owner of the trust-property; and the instrument, if any, by which the trust is declared is called the 'instrument of trust.'"

In this connection it may be observed that in the case of Muhammad Rustam Ali

v. Mushtag Husain (6), the dedication was of specific property created by an instrument called a "trustee-namah." Lord Buckmaster, delivering the judgment of the Board, dealt thus with the objection as to the validity of the document :—

"It is argued," said the noble lord, "that the 'trustee-namah' must have dealt with an interest in immoveable property, for otherwise the trustees could have no right to maintain the suit; and such an argument at first sight makes a strong appeal to those who are accustomed to administer the English law with regard to trustees. It needs, however, but a slight examination to show that the argument depends for its validity upon the assumption that the trustees of the wakf-nama in the present case stand in the same relation to the trust that trustees to whom property had been validly assigned would stand over here. Such is not the case. The wakf-nama itself does not purport to assign property to trustees."

In 1810 in the Bengal Presidency, and in 1817 in the Madras Presidency, the British Government had assumed control of all the public endowments and benefactions, Hindu and Mahomedan, and placed them under the charge of the respective Boards of Revenue. In 1863, under certain influences to which it is unnecessary to refer, the Government considered it expedient to divest itself of the charge and control of these institutions, and to place them under the management of their own respective creeds. With this object, Act XX of 1863 was enacted; a system of Committees was devised to whom were transferred the powers vested in Government for the appointment of "managers, trustees and superintendents"; rules were enacted to ensure proper management and to empower the superior Court in the District to take cognisance of allegations of misfeasance against the managing authority. Their Lordships are not giving a summary of the Act, but indicating only its general features. The Act contains no definition of the word "trustee"; it uses indifferently and indiscriminately the terms "manager, trustee or superintendent," clearly showing that the expressions were used to connote one and the same idea of management. After the enactment of 1863, the Committees, to whom the endowments were transferred, were vested, generally speaking, with the same powers as the Government had possessed before in respect of the appointment of "managers, trustees or superintendents."

Art. 134 of the 1st Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) is in these terms :— "To recover possession of immoveable property conveyed or bequeathed in trust or mortgaged and afterwards transferred by the trustee or mortgagee for valuable consideration," the period prescribed for the institution of the suit is twelve years "from the date of transfer." In the old Act XV of 1877 the words were "purchased from the trustee or mortgagee." The alteration was made with the object of including permanent leases in transactions of the character contemplated in the article.

Art. 134 is, as pointed out in Abhiram Goswami's case (7), controlled by sec. 10 of the Limitation Act, which runs thus :—

"Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, no suit against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose, or against his legal representatives or assigns (not being assigns for valuable consideration), for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property, or the proceeds thereof, or for an account of such property or proceeds, shall be barred by any length of time."

The language of sec. 10 gives the clue to the meaning and applicability of Art.

SRI VIDYA VARUTHI THEKTHA SWAMICAL v. BALUSAMI AYYAR.

134. It clearly shows that the article refers to cases of specific trust, and relates to property "conveyed in trust." Neither under the Hindu law nor in the Mahomedan system is any property "conveyed" to a shebait or a mutwalli, in the case of a dedication. Nor is any property vested in him; whatever property he holds for the idol or the institution he holds as manager with certain beneficial interests regulated by custom and usage. Under the Mahomedan law, the moment a wakf is created all rights of property pass out of the wakif, and vest in God Almighty. The curator, whether called mutwalli or Sajjudanashin, or by any other name, is merely a manager. He is certainly not a "trustee" as understood in the English system.

In Sammantha Pandana v. Sellapa Chetti (8), the position of the superior in relation to the properties of the Mutt was laid down in terms which have an important bearing on the present case. The learned Judges say there:—

"The property is in fact attached to the office and passes by inheritance to no one who does not fill the office. It is in a certain sense trust property; it is devoted to the maintenance of the establishment, but the superior has large dominion over it, and is not accountable for its management nor for the expenditure of the income, provided he does not apply it to any purpose other than what may fairly be regarded as in furtherance of the objects of the institution. Acting for the whole institution he may contract debts for purposes connected with his mattam, and debts so contracted might be recovered from the mattam property and would devolve as a liability on his successor to the extent of the assets received by him."

The origin and nature of these Mutts were again considered at great length in a case which arose in the same Court in 1886. In this case [Gyana-Sambandha

v. Kandasami (9)], the learned Judge pronounced that the head of the institution held the mattam under his charge, and its endowment in trust for the maintenance of the Mutt, for his own support, for that of his disciples, and for the performance of religious and other charities in connection therewith according to usage. An almost identical question came up for consideration in 1904 in Vidyapurna v. Vidyavidhi (3) already referred to. In this case the learned Judges, after an elaborate examination of English institutions which they conceived to be analogous to Hindu Mutts, came to the conclusion that whilst a dharma-karta of a temple who has specific duties to perform might be regarded as a trustee, the superior of a Mutt is not a trustee but a "life-tenant."

The same question in another form came up again for consideration in 1909 before a Divisional Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Kailasam Pillai v. Nataraja Thambiran (1). The learned Judges before whom the point arose considered that the view taken in Vidyapurna v. Vidyavidhi (3) was in conflict with that propounded in the two earlier cases [Sammantha v. Sellapa (8) and Gyana-Sambandha v. Kandasami (9)] and referred the question to a Full Bench. The reference was in these terms:—"Does the head of a Mutt hold the properties constituting its endowment as a life-tenant or as a trustee?"

"I think, then, that it cannot be predicated of the head of a Mutt, as such, that he holds the properties constituting its endowments as a life-tenant or as a trustee. The incidents attaching to the properties depend in each case upon the conditions on which they were given, or which may be inferred from the long-continued and well-established usage and custom of the institution in respect thereto.

Mr. Justice Wallis substantially agreed in this view.

Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair pointed out that in the case of these Muttis:—

“Any surplus that remains in the hands of the Pandara Sannadhi, he is expected to utilise for the spiritual advancement of himself, his disciples or of the people. But his discretion in this matter is unfettered. He is not accountable to anyone and he is not bound to utilise the surplus. He may leave it to accumulate.”

And he further added, “It is also true in my opinion that he is under a legal obligation to maintain the Mutt, to support the disciples and to perform certain ceremonies which are indispensable. That will be only a charge on the income in his hands and does not show that the surplus is not at his disposal.” In the result, he was of opinion “that in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the Pandara Sannadhi (the superior) as such is not a trustee. He is not also a life-tenant for the reasons already stated.” All three Judges agreed in thinking that if any specific property was specifically entrusted to the head for specific purposes he might be regarded a “trustee” with regard to that property; but that in the absence of any such evidence the superior was not a trustee in respect of any part of the endowment.

The point came up for discussion again in a concrete form in 1913 in Muthusamiar v. Sreemethanithi (10), where the exact point for decision was the question of limitation. The facts which gave rise to the litigation were almost identical with the present case before their Lordships, with this difference, that the suit there was brought by the head of the Mutt to recover possession of the leased properties.

Mr. Justice Miller states thus the question for determination:—

“The principal question, a question which arises in both the appeals, is whether the suit is barred by limitation. It is conceded for the Appellants that the lease is in excess of the powers of the matathipathe, and their contention is that the suit is barred because limitation must run from the date of the alienation in 1872, the lease being void, or at the latest from the death of Sukgnana Nidhi Swamiar in 1890.”

The learned Judges held in substance that there was no specific trust, that the properties were given or endowed generally for the performance of the worship of the deities in the Mutt and other attendant duties and for the support of the superior and his disciples; that a lease granted by him was valid for his life, and if adopted by his successor would endure during his term of office; but neither the original alienation nor the subsequent adoption would create a bar by adverse possession.

These cases deal exclusively with the position of the superior of a Mutt in relation to its endowment. But there are some others respecting the powers of the managers of religious institutions generally. In Mahomed v. Ganapati (11) a lease was granted by the dharmakarta of a temple; and the suit to recover the leased lands was brought by his successor in office. The defence was limitation, running from the date of alienation. Mr. Justice Sheppard (Muthusami Ayyar, J. concurring) held as follows:—

“In the present case, though the Plaintiff may in point of time have succeeded the dharmakarta who made the alienation, he does not derive his title from that dharmakarta and is, therefore, not bound by his acts. Subject to the law of limitation, the successive holders of an office, enjoying for life the property attached to it, are at liberty to question the dispositions made by their predecessors [Papaya v. Romanu (a), Jamal Sahib v. Muryaya Swami (b) and Modho Kooery v. Tekait Ram Chunder Singh (c)] and it is equally clear that time runs against the successor who challenges his predecessor's disposition, not from the date of the disposition, but from the date of the predecessor's death, when only the successor became entitled to possession. Accordingly Raman Pujari having died so recently as 1885, the Plaintiff's suit cannot be barred by limitation."

This was followed in Sathianama Bharati v. Sarvanabagi Ammal (12). In this case the superior is called the "manager."

In Chockalingam Pillai v. Mayandi Chettiar (13) it was conceded that "the manager for the time being had no power to make a permanent alienation of temple property in the absence of proved necessity for the alienation." But from the long lapse of time between the alienation and the challenge of its validity, coupled with other circumstances, the learned Judges came to the conclusion that necessity may reasonably be presumed.

From the above review of the general law relating to Hindu and Mahommedan pious institutions it would prima facie follow that an alienation by a manager or superior by whatever name called cannot be treated as the act of a "trustee" to whom property has been "conveyed in trust" and who by virtue thereof has the capacity vested in him which is possessed by a "trustee" in the English law. Of course, a Hindu or a Mahommedan may "convey in trust" a specific property to a particular individual for a specific and definite purpose, and place himself expressly under the English law when the person to whom the legal ownership is transferred would become a trustee in the specific sense of the term.

But the Respondents rely on three decisions of the Indian Courts in support of their contention that persons holding properties generally for Hindu and Mahommedan religious purposes are to be treated as "trustees." The first is a decision of the Bombay High Court in Dattagiri v. Dattatraya (14). The facts of that case were peculiar. The Mutt there was an old one and the dedication was recognised and confirmed by the Mahratta Government. The village was granted to a holy ascetic for the maintenance of a charity attached to the Mutt; the governance went by succession to the disciples of the guru (the spiritual preceptor or head). In 1871 the village was divided between two disciples, Shivgiri and Shankargiri, in equal moieties, and each held his half separately from the other. In the same year one of them, Shankargiri, sold the lands in dispute to the Defendant. In 1897 Shankargiri obtained a Sanad from Government under Act II of 1863 declaring him to be the absolute owner of his share. He died in August 1897, after appointing the Plaintiff as his successor, who in 1898 brought an action to recover possession of the alienated lands on the ground that Shankargiri had no power to alienate them as they were dedicated property. The defence was firstly that the Sanad had altered the character of the property, and secondly that the suit was barred. The lower Appellate Court found that the lands in suit were private alienable property and that consequently the action was barred. The first finding was strongly challenged by the Plaintiff's counsel on second appeal. He contended that as it was dedicated property its holders from time to time "could not allow the Government to treat it as private property." The learned Judges of the High Court refrained from deciding that point; and confined their attention solely to the question of limitation. They proceeded to deal with the case, as they expressly say, "on the hypothesis that the lands in suit were held by Shivgiri and Shankargiri as heads of the Mutt and as trustees therefor." On that hypothesis the conclusion at which they arrived was inevitable. The position of the head of the Mutt in relation to its property under the Hindu law, custom and practice, was not considered; he was simply assumed to be a trustee. The pith of the judgment consists in the following words:—"We have then here a suit to recover possession of immoveable property conveyed in trust and afterwards purchased from the trustee for a valuable consideration." "Conveyed in trust" is hardly the right expression to apply to gifts of lands or other property for the general purposes of a Hindu religious or pious institution. The learned Judges relied on the two decisions of the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts to which their Lordships will presently refer. The case, however, was practically decided on the exposition of the law in the case of St. Mary Magdalen, Oxford v. The Attorney-General (15). With respect to it they say as follows:—

"In further support of this conclusion we would also refer to the already cited case of St. Mary Magdalen, Oxford v. The Attorney-General (15) for though it is a decision on the English statute, still it contains many points of resemblance to the present, and furnishes us with the clearest exposition of the law applicable to cases of this class. We propose to refer to that case in some detail, as it probably is not within the reach of most mofussil Courts in this Presidency."

24 and 25, of Will. IV c. 27, and their add "the section (sec. 25), it will be seen, corresponds more or less with our Art. 184 and 144 and sec. 10 of the Limitation Act."

Speaking with respect, it seems to their Lordships that the distinction between a specific trust and a trust for general pious or religious purposes under the Hindu and Mahommedan law was overlooked, and the case was decided on analogies drawn from English law inapplicable in the main to Hindu and Mahommedan institutions. That case can hardly be treated as authority in the decision of the present controversy.

The case of Narayan v. Shri Rumchandra (16) only followed the view expressed in Dattagiri v. Dattatraya (14). But the facts, when examined, show a marked difference in the legal position of the parties in the two cases. The mulgeni lease under which the Defendant claimed title was granted in 1845, and the suit to set it aside was brought somewhere in 1899. Repeated attempts were made by successive managers of the temple to obtain enhancement of rent, but the suits were invariably withdrawn. There was thus clear acquiescence on the part of successive managers in the validity of the transaction. The case fell within the principle of Chockahngam Pillai v. Mayandi Chettiar (13) and might well have been decided without disturbance of Hindu law or usage.

The second decision relied upon in support of the Respondents' contention is the case of Behari Lall v. Mahammad Muttaki (17) which related to a Mahommedan "shrine." The origin and history of these "shrines" or durgahs, as they are called, is described compendiously in the judgment in Piran Bibi v. Abdul Karim (18):—

"The sajjadanashin has certain spiritual functions to perform. He is not only a mutwalli but also a spiritual preceptor. He is the curator of the durgah where his ancestor is buried, and in him is supposed to continue the spiritual line (silsilla). As is well known, these durgahs are the tombs of celebrated dervishes, who in their lifetime were regarded as saints. Some of these men had established khankahs where they lived and their disciples congregated. Many of them never rose to the importance of a khankah, and when they died their mausolea became shrines or durgahs. These dervishes professed esoteric doctrine and distinct systems of initiation. . . . The preceptor is called the pir, the disciple the murid. On the death of the pir his successor assumes the privilege of initiating the disciples into the mysteries of dervishism or sufism. This privilege of initiation, of making murids, of imparting to them spiritual knowledge, is one of the functions which the sajjadanashin performs or is supposed to perform. The endowment is maintained by grants of land to the shrines by pious Moslems. The head of the institution, like that of a khankah, is called a sajjadanashin. The governance (touliat) of the endowment is in his hands; he is a mutwalli, with the duty of imparting spiritual instruction to those who seek it. The property of the 'shrine' is wakf 'tried up in the ownership of God.'"

The appointment of the sajjadanashin is regulated by usage and practice. This is referred to in the same judgment:—

"Upon the death of the last incumbent, generally on the day of what is called the sium or teja ceremony (performed on the third day after his decease), the fakirs and murids of the durgah assisted by the heads of neighbouring durgahs, instal a competent person on the guddi; generally the person chosen is the son of the deceased or somebody nominated by him, for his nomination is supposed to carry the guarantee that the nominee knows the precepts which he is to communicate to the disciples. In some instances the nomination takes the shape of a formal installation by the electoral body, so to speak, during the lifetime of the incumbent."

The duties in connection with the "shrine," apart from giving spiritual instruction, consist in the due observance of the annual ceremonies at the tomb of the Saint, the distribution of charity at fasts and festivals, the celebration of the birthday of the Prophet, and the performance of other rites and ceremonials prescribed either by the religious law or by usage and practice. Ordinarily speaking, the sajjadanashin has a larger right in the surplus income than a mutwalli, for so long as he does not spend it in wicked living or in objects wholly alien to his office, he, like the Mohant of a Hindu Mutt, has full power of disposition over it.

In Behari Lall v. Mahammad Muttaki (17), the Plaintiff as sajjadanashin sued to set aside certain mortgages executed by his predecessor in office, and dated his cause of action from the time he was appointed as sajjadanashin. The learned Judges, on a misconception of the rules of the Mahommedan law and of the judgment of their Lordships in Jewan Dass Sahod v. Shah Kubeeruddeen (5), held that the sajjadanashin was a "trustee." One Judge held that the suit was barred either under Art. 134 or Art. 144; the two others held that Art. 134 was applicable as the mortgages were created by a "trustee."

Their Lordships have to differ from this conclusion. In their opinion this case was not, in view of the considerations set forth above, correctly decided.

As regards the third case, Nilmony Singh v. Jagabandhu Roy (19), the suit was brought by the Plaintiff as the shebait of a Hindu idol to set aside a dur-mokurrari pottah, executed in respect of certain of the debuttar lands by two ladies who acted as *shebait*s during his minority. He alleged that he became entitled to sue for possession of the alienated lands on his appointment to the office of shebait by a decree of the Court. The material defence was that the claim was barred. It should be observed that the dur-mokurrari was created in 1857 and the suit was brought after 1888. In the judgment of the High Court the words shebait and trustee are used as synonymous and convertible terms; the expression is always "shebait or trustee." Probably the fact that the shebait has duties and obligations in connection with the dedication, influenced the employment of the word "trustee" in a general sense. Mr. Mayne uses the expression in the same general sense to connote the same idea. That the learned Judge did not regard the shebait as a trustee in the specific sense may be inferred from his indecisive conclusion as to the application of Art. 134 to the Plaintiff's claim. It is quite clear, however, that the legal position of a shebait is quite different from that of a trustee to whom specific property is "conveyed" on a specific trust. In Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (20), where the question for determination was whether a particular transaction challenged as invalid had been entered into for such necessity as would make it binding on the dedication, Sir Montague E. Smith, in delivering the judgment of the Board, scrupulously avoided the use of the confusing word "trustee." Dealing with the powers of the shebait, he said as follows:—

"But notwithstanding that property devoted to religious purposes is, as a rule, inalienable, it is in their Lordships' opinion competent for the shebait of property dedicated to the worship of an idol, in the capacity as shebait and manager of the estate, to incur debts and borrow money for the proper expenses of keeping up the religious worship, repairing the temples or other possessions of the idol, defending hostile litigious attacks and other like objects. The power, however, to incur such debts must be measured by the existing necessity for incurring them. The authority of the shebait of an idol's estate would appear to be in this respect analogous to that of the manager for an infant heir as defined in a judgment of this Committee delivered by Knight Bruce, L. J.

"It is only in an ideal sense that property can be said to belong to an idol, the possession and management of it must, in the nature of things, be entrusted to some person as shebait or manager. It would seem to follow that the person so entrusted must of necessity be empowered to do whatever may be required for the service of the idol and for the benefit and preservation of its property at least to as great a degree as the manager of an infant heir. If this were not so the estate of the idol might be destroyed or wasted and its worship discontinued for want of the necessary funds to preserve and maintain them."

The identical question relating to the powers and position of a shebait was again before the Board in the case of Abhiram Goswami's case (7) already referred to. With regard to the powers of the shebait, their Lordships say as follows:—

"The second question is whether, this being so, the Mohant had power to grant a mokurrari pottah of the Mouzah. It is well settled law that the power of the Mohant to alienate debuttar property is, like the power of the manager for an infant heir, limited to cases of unavoidable necessity: Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand (20). In the case of Konwur Dooryanath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen (21) a mokurrari pottah of debuttar lands was supported on 'the ground that it was granted in consideration of money said to be required for the repair and completion of a temple, for which no other funds could be obtained. But the general rule is that laid down in the case of Maharanees Shibessouree Debia v. Mothooranath Acharjo (22), that apart from such necessity 'to create a new and fixed rent for all time, though adequate at the time, in lieu of giving the endowment the benefit of an augmentation of a variable rent from time to time, would be a breach of duty' in the Mobant. There is no allegation that there were any special circumstances of necessity in this case to justify the grant of the pottah of 1860, which on the most favourable construction enured only for the lifetime of the grantor, Pranananda, who died in 1891, or of the pottah of 1896, which, at best, could only be deemed operative during the lifetime of Raghubananda, who died in 1900."

The question came up again for consideration by the Board in the case of Palaniappa Chetty v. Deivasikanony Pandara (23). The suit was instituted by the head of a Mutt to recover possession of certain land which formed part of the endowment of a Hindu temple attached to the Mutt, and had been granted by his predecessor to the Defendant by a perpetual rent-free lease in consideration of a small sum of money paid at the time. The contention in that case was that the alienation was for the benefit of the institution; that contention was overruled, and the decision proceeded on the basis that the shebait was only a manager. Lord Atkinson, delivering the judgment of the Board, further added:—

"Three authorities have been cited which establish that it is a breach of duty on the part of a shebait, unless constrained thereto by unavoidable necessity, to grant a lease in perpetuity of debuttar lands at a fixed rent, however adequate that rent may be at the time of granting, by reason of the fact that by this means the debuttar estate is deprived of the chance it would have, if the rent were variable, of deriving benefit from the enhancement in value in the future of the lands leased."

In that case the leased lands were situated in the street of a village; here they are in the town of Madura.

Reverting then to the judgment in Nilmony Singh v. Jagabandhu Roy (19), their Lordships think that the expression "trustee" was loosely and, speaking with respect, wrongly applied to the shebait in order to bring the case under Art. 134. It is to be observed that in none of the three cases was there any examination of the laws and usages governing the respective institutions, or of the Madras decisions, in which the subject had been elaborately considered.

In the present case the character of the endowment in relation to the superior is proved beyond contradiction. It has been found concurrently by both the Courts in India that the endowment was held by the Defendant No. 26 for the general purposes of the institution. Considerable stress was laid on behalf of the Respondents on the entry in the Inam Register that the dedication was for a specific purpose, viz., the worship of the idol. The Inam proceedings did not create any dedication. They were instituted simply with the object of investigating titles to hold lands revenue-free as belonging to valid endowments. The gifts were made long before the Inam proceedings by the Hindu kings or chiefs who then held the country. The purposes of the dedication must therefore be gathered from established usage and practice, and that has been found by the Courts in India. Again, "valuable consideration" forms the essence of both sec. 10 of the Limitation Act and of Art. 134 of the 2nd Schedule. Even if this were a specific trust, which it is not, it would be ridiculous to hold that the rent reserved in the grant to the second Plaintiff was "valuable consideration."

In the Courts below the Plaintiffs rested their claim mainly, if not entirely, on Art. 134. Before the Board an alternative argument has been advanced. It is contended that the second Plaintiff acquired the title he is seeking to establish by twelve years' adverse possession under Art. 144. That article declares that for a suit "for possession of immovable property or any interest therein not hereby (i.e., by the schedule) otherwise specially provided for" the period of limitation is twelve years from the date when the possession of the Defendant became adverse to the Plaintiff. In view of the argument it is necessary to discover when, according to the Plaintiff, his adverse possession began. He was let into possession by Mohant No. 1 under a lease which purported to be a permanent lease, but which under the law could endure only for the grantor's life-time. According to the well settled law of India (apart from the question of necessity which does not here arise) a Mohant is incompetent to create any interest in respect of the Mutt property to endure beyond his life. With regard to Mohant No. 2, he was vested with a power similarly limited. He permitted the Plaintiff to continue in possession and received the rent during his life. Such receipt was with the knowledge which must be imputed to him that the tenancy created by his predecessor ended with his predecessor's life, and can therefore only be properly referable to a new tenancy created by himself. It was within his power to continue such tenancy during his life, and in these circumstances the proper inference is that it was so continued, and consequently the possession never became adverse until his death.

There is one other point which deserves notice. The administration of the second Mohant lasted until 1906. In 1905, however, the Mutt went under the management of the Dewan of the Mysore State, under a power of attorney granted by the Mohant and his successor, who may conveniently be designated as Mohant No. 3. Certain persons to whom the second Plaintiff had sub-leased the lands for ten years thereupon obtained from the Dewan during the currency of their term a lease for seventeen years. It is a direct lease from the Dewan as holder of a power of attorney from Mohant No. 3. The lessees thereunder have been in possession for some years prior to this suit, and the object of the present action is not to keep the Plaintiff in possession, but to eject these possessors, who hold under a title proceeding from the Dewan and Mohant No. 3, and to upset the act of administration of Mohant No. 3, on the ground of rights acquired adversely to the Mutt by lapse of time during the incumbency of Mohant No. 2. For the foregoing reasons their Lordships are of opinion that neither Art. 134 nor Art. 144 applies to this case; that the Plaintiffs have acquired no title by adverse possession under either of those articles; that the judgment and decree of the High Court of Madras must therefore be reversed, and the order of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the suit restored with costs here and of the Appellate Court.

GOVERNMENT APP. No. 2 OF 1921.

NEWBOULD, J. SUPERINTENDENT AND SUBHAWARDY, J. REMEMBRANCE OF LEGAL AFFAIRS,
 Appellant,
 Heard, 24 and v.
 29, June. SHYAM SUNDAR Judgment, 12, July. BHUMI and ors., Accused, Respondents.

Jury, misdirection to—Verdict when should be interfered with—Test whether misdirection occasioned failure of justice.

The accused were found not guilty by the unanimous verdict of the jury and acquitted by the Sessions Judge. On appeal by the Local Government against the acquittal on the ground of misdirection in the Judge's charge to the jury:

Held—That though there was misdirection this did not justify a reversal of the verdict of the jury unless the misdirection in fact occasioned a failure of justice.

The High Court not being prepared to hold that the jury's verdict was due to the misdirection in the charge and that apart from this they would not have come to the same conclusion, the acquittal was not disturbed.

This was an appeal preferred on the 18th August 1921 against an order of the Sessions Judge of Bankura, dated the 21st December 1920, acquitting the Respondents who were charged with offences under secs. 395 and 120, I. P. C.

The material portion of the heads of charge to the jury as stated by the Sessions Judge are as follows:—

“The accused have been charged with having conspired together on the 21st of August last to commit a dacoity in the house of one Abinash Pan of village Jarka, police station Taldangra within this district. The first ten have further been charged with having committed a dacoity in the house of that Abinash Pan on the 23rd of August last at about 2 A.M., in pursuance of that conspiracy.

The defence was that the accused were not aware of any dacoity in the house of Abinash Pan, that they did not conspire together to commit any dacoity and that they were not in any way concerned in the dacoity complained of.

You will have to decide if there was any dacoity or conspiracy as alleged and if so whether the present accused or any of them were or was concerned in the same.

Sec. 120 B, simply provides what punishment should be awarded if a man is found guilty of conspiring with others to commit an offence and if in pursuance of that conspiracy that offence is committed. In this case there is no serious dispute that a dacoity took place in the house of Abinash Pan on the date and at about the time mentioned by the prosecution. But as the existence of the dacoity was not admitted you will have to decide on the evidence before you if there was really such a dacoity. About the existence of the dacoity you have the evidence of the approver Bharat. I shall have occasion hereafter to refer to his reliability. In this connection you have also the depositions of some of the inmates of the house which is alleged to have been looted. They are Abinash Pan, his brother Joy and their wives. There are also the statements of two of the neighbours who as they say came to the scene of occurrence shortly after it had happened, who were told then about the occurrence and who saw the condition of the house. The investigating Sub-Inspector of Police also swears about what he saw when he visited the locality next night. The signs of injuries on the persons of Abinash and Joy were also shown just after the occurrence as some of the witnesses deposed and the injuries were medically examined.
 From these you will have to decide if there was the dacoity. If on this evidence you can reasonably conclude that there was a theft in the house of Abinash on that particular night, that the thieves numbered five or more and that the thieves for the purpose of the theft used force and violence to some of the inmates of the house, you can well find that as a matter of fact there was a dacoity in the house of Abinash on that date.

The most important thing for you to decide would be if the accused or any of them were or was concerned in the dacoity, if any.

By far, the most important piece of evidence in this connection is the deposition of the approver Bharat. He swears that all the accused excepting Kenaram took part in the said dacoity. A good deal of caution is necessary in weighing his evidence. Settled case law is that it is very unsafe to rely on an approver's statement without sufficient and material corroboration. Decision of cases on this point was based on sec. 114 of the Indian Evidence Act. The reasons for those decisions are not far to seek. These approvers are generally of dangerous character. It is natural to expect that their veracity would be doubtful. They come upon a promise of pardon. In coming to the conclusion as to if you should rely on him you should take into account the following among others. (Jury advised as to the approver's evidence).

I should tell you that if you convict the accused simply relying on the statement of the approver that would not be illegal but you should at the same time remember that eminent Judges have constantly cautioned you not to convict relying simply on the uncorroborated statement of the approver.

If you need any corroboration before relying on the approver that corroboration needs be about existence of the dacoity and about the complicity of the present accused in the same.

I have said already that the existence of the dacoity was not seriously disputed before you and that the complainant, his brother Joy, their wives Damini and Naba Dasi, and Gati Pan swore to its existence and the Daroga who investigated into the case saw the condition of the house the next night.

The most important corroboration of the approver's story as to the complicity of the accused was furnished by the find of some articles said to have been found stolen in the houses of some of the accused.

By the searches nothing incriminating was found in the houses of the accused Meha Sardar, Bhumiij Gour Das Baisnab, Kenaram Das Baisnab and the approver Bharat.

The accused claimed the things found on their respective houses as their own. You should consider if the articles found by the searches have been proved to belong to the complainant Abinash and his brother Joy. The burden of proof about this point is clearly on the prosecution and the prosecution is bound to make out by satisfactory and reliable evidence that the articles belonged to the complainant before it can urge you to find that the searches made gave materials to corroborate the story of the approver, that these accused or some of the accused were concerned in that dacoity. First you should consider if the articles are identifiable things at all. Next thing you should consider if the evidence of identification is such as can reasonably be relied on. The things identified may be divided into two groups—one group, it is alleged, belonged to Abinash and the other group to Joy. Abinash and Joy identified all the articles of both the groups. Damini, wife of Abinash, identified most of them. Naba

Dasi, wife of Joy, identified the articles which she said belonged to her. The father of Naba Dasi identified a shari and a red bordered dhuti which he said he made a gift of to his son-in-law. Abinash's father-in-law identified the pandiba which he said he made a gift of to his son-in-law. When these gifts were made and if it is likely that these father-in-laws would be able to identify the articles gifted away you should consider. One smith identified some toe-rings which he said he prepared for Naba Dasi at the instance of her. The evidence bearing on these points is pointed out and the attention of the Jury is drawn to the exhibits identified by each of the accused. In this connection you should bear in mind that two Deputy Magistrates held identification tests of Abinash and Joy. On the first day they did not or could not identify all the articles they identified the next day. The attention is drawn to the identification tests. It is the prosecution case that on the first day all the articles could not be identified as the test was held when there was not sufficient light. You should consider the plea. The officer who held first test says that identification by one of the brothers was finished before the evening and that there was sufficient light when the entire test was held. If you think that there is no sufficient or reliable evidence that the articles belonged to Abinash or that most of the articles identified are not sufficiently identifiable things, the evidence furnished by the searches would be of no avail to the prosecution. If you think that the identification is of doubtful character the result would be the same. If on the other hand you think that the things found have been sufficiently identified to belong to the complainant the evidence furnished by the search would be material corroboration of the approver's story as against those in whose houses the identified articles were found.

You should specially examine for yourselves the black bordered dhuti found in the house of Gobinda and the red bordered dhuti found in the house of Bekoo. The currency notes and the money found with the wife of Syam and batis were exhibited in the case in order to see if they could be honestly identified. All things found were shown to the jury one by one. The second piece of evidence of corroboration produced by the prosecution is the evidence of association. It is said that all the accused met together on the 5th of Bhadra in the house of the accused Bekoo where some of them dined there at noon. Some Mandals and two other witnesses were brought in to prove that. They could not say what talk took place there. They only saw the assemblage. The disputed dacoity was on the 7th. You should consider if these witnesses should be believed at all and if they are believed how far these statements go. Some of these accused are related as gurus and sisyas. It is in evidence that these gurus often meet their sisyas. If really they met the meeting might well be an innocent one. Approver in one part of his deposition had to say that the Mandals did not go there so long as he was there though in another part he meant to say something else. In the statement by Sriram about which I would say something more hereafter, there is absolutely no reference to this meeting. The evidence bearing on the point including that of Sudarsan Panda is pointed out. Some of these witnesses say that they remembered the date as a particular man died that day. You should consider if the man died that day.

There is the statement of choutidar that Bharat and Guiram met on the 6th at the hari of Guiram where Bharat dined that day. You should consider if you should believe that chonkidar on that point. Some evidence was adduced that some of the accused were not at home from 6th to 8th and that they were seen going out. You should consider that.

It is the prosecution case that Guiram and Bharat were seen by four sets of people when they were going from home to Jarka to join in the dacoity. We have the evidence of the four sets who it is alleged met and saw them. Their evidence is pointed out. You have seen Santal witnesses who, it is alleged, saw them to smoke shortly after the noon and who saw them just before dusk and some of whom could not give the month and the day in or on which they were deposing. You should specially consider if they would be able to identify the strangers whom they said they met. In this connection you have also the Logri set of whom one is Bhimbhuti Chakravarti. He is a Bhikshyabhai of the complainant and whose servant was first suspected and named. If you cannot believe them their evidence would not help the prosecution. If you believe them it would simply corroborate a part of the approver's story that these two, Bharat and Guiram went that day to the direction of the village Jarka where the dacoity was committed. These meetings would not implicate the other accused besides Guiram in the dacoity or in the attempt to commit it. The evidence bearing on these alleged meetings are pointed out.

It is said that Raicharan and Sriram were seen together begging rice and muri on the day of the dacoity in the morning in a village called Kesia. Dolgobinda and Jogendra swore to that. You should consider if you should believe them. Their evidence is pointed out. They said that they had seen Raicharan and Sriram on the date of the occurrence. In the morning of the dacoity it is said that Guiram and Raicharan purchased chira at Simla and in the afternoon Sriram is said to have purchased muri at Logri. The evidence on the point is shown to the jury. You should consider if you should believe the witnesses who swore to that begging and the purchase of chira and muri. In connection with the searches the circumstances under which the currency notes and monies were secured from Syam Sardar's wife, under which the saris were recovered from Nidhi, daughter of Nadiarchand and his baibahik Kailas and the circumstances under which two cloths were recovered from his son-in-law Chandra, the circumstances under which the batis were recovered from the son of Guiram and the circumstances under which the things were recovered from Sriram and Raicharan's bari and the bari of Haldhar should be carefully considered. The circumstances are pointed out to the jury.

Nidhi Dasi, daughter of Nadiarchand, accused and the son Gosta and wife of Guiram and Sibb, brother of Sriram complained of ill-treatment by the Police in connection with searches in the houses of those accused. They were examined by the prosecution but are connected with those accused. Gosta showed marks of injuries on his person. It is an admitted fact that Guiram's wife fainted during the search at her house and the Police Officers and the search witnesses tended her. The Police tried to explain it away by saying that she had hysteria fits which her son denied. They made statements against some who are most near and dear to them. It was alleged that one Kisan Singh, Constable with scars of small pox on his face brutally maltreated these witnesses. He was the Constable-Orderly of the investigating Inspector of Police. He was not brought in to deny the charge.

SUPERINTENDENT & REMEMBER. OF LEGAL AFFAIRS v. SHYAM SUNDAR BRUMJ.

You should consider all these things in order to see if there was maltreatment and if on that account these witnesses deposed in a particular way. (Evidence against each accused summed up).

Besides these against each there is the statement of the approver Bharat. I have said that it would be very unsafe though not illegal to rely on him without material and independent evidence.

In the next place you have the retracted confession of Sriram who implicated all excepting Haldar. This statement has very little value as a piece of evidence as against the maker. It is practically of no weight as against the accused even if it is free and voluntary. But you may consider it along with other evidence.

If you think that the statements of the approver and of Sriram were not free and voluntary but the outcome of threat, inducement or undue influence by the Police, I would ask you not to attach any importance to them. In order to judge if the statements are free and voluntary you should consider under what circumstances the statements were made. Some three statements were taken by the Police. As soon as Guiram was taken out of the Police control, he denied that his statements before the Police was true. The second man Sriram retracted his statement before the lower Court and pleaded violence as being the cause of the former statement. The third man Bharat stuck to his statement up to the last. He has got the pardon. He is of dangerous character according to his own statement. He gives out under what circumstances he made the statement. He says he became penitent. You should consider if you should believe him there or if he has suppressed the real facts under which he made the statement. They were arrested and were kept in the thana for over 15 hours. Even after the statement there was some delay in sending these people up.

Sriram and Bharat accused are enemies. Sriram was excommunicated by Bharat and others. Gour Das ceased to be the Guru of Bharat as he dined at Sriram's bari cooking his food. They do not go to each other's bari for the last one year. You should consider if they joined together to commit the dacoity.

Guiram was at home before 8-30 or 9 A.M. of the 8th Bhadra if you believe the Sub-Inspector of Schools who visited Sriram's School on that day. According to the statements of the approver and Sriram he was at Sewalkanda Jhor up to 10 or 12 A.M. If the Sub-Inspector's evidence is believed their story that he was at the Jhor must fall to the ground.

Guiram's School-register shows, as the public prosecutor admitted, that he was present on the 6th and 7th in his School. If his register is believed the prosecution story at the least so far as he is concerned must fail.

You should consider if it has been attempted to prove too much in connection with the onward and backward journey of Guiram and Bharat. It is the defence that some statements were extorted by the Police from some and that the evidence has been fashioned on that. You should consider that aspect of the case.

Some inmates of the house, eye-witnesses to the occurrence, made some statements to the Police which would go to show that the dacoits were the complainant's neighbours and that some of them were recognised by some of the inmates. The defence pleader replied upon those statements to show that some innocent people have been sent up by the Police. You should seriously consider that argument.

The evidence against each accused should be separately considered by you.

SUPERINTENDENT & REMEMBER. OF LEGAL AFFAIRS v. SHYAM SUNDAR BHUMI.

I have shown you what is the evidence against each. Simply from the fact that some of them are guilty it would not follow that they are all guilty.

You are the sole judges of facts. You should ignore my views on them if that does not accord with your views and if you think them unreasonable.

If you cannot believe the evidence you must acquit the accused. If on the evidence before you, you entertain reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused or some of them you should give that accused the benefit of that doubt. What is a reasonable doubt is explained to the jury and sec. 3 of the Evidence Act is referred to in this connection.

The statement of Sriram as placed before you by the Public Prosecutor—you should consider if that should displace in a manner the approver's story that he and Guiram went together afterwards on the 6th. The matter is a serious one. Utmost caution is necessary on your part to arrive at a true verdict.

In considering the evidence and the verdict you must take the law to be as explained by me. The attention of the jury is drawn to the questions of law involved in this case.

With these observations I would ask you to consider your verdict.

I have forgot to tell you one thing. Something was sought to be made out of finding of some notes and from the alleged attempt to cash some currency notes. The notes have not been identified to be stolen property. In the second place you should consider if the mistake of mismatching the half notes was detected, is it likely that the second attempt was made.

You should confine yourselves within the evidence adduced before you and should not be influenced by any outside considerations."

Mr. Orr and Babu Monindra Kumar Bose for the Appellant.

Babu Phanindra Nath Das for Respondents Nos. 1 to 5 and 8.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an appeal on behalf of the Local Government against the acquittal of eleven persons of whom all were charged with having conspired to commit dacoity and all but one were charged with having committed a dacoity. The trial took place before the Sessions Judge of Bankura and a jury. The jury returned a unanimous verdict of acquittal with which the learned Judge agreed. We are asked to reverse this verdict and order a retrial on the ground that there has been serious misdirection by the learned Sessions Judge in his charge to the jury. We accept the contention on behalf of the Crown that the learned Judge was not as impartial as he should have been in those portions of the charge in which he discussed allegations made on behalf of the defence against the investigating police officers. He did not point out to the jury, as he should have done, that the witnesses who accused the police were on their own showing untruthful as they were contradicting their statements made on oath before the committing Magistrate or that they were contradicted by other witnesses for the prosecution whose evidence deserved some consideration. As regards the more serious charge made against the police, that of illtreating two women there was positive misdirection. During the search of the house of the accused Guiram, his wife fainted. She was not examined as a witness but her son Goshita was allowed to depose that she said next day that she fainted because the police used force to her. This was hearsay and there is no legal evidence that Guiram's wife was ill-treated, while there is evidence to the contrary. But in his charge to the jury the learned Sessions Judge refers to this episode as if there was evidence to support the case for the defence on this point. Then as regards the woman Nidhi Dasi, daughter of the accused Nadiarchand, she resiled from the evidence she had given before the committing Magistrate, saying that she gave false evidence because she was ill-treated by the Daroga. There is however no evidence to support the suggestion that she was detached from her relations and kept fasting in a strange place for a night. The serious defect in the charge where it refers to the conduct of the police is that no distinction has been made between the suggestions put in cross-examination that are supported by evidence and those that are not and also that the attention of the jury has not been drawn to the direct evidence rebutting these suggestions.

But though there was this misdirection this would not justify the reversal of the verdict of the jury unless this misdirection has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. We have therefore examined the evidence and our conclusion after doing so is that we ought not to order a retrial. The case for the prosecution depends on the direct evidence of an accomplice and other evidence corroborating his story. The confession of the accomplice was more probably due to a hope of escaping by turning King's evidence than police oppression but even there the accomplice's story that he confessed through repentance is false. There are some improbable details in his story, for instance, he does not explain how the dacoits happened to meet on the night of the dacoity though the arrangement had been to meet the previous night. His evidence is such that it would require very strong corroboration before it could be acted on; in fact, the corroborative evidence would have to be almost sufficient for a conviction apart from the approver's evidence. This we do not find on the record. The most important evidence is as to the finding of certain property at the houses of various accused. But the effect of this evidence is seriously weakened by the unsatisfactory evidence of the identifying witnesses. They appear to have been ready to identify any article shown to them whether it was capable of identification or not. It is urged that there was misdirection in this respect as the jury were told that Abinash did not at the first test identification identify all the articles that he identified the second day. Though the written report of the Magistrate who held the second test identification shows that Abinash did not identify any article on the second day which he had not identified the first day, Abinash himself deposed that he and his brother Joy Ram identified some of the articles the first day and all on the second day. Whether this statement is true or false, it cannot be said that Abinash's identification is free from doubt. There is also evidence of association but this even if believed is not alone sufficient corroboration to support a conviction. One of the accused made a confession which he subsequently retracted. Though the learned Judge summed up for an acquittal he did not omit to tell the jury that they were judges of the facts and should form their own opinion. We are not prepared to hold that the jury's verdict was due to the misdirection in the charge and that apart from this they would not have come to the same conclusion.

We accordingly dismiss this appeal. The bail bonds of the accused are discharged.

 Judgment, 1, July. ors., Respondents.

Merger, doctrine of, if applied in mofussil before Transfer of Property Act—Merger, a question of intention—Acquisition of superior and inferior interests by joint Hindu family in the names of different individuals, to indicate intention to prevent merger.

Quære :—Whether prior to the Transfer of Property Act there was a law of merger applicable in the mofussil.

HIRENDRA NATH DUTT v. HARI MOHAN GHOSH (1) referred to.

Merger is not a thing which occurs ipso jure upon the acquisition of what, for the sake of a just generalisation, may be called the superior with the inferior right. The question to be settled in the application of the doctrine is, was such a coalescence of right meant to be accomplished as to extinguish that separation of title which the records contain?

CAPITAL AND COUNTIES BANK v. RHODES (2) and INGLE v. JENKINS (3) referred to.

The fact that acquisitions of the superior and inferior interests on behalf of a joint Hindu family have been made in the names of different members thereof may point to an intention to keep the two interests from merging.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 27th June 1916, of the High Court of Judicature at Patna, which affirmed a judgment and decree, dated the 20th August 1912, of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur.

The litigation related to a putni taluk

(1) 18 C. W. N. 860 (1914).

called Israin Kalan, situate in the District of Bhagalpur, bearing No. 174 on the Collector's Revenue Free Register C. The questions raised on the present appeal were (1) whether the Defendants-Respondents held a mokurari lease, dated the 14th June 1846, of one of the Pattis called Bhawani, alias Jadua Patti, in the said Mauza and (2) whether the Defendants-Respondents had any subsisting rights under that lease after having obtained a putni settlement of the said Mauza on the 31st August 1856.

The facts which have given rise to the appeal may be shortly stated as follows :—One Mathura Nath Ghosh, alias Sri Kanto Rai, was the owner of the said Mauza Israin Kalan, together with all its dependencies and Pattis, including Bhawani alias Jadua Patti. In consideration of Rs. 4,413 he granted a putni kabuliyat of the whole of the said village, including all its Pattis and dependencies, to the predecessors in title of the Defendants-Respondents, namely, Kalinath Tiwari and Tej-nath Tiwari, on the 31st August 1856. The terms of the putni were stated in the patta in the following words :—

“ I do declare and give out in writing that the aforementioned persons shall, generation after generation, remain in possession and occupation of the right and interest in the aforesaid Mauza from the beginning of 1264 F. and shall continue to pay to me, or my heirs and executors and legatees the annual rent amounting to Rs. 1,171 (one thousand four hundred and seventy-one rupees) as per kistbandi (instalments) given below, year after year and instalment by instalment. In case of non-payment of the aforesaid rent in due time, I, the Malik, shall be at liberty, under the provisions of Act VII of 1832 and Reg. VIII of 1819, etc., the laws which are in force with regard to putni settlements, or which may be enacted hereafter, to realize the money due together with interest at 1 per cent. per annum on the defaulted instalment, by auction sale and from the persons and properties of you, the putnidars, or your heirs, executors and legatees, and no objection of you, the putnidars, or your heirs, executors and legatees, with regard to the same shall be entertained. There shall never be any increase or decrease in the aforesaid fixed rent; and I, the Malik, or my heirs, have no right to do so."

The said Tej Nath Tiwari, who appears to have been only a benami putnidar surrendered his interest under the putni to the said Kalinath Tiwari, on the 19th December 1858. For nearly 34 years the putnidar, Kalinath Tiwari, held the lands covered by the putni. The putni was sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent due in respect of the putni on the 13th February 1890, and it was purchased by one Anandi Prasad, benami for the said putnidar. The putni was sold for the second time in execution of another decree for rent on the 10th December 1890, and it was purchased by one Bishun Prasad. The putni was sold for the third time in execution of another decree for rent on the 20th July 1905, and it was purchased by one Gajadhar Prasad. The case of the Appellants was that the said Bishun Prasad and Gajadhar Prasad were benamidars for the Tiwari putnidar. The putni was sold for the fourth time in execution of another decree for rent on the 14th June 1907, and it was purchased by one Balajit Singh, on behalf of the Plaintiffs-Appellants. The sale was duly confirmed on the 5th July 1907, and a certificate of sale, dated the 3rd September 1907, specifying the following properties included in the putni was granted :

" 16 annas interest in the lakheraj putni-mahal Mauza Israin Kalan and Putni Lalgunj, Patti Anandi, Patti Janumannagar, Patti Bhawani, otherwise called Jadua Patti, and Patti Gopipur, original with dependencies, Pargana Dharmpur, District Bhagalpur, bearing No. 174 (B) in Register (B), within the jurisdiction of Thana, Sub-Registry Office Madhepura, District Bhagalpur, together with all putni rights and interests including 4 Cutcha Catchery houses covered with straw, standing in Patti Bhawanipur, otherwise called Jadua Patti. Approximate value being Rs. 500."

The Plaintiffs-Appellants took out delivery of possession of the properties specified above on the 9th February 1908. There was then a dispute regarding the possession of Bhawani, alias Jadua Patti, which as already stated was one of the Pattis of the putni taluk Israin Kalan, between the present Plaintiffs and the Tiwari putnidars, who were all members of a Hindu joint family. The dispute led to a criminal proceeding under sec. 115 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898. The Tiwari putnidars for the first time stated in the course of the said proceedings that they held possession of the Patti in question, under a mokurari lease, dated the 14th June 1846, and not under the putni lease, dated the 31st August 1856. The Criminal Court decided in favour of the Defendants on the ground of actual possession by a judgment, dated the 20th September 1909, and refused to deal with the validity and effect of the mokurari lease set up by the Defendants.

The Plaintiffs thereafter instituted the present suit (No. 525 of 1910) on the 26th September 1910, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur. In the plaint the facts set forth above were stated in detail. The Plaintiffs claimed the following reliefs: - (1) A declaration that Bhawani alias Jadua Patti was a part and parcel of the putni settlement of the 31st August 1856; (2) A declaration that the Defendants had no mokurari or any other permanent right to the Patti in question; (3) A decree for khas possession of the Patti in question with mesne profits and costs.

DULHIN LACHHANBATH KUMRI v. BODHNATH TIWARI.

The successors of the original putnidar, Kalinath Tiwari, were the principal Defendants to the suit. They filed written statements denying the claim of the Plaintiffs, and relying upon the mokurari lease of 1846. The following issue, amongst others, was framed for trial :—

Was the said mokurari interest merged in the putni interest of the Defendants 1st party and thereby extinguished?

After recording and examining evidence both oral and documentary produced by the parties, the said Subordinate Judge delivered judgment on the 20th August 1912. He held that the inferior mokurari interest created in 1846 had not merged in the superior putni tenure of 1856, although the Patti in question formed a part and parcel of the putni. He concluded his judgment on this point in the following words :—

“In my opinion there would be no merger according to the principles upon which the English law of merger is based, if a person purchases the two rights in the names of two persons, and if he lets the outside world to know that he intends to keep both the rights separate and alive.

“In this case the putni and the mokurari were acquired in the names of different persons and the mokurari was treated as a separate property from the putni. There could not, under the circumstances, be any merger of the mokurari right in the superior putni right.

“The learned Pleader for the Plaintiff referred to the cases of Promotho Nath Mitter v. Kali Prosonno Chowdhury (8), Surja Narain Mandal v. Nanda Lal Sinha (9), Ulfat Hossain v. Gayani Dass (10) and Kishendutt Ram v. Mamta Ali Khan (6). But in none of these cases the question of merger arose in the same circumstances as in the present case. This question was not dealt with in any of these cases, in the same light as it has arisen in this case. The principle of the English law of merger seems to be that there should not be one ostensible owner of the two rights, although the beneficial owner may be one and the same person.

The result was that the said Subordinate Judge made a decree declaring the title of the Plaintiffs to the putni, but dismissing the claim of the Plaintiffs to declaration and possession in respect of Bhawani or Jadua Patti. The Plaintiffs appealed from the said decree of the Subordinate Judge to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, and the appeal was finally heard by the High Court of Judicature at Patna, which delivered judgment on the 27th June 1916. The learned Judges of the High Court substantially agreed with the findings of the Subordinate Judge. They concluded their judgment in terms following :—

“We agree with Teunon, J., in Abdul Karim v. Ahmmed Ali (13) that prior to the year 1882, when the Transfer of Property Act was passed, there was no merger in the mofussil. The Act expressly left untouched the law of merger applicable to leases taken for agricultural purposes. Such leases were dealt with in the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885. That Act left untouched mokurari rights. It dealt only with the merger of occupancy rights. If it be suggested that the Transfer of Property Act was an attempt to codify the law applicable to leases not for agricultural purposes, the terms of the present lease are relevant.

the lease to the Tiwaris was a lease for agricultural purpose. It is not affected by the attempt of 1882 to codify the case law relating to the transfer of property. If the Bengal Tenancy Act, sec. 22, 'could by any spurious argument be made applicable to the terms of the lease, it was not in force when the alleged merger arose. Ex. G shows clearly that Meghnath Tiwari was the head of the family in January, 1886. Ex. L shows that Chandan Nath Tiwari was the head of the family in 1883. The genealogical table indicates that neither Chandan Nath nor Meghnath could have been the head of the family while Kalit Nath was alive. Kalit Nath must have been dead in 1883, before the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed. We do not propose to consider whether a mokurari cultivating lease is covered by sec. 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is sufficient to say that that Act cannot operate upon a coalescence of superior and inferior rights prior to the passing of the Act."

The High Court accordingly made a decree dismissing the said appeal with costs, and from that decree the Plaintiffs appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with Mr. B. Dubé) for the Appellants.—The High Court was under the impression that the doctrine of merger does not apply in the mofussil in India, and so when the putni and the mokurari interests became vested in the same person the latter was not merged in the former.

Reads judgment of the Subordinate Judge, where Woomesh Chandra Gooplo v. Raj Narain Roy (4), Lal Mahamed Narkar v. Jagir Sheikh (5) and Kishendutt Ram v. Mamta Ali Khan (6) are referred to and Jibanti Nath Khan v. Gokool Chunder Chowdhury (7), Promotho

Nath Mitter v. Kali Prosonno Chowdhury (8), Surja Narain Mandal v. Nanda Lal Sinha (9), Ulfat Hossain v. Gayani Dass (10) and Kishendutt Ram v. Mamta Ali Khan (6) are distinguished.

As regards intention to merge, the High Court deals with this point and refers to Baring v. Alrigder (11).

There was no merger in India before the Transfer of Property Act. This is clear. Also see sec. 111 of the Transfer of Property Act.

[LORD SHAW.—Will you please give me the exact date on which merger is alleged?]

That is the date on which the whole title is vested in this family.

I do not admit that this is an agricultural lease.

The next point I wish to put before your Lordships is this: In Bengal, the Bengal Tenancy Act, VIII of 1885, as amended by Act VII of 1886 governs agricultural leases. In other cases the Transfer of Property Act applies. Neither of these Acts would apply in a question like this where, the question of merger arises. Again, at the time of our lease neither of these Acts were in existence. Again in Rent Act the law steps in and says that no contract shall affect certain rights of the tenant such as to trees, etc. The question of merger is something on an entirely different footing.

[LORD CAVE.—The two questions in this case are: (1) Was there merger in the mofussil before the Acts? And if there was, (2) Is not merger excluded by the evidence in this case?]]

If there is no principle you should apply equity and good conscience. This has been held to be English law. In merger is there anything opposed to the principles of Hindu or Muhamadan law?

In Woomesh Chandra Goopto v. Raj Narain Roy (4) there was a sale of a putni tenure. The purchaser sued to recover properties alienated by the vendor. Question was, was the action barred as action was brought more than 12 years after sale. At top of p. 16, second column is what is important; and p. 17, column 2. Thomas Savi r. Punchanon Ray (12) does not bear on the present point. In Jibanti Nath Khan v. Gokool Chunder Chowdhury (7) the judgment is at p. 761. There is no reference here to the Transfer of Property Act, or Bengal Tenancy Act.

Promotho Nath Mitter v. Kali Prosunno Chowdhury (8) was on the Transfer of Property Act (at p. 746).

See also Surja Narain Mandal v. Nanda Lal Sinha (9) and Uljat Hossain v. Gayani Dass (10). Two cases from the C. W. N. are mentioned, Lal Mahamed Sarkar v. Jagir Sheikh (5), the passage from Sir Lawrence Jenkin's judgment; Hirendra Nath Dutt v. Hari Mohan Ghosh (1). See also Abdul Karim v. Ahammad Ali (13). "On the whole the view seems to have been that prior to the Transfer of Property Act the doctrine of merger did not apply in Bengal" (Teunon, J.).

See Prosunno Nath Ray v. Jagat Chunder Pundit (14).

It is impossible to say that there is any judgment in Calcutta that the law of merger does not apply in the mofussil and if there is no law then it is equity and good conscience, i.e., English law that should be applied.

[LORD SHAW.—The moment you get it to that level the question of intention becomes important.]

From 1858 to 1887 they did nothing whatever. They did not pay rent. The patwari kept a separate account. This account must have been kept anyhow.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Respondents.—It is clear that the Transfer of Property Act has nothing to do with this case.

The question is, did merger take place in 1856 when Kalit got possession or did merger take place on account of intention. In 1856 when putni was granted, it was not in favour of mokuraidar, but of a junior member of the family. Referred to Woomesh Chandra Goopto v. Raj Narain Roy (4), where Sir Barnes Peacock was of opinion that merger does not apply to India. Also per Jackson, J. in Woomesh Chandra Goopto v. Raj Narain Roy (4) and Kishendutt v. Mamta Ali Khan (6). There is an analysis of this case in Hirendra Nath Dutt v. Hari Mohan Ghosh (1). Prosunno Nath Ray v. Jagat Chunder Pundit (14) also does not seem to involve the question of merger. The question was between the putnidar and his co-sharers in the zamindari.

DULHIN LACHHANBATI KUMRI v. BODHNATH TIWARI.

Promotho Nath Mitter v. Kali Prosonno Chowdhury (8) is solely a case on the Transfer of Property Act. Surja Narain Mandal v. Nanda Lal Sinha (9) was a case where the contest was between mortgagor and mortgagee. It was not a question of superior and inferior rights. It was decided on sec. 70 of the Transfer of Property Act. Ulfat Hossain v. Gayani Dass (10) even if right was a decision on the Transfer of Property Act.

If the law of merger applied in India before 1882, then I say intention here was to keep titles separate. Cases dealing with mortgagor [in the Surja Narain Mandal v. Nanda Lal Sinha (9), also Whiteley v. Delancy (15)] are not applicable, having turned on equitable rights of parties to mortgages and not on merger.

Here the titles to the mokurari and the putni are not in the same person. The mokurari was recognised as a separate estate with a separate rent in the hastabood. Refers to other documents. There is a receipt under sec. 65, Bengal Tenancy Act specifying estate as well as village as required by law.

Mr. DeGruyther in reply.—No reason is given for the view expressed by Jackson, J., in Woomesh Chandra Goopto v. Raj Narain Roy (4) and it is contrary to Kishen duft Ram v. Mamtaz Ali Khan (6), also to Mohesh Lal v. Mohunt Baran Das (16).

The references in the hastabood are to the mokurari, merely as a name, not as representing an estate.

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal against a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Patna, dated the 27th June 1916, affirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur, dated the 20th August 1912.

The purpose of the suit was for a declaration of the Plaintiffs’ title to a Putni Taluk called Israin Kalan, in the District of Bhagalpur, and for khas possession of certain lands which are in the hands of the Defendants. The Defendants resist this claim on the ground that they are the holders of a mokurari lease of a considerable portion of the putni called Jadua Patti.

There were many issues in the case, each party attacking the title of the other. Inter alia, a strongly contested issue was whether the mokurari lease set up by the Defendants was genuine. After a very full trial there is a concurrent finding by both Courts that it was.

The case was ably argued before the Board, and the point of contention may be said to have been that which was contained in the eighth issue tried before the Subordinate Judge. That issue was in these terms :—

“Was the said mokurari interest merged in the putni interest of the Defendants first party and thereby extinguished?”

If this merger took place, the defence fails. If it did not take place, the defence succeeds.

Reduced to the simplest elements, and confined to those which bear upon the issues so determined, the facts may be stated thus: One Mathura Nath Ghosh was proprietor of the Mauza holding, under Iakeraj title prior to 1846. On the 14th June of that year, he granted a mokurari lease respecting Jadua Patti in favour of Dhirnath Tiwari and Loke Nath Tiwari, the predecessors of the Tiwari Defendants, at a rental of Rs. 66-11-3. There can be no doubt that this was an agricultural lease binding the lessees "to cultivate the said land at ease of mind, etc. Under this agricultural lease the lessees would, according to practice, either farm the lands themselves, or let them to other cultivators, drawing rents therefor. During their possession the value of the lands thus let in mokurari appears to have greatly risen.

Ten years later, viz., on the 31st August 1856, the owner of the Mauza, viz., Mathura Nath Ghose, already mentioned, granted a putni lease of the whole Mauza in favour of two persons, Tej Narayan Tiwari and Kalit Nath Tiwari. More than two years afterwards Tej Narayan Tiwari sold his half-share of the putni to Kalit. The exact date of this transaction was the 19th December 1858.

The question as to whether these transactions were fundamentally joint family transactions and should be so treated for the purpose of the application of the doctrine of merger, is a question which will be afterwards referred to; but, in the meantime, it may be noted that ex facie of these two transactions, viz., the putni lease and the mokurari lease, they are granted by the same grantor to grantees who are different persons. But for the introduction of this question of the joint family, the point of merger could not, in fact, arise, as there is no identity of person between the mokuraridars and the putnidars. This applies clearly to August 1856, when the putni lease was granted, but it also further applies to December 1858, when Tej Tiwari sold his half-share to Kalit Tiwari, because Kalit, although thereafter holding the putni en bloc, was not himself a mokuraridar of Jadua Patti.

Accepting for the moment, however, as relevant, the fact that Kalit Tiwari, the putnidar, was of the same joint family as Dhir Tiwari and Loke Tiwari, the mokuraridars under the 1846 deed, and accepting also as relevant, for the moment, that when a joint family interest can be postulated, the doctrine of merger should be applied to it, their Lordships note that much authority was cited to the Board as it had been to the Courts below, on the proposition broadly maintained that, prior to the Transfer of Property Act, there was no law of merger in the mofussil. The various points of this argument, including the question of whether the case law, applicable to the situation of mortgagor and mortgagee, could be applied by accurate analogy to the case of mokuraridar and putnidar—these various points need not be entered upon at length in the present case, in view of the clear opinion which the Board has formed and which will be presently stated as to the true range of the doctrine of merger itself. It may, however, be mentioned incidentally that towards the close of the series of decisions referred to, there occurs the case of Hirendra Nath Dutt v. Hari Mohan Ghosh (1) and in the judgment of the Court, consisting of Fletcher and Chatterjee, JJ., and delivered by the latter, a valuable review occurs of the series of decisions upon this branch of Indian law.

Before leaving the list of Indian cases referred to, it may, however, be also observed that no light is thrown upon this case by the later half of them, which were ruled by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. This case is not so ruled, but depends upon general law.

But, if the doctrine of merger is appealed to, that doctrine must be taken as it stands. Merger is not a thing which occurs ipso jure upon the acquisition of what, for the sake of a just generalisation, may be called the superior with the inferior right. There may be many reasons—conveyancing reasons, reasons arising out of the object of the acquisition of the one right being merely for a temporary purpose, family reasons and others—in the course of which the expediency of avoiding the coalescence of interest and preserving the separation of title may be apparent. In short, the question to be settled in the application of the doctrine is, was such a coalescence of right meant to be accomplished as to extinguish that separation of title which the records contain? This is in accord with settled law, of which two recent instances may be given, viz., Capital and Counties Bank v. Rhodes (2) and especially the judgment of Farwell, J., in Ingle v. Jenkins (3).

The doctrine of merger being thus applied to the present case, it is found on an examination of the circumstances, that they show with great clearness that instead of the mokurari lease having been extinguished by merger, it was, on the contrary, kept up as upon the one hand the source of right to the cultivators proceeding from the mokuraridars, and upon the other hand, the separate grant of subsisting right to the mokuraridars by their lease in respect of which the payment into the putni exchequer of the specific Rs. 66, specified in the mokurari lease, continued to be made. The argument of Mr. Kenworthy Brown upon the documents made this clear. It is not, however, necessary to enter upon the details thereof, for both of the Courts in India, after full investigation, are satisfied in that particular. Had there been a true merger in fact, and in intention, the whole of such transactions would, in all probability, have taken a different shape, and in particular no more would have been heard of the mokurari rent.

This raises the last question in the case, and it is one of some importance. It was strongly argued by the Appellants' Counsel that it was sufficient for his purpose to show that mokuraridars and putnidars were of the same joint family, and that the difference of name of the one set of persons from the other person was of no account.

Their Lordships are not of this opinion. The difference of name, it is not going too far to say, may be at least an element, and an important element, in the question as to whether merger was ever truly intended. There may under the law of England be complete fundamental identity of right between the holder under one title, and the holder under another, but a convenient method of indicating intention on the subject is to create, for the purpose of keeping up the separation of title, a trust by which merger in the legal sense is clearly avoided. In short, although the same person is truly and comprehensively the owner of all the rights which might have coalesced, the substance of separation is preserved by the form of title not having been allowed to merge into the one name.

To apply this doctrine to the Indian joint family, when a joint family interest might be said to cover rights acquired to property by several individuals belonging to the family, but when the rights which might otherwise be merged are conferred by titles taken in the names of different members of the family, and thereby the means of articulate differentiation is continued as effectively as by the artifice employed in England of the setting up of a trust ad hoc, then it appears to their Lordships that

All the length that this judgment goes is that the fact that the two sets of title do not meet in identity of name, but are separately attached to separate members of the family, is a matter to be considered on the question of whether merger was ever intended. As already stated, however, in the present case, in addition to the title standing in the names of different members of the family, the transaction under which the mokurari lease and the rights consequent thereupon were kept alive, is quite plain upon the documents and accounts.

Their Lordships are of opinion that a sound view is taken of this case by both the Courts below, and that the appeal fails. They will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly, and at the Appellants should pay the costs.

Judgment,

GOURI SANKAR AGAR-WALLA, Plaintiff,
v.
H. P. MOITRA,
Defendant.

Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), secs. 56, 9 and 20—A contract for "sale of certain goods on arrival," if enforceable when goods shipped from Germany were captured after the outbreak of war by a belligerent but after proceedings in a Prize Court arrived in a different ship two years after—Such arrival if comes within the meaning of "arrival" contemplated by the contracting parties—Doctrines of frustration, applicability of.

Defendant contracted to supply Plaintiffs with five cases of white shawl cloth. The contract was made on 21st January 1914, and it was headed "contract shipment and arrival." The goods were to be shipped in July and August 1914. The Defendant had previously ordered 50 cases of white shawl cloth from sellers in London. In part fulfilment of the Defendant's order 20 cases were shipped in July 1914 by his sellers in a German ship SS. "Spitzfels," Hamburg to Calcutta. The German ship was captured by the British in the Mediterranean shortly after the outbreak of the war and was condemned as prize. Under Government orders the cargo was transhipped at Alexandria into a different ship, which arrived in Calcutta in June 1916, delivery to the consignees being made conditional upon payment of extra charges in the nature of transshipping and forwarding expenses. There was a provision in the contract that in case of loss of the ship the contract should stand cancelled. There was a further provision in the contract that if the goods did not arrive within the specified time, the sellers should notify their buyers, and the latter should declare whether they are prepared to grant an extension of time, otherwise the contract should be considered as cancelled. The Defendant did not inform the Plaintiff of the arrival of the cases in June 1916 and he similarly ignored his other buyers of 1914, and sold them to other dealers at a profit to himself, the market having risen. The Plaintiff in July 1917 in consequence of information which he had received, tendered the contract price to the Defendant and brought the present suit for non-delivery of the goods.

Held—That having regard to the capture of the ship and the transshipment, the Plaintiff was not entitled to the delivery of the goods on their arrival in June 1916 in the same manner as if there had been no interruption.

Per SANDERSON, C. J.—The arrival of the goods in June 1916, after the events which happened, was not such an arrival as was contemplated by the parties to the contract. The purpose of the contract and the intention of the parties to the contract were altogether upset by the capture of the ship, by the prolonged delay and by the other circumstances which were the result thereof. Consequently the Defendant was not bound to deliver the goods to the Plaintiff when they eventually did arrive in June 1916.

Per RICHARDSON, J.—Regard being had to the events which happened, the contract had ceased to be operative when the goods arrived in June 1916.

If the contract between the Defendant and his shippers became illegal owing to the outbreak of the war, it may be that the contract between the Plaintiff and the Defendant fell with it, but the question of illegality not having been raised, the conclusion that the events which happened dissolved the contract may be supported by recourse to the doctrine of frustration, according to which a subsequent event or contingency beyond the ken of the parties at the time of the transaction, for the occurrence of which neither of them is responsible and for which they have not provided, may operate to undermine and avoid the contract between them.

Treating the question as one of construction, regard must be had to the nature and circumstances of the particular transaction.

The importance of delay in the regime of commerce is recognised.

METROPOLITAN WATER BOARD v. DICK KERR & CO. (5) and BENSADIE v. THAMES AND MERSY INSURANCE CO. (8) referred to and approved.

The delay and the probability of delay were amply sufficient for the conclusion that the contract in a business sense perished with or after the capture, long before the goods arrived in Calcutta and it could not be revived without a new contract.

The facts of the case will fully appear from the judgment of Richardson, J.

SANDERSON, C. J.—I have read the judgment about to be delivered by my learned brother Mr. Justice Richardson.

In my judgment the events, which have been referred to in detail by my learned brother, were not in the contemplation of the parties to the contract, when the contract was made. It was made on the 21st January 1914: it was headed shipment, and arrival: the goods were to be shipped in July and August 1914. In fact the goods in question were shipped on S. S. "Spitzfels," a German ship which sailed from Hamburg on the 19th of July 1914, but they did not arrive in Calcutta until June 1916, more than two years from the date of the contract. This was due to the outbreak of war in August 1914 and to the capture of the S. S. "Spitzfels." The goods were transhipped to S. S. "Alavi" under the circumstances detailed in my learned brother's judgment.

In my judgment the arrival of the goods in June 1916, after the events which happened, was not such an arrival as was contemplated by the parties to the contract.

In my judgment the purpose of the contract and the intention of the parties to the contract were altogether upset by the capture of the S. S. "Spitzfels," by the prolonged delay and by the circumstances which were the result thereof; consequently, in my judgment the Defendants were not bound to deliver the goods to the Plaintiff when they eventually did arrive in Calcutta in June 1916.

In my judgment the answer to the question which the learned Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court has referred to this Court should be in the negative.

The Plaintiff must pay the costs of the reference.

We think that there should be two Counsels' fees and two attorneys' fees, one for each hearing.

RICHARDSON, J.—This is a reference by Mr. Thornhill, the learned Chief Judge of the Calcutta Court of Small Causes, from whose order the facts about to be stated are taken. The facts are either undisputed or concluded by the Chief Judge's findings.

The Defendant in the writ contracted to supply the Plaintiff with five cases of white shawl cloth, shipment July and August 1914. The contract is dated 21st January 1914.

The Defendant had previously ordered 50 cases of white shawl cloth from sellers in London. Of these 50 cases he sold 22 to buyers in Calcutta, including the five cases sold to the Plaintiff.

In part fulfilment of the Defendant's order, 20 cases were shipped in July 1914 by his sellers in the S. S. "Spitzfels," Hamburg to Calcutta, c. i. f. c. Calcutta, to the order and on account and risk of the Defendant. The "Spitzfels," a German ship, was captured by the British in the Mediterranean shortly after the outbreak of war and was condemned as prize. Under Government orders, the cargo, or portion of it, was transhipped at Alexandria into the S. S. "Alavi," which arrived in Calcutta in June 1916, that is, merely two years late—with 17 only out of the Defendant's 20 cases on board. The goods were cleared by the Defendant or his agents sometime about the 10th June 1916. The proceedings of the Prize Court are not in evidence and the Chief Judge states that there is nothing to show that any particular conditions attached to the goods by reason of those proceedings save that the delivery to the consignees was conditional upon payment of extra charges in the nature of transshipping and forwarding expenses, etc., which amounted to Rs. 3,038-11-0 for the 17 cases. The charges were paid by the Defendant.

The Defendant also paid the drafts for the whole 20 cases together with the interest which had accumulated thereon. He further paid deviation insurance and so forth. He sent in a claim for the three cases short delivered.

The contract between the parties to the suit is headed "Contract shipment and arrival." The first clause is introductory.

GOURI SANKAR AGARWALLA v. H. P. MOITRA.

The second clause is a long one. It lays down that the buyers shall take delivery of the goods within a fixed number of days from the respective dates of arrival and contains other provisions relating to delivery and payment.

(Cls. 3 and 4 are as follows :—

“ 3. Should the goods or any portion of same not have been shipped or not have arrived at the expiration of the time stipulated, the sellers, on the facts coming to their knowledge, shall immediately notify the buyers, and the buyers must within two days of their receipt of notice from sellers, declare whether they are prepared to grant an extension of time for shipment or arrival of the portion overdue, otherwise this portion of the contract shall be considered as cancelled, and the sellers shall not be responsible for any such non-fulfilment of contract. Should the goods or any portion of same not have been shipped owing to suppliers and to producers stopping payment, or being prevented by accidents to or the destruction of works from preparing same, the contract shall be rescinded for that portion not shipped.”

“ 4. Buyers will not have the right to cancel this contract or any portion thereof if the goods from any unavoidable cause, such as strikes of operatives, dock labourers, carriers, seamen, accidents to railways, or any other force of nature, are shipped later than the shipment dates contracted for, provided that such delay in shipment shall not exceed the period of one month.”

Under cl. 8 the argument is to be construed as a separate contract in respect of each instalment of goods.

Cl. 10 says :—“ The entry of the vessel at the Custom House means arrival under this contract. Loss of the vessel cancels the portion of this contract shipped in the vessel lost.”

The Chief Judge has found “ that the Defendant intended to perform his July part of the contracts with his buyers by allotting to them cases out of such consignment or consignments as might arrive in ordinary course by the S. S. “ Spitzfels or any other ship.” It is further found that the Defendant did not inform the Plaintiff of the arrival of the 17 cases in June 1916. He similarly ignored his other buyers of 1914, and assuming complete dominion over the goods sold or resold them to other dealers at a profit to himself, the market having risen. Further when the Plaintiff in July 1917, in consequence of information which he had received, addressed an enquiry on the subject to the Defendant, the latter replied that the goods had never been shipped. The Plaintiff, however, was not deterred. He tendered the contract price for three cases on the footing that they represented the July shipment under his contract. He then brought the present suit to recover Rs. 1,987-8 annas damages for their non-delivery. At the time he was not aware of the extra charges paid by the Defendant, but during the hearing of the suit he expressed his willingness to pay those charges, the market being then favourable.

It may be added that the goods being of German origin, the Plaintiff made no claim in respect of his remaining two cases, on the footing that they might have been shipped in August and that the rule against trading with the enemy excused the Defendant from performing that part of his contract.

The suits came twice before the learned Chief Judge. On the first occasion he dismissed it, holding, as he says on the construction of the contract “ that the contract was conditional on the arrival of the goods in Calcutta in the ordinary course of navigation.”

GIOURI SANKAR AGARWALLA v. H. P. MOITRA.

During the temporary absence of Mr. Thornhill, the Full Bench of the Court of Small Causes set aside the dismissal and directed a retrial. Having retried it, the learned Judge has again dismissed the suit, this time subject to the opinion of the High Court on the substantial question of law arising, which he states as follows :-

"Whether having regard to the capture of the S. S. "Spitzfels" and transshipment to the S. S. "Alavi" the Plaintiff was entitled to the delivery of the goods on their arrival in Calcutta in June 1916, in the same manner as if there had been no interruption."

I agree with the Chief Judge that regard being had to the events which happened, the contract had ceased to be operative when the goods arrived in 1916, though it is open to question whether the contract was "conditional on the arrival of the goods in due course of navigation."

As to the heading "contract shipment and arrival" the goods were in fact shipped and did ultimately arrive. The contract appears to be silent as regards delay in arrival apart from delay in shipment and loss of the ship. It was not contended that loss of the ship includes capture. Horlock v. Beal (1). As the goods were shipped in time, the provision made for extending the time of shipment (with a corresponding or relative extension of time of arrival) does not assist the Plaintiff. The parties, therefore, would seem to have left the matter of delay after shipment unprovided for, though "delay even of considerable length and of wholly uncertain duration is an incident of maritime adventure." Bank Line v. Capel (2).

Such cases as that of Idt v. Thornton (3) which the Chief Judge cites, are of no assistance. In that case, the parties expressly agreed that if the goods should not arrive before a named date, the bargain should be void. It was held that arrival within the date was a condition precedent.

There is no such express agreement in the present case, and I am not satisfied that a condition in the particular form suggested could be imported into the contract nor am I aware what its precise effect would be on the delay here (where the deviation was involuntary) or on delays of other descriptions. There may be delays of which the parties "took their chance."

If the contract of transshipment between the Defendant and his shippers, became illegal owing to the outbreak of war, it may be that the contract between the Plaintiff and the Defendant fell with it, but the question of illegality was not raised and in my opinion the conclusion that the events which happened dissolved the contract may be supported by recourse to the doctrine of frustration which the learned Judge also calls in aid.

According to that doctrine, a subsequent event or contingency, beyond the ken of parties at the time of the transaction, for the occurrence of which neither of them is responsible and for which they have not provided may sometimes operate to undermine and avoid the contract between them.

The doctrine is illustrated in a number of recent English cases, four of which in particular—now the principal cases on the topic—went to the House of Lords. [Horlock v. Beal (1)]; where the earlier cases are considered and classified; Tamplin Steamship Company v. Anglo Mexican Petroleum Products Co., Ltd. (4), *Metropolitan Water Board v. doctrine may have its limitations. It may not be applicable in every case where the unexpected happens with serious consequences. It may apply only in exceptional cases. But in my opinion it is applicable to the facts of the present case.

In one of the earlier cases [Baily v. DeCrespigny (7)], where land, the subject-matter of a covenant by the Plaintiff in favour of the Defendant, was compulsorily acquired and the Defendant was held discharged from the covenant, Hannen, J., in a passage often cited said :—

“There can be no doubt that a man may by an absolute contract bind himself to perform things which subsequently become impossible, or to pay damages for the non-performance, and this construction is to be put upon an unqualified undertaking, where the event which causes the impossibility was or might have been anticipated and guarded against in the contract or where the impossibility arises from the act or default of the promisor. But where the event is of such a character that it cannot reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of the contracting parties when the contract was made, they will not be held bound by general words which though large enough to include, were not used with reference to the possibility of the particular contingency which afterwards happens.”

“A Court can and ought to examine the contract and the circumstances in which it was made, not of course to vary, but only to explain it, in order to see whether or not the parties must have made their bargain on the footing that a particular thing or state of things would continue to exist. And if they must have done so, then a term to that effect will be implied, though it be not expressed in the contract. In applying this rule it is manifest that such a term can rarely be implied except where the discontinuance is such as to upset altogether the purpose of the contract. Some delay or some change is very common in all human affairs, and it cannot be supposed that any bargain has been made on the tacit condition that such a thing will not happen in any degree.”

The principle so stated applies to all contracts. In commercial cases it is applied where the commercial object of the contract has been frustrated by the intrusion or occurrence of an unexpected event, creating a state of things in which the parties could not reasonably have intended that the contract, as they made it, should be operative. An exception or condition precedent to that effect may then be imported. The result does not depend merely or chiefly on calculations of profit and loss; and, as it has been more than once pointed out, the difficulty lies not so much in the statement of the principle as in its application. In some cases the facts seem to speak for themselves. In others, where the effect of the unexpected event has been more or less temporary, judges of the highest eminence have reached different conclusions.

Treating the question as one of construction, regard must be had to the nature and circumstances of the particular transaction; and the implied term, though it may be an addition to the contract, must be consistent with the express terms and with the intentions of the parties as gathered from those terms. “No Court has a power of absolution” and special care must be taken to avoid making a new contract for the parties.

Now, what are the facts here? The seller was not in default. The capture was an Act of State. The capture amounted to a seizure of the ship and at any rate a detention of the goods. The ship and no doubt the goods also became the subject of proceedings in prize. The goods did not cease to exist but there was a discontinuance of their availability to the parties and the delay which was likely to occur and did in fact occur was of long duration, the seller was deprived of his goods for the time being. The charges which he subsequently paid in order to recover them were in the nature of salvage. The event was entirely unforeseen. At the same time there is nothing in the contract or in the nature of the transaction inconsistent with a term which need not be larger than this, that should war supervene and the vessel or the goods be captured by a belligerent with resulting delay the contract should be at an end. With that condition implied the capture and the delay terminated the contract and the subsequent arrival of the goods in Calcutta would not revive it without a new agreement between the parties.

The authorities show that the subject-matter of the contract need not cease to exist or be permanently rendered unavailable to the parties. The importance of delay in the region of commerce is recognised. In the Metropolitan Water Board's case (5), Lord Dunedin said:—“An interruption may be so long as to destroy the identity of the work or service, when resumed, with the work or service when interrupted.” Lord Atkinson spoke of “an interruption so great and long as to make it unreasonable to require the parties to go on.” Lord Sumner in the Bank Line case (6) strikes a note of warning, “I agree,” he says (p. 454) “in the importance of this feature, though it may not be the main and certainly is not the only matter to be considered. The probabilities as to the length of the deprivation and not the certainty arrived at after the event are also material. The question must be considered at the trial as it had to be considered by the parties, when they came to know of the cause and the probabilities of the delay and had to decide what to do Rights ought not to be left in suspense or to hang on the chances of subsequent events. The contract binds or it does not bind, and the law ought to be that the parties can gather their fate then and there. What happens afterwards, may assist in showing what the probabilities really were, if they had been reasonably forecasted, but when the causes of frustration have operated so long or under such circumstances as to raise a presumption of inordinate delay, the time has arrived at which the fate of the contract falls to be decided. That fate is dissolution or continuance, and, if the contract ought to be held to be dissolved, it cannot be revived without a new contract. The parties are free.”

In the Metropolitan Water Board's case (5), Scrutton, L. J., in the Court of Appeal, expressed himself as follows:—“Strictly, in my opinion a party to a contract who claims that on a particular day the contract is abrogated takes the burden of proving that on that day the interruption is so serious as to avoid the contract. To use the words of Lord Halsbury in Bensaude v. Thames and Mersey Insurance Co. (8). ‘It would be only a question of evidence which one might ascertain at that time, or wait until the facts had proved it by the occurrence of those facts subsequently.’”

In the present case, the delay and the probability of delay were amply sufficient to justify the conclusion that the contract in a business sense perished with or after the capture, long before the goods arrived in Calcutta.

The test may be applied which is suggested by the Chief Judge. What if the market had fallen? Could the Defendant have forced these goods on the Plaintiff, however, unwilling the Plaintiff might be to take them? Could the Plaintiff have been compelled to pay the Prize Court charges?

I may add that sec. 56 of the Contract Act only applies to physical impossibility and therefore does not cover every case of frustration [Gokuldas v. Narsu (9) and Karl Ettlinger v. Changandas (10)]. Sec. 9 of the Act, however, recognises that promises may be implied.

Sec. 20 of the Act deals with the case of a common mistake at the time of the transaction "as to a matter of fact essential to the agreement." Perhaps a general principle of frustration depending on construction might be so stated as to cover that.

The case of Gokuldas v. Narsu (9) is of interest. The Defendant had agreed to pay the Plaintiff an annual sum for permission to quarry stone on the Plaintiff's land. The Defendant possessed a municipal license to quarry by blasting. Though for no fault of the Defendant the license was withdrawn it was held that the withdrawal terminated the contract. In the course of the argument Sargent, C. J., said that sec. 56 of the Contract Act had nothing to do with the case and that it was purely a case of construction of the contract. I find that in a very recent case [Kunjilal v. Durga Prosad (11)] the principle has been applied by Rankin, J. That was a decision on a special case in which it had been found that the parties contracted on the assumption that the Government control over Railway waggons would be removed and on the authority of The Moorcock (12) and other cases it was held that a condition to that effect should be implied.

It was assumed in the argument that the Defendant was entitled to two or three cases out of the original 20 cases shipped. As only 17 cases arrived, it was suggested that the Plaintiff had no more right to any of these cases than to the three missing cases, but the suggestion was not pressed, possibly because it was thought that the claim would cover a claim for compensation in respect of the missing cases.

In the result, I would answer the question referred to us in the negative.

Some pleaders refused to appear in a certain Court in pursuance of a resolution of the Bar Association to boycott that Court as a protest against its ill-treatment of pleaders. Proceedings under sec. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act were drawn up against several pleaders for failure to appear in Court in matters which had been entrusted to them by their clients. The pleaders concerned having intimated their unqualified regret to the High Court for the course adopted by them :

Held—That having regard to their unqualified expression of regret the proceedings should be dropped.

That the Court regarded the action of the pleaders as a very serious matter. The pleaders deliberately abstained from attending the Court and took part in a concerted movement to boycott the Court, a course of conduct which was not justified. The pleaders had duties and obligations to their clients in respect of suits and matters entrusted to them which were pending in the said Court. There was a further and equally important duty and obligation upon them, viz., to co-operate with the Court in the orderly and pure administration of justice. By the course which they adopted, the pleaders violated and neglected their duties and obligations in both these respects. If the pleaders thought they had a just cause of complaint, they had two courses open to them : to make a representation to the District Judge or to the High Court. They took neither of these alternatives, but they adopted the high-handed and unjustifiable course of boycotting the Court.

These were references under sec. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act by the District Judge of Dacca in the matter of certain Pleaders practising at Dacca in the Court of the District Judge and connected Rules arising therein.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment of Sanderson, C. J.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This was a reference by the learned District Judge of Dacca, dated the 15th August 1921, with which he forwarded a report by the learned Subordinate Judge of the 4th Court of proceedings taken by him under sec. 14 of Legal Practitioners Act, 1879, against one Tarini Mohan Barari, a pleader of that Court. The report of the learned District Judge in material parts was as follows :

“The circumstances that have given rise to these proceedings are similar to those that were the occasion of proceedings against ten other pleaders, regarding whom I have, this day, made a report, and I need not re-state them. It is sufficient to say that Tarini Mohan Barari has complied with the resolution passed by the Dacca Bar Association on the 17th June last, asking its members not to appear as pleaders before Babu Pasupati Bose.

The Defendant pleader had presented a plaint in the Court of the Subordinate Judge which was found to be defective. The pleader was called to explain the circumstances, but he refused to appear before the Court. The Subordinate Judge accordingly ordered the plaint to be returned. The pleader sent a telegram to his client to inform him of the order, and the latter, having come to Dacca, instructed him to make a petition to the Court for a reconsideration of the order. The pleader, however, refused to do so, and the Plaintiff was compelled to appear in Court himself, and later on by a Mukhtear. The Plaintiff was called as a witness in the present proceeding, and his evidence has been discussed by the Subordinate Judge. It appears that he endeavoured to screen the pleader and go back on the first statement he made to the Subordinate Judge; but there can be no doubt that his first statement was the true one. That his interests were prejudiced by the pleader's refusal to appear on his behalf is evident from the fact that the plaint was ordered to be returned and he had to appear on his own behalf before the Subordinate Judge and, later on, by a Mukhtear.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the Subordinate Judge is right in his view that the pleader has been guilty of professional misconduct and should be punished with suspension."

The Plaintiff's statement referred to in the report is as follows:—

"I have come to Dacca on receipt of a telegram from my pleader Tarini Mohan Barari. I had seen him on arrival. He told me that the Court passed an order on my plaint directing its return. I asked him to appear before the Court and move for a reconsideration of the order. He told me that as other pleaders have not been appearing, he would not. I, therefore, throw myself entirely at the mercy of the Court. I asked him why he did not explain before the Court the state of things why the suit was triable before the Court. He answered that he and other pleaders were determined not to appear in this Court. I have been put to severe loss for his conduct."

The notice which was served on the pleader was as follows: "Whereas it appears that you filed a plaint registered as No. 40 of 1921 in a form that it was not entertainable by this Court, that you did not wilfully appear before the Court though repeatedly called, to explain the circumstances under which it was filed and might be entertainable in this Court, that you did not wilfully appear to take back the plaint though directed to do so or sign the order as required, that you would not wilfully appear before this Court on the request of the Plaintiff for moving the Court for a reconsideration of the order of return passed on account of your neglect of duty and whereas your above conduct amounts to grossly improper conduct in the discharge of your professional duty as contemplated by the Legal Practitioners Act, sec. 14, you are hereby charged as follows:—

1. That the attitude taken up by you towards the Court is insulting and highly improper.

2. That you did not wilfully and without lawful excuse appear before this Court on behalf of the Plaintiff in Suit No. 40 and thus put him wrongfully to considerable difficulties and exposed him to serious harm.

3. That you are guilty of grossly improper conduct in the discharge of your professional duty as contemplated in sec. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act.

You are hereby given notice that the above charges will be taken into consideration on 16th July next."

The pleader filed a statement containing many contentions. The only paragraph to which, in my judgment, it is necessary for me to refer under the circumstances, which have happened since the hearing of this reference was begun is No. 17 which is to this effect:—

"That this objector believes that the institution of this proceeding against him is the result of an after-thought and is part of a series of proceedings instituted against him and certain other members of the Bar with a view to put them into difficulties and put pressure on those members who are not inclined to appear in this Court from a sense of self-respect and out of apprehension of being insulted in Court in consequence of this Court's uniform ill-treatment of the members of the Bar and particularly the gross insult offered to Babu Rabindra Nath Chatterjee, a pleader, by the Court on the 15th June last and as such those proceedings are not bonâ fide."

It appears that on the 15th June 1921, an incident had occurred in the Court of the Subordinate Judge in which a pleader, Rabindra Nath Chatterjee, was concerned.

It is not necessary for me to enter into the details of that incident at the present moment: it is sufficient to say that it was contended on the one side that the learned Subordinate Judge had behaved rudely towards the pleader, while on the other side it was said that the pleader would not abide by the order which the learned Judge had made and that he persistently and improperly interrupted and disturbed the learned Judge while he was engaged in hearing arguments in another case. I do not intend to express any opinion as to the merits of this incident, and I have purposely abstained from describing the details thereof.

It appears that on the 17th June 1921, a resolution was passed by the Bar Association, which was as follows:—

"Considering the fact that the insult inflicted by Babu Pasupati Bose, fourth Subordinate Judge, on Babu Rabindra Nath Chatterjee is really an insult to the whole Bar, it is resolved that (A) Criminal case and (B) Civil suit claiming damages not exceeding Rs. 10,000 be instituted against the Subordinate Judge and the whole expense be borne by the Bar Association and that members be individually requested not to appear before him any more."

There is no doubt that it was in consequence of this resolution that the pleader, who is mentioned in the reference, and other pleaders refused to appear before the learned Subordinate Judge.

After the learned Standing Counsel had opened the facts of the reference and the hearing had proceeded for sometime, the Court intimated to the learned Vakil for the pleaders that, even assuming that the learned Subordinate Judge was in the wrong with reference to the above-mentioned incident, as to which the Court expressed no opinion, that could not be any justification for the conduct of the pleaders. The result was that the hearing of the reference was adjourned for a week in order that the learned Vakil appearing for the pleaders concerned in this and the other references might consult their clients, many of whom were not then present in Court. At the adjourned hearing the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the pleader in this reference expressed his client's regret for the course which he had adopted, stating that he recognised that if there was a cause of complaint against the learned Subordinate Judge, a representation should have been made to the High Court. At the same time the learned Vakil asked that an enquiry should be held by this Court into the matter. It was pointed out that this was a matter for the Chief Justice and the Judges of the Court and not for the Bench sitting to hear the reference, and that as far as this Bench was concerned, the expression of regret could not be accepted, unless it was unconditional and unqualified. The learned Vakil then intimated that his expression of regret on behalf of his client was intended to be complete and unconditional.

The learned Vakil appearing for the other pleaders, concerned in this reference No. 6 of 1921, which involved the miscellaneous cases Nos. 23, 26, 31-45, 46, 29, 37, 22, 31, 25 and 27 of 1921, and the learned Counsel appearing for the pleaders in reference No. 14 of 1921 associated themselves with the expressions of regret which had been made by the learned Vakil. We then intimated that in view of these expressions of regret, we did not think it necessary to proceed further with the hearing of the references and our judgment was reserved.

Having regard to the unqualified expression of regret which have been made to the Court on behalf of the pleaders in question, we do not consider it necessary to take any steps upon the reference.

This however must not be misunderstood. It must not be assumed that the Court regards the action of the pleaders as a matter of little importance.

On the contrary we regard it as a very serious matter. The pleader deliberately abstained from attending the Subordinate Judge's Court and took part in a concerted movement to boycott the learned Judge's Court, a course of conduct which cannot be justified or tolerated.

The pleaders had duties and obligations to their clients in respect of the suits and matters entrusted to them, which were pending in the Court of the learned Subordinate Judge.

There was a further and equally important duty and obligation upon them, viz., to co-operate with the Court in the orderly and pure administration of justice. By the course which they adopted, the pleaders violated and neglected their duties and obligations in both these respects.

We desire to make it clear that such conduct cannot and will not be tolerated. In this case if the pleaders thought they had a just cause of complaint, they had two courses open to them: to make a representation to the learned District Judge or to the High Court. They took neither of these alternatives, but they adopted the high-handed and unjustifiable course of boycotting the learned Subordinate Judge's Court.

We have decided to take no further action on these references in the hope and belief that the warning, which we now give, will be sufficient to prevent any recurrence of conduct of a similar nature.

At the same time we desire to make it clear that if our warning does not have the desired effect, and if such conduct, as I have referred to, is repeated, the consequences may be of a serious nature to those concerned.

The request for an enquiry, which has been made, will be laid in due course before the Court. In this connection it is desirable to add that the learned District Judge did hold an enquiry on his own initiative, the result of which he reported to the High Court, and it is sincerely to be regretted that the efforts, which he made in the interests of the administration of justice to bring about an amicable settlement of the matter, did not meet with success.

The Rules, which are now pending before this Court, will follow the event of the Rule, which we have already disposed of, and will be discharged.

We suggest that the proceedings, which are pending in the lower Court in connection with these matters, should be dropped provided that an expression of regret is made by the parties concerned.

It is of course a condition of the course taken by this Court in these proceedings that the pleaders, if they desire to continue practising in their profession, will forthwith resume work in the Court of the learned Subordinate Judge.

Indian Stamp Act (II of 1899), sec. 2, sub-sec. 5, cl. (6)—Attestation, what is—A document written by person other than executant, if “attested” by the writer, who did not sign as attesting witness.

The attestation referred to in sec. 2, sub-sec. (5), cl. (6) of the Indian Stamp Act means attestation on the face of the instrument.

REFERENCE UNDER STAMP ACT (1) and JAGANNATH KHAN v. BAJRANGI DAS AGARWALLA (2) referred to.

This was a reference under sec. 60 of the Indian Stamp Act made by the Officiating Subordinate Judge of Pabna (Mr. Satis Chandra Basu), dated the 15th September 1921.

The facts of the case will appear fully from the judgment of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, which was as follows:—

“As I feel some doubt as to the amount of duty to be paid in respect of an instrument, I have the honour to refer it under sec. 60 of the Indian Stamp Act for the decision of the Hon’ble High Court.

The instrument purports to be a promissory note for a loan of Rs. 71 repayable on demand to the creditor, without the addition of the words ‘or order,’ or ‘or bearer,’ and is attested by the writer (a person other than the executant), but it has been stamped with an adhesive stamp of one anna only. It is dated 26th Shaban 1325 B. S.

It has been proved before me that the said writer was actually present at the time of the execution of the document and saw the execution. Thus according to the rulings of the High Court, Raj Narain in v. Abdur Rahimi (3), and Jagannath Khan v. Bajrang Das Agarwalla (2), this writer is to be regarded as an attesting witness although he did not describe himself as such, but described himself as the writer.

Under sec. 2, sub-sec. (5), cl. (6) of the Indian Stamp Act ‘any instrument attested by a witness and not payable to order or bearer, whereby a person obliges himself to pay money to another’ is a bond. According to this definition the instrument in question would be a bond and ought to have been stamped as such. This has been so held in the cases among others, in Reference under sec. 46, Stamp Act (4), Reference under Stamp Act, sec. 49 (5) and Venku v. Sitaram (6).

But what raises the doubt in my mind is the recent amendment of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) by Act VIII of 1919. By sec. 3 of the latter Act, the definition of a Negotiable Instrument as given in the former Act is slightly altered, and explanations are added, of which Explanation (i) runs thus:—

‘A promissory note, bill of exchange or cheque is payable to order which is expressed to be so payable or which is expressed to be payable to a particular person, and does not contain words prohibiting transfer or indicating an intention that it shall not be transferable.’

Thus it would appear that a promissory note expressed to be payable to a particular person, without the addition of any other words of restriction or generalisation, should be regarded as a promissory note payable to that person or to his order. If this view be accepted then the instrument now in question is by implication a promissory note payable to order, and its attestation by a witness would not change its character or make it a bond, in Reference under sec. 46, Stamp Act (4). It is to be noted that by sec. 2 (22) of the Indian Stamp Act, a promissory note under that Act means a promissory note as defined in the Negotiable Instruments Act and includes some other things. But it is also to be noted that the above explanation given in the Amending Act VIII of 1919 is appended to the definition of a negotiable instrument, and not to the definition of promissory note given in sec. 4 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. So I entertain some doubt as to whether the above amendment of the Negotiable Instruments Act is applicable to cases under the Stamp Act.

I also entertain some doubt as to whether the above amendment is applicable to instruments executed before this Amending Act (VIII of 1919) was passed. The instrument in the present case was executed on 26th Sraban 1325 corresponding to 11th August 1918, while Act VIII of 1919 received the assent of the Governor-General on the 19th March 1919.

As fiscal enactments are to be liberally construed in favour of the subject, I am inclined to think that the Plaintiff producing and relying on the instrument in question should be allowed to take advantage of the amendment made in the Negotiable Instruments Act, and that this instrument should not be treated as a bond. As however I entertain doubts on the point, and the matter is of general importance and frequently comes before Courts, I beg to refer the following points for the decision of the Hon'ble High Court :—

“(1) Whether an instrument attested by a witness containing an unconditional undertaking, signed by the maker, to pay a certain sum of money to a person, without the addition of the words ‘or order,’ or ‘or bearer,’ and without any words prohibiting its transfer, comes within the definition of a bond as given in the Indian Stamp Act, after the amendment of sec. 13 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) and addition of the Explanation (i), by sec. 3 of Act VIII of 1919.

(2) If the above question be answered in the negative, whether the answer will be applicable to an instrument executed before Act VIII of 1919 came into operation, i.e., before 19th March 1919?

I beg to add that pending the decision on this reference the Plaintiff in this suit has preferred to pay the stamp duty and penalty as on a bond and get the instrument admitted in evidence, expecting to get a refund of the same from the Collector if the question be decided in his favour.”

Babus Dwarka Nath Chakravarty and Surendra Nath Guha for the Government.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

WOODROFFE, J.—This is a Reference under sec. 60 of the Indian Stamp Act. No appearance has been made by the person liable to pay the stamp. The learned Government Pleader has rightly pointed out to us that as the penalty has already been levied, it may be a question whether the learned Judge was right in making this reference; but seeing that the learned Judge states in his reference that “pending the decision on this reference the Plaintiff in this suit has preferred to pay the stamp duty and penalty,” I think that the inference is that before the penalty was levied, the learned Judge had determined to make this reference; and all that happened was that the reference was actually framed later on. Upon the facts submitted to us I think that the attestation referred to in sec. 2, sub-sec. (5), cl. (6) of the Indian Stamp Act means attestation on the face of the instrument. In this connection may refer to Reference under Stamp Act (1). The decision in the case of Jagannath Khan v. Bajrang Das Agarwalla (2) to which the learned Judge has referred, is not, I think, in point. It does not hold that the person who signs as writer of an instrument must be regarded as an attesting witness, but that a person who is present and witnesses execution of a mortgage bond and whose name appears in the document though he is therein described merely as a writer of the deed is a competent witness to prove the execution of the mortgage bond. Inasmuch as the words "attested by the witness" refer to attestation on the face of the instrument the findings on the evidence are in my opinion irrelevant for the purpose of determining the stamp payable. On this view of the case it is unnecessary to decide any other question to which the learned Judge has referred and I would answer the reference by saying that the stamp payable on the document in question was one anna and therefore the document was properly stamped.

Suit for declaration of public right of way, if can succeed without proof of special damage—Advocate-General's permission under sec. 92, C. P.

(2) 1 L. R. 48 Cal. 61 (1920).

Code, if necessary, where permission of Court is taken under Or. I, r. 8—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 23, Arts. 120 and 144, applicability of, in such suit.

Plaintiff sued for declaration that a village path was a public way and sought relief for himself and his fellow villagers. The permission of the Court was taken under Or. I, r. 8, of the C. P. Code. The suit was decreed and the decree confirmed on appeal. The Appellate Court found that the Plaintiff suffered special damage, and the finding was challenged in second appeal:

Held—That the question of whether the Plaintiff suffered special damage or not did not arise, because a suit for a declaration that a pathway is a village pathway can succeed without proof of special damage.

HARISH DAS v. CHANDRA KUMAR GUHA (1) followed.

The suit was one to which Or. I, r. 8, C. P. Code was appropriate and the Court's permission having been obtained under that rule, recourse to the Advocate-General was not necessary.

Art 144, and not 120 of the Limitation Act, applied to the suit. And in either case the Plaintiff could have recourse to sec. 23 of the Limitation Act.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Mati Lal Roy, Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court of Zillah Tipperah, dated the 8th of December 1919, affirming the decree of Babu Gobinda Chandra Chakrabarty, Munsif, 1st Court at Comilla, dated the 30th of September 1918.

The facts will appear from the judgment.

(1) 23 C. W. N. 91 (1918).

HARISH CHANDRA SAHA v. PRAN NATH CHAKRABARTY.

This is an appeal by a Defendant against the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Tipperah affirming in appeal those of the Munsif of Comilla. The suit was one for the declaration of a right of way and for a mandatory injunction on the present Appellant to remove certain obstructions on the pathway in question. The suit has been decreed in the Plaintiffs' favour.

It is argued in the first place that the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong in his finding that the Plaintiffs have suffered special damage. The plaint sets out that the way is a public way and Plaintiff seeks relief for himself and his fellow villagers of Bakrabad. The trial in the Court of first instance was on the footing that the right of way claimed was a public one and not one peculiar to the Plaintiffs. The learned Munsif observes : " The point for trial would therefore be whether the portion of the suit land covered by stations 66-19 to 18-25 is the public gopath or not," and he decides that " it is no doubt a gopath used by the men of the locality and they have the right to pass with plough " This finding was affirmed in appeal, the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge being " that the Plaintiffs have succeeded in proving the existence of the public way over the disputed land." On these findings the question of whether the Plaintiffs have or have not suffered special damage does not arise. I may mention that it has been held by this Court in Harihar Das v. Chandra Kumar Guha (1) that a suit for a declaration that a pathway is a village pathway and for an injunction of the kind now sought can succeed without proof of special damage.

that there was in fact no permission under Or. I, r. 8. Now the finding of the Munsif, whose permission it was which was necessary under this rule, is " the Plaintiffs have taken permission of the Court to sue for the public." That finding was not attacked in the Court of appeal below. The learned Subordinate Judge sets out clearly what the points were which were urged before him and this is not one of them. It is plain moreover, from his judgment that the correctness of this particular finding was never challenged and I must now take it as a fact that the Munsif did give the permission referred to in Or. I, r. 8. It has been suggested in this connection that the suit should fail in the absence of the consent of the Advocate-General given under sec. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But the suit is in my judgment one to which Or. I, r. 8 is appropriate and the Court's permission having been obtained under that rule, recourse to the Advocate-General was unnecessary.

In the third place it is argued that the suit was barred by limitation since it was not instituted until some seven years after the creation of the obstruction complained of. It is said that the suit is governed by Art. 120. Both Courts have held that the period applicable is 12 years, presumably under Art. 144. This is, in my view, the article which applies to the suit. But in either case the Plaintiffs could, in the particular circumstances, have recourse to sec. 23 of the Limitation Act, with the result that the suit would be within time.

Fourthly it was argued that the report of the jury appointed under sec. 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was wrongly received in evidence. There is no substance in this contention, it being Appellant himself who adduced this particular document in evidence.

Finally it is contended that the learned

HARISH CHANDRA SAHA v. PRAN NATH CHAKRABARTY.

Munsif was wrong in saying that the Defendants admitted the existence of a public pathway at the place in question. It is no doubt correct to say that there was no admission of the existence of a pathway of the kind claimed by the Plaintiffs. That the admission was a qualified one and that the learned Munsif took it so to be is plain from his observation that the admission was :—"Subject only to the dispute of the right of passage of men with ploughs, etc., and the bari of the Defendant No. 1 and the other Defendants." The contesting Defendant did not renege from this admission in the Court of the Subordinate Judge who defines the position clearly in his judgment where he says : "That there was a village path there is not disputed. In fact it was admitted by the present Appellant in the case under sec. 133 Cr. P. Code. What he then contended and now contends is that it was a path some three cubits used for only passage of men of the village." There is no ground for the interference of this Court in second appeal in this part of the case. The learned Vakil for the Appellant has connected with this part of his appeal a contention founded on a sentence in the judgment of the Court of appeal below which runs :—"It is very probable that only when the gopath" (that, is to say, a pathway other than the pathway in suit) "became impassable for the greater part of the year, the public began to use the gopath now in suit." The argument is that if this be so the right of way over the path in suit existed only for such time as the other path was impassable. But the observations of the learned Subordinate Judge refer, as the context shows, to events long since past, and in no sense amount to a finding as to the existing state of affairs.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), sec. 13, cls. (b) and (f), 14—Vakalatnama, acceptance of, effect of—Pleader if bound to attend to case at every stage—Special contract, proof of—Onus—Fees, non-payment of, if ground for Pleader discharging himself—Justifying reasons for non-attendance—Proper procedure for Pleader discharging himself—Reasonable notice to client and permission of Court, if necessary—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. In May 1921, there was considerable excitement in the town of Noakhali due to sympathy for some tea garden coolies stranded at a neighbouring place called Chandpur. At a public meeting a resolution was passed that a complete hartal, i.e., cessation of public activity of every description, should be observed as an expression of the indignation of the community. At a second public meeting it was resolved that those who would not follow the previous resolution should be punished with social boycott or in some equally deterrent manner. Subsequently an informal meeting was held in the Bar Library and the opinion was expressed by the majority that it was not safe to disregard the public feeling which ran very high. The Pleaders, with the exception of two, accordingly ceased to attend Courts during the period of the hartal from the 23rd

IN THE MATTER OF EMPEROR P. RAJANI KANTA BOSE.

May to 3rd June. The consequence was that cases, when they were taken up for disposal, had either to be postponed, or decided ex parte or dismissed for default. Proceedings were then drawn up against several Pleaders who had filed vakalatnamas in those cases, for grossly improper conduct under sec. 13 cl. (b) of the Legal Practitioners Act. The Pleaders filed written explanations and the clients were examined as witnesses. In one case, a petition filed in the suit by the client on the date on which his pleader failed to appear, in which he stated that the Pleader had declined to attend Court on account of the hartal was admitted in evidence. The Pleaders stated inter alia that they were afraid to go against public opinion and preferred to bow down to the popular will, that they had not been paid fees for the dates on which they did not appear and that they had not agreed nor were bound to appear in Court on all the dates fixed for the hearing of the suits:

Held, per SANDERSON, C. J.—That a vakalatnama was much more than a mere authority to act, and it was the duty of a Pleader who had accepted a vakalatnama and had been asked to go to Court to do so to protect his clients' interests, unless it was proved that his obligations towards his client, entailed by the acceptance of the vakalatnama, were limited by a special arrangement, accompanying the acceptance of the vakalatnama; but no such special arrangements were proved by the Pleaders, upon whom the onus of proving it lay.

Quære:—Whether a Pleader can divest himself of his duty arising from the acceptance of the vakalatnama without the leave of the Court:

Held—That, in any case, the Pleaders were bound to give the clients reasonable notice so as to afford the clients reasonable opportunity of obtaining other legal assistance.

In the absence of any proof that any fee was asked or that there was any arrangement that a fee should be paid before the Pleaders would attend Court, the mere fact that no fees were tendered or paid was no justification for a Pleader's refusal to attend to his client's further interests.

Pleaders have a duty not only towards their clients but also towards the Court and it was clearly their duty to co-operate with the Court in the orderly and pure administration of justice. They would not be justified in allowing their fear of humiliation and inconvenience to override their duty to their client and to the Court and that was no adequate reason for abstention from Court:

Held, however, on the facts—That the Pleaders willingly acquiesced in the boycott of the Courts and thereby lent support to the movement, which was calculated to paralyse the administration of justice.

Therefore the Pleaders are guilty of grossly improper conduct within the meaning of cl. (b) of sec. 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act, and of such misconduct as would bring their case within cl. (f) of the section.

The contents of the petition in the suit filed by the client were admissible in evidence under sec. 157 of the Evidence Act in corroboration of the evidence which he had already given at the time when his attention was directed to the contents of the petition and when he said the contents were true to his knowledge.

Per WOODROFFE, J.—That it was open to any practitioner for reasons personal to himself to refuse to practise in a particular Court or before a particular Judge. But he can adopt this course either by refusing briefs in such Court, or before such Judge or, if he has accepted a brief or vakalatnama, by first properly discharging himself on due notice to the client and in the latter case to the Court. But concerted action by a whole body of legal practitioners to boycott a Judge or Court in protest against an alleged wrong of one of its members or in respect of its conduct in the administration of justice generally is not permissible because the Bar cannot constitute itself an authority to adjudicate on such grievance and its duty is not to impede the administration of justice by collective abstention from Court, but to seek relief by representation to the High Court.

It would not be possible to charge a legal practitioner with grossly improper conduct, whatever his liability to his client might be, if he omitted to carry out his duty to his client by reason of his genuine fear of any real and substantial injury, physical or otherwise, to himself or family. Nor would it make any difference if such fear were, in fact, unfounded if, in fact, it was sincerely entertained. But in these cases such risk or fear was not the operative cause on the minds of the Pleaders in inducing them not to attend. They bowed to the popular will not because they were afraid of it but because they approved of it.

That these proceedings were quasi-criminal proceedings in the sense that they might result in penalties, and not in the sense that all rules of procedure applicable in criminal trials are necessarily in force in a quasi-criminal proceeding. It was open to the Pleader to say nothing or to give no explanation, but if the Pleader did offer an explanation the court might take it into account in ascertaining whether the charge was made out. The onus undoubtedly was on the party making the charge.

That the previous petition of the client was evidence of a step taken in the proceeding and would be corroborative to the extent that there was evidence on the record which it might corroborate.

If a Pleader has accepted a vakalatnama in general and common form, the onus of proving any special contract accompanying the acceptance of the vakalatnama is on the Pleader. If again, it is alleged that the Pleader has discharged himself, he must show that he has properly done so with sufficient notice to his client and with intimation to Court.

If a Pleader stipulates for payment of fees before he does any work, he is not bound to do such work without such payment. If, however, he accepts a vakalatnama without such stipulation, he must proceed to represent him even though unpaid his fees until either his client discharges him or he properly discharges himself.

Per WOODROFFE and MOOKERJEE, JJ.—That the cases fall under both cls. (b) and (f) of sec. 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act, i.e., under cl. (b) in so far as they involved neglect of duty towards the client in accepting vakalatnama and without excuse not fulfilling the duties involved in such acceptance; and under cl. (f), in so far as the practitioners' conduct was directed against the Court by abstention from attendance on account of the hartal.

Per MOOKERJEE, J.—In view of the definite provisions for appointment and discharge of Pleaders [Vide Or. III, rr. 1 and 4 (1) and 4 (2), C. P. C.] a Pleader who has accepted a vakalatnama and filed it in Court is ordinarily bound to appear and conduct his case, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary. It is conceivable that the vakalatnama may not set out explicitly all the terms of the engagement between the Pleader and his client, and amongst these there may be implied terms sanctioned by well-known and well-established usage of the profession.

Re, GOPINATH MUDDUCK (1) and RAM KOER v. PUNA KOER (2) referred to.

The acceptance of a vakalatnama with the usual terms, which is filed by the Pleader in Court, prima facie places him under an obligation to appear and act on behalf of his client, and if he fails to do so, he must be ready to justify his conduct by proof that the client had failed to fulfil an implied term of the engagement.

MUNI v. VENKATA (3), KAILY v. CARAPIET (4), Re, A SOLICITOR (5) and SATISH v. SARADA (6) and several other cases referred to.

When a Pleader has accepted a vakalatnama with or without implied conditions, his liability continues, till he has discharged himself by recourse to the appropriate procedure. But this is not a matter solely between the Pleader and his client. The appointment of a Pleader when filed in Court with his acceptance continues in force until determined with the leave of the Court by a writing signed by the client or the Pleader as the case may be.

ATUL v. LAKSHAN (13) and PRABHULAL v. KUMAR KRISHNA (14) and several other cases referred to.

It is further well-settled that a legal practitioner must always give a reasonable notice of his withdrawal from the case to his clients.

The failure of a Pleader to appear to conduct the case before he has discharged himself in the manner provided by law, unless such failure can be justified, renders him liable to disciplinary action by the Court. Overriding pressure of circumstances beyond the control of the Pleader may be a reason justifying a failure to attend to a case, but to avail himself of it, it is essential that the Pleader should in full appreciation of his duty as the representative of his client and as an officer of the Court, have been sincerely anxious to protect the former and assist the latter.

The relation of Pleader and client involves the highest personal trust and confidence, so much so that it cannot be delegated without consent. A Pleader is more than a mere agent or servant of his client. He is also an officer of the Court and as such owes the duty of good faith and honourable dealing to the Court before which he practises his profession.

MURAGA v. RAMASAMI (22) referred to.

The practice of the law is in the nature of a franchise from the State conferred only for merit and may be revoked whenever misconduct renders the Pleader holding the license unfit to be entrusted with the powers and duties of his office.

Any attempt on the part of a Pleader to boycott the Courts or to obstruct the administration of justice by a resort to any form of device constitutes ground for disbarment or suspension.

Proceedings under sec. 14, Legal Practitioners Act, are not of a criminal nature. They are undoubtedly a judicial proceeding. They are neither civil suits nor criminal prosecutions, but special proceedings resulting from the inherent power of the Courts over their officers.

IN THE MATTER OF EMPEROR v. RAJANI KANTA BOSE.

The form of the proceeding, however, is not of controlling importance, so long as the essentials of fair notice and opportunity to be heard are present. The essence of the matter is that the Pleader must be allowed an opportunity of making his defence. It is not obligatory on the Pleader to submit a written defence or to be present at all.

But if he submits a written statement in answer to the charge, the Court is bound to take it into consideration and may draw such inference as may legitimately arise from its contents. In such a case it is not obligatory on the Court to rule out all conceivable hypothetical grounds which could have but have not been set up in answer to the charge.

GOVERNMENT PLEADER v. BHAGUBAI (26) and other cases referred to.

These were references under sec. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879) made by the District Judge of Noakhali, S. C. Ghosh, Esq., dated the 3rd August 1921.

The facts will fully appear from the judgments.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

Reference No. 4.

SANDERSON, C. J.—In this reference it appears that the Pleader D. P. Chakraborty was retained to make an application on one day only, (in the absence of the Pleader who filed the appeal).

This duty he duly performed and his retainer was discharged.

He was not further retained in the case, and consequently in our opinion there was no professional misconduct on his part.

In the case of D. P. Chakraborty therefore, the reference is discharged.

The case of R. K. Bose is different.

He was the Pleader for the Appellant whose appeal was fixed for hearing on the 2nd June 1921. The Pleader did not appear. Notice under the Legal Practitioners Act was served upon him, but he did not appear to show cause.

He apparently was present at the public meeting where the hartal was declared and took part in moving some resolution.

The resolution involved a boycott of the Courts by the Pleaders.

In his case there can be no doubt that he deliberately took part in the 'hartal' of the Pleaders. We have however been informed that R. K. Bose has ceased to practise as a Pleader and has not taken out a certificate this year.

Consequently, in our judgment, it is not necessary for us at present to enquire further into the case of R. K. Bose, or to take any steps in connection with this reference.

Reference No. 7.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a reference by the learned District Judge of Noakhali forwarding a report made by the Officiating Subordinate Judge under the Legal Practitioners Act 1879 with respect to two Pleaders of that Court, Rajani Kanta Nag and Preo Nath Roy Chowdhuri.

IN THE MATTER OF EMPEROR v. RAJANI KANTA BOSE.

The Subordinate Judge reported that the Pleaders committed grossly improper conduct in the discharge of their professional duty by not attending Court on the date in question and neglecting to do the necessary work on behalf of their client in the suit mentioned in the report on the 25th May 1921 though asked by their client : he further reported that they were guilty of misconduct within the meaning of sec. 13 (f) of the Legal Practitioners Act. The learned District Judge confirmed the report of the learned Subordinate Judge.

The charges against the Pleaders were in similar terms and the charge against Rajani Kanta Nag may be taken for the purpose of ascertaining the terms thereof : That charge is as follows :—“Whereas you being a Pleader of this Court joined the hartal and Non-co-operation movement and did not attend the Court along with other members of the local Bar in furtherance of the common object of the said movement and the boycott of Courts from 23rd May 1921 to 3rd June 1921 and whereas you were engaged as a Pleader for the Defendant in the marginally noted suit pending in this Court that was fixed for hearing on the date mentioned against it and whereas you wilfully neglected your client's work and acted to the prejudice of his interest by absenting yourself from the Court on that date you thereby committed grossly improper conduct in the discharge of your professional duty by neglecting your client's work and acting to the prejudice of his interest [sec. 13 (b)] and you have further been guilty of misconduct by joining the said movement started to boycott Courts and paralyse the work of the Courts and absenting yourself from the Court on those dates (23-5-21 to 3-6-21) without any lawful excuse.”

On the hearing of the charge the Pleaders filed written explanations. Rajani Kanta Nag, among other allegations, said that he was only instructed to file the written statement along with several other Pleaders for the Defendant No. 2, on the 17th February 1921, and that since the filing of the written statement the said Defendant neither consulted him on any date about his case nor made any tadbir for him. Further allegations are contained in paras. 3, 6, 9, 10 and 13, which are as follows :—

“ (3) That on 25th May 1921 the said Defendant No. 2 did neither pay me any fees nor did he even come to me to ask for any legal advice, nor did he instruct or ask me to make any tadbir in the case nor did the Defendant No. 2 even inform me that his case was fixed for hearing on 25th May 1921 and that I did not know what tadbir he actually made on that date. This Defendant No. 2 did not enter his case in my Sherista, he himself took all the previous dates and looked after the case.”

“ 6. That in the matter of not attending Courts during hartal there was no combination or common object amongst the members of the Bar, that I did not, with a view to the furtherance of the alleged common object of the hartal or Non-co-operation movement, absent myself from Court from 23rd May 1921 to 3rd June 1921. No such hartal or Non-co-operation movement was started by me or the Local Bar : Non-co-operation movement was started long before the period in question and it has no connection with my absence from Court.”

“ 9. That consequent upon the cooly affairs at Chandpur public feeling in this town ran so very high that the people, in one voice, resolved in sympathy for them to suspend all works for a time and desired the Pleaders, the Mukhtears, Merchants, Ghariwallas and others to follow their decision under threat of social punishment and humiliation and that it might be in obedience to this resolution that none of my clients asked me to appear in Court from 23rd May 1921 to 23rd June 1921."

"10. That the resolution referred to above was enforced so strictly that no gentlemen could dare disobey it with impunity, that men of position and honour had to suffer much inconvenience and humiliation during this period and that it was, in no way, possible for me to attend Court against such strong current of public opinion."

"13. That as a matter of fact I did not join any Non-co-operation movement, I am not a member of any Congress Committee and I do not mix in any politics."

Preo Nath Roy Chowdhuri's written explanation contained the following paragraphs :

"1. That Non-co-operation movement had nothing to do with the general hartal declared by the Noakhali public out of sympathy for ten garden coolies stranded at Chandpur. The Non-co-operation movement was started long before the said hartal and has no connection with the keeping away from the Court by your Petitioner."

"2. That a general hartal in all departments of public life was decided upon in a public meeting held at Noakhali and that no one could safely ignore or disregard the resolution of the indignant public and in fact the clients did not come to me on account of hartal during those days. Your Petitioner also considered it safe and desirable to bow down to the popular will when public feeling was running so very high and so your Petitioner did not attend Court during the period of the same hartal, that is, from 23rd May 1921 to 3rd June 1921."

"3. That in the matter of not attending the Court during the hartal there was no combination or common object among the members of the Bar and in fact the Bar Association passed no resolution at all in the matter."

"4. That it is not correct to say that the Petitioner joined the Non-co-operation movement alleged to have been started to boycott Courts and paralyse their work. As a matter of fact your Petitioner had been and is working as Pleader both before and after the hartal."

"5. That the client in question did not instruct me to attend the Court on the date fixed nor did he pay me for the same."

"9. That in O. C. Suit No. 1083 of 1920, pending in your Honour's Court, I was only instructed to file objection against the Plaintiff's prayer for temporary injunction and to take time for filing written statement on 11th January 1921; that since the filing of that objection I was not further instructed to do any other work for him, that on 25th May 1921 the said Defendant No. 2 did not pay me any fees nor did he even ask my legal advice."

"10. That Defendant No. 2 did not even inform me that his suit was fixed for hearing on 25th May 1921, he himself making tadbir in his cases and having not entered this case in my Sherista."

These two Pleaders and two others accepted a vakalatnama from the Defendant No. 2 in a Suit No. 1083 of 1920 on the 11th January 1921. The hearing of the suit was fixed for the 25th May 1921. Neither of the Pleaders attended the Court on that day, and the Defendant No. 2 filed a petition asking for a month's adjournment on account of the hartal which had begun on the 23rd May 1921 and which continued until the 3rd June 1921, and in consequence of which the Pleaders did not attend the Courts.

The petition is as follows :—"To-day is the date of the above-mentioned suit. To-day I went to Pleader's basha with copy of issue to file list of witnesses; making hartal in the course of Non-co-operation no Pleader looked into any papers. I pray for one month's adjournment in order to enable my Pleaders to consult with reference to suit papers as to what evidence should be adduced on my behalf and to file list of witnesses. Be it known that for the reasons stated above none of the Pleaders not having signed the petition I file this petition signing it myself. Dated 25th May 1921."

The Defendant when cross-examined said that Rajani Mitter was his retained Pleader: and that he did not go to the houses of the two Pleaders, concerned in this reference nor to the house of his Pleader, meaning thereby, as I understand, Rajani Mitter, and that he did not instruct the two Pleaders to work for him on the 25th May 1921.

The learned Judge however said that he was unable to accept this evidence, as the witness was in his opinion, evidently trying to save the Pleaders; and he found as a fact that the Pleaders were asked to do the necessary work on behalf of the Defendant No. 2 on the 25th May 1921.

I see no reason for disagreeing with this finding of fact, and in my judgment it must be taken for the purpose of this case that the Pleaders were asked to attend Court on the 25th May 1921 and that they refused to do so. The question therefore arises whether they were justified in so refusing. I have no doubt that the reason for their refusal was the hartal which was then in force. On account of an incident in connection with some coolies at Chandpur, resolutions had been passed at a public meeting in Noakhali, one of which was to the effect that the Pleaders should not attend the Courts. In consequence of this the Pleaders in a body, with one or two exceptions, abstained from attending the Courts.

Each of the two Pleaders, as already mentioned, stated in his explanation that he had been instructed only in respect of a particular matter, in the suit and it was argued that they were under no duty to attend the Court on the day in question.

I cannot accept that contention. The Pleaders had accepted the vakalatnama and it is proved, in my opinion, that they were asked by the Defendant No. 2 to go to Court and protect his interests, and that they refused. In my judgment it was their duty to do so, unless it is proved that their obligations towards their client, entailed by the acceptance of the vakalatnama, were limited by a special arrangement, accompanying the acceptance of the vakalatnama. No such special arrangement has been proved by the Pleaders, upon whom the onus of proving it lay.

It was then said that no fees were paid for their attendance at Court on the 25th May 1921. No proof has been given that any fee was asked or that there was any arrangement that a fee should be paid before the Pleaders would attend Court. In the absence of such proof the mere fact that no fee was tendered or paid is, in my judgment, no justification for this refusal to attend to their client's further interests.

Further, having regard to the facts of the case and the statements in the written explanations of the two Pleaders, I have no doubt that even if a fee had been offered, they would not have accepted it or attended the Court.

It was then argued that there was no evidence of the common object alleged in the charge.

I agree that it has not been strictly proved that the Pleaders took part in what has come to be called the "Non-co-operation" movement.

In my judgment, however, it has been proved that the Pleaders did join in the

IN THE MATTER OF EMPEROR v. RAJANI KANTA BOSE.

'hartal,' one object of which was to boycott the Courts.

The excuses put forward in the written explanations of the Pleaders, in my opinion, cannot be accepted. In the one case, the Pleader stated that he did not attend the Court for fear of being put to great inconvenience and humiliation by the irritated public. In the other case the Pleader stated that he considered it safe and desirable to bow down to the popular will when public feeling was running so very high and so he did not attend Court during the period of the hartal.

The Pleaders must be judged by their conduct. The facts of the case do not show that there was any real risk of physical danger to them if they had attended the Court. They never made any attempt to do so. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the plea that they were threatened with social punishment was a lame excuse. One Pleader allowed the fear of "inconvenience and humiliation" to override his duty to his client and to the Court. The other considered it "safe and desirable to bow down to the popular will" rather than do his duty to his client and to the Court. There being no adequate reason for the abstention from the Court, I regret to have to come to the conclusion that the Pleaders willingly acquiesced in, even if they did not actually sympathise with, the boycott of the Courts. By so doing they lent support to the movement, which was calculated to paralyse the administration of justice.

In my judgment therefore the Pleaders concerned in the Reference were guilty of grossly improper conduct within the meaning of cl. (b) of sec. 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act, and of such misconduct as would bring their case within cl. (f) of the same section.

Reference No. 8.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a reference by the learned District Judge of Noakhali forwarding a report of the Subordinate Judge under the Legal Practitioners Act. The charge was as follows :—"Whereas you being a Pleader of this Court joined the hartal and Non-co-operation movement and did not attend the Court along with other members of the Local Bar in furtherance of the common object of the said movement and the boycott of Courts from 23rd May 1921 to 3rd June 1921 and whereas you were engaged as a Pleader for the Plaintiff in the marginally noted suit pending in this Court that was fixed for hearing on the date mentioned against it and whereas you wilfully neglected your client's work and acted to the prejudice of his interest by absenting yourself from the Court on that date, you thereby committed grossly improper conduct in the discharge of your professional duty by neglecting your client's work and acting to the prejudice of his interest [sec. 13 (b)] and you have further been guilty of misconduct by joining the said movement started to boycott Courts and paralyse the work of the Courts and absenting yourself from the Court on those dates (23rd May 1921 to 3rd June 1921) without any lawful excuse [sec. 13 (f)]."

The report of the Subordinate Judge was that the Pleader was guilty of grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty within the meaning of cl. (b) of sec. 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act and of misconduct within cl. (f) of the said section.

The learned District Judge concluded his reference as follows :—"The Opposite Party, as such Pleader, is liable to some punishment, however light, under sec.

IN THE MATTER OF EMPEROR v. RAJANI KANTA BOSE.

14 of the Legal Practitioners Act : as he, in my opinion, has brought himself within the disciplinary jurisdiction of the High Court and his misconduct which falls within clause (f) of sec. 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act is grave enough to deserve it. But I cannot say that his conduct deserves severe punishment."

Notice of the charge was given to the Pleader on the 12th July 1921, and on the 30th July 1921 the Pleader filed an explanation to which reference will be made later.

The material facts in this case are the following : one Jashada Kumar Roy and two of his brothers filed a mortgage suit in the Court at Noakhali. In this suit the Pleader Annada Charan Roy and another Pleader A. M. Bose accepted a rakalat-nama from Jashada Kumar Roy in January and February 1921 respectively. The 2nd June 1921 was fixed for the hearing of the suit : on that day Jashada Kumar Roy filed a petition in the Court which was as follows :—" On account of hartal of the Pleaders the witnesses or the Pleaders of the Plaintiffs in the above suit decline to attend the Court. The Plaintiffs are therefore unable to prove their case or to conduct it otherwise. So it is humbly prayed that the Court be pleased to adjourn the suit to some other date and grant the Plaintiffs ten days' time to produce witnesses." The result was that the hearing of the suit had to be adjourned.

At the hearing of the charge against the Pleader, Jashada Kumar Roy gave evidence and said that the contents of his petition were true to his own knowledge.

It was argued by the learned Vakil for the Pleader that though it was permissible to prove the fact of the filing of the petition, the contents of this petition were inadmissible in evidence, and that the case must be decided upon the verbal evidence of Jashada Kumar Roy, and that as he said he had suffered no loss and had no complaint to make against his Pleader, the reference should be refused.

Jashada Kumar Roy is a cousin of the Pleader Annada Charan Roy and the learned District Judge has held that apparently interest for his cousin had made him forget what he had said in his petition.

In my judgment the contents of the petition were admissible in evidence. In my opinion it was admissible under sec. 157 of the Evidence Act in corroboration of the evidence which the witness had already given at the time when his attention was directed to the contents of the petition and when he said that the contents were true to his own knowledge. It is also to be noted that the petition was the foundation of the proceedings, and that no objection was raised to the admission of the evidence.

In my judgment it is clear that in this case the Pleader declined to attend the Court on account of the hartal of the Pleaders.

In the course of the argument, the learned Vakil for the Pleader informed us that "hartal" meant "Strike."

This conclusion is not based upon the statements in the petition only.

There is other evidence in this case. It appears that on the 22nd May 1921 a meeting was held in the town and resolutions were passed, one of which was that Pleaders and Mukhtears should not attend the Courts. This meeting was held to show sympathy in respect of an incident which had occurred at Chandpur. The object of such a resolution could only be to boycott the Courts and so interfere with the administration of justice. On the 23rd May 1921 the Pleaders in a body, with the exception of the Government Pleader and Public Prosecutor, abstained from attending the Courts. This abstention lasted until the 3rd June 1921. There was an informal gathering of some Pleaders in the Bar Library called by the Pleader Annada Charan Roy, whose conduct is now under consideration, at which meeting the opinion was expressed by the majority that "as the public feeling is very high it is not safe to disobey."

These facts show conclusively that it was in consequence of the hartal that Annada Charan Roy did not attend to Jashada Kumar Roy's suit on the 2nd June and unless good cause can be shown for his abstention, in my judgment he must be held guilty of grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty to his client.

It was urged by the learned Vakil for the Pleader that the Pleader was under no duty to appear in the Court on the 2nd June 1921. He argued that the vakalatnama was no more than an authority to the Pleader to act. I cannot accept this contention. In this case the Pleader has not proved any special arrangement and in my judgment the acceptance of the vakalatnama in the suit by the Pleader entailed a duty upon the Pleader to attend the Court on the day fixed for the hearing of the suit or at least to make arrangements with the other Pleaders who had accepted the vakalatnama to protect the interests of the client even if the client had not specially requested the Pleader's services for the 2nd June. There is no question in this case of whether a proper fee was tendered by the client, because the Pleader in question, being related to the client, was working "gratis" for him.

It is not however necessary to pursue the consideration of the point further, for on the facts of this case I am satisfied that the client did request the Pleader to attend the Court on the 2nd June 1921 and that the Pleader declined on account of the hartal.

It was then urged that the client was satisfied that the Pleader should not act and consequently it was a matter between the client and his Pleader and not a matter for the Court.

I cannot accept this contention. In the first place I am not prepared to hold that the Pleader can divest himself of his duty arising by the acceptance of the vakalatnama without the leave of the Court.

The provisions of Or. III, r. 4 (1) and (2) of the Civil Procedure Code support the view that unless and until the conditions specified in that rule are complied with, the duties and obligations of the Pleader will remain.

But it is not necessary to decide this point now, for on the facts of this case, in my judgment, it cannot be said that the Pleader discharged himself with the consent of the client.

The Pleader was bound to give the client reasonable notice so as to afford the client an opportunity of obtaining other legal assistance.

In this case, the Pleader must have known that it was impossible for his client to obtain such assistance on the 2nd June 1921: all the Pleaders were observing the "hartal" except the Government Pleader and Public Prosecutor, and the client had no option except to bow to the inevitable and to present his petition himself.

It was then urged that although the Pleader absented himself from Court, and although his absence was in consequence of the hartal, there was no evidence of his joining the hartal.

I put aside the question of the "Non-co-operation movement" as there is no evidence against the Pleader in this respect.

IN THE MATTER OF EMPEROR v. RAJANI KANTA BOSE.

I am satisfied however that there was a hartal: one of the objects of that hartal was to boycott the Courts: there is no evidence that the Pleader took part in promoting the hartal, but to my mind it is clear that he abstained from going to the Court on the 2nd June in consequence of the hartal: he took part in the discussion in the Bar Library, and he acquiesced in the hartal, the result of which was that not a single Pleader, except the two already mentioned, attended the Courts. He must have known that the observance of the hartal would result in a boycott of the Courts, and is a grave interference with the administration of justice. His intention must be gathered from his acts, and in my judgment he must be held to have intended to take part in the hartal to boycott the Courts.

It was however said that he did this through fear of the consequences which would ensue if he did attend to his duties as Pleader. The material statements in his explanation in this respect are paras. 2 and 3, which are as follows:—

“That a general hartal in all departments of public life was decided upon in a public meeting held at Noakhali and that no one could safely ignore or disregard the resolution of the indignant public. I also considered it safe and desirable to bow down to the popular will when public feeling was running so very high and so I did not attend Court during the period of the said hartal.”

I am by no means satisfied that the conditions in Noakhali were such as to render the Pleader's attendance to his duties unsafe during the hartal. There is no suggestion that he made any attempt to attend the Court though he was able to go to the Bar Library which, we were told, is adjacent to the Court. Other people, as already mentioned, did attend the Courts and the learned Subordinate Judge characterised the threat of social punishment as an “empty threat.”

The town meeting was held on the 22nd May 1921. The very next day all the Pleaders, except those two already mentioned, abstained from attending the Courts. We were informed that there are about 70 Pleaders in Noakhali. I cannot believe that they were all so devoid of courage that no one of them dared to venture to attend to his work and duties as a Pleader.

The facts of this case point to the conclusion that there was a common object, viz., the boycott of the Courts, and that in pursuance of that object the Pleader in this case deliberately abstained from discharging his professional duty. In my judgment therefore the Pleader failed in his duty both to his client and to the Court and he was guilty of grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty within cl. (b) of sec. 13 and of such misconduct as would bring his case within the meaning of cl. (f) of the said section.

Reference No. 9.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a reference by the learned District Judge of Noakhali under sec. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act, 1879.

The learned Judge forwarded with his reference a report of the learned Munsif of the 3rd Court.

The charge was:—

“Whereas you being enrolled as a Pleader and authorised to act as such in this Court, absented yourself from Court,

IN THE MATTER OF EMPEROR v. RAJANI KANTA BOSE.

Misc. Case
No. 419 of 1921
(Or. XXI, r. 90,
O. P. C.)

contrary to the wishes of your client and to the prejudice of his interests, on 28th and 30th May 1921, when the case noted in the margin, in which you were engaged for the Petitioner was called on, you are guilty of grossly improper conduct in the discharge of your professional duties within the meaning of sec. 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act and have rendered yourself liable to be reported to the High Court under sec. 14 of the said Act."

The learned Munsif held that the charge had been established and reported the case to the High Court.

The learned District Judge concluded his reference by saying: "The Opposite Party, as such Pleader, is liable to some punishment, however light, under sec. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act, as he, in my opinion, has brought himself within the disciplinary jurisdiction of the High Court, and his misconduct which falls within cl. (f) of sec. 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act is grave enough to deserve the punishment."

"But I cannot say that his conduct deserves severe punishment."

A preliminary point was taken by the learned Vakil appearing for the Pleader. He pointed out that the learned Munsif had found the Pleader to be guilty of "grossly improper conduct" within the meaning of sec. 13 (b) and the learned Judge had held the Pleader to be guilty of misconduct within sec. 13 (f) and that therefore as the report of the Munsif and the reference of the Judge did not agree, the reference should not be acted on by the High Court. In my judgment there is no ground for such a contention.

It is clear from the terms of sec. 14 that the report of the learned Munsif is to be made to the High Court. The section however provides that the report of the learned Munsif should be made through the District Judge and that such report should be accompanied by the opinion of the District Judge through whom it is made. This was probably provided for the purpose of giving the High Court the benefit of the District Judge's opinion, and also as an additional protection to the person, whose case might be under consideration.

The report of the learned Munsif, having been made, has to come to the High Court, with the addition of the opinion of the District Judge, through whom it had to be made, and it rests with the High Court to decide what action, if any, is to be taken in respect of the learned Munsif's report. In my judgment the proceedings are in order in this respect, and the point taken by the learned Vakil has no foundation.

Notice of the charge was given to the Pleader on the 12th July 1921, and, on the 1st August 1921, the Pleader filed an explanation to which I shall refer later.

The material facts which led up to these proceedings were as follows:—

One Azamuddin, an illiterate agriculturist, had made an application to the Court for setting aside a sale. On the evidence it is clear, in my judgment, that S. K. Nag acted as Pleader for Azamuddin in connection with that application. The 29th May 1921 was fixed for the hearing of that application. On the morning of that day, Azamuddin, went to Noakhali and to the house of S. K. Nag and asked him to sign and move a petition in Court on his behalf.

The evidence of Azamuddin is that "the Pleader said he would not come to Court or sign my petition or hajirah. His clerk said he would not write my petition. I am an illiterate man, I could not write a petition or a hajirah. They told me to come to Court. I came to Court but could not take any steps. I found no Pleader or Pleader's clerk in Court that day. I had engaged no other Pleader in my case except Surendra Babu. I had requested my Pleader to come to Court. I could not know the result that day."

It appears that Azamuddin went to the Court and waited about until 3-30 p.m. He asked the Peshkar to give him the adjourned date of the case. The Peshkar wanted the number of the case and said he could not find the case without the number. This Azamuddin was not able to supply. The number was noted in the diary of the Pleader's clerk, but neither the Pleader nor his clerk had even taken the trouble to give Azamuddin the number of his case. The result was that the case was called on, and as no one appeared it was adjourned until Monday the 30th May 1921. This was without the knowledge of Azamuddin, and he returned to his home without knowing what had been done about his case.

On Monday the 30th May, the case was again called on, and as no one appeared the application was dismissed.

On the Wednesday or the Thursday following, Azamuddin again went to Noakhali and learnt from the Pleader's clerk that his case had been dismissed for default.

On the 14th June 1921 a petition was filed praying for the restoration of the application which had been dismissed on the 30th May 1921.

This petition was signed by the Pleader S. K. Nag.

The petition is as follows :—

"1. The Petitioner filed in this Court against the Opposite Party Miscellaneous Case No. 419 of 1920 for setting aside sale. But that case having been struck off, on 30th May 1921, for default on account of the absence of both the parties, the Petitioner has sustained a heavy loss.

"2. The Petitioner himself came to Noakhali on the date fixed, the 28th May 1921, but as hartal prevailed at that time in the town and as Pleaders and clerks did not attend Court and as the Petitioner himself does not know how to read and write he could not take any step, and having loitered the whole day in the Court went home without knowing the date. It is now seen that the above case was adjourned to 30th May 1921 and struck off for default in the absence of both the parties. The Petitioner could not comprehend that the date would be adjourned after two days. If the Petitioner could know that the case would be fixed for 30th May 1921 he would surely have attended the Court and the case would be granted ex parte.

"So the Petition for revival is fit to be granted.

"3. The cause of action has arisen from 30th May 1921 when the case was struck off.

4. So it is prayed :—

"(Ka). That on taking evidence the prayer for revival be granted and Misc. Case No. 419 of 1920 be restored to its Original number and justice done."

It is to be noted that the Pleader by signing the petition makes himself responsible for two material statements :—first, that in consequence of the application to set aside the sale being dismissed, the Petitioner (Azamuddin) had sustained a heavy loss, and secondly, that the cause of this heavy loss was that hartal prevailed at the time and Pleaders and clerks did not attend Court, and that as the Petitioner could neither read nor write he could not take any step. I am not aware whether the matter was set right as neither side was able to inform the Court what had been the result of the petition.

In my judgment it is clear that on the 28th May 1921 S. K. Nag was the sole Pleader for Azamuddin in connection with the application to set aside the sale : that was the day fixed for the hearing of the case ; Azamuddin requested him to go to Court and file a petition, the Pleader refused. He was asked to sign a petition, the Pleader refused : the Pleader's clerk would not even write out the petition.

The Pleader must have known that Azamuddin was illiterate : he must have known that unless he complied with Azamuddin's request, Azamuddin's application to set aside the sale would be in jeopardy, and Azamuddin's interests might be seriously prejudiced ; further he must have known that as there was a hartal, no other Pleader or Mukhtear would be available ; and unless some valid excuse can be found, in my judgment his conduct was most reprehensible.

Several technical points were raised by the learned Vakil for the Pleader, all of which in my judgment had no substance in them, and the fact that such points were taken on his behalf is a strong indication that the Pleader must have felt that on the facts there was no justification for his conduct and it is a matter of surprise to me that no word of regret for the unfortunate position, in which he placed his client, was forthcoming.

It was first argued that the vakalatnama was not produced : to my mind that is immaterial ; it was proved by Azamuddin that S. K. Nag was his Pleader in the "original case for setting aside the sale" and the learned Vakil for the Pleader admitted in this Court that on the 28th May he was Azamuddin's Pleader in that matter.

It was next argued that there was no evidence of the Pleader's duty on the 28th May : in my judgment it is not necessary in this case to define the duties of a Pleader generally : I merely mention this so that I may make it clear that I do not adopt the suggestion which has been made that a vakalatnama is merely an authority to act ; in my judgment it is much more than that and the acceptance of it entails duty on the part of the Pleader to his client. In this case it is not necessary to say more.

On the facts of this case, in my judgment, there can be no doubt it was the duty of the Pleader to give his assistance on the 28th May, when asked by Azamuddin so to do, and to take such steps as were necessary to protect his client's interests.

Another argument was raised that no fee was paid by Azamuddin to the Pleader on the 28th May and therefore he was not bound to act as Pleader. In my judgment this argument was without any foundation : in the first place Azamuddin's evidence was that the Pleader did not ask for any fee on the 28th : the real reason why the Pleader refused to act, was undoubtedly the hartal which was then going on, and the learned Vakil when asked by one of my learned brothers if the Pleader would have accepted a fee, if it had been offered to him, had to admit that "probably" he would not have accepted it. I think instead of using the word "probably" he might have used the word "certainly."

It was then argued that the Pleader had discharged himself on the 28th May and that the client agreed to such discharge. It is difficult to treat such an argument seriously : if the Pleader wished to discharge himself, he was bound to give his client reasonable notice : his refusal to act was on the morning of the 28th May : the case was fixed for that day, the Pleader knew his client could get no other advice on that day because of the hartal, and that he was an illiterate man, who could neither read nor write : it can not possibly be held that the notice was reasonable.

It is then said the client agreed to the discharge. There is no evidence of such agreement by the client : on the contrary the evidence is all the other way and it is clear that Azamuddin wanted the Pleader to go to Court : when the Pleader refused, Azamuddin had no alternative but to go to Court himself, and to my mind there is no ground for the suggestion that he agreed to the discharge of the Pleader.

Then it was said that there was no evidence that the Court made any order on the 28th May that the Pleader should take action on the 30th. That is true, but, in my judgment, it is immaterial : the facts show that the Pleader's absence on the 28th May was responsible for the dismissal on the 30th May.

There remains to be considered the explanation of the Pleader.

It appears that public meetings were held at Noakhali in respect of an incident at Chandpur, and resolutions were passed : one being to the effect that Pleaders and Mukhtears should not attend the Courts.

The learned Munsif said in his report that the Pleaders in a body, with the exception of the Government Pleader, did not attend Court.

The Pleader in para. 9 of his explanation stated as follows :—

“That a general hartal in all departments of public life was decided upon in a public meeting held at Noakhali as a token of sympathy for the ill-treated, stranded coolies at Chandpur, and no one could safely ignore or disregard the resolutions of the indignant public, I also considered it safe and desirable to bow down to the popular will when public feeling was running so very high, and so I did not attend Court during the said hartal.”

The learned Munsif who was himself on the spot, held that he was not satisfied that the conditions were such as to render the Pleader's attendance at Court unsafe during the hartal; and, as far as I can judge from the evidence, I entirely agree with him. The Government Officers, including the ministerial and menial staff, and the District Board and Municipal Officers regularly attended their offices during the hartal. The learned Munsif further held that the alleged threats were of no practical consequence and that the Pleaders could really have no apprehension of danger in attending Courts. I agree with this finding also. In my judgment it is clear that the Pleader acquiesced in the hartal : he made no effort to go to Court. He said, “he considered it safe and desirable to bow down to the popular will when the public feeling was running so very high and so he did not attend Court during the said hartal.”

The facts as found were no justification of his conduct, and the fact that he went so far as to refuse to sign the client's petition, which he could have done in his own house, shows that he was acquiescing in, if not sympathising with, the hartal, one object of which was that the Pleaders should boycott the Courts and so bring the administration of justice to a standstill.

The Pleader had a duty not only towards his client but also towards the Court and it was clearly his duty to co-operate with the Court in orderly and pure administration of justice.

The Pleader has failed altogether in showing any justification for his refusal to act for his client, and to attend the Court ; and in my judgment he was guilty of grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty within cl. (b) of sec. 13 and of such misconduct as would bring his case within cl. (f) of the same section.

Reference Nos. 4, 7, 8 and 9.

WOODROFFE, J.—These references have been heard separately but they have certain points in common to which I address myself. The Pleaders concerned are charged with furthering a hartal or strike by abstaining from Court in breach of their duty towards their clients and the Courts. The hartal was proclaimed by a public meeting as an expression of public feeling regarding the treatment of certain tea garden coolies at Chandpur near Noakhali. There is no evidence to show that this hartal was part of or connected with the political movement known as the Non-co-operation movement, though as a method of expressing public opinion it may have had the actions of some of those who call themselves followers of the movement as an exemplar.

No one is obliged to be a legal practitioner or (if he qualifies himself as such) to practise. But if he becomes a legal practitioner, and holds himself out for and accepts employment he becomes an officer in a judicial system in which his position, rights and duties and the authority to which he is subject are determined. A person may stand out of such a system but if he enters it he is bound by the rules and must submit to the authority to which that system subjects him. It is obvious that he cannot act or combine with others to act against such authority. If the legal practitioner has a grievance and such grievance arises out of matters with which the Court is concerned, he must seek the remedy from the judicial authority appropriate to the particular case just as the remedy for other grievances should be sought from the administrative authority concerned. It follows that a legal practitioner cannot join in an action to boycott the Court or any particular Judge because of any grievances, real or alleged, whether touching the Courts or of a political or other character.

Action to boycott may be manifested either by initiating, preaching or otherwise furthering the boycott such as, (to deal with the matter before us) refusing without justifying reason to attend Court when bound to do so. The statement is so qualified because there is no obligation to attend the Court provided that the legal practitioner is not bound to his client and the Court to do so. The issue therefore which arises in the cases is whether there is any overt act proved of the alleged intention to boycott the Courts which is the gravamen of the charge. And the chief question again here is whether an obligation to attend Court is established and if so, whether there was lawful excuse for the non-attendance which is admitted. For the Pleaders charged may either show, as they attempt to do, that they were not bound to attend Court and that if they were, the promulgation of a public hartal directed, amongst others, against the Courts was a sufficient excuse for such non-attendance.

I think it is open to any practitioner for reasons personal to himself to refuse to practise in a particular Court or before a particular Judge. But he can only adopt this course either by refusing briefs in such Court, or before such Judge, or if he has accepted a brief or vakalatnama, by first properly discharging himself on due notice to the client and in the latter case to the Court. But concerted action by a whole body of legal practitioners to boycott a Judge or Court in protest against an alleged wrong of one of its members or in respect of its conduct of the administration of justice generally is not permissible because the Bar in any such case cannot constitute itself an authority to adjudge on such grievance and its duty is not to impede the administration of justice by collective abstention from Court, but to make its representation through (if there be one) its Association to the High Court which has superintendence in such matters. In the present case moreover the abstention is alleged to have been due to causes wholly extrinsic to the administration of justice; namely, the action of the civil administration in regard to some tea garden coolies, a matter in which the Pleaders concerned and others may have been rightly interested in their personal capacity but with which, qua Pleaders, and as a body of legal practitioners, they were not concerned.

The common form of defence in all the cases is that since public opinion was running so high in sympathy with the stranded tea garden coolies at Chandpur, no one could safely ignore or disregard the united voice of the indignant public and therefore the Pleader in question "considered it safe and desirable to bow down to the popular will" and did not dare to attend Court. Now assuming that a Pleader was otherwise under an obligation to attend Court on behalf of his client he could successfully plead as a lawful excuse that he was by circumstances, not under his control, prevented from doing so. Thus a Pleader could obviously not be charged with grossly improper professional conduct because he did not work for his clients at the risk of receiving physical injury to himself. Nor might such excuse be, in my opinion, limited to such injury. We are not concerned in this case nor likely to be concerned in others, with outcasting strictly so called, because outcasting takes place in consequence of breach of caste rules which in no way touch such a matter as that before us. But the consequence of the ancient outcasting have been in recent times extended to cases of difference of political opinion. That is a party may say that if another person or party does not do, or does not abstain from doing what the first party wants or does not want done, then the second party will be subject to the penalties of the old outcasting or excommunication. The penalties may remain the same, though the motive differs, in one case being of a caste and in the other of a political nature. To these penalties others may be added such as humiliation or insult. It may be true, as the learned Standing Counsel said, that so far as the old outcasting is concerned, the effect of it is much diminished in modern life in the large cities and it may be true that the effect of a political boycott is less in those cities than in the towns such as Noakhali and villages. But in these smaller towns and villages the menace conveyed by the threat of a boycott may be very great and might in my opinion exempt a legal practitioner from a charge of misconduct if he feared to brave it. To hold otherwise would be to make unwillingness to face a real danger or lack of courage, grossly improper conduct in the discharge of professional duty which is not in my opinion the law. In my opinion it would not be possible to charge a legal practitioner with grossly improper conduct, whatever his liability to his client might be, if he omitted to carry out his duty to his client by reason of his genuine fear of any real and substantial injury, physical or otherwise, to himself or family. Nor, in my opinion, would it make any difference if such fear were, in fact, unfounded if, in fact, it was sincerely entertained. And this for the reason that the Courts cannot punish a legal practitioner for grossly improper conduct because his apprehensions were beside the mark or he was devoid of courage. In such a case his client might have a remedy against him for neglect of a duty which his apprehensions did not excuse. But it would not be ground for the Court's action by way of punishment for grossly improper conduct. It might of course be that the apprehensions were so little-founded as to give rise to the inference that they could not have been sincerely entertained. But if sincerely entertained then no case of professional misconduct would be in my opinion made out,

IN THE MATTER OF EMPEROR v. RAJANI KANTA BOSE.

The question then which in my opinion we have to determine in these cases, is whether the Pleaders did not attend Court (assuming for the moment that they were bound to do so) because they were really afraid of the consequences which they thought might follow. This we must ascertain from the statements of the Pleaders in showing cause, their own conduct and the other evidence. In the first place these statements say that it was considered safe and "desirable" to bow down to the popular will. The latter would evidence an intention to adopt the resolution of that will and sympathy with it. The unanimity as regards the danger suggests the same conclusion. I think that the Pleaders were in sympathy with the hartal, evidenced by, amongst other things, their failure (though being a considerable and important body of the general public) to oppose it. It is easy under such circumstances to understand that the alleged consequences of disobedience were considered as being of no account. If it were a matter of safety only and not also desirability, it might well have been expected (I speak of the circumstances in these cases) that varying opinions would have been entertained in respect of the dangers to be incurred as the result of disobedience to the popular will. I have referred to the circumstances of this case because it might, as an abstract proposition, be argued that the general consensus of opinion was evidence of a real peril. In the present case it is denied that the boycott was part of the widespread, permanent and organised Non-co-operation movement but the strike arose out of a passing and local incident. The strike is said to have been an expression of the popular will. But the considerable body of Pleaders at Nookhali were leading members of the community whose non-co-operation with the movement might have checked it, if not brought it to an end. It does not seem to me open to a considerable body of leading citizens to say that they were in fear of the consequences of disobedience to the popular will when, instead of opposing as they might have done successfully the menace of it, they gave it further weight by rendering it an unnecessary obeisance. We find that, notwithstanding it is reasonable to expect some difference of opinion as to the reality of the menace, a difference which might be due both to judgment and degree of courage, practically all the Pleaders abstained from attendance at Court. In one of the references, (9), the Pleader charged declined even to sign a petition in his own house showing that it was not in that particular instance a case of apprehension of danger in going out and attending Courts. And in other cases it seems to me that the refusal to attend was due to sympathy with the objects of the hartal and not to fear of the consequences of disobeying it. And what were these consequences in fact? One person was molested by having his bicycle taken from him in attending Court, the Government Pleader who with the Public Prosecutor attended Court was fined Rs. 2 by the "public" (whether it was paid or not does not appear) and had some night-soil thrown into his compound, another man was fined by the "public" Rs. 5 and the like. Large numbers of people carried on, and amongst these the Municipal mehtars made more decent and mannerly disposal of night-soil, doing, as did others, their service in the ordinary way. The whole affair was over within a fortnight. On these facts the conclusions at which I arrive is, firstly, that whatever may have been the risk involved, it was not sufficient to exempt the Pleaders from the performance of their duty and might have been nothing at all had the whole body of Pleaders (who appear to be all East Bengal men, a people not deficient in courage) attended Court instead of furthering and strengthening the boycott by their absence; and, secondly, that such risk, if any, was not the operative cause on the minds of the Pleaders in inducing them not to attend. They did not, in my opinion, attend, not because they were in fear of any penalties for doing so but because they were in sympathy with the cause of and object of the hartal. To put the matter concisely they bowed to the popular will not because they were afraid of it but because they approved of it.

That will was an expression of public feeling as regards the treatment of the stranded coolies. Now here we have no concern with the question of such treatment. I will however assume for the purposes of the judgment that the sympathy which the Indian public showed for the coolies was well-founded: still that is obviously no excuse. Whatever sympathy these Pleaders may have had for the coolies should not have been allowed to override their duty towards their client and towards the Court. If then their engagement to their clients so demanded they were obliged to attend Court.

The next question is whether they were so bound?

I have hitherto dealt with certain general principles affecting all the cases and to these I will limit my observations on this second part of the case. The details peculiar to each case are dealt with in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice whose final conclusions on the facts I adopt. I add only some observations on the general principles involved and which have been referred to before us.

I am of opinion that these proceedings are (as it has been contended and conceded) quasi-criminal in the sense that they may result in penalties. I am not prepared however without further argument to hold with the decision of the Madras High Court cited to us that a Pleader cannot be examined on oath if he so wishes. I mention the point without discussing or deciding it for that is not here necessary.

Quasi-criminal proceedings are not (as the word shows) criminal proceedings in the sense that all rules of procedure applicable in criminal trials are necessarily in force in a quasi-criminal proceeding. This question is not of much moment here for reasons next stated. Thus I think that in such a proceeding as this it is open to the Pleader charged to say nothing, to give no explanation, to adduce no evidence, to refuse to be examined on oath or otherwise and to say to the Court proceeding against him: "Prove your case." This is a course legally open to him though, seeing that the Pleader is an officer of Court, I cannot say it is a proper course and certainly not a wise one if the Pleader has any defence. I cannot conceive that a legal practitioner who has a real defence on the merits will not disclose every fact and take every step to prove it. When there is no defence or the defence is doubtful it may be that a legal practitioner may adopt the course taken by a guilty accused in a criminal trial. Anyhow the prosecuting party must prove its case. If however (as here) the Pleaders charged do offer an explanation, the Court may take it into account in ascertaining whether the charge is made out. This is of some importance in the present case as in deciding whether the case is made out against each Pleader the latter's statement may be considered. The onus undoubtedly again is on the party making the charge, though I think that if the Pleader does offer an explanation or evidence the Court may, in considering whether the charge is proved, take into account such explanation and must consider such evidence. A point of evidence was taken in the Reference No. 8 against the admissibility of the previous petition of the client which it was said was only admissible in contradiction or corroboration of previous testimony and that there was nothing in the evidence to corroborate. I think the petition was improperly used, for the question by which it was made evidence was a leading one. But this rather goes to the weight of the evidence so elicited than its admissibility. And the matter of weight I have considered, for it may be that the question was put in this form to bind a witness who was disposed to go back on what he had previously said. But in law the effect was the same as if without the petition being put in or shown, the witness was asked whether he did not make each of the statements in it. An affirmative answer made the petition, though improperly elicited, substantive evidence in the case. It became incorporated with and part of the evidence taken on oath. The petition was of course evidence of a step taken in the proceeding and would be corroborative to the extent that there was evidence on the record which it might corroborate.

The evidence must doubtless establish the practitioner's guilt beyond all reasonable doubt. If it be said that the trial being of a quasi-criminal character the evidence must be incompatible with any theory of the innocence of the accused the answer I think is that we may in this case consider, as I have said, both the evidence offered against the Pleader and his answer to the charge. Further it may be (as urged) that the mere acceptance of a vakalatnama does not bind the Pleader to appear on every day of the proceeding in which it is given, for the giving of the vakalatnama may be accompanied by special terms or other circumstances may affect the matter. But I am of opinion that all that the prosecution has to prove is a prima facie case and that when as here (except in Reference No. 9 where it was unnecessary) it is shown that a Pleader has accepted a vakalatnama in a general and common form, this is sufficient to start the case against him, and if it be desired to show that there was any special contract accompanying the acceptance of the vakalatnamas the burden of proving this, as a matter specially within his knowledge, is on the Pleader. If again it is alleged that the Pleader who has accepted a vakalatnama has discharged himself, he must show that he has properly done so with sufficient notice to his client and with intimation to the Court.

If again a Pleader stipulates for payment of fees before he does any work he is not bound to do such work without such payment. If however he accepts a vakalatnama without such stipulation that is, gives credit to his client, he must proceed to represent him, even though unpaid his fees until either his client discharges him or he properly discharges himself.

Applying these general principles to the present case, I am of opinion that the obligation to attend Court as charged is prima facie established, that no special contract affecting the general inference to be drawn from the acceptance of the vakalatnama has been established nor any valid self-discharge.

I am of opinion that the Pleaders other than D. P. Chakraborty in Reference No. 4, who is shown to have been engaged for one application only, abstained from attendance at Court when there was a duty upon them to attend and the abstention was without lawful excuse from motives of sympathy with the hartal, and that they therefore in fact acted in furtherance of it, in breach of their duty towards their client and the Court.* This follows from the finding which rejects the defence of fear. It was by public resolution expressed to be the common object of the hartal movement to boycott the Courts. A meeting of Pleaders called by the legal practitioners in Reference No. 8 was then held at which it was resolved to bow to the popular will. And in fact all the Pleaders against whom proceedings are taken abstained from attendance, though they had business in Court which properly called for it. If we exclude, as I do, the theory of fear the only inference to be drawn is, that the intention of the Pleaders by their overt act of non-attendance when bound to attend was in furtherance of the hartal. There is no evidence that the hartal was part of the Non-co-operation movement and that the Pleaders charged are not Non-co-operators is shown by their appearance before us.

There is, I think, a stronger case in favour of the Pleader in Reference No. 8 on the question whether the evidence establishes duty to attend Court, seeing the nature of the relations between him and his client, the explanation given and the evidence. But on the other point in this case it is shown that the Pleader, who is Secretary of the Bar Library, convened the meeting to determine whether the hartal was to be obeyed, a meeting which was followed in fact by obedience to the hartal resolution.

Such action is not permissible because the question whether a resolution declaring a hartal directed against the Courts is to be approved and obeyed, or not, is not a question which can be at all considered by a legal practitioner. There is no question for discussion since the answer must necessarily be a disapproval of the boycott, though it would be, of course, lawful to meet to consider measures of self-defence or means of combating it.

As regards the question whether these cases fall under cl. (b) or cl. (f) of sec. 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act, I am disposed to think they fall under both clauses, that is under cl. (b) in so far as they involve neglect of duty towards the client in accepting a vakalatnama and without excuse not fulfilling the duties involved in such acceptance; and under cl. (f) in so far as the practitioner's conduct was directed against the Court by abstention from attendance on account of the hartal. In the present case the two are closely connected, because one and the same act constitutes the neglect and furtherance of the hartal. It is plain on the view of the facts here taken that one or other section applies. The matter is of no practical importance in any event, particularly having regard to the order which we are about to pass in these cases.

References Nos. 4, 7, 8 and 9.

MOOKERJEE, J.—These are four References made by the District Judge of Noakhali under sec. 11 of the Legal Practitioners Act in respect of six Pleaders. Reference 4 relates to Babu Rajani Kanta Bose and Babu Durga Prosanna Chakraverty, Reference No. 7 to Babu Rajani Kanta Nag and Babu Priya Nath Rai Chaudhuri, Reference No. 8 to Babu Annada Charan Roy, and Reference No. 9 to Babu Surendra Kumar Nag. The References raise important questions of principle, which are of first importance and affect a large section of the legal profession in this Presidency; they may be conveniently considered together, though the investigation by the Subordinate Court proceeded, in each case, on evidence separately recorded.

It appears that in the month of May last, there was considerable excitement in the town of Noakhali, due to sympathy for tea garden coolies stranded at a neighbouring place called Chandpur. At a public meeting, convened in the Town Hall by the local Congress Committee, a resolution was carried that complete hartal, that is cessation of public activity of every description should be observed as an expression of the indignation of the community. At a second public meeting, it was resolved that those who might not loyally follow the previous resolution, should be punished with social boycott or in some equally deterrent manner. Subsequently, an informal meeting was held in the Bar Library, at the instance of Babu Annada Charan Roy, one of the Pleaders whose cases have been reported to us, and the opinion was expressed by the majority that it was not safe to disobey the public feeling which ran very high. It may be added that there is no evidence to show that the hartal thus proclaimed, though possibly inspired by the method adopted by Non-co-operators, was in any way connected with that political movement. But it cannot be disputed that the object was to paralyse the work of the Courts and to bring judicial administration to a stand-still. This result was in fact achieved, for all the Pleaders except two ceased to attend the Courts during the period of the hartal from the 23rd May to the 3rd June. The consequence was that cases, when they were taken up for disposal on the appointed dates, had either to be postponed or decided ex parte or dismissed for default. On the reports of the judicial officers presiding over the Courts where this took place, the District Judge has submitted the matter to this Court for disciplinary action against the Pleaders concerned. Apart from the special facts of each case, which will be considered later, three fundamental questions emerge for consideration, namely, first, when a Pleader has accepted a vakalatnama, is he bound to appear to conduct the case in its various stages; secondly, if he is so bound, does the liability continue till he has discharged himself by recourse to the appropriate procedure; and thirdly, does failure to appear to conduct the case before he has so discharged himself render the Pleader liable to disciplinary action by the Court.

As regards the first question, it is essential to point out that a Pleader must be duly appointed before he can appear, act and plead in a case. Reference may be made to r. 1 and r. 4 (1) and 4 (2) of Or. III of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

"Any appearance, application or act in or to any Court, required or authorised by law to be made or done by a party in such Court, may, except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, be made or done by the party in person, or by his recognised agent, or by a Pleader duly appointed to act on his behalf.

Provided that any such appearance shall, if the Court so direct, be made by the party in person."

"The appointment of a Pleader to make or do any appearance, application or act for any person shall be in writing, and shall be signed by such person or by his recognised agent or by some other person duly authorised by power-of-attorney to act in his behalf."

"Every such appointment, when accepted by a Pleader, shall be filed in Court, and shall be considered to be in force until determined with the leave of the Court, by a writing signed by the client or the Pleader as the case may be, filed in Court, or until the client or the Pleader dies or until all proceedings in the suit are ended so far as regards the client."

It has been argued in this Court that although when a Pleader has accepted a vakalatnama and filed it in Court, he thereby becomes authorised to act and plead on behalf of his client, it does not follow that he is under an obligation to do so on a particular occasion. In my opinion, this contention has been too broadly formulated. A Pleader who has accepted a vakalatnama and filed it in Court is ordinarily bound to appear and conduct his case, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary. It is conceivable that the vakalatnama may not set out explicitly all the terms of the engagement between the Pleader and his client, and amongst these there may be implied terms sanctioned by well-known and well-established usage of the profession. To take one example, at the time the vakalatnama is accepted and filed, there may be an understanding, express or implied, that the Pleader will appear to conduct the case only on one occasion, or only after he has been paid the fees settled or only after he has been furnished with the requisite papers. Reference may in this connection be made to the judgment of Mr. Justice Phear delivered with the concurrence of Mr. Justice Dwarka Nath Mitter in Re, Gopinath Mudduck (1). In that case a litigant who was Respondent in an Appeal from Appellate Decree in this Court, which had been decreed ex parte, had engaged Babu Hari Mohan Chakraverty, a Vakil of this Court, to apply for re-hearing. On the 26th May 1870, the Petitioner moved the Court to compel the Vakil to appear and argue his case, alleging that the Pleader had been paid his fees, and yet had declined to attend and plead his case. The Court accordingly called upon the Vakil to answer the allegation. The Vakil stated he had been paid only one-half of the fee agreed upon. The Court thereupon directed the Vakil to return the amount paid to him, and ruled that the acceptance of a vakalatnama by a Vakil of the High Court should in all cases be unconditional. But it is plain, that notwithstanding this expression of opinion vakalatnamas have been accepted by Vakils in this Court, subject to conditions implied by well-known usage as is clear from the decision in Ram Koer v. Puna Koer (2). I am bound to add, however, that the true import of the observations made by Mr. Justice Phear was not, it seems to me, correctly appreciated by Sir Richard Garth, C. J. The view indicated by Phear, J., that if once a legal practitioner accepts a brief, he is bound to plead the cause of his client whether he is paid his fee or not, is not in conflict with the opinion maintained by Garth, C. J., that a legal practitioner may both as a matter of right and of professional propriety, insist upon the payment of his fee before he reads his brief or pleads his client's cause. As Garth, C. J., himself points out, if a legal practitioner takes a brief without a fee and without informing his client that the fee must be paid before he attends to the case, he cannot with propriety recede from it without due notice to his client upon the ground that the fee is not paid. To my mind, the true position is that the acceptance of a vakalatnama with the usual terms, which is filed by the Pleader in Court, prima facie places him under an obligation to appear and act on behalf of his client: and, if he fails to perform what is thus prima facie his duty, he must be ready to justify his conduct by proof that the client had failed to fulfil an implied term of the engagement, such as the advance payment of fee or the supply of the requisite papers or such like circumstances, which, perhaps, cannot, at least need not for our present purposes, be exhaustively enumerated. This view is identical with that adopted by Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair and Mr. Justice Sundar Aiyar, in Muni Reddi v. Venkata Rao (3) where the principle was enunciated that a Vakil is bound to appear and conduct his case, even if the fee or any portion thereof remains unpaid, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, or at least, notice to the effect to the client in sufficient time to enable him to make other arrangements [see the statement by Mr. Justice Sundar Aiyar in his luminous lectures on Professional Ethics, p. 270 and Kally Churn v. Carapiet (4). Reference may also be made to the observations of Lord Westbury in Re, A Solicitor (5) which favour a strict view of the duties of a solicitor]; and a similar opinion was expressed by Tottenham and Trevelyan, JJ., in Satish Chandra v. Sarada Prosud (6). But, as was pointed out by Wallis, C. J., in Muthu v. Nurse (7), the decisions of Lord Tenterden in Rowson v. Earle (8), of Tindal, C. J., in Vansardan v. Browne (9) and Lawrence v. Potts (10) and of Lord Esher in Underwood v. Lewis (11) favour a less stringent view of the duties of a legal practitioner. It is not necessary, however, for the decision of the cases now before us, to investigate in further detail this and co-related aspects of the matter, such as that raised in Mohéspur Coal Company v. Jotindra (12).

As regards the second question, it is clear that when a Pleader has accepted a rakalatnama with or without implied conditions, his liability continues, till he has discharged himself by recourse to the appropriate procedure. It is a mistake to suppose, however, that this is a matter solely between the Pleader and his client. The statutory provisions on the subject leave no room for doubt that the appointment of a Pleader, when filed in Court with his acceptance, continues in force until determined with the leave of the Court by a writing signed by the client, or the Pleader as the case may be; to this rule, there are two exceptions, namely, first, the death of the client or the Pleader, and secondly, the termination of the proceedings in the suit so far as regards the client. An instance of the application of this rule is furnished by the decision of Harington, J., in Atul Chunder v. Lakshan Chunder (13), see also Prabhulal v. Kumar Krishna (14) and Prabhulal v. Kumar Krishna (15). The principle has been recognised for more than half a century, as is clear from sec. 18 of Act VIII of 1859 and sec. 39 of Act X of 1877 and Act XIV of 1882, which were applied in the cases of King v. King (16) and Watkins v. Fox (17). It is not difficult to realise that serious uncertainties and inconveniences might arise in the conduct of judicial proceedings, if the appointment of a Pleader made in writing and lodged in the Court where the case was to be tried could be revoked without the knowledge and sanction of the Court. It is further well-settled that the legal practitioner must always give reasonable notice of his withdrawal from the case to his client: Hoby v. Built (18), Harris v. Osbourn (19), Nicholl v. Wilson (20) and Whitehead v. Lord (21).

As regards the third question, it is plain that the failure of a Pleader to appear to conduct the case before he has discharged himself in the manner prescribed by law, unless such failure can be justified, renders him liable to disciplinary action by the Court. It is neither practicable nor necessary to have a complete enumeration of justifying circumstances which must necessarily depend upon the facts of each case. In view of the arguments addressed to the Court, I may however state that, in my opinion, it may be successfully urged as a justifying reason for failure to attend to a case, that the absence was in fact due to overriding pressure of circumstances beyond the control of the Pleader, notwithstanding an honest desire on his part to perform his duty towards his client and towards the Court. No formula can be framed to enable us to measure accurately the nature and extent of such pressure, but, to my mind, it is essential that the Pleader, in full appreciation of his duty as the representative of his client and as an officer of the Court, should have been sincerely anxious to protect the former and to assist the latter. The relation of Pleader and client has been described by some as that of principal and agent, and by others as that of master and servant, in a limited and dignified sense, Muruga v. Rajasami (22). It may be a matter for controversy how far these analogies hold good but in any event, the relation involves the highest personal trust and confidence, so much so that it cannot be delegated without consent. The Pleader by his obligation is bound to discharge his duties to his client with the strictest fidelity and is answerable to the disciplinary jurisdiction of the Court for dereliction of duty. A Pleader however, is more than a mere agent or servant of his client. He is also an officer of the Court, and as such he owes the duty of good faith and honourable dealing to the Courts before which he practises his profession. His high vocation is to inform the Court as to the law and facts of the case and to aid it to do justice by arriving at correct conclusions. The practice of the law is not a business open to all who wish to engage in it; it is a personal right or privilege limited to select persons of good character with special qualifications duly ascertained and certified; it is in the nature of a franchise from the State conferred only for merit and may be revoked whenever misconduct renders the Pleaders holding the license unfit to be entrusted with the powers and duties of his office. Generally speaking, the test to be applied is whether the misconduct is of such a description as shows him to be an unfit or unsafe person to enjoy the privileges and to manage the business of others in the capacity of a Pleader, in other words, unfit to discharge the duties of his office and unsafe because unworthy of confidence. His office is a very badge of respectability, a patent of trustworthiness, derived from his position on the Court's roll of counsel; consequently he ought not be suffered to pass for what he is not. Amongst various types of misconduct, there is none more reprehensible than such conduct as tends to impede, obstruct, or prevent the administration of the law or to destroy the confidence of the people in such administration; and any attempt on the part of a Pleader to boycott the Courts or to obstruct the administration of justice by a resort to any form of device, constitutes, in my opinion, ground for disbarment or suspension.

Before we pass on from these general observations to a consideration of the special facts of each case, it is necessary to notice an argument which was advanced in all the cases. It was contended that the proceedings under sec. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act are quasi-criminal in character and must be based on evidence cogent and conclusive, such as is deemed necessary for a conviction in a criminal case; in support of the proposition, reliance was placed upon observations in the decisions in In re Nilkanta Biswas (23), Kotha v. Queen (24) and li. v. Raghunath (25). In my opinion, it is plain that the proceeding is not of a criminal nature. See Government Pleader v. Bhagubai (26) though as pointed out in Nandalal v. Baser Ali (27) and Nallasiran v. Ramalingam (28) it is undoubtedly a judicial proceeding. It was ruled in the cases of Re Hardwick (29) and Re Eode (30) that as the Court in making an order striking a solicitor off the rolls for misconduct does so in the exercise of its disciplinary powers over its own officers and not in the exercise of its criminal jurisdiction, an appeal lies from such order to the Court of appeal. The same principle was recognised by Lord Mansfield in Exp. Brounsell (31) when he overruled an objection to disciplinary proceedings against an attorney who had been convicted of felony, on the ground that the only misconduct imputed to him was the very offence which had formed the basis of his conviction. The same view has been affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States in Randall v. Brigham (32) and Exp. Wall (33). The true position appears to be that these proceedings are neither civil suits nor criminal prosecutions. [In the matter of Janak Kishore (34)]. They are special proceedings resulting from the inherent power of the Courts over their officers. Their object is to preserve the purity of the Courts and the proper and honest administration of the law. The purpose of suspension and disbarment is to protect the Court and the public from legal practitioners who, disregarding the sanctity of their office, pervert and abuse the privileges annexed to the responsible office they have secured from the Court. The form of proceeding, consequently, is not of controlling importance, so long as the essentials of fair notice and opportunity to be heard are present: Re Ganapathi Sastri (35). Sec. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act, which describes the procedure for investigation when a charge of unprofessional conduct is brought in a subordinate Court against a legal practitioner, provides that the presiding officer shall send him a copy of the charge and also a notice that on an appointed day the charge will be taken into consideration. The section does not make it obligatory on the Pleader to submit a written defence and does not even provide for his compulsory presence or oral examination, Re A Pleader (36), but it does lay down that the presiding officer shall receive and record all evidences properly produced in support of the charge or by the Pleader presumably in answer to the charge. The essence of the matter, consequently, is that the Pleader must be allowed an opportunity of making his defence; In the matter of Southekal Krishna Rao, (37), In re Golab Khan (38); In the matter of a second grade Pleader (39) and Govern- ment Pleader v. Moganlal Choksi (40). The Pleader need not make any defence if he so chooses, though I am emphatically of opinion that he should be absolutely candid with the Court in such a proceeding. He may, however, unwisely, decline to render any assistance to the Court, maintain a stolid silence and take up the position that the case against him must be completely proved. But if he does adopt such an attitude, he obviously runs a grave risk, for even in a criminal case, sec. 312 of the Criminal Procedure Code provides that if an accused person refuses to answer a question put by the Court, the Court and the jury, if any, may draw such inference from such refusal as it thinks just; see sec. 114, 111 (b) of the Indian Evidence Act; R. v. Dwijendra Chandra (41). On the other hand, if the Pleader does submit a written statement in answer to the charge, the Court is bound to take it into consideration and may draw such inference as legitimately arises from its contents. To take an example, if the Pleader in his written statement seeks to justify his conduct on certain allegations of fact, it may well be inferred that the conduct was not justifiable on other hypothetical or imaginable grounds. A singular illustration of such a contingency was furnished in the course of argument in one of the cases now before us. It was urged with considerable insistence that the failure of the Pleader to appear in Court on the appointed day did not render him liable to disciplinary action, inasmuch as it had not been affirmatively established that he had been offered his fee for the day by the client. But in answer to a question put by the Court, the reply was given that even if the fee had been tendered, it would not have been accepted, as the Pleader had decided not to attend the Court on account of the hartal. In my opinion when in answer to a charge made against a Pleader, a written statement has been filed in a proceeding under sec. 14, it is not obligatory on the Court to rule out all conceivable hypothetical grounds which could have been but had not been set up in answer. The justice of the case may ordinarily be met, if the enquiry proceeds on the basis of the charge and the answer.

In one of the cases, an additional point was urged with some emphasis. It was contended that no disciplinary action can be taken by the High Court when the District Judge and the Judge of the Subordinate Court are not agreed as to the specific provision of sec. 13 which covers the misconduct attributed to the legal practitioner concerned. This argument is manifestly untenable and is based upon a misapprehension of the scope of the authority of this Court in the exercise of its disciplinary jurisdiction. Sec. 14 contemplates an enquiry and report by the Subordinate Court. This is forwarded by the District Judge with his opinion thereon. As pointed out in Re Rasik Lal Nag (12) the ultimate decision rests with the High Court and the authority of this Court is not taken away by any divergence of opinion between the Judge of the Subordinate Court and the District Judge either as to the facts or as to the law applicable. It is consequently immaterial that while the Judge of the Subordinate Court thought that the facts attracted the operation of sec. 13 (b), the District Judge deemed the case governed by sec. 13 (f). I am further of opinion that the case is really comprehended within the scope of both the clauses of sec. 13 just mentioned; the conduct of the Pleader was reprehensible not only because he neglected his duty towards his client, but also because he sympathised with and acquiesced in a boycott of the Court; the former makes clause (b), the latter makes cl. (f) applicable.

In Reference No. 4, we are called upon to consider the cases of Babu Rajani Kanta Bose and Babu Durga Prosonna Chakraverty. As regards Babu Rajani Kanta Bose, it is plain that his conduct was reprehensible. He was present at the public meeting where the hartal resolution was carried and took an active part in the proceedings. He then absented himself from Court and did not appear in the case in which he had been engaged. He has not shown cause, and we have been informed that he has retired from the practice of his profession. It is, consequently, not necessary to discuss his matter further. As regards Babu Durga Prosanna Chakraverty, the evidence indicates that his services were engaged by the client for only one occasion, consequently his failure to appear on another occasion does not support the charge of professional misconduct.

In Reference No. 7 we are concerned with the cases of two Pleaders, Babu Rajani Kanta Nag and Babu Priyanath Rai Chaudhuri. The evidence makes it abundantly clear that these Pleaders had accepted a vakalatnama and yet did not appear in Court when the case was taken up. There can be no doubt that they acted in this manner, because they were in sympathy with the hartal resolution, and it is idle for them to urge that they had no intention to boycott the Court or paralyse the administration of justice. I feel no doubt that they could have attended the Court as the Government Pleader and the Public Prosecutor had done and that the risk or consequent inconvenience and possible humiliation by an irritated public has been unduly magnified. I consider that their conduct in not attending to the case in which they had been engaged was unjustifiable, and they have rendered themselves liable to disciplinary action by this Court.

In Reference No. 8 we have to deal with the case of Babu Annada Charan Roy. In his written defence, he has urged that no one could safely ignore or disregard the hartal resolution adopted by an indignant public, but he has also added that he considered it safe and desirable to bow down to the popular will. The evidence shows that he had convened the meeting at the Bar Library where the opinion was expressed by the majority that it was not safe to disobey the strong public feeling. I think there is no reasonable doubt that he acquiesced in the hartal resolution and neglected to perform his duty towards his clients and towards the Court. This, in my opinion, makes him liable to disciplinary action by this Court.

In Reference No. 9, we have to consider the case of Babu Surendra Kumar Nag. In my opinion, his conduct was far more reprehensible than that of the other Pleaders and the line of defence adopted in the lower Court as also in this Court has placed him in a position of great peril. He was engaged by one Azanuddin as Pleader in a suit which resulted in a sale of the property of his client. He then applied to have the sale set aside; the matter was fixed for hearing on the 28th May 1921. The client saw him at his house in the morning and requested him either to file a list of the witnesses present or to make an application to the Court for adjournment. The Pleader refused the request. The client then went to the Court but as he was illiterate and ignorant of the number of the case, he could not take steps to apply for adjournment. The case appears to have been postponed along with other cases till the 30th May. The client, however, was not apprised of this, and the case was dismissed for default, as on the adjourned date neither he nor his Pleader was present. On the 14th June, the Pleader presented an application for restoration of the case, which recites that as hartal prevailed at the time and as Pleaders and clerks did not attend Court and as the Petitioner himself could not take steps by reason of his illiteracy, he could not appear on the date to which the case was adjourned without his knowledge. In view of the statement contained in this petition, which was signed by the Pleader himself, it is difficult to understand how the charge of unprofessional conduct can be seriously met. It has been urged, however, that as no vakalatnama was filed along with the application for reversal of sale, the Pleader was not liable to attend on the appointed date. There is no foundation whatever for this contention, for it is well-settled that no fresh vakalatnama is necessary to entitle the Pleader to appear in proceedings subsequent to the decree, Shah Makhan Lal v. Srce Kissen (43) Suttocharan v. Suroof Shunder (44), Gopal v. Hargobind (45) and Sadashiv v. Vithaldas (46). The Pleader did in fact present the application for reversal of the sale and subsequently, the petition for restoration of that application on the strength of his appointment as Pleader in the suit; and no weight can be attached to the fact that a fresh vakalatnama was not filed. There is also no force in the contention that he was not paid his fees; he did not demand his fees and would not have attended the Court even on payment. The truth is he sympathised with the movement for boycott of the Court and considered it safe and desirable to bow down to the popular will. His conduct is, in my opinion not capable of justification on any imaginable ground and can only be characterised as amounting to a deliberate and reckless disregard of the interest of the illiterate and ignorant litigant who had the misfortune to engage his services. As observed by the Special Bench of seven Judges in Re Roop Nath Banerjee (47), his case has undoubtedly not been improved by sophistical arguments put forward to sustain an indefensible position, and he has clearly rendered himself liable to disciplinary action by the Court.

I desire to add that the conduct and attitude of the Pleaders, whose cases we have been called upon to consider, appear, in my judgment, to be lamentably deficient when tested from the standpoint of the honour and dignity which we are accustomed to associate with gentlemen who claim the position and privileges of members of the legal profession. As observed in Government Pleader v. Jogannath (48) their position as a privileged class enrolled for the purpose of rendering assistance to the Courts in the administration of justice, their special training and their responsible practice gave them influence with the public, and it was their duty to use that influence so that the administration of justice might not be brought into contempt [Re Desai (49)]. They should have been actuated by a keen sense of duty and loyalty to the Courts and to their clients. They should have made a strenuous endeavour to resist and defeat the ignoble attempt to boycott the Courts and to imperil the administration of justice. Their paramount duty was, in the language used by Lord Shaw [Re A Vakil (50)], to co-operate with the Court in the orderly and pure administration of justice. It is thus a matter of the deepest concern that they passively acquiesced in, if not actively sympathised with, the movement to paralyse the Courts, and, what is most deplorable, they did not hesitate to cast baseless aspersions on the judicial officers who instituted these disciplinary proceedings solely with a view to vindicate the authority and maintain the dignity of the Courts.

References Nos. 4/21, 7/21, 8/21 and 9/21.

SANDERSON, C. J.—After due consideration we have decided to take no further action in respect of the References Nos. 1 of 1921, 7 of 1921, 8 of 1921 and 9 of 1921. Some of the reasons which have actuated us in coming to this conclusion, are,

(1) that these are the first cases of the kind which have been brought before this Court;

(2) that the Pleaders concerned, with the exception of one who has ceased to practise, have resumed work and attended the Courts;

(3) that there was undoubtedly a strong feeling in Noakhali on the occasion in question;

(4) the Pleaders may have acted in haste and without due consideration of the serious nature and effect of their conduct.

We have therefore decided to treat as leniently as possible the Pleaders concerned in the References now before us, in the hope and belief that the warning, which we now give, will have the effect of preventing a repetition of such conduct.

It must be recognised however that the Court takes a very serious view of this matter.

The Pleaders in Noakhali were a considerable body in point of numbers, and were persons whose influence and action must have had a considerable effect on the hartal. It is, perhaps, not too much to say that if the Pleaders had abstained from observing the hartal, it might have failed altogether, or at any rate it would have had much less effect. But apart from this the Pleaders are a privileged body, with duties not only towards their clients but also towards the Courts of which they are Pleaders, to co-operate in the orderly and pure administration of justice.

The Pleaders in question failed to perform their duties in both respects, and they joined in a hartal, one of the objects of which was to paralyse the administration of justice.

Such conduct cannot and will not be permitted, whether it be on account of some alleged grievance in connection with the administration of the Courts or in furtherance of some movement political or otherwise. Therefore while deciding to take a lenient course in these cases, the first of the kind brought before us, we desire to make it clear that if such conduct is repeated in the future, it may entail serious consequences to those concerned.

Reg. II of 1819, Arts. 3, 31—Reg. I of 1793, Arts. 3, 6—Reg. XIX of 1793, sec. 1—Reg. XI of 1826, sec. 1 (1), (4).

The intention and effect of Act IX of 1847 was merely to alter the machinery by which lands gained from the sea or rivers by alluvion or dereliction were to be assessed, and not to subject to assessment any lands which would not have been liable thereto under the law in force at the time when the Act was passed.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. SRIMATI FAHAMIDUNNISSA BEGUM (1) followed.

The question whether chur lands formed since the Permanent Settlement in beds of rivers belonging to a permanently settled zemindari are assessable as "land added to the estate" within the meaning of sec. 6 of the Act IX of 1847 has to be determined by reference to the pre-existing law and particularly to Reg. II of 1819.

The effect of Reg. II of 1819 is to declare that churs formed since the Decennial Settlement upon land which at the time of the Settlement had been river-bed are to be treated as unsettled; and this express provision cannot be excluded by showing that the river-bed from which the churs have been thrown up was at the date of settlement the property of the zemindar and that the settlement was imposed upon the zemindari as a whole.

In view of Art. 3 of Reg. II of 1819, a river-bed was not intended to be treated as "waste land" coming within the protection of Art. 31 of the Regulation.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. SRIMATI FAHAMIDUNNISSA BEGUM (1) distinguished on the ground that the land which was held to be exempt from assessment in that case was land which was specifically comprised in the settlement, but which, having since been submerged, had formed again.

These were two consolidated appeals from one judgment and four decrees, dated the 22nd May 1918, of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, which partly affirmed and partly reversed one judgment and three decrees, dated the 9th July 1913, of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, and which reversed a judgment and decree, dated the 14th July 1913, of the District Judge of Bankura, who had reversed a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bankura, dated the 15th March 1912.

The Plaintiffs-Respondents claimed that certain churs which had been formed in the beds of the rivers Damodar and Darakeshwar, which flowed through the zemindari of the Plaintiffs, were the properties of the Plaintiffs, and that the Crown had no right to assess any revenue on the churs, nor to make any settlement in respect thereof with certain third parties who were also made Defendants in the suits. The Plaintiffs also claimed possession of the churs with mesne profits. The High Court had allowed the claim of the two Plaintiffs and the Crown appealed.

The present consolidated appeals arose out of four suits. The Respondent, Maharaja of Burdwan, filed three suits on the 11th, 16th and 30th August 1909 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan. The fourth suit was filed by the other Respondent, Rajnarayan Chandra Dhurja of Maliara, on the 3rd February 1911 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bankura.

The Appellant, Secretary of State for India in Council, was the only Defendant in the fourth suit and the principal Defendant in the other three suits.

The River Damodar flows through the zemindari of the Maharaja into the River Hooghly. The length of the river is

THE SECY. OF STATE FOR INDIA v. SIR BIJOY CHAND MAHTAB BAHADUR.

144 miles from Theraut in the north, to Gurchumbook in the south, and it is six miles from Gurchumbook to Alipur, where the river joins the Hooghly. In the Burdwan suit the river is divided into two parts, namely, one called Ka, and the other called Kha. The riparian villages on both sides of this portion of the river belong to the Maharaja. In the Kha portion the Maharaja also owns the villages on both banks of the river from Bhasna to Protabpur, and the villages on the northern bank from Protabpur to Theraut. The churs in dispute being situated partly in the Bankura and partly in the Burdwan Districts necessitated the filing of separate suits.

The case of the Maharaja in the Burdwan and Bankura suits was that his zemindari, comprising the Districts of Burdwan, Hooghly and Bankura, included the bed of the River Damodar from Theraut to Gurchumbook; that he was the owner of the whole bed of that river as well as of all the churs that had been or might be formed in that river; that the entire Government revenue had been permanently settled in respect of the whole of his zemindari in the said Districts by the Permanent Settlement, and that the Crown had no right or title whatever to the churs which had been formed in the River Damodar. The same case was made by the Respondent Rajnarayan Chandra Dhurja in respect of the churs formed in the River Damodar, where it flowed through the Pergunnah Maliara. And the Maharaja made the same claim to the churs that were formed in the River Darakeshwar within the ambit of his village Khatnagar.

The Plaintiffs asserted that the Crown had no right under Act IX of 1847 or under any other law, to survey and settle the churs which had been formed in the beds of the Rivers Damodar and Darakeshwar, and that the settlements made by the Crown were void and inoperative. The Plaintiffs therefore claimed declaration of their proprietary right to the churs (specified in the schedule attached to the plaints) with possession thereof, and mesne profits.

The Secretary of State for India in Council denied the claim of the Plaintiffs in all the four suits. The defence in each suit was substantially the same and reference to the written statement filed in the Burdwan suit is sufficient to indicate it. The main defence was that neither the bed of the River Damodar nor any portion of it was included within any estate or zemindari held by the Plaintiff in either suit at the time of the Permanent Settlement; that neither Plaintiff had any title to the bed of the river or to the churs in question, and that the settlement made by the Crown under Act IX of 1847 was valid and binding on the Plaintiffs. It was admitted that the River Darakeshwar was not navigable, but it was pleaded that the River Damodar was navigable in all seasons of the year, and consequently its bed could not have been included in the permanently settled estate of the Plaintiffs. It was further pleaded that even if the Plaintiffs were held to be the owners of the churs in question, the Crown was entitled to assess them with revenue, and to make settlements in respect of them in case the Plaintiffs refused to pay the revenue assessed.

The remaining pleas are not material for this report.

The three suits, namely, Burdwan, Bankura and Khatnagar suits, were tried together by the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan. The fourth, i.e., Maliara suit, was tried by the Subordinate Judge of Bankura. The former delivered judgment on the 9th July 1913, and the latter on the 15th March 1912.

The judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan contained an elaborate examination of the evidence and the authorities bearing on the questions raised on the present appeal. He found on the evidence that the River Damodar is and always has been a non-navigable river and that finding was affirmed on appeal by the High Court.

He found that the Ka portion of the river bed was surrounded on all sides by and was situate in one compact zemindari of the Maharaja; that it was permanently settled at the time of the Permanent Settlement as one compact estate, and that the settlement of land included not only the land covered over with crops, but also the land covered with water, i.e., river beds. He held that the Ka portion of the beds of the Rivers Damodar and Darakeshwar lying within his permanently settled estate was the property of the Maharaja, on the ground that they were expressly included in his permanently settled estate; that the churs formed therein consequently belonged to the Maharaja, and that the Crown having permanently fixed the revenue in respect of the whole compact estate had no right to assess any revenue on the churs formed therein. He therefore allowed the claim of the Maharaja to the proprietary possession of the churs formed in the Ka portion of the River Damodar in the Burdwan suit, and those in question in the Khatnagar suit, with mesne profits and costs.

In regard to the bed of the River Damodar marked Kha in the Burdwan suit, and that in question in the Bankura suit, the learned Subordinate Judge held that they were not expressly included, but only included by implication. He said as follows:—

“I also find that by the presumption of law, i.e., by the principle of middle-thread, the Plaintiff has a right to the river and its bed up to its middle line, so far as it borders the Plaintiff's permanently settled estate; that the Permanent Settlement having been made, with the Plaintiff's ancestor, of the riparian pergunnahs on both sides of the river as Ka, and on one side of the river as in Kha, in the Burdwan suit, the Plaintiff has the proprietary right to the River Damodar and its bed as claimed in the Burdwan suit; that further the Plaintiff being the owner of the riparian pergunnahs Barahazari and Bishunpur in Bankura district, which are permanently settled estates, the Plaintiff has a right, by the said presumption of law, to the river and its bed up to its middle line bordering the said pergunnahs, and, lastly, that the half of the river and its bed as in Kha in the Burdwan suit, and half of the river and its bed as in the Bankura suit even by the said presumption of law, was impliedly included within the said estates permanently settled at the time of the Permanent Settlement.”

The Subordinate Judge further held that the churs formed in the river bed which was impliedly included within the permanently settled estates of the Maharaja, were the properties of the Maharaja, but he held that the Maharaja was liable to pay additional assessment that may be imposed by the Crown in respect of them, and that the Maharaja having refused to accept a settlement, the proceedings of the Settlement Court could not be set aside by the Civil Court, and were binding on the Maharaja. In regard to such churs (excepting Pursha and Madhabpur) therefore the learned Subordinate Judge held that the Maharaja was entitled merely to a declaration of his proprietary right to the same, and to get Malikana in respect of them, and that he was not entitled to possession thereof. He accordingly made three decrees partly allowing and partly dismissing the claim of the Maharaja.

The Subordinate Judge of Bankura also held that the bed of the River Damodar in question in the Maliara suit, was included in the estate permanently settled with the Maharaja, and that the churs formed in that bed were the property of the Plaintiff, and that the Crown had no right to assess any revenue in respect of them. He therefore made a decree allowing the claim of the said Plaintiff, and from that decree there was an appeal to the District Judge of Bankura, who delivered judgment on the 14th July 1913. He held that the Crown was entitled to assess revenue on the churs in question in the Maliara suit, and that the settlements made by the Crown in respect of them were valid, and he accordingly made a decree dismissing the suit of the said Plaintiff with costs.

From the decrees of the said Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, five appeals were filed in the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, namely, three appeals by the Secretary of State for India in Council (Nos. 66, 82 and 375 of 1914), and two appeals by the Maharaja (Nos. 61 and 90 of 1914). The Respondent, Rajnarayan Chandra Dhurja, also filed a second appeal (No. 3,180 of 1913), in the same High Court. All the said appeals were heard together by the said High Court, which delivered judgment on the 22nd May 1918. The learned Judges of the High Court dismissed the appeals of the said Secretary of State, holding that the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan was right. Mr. Justice Fletcher, who delivered the judgment of the Court, observed as follows:—

“I agree with the conclusion of the learned Judge that the bed of the River Damodar, in so far as it flowed through the Chuckla or Zamindari of Burdwan, was a portion of the property permanently settled with the Plaintiff's predecessors. The main argument on behalf of the Government is that churs that form in the River Damodar are resumable under the provisions of the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation of 1825 (Reg. II of 1825), and that is so even if the river is non-navigable and formed part of the permanently settled estate. That argument, however, is, I think, altogether opposed to the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Secretary of State v. Fahamidunnissa Begum (1). Before there can be a further assessment of Government revenue, there must be a ‘gain’ from the public domain. The mere fact that a portion of the permanently settled estate has become more valuable, is no ground for altering the assessment. The fact that no amount, or only a small amount, in respect of a particular piece of property entered into the calculation on the basis of which the Government revenue was permanently settled, and that the property has become of much greater value, is no ground for disturbing the Permanent Settlement of the estate. [See Balsurya Prashad Row v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (5).]”

For the same reason the learned Judges of the High Court allowed the second appeal of the Plaintiff, Rajnarayan Chandra Dhurja.

In regard to the appeals of the Maharaja the learned Judges of the High Court affirmed the finding of the said Subordinate Judge that the Maharaja was the owner of the bed of the non-navigable river Damodar, which was impliedly included in permanently settled estates of the Maharaja, but they were of opinion that on that finding the Crown was not entitled to assess any revenue on the churs formed in that bed. Mr. Justice Fletcher concluded his judgment as follows:—

“Then as regards the right of the Crown to assess further revenue on churs forming on these portions of the river, I am unable to agree with the conclusion of the learned Judge. In this respect I would refer to two decisions, one being the case of Commissioners for Land Tax for the City of London v. Central London Railway Company (3) and the other being the case of Attorney-General for British Columbia v. Attorney-General for Canada (4).

The effect of these decisions is that where property is bounded by a road or a river the boundary, even if given as the road or the river, is the middle of the road or river as the case may be. This principle is too well recognised in our law to be now departed from. If that be so, then the permanently settled estate of the Maharaja included half of the bed of the river we are now considering, and the assessment of the Government revenue on the estate was imposed on it just as much as any other portion of the estate. I am unable to distinguish the present case from the decision of the House of Lords above referred to. If the assessment of land tax on a house in the City of London included therein the assessment of one-half of the street, I think it follows that the assessment of the Government revenue on the riparian moujahs in question was imposed not only in the moujahs but on the adjoining half of the bed of the river. In the result, the appeals of the Secretary of State for India in Council must be dismissed with costs to the Maharaja of Burdwan only. The appeals of the Plaintiff (except as regards chur Pursha with which only Defendant No. 17 in the Bankura suit is concerned) will be allowed with costs. Second Appeal No. 3180 of 1913 will be allowed, and the judgment and decree of the District Judge set aside and the judgment of the Subordinate Judge restored, with costs both in this and the lower Courts."

The High Court made decrees accordingly and from those decrees the Secretary of State for India in Council preferred these appeals to His Majesty in Council.

Thakoor (2), The Secretary of State for India v. Srimati Fahamidunnissa Begum (1) and Jagadindra Nath v. Secretary of State for India (6). The High Court did not consider the construction of Act IX of 1847 because they thought that The Secretary of State for India v. Srimati Fahamidunnissa Begum (1) made it inapplicable. Submits that the judgment of first Court in the Burdwan suit is right; he draws distinction between ownership of land and its assessibility with revenue.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with Mr. Upjohn, K. C. and Mr. Dubé) for the Respondents.—It was not correct to say that assessment was made only upon cultivated land under Reg. I of 1793, the settlement was final save that (a) some land-settlements had not yet been completed, and (b) as to Government lands. Disputes followed as to accretions and hence Reg. II of 1819 and Reg. II of 1825. Reg. II of 1819 applied to lakhiraj lands and lands added to limits of estate (per pre-amble) but affirmed finality of settlements already made. In that Regulation the important word is "gained." "Waste lands" in sec. 31 includes "chur" lands.

The Secretary of State for India v. Srimati Fahamidunnissa Begum (1) defines "gain." When Reg. II of 1819 was passed no provision was made for abatement.

Both Courts found the river-bed to be within the boundaries of the estate. Referred to Balsurya Prashad Row v. Secretary of State (5).

VISCOUNT CAVE.—These are consolidated appeals from decrees made by the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal in four suits. Of these suits three were brought by the Maharaja of Burdwan, with whose ancestor the zamindari of Burdwan was permanently settled in the year 1793; and the fourth by the zamindar of Maliara, with whose predecessor that zamindari was similarly settled in the same year. The causes of action in all the four suits were similar in character. The lands comprised in the zamindari of Burdwan are in part traversed and in part bounded by two rivers, the Damodar and the Darakeshwar; and the Maliara lands are similarly bounded by the first-mentioned river. Since the date of the settlements a large number of churs (or sand-banks) and islands have been thrown up in these rivers; and the revenue authorities, purporting to act under Act IX of 1847, recently caused a dcara survey to be made of these churs and islands (hereafter for the sake of brevity referred to as churs) and assessed them with revenue, and on the refusal of the zamindars to accept a settlement, settled them with third parties. The zamindars disputed the right of the Government to make such an assessment and claimed to be the owners of the churs where they lay opposite to their settled lands and to be entitled to hold them as part of their settled property free from any additional assessment; and it was to establish this claim that these suits were brought. The decision of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan in the suits brought by the Maharaja was partly for and partly against his claim, while the decree of the District Judge of Bankura in the Maliara suit was wholly against the zamindar. On appeal the High Court decided all the suits in favour of the Plaintiffs, and thereupon these appeals were brought by the Defendant, the Secretary of State for India in Council.

The evidence in the suits is voluminous, but the material facts may be shortly stated; and for this purpose it will be sufficient to refer to the facts in the first two suits only, viz., those brought by the Maharaja of Burdwan with reference to the churs in the river Damodar; for it is common ground that the decision in these two suits must determine the result of the other two suits also.

The Damodar is a river of some width but little depth flowing into the Hooghly near Gurchumbook. For a distance of 53 miles, viz., from Therant to Basna, it forms the southern boundary of lands belonging to the zamindari of Burdwan; and for the next 91 miles, viz., from Basna to Gurchumbook, it runs through the lands of that zamindari, which accordingly adjoin the river on both banks, except that a few of the riparian mouzahs were some time since sold for arrears of revenue and no longer belong to the zamindari. From Gurchumbook up to Ampta—that is to say, for a distance of about 14 miles—the river is navigable at all seasons of the year; but beyond the last-mentioned point it is navigable at certain seasons only, and for present purposes may be treated as non-navigable. The Maharajas of Burdwan appear to have fishing rights in the river and to own certain private ferries upon it. They also at one time levied tolls on boats passing up and down the river; but these tolls were abolished by the Government in the year 1772—that is to say, before the date of the decennial settlement—and have not since been levied.

For some time before 1791 yearly settlements were effected with the successive Maharajas, and it appears that on the occasion of one of these yearly settlements, viz., that for the year 1772, a deduction was made for nadi sikasti, or diluvion by river. The kabuliyat relating to the settlement of 1788 is produced; and by this document Maharaja Tej Chandra, who is therein described as “zaniindar of pergunnah Burdwan, etc., in the province of Bengal,” accepted the sum of Rs. 40,15,109.2a. as the revenue for the settlement of “the said chuckla,” and agreed to cultivate the land and to raise no objection to paying the revenue on the score of inundation, of the lands being washed away by the river, etc.

In 1790, when the decennial settlements were introduced, difficulty was experienced in effecting an agreement with the Maharaja, with the result that some mouzahs were sold by Government to raise arrears of revenue; but ultimately in 1791 a settlement for nine years was agreed upon. No sarad or kabuliyat relating to this important settlement has been produced, but its terms are evidenced by a statement headed “Dowl Bundust or Particular Statement of the Jumma of Pergunnah Burdwan payable yearly by the Zamindar Maharaja Tej Chand Bahadur for nine years from the beginning of the Bengal year 1198 to the end of 1206, or from the 10th April 1791, to 11th April, 1800.” This statement contains the items making up the sum of Rs. 40,15,109.2a. specified in the kabuliyat for the year 1788, and after certain deductions for sayer abolished, lands sold for arrears of revenue, and other matters, brings out the total revenue payable by the zamindar during the nine years at Rs. 32,93,892 per annum. No reference is made to the river-bed; and it was found by the Subordinate Judge that, while the income from the fishing and ferrying rights was included in the assessment, no part of the bed was included in any of the settled pergunnahs and mouzahs. Indeed it is plain that in arriving at the revenue for the purposes of the settlement the bed of the river was not taken into account. It is this settlement which was made permanent by Reg. I of 1793.

Upon these and other like materials the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the whole bed of the river where it ran through the zamindari lands, and the bed ad medium filum aquæ where it bounded those lands on one side only, was the property of the zamindar, and accordingly that the churs formed on these parts of the river-bed belonged to the zamindari; but as to the effect of the permanent settlement he drew a distinction. He held that, the zamindari having been settled as “the said chuckla”—that is to say, as a compact estate—in the year 1788, and (as he assumed) also in the year 1791, the settlement included and covered the river-bed where it was bounded on both sides by the zamindari lands, and that the churs formed on this part of the bed could not be the subject of an additional assessment under the Act of 1847; but as to that part of the river which was bounded on one bank only by the zamindari lands, he held that the bed of the river ad medium filum, being included in the adjoining lands by presumption of law only, was not covered by the settlement, and that the churs since formed on this part of the bed were liable to assessment as unsettled land. On appeal the High Court, while upholding the findings of the Subordinate

Judge as to the proprietary rights of the zamindar in the river-bed and churs, rejected the distinction drawn by him as to the effect of the Permanent Settlement, and held that the zamindar was entitled to hold all the churs in dispute as part of his permanently settled lands and free from further assessment. The appeal is therefore brought as to all these churs.

In dealing with this appeal their Lordships accept the concurrent findings of the Courts as to the ownership of the bed of the river and of the churs formed upon it since the date of the settlement, and the assumption of the Subordinate Judge that the decennial settlement of 1791 (which was made permanent in 1793) was similar to the settlement evidenced by the kabuliyat of 1788 in assessing the zamindari as a whole. They also put aside for the moment the subordinate arguments founded on the facts that some of the riparian mouzahs had been alienated before the settlement, and that the lower part of the river was navigable; and they proceed to consider the important question of law, whether on the facts as found the revenue authorities were entitled to assess the newly formed churs to revenue as being "land added to the estate" within the meaning of sec. 6 of Act IX of 1847. It has already been decided by the Board in The Secretary of State for India v. Srimati Fahamidunnissa Begum (1) that the intention and effect of the Act of 1847 was merely to alter the machinery by which lands gained from the sea or rivers by alluvion or dereliction were to be assessed, and not to subject to assessment any lands which would not have been liable thereto under the law in force at the time when the Act was passed; and accordingly the question raised as to the assessability of the churs in dispute must be determined by reference to the pre-existing law and particularly to Reg. II of 1819.

Reg. I of 1793, by which the decennial settlements were made permanent, declared (by Art. 3) to the zamindars and other proprietors of land with whom a settlement had been concluded that "at the expiration of the term of settlement no alteration will be made in the assessment which they have respectively engaged to pay, but that they, and their heirs and lawful successors, will be allowed to hold their estates at such assessment for ever." The main purpose of this declaration appears from Art. 6, which contains the following paragraph:—

"The Governor-General in Council trusts that the proprietors of land, sensible of the benefits conferred upon them by the public assessment being fixed for ever will exert themselves in the cultivation of their lands, under the certainty that they will enjoy exclusively the fruits of their own good management and industry, and that no demand will ever be made upon them, or their heirs or successors, by the present or any future Government, for an augmentation of the public assessment in consequence of the improvement of their respective estates."

Reg. XIX of 1793, which deals mainly with alienated lands, contains the following recital showing the origin of the settlements for revenue:—

"By the ancient law of the country, the ruling power is entitled to a certain proportion of the produce of every begah of land (demandable in money or kind, according to local custom), unless it transfers its right thereto for a term or in perpetuity, or limits the public demand upon the whole of the lands belonging to an individual, leaving him to appropriate to his own use the difference between the value of such proportion of the produce and the sum payable to the public, whilst he continues to discharge the latter."

Reg. II of 1819, which is expressed to be passed for (among other things) defining the right of Government to the revenue of lands not included within the limits of estates for which a settlement has been made, contains (in Art. 3) the following provisions :—

“First.—It is hereby declared and enacted that all lands which, at the period of the decennial settlement, were not included within the limits of any pergunnah, mouzah or other division of estates for which a settlement was concluded with the owners, not being lands for which a distinct settlement may have been made since the period above referred to, nor lands held free of assessment under a valid and legal title of the nature specified in Regs. XIX and XXXVII, 1793, and in the corresponding Regulations subsequently enacted, are and shall be considered liable to assessment in the same manner as other unsettled mehauls and the revenue assessed on all such lands, whether exceeding one hundred begahs or otherwise, shall belong to Government. . . .

“Second.—The foregoing principles shall be deemed applicable not only to tracts of land, such as are described to have been brought into cultivation in the Sunderbuns, but to all churs and islands formed since the period of the decennial settlement, and generally to all lands gained by alluvion or dereliction since that period, whether from an introcession of the sea, an alteration in the course of rivers, or the gradual accession of soil on their banks.”

Art. 31 of the same Regulation saves the rights of the proprietors of permanently settled estates to the full benefit of “all waste lands included within the ascertained boundaries of such estates respectively at the period of the decennial settlement and which have since been or may hereafter be reduced to cultivation,” and concludes with the following general declaration :—

“Second.—It is further hereby declared and enacted, that all claims by the revenue authorities on behalf of Government to additional revenue from lands which were at the period of the decennial settlement included within the limits of estates for which a permanent settlement has been concluded, whether on the plea of error or fraud, or on any pretext whatever, saving, of course, the case of lands expressly excluded from the operation of the settlement, such as lakheraj and thannadarry lands, shall be and be considered wholly illegal and invalid.”

On an analysis of the terms of these Regulations, so far as they are material to the question now under consideration, it appears that, while lands included in a permanent settlement were carefully excluded from further assessment, this protection was extended only to lands actually in existence at the time of the settlement and specifically included in the estate as settled. The produce of “every begah” of these lands was to be assessed to revenue once for all (Reg. XIX of 1791); and even waste land producing little or no revenue to the proprietor, if “included within the limits of any pergunnah, mouzah or other division of estates for which a settlement was concluded,” was to be free from further assessment on being brought into cultivation (Reg. II of 1819, Art. 31). But lands not included in the settled pergunnahs and mouzahs were to be considered liable to assessment as unsettled property; and “these principles”—i.e., that lands not included within the limits of the settled pergunnahs and mouzahs were to be the subject of additional assessment—were to be deemed applicable to all churs and islands formed since the decennial settlement, and generally to all lands gained by alluvion or dereliction since that period (Reg. II of 1819). It appears to their Lordships that the effect of the Regulation last referred to is to declare that churs formed after the decennial settlement are to be treated as unsettled; and that this express provision cannot be excluded merely by showing that the river-bed from which the churs have been thrown up was at the date of settlement the property of the zamindar, and that the settlement was imposed upon the zamindari as a whole. The ownership of the bed may determine the proprietary rights in the churs; but property is one thing and assessability is another. The Regulation declares in terms that new churs are to be included in the category of unsettled lands, and contains no exception for churs formed upon a river-bed belonging to a settled estate. Such churs must therefore be treated as unsettled.

This conclusion is strongly supported by the terms of Reg. XI of 1825, which deals with the rules to be observed in determining claims to lands gained by alluvion or dereliction. The fourth rule laid down in that Regulation, while providing that "in small and shallow rivers, the beds of which, with the julkur right of fishery, may have been heretofore recognised as the property of individuals, any sandbank or chur that may be thrown up shall, as hitherto, belong to the proprietor of the bed of the river," adds the words "subject to the provisions stated in the first clause of the present section." These last-mentioned words refer to the proviso to the first clause, which prevents the owner of an increment of land gained from a river or the sea from being exempt from assessment to revenue under Reg. II of 1819; and they show conclusively that the intention of the Regulation was to provide that all churs newly formed since the decennial settlement, though upon a river-bed which is "recognised as the property" of the owner of the settled estate, are to be treated as land gained since the settlement, and liable to be assessed accordingly.

There is nothing inequitable in such a construction. Sec. 5 of Act IX of 1847 provides that, when on inspection of the deara survey map it appears that land has been washed away from or lost to any estate paying revenue to Government, a proportionate deduction shall be made from the jumma; and if a deduction is to be made for land washed away, there is no reason why an addition should not be made in respect of land gained by alluvion or dereliction. In the latter case, while it may be that the area nominally belonging to the estate is unaltered, the cultivable area is increased and with it the potential revenue of the estate.

It was suggested in argument that a river-bed might be treated as "waste land" coming within the protection of Art. 31 of Reg. II of 1819; but their Lordships are not of that opinion. Indeed the express provision in Art. 31 that waste land shall not be the subject of an additional assessment when brought into cultivation, when contrasted with the provisions of Art. 3 of the same Regulation as to newly formed churs and islands, affords further support to the view that the legislative authority intended to put such churs upon a different footing from the waste lands and to make them liable to assessment.

The learned Judges of the High Court appear to have thought that such a construction of the Regulations as is here adopted would be opposed to the decision of this Board in the above cited case of The Secretary of State for India v. Srimati Fahamidunnissa Begum (1), but on examination of that case it will appear clearly that the lands there held to be exempt from assessment were not churs formed since the settlement upon land which at the time of settlement had been river-bed, but were lands specifically comprised in the settlement and which, having for a time been covered with water, had afterwards emerged again by reason of alluvion or dereliction. The estate there in question, containing at the date of the decennial settlement 1,042 begahs of land, had become wholly submerged by the action of the Ganges and the Brahmaputra; but an area amounting to 2,000 begahs had recently re-appeared above water, and it was this reformed land—which had been specifically included in the decennial settlement and in respect of which the assessed revenue had been paid even during the period of its submergence—which it was sought to assess to additional revenue. The Board, affirming the decision of the High Court in Bengal, decided against this claim, holding that “lands within the limits of settled estates which had become covered with water and afterwards reformed were not lands gained from the river or sea by alluvion or dereliction within the meaning of the legislation of 1847, which is confined to lands so gained since the period of settlement.” It is obvious that such a conclusion has no application to a case like the present, where the land in question is new land formed since the settlement was made. Lord Herschell, by whom the judgment of the Board was delivered, insisted more than once on the circumstance that the land in question was land which had been assessed to revenue at the date of the settlement and had since been inundated and recovered, and that revenue had throughout been paid upon it; and the terms of the judgment indicate that, if the land in question had been formed for the first time since the date of the settlement, the decision would have been the other way.

Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (2) was referred to; but that case, which dealt with the proprietary right in land reformed after submergence upon the original site and not with assessment to revenue, has no direct bearing on the present case. Reliance was also placed on certain rating cases. [Commissioners of Land Tax for the City of London v. Central London Railway Company (3), The Attorney-General for British Columbia v. The Attorney-General for Canada (4)]; but those decisions turned on English or Canadian law, and cannot affect the construction of the express provisions of the Bengal Regulations.

In the result their Lordships are satisfied that the churs and islands, which since the decennial settlement of the zamindari of Burdwan have been formed in the River Damodar opposite to lands belonging to that zamindari, were liable to assessment under the Act of 1847, and accordingly that the appeals in the first two suits should succeed. Having regard to this conclusion, it is unnecessary to consider the question of the ownership of any churs which may have been formed opposite to lands alienated from the zamindari or in the navigable part of the river.

As stated above, the churs formed in the river Darakeshwar, which were in question in the third suit, and those formed in the Damodar over against lands of the zamindar of Maliara, which were the subject of the fourth suit, are for present purposes in the same position as the churs already discussed. The appeals in these suits also should therefore be allowed, and the decision of the District Judge of Bankura in the fourth suit should be restored.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that these appeals should be allowed and the suits dismissed, and that the Respondents should pay the costs in all Courts and the costs of these appeals.

[INSOLVENCY JURISDICTION.]

No. 190 OF 1914.

GREAVES, J.

} Re LALBEHARI SHAH.

Insolvency—Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), secs. 5, 6, 36, 101, sec. 18, Sch. II—Appeal, time within which to be filed—Signing of the findings and of the report—Jurisdiction of the Registrar in Insolvency—Validity of a mortgage, whether could be decided by the Registrar—Consent when infants are concerned, effect of.

Under sec. 101 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, the period of limitation for an appeal from the order of the Registrar in Insolvency is twenty days from the time when the report is signed by the Registrar and the matter is thereby completed and not from the time when the findings of the Registrar are signed or filed.

The Registrar in Insolvency has no jurisdiction to deal with the question of validity, or otherwise of a mortgage alleged to have been executed by the insolvent.

This was an appeal from the order of the Registrar in Insolvency, dated the 14th August 1919.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. H. D. Bose (with him Mr. B. K. Ghose) for the Respondents.—I take a preliminary objection that the appeal is not maintainable. There is no next friend of the Appellants who are infants on the record. In the second place the appeal is out of time. Under sec. 101 time-limit is 20 days. Time begins to run from the date when the findings are signed and filed. What happens subsequently is not material. The matter is not governed by the Limitation Act, no office copies are to accompany the grounds of appeal. As to the question of jurisdiction, the Registrar decided what was referred to him by the Court. The order of reference has not been set aside and could not be challenged in these proceedings. There was also consent of parties.

Mr. A. N. Chaudhuri (with him Sir B. C. Mitter, Mr. S. N. Banerjee and Mr. N. N. Bose) for the Appellants.—The first is only a technical objection. We have made an application to have the cause-title amended. As to the question of limitation time begins to run when the report is signed. Before the report is signed the rights of the parties are not finally determined. Again it is clear that the Registrar has no jurisdiction to decide the question of the validity of the mortgage. It does not come under sec. 6 of the Act. In this case consent is of no avail as there are infants concerned.

GREAVES, J.—This matter comes before me by way of an appeal from a decision of the Insolvency Registrar of this Court. The facts are shortly as follows :—On the 23rd July 1914 Lalbehari Shah and others were adjudicated insolvents upon the petition of a creditor one Motilal Boid. He was a creditor for Rs. 6,48,000 and he filed a retainer through an attorney, Mr. S. N. Dutt, to represent him in the insolvency proceedings. Motilal Boid is the father of the present Appellants before me. He died on the 29th February 1916 leaving him surviving his widow Panni Bibee and the Appellants, his infant sons. He also left a brother Dhoneraj Boid. On the 7th August 1916 an application was made by the brother as next friend of the infants for examination of certain witnesses under sec. 36 of the Insolvency Act. The retainer was signed by him and he made an affidavit that he had no interest adverse to the infants. He signed as next friend and the retainer that he gave to his attorney was in respect of all the proceedings. On the 23rd August 1916 the mortgagees got an order to prove their mortgage before the Registrar in Insolvency under sec. 18 of the second schedule of the Insolvency Act and the Official Assignee was directed to sell the Premises No. 3/2, Sovabazar. On the 1st September 1916 Panni Bibee was appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act as guardian of her infant sons and on the 16th September 1916 she gave to her brother-in-law Dhoneraj Boid a power of attorney to act on her behalf. On the 18th September 1916 the mortgaged properties were sold by the Official Assignee. On the 2nd February 1917 Panni Bibee applied for an order to examine the mortgagees under sec. 36 of the Insolvency Act and an order was made for their examination. It is said that Panni Bibee made the application really as next friend of the infants and in error of the fact that she was not their next friend. Be that as it may, it appears that all the proceedings before the Registrar in Insolvency were conducted on behalf of Panni Bibee not as next friend of the infants but as a creditor of the insolvent's estate and of course she was a creditor of her husband's estate by reason of her position as his widow. On the 6th July 1918 the examination of the witnesses took place that is to say of the mortgagees for a period of two days and the Assistant Referee who was then acting as the Registrar in Insolvency stated that he would go into the question of the validity of the mortgages although I understand that he arrived at no final decision on that day. On the 3rd February 1919, Mr. Remfry, the Registrar in Insolvency, stated that he thought that he would go into the question of the validity of these mortgages and on the 17th February 1919 the parties agreed to the question of the validity of the mortgages being gone into before him. From the 21st to the 27th February the witnesses on behalf of the mortgagees were examined before him and from the 19th March to the 10th April the witnesses called on behalf of the Appellant were examined. On the 12th July 1919 the Registrar in Insolvency signed his findings and just before the figures of the amount due on the mortgage occurs this : "I therefore find and report that there is now due on the mortgage the sum of Rs. 27,000 for principal and interest." Those findings were filed on the 15th July 1919. On the 25th July 1919 the report of the Registrar in Insolvency was settled and passed and he there states that he had gone into the question of the validity of the mortgages and considered the facts placed before him and he holds that the mortgage is a valid one and that the consideration alleged therein was duly paid, and then he goes to state what is due to the mortgagees. On the 14th August 1919 the report was signed and filed on that day and on the 3rd September 1919 the present appeal was filed. Some dispute has arisen as to whether in fact it was presented on the 3rd September 1919 or on the 4th September. What happened, I understand, was that on the 3rd September it was tendered on the Original Side in the English Department and that the attorney who tendered the appeal was then told that it should have been presented in the Insolvency Jurisdiction of the Court and apparently it was presented in the Insolvency Jurisdiction of the Court on the 4th September 1919. It is not contested certainly for the purpose of this application, that the time to file the appeal, if otherwise in time, would have extended until the reopening of the Courts after the long vacation. Accordingly it does not seem to me to matter whether it was in fact filed on the 3rd or 4th September. On these facts being stated to me two preliminary objections were taken on behalf of the mortgagees. First it was said that the appeal is made or presented by infants without their having any next friend and I have an application made by the mortgagees asking that the appeal should be dismissed with costs to be paid by the attorney on the ground that no next friend had been named on behalf of the infants. On the other hand I have another application before me for the amendment of the appeal by inserting the name of the next friend. It seems to me that having regard to the provisions of Or. XXXII, r. 2, I have a discretion as to how I shall deal with the matter when a plaint or other proceedings have been taken without the infant being represented by a next friend and it does not seem to me therefore that there is any substance in this preliminary objection because I shall accede to the application to amend the appeal upon the addition of the name of the next friend upon the costs of the mortgagees of appearing on this application and the costs of their application to which I have already referred being paid. But there is a more substantial preliminary objection and that is that the appeal was filed out of time. It is said that the Registrar's findings having been signed on the 12th July 1919 and filed on the 15th, time runs as from one or other of these dates or in any case at the very latest from the 25th July 1919 when the report was settled and passed. On the other hand it is said on behalf of the Appellants that time did not commence to run until the report was signed by the Registrar on the 14th August 1919. Now it appears that in accordance with the practice of the office, time is taken to run as from the time that the report is signed, because I find a note on the application for appeal, "Report signed 18-8-18—appeal in time" this being signed by the Registrar in Insolvency. It therefore remains to consider the provisions of sec. 101 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act in order to ascertain whether the preliminary objection on this point should prevail or not. Sec. 101 provides that the period of limitation for an appeal from any act or decision of the Official Assignee or from an order made by an officer of the Court empowered under sec. 6 shall be 20 days from the date of such act, decision or order as the case may be. Some discussions took place before me on this preliminary question as to whether the Registrar was a person empowered under sec. 6 of the Act. It is not necessary for me to deal with that now for that is a question which will arise if I decide that the preliminary objection is not well-founded. So it only remains for me to decide whether the order of an officer of the Court referred to in sec. 101 is under the circumstances the findings that were filed on the 15th July or that the report that was actually signed on the 14th August. The conclusion that I have come to is that the 20 days provided by sec. 101 run not as from the findings being filed or signed but as from the matter being completed and the report being signed, that is to say, when the matter is completed and the parties know their position. That therefore disposes of the preliminary objection and it now remains for me to deal with the appeal on its merits; but before I do so I should add that as the matter has been ventilated it does not seem to me to matter whether Panni Bibee was alone before the Registrar or whether the infants unrepresented by a next friend were before the Registrar, because even if the infants were not before the Registrar, it is conceded that being affected by the order that the Registrar has made, they are entitled in any case to appeal. That disposes then of the preliminary objection and the two applications that are made, that is to say, with regard to the amendment of the application and with regard to the dismissal of the appeal. I now proceed to deal with the appeal on its merits. I now come to deal with the appeal as presented. The first ground of appeal is that the Registrar had no jurisdiction to go into the question of the validity or otherwise of the said mortgage in the reference directed to him and that he erred in adjudicating on the same although the parties consented to that course being adopted.

The other grounds of appeal are, secondly, that the mortgage transaction was fictitious; thirdly, that he should have found on the evidence that the adjudication was collusive; and so on.

Counsel appearing on behalf of the Appellants has stated before me that all he desires to do at the present time is to question the jurisdiction of the Registrar to deal with the validity of the mortgage under the reference to him under Sch. II, sec. 18, of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, and he asks that there should be deleted from the report all the findings of the Registrar in Insolvency with regard to the validity of the mortgage, and that is the only question that is now before me on this appeal. It seems to me that although the Registrar dealt with this question by the consent and argument of the parties it is clear that he had no jurisdiction to deal with a question of this kind. Sec. 6 of the Insolvency Act states what are the matters that can be referred to the Registrar in Insolvency, viz., to hear debtor's petitions; to hold public examinations of insolvents; to make any order or exercise any jurisdiction prescribed as proper to be made or exercised in chambers, to hear and determine any unopposed or ex parte application; to examine any person under sec. 36. The only one of these headings which this could possibly come under would be heading 6 (2) (c), but that heading only deals with matters to be dealt with in chambers, and r. 5 of the Insolvency Rules specifically lays down what are the matters that are to be heard and determined in open Court which are, among others 5 (d), applications to set aside or avoid any settlement, conveyance, transfer, security or payment or to declare for or against the title of the Official Assignee to any property adversely claimed. It seems to me that you only have to read sec. 6 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and r. 5 to arrive at the conclusion that the Registrar in Insolvency, as indeed I think he thought himself, had no jurisdiction to deal with a matter of this kind apart from consent of parties. He did so having regard to the consent and on the footing that all the parties interested were sui juris. In this view the appeal succeeds upon the only point which is now raised before me, that is to say, as to whether the Registrar in Insolvency had any jurisdiction to deal with this question and by his decision adversely affect the infants. I am expressing no opinion on this appeal with regard to the validity of the mortgage and whether it is now open to the Appellants to attack the mortgage or not. I make no order as to costs.

Babu Kanai Lal Shaha for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The facts of this appeal are these.

The Plaintiff sued to recover arrears of rent for the years 1321 to 1324 B. S. with cesses and damages on a registered mourasi mokurari kabuliyat executed in 1877.

The lease recites that "within the aforesaid mouza you have granted me a patta of 12 bighas of land at an annual jama of Rs. 6 and Rs. 24 as premium." After reciting how the money should be paid and in what instances, the lease states that the landlord should have right to the minerals, etc., and lastly the words appear: "also it should appear that I would deliver one seer of shyama ghee and one kid every year." No amount is mentioned as payable in lieu of the ghee and goat in case of default.

The trial Court held that the Plaintiff was entitled to recover rent at the rate of Rs. 6 per annum and that he was not entitled to recover the ghee and the goat.

This finding was upheld by the Appellate Court on the ground that the ghee and goat are not mentioned as part of the rent.

The Plaintiffs have appealed.

They contend that the ghee and goat are part of the consideration for which the lease is granted and are not abwabs. They argue that they are putnidars and so the tenancy is governed by the terms of sec. 3 of Reg. VIII of 1819 and that therefore though sec. 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not help them because the lease was created before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, still their position under the Putni Regulation is the same as it would be under the Bengal Tenancy Act. So that even if it be considered as an abwab and not part of the rent they are still entitled to get it.

The Respondent contends that the case is not governed by sec. 3 of the Regulation referred to but by sec. 3 of Reg. V of 1812 and that there is nothing to shew that the Plaintiffs are putnidars. With regard to the last objection of the Respondent it appears that in the plaint the Plaintiffs describe themselves as putnidars which averment has not been traversed in the written statement. We therefore accept the Plaintiffs' statement that they are putnidars and proceed to determine the case on that basis. A number of cases have been cited at the bar of which we will notice the following.

In the case of Krishna Chandra Sen v. Sushila Sundari Dassi (1), it was held that even if the imposition were an abwab still it was recoverable. This case was governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act and it was held that sec. 74 did not control sec. 179 of the Act. This case has no application to the present case.

The next case we have been referred to is the case of Aparna Charan Ghose v. Karam Ali (2). This was a case of a permanent tenancy created by a lease dated 1860. In that case it was held sec. 10 of Act X of 1859 or sec. 3 of Reg. V of 1812 made all impositions upon all classes of tenants including a permanent tenure-holder in excess of the specified rent illegal.

The next case to be considered is the case of Tilakdhari Sing v. Chulan Mahton (3), a decision of the Privy Council. In that case it was decided that payments, over and above the rent, were abwabs and could not be recovered. The Judicial Committee do not seem to make any distinction between what was arbitrary or uncertain and what was not.

This case was discussed in the case of Radha Prasad Sing v. Bal Kowar Koeri (4) and Sir Comer Petheram, C. J. (page 740) considered that the meaning of sec. 74 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was that no imposition under any name whatsoever shall be recovered from the tenant for, or in respect of, the occupation or tenure beyond the sum fixed for rent. O'Kinealy, J., in considering the meaning of the expression "abwab" states (page 745) "this too I think is the sense in which abwabs were considered as arbitrary or indefinite in the old Regulations—arbitrary in the sense, they were unauthorized by law—indefinite in the sense that though levied in a certain proportion to, and upon, the original assessment, there was no definite rule guiding the zemindar in fixing the proportion they bore to the produce of the land."

All these cases discussed and determined the law relating to abwabs and illegal taxations and are of not much help to us in the consideration of the question of the correct interpretation of sec. 3 of Reg. VIII of 1819 with reference to the law then in force prohibiting illegal impositions.

We may note that when the lease in the present case was created, i.e., in 1877, the law relating to illegal impositions was contained in secs. 54 and 55 of Reg. VIII of 1793, sec. 3 of Reg. V of 1812, sec. 10 of Act X of 1859 and sec. 11 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869.

The Appellants submit that the second clause of sec. 3 of the Putni Regulation overrides all previous prohibitions against such impositions and makes all engagements between a putnidar and his lessees, on whatever terms, binding on the parties to the same and hence even the stipulation regarding the payment of abwabs is enforceable as against the latter, being one of the terms on which the lands are let out. It is contended, on the principle that a special provision qualified a general one [Ebbs v. Boulnois (5)], that this clause by its general terms abrogates all previous restrictions as to abwabs so far as relating to putni tenures. We may mention here that it is not seriously contended in view of the clause imposing the delivery of the goat and ghee standing so completely isolated from the terms relating to the rent proper, its mode of payment and the penalty attaching to non-payment, and appearing in the lease by way of post script as it were, that the goat and ghee are part of the rent as such, payable in respect of the demised premises, but it is urged that being part of the consideration of letting such stipulation is enforceable by virtue of the 2nd clause of sec. 3 of Reg. VIII of 1819.

Reg. VIII of 1819 was enacted to govern a class of tenures known as putni taluks, the nature of which the preamble to the Regulation describes in these terms:— "The character of which tenure is that it is a taluk created by the zamindar, to be held at a rent fixed in perpetuity by the lessee and his heirs for ever." Sec. 2 of the Regulation validates leases fixing rent in perpetuity though in contravention of the provisions of Reg. XLIV, 1793. This is followed by sec. 3 which confers on the zamindar and the putnidar the right of letting and under-letting on any terms. Cl. 1 of the section recognizes the validity of the terms of the engagements between the zamindar and the putnidar and cl. 2 makes any engagement between the putnidar and his sub-lessee binding on both parties. Sec. 8 of the Regulation authorises the zamindar to bring the taluk to sale for "any arrear of rent." There is no provision in the Regulation for enforcing any "term or engagement" other than the payment of rent. Reading the Regulation as a whole and considering its policy and scheme, it seems to us that the "engagements" mentioned in sec. 3 of the Regulation cannot be engagements as to rent and other terms connected therewith. If the "goat and ghee" mentioned in the lease under consideration is not part of rent, as we hold it is not, the stipulation regarding the delivery thereof is not legalized by Reg. VIII of 1819 but is subject to the law relating to "abwabs" in force at the time of the creation of the lease. It is hardly necessary to observe that if the above articles are not to be considered rent or part of the rent reserved by the lease, they are abwabs or illegal cesses.

The question as to whether sec. 3 of the Putni Regulation creates an exception to the general rule against abwabs as enunciated by Reg. V of 1812 and other enactments has not been yet directly raised in this Court. The reason for it may be that the answer to it was deemed too obvious for serious consideration. There have been cases in this Court in which the question whether certain impositions in a putni lease were abwabs or not came up for consideration and was elaborately discussed. It will suffice to notice two of them.

In the case of Asanullah Khan v. Tirthabasini (6), the question was whether chaukidari tax payable by the putnidar under the putni settlement is an illegal cess. After a careful review of various enactments relating to abwabs and the case-law on the point, it was held by Macpherson and Banerjee, JJ., that as chaukidari tax was part of the ground rent quite as much as the actual rent, it was not an abwab and was therefore recoverable. At page 688 of the Report their Lordships remark as follows:—"A stipulation for the payment of such an amount cannot, we think, be regarded as one for the imposition of an arbitrary or indefinite cess within the meaning of sec. 3 of Reg. V of 1812 or for an imposition, under the denomination of abwab, mathaut or other like appellations in addition to the actual rent within the meaning of sec. 74 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, for this simple reason, that the imposition here depends primarily not upon the will of the zamindar but upon the law of the land (Bengal Act VI of 1870). It is this Act which imposes the liability on the zamindar, and the zamindar merely stipulates with the putnidar, when granting the putni that the latter should, among other sums, regularly pay him the amount levied from him under the Act." These observations clearly indicate that had the imposition been one dependent upon the will of the zamindar it would have been an imposition of an arbitrary or indefinite cess illegalised by Reg. V of 1812. It was not contended there that that Regulation was superseded by the Putni Regulation.

The next case demanding reference is the case of Bijoy Singh v. Krishna Behary (7). In that case the tenant, in the kabuliyat which was in respect of a putni tenure executed in the year 1882, stipulated to pay a sum of Rs. 15 every year in the month of Bhadra as the mamuli (usual) for the Iswar Thakur. This covenant was contained in a clause separate from that stipulating the yearly rent. The question was whether this sum of Rs. 15 was an abwab and irrecoverable.

(7) 21 C. W. N. 969 (1917).

The Court held that this sum was not intended to be part of the consideration for the use and occupation of the land or as part of the rent and being an abwab was irrecoverable. As appears from the judgment of the Chief Justice it was agreed by both sides that the matter was governed by sec. 3 of Reg. V of 1812. Chatterjea, J., in a considered judgment in that case held that the sum of Rs. 15 mentioned in the kabuliyat did not form part of the consideration for the lease, and even if it did, it did not form part of the rent. This observation affords an answer to the contention of the Appellants before us that the stipulation for the delivery of the goat and ghee is a part of the consideration though not of rent.

Subsequent to Reg. VIII of 1819 the law against illegal cesses was re-enacted, though in indirect terms by sec. 10, Act X of 1859 and sec. 11, Bengal Act VIII of 1869. Both these Acts were of general application and having made no reservation in cases of putni settlements, there is no reason for holding that they did not apply to tenures or holdings created under the Putni Regulation. These enactments furnish ample ground to strengthen the supposition that the legislature did not intend that the Putni Regulation should restrict the application of the general law against abwabs as embodied in sec. 3 of Reg. V of 1812. Even if it were otherwise, the provisions of Act X of 1859 and Act VIII of 1869, Bengal Council, which were applicable to permanent leases [Aparna Charan v. Karam Ali (2)] would govern sec. 3 of the Putni Regulation.

It is to be understood that we have proceeded on the assumption that Reg. VIII of 1819 controls all the incidents of the tenure in question, a point which in view of the interpretation we put on the law we have considered unnecessary to discuss.

For the reasons given above we hold that the stipulation regarding the ghee and goat is, in its term and effect, the imposition of an abwab and as such not enforceable.

The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 2189 of 1919.

CHATTERJEA, J.
PEARSON, J.

12, July.

SASTI CHARAN CHAKRA-
BARTY, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
AKUBJAN BIBEE and ors., Defendants,
Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 148A—Suit by some of the co-sharer landlords for their share of rent only—Position of the purchaser in execution of the decree in such suit—Such purchaser if a necessary party to a suit by some of the other co-sharer landlords for the entire rent—Sec. 163, position of the purchaser at a sale in execution of the decree in the later suit His right to 'khas possession' Sec. 88, sub-division of the tenancy 'without the consent of the landlord'—Landlord's consent means consent of all the landlords.

Some co-sharer landlords having an 8 as. share in the landlord's interest brought a suit for rent against the tenants of an occupancy holding in respect of their 8 as. share, and obtained a decree and in execution of that decree put up to sale only an 8 as. share of the holding. It was purchased by A. who obtained possession thereof. Some of the other landlords then brought a suit for the entire rent of the whole occupancy holding against the original tenants, making the other co-sharer landlords Defendants in the suit. The purchaser at the previous sale was not, however, made a party to the suit. The suit was decreed ex parte and in execution of the decree the entire occupancy holding was put up to sale under sec. 163 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The purchaser at the said sale not having obtained actual possession brought the present suit for recovery of possession on declaration of his title by purchase at the rent sale:

Held—That the other landlords were not bound to recognize A., the purchaser at the first sale, as their tenant as the purchase made by him was merely of the right, title and interest of the tenants in an 8 as. share of the holding. On the other hand A. was bound by the later rent sale, his position being that of an unregistered transferee.

ASGAR ALI v. ASABODDIN KAZI (1) followed.

In the suit by the other co-sharer landlords for the rent of the entire holding A., the purchaser, was not a necessary party, because at the first sale only the interest of the tenants in an 8 as. share passed to the purchaser. Under the provisions of sec. 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act any sub-division of the tenancy required the consent of all the landlords. In the absence of any sub-division of the holding with the consent of all the landlords, the right of the landlords to put up the entire holding to sale was not affected by the purchase made by A.

A co-sharer landlord has a right to claim the whole rent on behalf of the entire body of landlords, sec. 148A being only an enabling section.

PRAMADA NATH ROY v. RAMANI KANT ROY (2) referred to.

The mere fact that something was claimed that was not properly due would not make the decree any the less a rent-decree.

SASTI CHARAN CHAKRABARTTY v. AKUBJAN BIBEE.

JAGUN PROSAD v. POSUN SAHOO (3) referred to.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Narendra Nath Lahiri, Additional Subordinate Judge of Zillah Bakarganj, dated the 28th of May 1919, modifying the decree of Babu R. K. Gupta, Munsif, 5th Court at Barisal, dated the 23rd of March 1917.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Dr. Saral Chandra Basak and Babu Bipin Ch. Ghose for the Respondents.

This appeal arises out of a suit for khas possession of a holding which the Plaintiff purchased at a sale held in execution of a decree for arrears of rent obtained by the landlords against the Defendants Nos. 1 to 14.

It appears that the Defendants Nos. 1 to 14 held an occupancy holding under the Defendants Nos. 15, 16 and their co-sharers. The Defendants Nos. 15 and 16 had an 8 annas share in the landlord's interest. They brought a suit for rent against the tenants in respect of their 8 annas share for the years 1314 to 1317 B. S., obtained a decree and in execution of that decree put up to sale only an 8 annas share of the holding and it was purchased by the Defendant No. 25 on the 30th July 1912. She obtained a certificate of sale on the 28th September 1912, and has been in possession of the 8 annas share since then.

Some of the landlords other than Defendants Nos. 15 and 16 then brought a suit for the entire rent of the whole occupancy holding for the years 1316 to 1319 against the original tenants Nos. 1 to 14 making the Defendants Nos. 15, 16 and other co-sharers parties to the suit. The suit was decreed ex parte on the 12th March 1913. In execution of the decree the entire occupancy holding was put up to sale under sec. 163 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and was purchased by the Plaintiff on the 26th March 1915. The Plaintiff not having obtained actual possession brought the suit out of which this appeal arises, for recovery of possession on declaration of his title by purchase at the rent sale.

The Court of first instance held that the Plaintiff by his purchase at the rent sale was entitled to a decree for khas possession and gave a decree accordingly. That decree was set aside by the lower Appellate Court.

The lower Appellate Court has held that the Defendant No. 25 was not bound by the sale, because she was not made a party to the suit although she had purchased an 8 annas share of the holding before the institution of the rent suit.

But we think that the other landlords were not bound to recognise her (Defendant No. 25) as their tenant as the purchase made by her was merely of the right, title and interest of the tenants in an 8 annas share of the holding. On the other hand the Defendant No. 25 was bound by the sale held on the 26th March 1915, in execution of the decree for arrears of rent against the original tenants, her position being that of an unregistered transferee [see the case of Asgar Ali v Asaboddin Kazi (1)].

It has been contended on behalf of the Respondents that the Defendant No. 25 was a necessary party; because the Defendants Nos. 15 and 16 who are some of the co-sharer landlords were bound to recognise her as a tenant. It is argued that if all the co-sharers had brought a rent suit and if the Defendants Nos. 15 and 16 had been in the category of Plaintiffs, the Defendant No. 25 could not have been left out in the rent suit.

(1) 9 C. W. N. 134 (1904).

SASTI CHARAN CHAKRABARTTY v. AKUBJAN BIBER.

But at the sale held at the instance of Defendants Nos. 15 and 16 only the interest of the tenants in an 8 annas share passed to the purchaser. There could not be any sub-division of the tenancy without the consent of all the landlords, having regard to the provisions of sec. 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It is true that the Defendants Nos. 15 and 16 as co-sharer landlords having separate realisation of rent in respect of their share were entitled to realise their share of rent separately. But such an arrangement, expressed or implied, merely affects the right to sue separately and in no other respect modifies the terms of the holding and the right to bring the tenure to sale for arrears of rent remains intact [see the case of Promada Nath Roy v. Ramani Kant Roy (2)]. It may be said that in this view, a purchaser of a share of a holding at the instance of some of the co-sharer landlords, can be deprived of his right by the other co-sharer landlords bringing a suit for arrears of the entire rent on behalf of all the landlords. But on the other hand, if the contention of the Respondent is correct, it would be open to one of the co-sharer landlords, who might have a very small share, to sue a tenant, sell a small share of the holding and by recognising the purchaser, deprive the entire body of landlords from putting the entire holding to sale for the entire rent. We think that in the absence of any sub-division of the holding with the consent of all the landlords, the right of the entire body of landlords to put up the entire holding to sale was not affected by the purchase made by the Defendant No. 25 at the sale held in execution of the decree obtained by Defendants Nos. 15 and 16.

The lower Appellate Court was of opinion that the plaint was not in proper form, and that under sec. 148A the landlords who brought the suit for rent ought to have proceeded with their share only of the rent. Sec. 148A, however, is only an enabling section. A co-sharer landlord is given the right to proceed with the suit for his share only of the rent where he is unable to ascertain whether any amount is due to the other co-sharers. A co-sharer landlord has a right to claim the whole rent on behalf of the entire body of landlords as laid down in the case of Promada Nath Roy v. Ramani Kant Roy (2), and it is only in a case so framed that the decree has the effect of a rent decree. The right is recognised in sec. 158 (B), sub-sec. 1, cl. (iii) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. We do not think, therefore, that there is any force in this objection.

It is contended by the learned Pleader for the Respondent that the decree was bad inasmuch as it was not in favour of the landlords who were not the Plaintiffs in the rent suit, but were made pro forma Defendants to the suit. But although that is so, the decree declares the share of each of the co-sharer landlords and the rent due to each of them. It is to be observed that sec. 158B, sub-sec. 2, clearly lays down that when one or more co-sharer landlords having obtained a decree in a suit framed under sub-sec. (1) or under sec. 148A applies or apply for the execution of the decree by the sale of the tenure or holding, the Court shall, before proceeding to sell the tenure or holding, give notice of the application to the other co-sharers: and it may also be pointed out that the proviso to sec. 169 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which deals with the question of disposal of proceeds of a sale held under Chap. XIV, lays down that where a tenure or holding has been sold in execution of a decree obtained by one or more of the co-sharer landlords in a suit framed under sec. 148A or sub-sec. 1 of sec. 158B, payment of the amount due under such decree shall notwithstanding anything contained in cl. (b), be made to the decree-holder and to the other co-sharer landlords in proportion to the amount found to be due to each.

We do not think, therefore, that the sale was bad by reason of the form of the decree.

The learned Pleader for the Respondents also contended that the claim included arrears, a portion of which was sued for previously in the suit brought by Defendants Nos. 15 and 16. It was pointed out that the suit brought by them was for recovery of arrears for 1314 to 1317 and that the suit for the entire rent brought by the other landlords was for the period 1316 to 1319, so that the arrears of 1316 to 1317 (the subject-matter of both the suits), were twice sued for. But no objection appears to have been raised in the rent suit to that portion of the claim. The Defendant No. 25 no doubt, was not made a party to the suit, but the original tenant was there; 8 annas share was left in him, and the mere fact that something was claimed that was not properly due would not make the decree any the less a rent-decree [see the case of Jagun Prasad v. Posun Sahoo (3)].

We may add that the question of fraud was raised in the first Court and was found against the Defendants; and that the point was not pressed in the lower Court.

For all these reasons, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs.

L. OPPENHEIM AND COMPANY, Appellants,
v.

HAJEE MAHOMED HANEEF SAHIB,
since deceased,
Respondent.

Contract to buy goods, between London and Madras merchants—Stipulation for arbitration in London—Award made in London—Suit on award—Defence that arbitrator had given no opportunity to Defendant to be heard, if may be taken in the suit—English Arbitration Act, 1889—Supreme Court Rules, Or. 64, r. 14—Irregularity not going to the root and not apparent on the face of award.

In a contract to purchase sheepskin of a specified quality by a merchant carrying on business in London from a merchant carrying on business in Madras, it was stipulated that any differences not amicably settled was to be submitted to arbitration in London in the usual way and the award of such arbitration was to be binding on both buyer and seller. The buyer having sued the seller in the Madras High Court for enforcement of an award made by an arbitrator in London, the seller objected that the award was not binding on him as the arbitrator had proceeded to arbitrate without giving him an opportunity to be heard:

Held—That as the arbitration clause provided for an arbitration which was to take place in London and in accordance with English law and procedure, any objection to the award on the ground of misconduct or irregularity had to be taken by motion to set aside or remit the award, under the English Arbitration Act of 1899, within the time limited by Or. 64, r. 14, of the Rules of the Supreme Court. No such objection having been taken, the award became fully binding on both parties to it, as if it had been incorporated in the contract.

Any defence going to the root of the award, e.g., that the arbitrator had no jurisdiction or that the matter was tainted with fraud—could have been pleaded in the suit, but a defence on the ground of irregularity not appearing on the face of the award was excluded by the law by which both parties had agreed to be bound.

THORBURN v. BARNES (2) referred to.

This was an appeal from a decree, dated 6th November 1918 of the High Court of Judicature at Madras in its Appellate Jurisdiction which reversed a decree, dated 19th February 1918 of the said High Court in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The facts may be shortly stated as follows :

By a contract dated the 23rd October 1913 the Appellants bought from the Respondents sheepskins for shipment to London. The arbitration clause in the said contract which is fully set out in the judgment provided inter alia for "arbitration in London, in the usual manner." On arrival in London the skins were alleged to be inferior to the quality contracted for and a reference was made by the Appellants to arbitration. They nominated Mr. Pringle as their arbitrator. The Respondents, though receiving notice, failed to appoint their arbitrator and Mr. Pringle eventually made an award in the Appellants' favour for £258-5-9. The Appellant thereupon issued a writ against the Respondent for the amount of the award and eventually obtained judgment in the King's Bench Division for a total sum of £296-12-9 which included interest and costs. The Appellants then filed the present suit against the Respondent in Madras claiming alternatively the amount of the judgment, or of the award, or of the loss sustained.

The claim on the judgment was dismissed by the trial Judge (Coutts Trotter, J.), [Vide sec. 13, Civil Procedure Code and Keymer v. P. Visanatham Reddy (1)] but the suit was decreed for the amount of the award.

On appeal the Appellate Division of the High Court (Wallis, C. J., and Napier, J.) reversed the judgment of the lower Court and the Appellants now appealed to His Majesty in Council.

[The appeal was originally heard before a different Board on December 1st 1921, but was reheard on February 17th 1922.]

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Harold Morris, K. C. for the Appellants.—No notice of hearing was given to the Respondent by Mr. Pringle and the question arises whether there was misconduct on the part of the arbitrator, and whether that is to be determined by English or by Indian Law. The contract was made in England, was to be performed in England and the parties must have intended English Law to apply. Their rights must be regulated according to the intention of the parties as appears from the contract. Hamlyn v. Talisker Distillery (3). The obvious intention here was for English Law to apply in all proceedings, including proceedings to set aside the award. No proceedings for that purpose were taken within the time fixed by Or. 64, r. 14, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, England.

L. OPPENHEIM AND COMPANY v. HAJEE MA HOMED HANEEF SAHIB.

In English Law the award being "ex facie" correct misconduct by an arbitrator does not make the award absolutely invalid. Bache v. Billingham (4). The Indian Law is found in:—Bindessuri Pershad Singh v. Janki Pershad Singh (5), Surjan Raot v. Bhikari Raot (6) and Ghellabhai Atmaram v. Nandu Bhai (7). This deals with Indian arbitrations only and has no bearing on a contract such as the one now before the Board. No Court in India has jurisdiction to set aside this award because no Indian Court had jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the award, or over the arbitrator.

Reference was also made to:—

Indian Arbitration Act, IX of 1899, secs. 11 and 14.

Indian Civil Procedure Code Act V of 1908, Sch. II, secs. 15 and 20.

No one appeared for the Respondent.

VISCOUNT CAVE.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, in the exercise of its Appellate jurisdiction, allowing an appeal from a decree made by Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the same Court.

The Appellants are merchants carrying on business in London, and the original Respondent (who has died during the pendency of this appeal and is represented by the present Respondents) was a merchant carrying on business in Madras.

By a contract in writing made in London and dated the 23rd October 1913, the Appellants bought from the Respondent 20,000 tanned Madras sheepskins of a specified quality to be shipped to the Appellants in London. The contract contained the following clause:—

"Any differences arising out of this contract, failing amicable adjustment, to be submitted to arbitration in London in the usual manner, and the award of such arbitration to be final and binding on both buyer and seller."

Certain skins were shipped to London, and the Appellants paid to the Respondent £1,495, 15s. 4d. in respect of those skins. When the skins arrived in London, the Appellants alleged that they were of inferior quality and refused to accept delivery. They were ultimately sold, with the consent of the Respondent, at the price of £1,242 10s. 0d., thus leaving a deficiency of £253 5s. 4d., which the Appellants demanded from the Respondent and which the Respondent refused to pay. Thereupon the Appellants, in pursuance of the arbitration clause contained in the contract and of the English Arbitration Act, appointed Mr. R. H. Pringle as arbitrator on their behalf in the difference which had arisen, and caused the Respondent to be served at Madras with a notice, dated the 3rd February 1916, whereby they informed him of the appointment of Mr. Pringle and required him, within seven days from the service of the notice, to name to the Appellants or their agents in Madras an arbitrator to act on their behalf in London in the matter of the difference which had arisen, the notice stating that otherwise the difference would stand referred to Mr. Pringle alone as sole arbitrator. The Respondent refused to appoint an arbitrator to act on his behalf or to take part in the arbitration; and thereupon Mr. Pringle, at the request of the Appellants, proceeded with the arbitration. He gave no opportunity to either party to appear and give evidence before him, but, having read the contract and correspondence and inspected the skins, he made his award in writing, dated the 11th July 1916, and thereby awarded that the Respondent should pay to the Appellants the sum of £258 5s. 9d., with interest and costs.

On the 15th July 1916, the Appellants brought an action in the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice in England for the amount payable under the award, and, the writ of summons having been served by leave upon the Respondent at Madras and no appearance having been entered, the Appellants, on the 28th November 1916, recovered judgment against the Respondent for the sum of £286 2s. 9d., being the amount of the award with some interest and costs.

The Appellants then brought the suit out of which this appeal arises against the Respondent in the High Court of Judicature at Madras, claiming the sum of £286 2s. 9d. due under the judgment of the King's Bench Division, or in the alternative £263 10s. 9d. being the amount of the award and costs, with interest, or as a further alternative £253 5s. 4d., being the loss on the contract. The Respondent pleaded (among other pleas which are not now material) that the judgment of the High Court of Justice in London was not binding upon him, as it was not given on the merits, that the claim under the contract was barred by limitation, and as to the award, that it was not binding upon him as no notice was given to him by the arbitrator that he was proceeding to arbitrate.

The suit was heard by Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter, who held that, having regard to the decision of this Board in Keymer v. Reddy (1), the action upon the judgment could not be maintained, as the judgment had been entered in default of appearance and the action had not been tried upon its merits, and that the claim under the contract was statute-barred. This part of the judgment has not been challenged and need not be further referred to. With regard to the award, the learned Judge in a lucid judgment held that the plea of want of notice could not be raised by defence in the suit. After observing that the grievance of the Respondent was more imaginary than real, the award having been made by a commercial man who took the commercial documents with which he was familiar and saw the goods and gave his opinion on the spot, he added that if the objection could have been raised in the proceedings he would have felt constrained to give effect to it. But he referred to Thorburn v. Barnes (2) as a complete authority for the proposition that according to the English law any objection relating to an irregularity in bringing an award into existence must be taken by motion under the Arbitration Act, 1889, to set aside or remit the award, and if not so taken could not be raised by way of defence to an action on the award. He therefore held that the defence that the award was tainted with irregularity by the fact that the Respondent had not had an opportunity of being present at the arbitration, was not open to him in the suit. An application having been made by Counsel for the Respondent to treat the written statement as an application to the Court at Madras to set aside the award, the learned Judge held that he had no jurisdiction to entertain such an application, adding :—

"How a judge in Madras is supposed to have jurisdiction to upset an award made by an arbitrator in London passes my comprehension, and it is perfectly clear that the Court which is given jurisdiction by the English Act is the English Court."

He added that even if he had had jurisdiction he would have declined to exercise it.

Against this judgment an appeal was brought and was allowed by the Appellate Division, the learned Judges of that Division holding that the rule in Thorburn v. Barnes (2) did not apply in India. Thereupon the present appeal was brought.

In their Lordships' opinion Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter came to the right decision and this appeal should succeed. The contract of the 23rd October 1913 was made and was to be performed in England; and the arbitration clause provided for an arbitration which was to take place in London and in accordance with English law and procedure. Under that law, by which both parties agreed to be bound, any objection to an award on the ground of misconduct or irregularity on the part of the arbitrator must be taken by motion to set aside or remit the award, and if not so taken cannot be pleaded in answer to an action on the award. In the present case no such motion was made within the time limited by Or. 64, r. 14, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, England, or at all, and accordingly the award became as fully binding on both parties as if it had been incorporated in the contract. No doubt any defence going to the root of the award—for instance, that the arbitrator had no jurisdiction or that the matter was tainted with fraud—could have been pleaded in the suit; but a defence on the ground of irregularity not appearing on the face of the award was excluded by the law by which both parties had agreed to be bound.

On this view of the case the Indian law as to arbitration is irrelevant, and their Lordships accordingly express no opinion on the question whether if the arbitration had taken place in India the defence on the ground of irregularity could have been pleaded. It is plain that the Indian Court could not set aside an English award on that ground.

In order to prevent misconception it appears desirable to add that it was not pleaded or contended at any stage of the proceedings that the award had merged in the English judgment, and accordingly their Lordships do not deal with that point.

For the above reasons their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed and that the order of Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter should be restored, the Respondents to pay the costs in both Courts in India and the costs of this appeal.

[APPEALS FROM MADRAS.]

LORD BUCKMASTER. SIR JOHN EDGAR. MR. AMEER ALI. SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS. 1921. Heard, 7 and 8, November. Judgment, 8, November.	T. R. VENKATA ROW alias GANESHA ROW, since deceased (now represented by T. V. Narayana Row), Appellant, v. T. V. TULJARAM Row and ors., Respondents.

Hindu law—Mitakshara joint family—Father giving up decree on behalf of self and minor son Decree, found not binding on minor son, if bound father's undivided share—Power of father to dispose of joint property.

R, the managing member of a joint Hindu family, for himself and as guardian of his minor son G, after obtaining a decree for money against T, by compromise surrendered all his rights and those of G, the consideration mentioned being that T would not prosecute an appeal he had preferred against that decree. Two more sons were born to R subsequently to the compromise. On attaining majority having sued to set aside the compromise, it was held that the compromise did not bind G :

Held—That as the decree was a portion of the joint family property, R could deal with it only with the consent of G or as manager for a justifying necessity; and therefore the compromise failed as a whole and did not bind even the then existing share of R in the undivided property.

That the compromise having been set aside T was entitled to proceed with his appeal.

These are three consolidated appeals from one principal judgment and three decrees, dated the 30th August 1916 of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, which affirmed a judgment and decree, dated the 24th March 1916 of the same High Court in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

In 1897 under a decree for partition of family property being the decree passed in Civil Suit No. 266 of 1886, Tuljaram Row (the Defendant-Respondent, and Cross-Appellant) was liable to his brother Rajaram Row and the son of the latter (viz., Venkata Row alias Ganesha Row) in a sum of Rs. 86,000 and cross-appeals were pending against that decree.

In November 1897, Rajaram Row who was the guardian ad litem of his son, without the sanction of the Court entered into a compromise in pursuance of which he entered up satisfaction of the amount due under the decree, and Tuljaram withdrew his appeal.

On attaining majority Venkata Row, the Appellant, repudiated the compromise and brought the present Suit No. 194 of 1906 against his father Rajaram Row and his uncle Tuljaram Row praying for a decree for the said sum of Rs. 86,000 and interest amounting in all to Rs. 1,60,000.

That suit was dismissed by the lower Courts but by an order in Council, dated the 7th March 1913 that dismissal was set aside: the Lords of the Judicial Committee holding that the said compromise was not binding on the Plaintiff and remitting the case to the High Court of Madras for the determination of Issues Nos. 6 and 7 which were:—(6), Is the Plaintiff entitled to recover in any event more than a moiety of the amount sued for? And (7), Is the Plaintiff entitled to charge interest, and if so, at what rate?

The full history of the case and the earlier judgment of the Board will be found reported in 17 Calcutta Weekly Notes, 765.

The order in Council made in pursuance of that judgment contained the following terms:—

(1) That this appeal ought to be allowed; the decrees of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated respectively the 2nd day of September 1908 and the 28th day of September 1909 set aside: (2) that in lieu thereof it ought to be declared that an agreement of compromise, dated the 21st day of November 1897 and the satisfaction entered thereunder are not binding on the Appellant and that he ought to be remitted to his original rights under the decrees in the Suit No. 266 of 1886 on the file of the said High Court: (3) that the suit out of which this appeal arises ought to be remitted to the said High Court in order that the other questions arising between the parties and covered by Issues Nos. 5 and 7 may be disposed of: and (4) that the costs of the Appellant of the appeal to the said High Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction ought to be paid by the Respondent T. V. Tuljaram Row and that the costs incurred in the said High Court at the trial of the suit and those of the further proceedings which are to be taken there ought to abide the result of those proceedings.

T. R. VENKATA ROW alias GANESHA ROW v. T. V. TULJARAM ROW.

In 1906 Rajaram Row had only one son : two more sons were born to his wife, viz., Ramchandra Row and Krishna Row, and they were made parties to the suit on remand before the High Court (Wallis, J.) who held that Venkata and his two brothers were together entitled to share in a moiety of the fund in dispute. Against this judgment cross-appeals were filed by Venkata and Tuljaram Row which were heard by the Officiating C. J., Abdur Rahim, and Seshagiri Ayyar, J. The learned Judges held that the declaration by the Judicial Committee in favour of Venkata "was made not to him individually but as representing the undivided members of the family," and that the compromise should as far as Rajaram was concerned be regarded as an alienation by him of his then existing share.

From the decrees of the High Court the present appeals were brought to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellant, Venkata alias Ganesha Row.—The compromise is not an alienation of his own rights by Rajaram. It was on behalf of the whole family that Rajaram was relinquishing the family rights. Once that compromise is set aside Rajaram's rights revive as an ordinary member of the family. Venkata's suit is on behalf of the family.

As regards the after-born sons they cannot share in the moiety, decreed to Venkata. Rajaram's alienation operated as a severance and the amount decreed to Venkata operates as his self acquired property.

Reference was made to the following cases :—Ram Chunder Dutt v. Chunder Caomar Mundul (1), Naro Gopal v. Paragauda (2), Soundararajan v. Arunachalam Chetty (3) and Baboo Hurdi Narain v. Ruder Perakash (4).

Messrs. Murray, K. C. (Solicitor-General for Scotland) and Ingram for the Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.—The compromise was a complete compromise between Tuljaram and all the members of the family so that each individual's claims became barred.

Venkata being a minor the Board have held that his claim could not be barred, but the compromise holds good against all other members of the family including the unborn sons.

Tuljaram has elected to stand by the terms of the compromise with everyone except Venkata.

Rajaram's compromise bound the unborn sons also and they had no interest in the decree because Rajaram had no interest at the date of their birth.

Venkata's rights lapsed at his death and his son can take nothing except as a coparcener.

Padarath Singh v. Raja Ram (5) and Muhammad Husain v. Khushalo (6).

In any event Venkata can only get the property subject to the equities on it in favour of Tuljaram.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C. and Dubé for the Respondents Nos. 3 and 4.—The Board have only found that the compromise is not binding on Venkata.

Tuljaram elected to be free from the compromise and to prosecute his appeal. The compromise has therefore gone altogether. If you held it as still valid as against Rajaram, it is bound to affect Venkata indirectly. Once you say definitely that one party to the compromise is not bound the compromise must be void ab initio.

The suggestion that Rajaram as karta made a disposition of family property which bound all except one member is contrary to the whole idea of the Hindu family.

Rajaram did not profess to act as manager, so that his act bound neither Venkata nor future members of the family, but only himself. In any event it was an improvident act and not for the benefit of the family.

Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 341.

The argument that Rajaram's alienation operated as an immediate severance is tantamount to arguing that Venkata is bound by the compromise.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—The real question for determination on these appeals is as to the effect of a compromise entered into on the 21st November 1897, between Rajaram Row, purporting to act both for himself and as guardian of his minor son Venkata Row, and Tuljaram Row. The compromise related to certain claims then existing between Rajaram Row and his son, as constituting a joint Hindu family, against Tuljaram Row, and it arose in this manner. Originally Venkata Row, together with his four sons, Ramchandra Row, Luchmand Row, Rajaram Row, and Tuljaram Row, formed a joint Hindu family, governed by the Mitakshara law. Venkata Row died in 1871, survived by his sons, and in 1881 the joint family was dissolved, and a division of the joint estate took place, leaving the great part of it in the hands and under the control of Tuljaram Row, who was the manager of the family. In 1886 a suit was brought by Atmaram, the son of Luchmand, against Tuljaram Row, for the purpose of ascertaining the extent of the family assets remaining in his hands, for the necessary accounts, partition, and other relief, and to this suit all the members of the family were parties. Two orders were made in that suit, one on the 21st October 1896, and the other on the 17th August 1897, and by these orders Tuljaram Row was decreed as liable to pay to Rajaram Row and his branch of the family certain sums of rupees. The compromise to which reference has been made was a compromise of the rights possessed by Rajaram Row and his son under these decrees.

The compromise was a very simple matter. It consisted in releasing Tuljaram Row from all liability to make the payments which he had been ordered by the High Court to make, payments which were on the face of them considerable in extent; and the only consideration mentioned was that Tuljaram would agree not to prosecute an appeal which he then had on foot against these orders. In other words, Rajaram Row, acting in his own interest and on behalf of his infant son, gave up and surrendered, without any further struggle, all the rights to which he was then entitled, together with his son, in the decrees of October 1896, and August 1897.

It is not surprising in these circumstances that on Venkata Row attaining his majority in 1906 he should have taken steps to challenge the validity of this compromise. A suit was accordingly instituted by him under the name of Ganesha Row against Tuljaram and Rajaram Row seeking to recover the monies mentioned in the decrees as "the undivided son" of Rajaram Row. He failed both before the Judge of first instance and in the Court of Appeal. The matter then came before the Judicial Committee, and on 7th March 1913, it was decided that the compromise did not bind, and could not bind, the infant, who ought to be remitted to his original rights under the decrees in the suits referred to, and the case was remitted to deal with the remaining issues on this footing.

Two further sons were born to Rajaram Row before the case came on for hearing on remand, and as they were also members of the joint family with their father and the Plaintiff, they were added as Defendants and are the third and fourth Respondents on these appeals. On behalf of the Plaintiff it was argued that the compromise became wholly ineffectual by virtue of the order, as the family had never been divided, that consequently the new members of the family were entitled to their share and their rights could not be established if the compromise remained.

Wallis, J., before whom the remitted issues were tried, decided that Ganesha could only be entitled to a half-share, but as the further members of the family had come into existence, namely, two further sons of Rajaram, he directed that they should be added as Defendants, and on this being done he decreed that Ganesha and his two brothers were together entitled to a half-share of the monies with interest, in other words, he gave Ganesha one-sixth of the whole. The judgment also dealt with other matters no longer material, and it gave rise to as many as four appeals, of which it is only necessary to consider that of Ganesha, whose representatives are the present Appellants. His appeal failed because the High Court regarded the order of the Privy Council as rendering the compromise binding on Rajaram Row's then existing share, but, in fact, the order only declared the compromise was not binding on Ganesha Row, who was remitted to all his original rights under the compromised suits.

The Appellants urge that in the events that have happened this entitles the whole family to share in the whole fund, as otherwise the rights of the Appellants would have been seriously curtailed by the order which intended that they should be preserved.

Their Lordships think that this argument is well founded. The agreement of the 21st November 1897, did not purport to be a release of individual rights or shares in the fund at all; it did not purport to effect any division of the joint family estate that then existed between Rajaram and his son in the subject-matter of these decrees. On the contrary, what it purported to do was to release the whole of the debts that were then owing to the joint family, in consideration of Tuljaram not prosecuting his appeals.

Now it has been held by this Board that that attempted arrangement failed so far as the infant was concerned: and, if it failed so far as the infant was concerned, their Lordships think that in the events that have happened it must also be regarded as failing wholly to convey any of the joint estate at all. They have arrived at that conclusion for these reasons. Rajaram Row, unless he was attempting to divide the joint family, could only deal with this property with the consent of his son or in his capacity as manager of the estate. In his capacity as manager of the estate he was only able to deal with it for certain limited purposes, and none of those purposes are, or can be, suggested as the consideration why these considerable sums were released. It follows, therefore, that the attempt to alienate or to release from the estate these substantial portions of the joint family property failed, and that there was no efficacy given to the arrangement that was then contemplated.

Their Lordships have expressly stated that this is their view of this agreement in the events that happened. It might possibly have been that different circumstances would have arisen if Venkata Row, the son, had predeceased his father, and there had been no further members of the joint Hindu family. In that case it is possible that the arrangement would have been one which Rajaram Row would have been unable to dispute; but those are not the circumstances that exist at the present time. At the present time the joint family continues; the joint family finds that this is a portion of the joint family estate which has been improperly alienated, and which they are entitled to recover. It, of course, follows equally upon that that Tuljaram Row will be entitled to prosecute his appeals, and their Lordships are a little astonished to find that, although liberty has been given to him to proceed, an order has been made which has restrained the prosecution of these appeals until after the hearing of these appeals by this Board. Were this matter ordinary English litigation, of course no tribunal here would consider hypothetical rights, the exact character and extent of which could only be ascertained after the hearing of other pending litigation; but unwillingness to let litigants, who have entrusted their disputes to the Board for determination, from a place so far distant as India, be disappointed in receiving judgment, has led their Lordships to disregard the ordinary rules that are followed in these matters, and to hear the appeal, notwithstanding the fact that it is impossible to know the exact amount upon which they will operate.

In the result their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the decrees of the High Court ought to be set aside and that it ought to be declared that whatever sums may ultimately be recovered in respect of the monies that were ordered to be paid by the decrees of the 21st October 1896, and the 17th August 1897, referred to in the agreement of the 21st November 1897, form part of the joint family estate which was constituted on the 21st November 1897, by Rajaram Row and his son Venkata Row. If on the other hand, that family has, as is stated, been dissolved, the declaration will be that the shares in the monies are to be fixed as at the date of its dissolution. As regards the cross-appeal, the Cross-Appellants are entitled to have the case remitted to the High Court to hear the appeal O. S. A. No. 4 of 1897, and to issue a revised decree in O. S. No. 266 of 1886, finally determining the sum, if any, that is due.

As regards the costs, the Respondent, Tuljaram Row, must pay one set between the Appellants and the Respondents, Ramchandra Row and Radha Bai.

Solicitor: Mr. Douglas Grant for Venkata Row.

Solicitor: Mr. D. Graham Pole for Tuljaram Row.

PRIVY COUNCIL APPLICATION

No. 20 of 1921.

SANDERSON, C. J.	NAGENDRABALA DAS,
RICHARDSON, J.	Applicant,

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 110—Petitioner if has to show that any substantial question of law is involved, where though the High Court's decree purported to dismiss the appeal, it yet substantially overruled the decision of the lower Court.

In a certain suit the lower Court held amongst other things that in view of the frame of the suit it was not open to it to direct a conveyance to the Plaintiffs of the mortgaged properties. On appeal, the High Court dismissed the Plaintiffs' appeal with costs and affirmed the decree of the lower Court with one variation, namely—“that the decree as also the mortgaged properties will be included in the conveyance to the Plaintiffs :”

Held—That though the decree of the High Court purported to dismiss the appeal with costs, it was impossible to hold that it affirmed the decision of the Court below. Therefore it was not necessary for the Petitioner to show that any substantial question of law was involved in the appeal to His Majesty.

This was an application filed on the 1st August 1921 for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the judgment of this Court, dated the 20th May 1921 delivered by Mookerjee and Buckland, JJ., in Regular Appeal No. 249 of 1919.*

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babu Panchanon Ghosh for the Petitioner.

Babu Brojo Lal Chuckerbutty for the Opposite Party.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council by Srimati Nagendrabala Dasí and Nobo Kumar Hazra against the judgment of this Court dated the 20th May 1921, and the first question which we have to decide is whether the decree of the High Court is one which affirmed the decree of the Court immediately below.

The position is somewhat curious, because the Plaintiffs were the Appellants although the Petitioners now before us had put in cross-objections, and the Plaintiffs' appeal was dismissed with costs, yet the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge was affirmed with one variation, namely :

—“That the decree as also the mortgaged properties, purchased by the assignee in execution, will be included in the conveyance and the Plaintiffs will be allowed two months from the date of the decree of this Court to deposit the amount mentioned in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge.” The decree made by the first Court was to this effect, that the suit be decreed and that the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 do assign the decree in favour of the Plaintiffs on the latter depositing Rs. 13,750 and so on. As already pointed out this Court varied that decree by directing that the Plaintiffs were entitled not only to an assignment of the decree but also to a conveyance of the mortgaged property purchased by them in execution. The learned Judges of this Court stated in an earlier part of their judgment as follows : “It was apparently overlooked that, during the pendency of the suit, the decree had already been executed and the hypothecated properties purchased by the assignees of the decree.” With every respect to the learned Judges it appears to me that this was not quite a correct statement of the position as regards the Court of first instance, because on reading the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge it seems to me that the learned Subordinate Judge had not overlooked but had drawn attention to the above-mentioned fact, and had come to the conclusion that having regard to the way in which the suit was framed, it was not open to him to declare that the Plaintiffs were entitled to the conveyance of the property purchased by the assignee of the decree. The passage in the judgment is at p. 136 of the paper-book and is as follows : “The Plaintiffs have not added any prayer for reconveyance of their mortgaged properties to them. Still, however, money is due to the decree in question and the Plaintiffs may on that account as well pray for an assignment of the decree in their favour. What the effect of such a decree will be on the lands thus sold in execution of the mortgage decree in question is a different question with which the Court has nothing to do in the present suit as framed." I read the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge to mean that in the suit, as framed, it was not open to him to direct a conveyance to the Plaintiffs of the mortgaged properties. If that be so, then it seems to me that the judgment of the High Court was one which overruled that decision, because the learned Judges came to the conclusion that in that suit as framed, it was open to the learned Subordinate Judge to direct a conveyance of the mortgaged property to the Plaintiffs and inasmuch as they directed by their judgment that the mortgaged properties should be included in the conveyance under these circumstances, it seems to me that it is impossible for us to hold that the decree of the High Court affirmed the decision of the Court below.

The result is that it is not necessary for the Petitioner to show that any substantial question of law is involved, and the only other question which we have to consider is the question of value; upon the appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council the Petitioners have a right to appeal against the whole decree of this Court, and it cannot be disputed that the subject-matter of the suit as well as the subject-matter of the appeal is of the value of more than rupees ten thousand. Consequently in my judgment a certificate should be granted.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

Insolvency—Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), secs. 70, 82—Separate creditors—Misfeasance, neglect or omission—Distribution of assets—Notice of claim not disposed of—Personal liability of the Official Assignee—Method of ascertaining his liability—Costs.

The Official Assignee distributed the assets of the insolvent after deducting commission, etc., to the two scheduled creditors, though he had notice of claim by three other creditors and their claims were neither admitted nor rejected:

Held—That the Official Assignee was personally liable for the amount of which the three creditors had been deprived.

A creditor who lodges his proof in the statutory form is entitled that it should be dealt with without doing anything more.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. N. N. Sircar (with Mr. S. M. Bose) for the Creditors.—In this case the Official Assignee comes under sec. 82 and is guilty of misfeasance, neglect or omission and is personally liable to compensate the creditors the loss they have suffered on account of the distribution of the assets before dealing with the claims of the three creditors, who are the applicants. The Official Assignee had notice of their claims before he distributed the assets. There could be no justification for such a conduct. Creditors had reason to believe that their claims were admitted. If the proof was not sufficient the Official Assignee ought to have asked for further evidence. The creditor had nothing further to do. Moreover there is no such rule by which any time limit is imposed within which the claim is to be admitted or rejected.

Mr. A. A. Avetoom for the Official Assignee as Assignee of the Insolvent.—

* Re ARCHIBALD GILCHRIST PEACE.

The Official Assignee treated the scheduled creditors as the separate creditors of the insolvent under sec. 70 and hence preference was given to them. The creditors did nothing except filing their claims; they ought to have taken steps to have their claims admitted. The Official Assignee acted bonâ fide and is not guilty of any misfeasance. If the Official Assignee was not right in acting strictly within the provision of the Act relating to the distribution of dividends, he acted in a manner analogous and suitable to the particular circumstances of the case.

RANKIN, J.—This is an application brought by three creditors against the Official Assignee. The insolvent, one Archibald Gilchrist Peace, was adjudicated on the 7th August 1918, and on the same day filed his schedule of affairs in which he disclosed the number of his creditors as two. The first creditor Bijoy Sing Duduria was put down as a creditor for Rs. 12,340-11-0, and the consideration was this : “Lent to the insolvents late firm of Gilchrist Peace and Ross.” The second creditor is Kathleen Irene Marie Paul Ghose. The amount is Rs. 27,800, and the consideration is stated in the same words as in the case already mentioned. The present applicants filed their several proofs of debt by the 7th May 1919. What happened thereafter was that Mr. Faulkner as Official Assignee being told by the insolvent that a friend would provide money to enable these two creditors to be paid off to their satisfaction, did, in fact, utilise the assets of the estate which had come to his hand together with a further sum of money obtained from the friend in question to pay off the two creditors after arranging a small abatement from these considerable debts. Payment was made about the 26th August 1919. The present applicants complain, first of all, that their proofs of debt filed in May 1919 were in no way noticed; they were neither admitted nor rejected nor dealt with in any way. Before distributing the sum of about Rs. 40,000 to the two scheduled creditors, no notices such as the statute requires before the payment of a dividend were issued to the public : none were issued to the applicants or to any one else. The sum obtained from the insolvent's friend was sufficient not only to pay off the two creditors to their satisfaction, but also to pay a commission to the Official Assignee of 5 per cent. upon the full amount. Under these circumstances the excluded creditors bring this application, and they say that they are not only within general principles of law in view of the fact that Mr. Faulkner is a trustee, but that they are within an express provision in the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, viz., sec. 82.

I have to enquire, first of all, whether this is a case of misfeasance, neglect or omission within the meaning of that section or a case of breach of trust within any other principle that may be applicable. I quite agree that under sec. 82 this Court would not hold the Official Assignee personally liable, if, in any matter which he could reasonably take it upon himself to decide, he while proceeding regularly under the statute, made a decision on a point of law for which there was a reasonable case. At the same time this Court cannot accept the principle that any mistake—if only it can be put as a mistake in law—is such as to leave the person damnified without a remedy. I regret to say that in the first place I think it was in this case negligent for the Official Assignee with the insolvent's schedule before him to treat the two scheduled creditors as personal creditors or what sec. 70 calls “separate creditors” of this insolvent as distinct from joint creditors. The language of the schedule itself is too plain for argument. It seems, moreover, that two suits had been brought, each against both Peace and Ross, in respect of these debts. In the one case they were described as carrying on business as Messrs. Gilchrist Peace and Ross: in the other case they were not so specifically described, but were sued as for a partnership debt as persons who had been partners but had dissolved partnership. In each case both persons were sued and judgment was recovered for one and the same sum against both. Now, the Official Assignee says that execution had been levied against some of the separate property of Mr. Peace. What there is, either in that fact or in the form of the decrees, or in the constitution of the suits, to warrant or even to assist the suggestion that these were not provable in Peace's insolvency as being debts due in the first instance upon the joint estate, I am unable to make out. However, that was only the first step. The second thing which happened was this: the proofs filed on the 7th May 1919 were in no way dealt with until after the whole estate and the monies coming from the fund had been distributed. Now, upon that Mr. Faulkner says that it is not for him to deal with these proofs unless he is moved to do so by creditors. That is entirely wrong. If further evidence, further vouchers, further materials are desired by the Official Assignee he can say so and call for such additional particulars as he thinks right, but a creditor who lodges his proof in the statutory form is entitled that it should receive attention without doing anything more. I do not find that in our rules in this Court there is the same rule as there is in England giving a limited time in which a proof must either be admitted or rejected or further particulars demanded, but there can be no doubt that a creditor who lodges a proof should have his proof dealt with upon such lodgment. In any case the Official Assignee had notice on the 7th May that certain persons were claiming to be creditors in this insolvency by reason of debts due to them from the firm of Messrs. Gilchrist Peace and Ross. He says that the insolvent had professed to be unable to give any particulars about the debts of the firm. With that knowledge the Official Assignee took it upon himself to distribute the money which had come into his hands as part of the insolvent's estate together with other monies provided for that purpose, in the payment of certain costs or charges and then in payment of the two scheduled creditors alone. It is suggested that because these creditors had not moved somebody to put their names into the insolvent's schedule, this in some way furnishes an excuse or warrant for what was done by the Official Assignee. That is an entire misconstruction of the Act. But in any case how with notice of these claims the Official Assignee thought it reasonable, safe or permissible to distribute the whole estate ignoring them, I do not profess to follow. He had not rejected the proofs. I do not gather that he had any intention at that time to reject or to admit them. It is said by Mr. Faulkner that if his action was not strictly within the dividend provisions of statute, nevertheless he acted in a manner analogous and suitable to the particular circumstances of the case. I cannot say too plainly that it is quite impossible to administer a bankrupt's estate unless that course of conduct is to be discontinued finally and altogether. It is not possible for this Court even to pretend to distribute a bankrupt's estate with reasonable certainty unless the rules as to distribution of dividends are regarded by the Official Assignee as absolutely sacrosanct. It will be difficult enough even then, but it is not possible to tolerate such a course of conduct as acting by way of analogy, giving no notice and taking the risk.

In this matter I have to make up my mind whether what has happened has been an excusable mistake in viewing the facts, an excusable mistake in law, or a course of conduct that is well over the line which marks such mistakes of judgment from what the statute calls misfeasance, negligence and omission of duty. I regret to say that I think I should be taking sec. 82 out of the statute altogether if I failed to hold that the Official Assignee in this case has thrown over all the rules laid down for his guidance in so far as procedure is concerned, and has taken risks which there was no need to take. Even in so doing he has acted without reasonable care and has made mistakes in judgment which are not excusable. In my opinion it is a case in which the Court cannot help itself, but must make the Official Assignee personally liable for the sums of money which are now no longer at the credit of this estate and of which these three creditors have in fact been deprived.

The question is, what sum of money is that? I cannot take it that the money provided by the insolvent's friend was money belonging to the estate. That is to assume, on no evidence at all, that the insolvent was committing fraud which the Official Assignee should have found out. The only view warranted by the evidence, is that some friend of the insolvent for the purpose of paying off these two creditors, thinking that they were the only ones, provided the necessary money. It is not possible for me to say whether, had he known that there were other creditors he would have refused to part with any money or would have provided more. The fact that the Official Assignee's commission was taken on the money in fact provided does not for this purpose make any difference. All I am concerned with is the question: how much money belonging to this insolvent's estate has been put by the Official Assignee's conduct into an improper course of distribution? Now, the three debts of the present creditors before me amount to some Rs. 13,551. The two scheduled creditors got over Rs. 40,000. The total sum realised from assets of the insolvent by the Official Assignee amounted to Rs. 7,718, from which has to be deducted, first of all, 5 per cent. upon that sum and then something like Rs. 150 for costs that would come in front of any unsecured creditors. There is, therefore, a sum of some Rs. 535 that has to be deducted from the amount belonging to this estate. That leaves a sum of Rs. 7,183 which on this footing would have to be rateably distributed between the Rs. 13,000 worth of creditors before me now and the Rs. 40,000 worth of scheduled creditors. The result of that method of calculation is that the Official Assignee must be ordered to replace a sum of something like a third of Rs. 7,183, but the exact figures I am not settling now; I am only mentioning figures as illustrations of the method by which I think his liability is to be assessed. I will refer it to the Registrar in Insolvency to take the necessary account on the lines which I have indicated, and the only matters that remain are the questions of costs.

Now, the costs of this application, the Official Assignee must also pay personally. I have come to the conclusion that the best order with regard to the costs of the previous application in the circumstances is this: while I shall not give him any costs, I shall not award the applicant any costs. There was some question of interest having to be knocked off. The proofs as filed were not quite in order and although I did allow them at certain figures, it is to be remembered that the Official Assignee though not entitled to reject them altogether or for the reasons given, was within his rights in demanding strict proof and further particulars. For these reasons I will confine myself to an order that the Official Assignee must pay the costs of the present application.

Costs to be as of a bankruptcy motion in Court.

Mourasi mokurari lease creating a heritable and transferable tenancy at a fixed rate of rent—Agreement by successors-in-interest to pay an enhanced rate of rent, if destroys the character of the original tenancy or creates a new tenancy—Novation of contract.

Where a mourasi mokurari lease created a transferable, permanent and heritable tenancy at a rate of rent fixed in perpetuity, and the successors-in-interest of the tenant by an agreement consented to pay rent at an enhanced rate and a decree for rent was obtained by consent on this basis:

Held—That the circumstance that one of the terms of the lease was altered by agreement of parties, namely, that the rent originally fixed was increased, did not destroy the tenancy: It cannot be said that there was a supersession of the original tenancy or that there was a novation of contract. The consent decree for rent at an enhanced rate did not give the tenancy a fresh start in all respects, nor did the alteration of rent necessarily destroy the transferable character of the tenancy.

Semle:—Though the enhancement was made by consent of the parties, the enhancement should be deemed to have been made subject to the original agreement that the rent was not enhanceable.

BAMAPADO ROY v. THE MIDNAPUR ZEMINDARY Co. (2) distinguished.

This was an appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent preferred on the 17th December 1920 against a judgment of Mr. Justice Beachcroft, dated the 18th November 1920, in S. A. No. 428 of 1919 which had been preferred on the 12th of March 1919 against the decree of Babu Krishna Kumar Sen, Additional Subordinate Judge of Zillah Hooghly, dated the 3rd of December 1918, affirming the decree of Babu Sasi Kumar Ghose, Munsif, 1st Court at Uluberia, dated the 6th June 1917.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment of BEACHCROFT, J.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiffs. Their suit was for ejectment on the ground that the Defendants were purchasers of an untransferable occupancy holding and that consequently they had no right to remain in possession of the land in suit. The history of the land so far as we are concerned, begins with one Digambar Pandit who was the makuridar. His interest was bought in execution by one Amar Nath Ray in August 1874 corresponding with Bhadra 1281. Amar Nath Ray is the predecessor in interest of the Plaintiffs. Digambar

PRIONATH GHOSE v. SURENDRA NATH DAS.

Pandit had created a dar-makurari interest of the land in January 1872 at a rental of Rs. 11 a year in favour of one Rup Chandra Das. In 1882 the heirs of Rup Chandra Das were holding the land at a rental of Rs. 16 with effect from the beginning of 1282. The exact status of these heirs is the vital point in the case. The heirs of Rup Chand transferred their interest in 1881 to Haran Chandra Das, whose heirs subsequently transferred their interest again by two *kabala*s to the Defendants, and it is on the ground that these Defendants are the purchasers of a non-transferable occupancy holding that the suit was based. It has been dismissed. The question involved in the case is whether the heirs of Rup Chand Das took a fresh settlement of the land at the rate of Rs. 16 or whether they continued as holders of the original dar-makurari on a rent increased from Rs. 11 to Rs. 16. Both the Courts found against the Plaintiffs.

On their present appeal, the point of law which is propounded in their favour is that the lower Appellate Court has not taken into consideration all the facts and circumstances of the case and has therefore made an error in procedure. The matters on which stress is laid are these (i) That when Amar Nath Ray purchased this interest of Digambar Pandit in 1281 he was entitled under sec. 66 of Act VIII of 1869 (which was the Act then in force) to avoid incumbrances, that is in this particular instance the dar-makurari interest held by Rup Chandra Das; (2) that as the alteration in the rent took effect very shortly afterwards, namely, from the beginning of 1282, the Court ought to have inferred from the proximity of time and from the fact that Amar Nath had a right to annul the encumbrance that he in fact did annul the encumbrance and created a fresh tenancy. It is further argued that the lower Court did not take into consideration certain terms in the kobala by which Rup Chand's heirs sold to Haran Chandra Das, and it is said that the terms used in that document show that what was transferred was an occupancy right and not a dar-makurari right. There is another document on which the learned Subordinate Judge largely relies and that is the decree made on compromise in 1876 in the suit brought by Amar Nath Ray against the heirs of Rup Chandra Das. The learned Judge says that on a consideration of this decree it is clear that the original tenancy of Rup Chand Das continued with this difference, that by mutual agreement the rent was enhanced to Rs. 16. I am told that there is no evidence as to the arrangement between Amar Nath and Rup Chand's heirs except that which is referred to in the Munsif's judgment to the effect that Amar Nath also verbally assured them that he would allow their permanent tenure to remain quite unaffected. Therefore whatever oral evidence there is as regards the circumstances under which the change was made is on the side of the Defendants. The question is whether the documentary evidence supports the Plaintiff's contention.

Now as pointed out, the first point taken is that the learned Judge has not considered the fact that Amar Nath probably exercised his right to annul the encumbrance and it has often been held that merely because a Judge does not mention certain matters of evidence, it cannot be said that he has not taken them into consideration, more especially, where, as here, the judgment is one of affirmance. But apart from that the argument suggests that the proper inference from the alteration in the rent made is that Amar Nath exercised his right. But this is pure speculation. As was pointed out by the learned Munsif the mere fact that there was an increase of rent is not in itself inconsistent with the view that the original darmakurari lease was not annulled.

Then there are the pieces of documentary evidence, one referred to by the learned Judge and the other to which he has not referred. The one which he has not referred to—the kobala of 1881—is discussed in some detail by the Munsif and it was pointed out by him that the use of the words “korfa” and “jote” does not show that there was a new settlement. I take the view that the words used are as consistent with the existence of the darmakurari interest as with the existence of an occupancy right. So, that document by itself does not give us any definite assistance one way or the other. The learned Judge has referred to the other document, namely, the decree which was prior in time to the kabuliyat of 1881. The learned Judge in dealing with that has said that a consideration of that decree shows that there was not a new tenancy. In so far as the language of the decree goes—in drawing any conclusion from the language of the decree—I think, the Judge is right. The only passage in the decree which throws any light on the point is a passage which recites the facts to this effect: “After his death his wife on behalf of her minor sons agreed verbally to give an enhancement of Rs. 5 and to pay rent at the rate of Rs. 16 per year from the beginning of the year 1282.” It does not set out in terms as to whether the original lease continued or whether a fresh lease was granted; but the use of the words “enhancement of Rs. 5” seems to be consistent with the view that the original lease continued to exist at enhanced rent rather than with the view that some new lease was created and some rent which was in excess of the original rent was imposed. In the circumstances I see no ground for interference with the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

This is an appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Beachcroft in a suit for ejectment.

The controversy between the parties is limited to one question, namely, whether the disputed tenancy was or was not transferable. On the 2nd January 1872 the lands in suit were included in a mourasi mokarari lease granted by one Digambar Pandit to Rup Chandra Das. It is not disputed that the tenancy so created was intended to be transferable. The tenancy was also permanent; in other words heritable and not held for a limited term. The rent was fixed in perpetuity at Rs. 11. It appears that one Amar Nath Roy purchased the interest of Digambar Pandit at a sale for arrears of rent held at the instance of the superior landlords. The purchaser thereafter brought a suit for arrears of rent against the representatives of Rup Chandra Das on the allegation that by agreement of parties the rent had been fixed at Rs. 16 annually. On the 7th September 1876 a decree for rent was obtained by consent on this basis. These Plaintiffs are the successors in interest of Amar Nath Roy; and the Defendants have acquired the interest of the representatives of Rup Chandra Das by successive transfers. The Plaintiffs contend that the tenancy purchased by the Defendants was not transferable and that they are consequently liable to be ejected as trespassers. The trial Court negatived this contention and dismissed the suit. The view so taken has been affirmed by the

Court of appeal below as also by Mr. Justice Beachcroft.

The Appellants have not disputed and cannot dispute that the tenancy granted to Rup Chandra Das by Digambar Pandit was transferable. But they have argued that the tenancy ceased to exist when the representatives of Rup Chandra Das agreed to pay rent at an enhanced rate. They have also contended that if this position is not maintainable, the effect of the agreement to pay enhanced rent was to destroy the character of the tenancy as a tenancy at a fixed rate of rent and consequently to destroy its character as a transferable tenancy. In our opinion, there is no foundation for either branch of this contention.

The tenancy granted to Rup Chandra Das was heritable, was not held for a limited term, was subject to the payment of a fixed rent and was unquestionably transferable. The circumstance that one of these elements was altered by agreement of parties, namely, that the rent originally fixed was increased did not destroy the tenancy. No principle has been invoked which can support the view that there was a supersession of the original tenancy or that there was a novation of contract. Such a position is not supported either by the actual intention of the parties or by any recognized principle of law. We are therefore unable to accept the argument that when the decree for rent was by consent of parties made at an enhanced rate, there was a fresh start in all respects: nor are we able to uphold the contention that the alteration of rent necessarily destroyed the transferable character of the tenancy. It is not necessary for us to decide whether the tenancy has lost its character as a tenancy held at a fixed rate of rent. Much may, indeed, be urged against such a view on the basis of the decision in Ramantij Das v. The Midnapur Zemindary Co. (1). In that case there was a tenancy held at a fixed rate of rent. By consent of parties the rent was enhanced. Notwithstanding this circumstance it was ruled that the enhancement must be deemed to have been made subject to the original agreement that the rent was not enhanceable. That distinguished the case from the decision in Bamapado Roy v. The Midnapur Zemindary Co. (2), where the original nature of the tenancy was not known and it was consequently held that the fact that the rent had been altered once negated the theory that the rent had been fixed in perpetuity. But even if it be assumed that as a result of the compromise decree, the tenancy has, in this case, lost its character as a tenancy held at a fixed rate of rent, it does not follow that the other incidents have been thereby affected. As already stated, the tenancy was heritable, was transferable, and was not held for a limited term. It is difficult to appreciate how these elements can be affected merely because by a compromise between the parties the rent has been increased. We hold accordingly that the tenancy was transferable and that the Defendants are not trespassers.

476—"In the course of" judicial proceeding, meaning of—Petition for return of documents filed before clerk of Court, if can be made the subject-matter of enquiry and order under the section.

After the disposal of two rent suits in the Court of the Munsif, the Petitioner, it was alleged, filed two petitions before the clerk in charge of rent suits in the Munsif's Court asking for the return of the documents filed by one B, whose interest had since been acquired by the Petitioner in the said rent suits. These petitions purported to bear the signature of the pleader of B who acted for him in the said rent suits, but it was alleged that this signature was forged. The Munsif after holding a preliminary enquiry made an order under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., directing the prosecution of the Petitioner for offences under secs. 463, 471, I. P. C.:

Held—That the petitions in question were not filed in the course of a judicial proceeding and the Munsif had no jurisdiction to make the order.

The words "committed before it" in sec. 476, Cr. P. C. are qualified by the words "in the course of a judicial proceeding."

This was a Rule granted on the 18th August 1921 against an order of the Munsif (Babu Kiran Ch. Mittra) of Basirhat, 1st Court, dated the 28th July 1921.

The facts of the case will appear from the order which was as follows:—

"From the preliminary enquiry made by me I am satisfied that this is a fit case in which the accused Girijananda Kali Mitra should be sent to the Criminal Court for committing offences under secs. 463 and 471, I. P. Code.

It transpires that on Saturday the 16th July last Girijananda Kali got two petitions Exs. 1, 2, written out by a Muhary Ahommadali Shah for return of certain documents (filed by one Bhiku Gazi in two rent suits Nos. 676 and 1168 of 1920).

Those petitions purport to have been signed by Babu Probodh Chandra Ghosh, a Pleader of this Court. Probodh Babu says that he did not sign those petitions inspite of the accused Girijananda Kali asking him to sign them. Probodh Babu was the Pleader of Bhiku Gazi whose interest is said to have been acquired by the accused. The accused was examined by me and he said that although Bhiku did not come to Court on 16th July 1921, he sent a man Nabiraddy or so to him (accused) for getting back the documents filed in the rent suits. The accused admits that he asked the Muhury to write out the petitions Exs. 1, 2 and that he also took those petitions to Probodh Babu for his signature and that Probodh Babu refused to sign them. Benoy Bhusan Sikdar our amla in charge of rent suits says that the accused produced before him the petitions Exs. 1 and 2 and wanted to take back the documents on behalf of Bhiku Gazi but as he suspected that the signatures were not like those of Probodh Babu he did not do anything before consulting Probodh Babu. The accused admits that he went to the office and requested Benoy amla to return the documents. The accused simply says that he did not forge the name of Probodh Babu and that he did not take those petitions to the amla in charge. I see no reason to disbelieve the amla in charge. Moreover considering the evidence of Mohoraddy Molla (peon), Khalikar Rohoman (peon), Ananda Sarkar (orderly) and Haran Mallik (Muhury), I hold that the accused filed those petitions in Court, used the Court seal and took away those petitions before they could be sent by the Peshkar to the Shehanabis who writes out the petition register. The permanent Peshkar was on casual leave on that day and another amla Norendra Babu was doing the pesh-work: as he was busy in noting orders passed by me in a large number of miscellaneous cases fixed for that date, he failed to notice what others present near him could notice. Thus in the result I order that this case be sent to the Sub-Divisional officer for enquiry or trial under sec. 476, Cr. P. Code. The accused to furnish bail-bond to the extent of Rs. 100 for his appearance before the Sub-Divisional Officer. Let a copy of this judgment be sent to the Sub-Divisional Officer for necessary action and another copy may be sent to the District Magistrate with a request that considering the fraud upon Court and forgery within Court precincts the Government Pleader or some responsible officer may be engaged to conduct the prosecution : one handwriting expert may also be asked to compare the signatures with the writing of the accused."

Babus Bir Bhusan Dutt and Hit Lal Guha for the Petitioner.

Babu Satindra Nath Mukherjee (for Mr. Orr) for the Crown.

This Rule is directed against an order of the Munsif of Basirhat, first Court, passed under sec. 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure sending the case against the Petitioner to the Sub-Divisional Officer for enquiry or trial for committing offences punishable under secs. 463 and 471, I. P. C. The facts so far as they are necessary for the decision of this Rule are as follows : The Petitioner is alleged to have presented two petitions before the Muhuri in charge of rent suits in the Munsif's Court asking for the return of the documents filed by one Bhiku Gazi in two rent suits. These two petitions purported to have been signed by Babu Probodh Chandra Ghose who was the Pleader of Bhiku Gazi in those rent suits. These signatures of the Pleader have been held by the Munsif to be forgeries. The only point for our consideration is a purely technical one and that is whether the Munsif had jurisdiction to take action under sec. 476, Cr. P. C. Under that section, a Civil Court can only send for enquiry or trial cases of offences referred to in sec. 195, Cr. P. C., and committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding. We think we must read this section to mean that the words "committed before it" are qualified by the words "in the course of a judicial proceeding." Taking this view, it appears to us that it cannot be held that these petitions were filed in the course of a judicial proceeding. The rent suits in which the documents were filed had been finally disposed of and there was nothing pending before the Munsif—neither the original suits nor subsequent proceedings in execution. The definition of "judicial proceeding" is given in cl. (m) of sec. 4 of the Code as including any proceeding in the course of which evidence is or may be legally taken on oath. Having regard to the provisions of Or. XIII of the Code of Civil Procedure, it appears that no question can arise on an application for return of documents which would necessitate the taking of evidence on oath. On an application being made by a party, the documents are necessarily returned if the application is in the proper form and the act is purely ministerial. As we have said, in the present case, the petitions were filed not before the Munsif but before the Muhurir. Had the Muhurir reported that the applications were in proper form, orders would have been passed by the Court as a matter of course. Taking this view, we hold that there were no judicial proceeding before the Munsif at the time these petitions alleged to be forged were filed and that consequently the Munsif had no jurisdiction to take action under sec. 476, Cr. P.

GIRIJANANDA KALI MITRA v. THE EMPEROR.

C. We accordingly set aside the order of the Munsif dated the 28th of July 1921 and quash any proceedings that may have been taken on the strength of that order.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. NO. 66 OF 1922.

WALMSLEY, J.
SUHRAWARDY, J.
1922,

Heard, 21, February
Judgment, 1, March.

BANWARI LAL RAM,
2nd party, Petitioner,
v.
PRONAB KRISHNA
MAJUMDAR, 1st party,
Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 144, scope of Jurisdiction of Magistrate to prohibit holding of hat on one's own land and on day other than the day on which old hat was held—Ex n. rt. order, propriety of passing—Speedy disposal of objection to order necessary.

The Petitioners started a new hat on their own property within a certain locality where existed an old hat belonging to the Opposite Party, but on a day different from that on which the old hat was held. The Magistrate acting on a police report made an order prohibiting "any person from going to, buy or sell in the said place." The Petitioners shifted their hat to another place and the Magistrate again made a similar order:

Held—That every person is ordinarily entitled to exercise all rights of ownership on his own property and the holding of a hat on one's property is not in itself a wrongful act. The Criminal Court assumes jurisdiction to interfere with the lawful exercise of a person's right to ownership when such exercise in its ulterior consequences and being directed primarily against the lawful exercise of another person's right of ownership is likely to cause a breach of the peace.

That inasmuch as the Petitioners claimed exclusive possession of the land on which they wanted to hold the hat and intended to hold it on a day other than the day on which the hat of the Opposite Party assembled the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make an order in the form in which it was made prohibiting the Petitioners from holding their hat on any day of the week and on every place within a large area.

That it is not proper for a Magistrate to pass an ex parte order under sec. 144, Cr. P. C. and when its propriety or legality is challenged to postpone the hearing of the matter from time to time until about the termination of the force of the order. Such matters ought to be disposed of quickly in order to avoid unnecessarily encroaching on the civil rights and liberty of the subject.

This was a Rule issued on the 24th January 1922 against the orders of the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Barhampur, dated the 30th December 1921, issuing a general injunction under sec. 144, Cr. P. C., upon the people residing within Rani-nagar, Domkul and Daulatabad Thanas, directing them from holding or attending a hat on the disputed land specified in the police report and calling upon both parties to show cause why they should not be proceeded against under sec. 107, Cr. P. C., and of the 4th January 1922 issuing another general injunction under sec. 144, Cr. P. C., directing the aforesaid people to refrain from holding or attending any hat within village and chak Harharia.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal and Laht Mahon Sanyal for the Petitioner.

Babus Manmotho Nath Mukherjee and Probodh Chundra Chatterjee for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

SUHRWARDY, J.—This rule was issued

against the orders, dated the 30th December 1921 and 4th January 1922, passed by the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Berhampur under sec. 144, Cr. P. C., on the grounds mentioned in the petition, viz., that the orders are ultra vires, illegal and beyond the scope of sec. 144, Cr. P. C.

The facts of the case are that there is an old hat at a village Islampur, belonging to the Opposite Party, which is held on every Monday, and attended by among others the people of chak Harharia. Some difference arose between the Opposite Party and the people of the chak, and these Petitioners started a hat in the chak which was held on Sunday, the 25th December 1921, at a place near the Local Board Road. It appears from the police report that on hearing that the new hat was being held, the Opposite Party sent their men to the place, and there was a serious fighting between the parties which resulted in the starting of criminal cases under sec. 147, I. P. C., on the 29th December 1921. The police reported the above facts to the Sub-divisional Magistrate and invited proper orders, whereupon the Sub-divisional Magistrate issued an order under sec. 144, Cr. P. C. in these terms:—

“Whereas I have been informed that there is an apprehension of a serious breach of the peace between the above-mentioned parties within the boundaries given below, I do hereby under sec. 144, Cr. P. C., pass this order of injunction prohibiting any person from going to, buy or sell in the said place, otherwise he should be dealt with according to law.”

The Petitioners then shifted the hat to a different plot of land but in the same village. The police again reported that the Petitioners, the second party, were holding the hat at another place and that “the first party is trying to prevent the sitting (holding) of the hat in the village chak Harharia.” Thereupon the Magistrate passed another order on the 5th January 1922, in the following terms:—

“Whereas I have been informed that there is an apprehension of a breach of the peace between the above-mentioned parties regarding holding of a hat by the Opposite Party in chak Harharia as per boundary given below—It is hereby prohibited under sec. 144, Criminal Procedure Code, that no person should go to, sell or buy any articles in the chak Harharia, otherwise they will be dealt with according to law, dated this the 5th January 1922.”

In my opinion the orders complained of are such as could not have been passed under sec. 144, Cr. P. C. As has been observed in the case of Rakhal Das Sinha v. King-Emperor (1), there is a “clear distinction between interfering with rights of private proprietors, with whatever ulterior motive they may do acts which they have a right to do and the perpetration of wrongful acts by such proprietors. The law as regards preservation of public peace is based upon an apprehension that either certain person or persons are likely to commit breach of the peace by their own acts, or that they are likely to do wrongful acts which may occasion other people to commit breach of the peace.” These observations apply with particular force to the facts of the present case. Every person is ordinarily entitled to exercise all rights of ownership on his property, and the holding of a hat on one's own property is not in itself a wrongful act. The Criminal Court assumes jurisdiction to interfere with this lawful exercise of a person's right of ownership, when such exercise in its ulterior consequences, and being directed primarily against the lawful exercise of another person's right of ownership, is likely to cause a breach of the peace.

(1) 19 C. W. N. 248 (1912).

BANWARI LAL RAM v. PRONAB KRISHNA MAJUMDAR.

In the present case no evidence has been gone into and we have to proceed on the materials disclosed by the record. The Petitioners claim exclusive possession of the land on which they want to hold the hat. They further intend to hold it on a day other than the day on which the hat of the Opposite Party assembles. Such being the case, my opinion is that the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to pass an order in the present form prohibiting the Petitioners from holding their hat on any day of the week and on any place within a large area.

Numerous cases have been cited on both sides, most of which are based on the peculiar facts of each case. The Opposite party relies on the Full Bench Ruling in Bycuntram v. Meajan (2). In that case it was argued that a Magistrate acting under sec. 144, Cr. P. C. has no jurisdiction to restrain a person from doing a lawful act on his property. The Full Bench held that a Magistrate has such a power where the doing of a lawful act may in his opinion occasion a breach of the peace. In that case the order passed was restraining a party from holding a hat on a particular day of the week. The same view has been adopted in all the cases that have since been decided, out of which special reference may be made to the case of Nagendra Nath v. Rakhal Das (3). In all the cases in which the order of a Magistrate under sec. 144 has been upheld, it was for restraining a party from holding a hat on a particular day. No authority has been placed before us in support of the contention that an order like those passed in the present case prohibiting a party from ever holding a hat at any place on his own property is competent under sec. 144, Cr. P. C. But there are authorities to the contrary condemning such an order. In the case of Rakhal Das v. King-Emperor (1) noticed above, a rule was issued on the ground that "it is not within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to prohibit the holding of the hat altogether; he can only give such directions as to dates etc., as will prevent obstruction, annoyance or disturbance to public tranquility temporarily." The learned Judges further directed that pending the disposal of the Rule, the Petitioners in that case would be allowed to open their hat on dates other than those on which the hat of the Opposite Party was held. In the course of their judgment in making the rule absolute on the grounds on which it was issued, they observed: "Now directing a man not to use his property in a lawful manner (for the establishment of a hat is a perfectly lawful act) cannot, in our opinion, come within the purview of this section. What the Magistrate ought to have ordered these people to do is not to obstruct or allow their servants in any way to obstruct the public or any other person" from attending the rival market if he wished to do so. The learned Judges further remarked "an injunction cannot be issued not to do a lawful act upon a man's own property." Though the last proposition is so broadly put what the learned Judges meant to say was that a Magistrate is not competent to prohibit the holding of a hat by a person on his own property unless he or his men by force or persuasion prevent people from attending the other hat. In the present case there is no allegation that the Petitioners or their men obstructed or attempted to obstruct anyone from attending the hat of the Opposite Party. According to the police report the breach of the peace was occasioned by the Opposite Party coming to the Petitioner's hat and interfering with the holding of it and that the further likelihood of a breach of the peace lies in the Opposite Party taking umbrage at the opening of a new hat close to theirs and interfering with it. For this state of things if any one was to blame it was the Opposite Party and I fail to see that there was any power in the Magistrate or any justification for issuing an injunction on the Petitioners against holding the hat. Further, the orders complained of virtually prohibit any buying or selling in the village because some one may object to it.

To the above effect is the case of Bidhu Ranjan v. Romesh Chandra (4), where the injunction issued under sec. 144. Cr. P. C., proscribed establishing a new hat within a quarter of a mile of an old hat, as "there was a probability of a breach of the peace over this matter." The learned Judges in discharging the order of the Magistrate observe: "We are of opinion that the object of sec. 144 is not that orders should be made proscribing the holding of hats indefinitely within a certain area for two months." They suggest that in such cases the proper way of preventing a breach of the peace is to proceed according to sec. 107, Cr. P. C. I think that in the present case also that suggestion should be adopted, as I find that the Magistrate is already considering the question of proceeding under that section.

I cannot leave this case without observing that it is not proper for a Magistrate to pass an ex parte order under sec. 144, Cr. P. C., and when its propriety or legality is challenged to postpone the hearing of the matter from time to time until about the termination of the force of the order. Such matters ought to be disposed of quickly in order to avoid unnecessarily encroaching on the civil rights and liberties of the subject.

The Rule is accordingly made absolute and the orders of the 30th December 1921,

Respondent.

Suit for recovery of possession—Proof of title by Plaintiff and of exercise of acts of possession during currency thereof—Onus on Defendant to prove adverse possession for statutory period—Qualities which make possession adverse—Effect of acts of possession by owner upon the character of trespasser's possession which is claimed to be adverse.

Where the original title is unknown and both parties in a suit for ejectment give evidence of possession the Court will be justified in deciding in favour of one party or the other by a comparison of the evidence, judged in the light of probabilities. Such possession has to be interpreted according to the fairest view of what the property itself (in this case forest land) was capable of in the way of possession and what upon a broad view would be considered an adequate assertion of title by sufficient occupation.

But where the Plaintiff has succeeded in proving a clear title the onus lies on the Defendant to prove adverse possession for the statutory period; and possession to be "adverse" must have all the qualities of adequacy, continuity and exclusiveness.

When the holder of title proves that he too has been exercising during the currency of his title various acts of possession, then the quality of these acts, even though they might have failed to constitute adverse possession as against another, may be quite sufficient to destroy that adequacy and interrupt that exclusiveness and continuity which is demanded from any person challenging by possession the title which he holds.

This was an appeal from a decree, dated the 3rd December 1917, of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, which partly affirmed and partly reversed a decree, dated the 20th March 1916, of the Court of the temporary Subordinate Judge of Tellicherry in Original Suit No. 12 of 1913.

The dispute between the parties originally related to 31 hills in North Malabar District, known, according to the Plaintiff, as Pannikottur Cherikkal (hills 1 to 24) and Muthavidu Cherikkal (hills 25 to 31), but, according to the Defendants, collectively known as Pakkath Villiyari Muthavidu Cherikkal. The questions for consideration in this appeal were (1) whether the Appellant had any title to hills items 1 to 24, and if so (2) whether his suit to recover possession of the same was not barred by limitation.

On the 29th March 1912, the Appellant instituted the present suit against the Respondent and another in the District Court of North Malabar, for recovery of the 34 hills. He alleged in his plaint, inter alia, that the suit hills belonged to him in jenm, that, on the 30th December 1899, he had leased the said hills to one Ramanathan Chetty for 60 years, who got into possession by virtue of the lease; that the Defendants, on the 27th May 1900, trespassed on the hills items 28 and 32 of the Schedule; that, on a complaint by the Chetty's agent, the Respondent and others were convicted by the Magistrate, but that, on the 10th October 1900, the Appeal Court reversed the conviction on the ground that the matter was to be decided by a Civil Suit; that on the 5th December 1911, the said Chetty surrendered his lease to the Plaintiff; that the Defendants, even though they had no "true" possession of the remaining hills, asserted possession of the same and made certain entries thereon; and that the Defendants had no right to keep the same in possession adversely to the Plaintiff. He therefore prayed for a decree directing the Defendants to surrender to him the hills mentioned in the Schedule with mesne profits and costs.

The Respondent and the other Defendant (now deceased) in their written statements denied the Plaintiff's title to the suit hills, and alleged, inter alia, that the Plaintiff never had possession of the same. They asserted their own title and pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation.

On the 9th November 1912, the District Judge framed four issues, of which the following are material.

(2) Do the plaint hills belong in jenm to the Plaintiff's Sthanam, and are the Defendants in unlawful possession of the same?

(3) Is the suit barred by limitation?

The suit was subsequently transferred to the Court of the temporary Subordinate Judge of Tellicherry, who framed two additional issues on 19th January 1914 though they did not arise out of the pleadings in the case, and are not now material.

On the 20th March 1916, the Subordinate Judge, after recording evidence pronounced his judgment in the suit, in the course of which he found that the Plaintiff had not proved his title to Muthavidu (items 25 to 34), and that the Defendants had not proved their title to Pannikottur (items 1 to 24).

With regard to possession, the Subordinate Judge observed that the Defendants had no lawful possession of Pannikottur, but later on, however, he stated "That the Plaintiff has had possession of Pannikottur Cherikkal only through tenants, and now Plaintiff has direct possession of the same." As regards Muthavidu, he said, "I find that Plaintiff has not proved his title and possession within twelve years before suit. The oral evidence adduced by him is not of disinterested and independent witnesses." In the result he granted the Plaintiff a decree for possession of Pannikottur Cherikkal—items 1 to 24 of the Schedule—and dismissed the suit in respect of items 25 to 34.

Against the said decree, dated the 20th March 1916, both parties appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Madras.

On the 3rd December 1917, the High Court delivered its judgment in both the appeals. Abdur Rahim, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, in which Oldfield, J., concurred, observed that the origin of the title of either party was obscure, and that it was not possible to come to any definite conclusion on the merits of the claim of either party so far as title was concerned. He further observed that "it would seem that at any rate in 1871 the Defendants' Tarwad obtained possession of the hills." On the question of possession, the learned Judges were of opinion that the evidence produced by the Plaintiff was not satisfactory, whereas that produced by the Defendants was of a reliable nature and more probable in the circumstances of the case. The learned Judges came to the conclusion that "the Plaintiff had entirely failed to prove that he had possession of these hills since the date of the decree in the suit of 1864 and of Exbt. JJJ." The suit of 1864 was one for possession of these hills by the Defendants' Tarwad against a tenant for possession in which the Plaintiff's Tarwad was the 9th Defendant, and the suit was decreed. Exbt. JJJ. was a deed of assignment by the said tenant in 1871 in favour of the Defendants' Tarwad, releasing possession of the hills. The learned Judges also held that the Plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation as the Plaintiff had not been in possession of the hills for more than 12 years before the suit and the Defendants have been in possession of them during that period. In the result, the Appellant's appeal in respect of items 25 to 34 was dismissed and the Respondent's appeal in respect of items 1 to 24 was allowed. A decree was accordingly drawn up dismissing the Appellant's suit with costs.

Against the said decree of the High Court, dated the 3rd December 1917, the Appellant applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. On the 28th August 1918, the Appellant was granted the necessary certificate with respect to the decree relating to items 1 to 24 by which the decree of the lower Court was reversed, but he was refused leave to appeal with respect to the decree relating to items 25 to 34 by which the decree of the lower Court was affirmed, by the High Court.

The Appellant applied to His Majesty in Council for special leave to appeal against the decree relating to items 25 to 34, which was refused by His Majesty in Council by an Order, dated the 16th December 1920.

Sir William Finlay, K. C. (with Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham) for the Respondent.—This is an action for possession and is based on the view that Defendants are in possession. The Appellants have argued as if title was clear in their favour and so it is necessary for Respondents to make out possession. But since 1870 there has never been any effective possession on their part. There has been only one attempt in 1900 which ended in a fracas.

Since 1870 we have been in possession.

Possession against Kenhassan was decreed by the 1864 suit and is not affected by the 1867 suit.

Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham following.—1867 suit is declaratory. 1864 suit brings out possession and decree under this could not be disturbed. Or. 21, r. 35. Art. 144 cannot apply; Art. 142 applies. Burden of proof is on Plaintiff if he alleges possession and dispossession. Nitrasur Singh v. Nund Lall (5) and The Secretary of State for India in Council v. Chelikani Rama Rao (2) are different.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown.—If title is in me, I am safe upon the authorities in view of acts of possession on my client's part.

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal from a decree dated the 3rd December 1917, of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, which allowed in part an appeal from a decree dated the 20th March 1916, of the Court of a temporary Subordinate Judge of Tellicherry. The suit was brought by the present Appellant to establish his title to thirty-four hills in the North Malabar District. The decree of the Subordinate Judge was in favour of the Respondent with regard to ten of the hills, comprising, roughly stated, the north and north-east portion of the group of thirty-four. No question is raised in this appeal with regard to those ten hills, it being conceded that the Defendant has a title thereto.

The still outstanding issue between the parties, however, is as to the remaining group of hills, twenty-four in number, which may be said in general terms to form the southern half of the entire group which was originally in suit and to be bounded on the south by the Peruvanna River. With regard to those twenty-four hills, the decree of the Subordinate Judge was in favour of the Plaintiff, while the judgment of the High Court favoured the Defendant. The Plaintiff has appealed to this Board.

The Appellant is the head or karnavan of a Nayar tarwad or family in Malabar, called on the record the Kuthali Nayar. The Defendant in the suit was, and the Respondent in the present appeal became on his death, the head or karnavan of a Moplah tarwad in the same district. Shortly put, the question in the appeal is: are the lands which are the subject of the appeal the property of the Kuthali, the Appellant's family, or of the Moplah, the Respondent's family.

Although the proceedings are voluminous, their Lordships desire to say at once that the appeal in their judgment must be settled by applying a well-known doctrine of law to the complex and somewhat contradictory mass of evidence as to the possession of these hills.

Both parties claim them. Both parties claim to have possessed them. And upon a balance of the evidence it has been found by the High Court that the Respondent's possession upon the whole outweighs that of the Appellant, and that accordingly the Respondent is entitled to prevail.

Upon this subject of possession much importance attaches to the nature of the property itself. It is forest land—apparently very little of it capable of, or at least up to the present subject to, cultivation—and growing here and there stretches of timber. It is quite clear that a property of this nature is far removed as a subject of definite possession from lands under continuous and permanent cultivation, compactly situated and capable of being remembered with identification as the lands held and occupied in articulate plots or under leases.

Their Lordships sympathize with the difficulties which confronted the Courts below, as to the possession of the property under appeal, and they agree with what is apparently the view of both Courts that such possession has to be interpreted according to the fairest view of what the property itself was capable of in the way of possession and what upon a broad view would be considered an adequate assertion of title by sufficient occupation. Along with this observation their Lordships desire further to remark that they are not certain that they would have been prepared to reverse—although no definite opinion is here given—the conclusion reached by the High Court had the case before the Board been one merely of a question of the balance of evidence as among rival possessors. How nebulous the situation is may be gathered from these passages in the judgment of the High Court:—

“From 1871, the evidence as to possession consists mainly of certain leases either for cutting trees or of the usufruct generally of the hills, for none of the parties seem to have directly exercised any definite acts of possession. Besides these leases, the evidence relates to what is called Punam or fugitive cultivation. Punam cultivation is thus described in the Gazetteer of the Malabar District, Vol. 1, p. 220: ‘It is a most destructive form of cultivation, with ruinous effects upon forest growth. A patch of forest is cleared and burnt, trees too big to be burnt being girdled and left to die. A crop of hill rice, mixed with which dholl, millet and plantains are often grown, is raised, and the ground is then left fallow for some years, the cultivators, generally hill men, moving on to another patch to repeat the process.’ As regards punam cultivation, the evidence on either side cannot be said to be very satisfactory and from the nature of the leases granted for cutting trees acts of possession of that character would not by themselves be regarded as conclusive evidence in support of the case of either party.”

But when the judgment proceeds,

“But such is the nature of the evidence of possession adduced in the case, and we have to find by comparison of the evidence on both sides, judged in the light of probabilities, who in fact is shown to have been in possession of the property” their Lordships cannot apply the rule there laid down. For the Board is of opinion that in the competition of title to this ground the Appellant definitely prevails, and that any doctrine of balance where original title was unknown, cannot apply to this case. Upon that subject the High Court expresses itself to the effect that:—

“It is not now possible apart from these decrees (of 1864 and 1867) to come to any definite conclusion on the merits of the claim of either party so far as title is concerned."

It is thus necessary to consider these decrees, for one or other of them has been treated by the parties as the foundation of their respective titles.

In the year 1861 Kutti Pocker, head of the Moplah family, brought a suit for dispossession of one Kunhassan from the lands, on the ground that a lease of the same for the years from the year 1859 had expired. Kunhassan in defence stated, however, that the lands to which the suit referred were to a large extent over-stated, and that in particular the hills the property of which is now under appeal were possessed by him under a right conferred, not by the Moplah, but by the Kuthali family. In these circumstances the then head of the Kuthalis, one Achutan alias Achammadathil Nayar, was convened by a supplemental suit as Defendant. He was at that time the head of the Kuthali family, but for some reason not sufficiently explained he did not defend the action nor take any steps to protect the Kuthali family interest.

The suit proceeded for a period of about three years and was about to be brought to a close by decree, 13th February, 1867, when another suit (Original Suit No. 11 of 1867) was raised by Nuchiledathil Krishnan alias Kuthali Chathoth Nayar. It is said that this suit was brought only by a reversioner in the Kuthali rights, and this is true, but it must be noted, first, what was the reason for that litigation, and second, what was the true scope of the suit.

As to the reason, there can be no doubt. It is thus recited in the judgment of the 4th November 1868 :—

"Plaint recited that the two groups are the jemn property of the sthanam of Kuthali Nayar to which Plaintiff is entitled to succeed on the death of 1st and 3rd

Defendants, that 1st Defendant the present incumbent of the above sthanam having allowed 3rd Defendant to manage the sthanam and the latter by his extravagance dissipated the sthanam property, Plaintiff has already filed Suits Nos. 117 and 120 of 1863 to remove them from the management of the sthanam property, that the said Defendants have therefore colluded with 2nd Defendant and refused to adduce any proof in Suit No. 25 of 1864 in support of the sthanams' right to the thirty-four hills which the 2nd Defendant has fraudulently included in the suit as portions of his two hills; that if 1st and 3rd Defendants who possess only a life-interest in the sthanam property be allowed to ruin a portion of it by neglecting to defend the suit, a great injury will result to Plaintiff's right of reversion and that he therefore prays that a declaration protecting his right may be given under sec. 15 of the Civil Procedure Code.

If these facts, the substance of which was held to be proved, are accepted, it appears to be plain that the Courts were properly appealed to to prevent a decree being granted against the Kuthali family to its prejudice by reason of neglect amounting to malfeasance upon the part of its head.

Upon the second point, viz., the scope of the suit, there can be no question. Its object was to exclude inter alia the lands which are the subject of this appeal from falling within the scope of the decree in the suit of 1864, by reason of this, that they belonged to the Kuthalis. This was the true issue in the 1867 case, and the last important point in regard to it is that that suit was fought out, and fought out by the proper contradictors, viz., the Moplah family. That family was represented by the Defendants Nos. 4 and 5, viz., Ibrayi and Amanath. Pocker, the head of the Moplahs, had just died, and Ibrayi and Amanath appeared in his stead and defended the 1867 suit, maintaining in opposition to the Plaintiffs therein, that the lands in question were in fact Moplah property.

In these circumstances it appears to their Lordships not only that the suit of the later year 1867 was one which definitely dealt with the question of property now under appeal, but that it would be unreasonable to endeavour to found rights under a decree of 1864 by ignoring the proceedings of 1867. In any view of the case it must be admitted that the later proceedings were at least of an interpretative character: they were directed to the avoidance of mistake as to the ambit or scope of the 1864 litigation, and to ignore them and to treat the 1867 proceedings either as if they had never been brought or were of no avail is in their Lordships' opinion contrary to sound principle. The description of the suit itself in the judgment of 1867 makes it clear that:—

"This suit is brought to procure a decree declaring that two cherikkals (groups) consisting of thirty-four hills are not included within the boundaries of 2nd Defendant's two hills called Pakkath Villiyari for which he has brought a Suit No. 25 of 1861 against 3rd Defendant and others and establishing Plaintiff's reversionary right to those thirty-four hills, valued at Rs. 1,500."

Putting all the proceedings, therefore, together, the question that remains for the Board on title is to see what is the scope of the judgment in the 1867 proceedings, which were conducted between these rival families and in foro contentioso.

Upon that subject the judgment in the Court of the Principal Sudder Amin of Tellicheri, of the 4th November 1868, is clear and is final. The learned Judge says that:—

"Upon a consideration of these circumstances I am of opinion that the Decree No. 25 of 1864 is not binding upon the Plaintiff"

"The next question," he adds, "is one of boundaries."

The learned Judge discusses that, and after referring to the report of a Commissioner who held a local investigation, he concludes:—

"Upon the above grounds I am of opinion that the middle stream in the Commissioner's plan represents the Alamb river mentioned in the Defendant's documents and that the twenty-four hills situated on the southern banks of that river constitute the Pannikottur group . . . For the foregoing reasons I declare that the Plaintiff (i.e., the Kuthali family) is entitled to the reversion of the first twenty-four hills which are proper to be the jenm of Kuthali sthanam and reject his claim to the remaining hills (twenty-five to thirty-four)."

In the opinion of the Board it is thus definitely settled that the title to the twenty-four hills the property of which is under appeal is in the Kuthali family.

Their Lordships think that the High Court erred in not treating the case from this point of view. It is not a case of doubtful title, but of clear title. Had the High Court been of the opinion that the title of the Appellant was clear, it is very probable that they would have reached the result, on a review of the evidence and of the law about to be stated, that no contrary right to these properties has been acquired by the Moplah family by reason of possession. The rule stated by this Board in Radhamoni Debi v. The Collector of Khulna (1) seems to be very applicable to the present case. It is as follows:—

"It is necessary to remember that the onus is on the Appellant, and that what she has to make out is possession adverse to the competitor. That persons deriving from her any right they had have done acts of possession during the twelve years in controversy may be conceded and is indeed evidenced by the dispute ended in the magistrate's order of 1885. But the possession required must be adequate in continuity, in publicity, and in extent to show that it is possession adverse to the competitor. The Appellant does not present a case of possession for the twelve years in dispute which has all or any of these qualities. The best attested cases of possession do not cover the whole period and apply to small portions of the ground."

The Board thinks that the learned temporary Subordinate Judge of Tellichery approached the case correctly from this point of view, and so approaching it the Board, after full consideration, accepts his analysis of the evidence and is of opinion that possession upon the part of the Respondent of these hills has not been adequate "in continuity, in publicity, and in extent" so as to "show that it is possession adverse to the competitor." That competitor is the Appellant, and the foundation of his title is the judgment of 1868 which has just been cited.

Their Lordships cannot part with the case without referring to and following the doctrine of onus probandi in such cases, as laid down by this Board in The Secretary of State for India in Council v. Chelikani Rama Rao (2). Standing a title in "A," the alleged adverse possession of "B" must have all the qualities of adequacy, continuity and exclusiveness which should qualify such adverse possession. But the onus of establishing these things is upon the adverse possessor. Accordingly when the holder of title proves, as in their Lordships' view he does with some fulness prove in the present case, that he too has been exercising during the currency of his title various acts of possession, then the quality of these acts, even although they might have failed to constitute adverse possession as against another, may be abundantly sufficient to destroy that adequacy and interrupt that exclusiveness and continuity which is demanded from any person challenging by possession the title which he holds.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be allowed, the decree of the High Court set aside with costs, and the decree of the Subordinate Court restored. The Respondent will pay the costs of the appeal.

The present suit was filed by the Sheriff of Calcutta claiming Rs. 21,900 as poundage due to him as Sheriff of Calcutta by reason of the interim attachment before judgment under the High Court Rules, Ch. XXXVI, r. 77:

A. D. PICKFORD v. RAI BAHADUR JANAKI NATH ROY.

Held—That the Sheriff was not entitled to any poundage under the said rule.

A claim to poundage by a Sheriff must be under the express terms of a Statute, Rule or Order. He has no common law right to reward for executing a writ.

WOODGATE v. KNATCHBULL (1) and GRAHAM v. GRILL (2) referred to.

R. 77 of Ch. XXXVI of the High Court Rules is directed to proceedings in which the Sheriff is employed about the levying of a sum of money in execution. The alternative part applies to such a proceeding in an event, viz., where the process is interrupted before completion but in a manner which produces the same or similar result. The rule has no application where there is an attachment before judgment but no execution.

The facts of the case as well as the arguments of Counsel will fully appear from the judgment.

Mr. Langford James, Counsel, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. N. N. Sircar and Mr. S. M. Bose (Jr.), Counsel, for the Defendant.

RANKIN, J.—In May 1919 the Defendant and another person (since deceased) brought in this Court a suit against one Raja Mohendra Ranjan Roy upon certain promissory notes claiming some 8½ lacs of rupees. The writ of summons was served, appearance was entered and on or about the 24th July the written statement was filed. Apart from orders for discovery which were made at the end of July and beginning of August nothing seems to have happened in the suit until the 17th November. On that date the Plaintiffs in the suit presented a petition to the Court for attachment before judgment, alleging that on the 1st September 1919 the Defendant had obtained some 17 lacs of rupees upon mortgage of nearly all his property for the purpose of paying off his debts and of paying off this debt in particular. The petition further alleged that the Petitioners' debt had not yet been paid, that the Defendant in the suit had still to his credit some 15 lacs of rupees with the Bank of Bengal and that unless the Court exercised the power of attachment before judgment, this fund was likely to be dissipated. On this petition an order was made on the 17th November ex parte calling upon the Defendant in the suit to show cause why security should not be furnished for the Plaintiffs' claim, or why, in default, some 8½ lacs of rupees to the credit of the Defendant with the Bank of Bengal should not be attached until the final determination of the suit or other order. The order went on to direct that until cause should be shown as directed a writ of attachment should issue commanding the Sheriff to attach the money at the credit of the Defendant in the Bank of Bengal or so much thereof as was necessary to meet the Plaintiffs' claim. On the same day, the 17th November, a prohibitory order was issued out of this Court attaching, until cause should be shown to the said order of the 17th November, the money at the Bank. This order restrained the Bank of Bengal from parting with the fund as regards some 8½ lacs to any one and restrained the Defendant in the suit from receiving the same from the Bank. Between the 9th and the 11th December correspondence took place between the attorneys for the parties as a result of which a settlement was arranged. It was agreed that a cheque for the sum claimed should be handed over to the Plaintiffs' solicitors upon the order nisi being discharged by consent, that this cheque was not to be presented to the Bank until the order discharging the orders nisi and the interim attachment should have been served on the Bank. The Defendant in the suit was to give a cheque in payment of the costs of the suit but no order was to be required to that effect. As regards the costs of the application for attachment before judgment each party was to pay his own costs. In a letter dated the 10th December the Defendant's solicitors state that they are not to be liable to pay the Sheriff's poundage. This is replied to by the Plaintiffs' solicitors upon the 11th saying that they do not think there is any question of poundage but that they did not see why the Plaintiffs should have to pay, if there was any. On the 22nd December the parties appeared before the Court and obtained an order by consent whereby the order nisi of 17th November was discharged and it was ordered that the interim attachment thereby directed be withdrawn. On the same day the 22nd December, an office copy of that order was served on the Bank but no office copy was delivered to the Sheriff as required by Chap. XXV, r. 6 of the Rules of this Court. On the 23rd December the cheques given to the Plaintiffs' solicitors were presented to the Bank and were duly honoured. On the 5th January 1920 the Sheriff by a letter of that date made his claim upon the Plaintiffs in suit for pound-tion and settlement of the Defendant's claim in Suit No. 1269 of 1919 of this Court after and by reason of an interim attachment before judgment in the plaint mentioned."

A claim to poundage by a Sheriff must be made under the express terms of a Statute, Rule or Order. He has no common law right to reward for executing a writ. [Woodgate v. Knatchbull (1) and Graham v. Grill (2)]. In this Court poundage is a charge authorised by the 22nd item of r. 77 of Chap. XXXVI of the Rules of Court. The provision is in these terms:—

"Poundage on sums levied by the Sheriff in execution or in the event of the claim being satisfied, compromised or settled, upon the amount of such satisfaction, compromise or settlement" . . . then follows the rate of charge.

The language of the Rule as regards the 22nd item illustrates the fact that some features of English legal procedure have become embedded in the English language. The phrase "sums levied in execution" belongs to the system under which a writ issued to the Sheriff commanding him to cause to be made of the goods and chattels of the Defendant a sum of money for which the Defendant has suffered judgment. Unless the course of execution is interrupted the Sheriff is authorised by the writ of fi. fa. to seize, to hold and to sell. In India under the Code of Civil Procedure execution proceeds first by attachment; after attachment an order has to be obtained from the Court and a proclamation issued before there can be a sale. The process being thus cut into parts, the first part—the attachment—can then more readily be looked at by itself. It can be and is made applicable before judgment, that is to cases where attach-

The plaint in the present suit was filed on the 18th May 1920 and it claims a sum of Rs. 21,900 as poundage due to the Sheriff in respect of the interim attachment. The grounds on the claim are put in the concise statement as follows:—

"The Plaintiff sues to recover Rs. 21,900 for the poundage due to him as the Sheriff of Calcutta on the satisfac-

ment is required to preserve a fund or other property, to keep it in medio pending a decision. In such cases attachment, while it proceeds by the same means, according to the nature of the property, is not a stage or phase of a process for the enforcement of a judgment by the levying of a sum of money adjudged to be due. The language of Or. XXXVIII, of the Code distinguishes "attachment before judgment" from "attachment of property in execution of a decree." This distinction is not to be obliterated by any argument as to whether attachment before judgment is or is not strictly speaking a form of execution. Nor is it the less important as a distinction because of the fact that if the Court decides that security should be given, and if security is not given, and if, further, judgment goes against the Defendant, no second attachment will be required before an order for sale can be made.

The wording of the Rule begins by granting to the Sheriff poundage "on sums levied by the Sheriff in execution." So far it is doing exactly what was done by the Statute, 28 Eliz., Chap. 4 and it is keeping the old name for the old charge. It is maintaining also the principle of the old charge, viz., that it is to be a payment upon results. If, however, the Rule had stopped there it would have left without provision a common and important class of case, well-known to have occasioned difficulty. Where an execution is in progress but is not completed, payment of the debt and costs may be made to the Sheriff. Or it may be made to the creditor. Or a compromise may be arranged to the satisfaction of the creditor. In such cases there is a problem of long standing as to whether the judgment-creditor who has so received the benefit of the execution can escape payment of poundage on the ground that the money so received has not been "levied." This problem has raised questions as to what is involved by the word "levy" and these were dealt with in such cases as Alchin v. Wells (3), Mortimore v. Cragg (4), Bissicks v. Bath Colliery Co. (5), Lee v. Dangar Grant & Co. (6) and In re, Thomas (7). In the result these cases settled that "levy" meant "turning the goods into money;" that prima facie this involved sale as well as seizure; but that in cases of payment or of compromise after seizure and preventing sale, the words "shall so levy" mean "shall seize and thereby get the money." "It is sufficient if by reason of the seizure the money is obtained directly or indirectly." In this way the "merits" of the matter, the principle of payment upon the results, received due recognition but not without difficulty. Since 1888 these questions have been set at rest in England by an order under the Sheriffs Act of 1887 which will be found in In re, Thomas (8) at pp. 67-68.

I come now to the second or alternative part of the provision as to poundage in r. 77 of Chap. XXXVI. The alternative arises only "in the event of the claim being satisfied, compromised or settled." Mr. Langford James points out that the word "claim" is wider than "decretal amount" or "judgment debt." On this it may be observed that even if the word is intended in this context to apply more widely it may well be rather because of the Plaintiff's costs of execution than because of any intention to comprise a substantive claim not yet prosecuted to judgment. But in any case the question is what is "the claim"? In my opinion the words can only refer to that claim which but for the satisfaction compromise or settlement would, presumably, have resulted in a sum of money being levied by the Sheriff in execution. "Poundage on sums levied by the Sheriff in execution or in the event of the claim being satisfied, compromised or settled," must, I think mean the claim in execution as contemplated by the first portion of the words. The rule does not give the Sheriff a commission upon the settlement of every man's claim or even upon the settlement of every claim made in a suit. So much is admitted. The definite article can only be intended with reference to the preceding words of the provision. The whole provision is directed to proceedings in which the Sheriff is employed about the levying of a sum of money in execution. The alternative part applies to such a proceeding in an event, viz., where the process is interrupted before completion but in a manner which produces the same or a similar result. In such a case the debtor merely anticipates by means less distressing to himself the result of a coercive process already in mid career. He can safely be deemed to have paid, not only in the course of the execution, but under stress of the execution. It can safely be said of the Sheriff: "he seized and thereby got the money." No one can be heard to the contrary. This explains the most salient feature of the provisions of this Rule, viz., that it certainly does not contemplate or allow an enquiry in any case as to whether the exertions of the Sheriff are or are not in fact the effective cause of the settlement.

On the other hand if the contention of the present Plaintiff is correct, how stands the matter? In the present case, judging from the written statement and from the strenuous affidavit filed on behalf of the Defendant in the suit I should, if I was entitled so to do, guess that the Defendant had no real defence and that the attachment before judgment was the thing which brought him to his senses. But on the face of Rule 77 the right to poundage can depend upon no such enquiry. The contention must be and as I understand learned Counsel is that if for Plaintiff's benefit an attachment is effected for any purpose or at any stage of a suit, then any subsequent settlement of the claim in the suit gives rise to a right to poundage. In my opinion any such construction of the alternative part of the clause in question does some violence to its language and stretches the principle which underlies it. Why such a right should be introduced as a conditional alternative to the right given where a sum of money is levied in execution, it is difficult to see. If, on the other hand, the words are taken as intended simply to apply the principle of Alchin v. Wells (3) and Mortimore v. Cragg (4) they are given a meaning which is warranted by their context. Again where the only order in a suit is an order for interim attachment intended simply to preserve a fund until cause can be shown to an order nisi, i.e., until it can be decided whether the Defendant should be ordered to give security, the position has no necessary analogy at all to the case of a judgment-debtor rescuing his chattels from sale in execution. The order nisi may be discharged; security may be given; the Defendant may succeed in his defence. If the inconvenience of the attachment produces in the Defendant a desire for peace and causes him to settle with the Plaintiff before judgment, he may or may not be in effect anticipating a result which the due course of law would demand or bring to pass. In any case he is not merely anticipating the result of a coercive process already authoried for the purpose of effecting that result. He is not paying under the Court's order and because the Court by its process has effectively compelled him to obedience. In addition it has to be remembered that the only property attached before judgment may be of small value though the claim in the suit amounts to lacs of rupees. The Defendant may for the most cogent and diverse of reasons desire to settle with his adversary. To attribute what the Plaintiff obtains upon a compromise before judgment to the fact that something—no matter what or of what value—was being held in medio: to regard the settlement, by a conclusive presumption, as the result of the labours of the Sheriff; to grant him poundage as though he had “caused it to be made”—is to make a charge on principles not hitherto recognised in connection with poundage. It converts pound into a new charge altogether. When judgment has passed and Defendant does not pay until execution has begun, whatsoever he pays may be regarded as collected by the Sheriff. Where there is no decree and no execution of a decree the fact that the Defendant has been compelled in effect to give security in case the Plaintiff's claim turns out to be well founded, does not necessarily mean that virtually or in truth the Sheriff has collected whatsoever the Plaintiff may get on a settlement. The question for me is whether the terms of r. 77 of Chap. XXXVI require me to hold that in such a case the Sheriff is in the same position as if execution of a decree had been in progress. I cannot think that they require or warrant this conclusion.

R. 45 of Chap. XVII of the Rules of Court makes rr. 15 to 25 of that chapter applicable mutatis mutandis to “warrants” of attachment before judgment. I fail to find anything in these rules that justifies any claim for poundage outside the provisions of Chap. XXXVI, r. 77. I regard the question as depending in the end entirely on the correct construction of r. 77 as a charging provision. R. 20 of Chap. XVII refers to “the amount directed to be levied by such writ” and also to “poundage.” These references are inapplicable altogether to an attachment before judgment. The words “mutatis mutandis” in r. 45 stand in the way of any false analogy.

I regret if the result of this judgment should be that the Sheriff is not under the rules adequately remunerated for his work in connection with the carrying out of attachments before judgment, but in my opinion the suit must be dismissed with costs.

BUCKLAND, J. JETHA BHULCHAND and 1922, anr.
24, February. v.
F. C. GRACE.

Calcutta Rent Act—Suit for ejectment of tenant—Conditions precedent to enable tenant to get advantage of the provisions of the statute—Non-payment of arrears and current rent in due time, effect of.

Where the benefit of the Rent Act is claimed the Defendant must show that he has paid arrears within three months of the Rent Act coming into force and subsequently paid his rent regularly within the time fixed in the contract with his landlord or in the absence of any such contract by the 15th day of the following month or in the event of the landlord refusing to accept rent by depositing it with the Rent Controller within a fortnight of its becoming due. Where such of these conditions as are applicable are not fulfilled any other plea that may be raised should not be considered. Subsequent acceptance of rent does not create a waiver so as to make the statute applicable.

Where there is an agreement to extend the time for payment before the rent actually becomes due under the lease then it might well be that the time within which under sec. 11 (5) rent has to be paid to the landlord is such extended date, but where the default has already taken place the subsequent acceptance of rent by the landlord does not take the matter out of the provisions of sec. 11, sub-sec. (5).

This was a suit, No. 2562 of 1921 instituted on the Original Side of the High Court.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. N. Banerjee and Mr. S. M. Bose, Counsel, appeared for the Plaintiff.

Mr. S. C. Gupta and Mr. T. Chatterjee, Counsel, appeared for the Defendant.

BUCKLAND, J.—This is a suit for ejectment and for damages. The Defendant under a lease, dated 15th August 1918, was a tenant for three years of the upper floor of No. 24, Camac Street, from the 7th June 1918 at a monthly rental of Rs. 300. The lease expired: the Plaintiff required the Defendant to leave, but the Defendant is still in occupation of the premises

The only defence on behalf of the Defendant is a plea under the Rent Act as to whether or not the Plaintiff bonâ fide required the premises for his own occupation. But as has been pointed out more than once in cases in this Court, where the benefit of the Rent Act is claimed the Defendant must show that he has paid arrears within three months of the Rent Act coming into force, and subsequently paid his rent regularly within the time fixed in the contract with his landlord, or, in the absence of any such contract, by the 15th day of the following month, or, in the event of the landlord refusing to accept rent, by depositing it with the Rent Controller within a fortnight of its becoming due. Where such of these conditions as are applicable are not fulfilled, it is mere waste of time to consider any other plea under the Calcutta Rent Act. A statement of the payments of rent by the Defendant to the Plaintiff has been admitted by learned Counsel for the Defendant and placed before me, and from that I see that the rent for September 1920 was not paid until the 18th January 1921. On the 1st March 1921 the rent for October, November and December was paid at one time, and the rent for January 1921 was not paid until the 7th April of that year. It is quite unnecessary to go further than this.

It is, however, contended that if the rent is accepted subsequently and after default there is a waiver and the section does not apply. I do not agree with this. Where there is an agreement to extend the time for payment before the rent actually becomes due under the lease, there it might well be that the time within which under sec. 11 (5) rent has to be paid to the landlord is such extended date, but where the default has already taken place I do not think that subsequent acceptance of rent by the landlord takes the matter out of the provisions of sec. 11, sub-sec. 5.

In these circumstances there is no defence in this case and there will have to be a decree for ejectment and an order for possession. Since the suit was filed, the Plaintiff has been paying without prejudice at the rate of Rs. 350 a month, and therefore a decree will be made against him at that rate which is not contested. According to the statement produced before me it appears that excluding the month of February 1922 a sum of Rs. 1,050 is due in respect of three months, therefore there will be a decree for Rs. 1,050 in respect of mesne profits up to and including the 31st January 1922. The Defendant will continue to pay at the same rate until he vacates the property, and he will also pay the costs of this suit on scale No. 2, including costs incurred on the 18th August. Interest on decree at 6 per cent.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 196A—Sanction of Government if necessary for prosecution under sec. 120B/420, I. P. C., where the allegations of the prosecution support a case under sec. 120B/468, I. P. C.—Sec. 526, if applies in the case of an application to the Sessions Judge for time and for keeping the case in his own file—Sec. 239, legality of joint trial of several persons for various offences committed in pursuance of a criminal conspiracy—Acquittal on the conspiracy charge, effect of—Result of the trial, if can have any effect on the legality of the trial—Misjoinder of charges—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 120B, criminal conspiracy—Various offences committed in pursuance of such conspiracy, if to be treated as a single offence or separate offences—Sec. 109, necessity of sanction for prosecution for abetment to commit non-cognizable offences in pursuance of a criminal conspiracy—Evidence Act (I of 1872), secs. 159 and 160, refreshing memory from entries in a register kept by a clerk but which the witness daily checked and signed—Retracted confession, admissibility in evidence—Charge to jury, to be considered as a whole in deciding misdirection.

During the war a large number of men having been required for marine work as scraggs, tindals, laskars etc., in Mesopotamia, a department called the Inland Water Transport (I. W. T.) Department, was created to carry on recruitment, and Chittagong was made a recruiting centre for "marine ratings," for service in Mesopotamia. In selecting recruits for "higher ratings" certificates of fitness were required and the men selected were paid one month's pay in advance and diet allowance. There were various brokers for the supply of recruits. The brokers subsequently formed a combination based on a system of rateable distribution of profits. Enquiries revealed the existence of a wide-spread conspiracy to secure appointments by deceiving the recruiting officer and his staff with forged certificates. Eventually ten persons were put on their trial on a charge of criminal conspiracy against them all and on separate charges of other offences against each of them individually. One of the accused was acquitted. Eight of the accused were convicted on the general charge of conspiracy under sec. 120B/420, I. P. C. and one of the accused was acquitted on this charge. Besides all the said nine accused were convicted on one or more of the charges framed against them individually. The recruiting officer while giving his evidence, refreshed his memory from certain entries in a register written by his clerk but daily checked and signed by himself:

Held—That although the allegations of the prosecution support a case of conspiracy to forge documents, for prosecution of which sanction under sec. 196A, Cr. P. C. is required, there is no reason why, because the accused might have been charged with an offence for the prosecution of which the sanction of the Government is required, they should not be charged with and tried for offences in respect of which no sanction is required, e.g., conspiracy to cheat and cause delivery of property (sec. 120B/420. I. P. C.).

AMRITA LAL HAZRA v. EMPEROR (1) followed.

That an application to the Sessions Judge praying for time and for keeping the case in his own file instead of making it over to the Additional Sessions Judge, did not come within the purview of sec. 526, Cr. P. C. and the trial was not vitiated by the Sessions Judge refusing time.

That the accused having been charged with criminal conspiracy under sec. 120B, the various acts of cheating referred to in the charges and the schedule annexed thereto are not to be treated as separate offences but as having been set out as acts done in pursuance of the conspiracy. It was open to the prosecution to prove such acts in order that from them the existence of the conspiracy might be inferred. It may not have been necessary to set out these details in the charge, but their addition did not make the charges bad for misjoinder.

SUBRAHMANIA AYYAR v. KING-EMPEROR (2) discussed and distinguished.

That further the trial was not bad for the misjoinder of the charge of conspiracy with the other charges framed against the accused individually. Once a charge of conspiracy is framed, anything done in pursuance of the conspiracy can be tried at the trial for conspiracy, for the offence of conspiracy and offences committed in pursuance thereof form one and the same transaction.

(2) I. L. R. 28 I. A. 257: s. c. I. L. R. 25 Mad. 81; 5 C. W. N. 866 (1901).

In the case of SUPERINTENDENT AND REMEMBRANCE OF LEGAL AFFAIRS, BENGAL v. MON MOHAN RAY (3), HARSHA NATH CHATTERJEE v. EMPEROR (4) and AMRITA LAL HAZRA v. EMPEROR (1) followed.

That sec. 196A, Cr. P. C., only renders sanction necessary when the prosecution is for criminal conspiracy punishable under sec. 120B, I. P. C. It does not alter the former law that a prosecution for abetment by way of conspiracy punishable under sec. 109, I. P. C. requires no sanction. Therefore the individual charges of abetment to commit the non-cognizable offences in this case did not require sanction.

That the fact that an accused has been acquitted on the conspiracy charge, does not operate to show that the other offences with which he was charged were not part of the same transaction with the other offences charged at the trial and vitiate the trial. The legality of the joint trial depends on the accusation and not on the result of the trial.

That under the provisions of secs. 159 and 160 of the Evidence Act, the recruiting officer, while giving his evidence, was entitled to refresh his memory from the entries in the register written by his clerk and which he himself signed daily.

That a retracted confession is not inadmissible in evidence; it should be left to the jury to decide what value can be attached to it as against the maker.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The eight Appellants and two others were tried before the Additional Sessions Judge of Chittagong and a special jury on a charge of criminal conspiracy against them all and on separate charges of other offences under the Indian Penal Code against each of them individually. One of these ten accused Makbul Ahmed was acquitted of all the charges framed against him. Eight of the remainder were convicted on the general charge of conspiracy under sec. 120B/420, I. P. C. including one Ahmed Kabir who has since died. The second Appellant Ahmed Mia was acquitted on this charge. All accused except Makbul Ahmed were convicted on one or more of the charges framed against them individually. In some cases the verdict was unanimous and in others by a majority of three to two. The Appellant Abdul Salim has been sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment under secs. 120B/420, I. P. C. The Appellant Ahmed Mian has been sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment under secs. 420/109, I. P. C. The Appellants Maho-med Ismail alias Ismail Dovash, Osi Mian and Mahomed Ismail alias Kala Ismail have each been sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment under secs. 120B/420, I. P. C., and the Appellants Mohmed Nassim, Matiar Rahman and Yasin have each been sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment under secs. 120B/420, I. P. C. No separate sentences have been passed on any of the Appellants for the other offences of which they have been convicted.

The facts of the case are somewhat complicated but it is not necessary to set them out in full since in this appeal we cannot set aside the findings of the jury on the facts whether the verdict be unanimous or that of a majority. The main facts according to the case for the prosecution are as follows :—During the war a large number of men were required for marine work as serangs, findals, sukanis, laskars etc., in Mesopotamia. At first men were recruited in India for this purpose by the Royal India Marine (R. I. M.) Department at various centres throughout India. The demand for these men who were technically known as "Marine ratings" steadily increased and about the middle of August 1916 a new department, called the Inland Water Transport (I. W. T.) Department, was created to carry on this work of recruitment. The new department commenced work in October 1916. In February 1917, Chittagong was made one of the recruiting centres for "marine ratings" for service in Mesopotamia. The recruiting office in the Chittagong Port Office worked as a branch office of the Calcutta recruiting office but was financially independent. Mr. Chudbigh (P. W. No. 2), senior Harbour Master, was the recruiting officer for the Chittagong centre and as such selected men for marine service in Mesopotamia. Men getting over Rs. 20 per month were technically termed

"Higher Ratings" and the others "Lower Ratings." In selecting recruits for the higher ratings, Mr. Chudhigh made it a rule that all candidates except those known to him should produce certificates or testimonials as to their fitness before they were finally selected. The men after their final selection were paid one month's pay in advance and diet allowance. They were then sent to Calcutta with a "watchman" to be made over to the Technical Recruiting Officer who despatched them to Mesopotamia through the I. W. T. Officers in Bombay. This "watchman" was a servant of one Abdul Rahaman Dobasi who had entered into an agreement with the Secretary of State for India on the 7th February 1917, for the supply of the recruits to serve as "marine ratings" in Mesopotamia. Abdul Rahaman was in the position of a sole agent and was entitled to get a commission on the number of men recruited through the Chittagong office whether he himself brought them in or not. But until the men recruited at Chittagong were made over to the Head Office at Calcutta, Abdul Rahaman was responsible for the money advanced to them. At first Ismail Dovash (Appellant No. 3) was Abdul Rahman's "watchman" and besides performing his duties as watchman used to bring in men for recruitment. For some reason the Port Office authorities about the middle of the year 1917 refused to allow Ismail Dovash to enter that office and he then began to bring in recruits through Matiar Rahaman and Ahmad Mian (Appellants Nos. 7 and 2) and others. As a result of advertisement by Abdul Rahaman other persons also began to bring in recruits. These middle men or dalals got no commission or remuneration from Government.

Mr. Chudhigh took good care to bring to the notice of the candidates for recruitment and of these dalals that certificates of competency and general fitness were absolutely necessary for recruitment in the "Higher Ratings." The certificates which were accepted were of two kinds known as shipping office certificates and Basrah certificates. In the present case we are only concerned with the Basrah certificates. These were certificates granted to men who had already served in Mesopotamia.

Among the dalals who brought in recruits were nine of the accused excluding Abdul Salim (Appellant No. 1). Until July or August 1918 these dalals worked separately, each on his own account, except Ismail Dovash and those who worked on his behalf. This rivalry of interest gave rise to friction with the result that the business of each suffered more or less and in August 1918 the dalals made up their mutual differences and formed a combination based on a system of rateable distribution of profits at some fixed periods. At about the same time information was received from the Military Authorities at Basrah by the Government of India which led to an enquiry by the Criminal Investigation Department of Bengal being ordered. This enquiry revealed the existence of a wide-spread conspiracy to secure appointments in the higher ratings by deceiving the Recruiting Officer and his staff with forged certificates. The association of dalals at Chittagong hired one house and a room in another house there to carry on their business. In that room the dalals used to assemble and receive candidates for marine service. The Appellants Abdul Salim with one Penheiro, since deceased, used to meet the dalals there and receive orders for the certificates to be forged. The forged certificates were prepared at the house of Abdul Salim by him or by Penheiro or others. Abdul Salim was paid for preparing or procuring these forged certificates with a portion of the money received by the recruits as advance pay and diet allowance at the time of their final selection. The dalals also got a share of this money which was divided amongst them at certain intervals by the Appellant Ismail Dovash.

The above are the more salient features of the case which are necessary to be stated before considering the points of law urged on behalf of the Appellants.

The first point argued on behalf of the Appellants is that the trial is void because an application to the Sessions Judge under sec. 526, Cr. P. C. to allow time to move the High Court was refused. This contention fails because no application under this section of the Code was in fact made. While the case was on the file of the Sessions Judge Mr. Seaton, an application was made to him to keep the case on his own file. He refused this application as frivolous and rightly held that sec. 526, Cr. P. C. did not apply to such a case. He then transferred the case to the Additional Sessions Judge for trial. If the Appellants had good grounds to object to the trial of the case by this officer they could have applied to him to adjourn the case to enable them to move this Court but this they did not do.

The second ground on which the legality of the trial has been attacked is that the allegations of the prosecution support a case of conspiracy to forge documents and that a prosecution for such an offence requires sanction under sec. 196A of the Code of Criminal Procedure. We can see no reason why because the Appellants might have been charged with an offence for the prosecution of which the sanction of the Government is required, they should not be charged with, and tried for, offences in respect of which no sanction is required. A similar objection was taken in the case of Amrita Lal Hazra v. Emperor (1) and was overruled as untenable.

The third ground on which objection has been taken to the legality of the trial is that there has been misjoinder of charges. The charges framed counting each head of charge as a separate charge total thirty-seven. There is first a charge with one head charging all the ten Appellants "that you between the 1st September 1918 and the 27th November 1918 at Chittagong and other places in British India did agree with one another and with seven other named persons and with other persons unknown, to do and to cause to be done, an illegal act, to wit the commission of the offence of cheating by deceiving the Recruiting Officer for Marine Rating at Chittagong and his staff with forged certificates of ability, and by statements and conduct at or about the time of recruitment, and thereby fraudulently and dishonestly inducing them, to deliver to the recruits concerned their respective advance pay for one month and diet allowance at the rate of 8 as. each, and you were then parties to a criminal conspiracy, and that in pursuance of the said conspiracy, the said Recruiting Officer and his staff were deceived by 22 Exhibits marked in the case (the numbers of which are stated) and by statement and conduct during the production of the said exhibits, and were thereby fraudulently and dishonestly induced to deliver to the recruits mentioned in the schedule given on the reverse the sums quoted therein respectively against their names: and you thereby committed an offence punishable under sec. 120B read with sec. 420 of the Indian Penal Code." The schedule on the reverse of this charge contains the names of 22 recruits with the amount of one month's advance pay and diet allowance paid to each of them.

Before considering the remaining charges we will first consider the objection that has been raised to this main charge. It is contended that this charge is bad since it is not a charge of a single offence but really of 22 different offences; that each separate act of deceit in respect of each of the 22 recruits named in the schedule is a separate offence. In support of this contention reliance is placed on the well-known decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, Subrahmanya Ayyar v. King-Emperor (2). It is contended that this charge is open to the same objection as the first count of the charge in that case and the reason given in the judgments of three of the learned Judges of the Madras High Court, whose decision was accepted by the Judicial Committee, are applicable to this case. There would be great force in this contention if the law were the same now as it was when that case was decided. Then conspiracy to commit an offence (except a conspiracy to wage war) was punishable only as the abetment of an offence. Consequently a person joining in conspiracy in pursuance of which several offences were committed could only be charged with the abetment of those offences and the abetment of each offence had to be charged separately. But now that sec. 120B has been added to the Indian Penal Code, conspiracy has become a substantive offence. This has the effect of bringing the law as to conspiracy in India into line with the English Law. The main arguments in the judgments of the three learned Judges of the Madras High Court, who held the first count in Subrahmanya Ayyar's case (2) to be bad, were based on the difference between the English and Indian Law and the fact that conspiracy could only be charged as a form of abetment. Now that the law has been altered these arguments lose their force. In the present case the accused were charged with the offence of conspiracy and the acts of cheating referred to in the charge and the schedule are not charged as offences but were set out as acts done in pursuance of the conspiracy. It was open to the prosecution to prove such acts in order that from them the existence of the conspiracy might be inferred. It may not have been necessary to set out these details in the charge but their addition did not make the charge bad for misjoinder.

It was also contended that the trial was bad for the misjoinder of this charge of conspiracy with the other charges framed against the accused individually. Separate charge sheets with two, three or four heads have been drawn up against each of the accused. Except in the case of Osi Mia (accused No. 4) heads of charges of abetment of offences punishable under secs. 417, 420 and 466, I. P. C., have been framed against each accused. Six of these nine accused have also been charged with abetment of an offence punishable under sec. 471, I. P. C. Each of these sets of charges relate to the fraudulent recruitment of one of the persons named in the main conspiracy charge. The charges against Ahmed Mia (accused No. 2) may be taken as an example. He is charged first with having between 1st September 1918 and 25th day of November in pursuance of the Criminal conspiracy already charged abetted Aminul Huq in the commission of the offence of cheating, the said offence having been committed by the said Aminul Huq by deceiving the Recruiting Officer for Marine Ratings, Chittagong, and his staff with forged certificate of sukani (Exbt. 889, and by statement and conduct at or about the time of recruitment and thereby intentionally inducing him or them, so deceived, to appoint him (Aminul Huq) as sukani which he or they would not have done if not so deceived, and which act was likely to cause damage or harm, in mind, reputation and property, and the said offence of cheating having been committed in consequence of his abetment he committed an offence punishable under sec. 417 read with sec. 109, I. P. C. He is charged secondly in similar terms with having abetted Aminul Huq in the commission of the offence of cheating under sec. 420, I. P. C., with the same forged certificate and thereby dishonestly and fraudulently inducing the Recruiting Officer or his staff, so deceived, to pay Rs. 45 (one month's advance pay as sukani) plus /8/ as (khoraki or diet allowance), the said money being the property of Government.

He is charged thirdly with having between the 1st September and 5th November 1918 in pursuance of the criminal conspiracy already charged abetted some unknown person or persons in the commission of the offence of forgery of the certificate of Aminul Huq as sukani (Exbt. 839) purporting to have been made by a public servant in his official capacity.

Fourthly he is charged with having on the 5th November 1918 abetted Aminul Huq in the commission of the offence of using as genuine a forged document punishable under secs. 466 and 471, I. P. C., the said offence having been committed by the said Aminul Huq, by fraudulently and dishonestly using as genuine the forged certificate of himself as sukani (Exbt. 839) before the Recruiting Officer and his staff and which he (Aminul Huq) knew to be a forged document. The charges under secs. 417, 420, 466 and 471 read with sec. 109, I. P. C., that have been framed against the other eight accused are in similar terms. In the case of the first two accused, Abdul Salim and Ahmed Mia, the charges relate to the same recruit Aminul Huq. In the other seven different recruits are named in each set of charges. Osi Mia (accused No. 4) is charged, firstly, that he between the 1st September and the 27th November 1918, in pursuance of the criminal conspiracy stated in the main charge, abetted some unknown person or persons in the commission of the offence of forgery of a document, to wit the certificate of Ali Miah as sukani (Exhbt. 969) purporting to have been made by a public servant in his official capacity and punishable under sec. 466, I. P. C., and the said offence having been committed by the said unknown person or persons in consequence of his abetment, he thereby committed an offence punishable under sec. 466 read with sec. 109, I. P. C. He is secondly charged that he, on or about the 27th November 1918 at Halisahar P. S. Double Moorings in pursuance of the criminal conspiracy had in his possession five documents described in the schedule given on the reverse (Exhbits. 965, 966, 975, 959 and 990) knowing them to be forged and intending that they should fraudulently and dishonestly be used as genuine, the said documents being of one of the descriptions mentioned in sec. 466, I. P. C., viz., purporting to have been made by public servants in their official capacity and he thereby committed an offence punishable under sec. 474, I. P. C. None of these five documents are the subject of any of the other charges against individual accused nor do the names of the persons which appear on these documents appear in the schedule to the general conspiracy charge. One more head of charge remains to be mentioned. Ahmed Mia, the first accused, in addition to the charges under secs. 417, 420 and 466 read with sec. 109, I. P. C., is fourthly charged with the substantive offence of having been in possession of 10 forged documents—this charge being in similar terms to that framed against Osi Mia. None of these ten documents set out in the schedule are the subject of any other charge and only one name, Abdul Aziz, appears both in this schedule and in the schedule to the conspiracy charge.

It is urged on behalf of the Appellants that each of these ten sets of charges relates to entirely separate transactions for which the Appellants could not be tried jointly. It is also urged that the charges of abetment of cheating and abetment of forgery under one head of charges are also separate transactions since in the cheating charges the person abetted is named whilst in the forgery charges he is described as a person unknown. There can be no doubt that these ten accused could not have been tried at one trial on the charges framed against them individually if there had not been also the charge against them all of conspiracy punishable under sec. 120B read with sec. 420 I. P. C. It is contended on behalf of the prosecution that once a charge of conspiracy is framed anything done in pursuance of the conspiracy can be tried at the trial for conspiracy. This contention is supported by authority of decisions of this Court. In the case of Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Mon Mohan Ray (3) it was held that the offence of conspiracy and offences committed in pursuance of that conspiracy formed one and the same transaction and could be jointly tried. It was also so held in Harsha Nath Chatterjee v. Emperor (4) and both these cases were cited and approved in Amrita Lal Hazra v. Emperor (1). These decisions fully support the contention raised on behalf of the Crown and we hold that there was no misjoinder of charges in the present case that would render the trial illegal.

It is also urged even if this misjoinder did not render the trial illegal, the Court had discretion under sec. 239, Cr. P. C., to try the accused separately and this discretion was improperly exercised. But even if this be regarded as an irregularity it cannot be held to have occasioned a failure of justice.

There is not the same objection to the joinder of a number of charges in a conspiracy trial that there might be in other cases since even if they had not been charged, the offences alleged to have been committed in pursuance of the conspiracy could have been proved to support the charge of conspiracy. This being so, we do not think that there was even an irregularity or an improper exercise of discretion in putting in the form of charges the specific acts specially relied on as against each individual accused to show that they joined in the conspiracy.

Objection was also taken to the individual charges of abetment to commit non-cognizable offences on the ground that the abetment sought to be proved was abetment by conspiracy and therefore sanction of the Local Government to the initiation of proceedings was necessary under sec. 196A, Cr. P. C. On behalf of the Crown it is not conceded that those charges of abetment rest on conspiracy and it is pointed out that there is evidence to prove abetment by instigation. But even if the abetment were by conspiracy, sec. 196A, Cr. P. C., only renders sanction necessary when the prosecution is for criminal conspiracy punishable under sec. 120B, I. P. C. It does not alter the former law that a prosecution for abetment by way of conspiracy punishable under sec. 109, I. P. C., requires no sanction.

Another objection on the ground of misjoinder was based on the acquittal of the Appellant Ahmed Mia on the conspiracy charge. It is urged that this shows that the other offences with which he was charged were not part of the same transaction with the other offences charged at the trial. The answer to this objection is to be found in the wording of sec. 239, Cr. P. C. It begins "When more persons than one are accused." That is to say the legality of the joint trial depends on the accusation and not on the result of the trial. The charge of conspiracy against this Appellant was a real accusation and not a mere excuse for trying him with the others. The learned Sessions Judge has recorded that he cannot account for the verdict of not guilty against this accused under sec. 120B/420, I. P. C.

In addition to the above-mentioned objection to the legality of the trial, objections were also taken on the ground of wrongful admission of evidence. The first of these relates to a portion of Mr. Chudbigh's evidence. In deposing as to the names of the brokers who produced certain certificates alleged to be forged Mr. Chudbigh refreshed his memory by referring to entries made not by himself but by his clerk. The evidence as to the circumstances under which these entries were made is to the following effect. Mr. Chudbigh and his clerk sat in the same office room and the dalals used to come there with recruits. In the case of higher ratings Mr. Chudbigh would ask for the recruit's certificate and question him about his capacity. The recruit and the broker would then go to the clerk who would record the name of the recruit and the broker, and other details. After the day's selection and after the clerk recorded the names in the register Mr. Chudbigh counted them and signed his name. We hold that these facts were sufficient to make the provisions of secs. 159 and 160 of the Evidence Act applicable and that Mr. Chudbigh was rightly allowed to refresh his memory by referring to these entries. In the leading text book on this Act three classes of cases covered by these two sections are described and the present case is of the third class: "When it (the writing) brings to the mind of the witness neither any recollection of the facts mentioned in it nor any recollection of the writing itself but nevertheless enables him to swear to a particular fact from the conviction of his mind on seeing a writing which he knows to be genuine." Mr. Chudbigh admitted in cross-examination that he did not himself keep any note of the names of the brokers and that he did not care to know their names. The writing therefore could not bring to his recollection the fact that a particular broker identified a particular recruit. But on a reference to the register he could swear to such a fact. We therefore hold that the learned Sessions Judge was right in rejecting as he did the petition of objection to the admission of this evidence.

It was contended that the retracted confession of the Appellant Abdul Salim should have been held to have been inadmissible. In support of this contention reliance is placed on the case of King-Emperor v. Pramatha Nath Bagchi (5). The only point of resemblance between the facts of that case and the present case is that Abdul Salim's confession was recorded late at night. That alone is not sufficient ground for holding that a confession was not voluntarily made. It is not necessary to discuss the point at length. We think the learned Sessions Judge was right in letting in this confession and should have left it to the jury to decide what value could be attached to it as against the maker. He was, however, unnecessarily favourable to this Appellant since he told the jury the value of a retracted confession was almost nil even against the maker of it.

We find no substance in the contention that evidence of the result of the police enquiry was wrongly admitted because evidence was given that the accused were arrested in consequence of the police enquiry. The Criminal Investigation Department Inspector, Surendra Nath Lahiri (P. W. No. 33), was examined to explain the delay and had to give some account of the investigation between October 1918 and the submission of the charge sheet in September 1919. We do not find that he deposed to any fact that was not admissible against the accused.

In summing up the voluminous evidence to the jury the learned Sessions Judge has put the case to them with perfect fairness. Our attention has been drawn to some points favourable to the accused or adverse to the prosecution that have not been referred to in the charge and to other points which might have been put differently. It is not to be expected that a Judge should comment on every point that could be possibly argued in favour of the accused. It is sufficient if, as in this case, the Judge deals with the more important points and does not unduly press on the jury his own views on questions of fact. We have considered carefully the evidence as to points of fact said to have been improperly dealt with in the charge and we are satisfied that there has been no misdirection as regards them. For instance it is pointed out that the jury were not told that the enlistment registers were not found till the fourth search of the office. But the point is of no real importance. The so-called search was not a search in the ordinary sense of the word. These registers were not concealed but could have been taken at an earlier stage of the investigation but apparently their importance was not recognised at first.

Then as regards the evidence of the head clerk, the jury were plainly told that he was an accomplice and were properly directed as to the necessity of corroboration of his evidence. It was not necessary to repeat this direction every time any reference was made to his evidence. It would serve no useful purpose to refer to every point in the evidence to which our attention has been drawn. In deciding whether there has been misdirection on the facts, the charge to the jury must be considered as a whole and we are satisfied that there has been no misdirection in this respect.

We hold therefore that no ground has been established which would justify our interference with the verdict of the jury. The sentences passed are appropriate to the offences of which the Appellants have been convicted.

We accordingly dismiss this appeal.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM PATNA.]

VISCOUNT HALDANE

LORD PHILLIMORE.

SIR JOHN EDGE.

SIR ROBERT STOUT.

Heard, 16, June.

Judgment, 5, July.

MAHARAJA KESHO

PRASAD SINGH,

Appellant,

v.

SIV SARAN LAI,

Respondent.

Ekrarnama, construction—Stipulation to pay a pension to manager on retirement from service—Clause in ekrarnama that the principal's heirs should continue pension after principal's death whether a recommendation or a binding promise—

MAHARAJA KESHO PRASAD SINGH v. SIV SARAN LAL.

Privy Council—Costs—Irrelevant document printed by successful Appellant.

B, after appointing S as manager of her estate, by ekrarnama stipulated to provide B with a certain pensionary allowance in the event of his resigning the service. The ekrarnama concluded with this clause: "The heirs and representatives of mine and the administrators of the Raj Reyasat Dumraon (of which she was in possession as life-tenant) should fully comply with the terms of this deed":

Held—That these words were only a recommendation by the executant to the two parties respectively named to pay the pension and not a binding promise that they should pay it after her death.

The successful Appellant was deprived of the cost of printing in the paper-book documents which were irrelevant for the disposal of the appeal.

This was an appeal by special leave of His Majesty in Council against a judgment* and decree, dated the 27th July 1917, of the High Court of Judicature at Patna, reversing a judgment and decree, dated the 19th May 1914, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, at Arrah.

The suit in which the said decrees were made was brought by the Respondent claiming a certain sum of money, alleged to be due to him as pension under an ekrarnama, dated the 15th June 1906, which was executed by the late Maharani Beni Prasad Kuer, who was then in possession of the Dumraon Raj properties. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, but the High Court decreed it.

The facts leading up to the litigation may be briefly stated as follows:—The Dumraon Raj is an ancient ancestral impartible Raj which descends to a single male heir according to the rule of lineal primogeniture. Another custom of the Raj family is that females are excluded from succession. The husband of the said Maharani Maharaja Sir Radha Prasad Singh Bahadur, K.C.I.E., who was, at one time, the proprietor of the Raj, died on the 5th May 1894, leaving him surviving the said Maharani and a daughter, but no male issue. He left a Will, dated the 17th December 1890, of which probate was obtained in due course. In the Will he described what constituted the Raj property, and in view of the family custom whereby females were excluded from succession, he gave his widow an interest in the Raj properties under certain circumstances. It confirmed a power to adopt a son already given to the Maharani by a deed-poll, dated the 12th August 1889. The testator gave several legacies and made provision for his daughter. The clause giving interest to his widow was as follows:—

"In case I should die without leaving any son or sons born to me in my lifetime or in due course after my death, or should such son or sons die in the lifetime of my wife without attaining his or their majority and without leaving male issue, then I give, devise and bequeath the whole of my property aforesaid to my wife for the term of her natural life, and I declare that the gift herein contained shall take effect and inure for the benefit of my wife, whether I leave a son adopted by me or not, and shall continue for her benefit, whether she gives effect to the power of adoption hereinbefore mentioned or not, but it shall be subject to her making all proper provisions for the maintenance, support and education of the son to be adopted by me, or should I not adopt one or such son die of the son or sons to be adopted by her under the power aforesaid, and from and after her death, I give, devise and bequeath all my property aforesaid to the son to be adopted by me, or should I leave no son adopted by me or such adopted son die, as mentioned in the power aforesaid, to the son to be adopted by me (? my) wife under such power and his heirs absolutely."

* Reported: (1918) Pat. 86.

On the death of her husband, the Maharani obtained possession of the Raj properties, which were of considerable value. In May 1902, the then manager of the Raj having resigned, she appointed the present Respondent as the manager at a salary of Rs. 1,200 per month. The Respondent was a vakil and was then practising at Arrah, where he had been in practice for twenty-six years. In 1904, the Respondent's salary was raised to Rs. 1,500 per month. Besides his salary he had free board and residence, conveyances, and also travelling allowance and other perquisites.

On the 15th June 1906, the Maharani executed the said ekrarnama, which is as follows:—

"I am Sri Maharani Beni Prasad Kuer, widow of Maharaja Sir Radha Prasad Singh Bahadur, K.C.I.E., guddinashin and malik of the Dumraon raj reyasat pargana Bhojpur, District Shahabad, by caste Ujjain Kshatri, by occupation a Zamindar.

"As, in 1902, it became necessary for me to appoint a manager for the management of the Dumraon raj reyasat and Munshi Siv Saran Lal, B. L., vakil of the Calcutta High Court, who was at the time practising as a pleader at Arrah, a well-known pleader of the Arrah District, had a good practice and was also the retained pleader of the Dumraon raj reyasat for a long time, willingly and immediately accepted the post of manager with my approval, and he having left practising as a pleader, commenced to work in the reyasat. Therefore, in order that the said Munshi may not at any time, hereafter, sustain loss for leaving the service, I think it proper and just that should the said Munshi leave his this service for any reason, or if under any other circumstances, reasonable or unreasonable, he may have to leave this service according to his own wishes or against his wishes, then the said Munshi shall get monthly Rs. 500, which comes to Rs. 6,000 annually for life, by way of pension from the date of resignation from the Dumraon raj reyasat. And I hope that if perchance after granting this pension he (the said Munshi) again desires to resume his practice as a pleader, then he shall get sufficient compensation for the loss he might sustain for leaving his profession for a considerable period and that he will pass his old age comfortably. It is desirable that the heirs and representatives of mine, the successor and the administrators to the Dumraon raj reyasat Estate, shall fully comply with the terms of this document. Therefore, after fully considering and understanding the matter, I have executed this document in the form of ekrarnama, so that it may be of use when required."

On the 13th December 1907, the Maharani died, leaving her surviving her said daughter, who had married and was known as Her Highness Ujjeinin Maharani of Rewa. According to the custom of the family, the Appellant, as the heir of the late Maharani, became entitled to the possession of all the Raj properties, but it was alleged that on the day before her death, the deceased Maharani had adopted one Maharaj Kumar Sri Newas Prasad Singh. The Court of Wards, therefore, took possession of all the Raj properties on behalf of the alleged adopted son, who was a minor, but the Appellant challenged the validity of the adoption on various grounds. In March 1908, the Respondent ceased to be manager of the Raj. On the 5th February 1909, the Appellant brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate

Judge of Arrah to have the alleged adoption declared invalid and for possession of the Raj properties. On the 12th August 1910, this suit was decreed. By this decree it was ordered that he was entitled to recover possession of all the properties appertaining to the Dumraon Raj; that the Court of Wards representing the alleged adopted son should deliver the possession of the same to the Appellant; that the Court of Wards should render an account of all it took possession of, and its management; and that the Appellant was entitled to all the profits accrued during the period he was kept out of possession.

The alleged adopted son under the guardianship of the Court of Wards appealed to the High Court at Calcutta, but the parties entered into a compromise, and on the 17th May 1912, the High Court passed a decree in terms of the compromise. The effect of the compromise was that the Appellant was to have the Raj properties, but that the order of the Court of first instance as to the accountability of the Court of Wards and its liability for mesne profits for the period of the Appellant's dispossession was set aside; and that the Appellant was to pay the alleged adopted son a sum of 10 lacs of rupees in certain instalments. As the result of this litigation, the Appellant recovered possession from the Court of Wards of all the properties appertaining to the Dumraon Raj.

On the 3rd August 1912, the Respondent instituted the present suit against the Appellant, who was Defendant in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Arrah. The Respondent had also impleaded the said alleged adopted son as Defendant 2, and the Maharani's daughter, Her Highness the Maharani of Rewa as Defendant 3, the former, on the ground that he had received or was to receive 10 lacs of rupees out of the Dumraon Raj properties, and the latter because she was the heiress of the late Maharani of all her personal properties, and the Plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to be paid his pension out of such properties. Both Courts in India, however, dismissed the suit against both of them and they were not parties to the present appeal. In his plaint, the Respondent alleged that he ceased to be the manager on the 17th March 1908; that the Court of Wards paid him his pension down to the 18th September 1911, when the estate was handed over to the Appellant; that the Appellant had denied any liability and refused to pay the pension, and that a sum of Rs. 5,445 was due to him on account of the pension and interest up to the last day of July 1912, that the Respondent accepted the managership according to the terms offered by the Maharani, that when the Respondent mentioned to her the risk which he was undergoing "she gave him favourable and hopeful assurances," and that later on when "the affairs were all settled to her satisfaction and the improvements in the management of the estate became quite perceptible, the Plaintiff reminded the Maharani of her former assurances referred to above, and she, conscious of the situation of the Plaintiff and of the risks which he had already undergone in absenting himself so long from his commanding practice for her sake and to safeguard him from any loss that he may be put to in future and also being pleased with the success of his management and appreciating the value of his services and desirous and anxious to secure the retention of the same for the future management of her estate, and on consideration of other facts which may be in her mind to compensate the Plaintiff, allowed him a pension of Rs. 500 per month for his life in case he had to give up the present post which he was occupying, either voluntarily or involuntarily, and executed a registered document, dated the 15th June 1906. to this effect." He contended that the ekrarnama was for legal necessity and for the benefit of the Raj, and that "whatever may be the position of the Maharani, whether she was in possession of the Raj as a life-tenant or as an owner of an impartible estate or as a Hindu widow, or as an executrix, or as a manager, or as a trespasser, or as a trustee, the Plaintiff was entitled to get his pension: Firstly, from the general assets in the hands of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2; secondly, from the savings of the estate arrears or uncollected rent the debts due to the estate at the time of her death, and from income of the estate held in suspense in the Maharani's or any other person's hands; thirdly, from her personal properties and her stridhan; and fourthly, from all kinds of property which the late Maharani was in possession of and which had now come into the hands of the Defendants."

The Plaintiff, on those allegations, prayed for a decree for Rs. 5,445 and consequential reliefs.

The Appellant filed his written statement stating that he was not the Maharani's heir and pleading that the ekrarnama was invalid for want of consideration or on the ground of the consideration being wholly or in part immoral and against public policy, that it was not binding upon him personally or upon the Raj properties. He denied that there were any assets in his hands representing the Maharani's estate or her savings out of income, but he submitted that if there were they also were not liable to satisfy the Respondent's claim under the agreement.

On the pleadings, the Subordinate Judge settled seventeen issues, of which the following are material to this report:—

(6) Is the agreement supported by any consideration? Is the consideration valid?

(7) Is this agreement beneficial to the estate, or highly improvident? Is it binding upon Defendant No. 1?

(9) Is the agreement legal and valid?

(10) Had the Maharani any personal property? Has the Defendant No. 1 come into possession of any such property? Is such property liable to the Plaintiff's claim?

(11) Is the Plaintiff entitled to recover this amount of pension claimed from (1) arrears of uncollected rent, (2) debts due to the estate at the time of the Maharani's death, (3) any other income, if any, due to the Maharani, with regard to which she did not expressly indicate any intention as to whether it was to be treated as her personal property or whether it was to be treated as part of the corpus of the estate; (4) from general assets in the hands of Defendant No. 1, that is, all kinds of property which the late Maharani was in possession of and which have now come into the hands of Defendant No. 1?

On the 9th May 1914, the Subordinate Judge, after recording the oral and documentary evidence adduced by the parties, delivered judgment in favour of the Appellant, and passed a decree dismissing the suit with costs. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the grant of the pension was not an improvident act, but that it was not for legal necessity or for the benefit of the Raj, that the ekrarnama was not binding upon the Raj in the hands of the Appellant, that if the Maharani had a widow's estate the Respondent would not be entitled to recover the amount of the pension from the properties Nos. 1, 2 and 3 of Issue No. 11, that the Maharani had a life-interest in the Raj, that many properties acquired by her had been incorporated in the Raj and not treated as her separate property, that the Respondent would have been entitled to recover the pension from the stridhan of the Maharani and from properties Nos. 1, 2 and 3 of Issue No. 11, which had come into the hands of the Appellant, if the ekrarnama had contained a contract to pay the pension out of those properties, and that the true construction of the ekrarnama was that it contained only an undertaking that the pension would be paid out of the Raj property; and that there was no undertaking on the part of the Maharani personally to pay the pension or out of the properties Nos. 1, 2 and 3 of Issue No. 11. On the question of consideration, he held that the Respondent accepted the post without any condition or promise of reward or pension, that the grant of pension was purely a voluntary act of the Maharani without any consideration, that the consideration stated in the ekrarnama, viz., the necessity to guard against possible future losses was fictitious.

Against the said decree of the Subordinate Judge the Respondent appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Patna, and on the 27th July 1917, that Court delivered judgment allowing the appeal with costs in both Courts. The learned Judges who heard the appeal held that there was no legal necessity to give the Respondent a pension and the ekrarnama did not bind the Raj in the hands of the Appellant, that the Maharani acquired several properties out of the income received by her, that such acquisitions were managed along with the Raj, and if she had held the estate of a Hindu widow there would have been a presumption that she intended these acquisitions to accrue to and form part of the Raj, but that the Maharani was a tenant for life and therefore the presumption did not arise, and that the Appellant had come into possession of property both movable and immovable which the late Maharani might have disposed of if she pleased. As to the construction of the ekrarnama the learned Judges were of opinion that the Subordinate Judge had proceeded on a mistranslation thereof. They gave their own translation, and held on such translation that the Maharani intended to hold herself personally liable for the pension and that her acquisitions were answerable for her engagements. With regard to the question of consideration, they held that that consideration was that stated in the ekrarnama, that it was good consideration, and that it had not been shown that the consideration for the ekrarnama was either wholly or in part immoral or contrary to public policy. In the result they ordered that the Respondent's suit be decreed against the Appellant for the principal sum claimed with interest at six per cent. per annum from the end of each month till realization, and that the decree was to be executed only against the property of the Maharani in the Appellant's hands which had not been duly administered by him.

A formal decree, dated 27th July 1917, was accordingly drawn up.

Against the said decree of the High Court the Appellant obtained special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with Mr. J. M. Parikh) for the Appellant.—The Courts have held that the lady entered into a personal agreement that this should be paid.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR ROBERT STOUT.—This is an appeal by Maharaja Kesho Prasad Singh against a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Patna. The High Court reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge of the Second Court at Arrah, which had dismissed the suit with costs. The suit was to recover Rs. 5,445 and the basis of the claim rests on an ekrarnama given by Maharani Beni Prasad Kuer, widow of Raja Sri Radha Prasad Singh Bahadur, K.C.I.E., gaddinashin and proprietress of Raj Reyasat Dumraon (Dumraon Estate) in Pergana Bhojpur, District Shahabad, by caste an Ujjain Chhatri and by occupation a Zamindar.

The Dumraon Raj is impartible and the estate is an important one and one of considerable extent. The family of the Maharaja trace their pedigree back for many centuries. The widow before-named managed the estate after the death of her husband; it had been devised to her for the term of her life by the Will of her husband.

A great number of questions was raised before the Subordinate Court, and no less than seventeen issues were framed. These issues were issues of law and fact. In the High Court these issues were reviewed, and a decree was made for the payment of the principal sum claimed with interest at six per cent. per annum, from the end of each month till realisation; that the decree was to be executed only against the property of the Maharani in the Appellant's hands which had not been duly administered by him.

According, therefore, to this decree, the liability of the Appellant was only as an administrator of the estate of the Maharani. The case has, however, been argued, and the Respondent has claimed that he is entitled to his claim against the Appellant on one of two grounds, that is to say, either against him as an administrator de son tort of the estate of the Maharani or as the owner of the Dumraon estate.

The case of the Respondent rests on the ekrarnama, and it was contended that this document binds the administrator of the Maharani's estate and also the owner of the Dumraon Estate.

The Respondent was a pleader of the Courts, and had had conversation with the Maharani about becoming the manager of the estate. At one or more of the interviews, his statement is that she said that if he gave up his practice in Court, and became the manager of the estate, she would see that he should not be the loser by so doing. There is no mention of such a promise in the contract of employment. This was evidenced by the letter sent by the Maharani to the Respondent, and dated the 29th May 1902. It reads as follows :—

“ From—Maharani Beni Prasad Kuer Deyi Debi,

“ To—Munshi Siv Saran Lal.

(May God keep you in peace.)

“ After expressing my desire to meet you I have to say that as Mr. Charles Fox, the manager, has resigned his post, I think it necessary that some competent man should live at my place and help me, so I write to you that you will please live at my place and execute the orders which I may issue to you, and will pay you Rs. 1,200 per month as salary.

The Respondent entered on his work as manager, and on the 15th June 1906. the ekrarnama was executed. The draft of this document was, before signature by the Maharani, seen by the Respondent, and he seems to have made no objection to its terms. The Judge of the Subordinate Court and the Official Court Translator agree as to the translation of this ekrarnama, but the Judges in the High Court were of opinion that it was wrongly translated in part by the Official Translator and the Subordinate Judge. The part objected to, reads in the translation adopted by the Subordinate Judge as follows :—

“ Therefore, in order that the said Munshi may not at any time hereafter sustain loss for leaving the service, I think it proper and just that should the said Munshi leave this service for any reason, or if under any other circumstances reasonable or unreasonable, he may have to leave this service, according to his own wishes or against his wishes, then the said Munshi shall get monthly Rs. 500, which comes to Rs. 6,000 annually for life, by way of pension, from the date of resignation from the Dumraon raj reyasat. And I hope that, if perchance, after granting this pension, he (the said Munshi) again desires to resume his practice as a Pleader then he shall get sufficient compensation for the loss he might sustain for leaving his profession for a considerable period and that he will pass his old age comfortably. It is desirable that the heirs and representatives of mine, the successor and the administrators to the Dumraon raj reyasat Estate shall fully comply with the terms of this document ”

“ I, therefore, in order to safeguard against the loss which the said Munshi may sustain, if perchance he vacates this post for any reason in future, I think it just and proper that if in future the said Munshi gives up this service for any reason or he has to resign the service according to his wishes or against his wishes for any other reason, and under any circumstances, justifiable or unjustifiable he, the said Munshi, shall get Rs. 500 (rupees five hundred) monthly which amounts to Rs. 6,000 (rupees six thousand) annually, as pension for life from the date he resigns the post of manager of raj reyasat Dumraon, and I hope that by allowing this (torn) in perchance he, according to his desire, reverts to the profession of pleader-ship, he shall get to some extent compensation for the loss he may sustain for leaving his profession after (? for) a long time, and he will pass his old age in comfort. The heirs and representatives of me, the executant, and the Gaddinashin and administrators of raj reyasat Dumraon should fully comply with the (terms of) this deed.”

There does not seem much difference in the language, so far as the creation of a liability on the part of the administrator of the estate of the Maharani is concerned, between the two translations. The Respondent rests his case on the translation accepted by the High Court. The question, therefore, is : Do the words used in the accepted translation show that the

Maharani agreed or contracted with the Respondent that, after her death, her executor or administrator should pay the pension named?

The ekrarnama provides that the Respondent is to get Rs. 500 monthly, for life, from the date he resigns his post as manager, and it goes on to say that the Maharani hopes that by allowing this sum, he will pass his old age in comfort: but then comes the next, and important, sentence, as to who is to pay this, and the words already quoted show that there are two different parties mentioned, viz., first, her heirs and representatives, and, secondly, the owner or administrators of the Raj Dumraon Estate, and the ekrarnama says that these parties "should fully comply with the terms of this deed." Are these words a binding promise to pay such a pension, or are they only a recommendation by the lady to two different parties to comply with the deed, i.e., to pay the pension? If it had been intended to provide that the pension was to be a right of the Respondent to obtain this money, the words are surely insufficient to effect such an intention. In the accepted translation, the words are that they "should fully comply" with the terms of the deed. She did not treat, therefore, the ekrarnama as an ordinary contract. It has to be noticed that the work which the Respondent did was work for the estate, not personal work for the Maharani. Why then should her personal estate be bound to pay a pension to this servant of the estate, namely, the Respondent?

Their Lordships are of opinion that the ekrarnama is not in terms a contract binding the executor or administrators of the Maharani to pay the pension, nor can it be said that it is a binding contract, on the owner or administrators of the Raj Dumraon Estate to pay such a pension. Being of this opinion, it is unnecessary to consider whether the Appellant was ever the administrator of the estate or the other questions raised in the appeal.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the appeal must be allowed with costs, both here and below, and that the decree of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the suit be restored. They agree with the opinion expressed by the Judges of the High Court, that in the Court below a mass of irrelevant matter was introduced, and that two documents specified have been printed that were irrelevant. The cost of printing these documents (i.e. p. 274 to p. 348 and p. 351 to p. 481 in the printed record) must be borne by the Appellant, and the Registrar of the Privy Council should disallow all costs of, and incidental to, these irrelevant documents when taxing the costs of the appeal incurred in England. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Solicitors: Messrs. Barrow, Rogers and Nevill for the Respondent.

27, February.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 47, r. 1—Review, grounds for admitting applications for—Previous decision, error in, if "sufficient reason" for review.

R. 1 of Or. 47 of the Civil Procedure

CHHAJJU RAM,
Appellant,
v.
NEMI and ors.,
Respondents.

CHHAJJI RAM v. NEKI.

Code must be read as in itself definitive of the limits within which review is permitted, and reference to practice under former and different statutes is misleading.

The words "any other sufficient reason" in Or. 47, r. 1, mean a reason sufficient on grounds at least analogous to those specified immediately previously, that is to say, to excusable failure to bring to the notice of the Court new and important matters or error on the face of the record.

Upon an application for review the Court cannot proceed to deal with the case on the merits as if on an appeal.

This was an appeal from two judgments and a decree of the Chief Court of the Punjab (11th December 1918) which affirmed a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Hissar (13th August 1914).

The suit was instituted by the Plaintiffs (Respondents) to pre-empt the sale of lands made by the vendor Mrs. Forbes in favour of the Appellant.

The latter contended that the Plaintiffs were suing on behalf of others who had no right to pre-empt but the Subordinate Judge who tried the suit held that this contention had not been made out and decreed the suit. Against this decision the Appellant appealed to the Chief Court of the Punjab and a Bench of that Court consisting of Scott Smith and Leslie Jones, JJ., reversed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and allowed the appeal (3rd November 1917).

The Plaintiffs then applied for a review of this judgment and their application was heard by a Division Bench of the Chief Court consisting of Wilberforce and Scott Smith, JJ., who held on the 22nd July 1918 that the previous Bench "had proceeded on an incorrect exposition of the law" and directed "the appeal to go before the Bench for their decision."

The appeal was thereupon heard by a further Bench of the Chief Court consisting of Wilberforce and Le Rossignol, JJ., who delivered judgment on the 11th December 1918 and agreeing with the findings of the Subordinate Judge they dismissed the Defendant's appeal.

The Defendant now appealed against the judgments of the Chief Court, dated the 22nd July 1918 and the 11th December 1918.

[The hearing of the appeal was commenced on January 31st before a Board consisting of Viscount Haldane, Lord Phillimore and Mr. Ameer Ali but owing to the importance of the questions raised a Full Board was constituted to hear the appeal.]

Sir G. R. Lowndes, K. C. and Dubé for the Appellant.

There are two main points:—

- (1) Can the Review Court overrule a previous judgment of the Appeal Court?
- (2) If so—were they right?

The provisions of the Code dealing with review are sec. 114 and Or. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

The application for review was made to two Judges only, one of whom was the same as before.

They practically had a complete re-hearing of the suit which is outside their powers on review; moreover there is no authority to justify a new Judge sitting.

Under Or. 47, r. 5 of the Code the same Judges must sit, and if one of the Original Bench is absent the other should sit alone.

See Aubhoy Churn Mohunt v. Shamont Lochun Mohunt (4).

In Or. 47 the words "or for any other sufficient reason" must be words "ejusdem generis" to the classes already mentioned.

CHHAJJU RAM v. NEKI.

Sandringham v. Greach (5), R. v. Cleworth (6) and Tillmans & Co. v. S. S. Knutsford (7).

If you construe these words "ejusdem generis" it is clearly impossible to re-open all the issues on review.

In this Order the common quality which justifies review is mistake—some accidental slip or omission.

The Indian cases on the subject are as follows :—

Under Bengal Regulation 26 of 1814, sec. 4. Maharaj Moheshur Singh v. Bengal Government (8).

Under Act VIII of 1859, secs. 376 and 378. Nusseeroodeen Khan v. Indurnarain (3), Nobo Kishore Mookerjee v. Shib Prosad Pattuck (9), Ko Poh v. Moung Toy (10), Mt. Montoora v. Ablak Roy (11), Juggobundhoo Bose v. J. P. Wise (12), Chintamani Paul v. Peary Mohun Mookerjee (13), J. P. Wise v. Huro Lal Girce Gossain (14), Judab Ram Deb v. Ram Lal Mudduck (15), Koleemooddeen Mundul v. Heerun Mundul (16), Sheik Ellem v. Muhomed Basheer (17), Banee Madhub v. Kalee Churn Singh Roy (18), *Shaikh Munceroodeen v. Ellem v. Basheer (17), Raman v. Karunatha Tharakan (20), Mahadeva Rayar v. Sappani (21) and Reasut Hossein v. Hadjee Abdoolah (22).

Under Act XIV of 1882, sec. 623. Vellaya v. Jaganatha (24), Amir Hasan v. Ahmad Ali (25), Gopal Chandra Lahiri v. Solomon (26), Gungapershad Sahu v. Maharani Bibi (27), Re Sharup Chand Mala v. Pat Dasee (28), Muhammad Yusuf Khan v. Abdul Rahman Khan (29), Sulleman Hussein v. The New Oriental Bank Corporation, Ltd. (30) and Rajah Kotagiri Venkata Subbamma Rao v. Rajah Vellanki Venkatrama Rao (31).

The Act of 1859 is much wider than the present Civil Procedure Code.

If a review were inadmissible under the 1850 Act, a fortiori it would be inadmissible under the present Act.

CHHAJJU RAM v. NEKI.

litigation out of which the appeal arises the Respondents were Plaintiffs. They claimed to have validly exercised a right of pre-emption over certain lands which the Respondent Mrs. Forbes, who was made a Defendant only formally, had sold to the Appellant. Into the details of the transaction it is not necessary to enter at great length, for their Lordships are of opinion that the case must be disposed of on a principle governing procedure which will appear presently. It is sufficient to state that Mrs. Forbes sold to the Appellant her proprietary rights in the subject-matter of the suit, two villages called Mauza Kagsar and Mauza Jamni Kera, by a deed of sale on the 2nd October 1912. The price Rs. 42,000 was paid, and the Appellant took possession. Shortly afterwards the Respondents other than Mrs. Forbes sued the Appellant to set aside the sale and for a decree for possession of the former of the two mauzas on payment of Rs. 15,000. They claimed that they were Gaur Brahmans by caste, and were occupancy tenants of that village and members of an agricultural tribe of the village within the meaning of the Alienation of Land Act, XIII of 1900 of the Punjab. They further alleged that no formal notice or information had been given to them of the proposed sale of the village, which sale had been completed secretly and collusively and that they were entitled to a right of pre-emption. Among other defences raised by the Appellant was this, that in reality the Plaintiff Respondents were suing on behalf of third persons who had no right to purchase the village, and that in consequence no such right of pre-emption could be asserted on the part of the persons suing.

The learned Subordinate Judge tried a number of issues in the suit, which raised, among others, the question whether the Plaintiffs were suing for their own benefit and had a right of pre-emption. In the end he found in favour of the Plaintiffs on all the material issues, including those raising the questions just referred to. The present Appellant then appealed to the Chief Court of the Punjab. A Division Bench of that Court, consisting of Scott Smith and Leslie Jones, J.J., reversed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, holding that the Plaintiffs' claim for pre-emption was really one on behalf of third persons who had no such right. They had allowed, as an additional ground of appeal, the contention to be brought before them that the suit had been instituted in the interests of third persons who were non-agriculturalists and had on that account no right of pre-emption, and had given leave to the Defendant to adduce further evidence on the point, including the records of certain proceedings. In the result they allowed the appeal, holding that because the Plaintiffs were not suing for themselves alone, but for themselves in conjunction with other persons, their claim to pre-emption was not maintainable. The Plaintiffs then applied, under Or. 47, r. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for a review of the judgment of the Division Bench, on the ground that the Division Bench ought not to have admitted the additional ground of appeal, and that the learned Judges were misled into holding that the facts found by them disentitled the Plaintiffs to a decree.

The application for review came before the same Chief Court, not constituted as before but differently. At the second hearing the Division Bench was made up of Wilberforce, J., another Judge of the Chief Court, and Scott Smith, J., who had sat at the previous hearing. These learned Judges held that the previous Division Bench was right in admitting the additional evidence, especially as no objection had been taken by the Plaintiffs to its admission, and that that Bench did right in considering it. But the second Division Bench thus newly constituted then proceeded to deal on the merits with the judgment brought before them under the Code for review, treating the view of the law taken by the previous Division Bench as matter that was open to them as if on an appeal. They held that the previous decision of the case had "proceeded upon an incorrect exposition of the law." Accepting on this ground the application for review, they directed the "appeal to go before the Bench for their decision." In accordance with this direction the case was heard by a Division of the Chief Court constituted of Wilberforce, J., and another Judge who had not previously heard it, Le Rossignol, J. These learned Judges considered certain other grounds of appeal which had not been decided by Scott Smith and Leslie Jones, JJ., being immaterial in the view which they had taken. They decided these points adversely to the Appellants and then followed the decision of Wilberforce and Scott Smith, JJ., at the second hearing by the Chief Court, and dismissed the appeal.

It will be observed that the question with which their Lordships have to deal is one concerned not with appeal to a Court of Appeal, but with review by the Court which had already disposed of the case. In England it is only under strictly limited circumstances that an application for such a review can be entertained. In India, however, provision has for long past been made by legislation for review in addition to appeal. But as the right is the creation of Indian statute law, it is necessary to see what such statutory law really allows. The law applicable to the present case is laid down by Or. 47, r. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. This Rule is enacted in the following terms:—

"Any person considering himself aggrieved,

(a) by a decree or order from which an appeal is allowed, but from which no appeal has been preferred (b) by a decree or order from which no appeal is hereby allowed, or (c) by a decision on a reference from a Court of Small Causes, and who, from the discovery of new and important matter or evidence which, after the exercise of due diligence, was not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or order made, or on account of some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record, or for any other sufficient reason, desires to obtain a review of the decree passed or order made against him, may apply for a review of judgment to the Court which passed the decree or made the order."

By r. 5 of the same order it is provided that—

"Where the Judge or Judges, or any one of the Judges who passed the decree or made the order a review of which is applied for, continues or continue attached to the Court at the time when an application for the review is presented, and is not or are not precluded by absence or other cause for a period of six months next after the application from considering the decree or order to which the application refers, such Judge or Judges or any of them shall hear the application, and no other Judge or Judges of the Court shall hear the same."

Their Lordships observe that Wilberforce, J., was not one of the Judges who passed the decree or made the order reviewed. They understand that Leslie Jones, J., was precluded by absence from sitting. But this circumstance makes no difference to what is prescribed by r. 5. It is clear that Wilberforce, J., was precluded by the language from hearing the application, and this in itself would be a fatal objection to the judgment in review. The Court of Review had to be composed of Scott Smith, J., alone, a circumstance not without importance for the larger considerations which follow.

But larger considerations present themselves. The Order re-enacts with important variations legislation on the subject of review which has been in operation for a long time past.

If their Lordships felt themselves at liberty to construe the language of Or. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 without reference to its history and to the decisions upon it, their task would not appear to be a difficult one. For it is obvious that the Code contemplates procedure by way of review by the Court which has already given judgment as being different from that by way of appeal to a Court of Appeal. The three cases in which alone mere review is permitted are those of new material overlooked by excusable misfortune, mistake or error apparent on the face of the record, or "any other sufficient reason." The first two alternatives do not apply in the present case, and the expression "sufficient," if this were all, would naturally be read as meaning sufficiency of a kind analogous to the two already specified, that is to say, to excusable failure to bring to the notice of the Court new and important matters, or error on the face of the record. But before adopting this restricted construction of the expression "sufficient," it is necessary to have in mind in the first place, that the provision as to review was not introduced into the Code for the first time in 1908, but appears there as a modification of previous provision made in earlier legislation: and, in the second place, that the extent of the power of a Court in India to review its own decree under successive forms of legislative provision has been the subject of a good deal of judicial interpretation, not, however, in all cases harmonious. That the power given by the Indian Code is different from the very restricted power which exists in England appears plain from the decision in Charles Bright and Co. v. seller (1), where the Court of Appeal discussed the history of the procedure in England and explained its limits.

Turning first to the earlier forms assumed in Indian legislation on the matter in question, their Lordships observe that the Bengal Reg. XXVI, of 1814, by sec. 2, confers on the Courts there mentioned a power of review analogous to that under consideration, excepting that the expression "otherwise requisite for the ends of justice" is added, an expression which may have been regarded as enlarging the scope of the word "sufficient," used as it was in much the same way as in the present Code. The expression "requisite for the ends of justice" is again introduced in sec. 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1859. But in the Code of 1877 the language is varied, and the law is enacted in substantially the more restricted words in which it is enacted in the Code of 1908. Upon the construction of the language used from time to time by the legislature, there has been much divergence of judicial opinion. For example, even on the wider words in the Code of 1859, the High Court at Calcutta in the case of Roy Meghraj v. Bcejoy Gobind Burrel (2) adopted the restricted construction, and laid down emphatically that there could be no re-hearing for the purpose of seeing whether a different conclusion on the merits should be adopted. On the other hand, in Nusseerooddeen Khan v. Indurnarain Chowdhry (3) the majority of the Court appear to have considered that the wider meaning should be attributed to the language.

Their Lordships have examined numerous authorities, and they have found much conflict of judicial opinion on the point referred to. There is plainly no such preponderance of view in either direction as to render it clear that there is any settled course of decision which they are under obligation to follow. Some of the decisions in the earlier cases may have been influenced by the wider form of expression then in force, and these decisions may have had weight with the learned Judges who, in cases turning on the subsequent Code, had regarded the intention of the legislature as remaining unaltered. But their Lordships are unable to assume that the language used in the Codes of 1877 and 1908 is intended to leave open the questions which were raised on the language used in the earlier legislation. They think that r. 1 of Or. XLVII must be read as in itself definitive of the limits within which review is to-day permitted, and that reference to practice under former and different statutes is misleading. So construing it they interpret the words "any other sufficient reason" as meaning a reason sufficient on grounds at least analogous to those specified immediately previously. Such an interpretation excludes from the power of review conferred the course taken by the second and third Division Bench, composed of Wilberforce, J., and Scott Smith, J., and by Wilberforce, J., and Le Rossignol, J., respectively. The result is that the judgments given by these two Division Benches ought to be set aside, and that of the Bench of the Chief Court composed of Scott Smith, J., and Leslie Jones, J., restored, so that the suit will stand dismissed. The Respondent-Plaintiffs must pay the costs here and in the Courts below.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL

No. 49 of 1920

IN

No. 1580 of 1918.

MOOKERJEE, J. ISAN CHANDRA BAKSHI,
PANTON, J. Plaintiff, Appellant, 1921,

v.

Heard, 20, July. SAFATULLA SIKDAR
Judgment, and ors., Defendants, 18, August. Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 159, 161, 167—Title and interest acquired by adverse possession in part of lands of defaulting tenure or holding, if incumbrance which must be annulled under sec. 167.

The word "incumbrance" as used in secs. 159, 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act includes statutory title and interest acquired by a trespasser by adverse possession of a part of the lands of the defaulting tenure or holding and such incumbrance cannot be annulled in any manner other than what is provided in sec. 167.

At the time when the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed the term "incumbrance" had a well recognised meaning in connection with provisions in statutes in pari materia; and since the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation the word "incumbrance" has been interpreted to include a statutory title and interest acquired by a trespasser by adverse possession of a part of the lands of the defaulting tenure or holding.

This was an appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent dated the 10th June 1921 from a decision of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Newbould, dated the 11th May 1920, affirming that of Babu Bipin Chandra Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge, Jessore, dated the 8th May 1918, reversing that of Babu Nagendra Nath Basu, Munsif, Narail, dated the 17th February 1917.

ISAN CHANDRA BAKSHI v. SAFATULLA SIKDAR.

NEWBOULD, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of a certain land after establishment of title. Plaintiff's case was that the land in suit appertained to an occupancy holding held by one Biswambhar at a rental of Rs. 6-14-0. This holding was sold in execution of a decree for rent and was purchased by one Prosonno Chunder Bhattacharja in 1900. It was held by Prosonno and, after his death, by his widow Swarnamoyi until 1913 when the superior landlord of the holding purchased it in execution of a rent decree against Swarnamoyi. This landlord then settled the land of this holding with the Plaintiff. The Defendants seem to have set up different cases at different times, but their final case appears to be that the land in question appertained not to Biswambhar's holding of Rs. 6-14 but to another holding belonging to Biswambhar and Gobinda of Rs. 9-9-4 held by them directly under the Raja of Dighapatia who is the landlord above the tenure-holders under whom the Rs. 6-14 jama was held. The first Court held that the land appertained to the holding of Rs. 6-14 as alleged by the Plaintiff and decreed the suit. The lower Appellate Court, without disputing that finding, held that the Defendant No. 8 and the other Defendants who claimed through him had been in possession of the land for over twelve years and had created an incumbrance within the meaning of sec. 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that the suit was not maintainable so long as that incumbrance was not annulled. The facts are rather hard to follow; but apparently Biswambhar and Gobinda mortgaged their interest in the jama of Rs. 9-4-0 to one Abinash who purchased that interest in execution of a mortgage decree on 21st May 1896. After that purchase Abinash paid rent to the tenure-holders of the landlord who are spoken of as the Sinha Roys and though they received rent they did not recognize him as a tenant. It is not explained why Abinash whose title-deed gave him a right to the holding of Rs. 9-4-0 under the Raja of Dighapatia should have paid rent to the Sinha Roys. Then after that in 1898 Abinash transferred his rights by a deed of sale to Harinath—the Defendant No. 8. It is found that the maliks, i.e., the Sinha Roys were aware of Abinash's purchase, that Abinash and his under-raiyat Harinath were actually in possession of the land through the tenants—the sons of Janmejy for more than twelve years and that Prosonno and his widow were never in possession of the land in suit. It is contended that, as Janmejy was an under-raiyat of Biswambhar of the land of Rs. 6-14 jama, the possession of his sons as under-raiyats of Harinath could not have been adverse. But, since under-raiyati interest is not heritable, the possession by the sons of Janmejy cannot be treated as a continuation of Janmejy's possession. I think the lower Appellate Court was right in holding that this possession by Harinath and those claiming under him from the time of the purchase by Prosonno and for more than twelve years afterwards gave Harinath a title by adverse possession which amounted to an incumbrance within the meaning of sec. 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is contended by the learned Pleader for the Appellant that such an interest claimed by adverse possession is not an incumbrance; but he admits that it has been repeatedly so held by different Benches of this Court. Sitting as a single Judge, even if I accepted his argument, I would be bound to follow those decisions and could not, as a Divisional Bench could, refer the point for decision to a Full Bench. I hold that, on the facts found, the suit was rightly dismissed, and dismiss this appeal with costs.

This is an appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Newbould in an appeal from Appellate decree in a suit for recovery of possession of land on declaration of title. The Plaintiff claimed the disputed land as included in an occupancy holding, held by one Biswambhar Baksi at an annual rent of Rs. 6-4-0 under the Sinha Roys who were tenure-holders under the Raja of Dighapatia. The occupancy holding was sold in 1900 in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, when it was purchased by one Prosonno Chunder Bhattacharja. His representatives made default in the payment of rent, and the occupancy holding was again sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent on the 23rd April 1913, when it was purchased by the landlords themselves. The Plaintiff took settlement from the landlords on the 24th February 1915, but was unable to obtain possession of the disputed area. The result was the institution of this suit on the 10th January 1916. The Defendants resisted the claim on the ground, that the tract in suit never formed part of the occupancy holding held by Biswambhar Baksi under the Sinha Roys and was in reality included in a tenancy held by Biswambhar Baksi and Gobinda Baksi at an annual rent of Rs. 9-4-0 payable directly to the Raja of Dighapatia. The question consequently arose, whether the disputed land was included in the tenancy of Rs. 6-4-0 held by Biswambhar Baksi under the Sinha Roys or in the tenancy of Rs. 9-4-0 held by Biswambhur Baksi and Gobinda Baksi under the Raja of Dighapatia. The trial Court answered this question in favour of Plaintiff and decreed the suit. On appeal the Subordinate Judge did not determine this question, but held that, on the assumption that the land was included in the tenancy of Rs. 6-4-0 held by Biswambhar Baksi under the Sinha Roys, the Defendants and their predecessors had acquired a title by adverse possession which constituted an incumbrance and could have been but had not been annulled by the grantor of the Plaintiff under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act read with sec. 159. The Subordinate Judge found upon the evidence that on the 21st May 1896, one Abinash Chandra Bhattacharyya, in execution of a mortgage decree held by him against Biswambhar Baksi and Gobinda Baksi, purchased their tenancy of Rs. 9-4-0 under the Raja of Dighapatia, that on the 29th November 1898, the purchaser transferred the tenancy to Harinath Mookerjee (one of the Defendants in this suit), and, that since the mortgage sale of 1896, Abinash and thereafter Harinath had been in possession of the disputed land as included in the tenancy of Rs. 9-4-0. The Subordinate Judge further found that neither Prosonno Chunder Bhattacharja nor his successors-in-interest ever possessed the land as included in the tenancy of Rs. 6-4-0 held by Biswambhar Baksi under the Sinha Roys. On these findings, the Subordinate Judge held that the Defendant has acquired a good title by adverse possession from 1900 when Prosonno Chunder Bhattacharja became the purchaser at a rent sale till the 23rd April 1913, when the grantors of the Plaintiff purchased at another rent sale. The question thus emerged for consideration, whether the statutory title by adverse possession acquired by the Defendants against the tenant for whose default the holding of Rs. 6-4-0 was brought to sale, was an incumbrance within the meaning of sec. 159 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which the purchaser at the rent sale was competent and bound to annul in the prescribed method, namely, in the manner directed in sec. 167. The Subordinate Judge answered this question in the affirmative, and his view has been approved by Mr. Justice Newbould as supported by a long line of decisions in this Court.

The term "encumbrance" was not introduced for the first time in the Bengal Tenancy Act, but, as was pointed out in Gocool Bagdi v. Debendra Nath (1), had been repeatedly used by the Indian Legislature in a well-recognised sense in the statutory provisions of our land law and revenue law. In Lakmir Khan v. Collector of Rajshahi (2), sec. 27 of the Revenue Sale Law, 1841, which provided that a purchaser of an estate sold for the recovery of arrears of revenue due thereon would acquire the estate free from all incumbrances imposed thereupon after the time of settlement, was interpreted to signify that the interest acquired by an adverse possession was an encumbrance. The same phraseology was reproduced in sec. 26 of the Revenue Sale Law, 1845, and was similarly interpreted in Ramsanker v. Bijoy Gobind (3). Sec. 37 of the Revenue Sale Law, 1859, reproduces the same phraseology and has been repeatedly construed in the same sense, Golakmani v. Hara Chandra (4), Thakurdas v. Nabin-kisen (5), Narayan v. Taylor (6), Karim Khan v. Broja Nath (7) and Maizuddi v.

Issan Chandra (8). A similar question has arisen upon the construction of sec. 11 of the Patni Regulation, 1819, and it has been frequently held that the interest acquired by a trespasser, who has been in adverse possession of part of the lands of the taluk for the statutory period is an incumbrance that has accrued upon it by the act of the defaulting putnidar; Khantamoni v. Bijoychand (9), Gopendra v. Molcaddam (10), Naffer Chandra v. Rajendra Lal (11), Prodyot Coomax v. Gopi Krishna (12) and Kalikanand v. Bipradas (13). When we turn to sec. 16 of the sales of Under Tenure Act, 1865, we meet with a similar provision which has been construed in a like manner; Askur v. Wasuck (14). The same principle was applied by Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., in the case of sales under sec. 105 of the Bengal Rent Law, 1859; Woomesh Chandra v. Rajnarain (15). A similar view has been adopted with reference to secs. 70 and 71 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886; Mohamed Nasim v. Kasinath (16) and Musuzah Bibi v. Brojendra Kishore (17). This is supported by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Surja Kanta v. Sarat Chandra (18), where it was ruled that the period of limitation for adverse possession against the purchaser at a sale for arrears under the Revenue Sale Law, 1859, only commences to run from the date of the sale. It is thus undeniable that at the time when the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed, the term "incumbrance" had a well-recognised meaning in connection with provisions in statutes in pari materia. It is equally incontestable that since the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation, the word "incumbrance" as used in secs. 159 and 161 has been interpreted to include a statutory title and interest acquired by a trespasser by adverse possession of a part of the lands of the defaulting tenure or holding; Karim Khan v. Brojo Nath (7), Maizuddi v. Issan (8), Gocool v. Debendra (1), Munsale Ali v. Arsadullah (19), Satish Chandra v. Munjamati (20), Bhusan Chandra v. Srikanla (21) and Manmotha Nath v. Anath Bandhu (22). We have been pressed to hold, however, that the view which has obtained in this Court for well-nigh seventy years as to the meaning of the term "incumbrance" is erroneous and is not logically reconcilable with the position maintained in Kalanand v. Sarafat (23), Rahimuddi v. Nalini (24), Baikuntha Nath v. Basanta Kumari (25), After Ali v. Brajendra Kishore (26), Jitendra Kumar v. Mohendra Chandra (27) and Mahim v. Peary Lal (28), namely, that the adverse possessor, when his title has ripened by prescription, becomes in essence a co-owner of the estate, tenure or holding, as the case may be, and his interest cannot logically be deemed an incumbrance on the ownership. It need not be disputed that the matter, were it res integra, would be open to serious argument, as indeed is indicated by the observation of Lord Phillimore in Bipradas v. Kamini Kumar (29), where the Judicial Committee affirmed the decision in Kalikanand v. Bipradas (13). But in the well-known words of Mr. Justice Holmes (Common Law, p. 1), the life of the law is not logic but experience. As pointed out by Blackburn, J., in Mr. Docks v. Cameron (30), where an Act of Parliament has received a judicial construction, putting a certain meaning on its words, and the legislature in a subsequent Act in pari materia uses the same words, there is a presumption that the legislature used those words intending to express the meaning which it knew had been put upon the same words before, and unless there is something to rebut that presumption, the Act should be so construed, even if they were such that they might originally have been construed otherwise. To the same effect are the observations of Sir John Jervis, C. J., in Ruckmabaya v. Lullobhoy (31) and of James, L. J. in Exp. Campbell (32). We are further of opinion that the case before us belongs to that class where the Court should be reluctant to dissent from the view expressed in long established decided cases and thereby not only to unsettle the law but also to endanger the security of property and title—dangers which are not associated with changes brought about by legislative intervention; Young v. Robertson (33), Mediana v. Comet (34) and Kreglinger v. New Pata- gonia Meat Co. (35). We hold accordingly in concurrence with Mr. Justice Newbould that the word incumbrance as used in secs. 159 and 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act includes statutory title and interest acquired by a trespasser by adverse possession of a part of the lands of the defaulting tenure or holding and that such incumbrance cannot be annulled in any manner other than what is provided in sec. 167.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER

No. 377 OF 1920.

WOODROFFE, J.	RATAN LAL BISWAS,

1922,	Appellant,
Heard, 11 and	v.

Judgment,	CHOWDHRY, Decree-
12, January.	holder, Respondent.

Two compromise rent decrees both providing for satisfaction by sale of the tenure—Second decree, if may be executed against tenant personally, when the tenure was sold in execution of the first decree—Sale, subject to directions in the second decree.

Two compromise rent decrees provided that the landlord should satisfy his claim for rent by sale of the tenure. Under the first decree the property was sold and purchased by the decree-holder and the decree-holder next applied for personal execution of the second decree:

Held—That the executing Court cannot go behind the decree and must give effect, if possible, to both the decrees. The second decree having been passed before the sale of the property, the sale was subject to the directions contained in the second decree. The first decree for rent, being a special rent decree passed on a contract between the parties, was not an ordinary rent decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act under which all encumbrances would be avoided. The decree-holder therefore must proceed first of all against the property as the decree itself directed.

This was an appeal preferred on the 16th November 1920 against an order of Amrita Lal Mukerjee, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Nadia, dated the 6th August 1920, affirming an order of Babu Kamini Kumer Dutt, Munsif at Krishnagar, dated the 31st March 1920.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Panchanan Ghose for the Appellant

Babus Amarendra Nath Bose and Radhica Ranjan Guha for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

In this case there were two rent decrees, both of which provided that the landlord should proceed to enforce his claim for rent by sale of the tenure. Under the first decree the property was sold and purchased by the decree-holder. The landlord Respondent now asks for personal execution of the second decree. The answer of the Appellant is that he cannot have such personal execution because there was a contract that the property should be proceeded against first which contract was embodied in the decree. The reply of the Respondent in effect is this, that he is not obliged to follow the directions given in the second decree as regards proceeding against the property first because the property had already been sold under the first decree. The answer to this contention I think is that we cannot go behind the decree and we must give effect if possible to both the decrees. The second decree was passed before the sale of the property. It must we think, be taken that the sale was subject to the directions contained in the second decree. Moreover it was pointed out during the course of the agreement that though the first decree was a decree for rent, it was not an ordinary rent decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act under which all encumbrances would be avoided but it was a special rent decree which was passed on a contract between the parties. We are therefore of opinion that the appeal succeeds and that the Respondent must proceed first of all against the property as the decree itself directs.

The Appellant is entitled to his costs in all the Courts. The hearing fee in this appeal is assessed at three gold mohurs.

Babu Mrityunjay Chatterjee for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This Rule was granted at the instance of the Plaintiff under the provisions of sec. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The Plaintiff's suit was based upon an oral agreement whereby, he says, the Defendant engaged him as Pleader and agreed to pay reasonable and proper fees for the work done. The claim of the Plaintiff extends to a claim for compensation for the termination of his services and it would therefore appear, although it is not actually stated, that the agreement relied on was one for employment of the Plaintiff during the entire course of the work for which he was employed. The Subordinate Judge has rejected the claim on the ground that the suit cannot succeed by virtue of the provisions of sec. 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act. Sec. 28 provides that no agreement entered into by a Pleader respecting the amount and manner of payment for services is to be valid unless it is made in writing signed by the persons to be charged and filed in the District Court or in some other Court within fifteen days from the date on which it is executed. But it is urged before me on behalf of the Plaintiff that the agreement in question does not fall within the provisions of sec. 28 because it is said that as the agreement was only to pay reasonable and proper fees no amount was fixed within the meaning of the word "amount" in sec. 28, and the learned Vakil for the Plaintiff further contends that the agreement was not an agreement at all because the Plaintiff is only suing for fees that he was entitled to. I suppose he means under sec. 27, although it would not appear that these fees or, at any rate, all of them fall within the purview of sec. 27.

(3) 7 C. W. N. 300 (1904).

So far as the second point is concerned, I do not think it is now open to the Plaintiff to say that the agreement was not, in fact, an agreement. He has pleaded it in para. 4 of his plaint as an agreement and the case was argued and decided on that footing.

So far as the other point is concerned, the Plaintiff has relied upon the case of Sib Kishore Ghose v. Manik Chandra Nath (1) as an authority for the argument that where there is no fixed and definite amount the agreement is not within the provisions of sec. 28. But it seems to me that that case is not an authority for the proposition for which the Plaintiff contends because as is pointed out in the judgment, there was, in fact, no agreement alleged and consequently if no agreement was alleged there was nothing to attract the provisions of sec. 28. I think, therefore, that Sib Kishore Ghose v. Manik Chandra Nath (1) does not support the Plaintiff's contention. Then, on behalf of the Defendant, I was referred to the case of Raghunath Saran Singh v. Sri Ram (2). That was a Full Bench case and the suit was based on an oral promise to pay full legal fees and to engage the Plaintiff as Pleader on behalf of the Defendant. The Allahabad Court held that this agreement was barred by the provisions of sec. 28 and Mr. Justice Richardson as he then was, states at p. 769 that in his view sec. 28 was intended to provide that all special agreements between a Pleader and his client should be in writing, signed and filed according to the provisions of the section. It seems to me that if that case was rightly decided it covers the Plaintiff's contention in the present application. There was no stated amount fixed in the agreement alleged and if the Plaintiff's contention is right that would take him out of the provisions of sec. 28; but in spite of that it was held that sec. 28 was a bar. In Sarat Chandra Ray Chowdhury v. Chandi Charan Mitra (3) to which I was referred, as also in the case in Shib Kishore Ghose v. Manik Chandra Nath (1) already referred to, there was no agreement. Consequently clearly the cases there did not fall within the provisions of sec. 28. I was also referred to the case of Ishan Chandra Kar v. Ram Charan Pal (4). It seems to me that that case decides that a suit by a Pleader for fees based upon an alleged oral agreement, as here, cannot succeed because it is not a valid agreement, as it is a special agreement and any special agreement is to be in writing under the provisions of sec. 28. I think that the true rule is that where a suit by a Pleader for fees against his client is based on an agreement he cannot succeed unless the agreement is both in writing, signed by the party to be charged and filed as provided in the section. Consequently no suit upon an oral agreement can succeed by virtue of the provisions of sec. 28.

That being so, I think the Rule must be discharged with costs. I assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Calcutta Rent Act (III, B. C., of 1920), sec. 4, sub-sec. 3, cl. 4—Lease for three years with option in tenant to renew for another such period, if a lease for five years and upwards—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 115—Proper case for revision by High Court.

Shortly before the passing of the Rent Act the Petitioner entered into an agreement with the Opposite Party for a lease of certain premises at a stipulated rent for three years with option in the Petitioner to renew it for a further period of three years. After the passing of the Rent Act, an application was made to the Rent Controller for fixing a standard rent. This was refused on the ground that the lease was one for five years and upwards :

Held—That the fact that there was option for renewal for a further period of three years after the expiration of the first three years did not make the lease one for five years and upwards within the meaning of sec. 4, sub-sec. 3.

That the Rent Controller refused to exercise jurisdiction vested in him by law and the High Court could properly interfere in revision.

This was a Rule granted on the 10th June 1921 against an order of the Rent Controller (B. D. Banerjee, Esq.), dated the 25th April 1921.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose and Mr. J. W. Chippendale for the Petitioner.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chakravarty and Hira Lal Chakravarty for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Rule was granted at the instance of the Petitioner calling upon the Opposite Party and the Rent Controller under the Calcutta Rent Act to show cause why the order of the Rent Controller, dated the 25th April 1921 should not be set aside. The material facts are shortly as follows :—The Petitioner on or about the 2nd January 1920, entered into an agreement with the trustee of the late Baboolal Agarwalla for a lease of premises No. 10, Creek Lane, for a period of three years from the 16th January 1920 with an option in the Petitioner to renew his tenancy for a further period of three years at the expiration of the first three years. Correspondence passed but no agreement was actually signed nor has any lease been actually executed. Under the agreement of the 2nd January the Petitioner entered into possession of the premises. Under this agreement rent was payable at the rate of Rs. 400 a month, the previous rental of the premises having been Rs. 150 a month. The Petitioner paid at the rate of Rs. 400 for a short period, but upon the Rent Act coming into force on the 5th May 1920, he claimed to pay rent only at the rate of Rs. 150 a month plus an additional ten per cent. The trustees refused to accept rent at this rate and accordingly at the instance of the Petitioner an application was made to the Rent Controller to fix a standard rent. On the 25th April 1921 the Rent Controller made the order complained of in which he said that the lease was for a period of six years having regard to the fact that there was an option for renewal.

The only point therefore which arises in the Rule is whether the Rent Controller is right in holding under the circumstances that this was a lease entered into before the commencement of the Act for a period of five years or upwards.

The Opposite Party contends that upon the true construction of the lease and of the provisions of sec. 4, sub-sec. 3, of the Rent Act, the Rent Controller was right in holding that this was a lease for a period of five years and upwards within the meaning of cl. 4, sub-sec. 3. It is further contended on behalf of the Opposite Party that this case does not fall within the provisions of sec. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, inasmuch as even if the Rent Controller was wrong, all that he has done is to wrongly construe the provisions of sec. 4, sub-sec. 3, and that this does not give this Court jurisdiction to interfere under the provisions of sec. 115. So far as the first point is concerned we think that the demise was clearly for a period of three years and the fact that there was option for renewal for a further period of three years after the expiration of the first three years, does not make it a lease for five years and upwards within the meaning of sec. 4, sub-sec. 3. So far as the second point is concerned it seems to us that what the Rent Controller has done is to refuse to exercise the jurisdiction conferred upon him by the Calcutta Rent Act, and accordingly this is a proper case for the interference of the Court under the provisions of sec. 115. We should add that we have read the explanation furnished by the Rent Controller.

In the result the Rule is made absolute with costs, the hearing fee being assessed at three gold mohurs.

RASIK LAL DAS, Accused, Petitioner,
v.
THE EMPEROR,

Calcutta Police Act (IV, B. C., of 1866), sec. 54A

— Possession of goods stolen or fraudulently obtained

The Petitioner was convicted under sec. 54A of the Calcutta Police Act for having in his possession certain second-hand articles of clothing:

Held—That for the purpose of sec. 54A of the Police Act, it is obligatory on the prosecution to show that there is reason to believe that the goods had been stolen or fraudulently obtained and the mere fact that the articles in question were recovered from the house of the accused does not warrant the conclusion that they had been stolen or fraudulently obtained and in this view the conviction was bad.

This was a Rule issued on the 27th March 1922 against an order of the Honorary Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta (Mr. R. H. Rustomjee), dated the 23rd March 1922.

The Petitioner was sent up by the Calcutta Police for trial under sec. 54A of the Calcutta Police Act for having in his possession some second-hand articles of clothing, namely, 23 ties, 3 pairs of gloves, 2 scarfs, 2 braces, 1 pair of stocking and 1 night cap. He was convicted and sentenced to undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment.

The judgment of the Magistrate was as follows:—

“The Police authorities of Muchiparra Thannah charge Rasik Lal Das with having in his possession on 9th March 1922 in his house at McLeod Street a number of hats, ties, braces and such like things suspected to be stolen and for which he could give no satisfactory account as to their possession. Cases of theft having been reported to the Thannah, Elai Buksh and Sheik Bechu were arrested on suspicion but were not sent up as nothing was found in their possession. They said the accused had such things in his house and on a search most of the goods as produced in Court was found in his house. An enquiry was made but nothing was found to free the accused from the guilt. The defence witnesses go to show that about 50 or 60 of them—all dealers in second-hand goods—bought from a sale at No. 2, Lower Circular Road, a lot of such things but none could identify any one thing in Court. One Deweven went so far as to say that a lady sold some of these hats to him. He cannot give her name nor has he given any receipt to her for money paid or made any entry in his khatta book. None of the defence witnesses have in any way helped to make the offence any bit less. The police through Sub-Inspector Karrim have conducted the case ably and deserve credit for the clever manner in which everything has been threshed out. The question is whether the evidence of the D. W. is to be believed. The Court holds it is worth nothing. The accused and all his witnesses are dealers in such goods, live near each other and come from the same district. The Court further holds that the prosecution have got a clear case against the accused who has failed to show how he became possessed of the goods. He is found guilty and is sentenced to three (3) months' rigorous imprisonment, sec. 54A, Act IV of 1866.'

Mr. J. W. Chippendale and Babu Jatin-dra Mohon Mukerjee for the Petitioner.

WALMSLEY, J.—The Petitioner RasiK Lal Das has been convicted under sec. 54A of the Calcutta Police Act and sentenced to undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment. According to the Police Officer, P. W. 1, there were found in the house of the accused 23 ties, 3 pairs of gloves, 2 scarfs, 2 braces, 1 pair of stocking and 1 night cap. There is no evidence as to the condition of these things. The case for the accused is that they are old, worn-out things such as are to be found with bikriwallas and are of no further use. For the purpose of sec. 54A of the Police Act, it is obligatory on the prosecution to show that there is reason to believe that the goods had been stolen or fraudulently obtained. It appears to me in this case that the mere evidence of the Sub-Inspector that second-hand articles of clothing were recovered from the house of the accused would hardly warrant us in saying that there is reason to believe that the articles found in the possession of the accused had been stolen or fraudulently obtained. There must necessarily be a great deal of property of this kind disposed of in Calcutta and I think without further evidence we ought to hold that the first condition necessary for a conviction under sec. 54A of the Police Act has not been established. That being so, I think the Petitioner is entitled to an acquittal. The Rule must, therefore, be made absolute and an order passed directing that the Petitioner be discharged from his bail. The articles may be returned to the Petitioner.

Res judicata—Question as to whether donee under a deed of settlement had absolute or life estate decided in proceeding under sec. 32 of Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894)—Decision, if may be reopened in regular suit—Res judicata, general principle of, not limited by Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec 11—Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), sec 54—"Award," if includes decision on disputed question as to disposition of compensation money—Gift by Hindu to wife whether limited or absolute—Principle of construction.

Under a deed of settlement executed by one R, one half of certain properties was given to his adopted son and the remaining half was given to his two wives who were to take the same half and half. One of these properties having been acquired by Government a question arose in a proceeding under sec. 32 of Act I of 1894 between the adopted son and one of the wives, as to whether the latter was absolutely entitled to her share of the compensation money or whether the same was to be invested, she having no right to alienate her interest in the property under the deed of settlement. The High Court, when the matter came up before it, held that by the deed of settlement the wife was intended to have a widow's estate only in the property devised. Subsequently the wife having bequeathed her properties to Respondent by Will, the representatives of the adopted son instituted a suit against the claimants under the Will alleging that she had a limited estate under the deed of settlement and had no power to dispose of the properties by Will:

Held—That it was not open to the Courts in this suit to review the decision of the High Court, in the proceeding under sec. 32 of Act I of 1894, that the lady had only a limited estate in the property without power of alienation.

It is not competent for the Court, in the case of the same question arising between the parties, to review a previous decision no longer open to appeal given by another Court having jurisdiction to try the second case.

This principle is of general application and is not limited by the specific words of sec. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code; so that the fact that the decision in question was not obtained in a "former suit" did not make any difference.

The importance of a judicial decision is not to be measured by the pecuniary value of the particular item in dispute, and the Defendants in the suit could not be heard to say that in view of the comparatively small value of the property involved in the proceeding under sec. 32 of Act I of 1894 it was not thought worth the while to appeal from the decision of the High Court in that proceeding.

HOOK v. ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF BENGAL (8) and BADAR BEE v. HABIB AMERICAN NOORDIN (7) relied on.

The "award" as constituted by the Land Acquisition Act is nothing but an award which states the area of the land, the compensation to be allowed and the apportionment amongst persons whose interests are not in dispute. A dispute between interested people as to the extent of their interest forms no part of the "award." The determination of such a dispute in the High Court was a decree and appealable as such to the Privy Council.

been expressly conferred, and it is possible by the use of words of sufficient amplitude to convey in the terms of the gift itself the fullest rights of ownership, including the power to alienate, without such express declaration—and the decisions of the Privy Council in SURAJMANI v. RABI NATH OJHA (1) and BHIDAS SHIVDAS v. BAI GULAB (3) do no more than affirm this proposition.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court, Madras, dated the 8th October 1918, which reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore, dated the 29th October 1917.

There were two main questions for determination in the appeal:—

(1) As to whether on the true construction of a deed of settlement, dated the 6th August 1858 one Thulja Boyce, a Hindu widow, took a life estate or an absolute estate so that in the latter case she could convey to the Respondent.

(2) As to whether the principle of res judicata applied as between the parties.

The facts of the case may be shortly stated as follows:—

One Ramajee Bavajee Pandit was the owner of the suit properties amongst others. He died on the 10th August 1858. He had two wives Kamatchi and Thulja, but no issue. On the 6th August 1858, he took a boy (the father of the present Appellant) in adoption and on the same day executed a settlement deed. In this document after reciting the fact of the adoption, and providing for certain bequests and annuities he gave the following directions:—

“Out of the remaining property after deducting the above, my adopted son to whom I have given the name of Bavajee Pandit, shall be entitled to enjoy one half of the property. Out of the remaining half of the property these two persons, namely, (my) senior wife Sowbhagiavathy Kamatchi and junior wife Sowbhagiavathy Thulja shall take half and half.”

On the 19th July 1860, the senior widow Kamatchi as guardian of the adopted son Bavajee Ramajee Pandit, executed a kararnama by which the suit properties were given to Thulja Boyce for her one-fourth share to be enjoyed by her according to the directions mentioned in the settlement deed of 1858.

In 1871, Kamatchi's quarter share under the deed of 1858 was separated from that of the adopted son and was put in her possession. Some of these properties were usufructually mortgaged in 1880 to Thulja Boyce by Kamatchi Boyce to satisfy a decretal claim against her. Thulja Boyce enjoyed the said properties till the death of Kamatchi Boyce in 1889, and delivered possession of the same to Bavajee Ramajee.

In 1894, 1 acre and 74 cents of land in the possession of Thulja Boyce was acquired by Government. In the Land Acquisition proceedings the question as to what estate the widow Thulja Boyce took under the deed of 1858 was raised, and the High Court held, “there being no indication of intention to give a large estate we must assume that the husband intended that a widow's estate only should pass.”

On the 10th June 1911, Thulja Boyce executed a Will in favour of the 1st Respondent.

Again, on the 11th January 1916, Thulja executed another Will in favour of the 1st Respondent, bequeathing all her movable and immovable properties to him.

Thulja died on or about the 2nd April 1916.

The adopted son Bavajee Ramajee Pandit also died leaving two sons, the present Appellant and his brother Jevanna Row (now deceased).

On the 12th July 1916, the surviving Appellant and his brother Jevanna Row instituted the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore against the Respondents for recovery of possession of the suit properties with future mesne profits and costs.

The Subordinate Judge found that Thulja had only a limited estate and no power to dispose of the properties by Will. On the question of res judicata, he held that the extent of Thulja's interest with regard to properties the subject-matter of the Land Acquisition proceedings had already been adjudicated upon in those proceedings.

On appeal the decree of the Subordinate Judge was set aside by the High Court of Madras except in regard to the property comprised in the Land Acquisition proceedings.

From this decree the Appellant appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. (with him Mr. Narasimham) for the Appellants.—There is no doubt that it is possible for a Hindu widow to take an absolute estate.

This proposition is fully discussed in the recent cases before the Board. Mussamat Sasiman Chowdhurain v. S. N. Chowdhury (2) and Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab (3) applying the principles laid down in Radha Prosad Mullick v. Ranimoni Dassi (9).

In the present case there was an ordinary gift by husband to wife which created no heritable estate.

If the gift is construed as "stridhan" the immoveables are inalienable. Hari Lal v. Bai Rewa (10) and Motilal Mithalal v. Advocate-General of Bombay (11).

Mr. Dubé for the Respondents.—The High Court has held that the principle of "res judicata" applies to certain of the properties but I do not admit the correctness of that decision. The doctrine of "res judicata" is inapplicable for several reasons. (1) The proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act are of a summary nature, and the main question in those proceedings relates to the amount of the award, vide the pre-amble. Such proceedings terminate in an award. In case of dispute as to apportionment of the amount awarded, reference is made to the Court which proceeds to investigate it and makes an order under sec. 32 of the Act, but such orders are not necessarily judicial decisions. The money is invested in the purchase of other lands to be held under the like title and conditions of ownership. Reference was made to the various sections of the Act. (2) Proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act are not a suit within the meaning of sec. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. (Vide Messrs. Woodroffe and Ameer Ali's Civil Procedure Code, p. 103). (3) There is no appeal to His Majesty in Council from a decision of the High Court under sec. 54 of the Land Acquisition Act. There is only one appeal allowed by the Act and that is to the High Court. Rangoon Botatoung Coy., Ltd. v. The Collector, Rangoon (4) and The Special Officer, Salsette Building Sites v. Dasabhai Bezanji Motiwala (23).

(23) 17 C. W. N. 421 (P. C.) (1913).

Since these pronouncements of the Board there has not been a single appeal in a proceeding under the Land Acquisition Act.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—The case of Rangoon Botatoung Coy., Ltd. v. The Collector, Rangoon (4) decided that there was no appeal from an award, but there may be an appeal to the Board from a decree made under such proceedings.]

Mr. Dubé.—All orders or decisions made in proceedings under that Act culminate in an award or form part of an award. All the High Courts in India have taken that view. A decision made under sec. 32 of that Act is part of an award.

Reference was made to the following:—

Mahadevi v. Neelamani (17), Sheo Rattan Rai v. Mohri (24), Dirgaj Deo v. Kali Charan Singh (25), Mulambath Kunhammad v. Acharath Parakat Kathiri Kutti (26), Shiva Rao v. Nagappa (27) and Srimaty Trinayani Dassi v. Krishna Lal (5).

It is inconceivable that in a case where no appeal lies to the King in Council the decision should be held to operate as res judicata. The value of the property in dispute in the Land Acquisition case was very small, and a suit with reference to it could have been brought in the lowest Civil Court, namely, that of a Munsif. Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (28).

General of Bengal (8) are distinguishable. They refer to decisions in the same suit, the former in execution proceedings and the latter in a subsequent stage of the same action.

[SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS refers to Ram Chunder Singh v. Madho Kumari (22).]

Mr. Dubé.—In that case the decision which was held to operate as res judicata was not pronounced in summary proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, but in a civil suit tried in the regular way.

English decisions, such as Badar Bee v. Habib Merican Noordin (7) and Peareth v. Marriott (29) are inapplicable to the Indian procedure.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—On the 6th August 1858, Ramajee Bavajee Pandit, who died on the 10th August 1858, executed a deed of settlement of all his moveable and immoveable properties. It is prefaced by a statement that he had adopted Panchapikes, the second son of Mahasubd Rajaram, and after various gifts and dispositions which are not material, it continued in these terms:—

In 1894 one acre and 74 cent. of the land so given, and then in the possession of Thulja Boyee, was acquired by the Government. The usual proceedings for determining the amount of compensation appear to have taken place, and no dispute arose as to the award, but a question did arise as between Ramajee Bavajee Pandit, the adopted son, and the widow as to the character and extent of the estate that she took under the Will. If she took absolutely, the money could be divided forthwith; but if she took a limited interest, her share would have to be invested. It was consequently necessary that this dispute should be determined in order that the compensation monies should be properly dealt with. Sec. 31, sub-sec. 2. of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, expressly contemplates this position, for after referring in sub-sec. 1 to the payment of the compensation by the Collector to the persons interested, sub-sec. 2 provides that “if there be no person competent to alienate the land, or if there be any dispute as to the title to receive the compensation or as to the apportionment of it, the Collector shall deposit the amount of the compensation in the Court to which a reference under sec. 18 would be submitted.” Sec. 18 does not define the Court; this is done by sec. 3, sub-sec. D, which provides that a Court means a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction, unless a special judicial officer within specified limits has been appointed to perform the functions of the Court under the Act. Sec. 32 further provides that when money has been deposited in Court under sub-sec. 2 of sec. 31, and it appears that the land whereof the same was awarded belonged to any person who had no power to alienate, the Court shall order the money to be invested as therein mentioned. Now the dispute between Bavajee and the widow was plain upon the face of the document. It depended upon whether the deed had conferred an absolute heritable and alienable estate upon the widow, or whether she took either a limited Hindu widow's estate or a heritable estate which she was incapable of alienating. What the actual proceedings were that ensued between them is not plain, but they must have come before the District Court of Tanjore, for the grounds of appeal from the order of that Court are before their Lordships, and from these it appears that the District Judge had held that the widow had an absolute estate. From this decision Bavajee brought the appeal to the High Court of Judicature at Madras. Judgment was delivered by the High Court on the 13th July 1897, by Sir Arthur Collins, C. J., and Mr. Justice Shephard. Their judgment is short, and, as it throws considerable light upon the whole proceedings, it is desirable that it should be reproduced in full. It is as follows :—

“The first question is what estate the widow Thulja Boyee took under the gift of 1858. We cannot agree with the District Judge that the law is ‘unsettled on the question of such gifts. There being no indication of intention to give a large estate, we must assume that the husband intended that a widow's estate only should pass. This being so it is quite clear that secs. 31 and 32 of the Act apply. The order must be set aside as the parties are not agreed as to the mode in which the money should be invested.

On the 10th June 1911, and again on the 11th January 1916, Thulja Boyee executed Wills and bequeathed all her moveable and immoveable properties to the first Respondent; she died on the 2nd April 1916. The adopted son, Bavajee Ramajee Pandit, also died at a date subsequent to the decision of the High Court, but the exact time is not stated, nor is it material, and the present Appellant and his brother Jeevanna Rao, now deceased, were his two sons. On the 12th July 1916, they instituted the suit out of which these proceedings have arisen against the claimants under Thulja's Will, alleging that she had only a limited estate under the deed of settlement, and that she had no power to dispose of the properties by Will. The learned Subordinate Judge decided in their favour, but this decision was reversed by the High Court, from whose decree the present appeal has been brought. Both the judgments of the Subordinate Judge and the High Court depended upon the true effect of the deed of settlement, but for reasons which their Lordships will shortly explain, they do not think that this question was open to either of the Courts.

Their Lordships do not, therefore, propose to embark upon the consideration of what the effect of the deed of gift in favour of Thulja Boyee might be correctly determined to be, but as some misapprehension appears to exist as to the effect of certain decisions of the Board, and notably one in Mussammat Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (1), their Lordships think it desirable to remove this doubt, lest error should creep into the administration of the law in India with regard to the rights of a Hindu widow. In the case referred to, Mussammat Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (1), when originally heard before the High Court it had been stated that under the Hindu law in the case of a gift of immoveable property to a Hindu widow, she had no power to alienate unless such power was expressly conferred. The decision of this Board did no more than establish that that proposition was not accurate, and that it was possible by the use of words of sufficient amplitude to convey in the terms of the gift itself the fullest rights of ownership, including, of course, the power to alienate, which the High Court had thought required to be added by express declaration. In that case it is true that there is some comparison drawn between the gift to a widow and a gift to a person not under disability, but that was not the foundation of the decision, which depended entirely upon the wide meaning attributed to the words in which the gift to the widow was clothed. More recent decisions of this Board [in Musammatt Sasiman Choudhurain v. Shib Narayan Chowdhury (2) and Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab (at present unreported) (3)] do nothing but repeat this same proposition in other words. The importance of preventing confusion due to the contrasting of different phrases used in distinct cases to express the same idea has led their Lordships to make this explanation, but the points argued as to the effect of the gift in the present case are not now open to consideration, for in their Lordship's opinion the decision given on the 13th July 1897, by the High Court at Madras is a clear and complete determination as between the parties to that suit and those claiming under them which the present litigants cannot dispute.

It is urged on behalf of the Respondents that the judgment cannot be so regarded because it arose out of proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, and for the purpose of their arguments they rely upon the case of Rangoon Botatoung Company, Limited v. The Collector, Rangoon (4). There appears to be some misapprehension in the Courts in India as to the effect of this authority which it is desirable should be removed. Under the Land Acquisition Act there are two perfectly separate and distinct forms of procedure contemplated. The first is that necessary for fixing the amount of the compensation and this is described as being an award. By sec. 54 an appeal from that award or of any part of the award is given to the High Court. The case in Rangoon Botatoung Company, Limited v. The Collector, Rangoon (4) decided that in those circumstances the appeal so given was the only one open to the parties, and that even if appealed against, the award still retained its characteristics and was incapable of further appeal. The argument which succeeded in that case emphasizes the distinction between an award and a decree, and the judgment mentions this in terms by stating that the Appellants, although admitted to the High Court, could not have the right to carry an award made under an arbitration as to the value of land taken for public purposes up to this Board as if it were a decree, of the High Court made in course of its original jurisdiction. The manifest inconvenience that would attend any such proceeding is also pointed out, but neither this judgment nor any other judgment of this Board affects the question of an appeal on the totally different proceedings that arise when there is a dispute as between the persons claiming compensation involving, as it does in this case, a difficult question of title. When once the award as to the amount has become final, all questions as to fixing of compensation are then at an end; the duty of the Collector in case of dispute as to the relative rights of the persons together entitled to the money is to place the money under the control of the Court, and the parties then can proceed to litigate in the ordinary way to determine what their right and title to the property may be. That is exactly what occurred in the present case. How the proceedings were commenced is a matter that is not material provided that they were instituted in the manner that gave the Court jurisdiction, for they ended in a decree made by the High Court and appealable to this Board. It is true that in the case of Sreemati Trinayani Dassi v. Krishna Lal De (5), following an earlier case, Balaram Bharamatar Ray v. Sham Sunder Narendra (6), it was decided that an order under sec. 32 may appropriately be deemed as an integral part of the award made by the Court, but their Lordships regard this as a misapprehension as to the meaning of the award. The award as constituted by statute is nothing but an award which states the area of the land, the compensation to be allowed and the apportionment among the persons interested in the land of whose claims the Collector has information, meaning thereby people whose interests are not in dispute, but from the moment when the sum has been deposited in Court under sec. 31 (2) the functions of the award have ceased; and all that is left is a dispute between interested people as to the extent of their interest. Such dispute forms no part of the award, and it would indeed be strange if a controversy between two people as to the nature of their respective interests in a piece of land should enjoy certain rights of appeal which would be wholly taken away when the piece of land was represented by a sum of money paid into Court. There has in the present case been a clear decision upon the very point now in dispute which cannot be re-opened. The High Court appear only to have regarded the matter as concluded to the extent of the compensation money, but that is not the true view of what occurred, for as pointed out in Bardar Bec v. Habib Merican Noordin (7), it is not competent for the Court, in the case of the same question arising between the same parties, to review a previous decision, no longer open to appeal, given by another Court having jurisdiction to try the second case. If the decision was wrong, it ought to have been appealed from in due time. Nor in such circumstances can the interested parties be heard to say that the value of the subject-matter on which the former decision was pronounced was comparatively so trifling that it was not worth their while to appeal from it. If such a plea were admissible, there would be no finality in litigation. The importance of a judicial decision is not to be measured by the pecuniary value of the particular item in dispute. It has been suggested that the decision was not in a former suit, but whether this were so or not makes no difference, for it has been recently pointed out by this Board in Hook v. Administrator-General of Bengal (8), that the principle which prevents the same case being twice litigated is of general application, and is not limited by the specific words of the Code in this respect. Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the decree appealed from be reversed, and the decree of the Subordinate Judge restored with costs here and in the Courts below.

MOHUNT BHUG-

WAN RAMANUJ

DAS, Appellant,

v.

RAMKRISHNA

BOSE and anr.,

Respondents.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 139—Lease of endowed land for a term by Mohunt—No rent paid for over 12 years after the expiry of lease—Successor of Mohunt, if may sue to recover possession.

The mohunt of a math granted a lease of land belonging to the math for a term which expired in 1880. It was found that no rent was ever paid since the expiration of the lease, more than 12 years after which the succeeding mohunt sued to recover the land from the successors of the lessee:

Held—That the High Court was right in holding that the suit was barred under Art. 139 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act of 1877.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree of the Calcutta High Court (Fletcher and Richardson, J.J.), dated the 15th July 1915, affirming on review a previous judgment of the said Court passed on 28th May 1915, whereby the said Court reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack, dated the 28th March 1902, and dismissed the suit of the Plaintiff.

The Plaintiff, the mohunt of a math brought this suit in 1911 to recover possession of over 42 acres of land in the town of Puri upon declaration of Plaintiff's title, on the allegation that the disputed land was lakheraj bahali amrita morahi land of Dakhin Parah, a math of which the Plaintiff was the mohunt, and that the Defendants had got no title to it. The Defendants inter alia pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation. It appears that one Sriram Dutta held the disputed land as a tenant under the math, that one Radha Mohan Bose purchased the tenancy right in the benami of Bishnupriya Dasi on 23rd September 1862, and that thereafter Bishnupriya executed a kabuliyat also as benamdar of Radha Mohan for 18 years in favour of the then Mohunt Chaturbhuj Das from 1270 to 1288 B. S.; and that the Defendants were persons who claimed through the said Radha Mohan Bose. The Plaintiff alleged that after the expiry of the lease the Defendants were in possession under a verbal lease or arrangement entered into between Hurry Bullubh Bose, uncle of the Defendants, and a predecessor of the Plaintiff. The trial Court disbelieved the said story of the verbal arrangement or lease alleged by the Plaintiff and found that since the termination of the lease in favour of Bishnupriya in 1880, Bishnupriya or the Defendants or Radha Mohan or his sons never paid any rent to the math. The trial Court accordingly held that Plaintiff's, the present mohunt's, claim to recover possession of the land was barred by Art. 139 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act of 1877. The trial Court was however of opinion that as by the kabuliyat executed by Bishnupriya, the title of the math to the land was admitted and proved, the Plaintiff was entitled to a decree declaring the title of the math to the land in suit.

An appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge to the High Court was heard in the first instance ex parte and the following judgment was delivered on 28th May 1915:—

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Cuttack, dated the 28th March 1912. The Defendants are the Appellants before us. The Plaintiff brought this suit to recover possession of certain lands from the Defendants. One of the issues raised in the case was whether the suit was barred by limitation. The learned Judge found that the suit was barred by limitation; but he considered that as the title was originally in the Plaintiff, he ought to give the Plaintiff relief by way of making a declaration of title in his favour. Against that decision, the present Defendants have appealed to this Court. From the facts found by the learned Judge of the Court below, it is clear that the case is barred by limitation. The learned Judge also found so. The Defendants' ancestor had a lease of this property, which expired more than 12 years ago. At any rate, the learned Judge has found that no fresh agreement was entered into between the parties nor was there any evidence from which it could be inferred that there was a new tenancy. The question, therefore, arises, "Does Art. 139 of the Second Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act apply to a case like this?" The decisions of this Court are that Art. 139 does apply. A tenancy by sufferance by a tenant holding over whose lease has expired, does not apply in this country. That has been held in the case of Madan Mohan Gossain v. Kumar Rameshwar Malia (1). A similar view has been adopted by the Bombay High Court in the case of Chandri v. Daji Bhau (2). The result, therefore, is that the present suit is, as the learned Subordinate Judge says, clearly barred by limitation. The learned Judge, however, has considered that in a case of this nature, when the suit is barred, the title still remains vested in the Plaintiff. That obviously is not so; under sec. 28 of the Indian Limitation Act, it is expressly provided that at the expiration of the period prescribed by the Act for limitation of suits, not only is the remedy barred but the right is gone. That is quite clear. That being so, the statute has operated to revoke the estate that was originally vested in the Plaintiff, and to confer a statutory estate upon the Defendants. In that view, the judgment appealed from cannot be supported. The present appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the Plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs both in this Court as well as in the lower Court. The hearing-fee will be according to the scale of the Court on the value of the suit.

Nobody appearing in support of the cross-appeal it is dismissed.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

Subsequently an application for review of the judgment having been granted, the appeal was re-heard in the presence of both parties and the following judgment was delivered on 15th July 1915 :—

FLETCHER, J.—The point that we dealt with on the last occasion was a point of law arising on the findings of fact made by the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment. On that occasion, Sir Rash Behari Ghose on behalf of the Appellants accepted the findings of fact made by the learned Subordinate Judge, and argued that the learned Judge had arrived at a wrong conclusion on a point of law. We accepted the argument put forward by Sir Rash Behari, and decreed the appeal. On the appeal coming on before us for re-hearing, both sides agree that, on the findings of fact made by the learned Judge of the Court below, his judgment cannot stand. But the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff, Respondent, has asked us to dissent from the findings of fact made by the learned Subordinate Judge, on which his judgment is based. The Defendants who are the Appellants before us, claim through their grand-father who had got a lease of the property for 18 years in the benami of Bishnupriya. That lease expired in 1880. The story put forward by the Plaintiff is that there was a verbal lease or arrangement between one Hari Ballav Bose and the former Mohunt Hayagriha in the year 1287. The evidence shows that the late Mohunt Hayagriha was gathered to his fathers before the date of the lease. An attempt was made by some of the Plaintiff's witnesses to place this verbal arrangement at an earlier date before the death of Hayagriha. That was the case which the Plaintiff invited the learned Judge to express his opinion on, and when that case failed as false the learned Judge clearly and rightly refused to enter into a consideration of the case that this man Hari Ballav had entered into some arrangement other than that set up, resulting in his possession of the property as a licensee. In that, I think, the learned Subordinate Judge was quite right. The documentary evidence read to us leaves no doubt in my mind that Hari Ballav was connected with the property solely as a relative or guardian of the two present Defendants. The documentary evidence seems to me to be conclusive on that. This story about the verbal lease to Hari Ballav or his entering into possession of the property as a licensee in his own right, I am satisfied, is wholly untrue. On the evidence, I am clearly of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge came to a correct conclusion. That being so, the learned Judge was right when he held that the suit was barred by limitation. We pointed out in our former judgment that on that finding the learned Judge was not entitled to give to the Plaintiff the relief that he has given. For the second time, I must express my dissent from the result arrived at by the learned Judge of the Court below. The appeal must, therefore, be decreed and the Plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs in both Courts.

The Plaintiffs thereupon preferred the present appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dubé for the Appellant.

Sir William Garth for the Respondent.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by LORD SHAW.—In the opinion of their Lordships, no reason has been shown for disturbing the judgment of the High Court. The question of fact is concluded by the concurrent findings of the Courts below.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal stand dismissed with costs.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DEOREE

No. 2561 of 1919.

CHATTERJEA, J. PANTON, J. 1922, 13, January.	}	RAKHAL CHANDRA GHOSE and ors., Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. DURGADAS SAMANTA and ors., Defendants, Respondents.
-----------------------------------------------------------------	---	----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 142, applicability of, in a suit for recovery of possession of land, upon allegation of dispossession—The onus of proving possession within twelve years of suit, on Plaintiff—Onus of proving adverse possession for 12 years, if lies on Defendant when Plaintiff's title is proved—Cases where the presumption about possession following title arises—Diluviated, waste or jungle land, law as to, if different.

Plaintiff sued for recovery of possession of a certain land on declaration of his title thereto. The Plaintiff and the Defendant were putnidars under two separate Touzis, both the Touzis being situate in the same village. The Plaintiff claimed the land as appertaining to his Touzi while the Defendant claimed it as part of his Touzi. The lower Appellate Court found title with the Plaintiff but that he had failed to prove possession within 12 years of suit and accordingly held that the suit was barred by limitation:

Held—That the case was governed by Art. 142 of the Limitation Act.

Where the Plaintiff while in possession has been dispossessed and is out of possession at the date of the suit, the onus is upon him to prove that he was in possession and was dispossessed within 12 years of the suit.

MOHARAJA KOOWAR NITRASUR SINGH v. NUND LAL SINGH (1), RAJAH SAHEB PERILAD SEIN v. MOHARAJA RAJENDRA KISHORE (2), BEER CHUNDER JOOBRAJ v. THE DEPUTY COLLECTOR OF BHOOLOAH (3) and other cases discussed and followed.

KARAN SINGH v. PAKAR ALI KHAN (7), RADHA GOBINDA ROY v. INGLIS (8) and other cases distinguished.

In cases under Art. 142 of the Limitation Act, although the Plaintiff's title is proved, the onus is not upon the Defendant to show that the Plaintiff lost his title by adverse possession on the part of the Defendant.

Possession is not necessarily the same thing as actual user. The nature of the possession to be proved by the Plaintiff, and the evidence of its continuance must depend upon the character and condition of the land in dispute. Where the land is incapable of actual enjoyment, as in the case of diluvion by rivers, if the Plaintiff shows his possession down to the time of diluvion, his possession is presumed to continue so long as the lands continue to be submerged.

In cases where the land is not incapable of enjoyment, but may produce some profit though trifling in amount and only of occasional occurrence, as is so often the case with jungle land, all that can be required is that the Plaintiff should show such acts of ownership as are natural under the existing condition of the land and in such cases when he has done this his possession is presumed to continue so long as the state of the land remains unchanged unless he is shown to have been dispossessed.

In waste as well as jungle lands possession may be exercised by grazing cattle, putting up boundary marks or fences and the like.

The cases of diluviated lands or jungle or waste lands are thus no exception to the general rule that a Plaintiff who is dispossessed and brings a suit for recovery of possession must show that he was in possession within 12 years of the suit.

MONOMOHAN ROY v. MATHURA MOHAN ROY (16), RAJ KUMAR ROY v. GOBIND CHANDRA ROY (17), MAHOMAD ALI v. KHAJA ABDUL (11) and other cases referred to and discussed.

In the case of jungle or waste lands if the Plaintiff proves his title, there is a presumption of possession in his favour, where having regard to the nature of the land, possession cannot be expected to be proved by acts of actual user and enjoyment. If, however, the Plaintiff asserts that he exercised acts of ownership and adduces evidence in support thereof, which is disbelieved by the Court, he cannot turn round and rely upon any presumption, because the case set up by him negatives the existence of circumstances which would give rise to the presumption, and is inconsistent with it.

RAKHAL CHANDRA GHOSH v. DURGADAS SAMANTA.

The presumption that possession follows title can be raised where the evidence is equally strong on both sides, and cannot be called in aid to give weight to evidence unworthy of credit.

RUNJEET RAM PANDEY v. GOBORDHAN RAM PANDEY (20), DHARAM SINGH v. HAR PROSAD (21) and several other cases discussed and followed.

This was an appeal against the decree of P. C. De, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Birbhum, dated the 4th of September 1919, affirming the decree of Babu Hiralal Mukherjee, Munsif, 1st Court at Bolpur, dated the 30th of January 1919.

The facts will appear from the judgment.

Babus Jogesh Chandra Roy and Sarat Chandra Mukherjee for the Appellants.

Babus Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury and Hemendra Nath Sen for the Respondents.

This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of the land in dispute on declaration of the Plaintiffs' title thereto. The Plaintiffs and the Defendants are putnidars under the owners of 'Touzis 92 and 14 respectively, both the 'Touzis being situate in the same village. The Plaintiffs claimed the land as appertaining to Touzi No. 92 while the Defendants claimed it as part of Touzi No. 14.

The Court of first instance held that the Plaintiff had failed to prove both title and possession and dismissed the suit. The learned District Judge on appeal found that Plaintiff's title was proved, but that he failed to prove possession within 12 years and accordingly dismissed the suit. The Plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

It is contended on behalf of the Appellant first that the title having been found to be with the Plaintiffs the onus was upon the Defendant to prove that the claim was barred by limitation by reason of adverse possession on his part. Secondly that in any case having regard to the nature of the land the onus should have been placed on the Defendant. Thirdly that the evidence on both sides having been found to be unsatisfactory, there was a presumption that possession follows title.

With regard to the first contention it is to be observed that Plaintiffs alleged that they were in possession of the land which was khas patit, and that the Defendant excavated a tank on the land in spite of the objections of the Plaintiff, 4 or 5 years before the suit, claiming the same as part of his patni mahal, and they were accordingly dispossessed from the land. The case therefore clearly was one under Art. 142 of the Limitation Act. It is well-settled that where the Plaintiff while in possession has been dispossessed and is out of possession at the date of suit . . . the onus is upon him to prove that he was in possession and was dispossessed within 12 years of the suit.

It is contended, however on behalf of the Appellants that some of the authorities show that where Plaintiffs' title is proved, the onus is upon the Defendant to show that the Plaintiff lost that title by adverse possession for 12 years on the part of the Defendant. It is necessary therefore to examine the authorities on the point.

One of the earliest cases is that of Moharaja Koorwar Nitrasur Singh v. Nund Lal Singh (1). In that case, it appears that decrees were made in the year 1816 in suits respecting disputed boundaries of certain mouzahs in two Zemindaries, and the boundary line was determined. In 1845 a suit was brought by the representatives of one of the parties in the above suits to recover land alleged to be part of one of these mouzas, which land, it was admitted by the Plaintiff that the Defendants had been in possession of since the year 1834. It was pleaded in defence first that the land claimed was within the boundary declared by the decrees of 1816 to belong to the Defendants; and secondly that the Plaintiff or those under whom he claimed had been out of possession for upwards of twelve years and that the cause of action was consequently barred by Reg. III of 1793, sec. 16. Lord Justice Turner in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee observed that the issue of possession is the first to be considered in this case and that it is wholly independent of the boundary question. The Appellant is seeking to disturb the possession, "admitted to have existed for about eleven years, of Defendants, who insist on a possession of much longer duration as a statutory bar to the suit. It clearly lies on him to remove that bar by satisfactory proof that the cause of action accrued to him (for that is the way in which the regulation puts it) on a dispossession within twelve years next before the commencement of the suit; and, therefore, that he, or some person through whom he claims, was in possession during that period. No proof of anterior title such as would be involved in the decision of the boundary question in his favour, can relieve him from the burden, or shift it upon his adversaries by compelling them to prove the time and manner of dispossession. The lands in question may have been part of Mouzah Gopaulpore, and as such may have been enjoyed by his ancestor and yet he may have lost, by lapse of time, his right to recover them. Their Lordships, therefore, propose to consider in the first place, what evidence there is that the Appellant, or any person through whom he claims, was in possession of the lands in question at any time within twelve years next before the commencement of the suit."

In 1869 in the case of Rajah Saheb Perhlad Sein v. Moharaja Rajendra Kishore (2), the Judicial Committee affirmed the same principle. Their Lordships observed: "The Appellant comes into Court admitting upon the face of the plaint that he is out of possession and has been so for more than ten years; and the date which he assigns to his dispossession is the 20th of March 1881. Upon the issue as settled by the Court it lay upon him to establish that he was in possession up to that date; or, failing in that, that the date at which he or some former proprietors of Ramnuggur was last in possession is consistent with a right to institute this suit. Act VIII of 1859, sec. 32 shows that the Plaintiff is bound to satisfy the Court, that his right of action is not barred by lapse of time."

In 1870 again in the case of Beer Chunder Joobraj v. The Deputy Collector of Bhooloah (3) where the Plaintiff brought a suit to recover immoveable property which was in the possession of the Defendant since 1845 and at the time of the institution of the suit it was held by their Lordships that "it was essential for the Appellant (the Plaintiff in that case) to have proved two things—first, possession within twelve years before his suit, and secondly, title to possession . . . the onus of proof rests with the Appellant."

The question again came up before the Judicial Committee in 1888 in the case of Mohima Chander Mozumdar v. Mohesh Chander Neogi (4). There the Plaintiffs had shown that they formerly were proprietors of the lands to which they alleged title and from which they claimed to oust the Defendants, but they had been dispossessed or their possession had been discontinued some years before the suit was brought by them, and the lands were occupied by the Defendants who denied their title. The Plaintiffs were found to be the rightful owners, but their Lordships observed that the question for decision was not "whether or not the title of the Defendants was created just after the disturbance or otherwise but when were the Plaintiffs dispossessed or when did they discontinue possession" "This in reality is what in England would be called an action for ejectment, and in all actions for ejectment where the Defendants are admittedly in possession, and a fortiori where, as in this particular case, they had been in possession for a great number of years, and under a claim of title, it lies upon the Plaintiff to prove his own title. The Plaintiff must recover by the strength of his own title, and it is the opinion of their Lordships, that in this case, the onus is thrown upon the Plaintiffs to prove their possession prior to the time when they were admittedly dispossessed, and at some time within 12 years before the commencement of the suit, namely, for the two or three years prior to the year 1875 or 1874, and that it does not lie upon the Defendants to show that in fact the Plaintiffs were so dispossessed."

In the next year (1889), in the case of Mahammad Amanullah Khan v. Badan Singh (5), the Judicial Committee again held that if a claim comes within the terms of Art. 142, adverse possession is not required to be proved in order to maintain a defence.

Lastly in 1906 under Act XV of 1877 in the case of Rani Hemanta Kumaree v. Moharaja Jogadindra Nath Roy (6) the Judicial Committee affirmed the same principle. Their Lordships observed:—"The difference between the admitted possession and the period of limitation being so narrow (one year) the question of onus is important: and their Lordships adhere to the principle stated in the Privy Council case cited by the learned Judge in the High Court [Mohima Chander Mozundar v. Mohesh Chander Neogi (4)], and hold that it is for the Appellant as Plaintiff in a suit for ejectment to prove possession prior to the dispossession which he alleges."

In all these cases it was clearly held that where the Plaintiff has been dispossessed and the suit is one for recovery of possession the onus is upon the Plaintiff to prove that he was in possession within 12 years of the suit.

It is contended however that a different principle has been laid down in some other cases, viz., Karan Singh v. Pakar Ali Khan (7), Radha Gobinda Roy v. Inglis (8), Secretary of State for India v. Chelikani Rama Rao (9) and Kumar Basant Roy v. Secretary of State for India (10).

In Karan Singh v. Pakar Ali Khan (7) their Lordships in dealing with the contention that the Plaintiff must prove that he was in possession within 12 years held that it was not correct under the Limitation Act IX of 1871. Their Lordships observed:—"It would have been correct under the old law, under which the suit must have been brought within 12 years from the time of the cause of action but under the present law it may be brought within 12 years from the time when the possession of the Defendant or of some person through whom he claims became adverse to the Plaintiff."

It was a case under Art. 145 of Act IX of 1871 (see p. 1 of the report) corresponding to Art. 144 of Act XV of 1877 and Act IX of 1908, and there can be no doubt that the suit was dealt with by the Judicial Committee as coming under Art. 145 of Act IX of 1871 because that article deals with cases where the limitation runs from the date when possession of the Defendant became adverse to the Plaintiff. Under Act XIV of 1859, the period of limitation for suits for the recovery of inmoveable property or of any interest in immoveable property to which no other provisions of the Act applied (there were no other provisions in the Act similar to those of Art. 143 or 145 of Act IX of 1871), is 12 years from the time when the cause of action arose; so that all suits whether they came under Art. 143 or 145 of Act IX of 1871 had to be brought under sec. 15 of Act XIV of 1859 within 12 years of the time when the cause of action arose. Under Act IX of 1871 for the first time a distinction was drawn between (1) suits for possession when the Plaintiff while in possession has been dispossessed or has discontinued the possession and (2) suits for possession of immoveable property or any interest therein not otherwise provided for. In the first class of cases, the starting point was the date of the possession or discontinuance and came under Art. 143 (Art. 142 of Act XV of 1877 and Act IX of 1908); in the second class of cases the starting point was the date when the possession of the Defendant became adverse to the Plaintiff (Art. 145 of Act IX of 1871 and Art. 144 of Act XV of 1877 and Act IX of 1908). Karan Singh's case

(7) fell under Art. 145 of Act IX of 1871, and the Judicial Committee was merely referring to the change in the law stated above. Their Lordships did not or could not have laid down that the law of limitation had been in any way changed so far as suits coming under Art. 143 of Act IX of 1871 (Art. 142 of the present Act) were concerned, as the reference "12 years from the time when the possession of the Defendant came adverse to the Plaintiff" unmistakably shows that their Lordships are dealing with cases under Art. 144 (Art. 145 of Act IX of 1871). It is unnecessary to further discuss this matter which is clear enough, but we may refer to the Full Bench decision in Mahomad Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Guny (11) which was a case under Act IX of 1871, and where it was settled: "There is no doubt as to the general rule that under the former Limitation Act, the cause of action, and under the present law, the event from which limitation is declared to run, must have occurred within the prescribed period, and that it lies on the Plaintiff to show this. Accordingly, where the suit is for possession, and the cause of action is dispossession, it has more than once been held by the Privy Council that the Plaintiff is bound to prove possession and dispossession within 12 years."

The case of Radha Gobinda Ray v. Ingltis (8) was also considered by the Full Bench in Mahomed Ali Khan's case (11). Wilson, J., observed "We do not understand that case as establishing the broad proposition contained in the head-note, which would be in conflict with the earlier decisions of the same tribunal."

In that case, their Lordships having disposed of the other questions which were raised say: "The question remains whether the disputed land had or had not been occupied by the Defendant for 12 years before the suit was instituted, so as to give him a title against the Plaintiff by the operation of Statute of Limitation. On this question undoubtedly, the onus is on the Defendant. The Plaintiff has proved his title, the Defendant must prove that the Plaintiff has lost it by reason of his, the Defendant's, adverse possession." But the land in dispute in that case had formed part of the bed of a beel or lake; the title to the beel and its bed was found to be in the Plaintiff, and he had been in possession so long as the land was covered with water. The beel gradually dried up, and the Defendant occupied the land so formed. There was a controversy as to when the land dried up and the Defendant occupied the land. It was found by the High Court that the land had been formed quite recently within six or seven years or at all events within less than 12 years before the suit and their Lordships held that "if the High Court are right in that finding, of course the statute cannot apply." The constructive possession of the rightful owner continued till within 12 years of the suit and the Defendant relied upon adverse possession for more than 12 years. The observations with regard to the onus of proof quoted above must be taken with the facts of the case.

Much reliance is placed upon the case of The Secretary of State for India v. Chelikani Rama Rao (9). The disputed lands in that case formed part of islands which had formed in the bed of the sea within the territorial limits, and which therefore belonged to the Crown, and the lands were constituted a reserved forest under the Madras Forest Act (Madras Act V of 1882). The Respondents claimed proprietary rights in the said lands, which were disallowed by the District Judge in a proceeding under the Act, holding that the title being originally in the Crown, the onus was upon the claimants to prove adverse possession for sixty years, and that they had failed to do so. The High Court was of opinion that it rested upon the Crown to show that the possession became adverse to the Crown within sixty years prior to the notification under which the land was constituted a reserved forest. The Judicial Committee held that it was for the claimants to prove that they or their predecessors in title had been in adverse possession for sixty years.

The principle laid down is consistent with that laid down by the Judicial Committee in previous cases. The claimants in that case were in the position of Plaintiffs, and they claimed a title to the property by adverse possession. Their Lordships observed: "In their Lordships' opinion objectors to afforestation thus preferring claims are in law in the same position as persons bringing a suit in an ordinary Court of Justice for a declaration of right. To such a situation in the one case, as in the other, their Lordships think that Art. 144 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877 (Sch. II) applies, the period of twelve years thereunder being, however, extended to a period of sixty years by Art. 149. In an ordinary suit for a declaration it cannot be doubted that the onus of establishing possession for the requisite period would rest upon the Plaintiff. In their Lordships' opinion the situation of a claimant under afforestation proceedings is the same upon this point. Reference may be made to Radha Gobinda Roy v. Inglis (8), decided by this Board." Referring to the view taken by the High Court that the Crown had to prove that it has a subsisting title by showing that the possession of the claimants commenced or became adverse within the period of limitation their Lordships observed: "Nothing is better settled than that the onus of establishing property by reason of possession for a certain requisite period lies upon the person asserting possession. It is too late in the day to suggest the contrary of this proposition. If it were not correct it would be open to the possessor for a year or a day to say: I am here; be your title to the property ever so good, you cannot turn me out until you have demonstrated that the possession of myself and my predecessors was not long enough to fulfil all the legal conditions. Such a singular doctrine can be well illustrated by the case of India, in which the right of the Crown to vast tracts of territory, including not only islands arising from the sea, but great spaces of jungle lands, necessarily not under the close supervision of Government officers, would disappear because there would be no evidence available to establish the state of possession for sixty years past. It would be contrary to all legal principles thus to permit the squatter to put the owner of the fundamental right to a negative proof upon the point of possession. . . . In so far as this negatives the duty resting upon the claimants to establish affirmatively their and their predecessors' possession for sixty years, their Lordships' opinion is, as stated, that this is erroneous. But secondly with reference to the 'subsisting title,' it appears to their Lordships that nothing further is needed than the acknowledgment of the undisputed fact that these islands formed in the sea belonged to the Crown. That fact is fundamental: until adverse possession against the Crown is complete, that is to say, is for the period of sixty years, that fundamental fact remains, and that fact forms 'subsisting title.' And thirdly it is no part of the obligation of the Crown to fortify its own fundamental right by any inquiry into possession or the acceptance of any onus on that subject."

The title of the Crown to the land could not be disputed; the claimants set up a title by adverse possession, and there can be no question that it was upon the Plaintiff who wanted a declaration of his title by adverse possession to prove that he acquired such a title by adverse possession for the statutory period. That is all that was laid down in that case, and the general observations made at p. 204 must be taken with the facts of that case in which the claimants stood in the position of a Plaintiff seeking a declaration of his title to the property. Such a person on the strength of possession for a short period cannot throw upon the Opposite Party the burden of proving that he, the claimant had not been in possession for the statutory period. We do not think therefore that that decision laid down any principle different from that laid down previously in a series of cases by the Judicial Committee.

It is to be observed that their Lordships while dealing with the case coming under Art. 144, referred to Radha Gobinda Roy v. Inglis (8) which clearly shows that the latter case also was treated as one falling under Art. 144.

The case of Kumar Basant Roy v. Secretary of State for India (10) also does not help the contention of the Appellants. There the land was diluviated, and parts of the diluviated land emerged during part of the year. It was held that the annual cultivation of such parts of diluviated lands as emerge during part of the year is not a dispossession of the owner of the lands within Art. 142 of the Limitation Act, and that the constructive possession of lands while diluviated being in the true owner cannot be continuous adverse possession within Art. 144 while it is diluviated during part of every year, and that no rational distinction could be drawn between that case where the re-flooding was seasonal, and Krishnamoni Gupta's case (12), where the lands were sub-merged for several years.

Their Lordships observed:—"If as their Lordships think, no dispossession occurred, except possibly within twelve years before the commencement of this suit, Art. 144 is the article applicable and not Art. 142. It is not easy to see in the circumstances of a case such as this how conduct insufficient to evidence dispossession of the Plaintiffs can be used to evidence adverse possession available to the Defendants; but be that as it may, in their Lordships' opinion the Defendants' contention resting on Art. 144 fails on another ground."

This case therefore is no authority for the proposition that in a case coming under Art. 142, the onus is upon the Defendant. Their Lordships were dealing with the question what constitutes dispossession in cases of diluviated lands coming out of water during part of the year, and the question of adverse possession having regard to the nature of the land and the nature of possession exercised upon the land.

None of the four cases relied upon by the Appellant, therefore, is any authority for the proposition contended for on behalf of the Appellant.

It is to be observed that Radha Gobinda Roy v. Inglis (8) was decided in 1880, and that of Karan Singh v. Pakar Ali

(7) in 1882. Had those cases intended to lay down any different principle, the Judicial Committee in 1888 in Mohima Chander's case (4), without even referring to those cases, could not have laid down the principle that the Plaintiff in a suit for ejectment cannot succeed without proving possession within 12 years although his title is proved. They were not referred to evidently because they were cases falling under Art. 144. Mohima Chander's case (4) was expressly followed 18 years afterwards (in 1906) by their Lordships in Rani Hemanta Kumaree's case (6).

We do not think it reasonable to hold that the Judicial Committee in Secretary of State v. Chelikani Rama Rao (9) laid down any principle at variance with that enunciated so far back as 1860 in Moharaja Koowar Nitrasur Singh's case (1), and which was followed in all cases (where the Plaintiff while in possession was dispossessed) up to 1906 in Rani Hemanta Kumaree's case (6), i.e., for nearly half a century. Even leaving aside the earlier cases, which were decided under the Regulations or Act XIV of 1859 (though as stated above there was no difference in the law so far as cases coming under Art. 142 are concerned) their Lordships laid down the same principle in Mohima Chander's case (4), Mahammad Amanullah Khan's case (5) and Rani Hemanta Kumaree's case (6).

There is in fact no inconsistency in the decisions of the Privy Council because the decisions relied upon by the Appellant as stated above, show that they were cases not falling under Art. 142 of the Limitation Act, and the contention of the Appellant is based merely upon some general observations in some of the judgments wrenched from the context and the facts of the cases. So far as this Court is concerned, the principle laid down by the earlier Privy Council decisions, and in Mohima Chander Mozumdar's case (4) and Rani Hemanta Kumarc's case (6), and the Full Bench decision in Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (11) has always been taken as settled law on the point, and we need only refer to the case of Mirza Shams-her Bahadur v. Munshi Kunj Behary Lal (13), where Mookerjee and Caspersz, JJ., observed:—"It is now firmly settled beyond all probability of controversy that the Plaintiff in an action for ejectment must not only prove his title but also his possession within 12 years of the suit." A recent Full Bench of the Patna High Court also, upon a review of the decisions on the point has taken the same view. [See Raja Shiva Prosad Singh v. Hira Singh (14)].

We are accordingly of opinion that in cases coming under Art. 142, although the Plaintiffs' title is proved the onus is not upon the Defendant to show that the Plaintiff lost his title by adverse possession on the part of the Defendant.

The next question is whether the onus of proof is upon the Defendant having regard to the nature of the land, and this brings us to the question as to what the Plaintiff has to prove in order to show that he was in possession within 12 years of the suit. As pointed out by Wilson.

J., in the judgment of the Full Bench in Mahomed Ali Khan's case (11), possession is not necessarily the same thing as actual user. The nature of the possession to be looked for, and the evidence of its continuance must depend upon the character and condition of the land in dispute. Where the land is incapable of actual enjoyment, as in the case of diluvion by a river, if the Plaintiff shows his possession down to the time of the diluvion, his possession is presumed to continue so long as the lands continue to be submerged. The cases of Kali Charan Sahoo v. Secretary of State for India (15) [overruled by Secretary of State v. Krishnamoni (12) in so far as it held that there was constructive possession in favour of a wrong-doer]; Monomohan Roy v. Mathura Mohan Roy (16), Radha Gobinda Roy v. Inglis (8) and Raj Kumar Roy v. Gobind Chandra Roy (17), (where however possession of the Plaintiff was held to be proved); Secretary of State v. Krishnamoni (dupla) (12) and Kumar Basant Roy v. Secretary of State for India (10), illustrate the principle that where the rightful owner proves possession until the land goes under water or otherwise becomes wholly incapable of enjoyment in the usual modes, he is deemed to be in constructive possession until the land emerges out of water and becomes capable of enjoyment in the usual modes and he is actually dispossessed by the Defendant. No such presumption, however, arises in the case of a wrong-doer. In Kumar Basant Roy v. Secretary of State for In- dia (10), the Judicial Committee observed :—"The Limitation Act of 1877 does not define the term "dispossession," but its meaning is well-settled. A man may cease to use his land because he cannot use it, since it is under water. He does not thereby discontinue his possession : constructively it continues, until he is dispossessed; and upon the cessation of the dispossession before the lapse of the statutory period, constructively it revives. 'There can be no discontinuance by absence of use and enjoyment, where the land is not capable of use and enjoyment.' [Per Cotton, L. J., in Leigh v. Jack (18)]. It seems to follow that there can be no continuance of adverse possession, when the land is not capable of use and enjoyment, so long as such adverse possession must rest on de facto use and occupation. When sufficient time has elapsed to extinguish the old title and start a new one, the new owner's possession of course continues until there is fresh dispossession, and revives as it ceases."

In cases where the land is not incapable of enjoyment, but may produce some profit, though trifling in amount and only of occasional occurrence as is often the case with jungle land, it would be unreasonable to look for the same evidence of possession as in the case of a house or a cultivated field. All that can be required is that the Plaintiff should show such acts of ownership as are natural under the existing condition of the land, and in such cases, when he has done this his possession is presumed to continue so long as the state of the land remains unchanged unless he is shown to have been dispossessed. [See Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gany (11)]. In Watson v. The Government of Bengal (19), Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., referred to the "cutting or preserving the wood, gathering wax or wild honey, collecting stick lac, etc." as evidence of possession of jungle lands. In waste lands (and jungle lands also) possession may be exercised by grazing of cattle, putting up boundary marks or fences and the like.

The cases of diluviated lands or jungle or waste lands, however, are no exception to the general rule that a Plaintiff who is dispossessed and brings a suit for recovery of possession must show that he was in possession within 12 years of the suit. The rule of law as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Rani Hemanta Kumaree Devi v. Maharajah Jagadindra Nath Ray (6) is that it is for the Plaintiff in a suit for ejectment to prove possession prior to the alleged dispossession. At the same time in this question of possession the initial fact of Plaintiff's title comes to his aid with greater or less force according to the circumstances established in evidence.

Bearing the above principles in mind we have to see what the Plaintiff has proved in the present case. The land was asserted by the Plaintiff to be khas palit formerly but it was admitted in the plaint that the Defendant had excavated a tank on the land 4 or 5 years before the suit. The Court of first instance found that the tank was excavated more than 12 years before the suit. Upon that finding there can of course be no question of any presumption in favour of the Plaintiff because he was ousted from possession 12 years before the suit by the excavation of the tank. The Court of first instance further found that before the excavation of the tank the land was under cultivation of certain persons (Harina and Jala Majhis) with whom the land was exchanged by the Defendant. Had these findings been affirmed by the Court of Appeal below, no question of onus of proof or any presumption could arise. The learned District Judge, however, while agreeing with the Munsif that the suit was barred by limitation observes that the best evidence regarding excavation of the tank had not been produced by the Defendant. It is not clear what he meant, because the excavation of the tank 4 or 5 years before the suit was admitted by the Plaintiff in his plaint, and spoken to by his own witnesses. Probably he meant that the excavation of the tank earlier, and the exchange of land, as set up by the Defendant was not satisfactorily proved, and that the evidence of possession on both sides prior to the excavation of the tank was unsatisfactory. It is contended on behalf of the Appellant that in this conflict of evidence the Court ought to have presumed that possession went with the title. That presumption, however, can arise only where the evidence is equally strong on both sides. In Ranjit Ram Pandey v. Goburdhan Ram Pandey (20), the Judicial Committee observed:—"Now the ordinary presumption would be that possession went with the title. The presumption cannot of course be of any avail in the presence of clear evidence to the contrary, but where there is strong evidence of possession as there is here on the part of the Respondents opposed by evidence apparently strong also on the part of the Appellant, their Lordships think that in estimating the weight due to the evidence on both sides the presumption may, under the peculiar circumstances of the case be regarded, and that with the aid of it there is stronger probability that the Respondents' case is truer than that of the Appellant." See also Dharam Singh v. Har

Prosad (21), Babu Kasturi Singh v. Raj Kumar Balu Bissen Pragash Narain (22) and Mirza Shamsheer Bahadur v. Munshi Kunj Behary Lal (13) (the word "unsatisfactory" at p. 280 is evidently a slip). The principle does not apply to a case where the evidence is equally unworthy of reliance on both sides, see Thakur Singh v. Bhogeraaj Singh (23), Lala Singh v. Mir Latif Hossain (24) and Pakira Lal Singh v. Munshi Ram Charan (25) (the observations with regard to waste or jungle lands are obiter).

The question was discussed by a Full Bench of the Patna High Court in the recent case of Raja Shiva Prosad Singh v. Hira Singh (14), where it was held (overruling two decisions of the Court) that the presumption can be raised only where the evidence is equally strong on both sides and cannot be called in aid to give weight to evidence unworthy of credit any more than if no evidence at all had been given. The subject-matter of dispute in that case was cultivated land. In the order of reference the learned Judge expressed the opinion that in cases of submerged or jungle or waste land, the continuance of possession may be presumed if antecedent title and possession are proved. The observation has reference to land of such a nature that possession cannot be expected to be proved by acts of actual user and enjoyment and the learned Chief Justice referred with approval to the observations of Wilson, J., in the judgment of the Full Bench in Mahomed Ali Khan's case (11) (with regard to jungle lands) that the Plaintiff should show such acts of ownership as are natural under existing conditions, and that where this has been done prior possession may be presumed to have continued until the Plaintiff is shown to have been dispossessed.

In the present case, the Plaintiff alleged that the land was waste, but it was not the case of the Plaintiff that no act of ownership could be or were exercised upon the land. The Plaintiff adduced some evidence of possession, viz., grazing of cattle upon the land prior to the excavation of the tank by the Defendants. The Defendants adduced evidence to show that the land was under cultivation before he excavated the tank. According to both parties therefore, acts of possession were exercised upon the land. Now, where definite evidence of acts of possession is forthcoming there is no difference between the proof of possession in the case of jungle, waste or uncultivated lands and in that of cultivated lands. But whereas in the case of cultivated lands the Plaintiff will fail if he does not prove his possession within 12 years, in the case of jungle or waste lands, if he proves his title, there is a presumption in his favour where having regard to the nature of the land possession cannot be expected to be proved by acts of actual user and enjoyment. If, however, the Plaintiff asserts that he exercised acts of ownership upon the land and adduces evidence in support of such assertion, he cannot, where such evidence is disbelieved by the Court, turn round and rely upon any presumption, because the case set up by him negatives the existence of circumstances which would give rise to the presumption, and is inconsistent with it.

In the present case if the Plaintiff had been able to show that neither party had exercised any act of possession, or that he had exercised such acts of ownership as were natural under the existing conditions, a presumption could have been raised in his favour on the question of possession of the land prior to his dispossession by the Defendant's excavation of the tank. He attempted to prove such acts of possession, but the evidence was not accepted by the Courts below.

It is contended, however, on behalf of the Appellant that the learned District Judge should not have held that "Plaintiff witness No. 1's statement that cattle of all villagers grazed on the disputed land, was consistent with the Plaintiff's case as much as with the Defendant's," and ought to have held that Plaintiff's possession prior to the excavation of the tank by the Defendant was thereby proved. But in that passage the learned Judge was merely commenting upon the statements of the Plaintiff's witness No. 1, and what he meant was that the "villagers" who are said to have grazed their cattle on the land were tenants under the patni taluks of both the Plaintiff and the Defendant, both the taluks being in the same village. He did not find that the Plaintiff's tenant grazed cattle on the land, because further on referring to the Plaintiff's witnesses who all deposed to the same effect, he says: "The lower Court rightly disbelieved them as they were clearly not independent and disinterested witnesses." In these circumstances, we do not think that there was any presumption in favour of the Plaintiff.

The appeal accordingly fails, and must be dismissed with costs.

VISCOUNT HALDANE. PANNA LAL and ors., LORD PHILLIMORE. Appellants,
MR. AMEER ALI. v.

1922, Nihal Chand, substituted for the Marwar
Heard, 31, January. Bank (in liquidation), Judgment, 31, January. Respondent.

Bond, whether imposed personal liability—Interest on bond pendent lite—Discretion of Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 34.

Held, on a construction of the bond in question in the case, that it imposed personal liability upon the executants.

The Courts in India having allowed interest at the rate of 8½ per cent. per annum during the period of the pendency of the suit:

Held—That the Civil Procedure Code gives the Court discretion in the matter and the Judicial Committee was not prepared to dissent from the view taken by the Courts in India.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Chief Court of the Punjab, dated the 2nd April 1918, affirming a decree of the District Judge of Ambala, dated the 27th October 1913.

The facts of the case are shortly as follows:—

The Luxmi Company, Ltd., obtained advances from the Respondent the Marwar Bank, Ltd. and as security for these and for future advances Panna Lal (the present Appellant) Ganga Ram, and Basheshar Nath, Directors of the Company, executed a security bond in favour of the Bank to the extent of Rs. 50,000. The bond which is set out in their Lordships' judgment was signed by these three persons with the word "Directors" after their signatures.

The Company subsequently went into liquidation, and the suit out of which this appeal arose was instituted by the Bank against the three Directors claiming to recover from them jointly and severally on the bond the amount due to the Bank.

The Luxmi Company was impleaded as a Defendant. Ganga Ram paid his proportionate share of the liability, but the Appellants contended that they had not contracted any personal liability. The District Judge decided the suit in favour of the Bank and made a decree for the amount claimed with interest at 8½ per cent. per annum.

On appeal the Chief Court of the Punjab affirmed the decree of the District Judge and the Appellants now appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. Clauson, K. C. and Wallach for the Appellants.—The question for determination is purely one of construction.

The signatories of the bond do not say "we hereby pledge ourselves" or "we hereby guarantee;" they merely pledge the repayment of the money.

The word "Directors" after the signatures is a clear indication that they signed merely on behalf of the Company and undertook no personal liability.

Messrs. Langdon, K. C. and Dubé for the Respondents were not called upon.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT* was delivered by

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—The Luxmi Company, Limited, which was Defendant in the suit out of which this appeal arises, but which is no party to the appeal, was a company trading at Ambala and elsewhere as bankers, cotton merchants and general commission agents. It obtained certain advances from the Respondents, the Marwar Bank. These advances were made under various circumstances but at the material date with which their Lordships are concerned it was necessary to obtain some security for the assurance of the bank, and accordingly on the 28th

PANNA LAL v. Nihal Chand.

December 1908, the Appellants, Lala Panna Lal and Lala Basheshar Nath, and one Lala Ganga Ram executed a security bond, dated the 28th December 1908, in favour of the manager of the Marwar Bank. Lala Ganga Ram and the Appellant Lala Panna Lal were directors of the Luxmi Company; the other Appellant, Lala Basheshar Nath, was manager of one of the branches of the Luxmi Company, and was an alternative director, that is to say, on certain occasions he acted as a director.

The surety bond which the two Appellants executed was in these terms. It was addressed to the manager of the Marwar Bank, Limited, of Ambala City :—

“DEAR SIR,—In consideration of your allowing the Luxmi Company, Limited, to overdraw sums not exceeding in the aggregate of rupees fifty thousand only (on the security of Luxmi Company, Limited, demand pro-note in your favour of date), we hereby pledge for the repayment on demand of the said overdraft, together with interest thereon and of any other sum or sums of money which may be or become due to you from the Luxmi Company, Limited, on any account whatsoever during the continuance of this pro-note. And we hereby declare and agree that the overdraft allowed and intended to be secured by this agreement shall be taken to have been allowed by you entirely upon the faith of and relying upon the declaration signed by us at the foot hereof, which declaration solemnly we declare to be true in every respect. It is hereby further agreed and declared that these presents shall remain and be a continuing security to you for the balance of the said account for the time being to the extent aforesaid, notwithstanding that at any time or times the balance of the said account may be in your favour, it being expressly intended that these presents shall be a security for the balance of the said account due by the Luxmi Company, Limited, to you while the said account shall continue open. Signed at Ambala City this 28th day of December, in the year one thousand nine hundred and eight.”

It is contended on behalf of the Appellants that this security bond did not impose upon them any personal liability, inasmuch as they signed as directors, which, it is said, meant as directors binding the Luxmi Company and the Luxmi Company alone. The first difficulty in the way of that contention is a very formidable one. If it were true the bank would get no advantage from this security bond, because it had already the liability of the Luxmi Company for the sums which it had advanced to the Luxmi Company. The only materiality of the security bond would be if it gave some new security and some fresh liability, and therefore the natural construction to put upon what is indicated by the use of the imperfect but definite expression “pledge” is that the fresh liability of the three signatories personally was the new security introduced. Moreover, the whole tenor of the document points to an obligation to pay money. It is suggested that the word “pledge” in the beginning of the second sentence, where the expression is used “we hereby pledge for the repayment on demand,” shows that they meant to refer to some specific and tangible securities which they pledged for the advances; but if that were so, then, as these were omitted and not mentioned, the document was bad because of the omission of what was of its essence. The other construction takes the word pledge as loosely used, to mean that they pledge their personal credit in support of the obligation of the company. It is said that if one looks at other documents of the kind one will find that this was only a common form intended for cases where there was a pledge of assets, and that if regard is had to the circumstances in other transactions one will find that in other transactions these gentlemen did not pledge themselves personally.

But their Lordships think that this

surety bond which was executed on the specific occasion must be taken to have been executed for the purpose of the occasion, and that it cannot be assumed that it had reference to any other circumstances of a different date. On the face of it there is no difficulty in giving it an intelligible meaning as constituting a personal pledge. Their Lordships do not think that extrinsic evidence is admissible in these circumstances to affect its meaning.

Their Lordships are therefore of opinion, taking this as it stands, that the appeal fails.

The only other point that arises is as to the rate of interest given from the date of the proceedings until judgment. As to that there is a discretion in the Judges under the Code of Civil Procedure, and both Courts have said that the interest should be $8\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Their Lordships are not prepared to dissent from that view. For the reasons they have stated, they will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Solicitor: Mr. Henry S. L. Polak for the Appellants.

Solicitors: Messrs. Lewis and Yglesias for the Respondent.

SRIPAT SINGH DUGAR

and anr., Appellants,
v.

RAI HARIRAM

GOENKA and ors.,

Respondents.

Execution of decree—Objection on the ground of non-service of notice—Concurrent findings by two Courts in India—Non-interference by Judicial Committee—Adjudication of judgment-debtor as Insolvent—Subsequent proceedings in execution against sons and heirs only of judgment-debtor.

In execution of a decree passed in 1896 the decree-holder in December 1915 applied for the attachment of a certain property of the judgment-debtor and obtained the order of attachment on the 21st January 1916. In March 1916 the judgment-debtor applied to have the order of attachment set aside on the ground that no notice of execution had been served on him and the decree was barred by limitation. The decree-holder's contention was that the judgment had been revived by a writ of attachment issued on the 3rd February 1904 and within 12 years from that date, viz., on the 12th January 1916, the notice of execution taken out in December 1915 had been served. This application of the judgment-debtor was, in the first instance, dismissed but on appeal a remand was ordered on 23rd November 1916. On the same day the judgment-debtor was declared an insolvent by the Privy Council. The judgment-debtor died on 25th April 1918 and on 5th August 1918 the decree-holder took out a summons against the present Appellants, the sons and heirs of the judgment-debtor, to show cause why the original decree should not be executed against them and having thus revived against them brought the matter of the remand on for hearing. The decision of both the trial Judge and the High Court in appeal on the remand was that notice had been served on the judgment-debtor as alleged by him:

Held—That, on the question of service of notice, there was nothing exceptional to cause their Lordships to interfere with two concurrent findings of fact.

Held, further—That in the absence of information as to whether the order adjudicating C an insolvent was afterwards annulled or came to a termination in any way before or after the death of C, the appeal should be dismissed with the declaration that if the adjudication of the insolvency of C had not been annulled or the insolvency had not otherwise terminated on or before the date, when the order on remand was made in the High Court by the trial Judge, the said order would owing to the absence of the Receiver or other representative of the Insolvency Court be inoperative except in so far as it decided against any asserted interest of the sons and heirs of C, parties to the proceedings.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court, Calcutta, dated the 4th July 1919, affirming a decree of Chaudhuri, J., dated the 26th February 1919, in the same High Court in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

In 1896 a decree was pronounced against Chatrapat Singh, the father of the present Appellants, for payment of a large sum of money to the father of the present Respondents.

Execution proceedings were taken by the judgment-creditor in 1904 but were eventually dismissed in 1907 and no further step in execution was taken until December 1915.

In 1912 Chatrapat filed his petition in insolvency and was finally adjudicated an insolvent in August 1917.

In the execution proceedings a prohibitory order was made in January 1916 and upon objections being raised by Chatrapat the matter came before Mr. Justice Fletcher who in May 1916 decided in favour of the decree-holder largely on the question of limitation. On appeal the case was remanded for a determination of the question whether notice had been served on the judgment-debtor, on the 12th January 1916.

On the 19th February 1919 this question was decided in the affirmative by Chaudhuri, J., and that finding was accepted by the High Court on appeal.

Sir George Lowndes, K. C., and Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Appellants.—The prohibitory order for attachment of of the Calcutta property was made on 21st January 1916.

The first question is whether this is barred by limitation. See Act IX of 1908, Sch. I, Art. 183.

The decree can be revived by an order for execution after notice, but it was contended by Chatrapat that he had not been served with notice of the application for execution in December 1915.

Our application for setting aside the attachment was dismissed by Fletcher, J., but only on the ground that there had been a revivor in 1904 and that the decree of 1896 was capable of being executed.

On appeal by Chatrapat the question was referred back to the lower Court on the question of notice and there are findings of fact against me on this point but the question of limitation is still open and could not be decided in the absence of the Receiver in Chatrapat's insolvency.

In 1909 Chatrapat filed his petition to be adjudged an insolvent under Act III of 1907 and was finally so adjudicated by order of the Privy Council [vide Chhatrapat Singh Dugar v. Kharag Singh Lachmiram (1)].

Creditors have no remedy against the property of the debtor, they can merely prove in the insolvency so that the attachment of 21st January 1916 became bad.

The property became vested in the Receiver in insolvency and the attachment cannot stand as it is an attempt by a creditor to get payment in full—to the detriment of other creditors.

Reference was made to secs. 18, 16 (b), and 24 of Act III of 1907.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Dubé for the Respondents.—The only question with regard to limitation is whether notice of the application had been served on Chatrapat. This is a pure question of fact and there are concurrent findings on it in my favour by the lower Courts.

There is no evidence to show that the Receiver was still in existence or that the order of adjudication had not been annulled.

The fact that Chatrapat's heirs are the present Respondents tends to show that the order of adjudication had come to an end, otherwise they would have no interest in the property.

This point was not raised in the lower Courts.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD PHILLIMORE.—The late Ram Chandra Goenka, for himself and his partners, obtained in 1896 a decree against the late Chatrapat Singh for a considerable sum of money. Some money appears to have been recovered from time to time under this decree, but on the 21st December 1915, it was still in part unsatisfied, and on that date the decree-holder applied to attach a house belonging to the judgment-debtor in Calcutta. On the 3rd March 1916, the judgment-debtor applied to have the order of attachment which had been thus obtained set aside, saying that no notice of execution had been served upon him and that the decree was barred by the law of limitation. The decree being one made by the High Court of Judicature at Fort William, in Bengal, would be kept alive for twelve years, and thereafter by revivor if the proper proceeding was taken. The decree-holder replied that the judgment had been revived in 1904 by a writ of attachment issued on the 3rd February 1904, and that before twelve years from the 3rd February 1904, had expired, the notice of execution taken out in December had been served on the 12th January 1916; that is, just within the further period of twelve years.

The application of the judgment-debtor came on for hearing before Fletcher, J., on the 22nd May 1916. He decided in favour of the decree-holder and dismissed the application. The judgment-debtor appealed.

On appeal it could not be gathered from the judgment of Fletcher, J., that he had considered the dispute as to the question of service on the 12th January 1916. His written judgment was wholly concerned with what took place in 1904. And so on the 23rd November 1916 (the date is important), a remand was ordered.

No steps were taken for some time under this remand, and meanwhile the judgment-debtor died on the 25th April 1918. On the 5th August 1918, the decree-holder took out a summons against the present Appellants, the sons and heirs of the judgment-debtor, to show cause why the original decree should not be executed against them as sons and heirs, and having thus revived against them, brought the matter of the remand on for hearing. It was heard by Chaudhuri, J., who decided in favour of the decree-holder, and held that the order of attachment, called the prohibitory order, ought not to be set aside. From this decision an appeal was taken. During the course of the appeal the decree-holder died, and his place was taken by the present Respondents. The decision of Chaudhuri, J., was affirmed by the High Court, and it is from this affirmation that the present appeal is brought.

With regard to what took place in 1904, the only materials for their Lordships' consideration are certain affidavits and the judgment of Fletcher, J., and it is not very clear whether he decided the question as matter of law or matter of fact. But on whatever ground he decided, the High Court must be taken to have agreed with him on this point, for if it had been otherwise it would not have been necessary to remand the case for the consideration of the other point.

It was contended before their Lordships that the remand was general, but this is not their opinion. It was a remand to settle the matter of 1916, the consideration of which was only important if the decree-holder had successfully maintained his point with regard to what took place in 1904. This being so, from the very scanty materials which present themselves, their Lordships can find no reason for disagreeing with the opinion of Fletcher, J., affirmed on this point by the High Court.

With regard to the question of fact as to whether or not Chatrapat Singh had been served, as contended, with a notice of execution on the 12th January 1916, Chaudhuri, J., after hearing the evidence on both sides, came to the conclusion that he had been served, and the High Court accepted his finding, and there is nothing exceptional to cause their Lordships to interfere with two concurrent findings of fact.

This being so, there would be a short end to the matter, and the appeal would be dismissed without further trouble but for one circumstance. It is contended by the Appellants that the proceedings subsequent to the remand were ineffective, and that the judgments of Chaudhuri, J., on remand and of the High Court on appeal must be set aside because of the absence of a material or the material party. It is said that on the 23rd November 1916, the precise date of the order of remand, Chatrapat Singh was adjudged insolvent, and that thereupon the Insolvent Court, through its officer or the Receiver—if one were appointed under the then existing Insolvency Act—ought to have been served and have had an opportunity of being present and raising his points in objection to the attachment when the matter was heard before Chaudhuri, J.

The first observation which occurs upon this is that if the Appellants were making this point they should have given proper proof of the material documents and have raised the point distinctly at the hearing before Chaudhuri, J. But the only indication of the point being raised is to be found in the two questions following put to the process server, apparently to lead up to the contention that the judgment-debtor could not have been living in the house in which the service is said to have taken place; and as the answers to these questions were in the negative, nothing was proved. Questions and answers are as follows:—

“Do you know that Chatrapat was made an insolvent by an order of the Privy Council?”

“No.”

While there is thus nothing to show that the point was even taken before Chaudhuri, J., there is at no stage in the case adequate and regular proof that Chatrapat Singh was adjudicated insolvent. On the other hand, in the grounds of appeal from the judgment of Chaudhuri, J., to the High Court, and again in the petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, the point was expressly made, and in the latter document some detail is given, it being stated that a Receiver was appointed by order, dated the 2nd August 1917; and the statements in this petition are supported by an affidavit.

Moreover, however much the Appellants may have precluded themselves personally from raising the point, it is hardly possible for their Lordships, in a matter which may concern third parties, to pass it wholly by; for the adjudication of insolvency in this particular case was a remarkable one. The application was made by the would-be insolvent himself. It was refused by both Courts in India, who treated it as an unfounded application made for some fraudulent purpose. But this Board upon appeal felt bound by the terms of the Act, as it then stood, to grant the petition and to declare Chatrapat Singh insolvent. The case is reported in Chhatrapat Singh Dugar v. Kharag Singh Lachmiram (1). It was decided on the 20th November 1916, and the Order in Council confirming the report of the Judicial Committee has been before their Lordships and is dated the 23rd November 1916.

As to what happened after this order of adjudication was made there is no information. Whether it was afterwards annulled under the provisions of the Insolvency Act or came to a termination in some other way, before or after the death of Chatrapat Singh, and if so when, their Lordships have no information. It seems unlikely that if the state of insolvency was continuing and was brought to the attention of the Court, it should have been passed over in silence by the various learned Judges, or that a decision in favour of the validity of the attachment should have been delivered in the absence of the Receiver or other officer to whom under the statute the assets of Chatrapat Singh should have passed. Moreover, if Chatrapat Singh remained insolvent, there would be no property to pass to his heirs, and no inducement to them to appear, except for the sake of getting their costs. Whereas they not only appeared, but called witnesses, and appealed and are now appealing to their Lordships' Board, though urging as one of their grounds of appeal a state of facts which would preclude them from having any interest in the matter.

On the other hand, it is not easy to see why the adjudication of insolvency did not divest the rights of the decree-holder as such and remit him to the position of an ordinary creditor.

In these difficult circumstances their Lordships, having no doubt what the decision as between the two parties to this appeal should be, but desiring that their judgment and His Majesty's order should be so expressed as not to prejudice the rights of other persons, have concluded that the right course is for them, while recommending that this appeal should be dismissed with costs, to recommend also that the dismissal should be accompanied by a declaration in the following words: "that if the adjudication of the insolvency of Chatrapat made on the 23rd November 1916, had not been annulled or the insolvency had not otherwise terminated on or before the 19th February 1919, the order then made by Chaudhuri, J., would, owing to the absence of the Receiver or other representative of the Insolvency Court, be inoperative except in so far as it decided against any asserted interest of the sons and heirs of Chatrapat parties to the proceedings." And they will humbly recommend His Majesty accordingly.

Re ABDUL SAMAD.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), sec. 36 - Order under section when can be properly made—Admission of proof of debt by Official Assignee a condition precedent.

The words in sec. 36, "any creditor who has proved his debt" mean not merely a creditor who has lodged proof of his debt but a creditor whose proof has been admitted by the Official Assignee and unless this has been done no order can be made under the section. The mere fact that a creditor's name was included in the schedule filed by the insolvent and that so far his claim has not been challenged does not assist him if his debt has not been admitted by the Official Assignee so that he becomes a creditor who has proved his debt within the meaning of sec. 36 of the Act.

This was an application to set aside an order of the Registrar in Insolvency made on the 12th April 1922.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. W. W. K. Page, Counsel appeared for Messrs. Kendrew & Co.

Sir B. C. Mitter and Mr. D. N. Bose for the Insolvents.

GREAVES, J.—This is an application by one Mahomed Omari for an order that a certain order made by the Registrar in Insolvency on the 12th April 1922 on the application of Messrs. J. F. Kendrew & Co. may be set aside.

The order of 12th April was an order made by the Registrar in Insolvency under the provisions of sec. 36 of the Insolvency Act directing Mahomed Omari's examination under that section. The order of the Registrar in Insolvency is attacked by the applicant on two grounds. First, it is said that having regard to the provisions of sec. 36, Messrs. J. F. Kendrew & Co. are not entitled to the order which has been made by the Registrar and secondly, it is said that upon the merits no such order ought to have been made.

Counsel for the applicant has directed my attention to the evidence upon which the Registrar made his order under sec. 36 and on reading that evidence I am not prepared to disturb the order on that ground, but so far as the first point is concerned I think the application is entitled to succeed. Sec. 36 provides that the Court (in this case the Registrar) may on the application of the Official Assignee or of any creditor who has proved his debt, summon before it any person whom the Court may deem capable of giving information. What it appears has happened is this. Messrs. J. F. Kendrew's name appears as that of a creditor in the schedule filed by the insolvent and it appears that they have also submitted to the Official Assignee proof of their claim supported by an affidavit but there has been no adjudication upon this claim and in my opinion the words in sec. 36 "any creditor who has proved his debt" mean not merely a creditor who has lodged proof of his debt but a creditor whose proof has been admitted by the Official Assignee under the provisions contained in sec. 25 of the 2nd schedule to the Insolvency Act. I think that no creditor is entitled to apply under sec. 36 unless his proof has actually been admitted by the Official Assignee and the mere fact that his name was included in the schedule filed by the insolvent and that so far his claim has not been challenged does not assist him if his debt has not been admitted by the Official Assignee so that he becomes a creditor who has proved his debt within the meaning of sec. 36 of the Act.

The application therefore succeeds on this ground and I set aside the order of the Indian Income Tax Act (VII of 1918), secs. 31, 33, 34—Assessment to super-tax as agent of principal non-resident in British India—Agent who is—Agent, if must be in receipt of income on behalf of principal.

The applicant Company was assessed to super-tax as agent for six share-holders in the Company all of whom were non-residents of British India in regard to the dividends payable to them by the Company:

Held per WOODROFFE AND GREAVES, JJ.—That secs. 31 and 34 of the Indian Income Tax Act are to be read together, the latter section merely defining who may be included as an agent under sec. 31. That being so the agent must be in receipt of income within the terms of sec. 31 and the Company was not in receipt of income on behalf of the share-holders within the meaning of sec. 31.

That even if the two sections be read disjointly the Company was not in the circumstances of the case an agent within the terms of the Act.

That in this view no question as to the propriety of assessment to super-tax as agent arose.

Per B. B. GHOSE, J., contra.—Under sec. 33, sub-sec. (1), the agent of any person residing out of British India whose income accrues or arises within British India need not be in receipt of the income on behalf of such person to be assessable to the tax in respect of such income; the mere fact of agency is sufficient. Sec. 34 was enacted for the purpose of assessing the income of such non-residents when they have not appointed agents residing in British India who might be assessed under sec. 33 (1).

It is only necessary that the person on whom the Collector has served a notice under sec. 34 is a "person employed by or on behalf of a person residing out of British India or having any business connection with such person" and if that condition is satisfied the person on whom such notice has been served shall for the purposes of the Income Tax Act be deemed to be the agent of such person.

That the Company was such an agent and was rightly assessed to super-tax as such.

This was a reference under sec. 51 (1) of the Income Tax Act of 1918.

The facts out of which this reference arose will appear from the judgment of B. B. GHOSE, J.

Mr. Langford James and Mr. Ameer Ali appeared for the Applicant Company.

Mr. B. L. Mitter, Officiating Standing Counsel, for the Secretary of State.

WOODROFFE, J.—In this case the applicant Company has been assessed to super-tax as agent for six gentlemen mentioned in the reference. All these gentlemen are non-residents of British India. They are share-holders in the Company and the assessment has been made in regard to the dividends payable to them by the Company. The Company is an Indian Limited Company and the income, of which assessment was made, arose and accrued in British India. The question is whether the Company is an agent for these gentlemen as defined in the Indian Income Tax Act VII of 1918. It is their contention that they are not such agents, and that they are not in receipt of any income of the persons whose agents they are alleged to be.

The Board has held that they were such agents and the matter has been referred to us upon the application of the Company. One substantial question is whether secs. 31 and 34 of the Indian Income Tax Act are to be read together or disjointly, in which latter case it would not be necessary in all cases that the agent should be in receipt of the income. On a consideration of this matter I am of opinion that sec. 34 merely defines who may be included as an agent under sec. 31. If so, the agent whether we look to secs. 31 or 34 must be in receipt of income within the terms of the former section.

I do not think that the circumstances of this case show a receipt within the terms of the section. Though this is sufficient to determine the matter I may add that I am not satisfied that even if secs. 31 and 34 be read disjointly, the Company was under the circumstances of this case an agent within the terms of the Act. The answer, therefore, to the first question, namely, whether the Collector of Income Tax is right in holding that the Company is an agent for these share-holders, is answered in the negative. The second question, namely, if so, whether the Company has rightly been assessed to super-tax on their account, does not arise. A copy of this judgment is directed to be given to the Revenue Authority.

GREAVES, J.—I agree.

GHOSE, J.—I regret very much that I am unable to concur in the judgment just pronounced. I think it necessary that I should state as clearly as I am able the reasons for which I have arrived at a different conclusion.

This is a reference made by the Chief Revenue Authority under sec. 51 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1918 on the application of the Assessee, the Imperial Tobacco Company of India, Limited. Six persons who are all residing out of British India are share-holders in the Company. They were entitled to certain dividends for their shares in the Company the profits of which accrued in British India and there is no question that the share-holders are liable to pay super-tax on their income so derived. The profits due to those share-holders were sent to them by the Company to their residence outside British India. The Company was assessed for the super-tax due on the income of those six share-holders as agent of the non-resident persons under the provisions of the Income Tax Act and the Company has raised the objection that it cannot be so assessed. The questions on which the decision of this Court is sought are, (1) whether the Collector of Income Tax is right in holding that the Company is agent for these share-holders under sec. 34, Act VII of 1918, and (2) if so, whether the Company has rightly been assessed to super-tax on their account.

A Company incorporated according to law is an artificial legal person having an existence separate from its corporators. There is therefore no legal impediment to a Company being agent for any of its share-holders. The relation however of shareholder and Company is not in itself the relation of principal and agent. Salomon v. Salomon & Co. (1) and Daimler Co. Ltd.

v. Continental Tyre & Co. (2). Something more would be necessary in order to constitute a Company an agent for its shareholders. The contention on behalf of the Company in this case is that it cannot be held to be agent of the non-resident shareholders so as to be liable to be assessed for income tax for those share-holders by the procedure taken by the Collector under sec. 34 of the Income Tax Act. It is urged that sec. 34 should be read along with sec. 31 and unless a person receives income on behalf of another residing out of British India he cannot be deemed to be an agent under sec. 34, and although the Company has the income of those persons it is not in receipt of such income. Assuming that the Company is not in receipt of the income, in order to see whether the Company may be treated as agent—the provisions of the Income Tax Act commencing from sec. 31 should be examined. Under sec. 31 an agent of any person residing out of British India being in receipt on behalf of such non-resident person of any income chargeable under the Act* is held liable for the tax. If he is actually an agent and in receipt of income on behalf of the principal nothing more is necessary in order to render him liable, but the tax is to be levied upon and recoverable from him under sec. 31 irrespective of any other provision in any other section of the Act. It is not necessary in such a case for the Collector to give the agent so liable any notice under sec. 34 of his intention of treating him as agent of the non-resident person, because he is in fact the agent. Sec. 32 refers to the case where the income chargeable is received by the Court of Wards and certain other persons. This section has no direct bearing on the present question but it is noticeable that the income chargeable must be received by the Court of Wards or other persons in order that the tax may be levied upon them. Then comes sec. 33, sub-sec. (1) of which has an important bearing on the present question. Under this section any person residing out of British India whose income accrues or arises within British India “shall be chargeable to income tax in the name of the agent of any such person and such agent shall be deemed to be for all the purposes of the act the assessee in respect of such income tax.” As I read this section the agent of such a non-resident person need not be in receipt of the income on behalf of such person there being no such provision in it as in the preceding sections. The mere fact of agency is sufficient to make him liable to be assessed in respect of the income of the principal. Coming to sec. 34 it seems to me that it gives merely an extension of the meaning of the term “agent” as including persons who are treated as such, and who may be assessed under sec. 33 (1) although such persons are not really agents. Sec. 34 should be read in connection with the preceding section rather than with sec. 31. Sec. 34 refers to cases where the non-resident person has no agent in British India appointed by himself and therefore it becomes necessary to find a person who should be “deemed to be an agent” only for the purpose of the Income Tax Act and that can be done by the Collector acting in accordance with the provisions of this section. Sec. 34 in my opinion was enacted for the purpose of assessing the incomes of persons residing outside British India who are chargeable with income tax here but who have not appointed any agents residing in British India who might be assessed under sec. 33 (1). To hold otherwise, it seems to me, would be to support an anomaly that a person receiving his income through an agent in this country would be assessed, but if he asks his debtor to remit the income direct to him he would escape liability to pay the tax, a thing which this section was intended to remove. It is only necessary that the person on whom the Collector has served a notice under sec. 34 is a "person employed by or on behalf of a person residing out of British India or having any business connection with such person" and if that condition is satisfied the person on whom such notice has been served shall for the purposes of the Income Tax Act be deemed to be the agent of such person. The question whether the Company is a person coming within the description of sec. 34 presents to my mind very little difficulty.

The Company remits the incomes of the persons resident outside British India and should be held to have been employed to do so by or on behalf of the non-resident persons. The Company again has without doubt "connection" with the shareholders and what can that connection be but business connection? The Company itself states in its letter to the Collector that on the declaration of a dividend the Company is in the position of debtor to the share-holders. Therefore the Company also comes within the description of "having any business connection" with a non-resident person. To say that such person should also be in receipt of income on behalf of the non-resident person would be to make the enactment of the section unnecessary, because a person in receipt of income is liable to be assessed under sec. 31; also it would not be necessary to give him notice of the Collector's intention to treat him as agent, for a person receiving income for another would be an agent under the general law. It was urged on behalf of the Company that to make one person liable to income tax for another resident abroad, although he might not receive any income on behalf of such a person, might in some cases cause great hardship. The answer to this is two-fold; (1) it is a well-established rule that Courts ought not to be influenced by any notion of hardship in exceptional or individual cases in interpreting a statute, and (2) in order to prevent any case of hardship the proviso to sec. 34 has been enacted and the Collector may be trusted to give effect to any reasonable objection before treating a person as agent under this section. In the present case however there can be no such question of hardship. It may be observed that under sec. 21 of the repealed Income Tax Act (II of 1886) the tax was chargeable in the name of the agent where the income was received through the agent, and there was no provision corresponding to sec. 34 of the present Act. The alterations in the present Act were in my opinion, made to remove an anomaly as I have already indicated.

I would therefore answer the first question in the affirmative. The answer to the second question depends upon the first and no argument was addressed on it. Therefore the answer to it should also be in the affirmative.

No. 199 OF 1918.

MOOKERJEE, J.
BUCKLAND, J.1921,
21, June.BIBI JINJIRA KHATUN and ors., Defendants,

Appellants,

v.

MOHAMMAD FAKIRULLA
MIA and ors., Plaintiffs,
Respondents.

Mahomedan Law—Wakf—Musalman Wakf Validating Act (VI of 1913)—Provision for support and maintenance of family how far validates wakf—If wakf property be mortgaged at the time of dedication whether the wakf valid—Whether delivery of possession essential—Settlor in death illness—Wakf affects what share of the property—Death illness, conditions of—Question when one of fact only and when of law and fact.

In a wakf although provision is made for the maintenance and support of the family, children and descendants of the settlor, if the ultimate benefit is reserved for the poor and for other purposes recognized by the Mahomedan law as religious, pious or charitable purposes of a permanent character, then, tested in the light of the provisions of the Musalman Wakf Validating Act, no valid objection can be taken to the legality of such a wakf.

The circumstance that the property dedicated was under a mortgage at the time of creation of the endowment and that provision was made in the wakf for the discharge thereof does not render the endowment invalid under the Mahomedan Law.

SHAHZADI HAJRA BEGUM v. KHAJA HOSSAIN ALI KHAN (2) referred to.

According to the Calcutta High Court, a valid wakf is created by declaration of endowment by the owner, and delivery of possession is not essential.

Where the settlor had appointed himself as the first mutwali no formal delivery of possession from himself was a prerequisite to the validity of the wakf and even if transmutation of possession was necessary, no formal delivery was essential.

A Muslim who is in Marz-ul-maut or death-illness cannot make a valid disposition of more than one-third of his property after payment of funeral expenses and debts, and if he purports to make a wakf in such illness, unless his heirs assent, the wakf will affect only one-third of his estate and will be invalid in respect of the excess notwithstanding that possession of the entire property dedicated has been delivered to the person nominated mutwali.

In order to establish the existence of death-illness there must be at least three conditions with regard to the illness which has caused death: (a) proximate danger of death so that there is a preponderance of apprehension of death, (b) there must be some degree of subjective apprehension of death in the mind of the sick person and (c) there must be some external indicia such as inability to attend to ordinary avocations.

Whether or not a particular illness constitutes Marz-ul-maut is primarily a question of fact, but may sometimes be a mixed question of law and fact, for instance, where the question arises whether the facts found as to the physical condition of the deceased at the date of the execution of the deed constitute the essential elements of Marz-ul-maut as formulated by Mahomedan jurists.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Hem Kumar Neogi, Additional Subordinate Judge of Zillah Rajshahi, dated the 26th of March 1918.

Babus Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury, Krishna Kamal Moitra, Satyendra Nath Sinha and Indubhusan Majumdar for the Respondents.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the first two Defendants in a suit instituted by the Plaintiffs for a declaration that a wakf executed by the late Mohamed Elahi Buksh Sarkar on the 31st January 1915 is valid, that the first Plaintiff is the duly appointed mutwali thereof and that no title accrued to the seventh Defendant under the conveyance executed in his favour by the first six Defendants on the 11th April 1906. The Defendants resisted the claim upon every conceivable ground: the chief objections are indicated in the following three issues :—

“6. Was Elahi Buksh Sarkar at the date of execution of the wakfnama suffering from death illness? Was he physically and mentally incapable of executing the wakfnama when it is alleged to have been executed? Did Elahi Buksh Sarkar execute the wakfnama, if at all, with his free consent and with that of his heirs?

7. Did Elahi Buksh Sarkar belong to Shafi sect of Mahomedans? If so, was the alleged wakf valid?

8. Is the wakfnama propounded by the Plaintiff genuine and legally valid?”

The Subordinate Judge has found in favour of the Plaintiffs upon all the points in controversy and has decreed the suit. Upon the present appeal, his decree has been challenged substantially on four grounds, namely, first, that the wakf as is indicated by its terms was illusory and inoperative in law; secondly, that the wakf was invalid because the settlor was at the time heavily involved in debts and the properties dedicated were under mortgage; thirdly, that the wakf was invalid, as possession of the properties dedicated was not transferred to the mutwali during the life-time of the settlor; and fourthly, that the wakf in excess of a third share was invalid as it was executed when the settlor was suffering from marz-ul-maut or death-illness and without the consent of his heirs.

As regards the first point, it is plain that the legality of the dedication which, it is not now contested, was in the present case made by a Hanafi Mussalman, must be tested with regard to the provisions of the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act (Act VI of 1913). This Act came into force on the 7th March 1913, and in secs. 3 and 1 provides as follows :—

“3. It shall be lawful for any person professing the Mussalman faith to create a wakf which in all other respects is in accordance with the provisions of Mussalman law for the following among other purposes :—

(a) for the maintenance and support wholly or partially, of his family, children or descendants, and

(b) where the person creating is a Hanafi Mussalman, also for his own maintenance and support during his life-time or for the payment of his debts out of the rents and profits of the property dedicated :

Provided that the ultimate benefit is in such cases expressly or impliedly reserved for the poor or for any other purpose recognised by the Mussalman law as a religious, pious or charitable purpose of a permanent character.

4. No such wakf shall be deemed to be invalid merely because the benefit reserved therein for the poor or other religious, pious or charitable purpose of a permanent nature is postponed until after the extinction of the family, children or descendants of the person creating the wakf."

We shall now analyse the provisions of the wakfnama to show that they do not contravene the requirements formulated by the legislature. The preamble recites that the settlor is a Hanafi Mussalman and that he is anxious to attain salvation, though he also realises the paramount duty of every one to provide for the maintenance and worldly expenses of his own self and family, children and descendants. He accordingly creates the wakf for religious purposes, for the maintenance of his own self and family, children and descendants, and also to prescribe a suitable means for the payment of all his debts. Then follow detailed rules in seven paragraphs. The first paragraph lays down that the settlor shall be mutwali during his lifetime and then describes how the office of mutwali shall be held by his descendants from generation to generation, or in the event of extinction of his line, by suitable persons selected by the District Judge. The second paragraph describes the expenses to be met from the gross collections of the wakf estate. The third paragraph provides that one-eighth of the net income is to be spent for specified religious purposes, such as, prayer in mosques, instruction in religion and morals, distribution of alms, feeding of the poor and the like. The fourth paragraph provides that one-fourth of the net income is to be annually devoted for the liquidation of a mortgage debt of Rs. 20,000. After clearance of the debt, the amount is to be regularly applied in the payment of monthly allowance to poor Mussalman students. The fifth paragraph provides that one-half of the net income is to be applied for the payment of maintenance allowances to the descendants of the settlor in specified proportions; on failure of the person or persons to whom allowances are directed to be paid, their share of the money is to be applied for one or more of the religious acts previously mentioned. The sixth paragraph provides that one-sixteenth of the net income shall be carried to a reserve fund for payment of rent and revenue, if at any time there should be no good collection of rent from scarcity of crops due to drought or inundation. The seventh paragraph provides that the remaining one-sixteenth of the net income shall be received by the mutwali as his remuneration. This summary of the leading provisions of the wakf leaves no room for serious controversy that the dedication cannot in any sense be deemed illusory. Although provision is made for the maintenance and support of the family, children and descendants of the settlor, the ultimate benefit is reserved for the poor and for other purposes recognised by the Mahomedan law as religious, pious or charitable purposes of a permanent character. Indeed, there is an immediate gift to charity of a substantial character. We hold accordingly that tested in the light of the provisions of the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act, no valid objection can be taken to the legality of the wakf.

As regards the second point, it is plain that under sec. 3 (b) of the Wakf Validating Act, it is lawful for a person professing the Mussalman faith to create a wakf for the payment of his debts out of the rents and profits of the property dedicated. This is in accord with the case of Luchmi-pat Singh v. Amir Alum (1), which is an authority for the proposition that a Hanafi Mussalman may execute a valid wakf by a deed which directs that the income of the property dedicated should be applied, in the first instance, for the payment of his debts and after the discharge thereof, towards defined religious and charitable purposes. In an earlier case, Shahzadi Hajra Begum v. Khaja Hossain Ali Khan (2), it had been held by Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., that the existence of a mortgage at the time of creation of the endowment, does not render the endowment invalid under the Mahomedan law. This view is supported by texts of the highest authority. Thus, in the Fatawai Alamgiri (text, Vol. II, p. 458, Baillie, Digest, Part I, p. 563), it is stated on the authority of The Fath-ul-Kadir (text, Vol. II p. 638) :

"It is not a condition that the property dedicated should be free from the rights of others (hakh-ul-ghair) as in the case of pledge and bailment, so that if one were to give a lease of his land and were then to make a wakf of it before the expiration of the term, the wakf would be binding according to its conditions, and the contract of lease would not be voided, but on the expiration of the terms the land would revert to the purposes to which it was dedicated. In like manner if a man were to mortgage his land, and then dedicate it before redeeming it, the wakf would take effect, but the land would not be withdrawn in the same way from the mortgage, and if it should remain for years in the hands of the mortgagee and then be redeemed, it would revert to the uses for which it was made wakf. And if the mortgagor should die before redemption, yet if he should leave sufficient inheritance to redeem the land, it is to be redeemed and the wakf would take effect. But if he should not leave enough for that purpose, the land may be sold and the wakf would become void. In the case of a lease, when either the lessor or lessee dies, the lease becomes void, and the wakf immediately takes effect; so in the Fath-ul-kadir."

"Wakf, during his (the dedicator's) death-illness, has the same effect as gift during that period, that is, it is valid to the extent of a third (of the dedicator's estate) when possession is delivered. Now if the wakf can take effect out of a third (of the dedicator's estate) or (his) heir sanctions it, it would take effect in full, otherwise it would fail so far as it exceeds the third. If the heir sanctions it in part, it would be valid to that extent. Wakf created by one who has mortgaged his property and is in bad circumstances as well as by an ill person who is heavily indebted is ineffectual, but not by a debtor who is not ill, provided he creates it before his becoming incompetent (for dedicating his property on account of his heavy debts). If a dedicator who is indebted provides for the payment of his debts out of the usufruct, the wakf shall be valid, but should he make no such provision, the debt shall be paid out of surplus income, after meeting the expenses of the trust economically. If he dedicates the property for the benefit of a person other than himself, then the income of the dedicated property shall belong to him exclusively for whom it is dedicated—Fatawa of Ibn-i-Najeem.

I say that Ibn-I-Najeem has said that the debt must be heavy, because if it is not heavy, dedication shall be valid to the extent of a third of the dedicator's estate after payment of debts in case the dedicator has got heirs, otherwise in respect of the whole of it. If a Kazi sells the endowed property (to pay off the debts) and then some money is found, another land shall be purchased instead of the one sold. The whole of this discussion is to be found in the Is'at, under the Chapter on wakf by a sick people.

In the Wahbaniah it is said :—

If one dedicates mortgaged property and then redeems it, it is lawful. If he dies leaving behind money sufficient for redemption, no change (in the dedication) shall be necessary, that is to say, if he does not leave behind so much money, the wakf would fail or (the defraying of the expenses of the trust out of) the usufruct will be suspended (till payment of debt).

I say that in the Marrozat of Mufti Abu Saud it is recorded that he was enquired as to whether it was valid for a man to dedicate his property for the benefit of his descendants and thus avoid payment of his liabilities. His reply was that it is not valid and binding and that Kazis are forbidden from enforcing and registering such trusts so far as the liabilities extend. So remember this."

In our opinion, there can be no room for real doubt that the wakf in the present case is not invalidated by reason of the circumstances that the property dedicated was under mortgage and that the provision was made in the wakfnama for the discharge of the mortgage debt.

As regards the third point, it has been urged that the wakf must be pronounced invalid, in the absence of conclusive evidence to show that the possession of the properties dedicated was transferred to the mutwali during the life-time of the settlor. There is some divergence of opinion among classical Mussalman jurists on the question of the elements essential for the completion of a valid wakf. Under Hanafi law, a wakf is completed, (a) according to Abu Yusuf, by the mere declaration; [Hedaya trs. Hamilton and Grady, pp. 233, 239, 240. Baillie, Part I, pp. 551 and 591, Dayal v. Keramat (3)], (b) according to Imam Mohamed, it is completed, only if after the declaration a mutwali is appointed and possession is delivered to him; Muthukhana Rama- nadhan Chettiar v. Veda Levaai Morakayar (4), (c) according to Abu Hanifa, it is completed, except in the case of a testamentary wakf, only when a decree of the Court declares that the property is the subject of a wakf, but not before; this is analogous to the in jure cessio of Roman law and the fines of the early English law; (Hedaya trs. Hamilton and Grady, p. 233; Baillie, part 1, p. 550). In Doedem Jaun Bibi v. Abdullah (5), Ryan, C. J., and Grant, J., held, after reference to the Mohamadan law officers, that the exposition of Hanafi law by Abu Yusuf on this point should be adopted, in other words, that a valid wakf is created by declaration of endowment by the owner and delivery of possession is not essential. This decision, so far as we have been able to trace, does not appear to have been doubted in this Court, and was followed in Ramizan v. Zahur (6) as an authority for the proposition that the appointment of a mutwali is not essential to the validity of a wakf. It may also be observed that in Khaja Hossain Ali v. Hazara Begum (7), Mr. Justice Kemp whose opinion prevailed against that of Mr. Justice Markby and was upheld on appeal under the Letters Patent [Shahzadi Hazra Begum v. Khaja Hossain Ali (2)] observed that decisions are primarily given according to Abu Yusuf and next according to Imam Mohamed; and this preference to the opinion of Abu Yusuf is supported by the statement in the Fatawai Alamgiri (text, Vol. 11, pp. 454-455). Reference may also be made to the following passage from the Suzzat-ul-Fatawa, p. 430:—

"Though according to Mohamed, consignment of the dedicated property and separation of it (from the other properties of the wakf) are necessary to the completion of a wakf, according to Abu Yusuf, the wakf becomes absolute and binding, like emancipation, on the mere declaration of the wakf, and his right therein becomes extinguished at once. And in the Khulasa it is laid down that the jurists of Balkh decide according to the rule laid down by Abu Yusuf and Sadr-ush-Shahid has stated that the Fatawa is according to him; and in the Fath-ul-kadir it is mentioned that Abu Yusuf's opinion is the accepted doctrine; and in the Munich it is stated that the Fatawa is with Abu Yusuf and this is the rule accepted by the jurists of Balkh. But the Bokharites have adopted Mohammed's opinion. And in the Shar-i-Vikavali and the commentary of Mulla Khusru (the Durrar-ul-Akham) it is laid down that the Fatawa is with Abu Yusuf. In some places, it is mentioned in the Khanieh (Fataewai Kazi Khan) that the Fatawa is with Mohammed But in the Mohit it is laid down that the universality of our jurists have adopted the rule laid down by Abu Yusuf and this is correct."

In a recent case in the Allahabad High Court, however, [Mohammad Azizuddin Ahmed v. Legal Remembrancer, N. W. P. (8)], where the decision in Doedem Jaun Bibi v. Abdullah (5) was not brought to the notice of the Court, preference was given to the opinion of Imam Mohammed. We do not see sufficient reason to depart from the rule which was enunciated more than eighty years ago by the Supreme Court and is not shown to have been ever successfully challenged. We notice that the question was raised but not actually decided in Banubi v. Narsingrao (9), inasmuch as, in the circumstances of that case, there was neither declaration of wakf nor delivery of possession; a mere intention to set apart property for charitable purposes was clearly not sufficient to create a valid wakf [Mulla Vectil Ussain v. Subramania Ayyar (10)]. In the present case, there is a further difficulty in the path of the Appellants. Here the settlor had appointed himself as the first mutwali, and in such a contingency, no formal delivery of possession from himself would be necessary even according to Imam Mohammed [Abdul v. Bai Juna Bai (11)]. We must further remember that the wakfnama was executed on the 31st January 1915, and the settlor died on the 15th April 1915. It can hardly be expected that during this short period, there could be many transactions indicative of transmutation of possession. But such evidence as is on the record points to the conclusion that, after the execution of the wakfnama, the settlor held the dedicated property, not as owner but as mutwali. The direct oral evidence on the point is corroborated by the collection papers, the counterfoils of rent receipts, the plaints in rent suits and the power-of-attorney which have been produced to show that after the date of the wakfnama Elahi Baksh held and managed the endowed property in the character of mutwali. There is consequently no room for the application of the principle which has sometimes been recognised, namely, that where the declaration of a wakf is not acted upon by the settlor and its objects are not given effect to, it may be presumed that the wakf was not completed or that the settlor had no bona fide intention to create a wakf, Dilroos Banoo Begum v. Nawab Asghar Ally Khan (12) and Zooleka v. Zynal Abedin (13). We hold accordingly that delivery of possession was not a pre-requisite to the validity of the wakf in the present case, and that even if transmutation of possession was necessary no formal delivery was essential, as the settlor was himself the first mutwali. The third ground consequently fails.

As regards the fourth point, it has been urged that the wakf was invalid to the extent of a two-thirds share inasmuch as it was executed by the settlor in death-illness without the consent of the future heirs. The Subordinate Judge negatived this contention as, in his opinion, the evidence did not establish that the settlor was in death-illness at the time of execution of the deed of wakf. Before we refer to the evidence on the point, the requisites of the Mohammedan law on the subject may be usefully recalled here. It is well-settled that gift made by a Mussalman during Marz-ul-maut or death-illness cannot take effect beyond a third of the surplus of his estate, after payment of funeral expenses and debts, unless the heirs give their consent, after the death of the donor, to the excess taking effect, Ibrahim Goolam Ariff v. Sailboo (14), nor can such gifts take effect if made in favour of an heir, unless the other heirs consent thereto after the donor's death. [Khajooroonnessa v. Rowshan Jehan (15) and Bafatun v. Bilaiti Khanum (16)]. Similarly, a wakf made in death-illness is valid only to the extent of a third of the net estate left by the deceased unless the heir's consent [Baillie Part I, p. 601, Part II, p. 212; Ali Hissin v. Fazla Husain (17)]. The substance of the matter is that a Muslim who is in Marz-ul-maut or death-illness cannot make a valid disposition of more than one-third of his property, and if he purports to make a wakf in such illness, unless his heirs assent, the wakf will affect only one-third of his estate and will be invalid in respect of the excess; and it is important to add that this principle operates, notwithstanding that possession of the entire property dedicated has been delivered to the person nominated mutwali. In order to establish the existence of death-illness, there must be at least three conditions with regard to the illness which has caused death: (a) proximate danger of death, so that there is a preponderance of apprehension of death, (b) there must be some degree of subjective apprehension of death in the mind of the sick person; and (c) there must be some external indicia, such as inability to attend to ordinary avocations. Whether or not a particular illness constitutes Marz-ul-maut is primarily a question of fact, as stated by Lord Robertson in Ibrahim v. Sailboo (14), but it may sometimes be a mixed question of law and fact, for instance, where the question arises whether the facts found as to the physical condition of the deceased at the date of execution of the deed constitute the essential elements of a Marz-ul-maut as formulated by Mohammedan jurists. The leading authorities in this Court which support these propositions are the cases of Husarat Bibi v. Goolam Jaffar (18) and Fatima Bibi v. Ahmad Baksh (19), which was affirmed by the Judicial Committee in Fatima Bibi v. Ahmad Baksh (20). In the case last mentioned, the three elements emphasised were (1) illness, (2) expectation of a fatal issue and (3) certain physical incapacities which indicate the degree of the illness. The second condition, it was pointed out, cannot be presumed to exist from the existence of the first, while the incapacities indicated in the third condition (with perhaps the single exception of the case where a man cannot stand up to say his prayers) are more or less of an empirical character, based upon an imperfectly devolved science of diagnosis and cannot possibly serve as infallible signs of death-illness. The importance of the subjective element was emphasised in the course of argument and will be found developed in the texts set out by Mr. Mohammed Yusuf in his Tagore Law Lectures on Marriage Dower and Divorce, Vol. III, paras. 2919-2924, 2945-2947. This view, however, is repudiated by Sir Abdur Rahim in his Tagore Law Lectures on Mahomedan Jurisprudence (p. 255), where reference is made to Kulsoom Bibi v. Goolam Hussan Cassim (21). A view similar to that adopted in this Court has been taken in the Bombay High Court in the case of Sara Bai v. Rabia Bai (22) and Rasid v. Sherbanoo (23), by the Allahabad High Court in the cases of Labbi v. Bibban (24), Mohammed Gulshere Khan v. Mariam Begum (25), Mahsud Hassan v. Anwar Hussain (26), Muhammad Sayced v. Muhammad Ismail (27), Nazar Ali v. Rafiq Husain (28), Khurshed Husain v. Fayaz Husain (29), Shaiikh Muham- med v. Khadeja Bibi (30), Wazir Jan v. Altaf Ali (31) and Fazl Ahmed v. Rahim Bibi (32) and by the Patna High Court in Fazlur Rahaman v. Mohammed Umar (33). (See also Durrul Mukhtar, tr. Dayal, p. 411—Hedaya, trs. Hamilton and Grady, p. 685 and Baillie, Part I, pp. 551-552). We have now to consider, whether the evidence shows that, in the words of Lords Robertson in Ibrahim v. Sailboon (14), the wakf was made "under the pressure of the sense of imminence of death." The deed of wakf, as we have seen, was executed on the 31st January 1915, and was registered on the following day. The Defendants rely chiefly upon documentary evidence to show that from the beginning of November 1914, to the middle of January 1915, Elahi Buksh was ill and that he was laid up again in the second week of March 1915. The Defendants have also adduced oral evidence to show that Elahi Buksh was ill continuously from November 1914 to April 1915, when his death took place. The Subordinate Judge has carefully analysed the oral evidence and has come to the conclusion that the persons who have come forward to depose in favour of the Defendants cannot be regarded as witnesses of truth. After examination of this evidence in detail we see no reason to doubt that the Subordinate Judge correctly estimated its value, specially as the witnesses, almost without exception, are not free from bias. As regards the documentary evidence, it appears that in a suit instituted by Elahi Buksh against one Ataraddin Mondal and others for arrears of rent, the Defendants cited him as a witness. The result was that on the 3rd

November 1914, Elahi Buksh applied for time to give his evidence, and four days later, he prayed that as he was an old man of 77, bed-ridden with fever for a week, he might be examined on commission. This was supported by an affidavit from Kabiraj Sris Chandra Sen who certified that he was suffering from chronic intermittent fever; this Kabiraj has been examined as a witness in this case. An order was made for the issue of a commission but a postponement was obtained, as the pleader was unwell on the date fixed (7th March 1915). Thereupon the Commissioner went to examine Elahi Buksh on the 14th March 1915, but he was asked to postpone the examination, as the illness had increased and the patient had very little hope of surviving. This was supported by a certificate from Kabiraj Satis Chandra Sen stating that Elahi Buksh was confined to bed from fever, piles and pain, that he was unable to speak and that there was danger of death if he gave his deposition. Neither the Commissioner nor the Kabiraj has been examined as a witness, and the statements in the report by the Commissioner to the Court and in the certificate given by the Kabiraj are not admissible in evidence. But, the statements, even if admitted do not show the condition of Elahi Buksh on the 31st January 1915, when the wakf-nama was executed. The Subordinate Judge has further observed that Elahi Buksh was perhaps reluctant to give evidence and that the allegations as to the state of his health were not improbably exaggerated. This finds some support in the evidence adduced by the Plaintiffs, which relates to a point of time much nearer to the date of execution of the wakf-nama than the evidence of the incidents mentioned by the witnesses of the Defendants. The evidence led by the Plaintiffs shows that in January 1915

Elahi Buksh went to the house of his father-in-law at Rajarampur which involved a journey by bullock cart over 12 to 14 miles of road. One of these journeys was shortly before, while the other was shortly after, the 31st January 1915. On his return journey, he lost a silver betel-pot and on the 6th February 1915, he lodged information at the police station. He had also an altercation on the way with Kadir Buksh, a witness of this case, who laid an information with the police against Elahi Buksh and his peon on the 21st January 1915. There can thus be no doubt on the oral evidence, supported by reliable documentary evidence, that between the 21st January and the 6th February 1915, the state of health of Elahi Buksh was such that he was able to go from village to village to see his friends and relations, to arbitrate in the settlement of disputes of other people, and to follow the ordinary avocations of life. In cases of this character, when direct evidence of the state of health of the settlor on the date of the deed is not available, the evidence of antecedent and subsequent conditions of the settlor should converge to that point of time; this test is well-satisfied in the present case. Even if it be assumed that Elahi Buksh was ill in November and December 1914, and in the first week of January 1915 and further that he was ill again from the middle of March till his death in the middle of April, the validity of the wakf-nama executed on the 31st January 1915 cannot be successfully impeached on the ground of Marz-ul-maut, when there is positive evidence to show that from the middle of January to the middle of February 1915, which includes the date of execution of the deed, he was in a fairly good state of health. In such circumstances it cannot be urged that the wakf-nama was executed under the pressure of the sense of imminence of death.

BIBI JINJIRA KHATUN v. MOHAMMAD FAKIRULLA MIA.

We hold accordingly that the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge on this part of the case cannot be successfully challenged.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 29 (b), enhancement of rent by contract by more than two annas in the rupee—Tenant proving previous rent, onus on Plaintiff to justify the enhancement—Sec. 109—Decision under sec. 105, if bars the entertainment of a defence to a suit already instituted—Sec. 105, decision under, if can have retrospective effect—Sec. 110.

In a suit for arrears of rent, the Plaintiff claimed an enhanced rent on the basis of a kabuliyat. The tenant proved the previous rent and that the enhancement claimed was in excess of two annas in the rupee. The Plaintiff claimed the benefit of a decision under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act pronounced subsequent to the institution of the rent suit and before the trial thereof:

Held—That as the previous rent of the tenant had been proved, it was for the Plaintiff to justify the enhancement of the rent claimed which was obviously in excess of the enhancement allowed by sec. 29 (b) Bengal Tenancy Act.

MANINDRA CHANDRA NANDY v. UPENDRA CHANDRA HAZRA (1) followed.

Even assuming that the expression “entertain an application or suit” in sec. 109 includes an application or suit made or instituted before the date of the application, suit or proceeding under secs. 105 to 108, it is clear that what is barred is the entertainment of an application or suit and not the entertainment of a defence to an application or suit.

APURBA KRISHNA ROY v. SHYAMA CHARAN PRAMANIK (2) distinguished.

The fair rent settled under sec. 105 cannot possibly have retrospective effect on liability for rent incurred in respect of a period prior to the decision under sec. 105.

This was an appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent Act from the decision of Mr. Justice Panton, dated the 18th August 1920, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 121 of 1919, affirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh (Babu Sarat Ch. Basu), dated the 28th September 1918, which had confirmed a decree of the Munsif of that place (Babu Birendra Kumar Dutt), dated the 16th April 1918.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment of Panton, J., which was as follows:—

PANTON, J.—“A preliminary objection is made on behalf of the Respondents that substitution of the heirs of Respondent No. 6, who died before the filing of the appeal, was improperly made by a Division Bench of this Court by its order of the 13th June last. There is no substance in the objection since the heirs in question were already parties to this appeal.

The Appellants sued to recover the rent of a raiyati holding, with cesses, at the rate of Rs. 22-1 a year, for the years 1320-1323, B. S. The defence was that the correct rate was Rs. 12-2 a year, at which rate the Munsif decreed the suit. An appeal by the Plaintiffs to the Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh failed and against his decision this second appeal is preferred.

The Plaintiffs relied in the Courts below upon a kabuliyat, executed in respect to the holding in the year 1301, in which the rent is fixed at the rate claimed by them; and they also rely upon the proceedings of the settlement officer under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in which, acting upon the kabuliyat, I have just mentioned, he settled the rent of the holding at the rate provided for in it.

The learned Subordinate Judge finds that the rent before the execution of the kabuliyat was at the rate of Rs. 12-2 and that the Plaintiffs had not been able to discharge the onus of proving that the enhancement effected by the kabuliyat did not offend against the provisions of sec. 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It is here argued that the Plaintiffs are entitled to recover rent at the rate settled by the Revenue Officer under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that effect should be given to a finding come to in the course of his judgment that rent was in fact paid in the past at the higher rate. The rent claimed is, as I have observed, that of the years 1320-1323 B. S. The Revenue Officer's decision is dated October 1917, that is in 1324. It can only have effect from that date and does not relate back to years before the fair and equitable rent was settled. Nor does sec. 109 of the Act apply to the incidental finding of the Revenue Officer as to the rate at which rent was in fact paid in the past. That no doubt, is a fact which the Revenue Officer can properly consider in arriving at what the fair and equitable rent is. But it is incidental only and not the subject of the application made, suit instituted or proceedings taken under secs. 105 to 108 within the meaning of sec. 109.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs."

This is an appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Panton in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent.

The Plaintiffs claimed rent at the rate of Rs. 22-1 per year in respect of four years from the 14th April 1913 to the 13th April 1917. The Defendants pleaded that rent was payable at the rate of Rs. 12-2 per annum. The suit was instituted on the 21st April 1917 and was decided by the first Court on the 16th April 1918. The claim of the Plaintiffs was founded upon a kabuliyat executed by the predecessors of the Defendants on the 19th April 1894. The rent payable thereunder was that claimed in the suit. The Defendants contended that the kabuliyat was in contravention of sec. 29 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The trial Court held that the Defendants had successfully proved by the production of road cess return filed by the landlords on the 26th May 1885 that the rent was originally fixed at the rate of Rs. 12-2. Consequently there was, prima facie, an increase of Rs. 9-15 by means of the contract of the 19th April 1894. This was plainly in contravention of sec. 29. In these circumstances, from the decision of this Court in the case of Manindra Chandra Nandy v. Upendra

RAJENDRA NARAIN MAZUMDAR v. SHEIKH KALIM.

Chandra Hazra (1), it followed that as the previous rent of the tenant had been proved, it was for the Plaintiffs to justify the enhancement of the rent claimed which was obviously in excess of the enhancement allowed by the statute. The Plaintiffs tried to discharge this burden by the allegation that at the time of the execution of the kabuliyat it was discovered that the Defendants were in occupation of excess lands. But this was not established to the satisfaction of the trial Judge who consequently held that the rent as fixed in the kabuliyat was not recoverable. The Plaintiffs, however, contended that they were entitled to the benefit of a decision under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which had been pronounced on the 19th September 1917 subsequent to the institution of this suit for arrears of rent and before the trial thereof. This contention was overruled and the rent was decreed at the rate admitted by the Defendants. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge the decision of the primary Court was affirmed and Mr. Justice Panton has confirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judges.

In this Court the substantial contention on behalf of the Plaintiff-Appellant is that by virtue of sec. 109, it is not open to the tenants to contend, contrary to the decision in the proceeding under sec. 105, that the rent was payable, not at the rate of Rs. 22-1 but at the rate of Rs. 12-2. In support of this proposition reliance has been placed upon the decision of this Court in the case of Apurba Krishna Roy v. Shyama Charan Pramanik (2). We are of opinion that this contention cannot be supported, however much the plain language of sec. 109 may be strained.

Sec. 109 is in the following terms :—

Civil Court shall not entertain any application or suit concerning any matter which is or has been the subject of an application made, suit instituted or proceedings taken under sec. 105 to 108, both inclusive.” Let it be assumed for the moment that the expression “entertain an application or suit” includes an application or suit made or instituted before the date of the application, suit or proceeding under secs. 105 to 108. It is clear that what is barred is the entertainment of an application or suit and not the entertainment of a defence to an application or suit. In the case before us, if the contention of the Appellants were to prevail, the Court would be incompetent to entertain their suit for rent, and this undoubtedly is not their object in invoking the aid of sec. 109. The decision in Apurba Krishna Roy v. Shyama Charan Pramanik (2) is of no assistance to them. It was there ruled that sec. 109 was a bar to a civil suit by a person claiming a rent-free title when in a proceeding under sec. 105 the same question arose and rent was assessed on account of the failure of the Defendant in the proceeding under sec. 105 to adduce evidence in support of his allegation of the rent-free title. In that case, the suit which was held to be barred under sec. 109 had been instituted by the tenant who had failed to adduce evidence in support of his defence in the proceedings for settlement of fair rent under sec. 105. In the present case, the suit has been instituted by the landlord. It is clear that the fair rent which had been settled in the proceeding under sec. 105 cannot possibly have retrospective effect. The rent was claimed from the 14th April 1913 to the 13th April 1917. The proceeding for the assessment of fair rent was instituted under sec. 105 in 1914 and the decision thereunder was pronounced on the 19th September 1917. Under sec. 110 the rent settled by the Revenue Officer would take effect from the beginning of the agricultural year next after the date of the decision fixing the rent; that is, next after the 19th September 1917. This could not alter the liability for rent already incurred in respect of the period between the 14th April 1913 and the 13th April 1917. We are clearly of opinion that the view taken by Mr. Justice Panton is correct and his judgment must be affirmed.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

THE CORPORATION OF VISCOUNT HALDANE. CALCUTTA, Appellant,
LORD ATKINSON. v.
LORD PHILLIMORE. THE CHAIRMAN OF 1921, THE COSSIPORE AND
12, July. CHITPORE MUNICIPALITY, Respondent.

Bengal Municipal Act (III, B. C., of 1884), sec. 101—"Machinery," meaning of—Balancing tank of Calcutta Municipality with supporting structure, at its pumping station, if machinery and exempted from assessment as such.

Held—That neither the balancing tank at No. 1, Khelat Babu's Lane within the Cossipore and Chitpore Municipality (which is used to regulate the supply of water to the Calcutta Corporation) nor its supporting structure, nor both combined are "machinery" within the meaning of sec. 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act.

There is nothing in the language of the Act or in the objects it was designed to effect to suggest that the word "machinery" was used in any special sense differing from its ordinary sense.

The determination in any given case of what is or is not machinery must, to a large extent, depend upon the special facts of the case.

The word "machinery" must mean something more than a collection of ordinary tools. It must mean something more than a solid structure built upon the ground whose parts either do not move at all, or if they do move, do not move the one with or upon the other in interdependent action with the object of producing a specific and definite result.

There is great danger in attempting to give a definition of the word "machinery" which will apply in all cases. The word when used in ordinary language prima facie means some mechanical contrivances which, by themselves or in combination with one or more other mechanical contrivances, by the combined movement and interdependent operation of their respective parts generate power, or evoke, modify, apply or direct natural forces with the object in each case of effecting so definite and specific a result.

This was an appeal against the decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated the 18th March 1919.

The suit giving rise to this appeal was Suit No. 75 of 1915 in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Alipore, which was brought by the present Appellant against the present Respondent. The question therein was whether the Cossipore and Chitpore Municipality has acted ultra vires in assessing the Corporation of Calcutta on an annual value of Rs. 25,000 in respect of a certain holding described in the plaint.

The Subordinate Judge answered this question in the affirmative and he passed a decree for the Plaintiff, viz., the Corporation of Calcutta. But his judgment was reversed by the final decree of the High Court above-mentioned whereby the suit was dismissed with costs.

The present appeal had been preferred by the Plaintiff, viz., the Corporation of Calcutta.

Within the limits of the Respondent Municipality the Corporation of Calcutta possesses two buildings, one being No. 71, Barrackpore Trunk Road and the other which is over 16 bighas in extent, being No. 1, Khelat Babu's Lane. The last-mentioned holding to which the present litigation related was assessed by the Respondent Municipality for rating purposes at the annual value of Rs. 25,000, this sum having been finally determined by a Board of Commissioners under sec. 114 hereinafter referred to as the Appeal Board. The case for the Appellant Corporation was that this assessment was ultra vires and was open to revision and cancellation by the Court, and the ground of complaint was that the storage tank erected on the holding was machinery and had improperly been taken into consideration in arriving at the said annual value.

A pumping station and engine-house of the Corporation Water-works are situated at No. 71, Barrackpore Trunk Road and the water is there pumped into underground reservoirs, whence it is pumped into the main pipes supplying Calcutta. About 350 feet from the pumping station was erected at No. 1, Khelat Babu's Lane a structure of concrete and masonry (the construction of which alone cost over a lac) with columns or trestles which supports a large steel storage tank. The said tank is connected by pipes with the pumping house and is utilised as follows. When the water pumped up exceeds the quantity required by the city the excess is allowed to pass through a valve operated by hand into the said storage tank. On the other hand, when the water pumped up is insufficient to meet the demand, the water in the tank runs out again by the same pipe by which it was pumped into the tank, the valve being opened again to let it out. One of the witnesses referred to it as a balancing tank, and explained that its function was to store water when the demand was small and to supplement the supply given by the pumps when the demand was large. The case for the Appellant Corporation was that the said erection and the tank constituted machinery on the holding, and should in no way have been taken into consideration in arriving at its rateable value.

On the 15th June 1915 the Plaintiff Corporation instituted the present suit. In the plaint it set out from its point of view the facts of the case and prayed that the said assessment should be declared ultra vires and be quashed and set aside, and that the Defendant Municipality be directed to make a fresh valuation and assessment of the said holding according to law. An injunction and other relief were also asked for.

A written statement of defence was put in on behalf of the Defendant, viz., the Respondent Municipality. It was pleaded inter alia that the decision of the Appeal Board was final, and that the assessment was legal.

On these pleadings issues were framed as follows:—

(1) Has the Court jurisdiction to try this suit?

(2) Whether the valuation and assessment made by the Defendant Municipality of the premises in suit were made according to law and procedure of the Bengal Municipal Act, and whether they are binding on the Plaintiff? Has the Civil Court any power to look into the first portion of this issue?

(3) Whether the overhead tank mentioned in the pleadings is or is not liable to be valued, having regard to the provisions of sec. 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act, especially having regard to the third proviso to the said section?

(4) Whether the Plaintiff is entitled to the declarations prayed for in the plaint?

(5) To what relief, if any, is the Plaintiff entitled?

The suit having come on for hearing before the Subordinate Judge, he delivered judgment therein on the 24th July 1916 for the Plaintiff and passed a decree making the declarations prayed for. He was of opinion that the proceedings of the Appeal Board were not conclusive and that the tank with the structure supporting it was machinery within the meaning of the Bengal Municipal Act and that its value had been taken into consideration for the purpose of assessment contrary to the final clause of sec. 101.

Against the said decree an appeal was preferred by the present Respondent to the High Court. The case came on for hearing before two learned Judges, who differed in opinion. They delivered their judgments on the 12th April 1918. Mr. Justice Chatterji held "That the tank is not machinery within the third proviso to sec. 101, and that even assuming it is machinery its existence upon the holding has been rightly taken into account in arriving at the annual value of the holding under sec. 101," and he was for allowing the appeal and dismissing the suit. Mr. Justice Walmsley held "That the tank is machinery and that the third proviso to sec. 101 is an absolute prohibition against taking the tank into account in arriving at the annual value," and he was for dismissing the appeal and affirming the decree appealed from.

In consequence of this difference of opinion, the appeal stood dismissed and the present Respondent preferred a further appeal under the provisions of the Letters Patent.

The said appeal came on for hearing before a bench of three Judges, and the learned Judges had the executive engineer of the waterworks of the Calcutta Corporation called as a witness, and he gave additional evidence explaining the utility of the said tank and produced certain plans which were exhibited.

On the 18th March 1919 the learned Judges delivered their judgments and in the result a decree was passed allowing the appeal and dismissing the suit with costs throughout.

Mr. Justice Beachcroft, in the course of his judgment, said :—

"It is not suggested that the tank by itself could be called machinery, but it is argued that it answers that description by reason of its connection with the pumps, the two, to use Mr. MacCabe's words, being 'designed as one unit,' and the fact that it is part of the system for supplying water to the city . . .

"It seems to me that the function of the tank is simply this, to store water during those hours when the demand is comparatively small and to supplement the supply given by the pumps when the demand is large. In my opinion, the tank is not 'machinery' . . .

"It is conceded that if it be held that the tank is not machinery, no objection can be legally taken to the assessment. And it is obviously so for the tank being attached to the earth is 'land' within the definition contained in sec. 6 (5) of the Act and as such liable to assessment. I would allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs in both Courts."

Mr. Justice Greaves, who agreed with this conclusion, said :—

"I am not unmindful that we are in the present case called on to construe the meaning of 'machinery' in a clause in a statute imposing a rate and to construe the word in respect of an exemption from liability in respect of the rate imposed, but even so I am not prepared to hold that the steel tank falls within the meaning of machinery in the third proviso to sec. 101. Upon the evidence it appears to me that the tank in question is nothing more than a building for the storage of water, the water so stored being used when the need arises to supplement the amount of water pumped into the mains from the underground reservoir. It no doubt forms part of the system for supplying Calcutta with water and is filled from the same pumps which pump the supply of water into the mains, but that in my opinion does not make it machinery within the third proviso to sec. 101. Prima facie the tank is not a machine and I do not see that it becomes a machine by reason of its connection with the pumps and engine by means of the steel pipe.

"In this view the other question, namely, whether if the tank is machinery it should be taken into account in arriving at a valuation of a holding, does not arise; but assuming that I am wrong in the conclusion at which I have arrived and that the tank is machinery, then I do not think that the Cossipore and Chitpore Municipality were justified in taking its existence into account in valuing the holding."

Mr. Justice Fletcher, who dissented, said:—

"On the evidence I think the overhead tank is a mechanical contrivance used in connection with the pumps for the attainment of a particular end and that it forms an integral part of the machinery for the distribution of the filtered water supply to Calcutta. This, I think, brings the overhead tank within the definition of 'machinery' given by Davey, L. J., in Chamberlayne v. Collins (1).

"I agree, therefore, with the conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge that the tank is not liable to be taken into consideration for the purpose of valuing the holding.

"The second contention was that even if the tank is 'machinery' within the meaning of sec. 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act, the existence of machinery on the holding should not be left out of consideration. This view was adopted by Chatterjea, J., and in the course of his judgment he has referred to certain English authorities in support of his view. But those cases were decided on a totally different statute and it is, I think, misleading to refer to those cases for the purpose of the construction of sec. 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act. Sec. 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act, I think, excludes machinery from the valuation of the holding for all purposes."

The appeal to His Majesty in Council was brought against the decree of the High Court referred to above under a certificate granted by the High Court on the 19th August 1919.

Messrs. A. MacMorran, K. C., A. M. Dunne, K. C. and A. M. Lallier for the Appellant.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C., E. M. Konstam, K. C., and Kenworthy Brown for the Respondent.

LORD ATKINSON.—This is an appeal against the decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated the 18th March 1919.

The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted in the Subordinate Court at Alipore by the present Appellants against the present Respondent. The question raised therein was whether the Cossipore and Chitpore Municipality had acted ultra vires in assessing the Corporation of Calcutta on an annual value of Rs. 25,000 in respect of a certain holding described in the plaint.

The Subordinate Judge answered this question in the affirmative and gave a decree for the Plaintiffs, the Corporation of Calcutta. But his judgment was reversed by the final decree of the High Court above-mentioned whereby the suit was dismissed with costs.

The present appeal has been preferred by the Plaintiffs, the Corporation of Calcutta, from this decree.

CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA v. CHAIRMAN OF THE COSSIPORE, CHITPORE MUNICIPALITY.

The Appellants supply Calcutta with water, and for this purpose own two holdings of land, one situate at 71, Barrackpore Road, Tallah, on which there is now and has for some time past been a reservoir and a pumping station. This piece of land has been assessed as a separate holding for the purposes of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884 (Bengal Act III of 1884), and the other, an adjoining holding, No. 1, Khelat Babu's Lane, situate about 380 to 400 feet distant from the pumping station and measuring about 16 bighas, 18 cottahs and 5 chittacks of land. It is with regard to the assessment of this latter piece of land (hereinafter referred to as No. 2 holding) that this litigation has arisen. Both pieces of land are within the municipal boundary of the Defendant's Municipality (the Respondent).

The principal waterworks of the Appellants are situate at a place named Pulta, about 15 miles from Calcutta, and its principal pumping and distributing station is at Tallah; the pump and engine-house are situate on the piece of land, called in this case holding or lot No. 1, at 71, Barrackpore Road. On this latter plot a very large underground reservoir has been constructed, from which the water is pumped into the mains at the rate of about 2,000,000 gallons per hour. These pumps work continuously, night and day.

Lot or holding No. 2 is described in the Appellants' plaint as measuring about 16 bighas, 18 cottahs and 5 chittacks, and having upon it an old stone masonry building measuring 30 by 20 feet, used as an out-office, and an overhead steel tank, resting on and supported by steel columns and girders. The tank is styled a balancing tank, and is capable of holding when full about 9,000,000 gallons. It is by pipes connected with the pumping-house.

Before its erection the Appellants endeavoured to send through their mains to Calcutta a constant supply of water, as far as possible at an equal pressure. In addition to the pumps and underground reservoirs at their main pumping station, they had a number of subsidiary pumps and reservoirs at different places in or near the town. These subsidiary pumps only worked during the day time. This system of distribution was adopted in order to cope if possible with the difficulty presented by the extreme want of uniformity in the rate at which water was used and consumed in Calcutta. During the hours of the morning, from 6 o'clock to 10 o'clock, the consumption in Calcutta amounted to nearly 4 million gallons per hour, about twice as much as the principal pumps were capable of pumping into the mains; while during the afternoon and the evening so much less water was consumed in the town that the principal pumps, working as they did continuously, were able to supply what was sufficient. After the erection of the balancing tank the subsidiary pumps and reservoirs were no longer used, and the following method was adopted in substitution for them to furnish Calcutta with a constant and at all times an adequate supply of water. When the consumption in Calcutta exceeded what the pumps could pump into the mains, the balancing tank was tapped by opening with the hand a cock or valve on one of the pipes connecting the tank with the water mains. Through this pipe the water flowed into the mains. Not only did it mingle with and increase the volume of the water already in the mains, but, by reason of the elevation of the tank the force of gravity acting on the water the moment it passed from the tank into the pipes, caused it to rush as it were through the pipe and increase the velocity at which the whole volume of water in the mains flowed towards the town. When the demand in the town had decreased to less than the pumps could supply, a cock on another pipe connected with the tank was by hand opened and the unneeded surplus water was pumped back into the tank, replenishing it so as to raise the level of the water in it to what it was before the discharge of the morning took place. Before the erection of this tank the holding No. 2 of the Appellants was by the Commissioners of the municipality in exercise of their powers under the aforesaid Act of 1884, assessed at the annual value of Rs. 1,053.

After the erection of the tank with its supporting structure, which cost the Appellants about 20 lakhs of rupees, they assessed this holding at the annual value of Rs. 1,27,030 on the basis of the cost of construction, and demanded rates to the amount of Rs. 1,462-5-3. On an objection being made by the Appellants this assessment was, in the month of August 1914, revised and reduced to Rs. 30,000, that being the yearly rent at which, according to the Respondent assessors, it might reasonably be expected to be let as it stood to a hypothetical tenant. On a further revision in March 1916, the assessment was, on the same basis reduced to Rs. 25,000. It was not really disputed that the rise in the assessment from Rs. 1,053 to Rs. 30,000 was due to the fact that the value of the tank and its supporting structure was not excluded from consideration. The Appellants contend that the tank and its supporting structure are, within the meaning of the third proviso of sec. 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act of 1884, "machinery," and being so, that the Respondent was bound by the provisions of that section to exclude them from consideration in making the assessment of Lot No. 2, and that in taking them into consideration and thereby raising the assessment they acted ultra vires. Sec. 101 runs as follows :—

" 101. The gross annual rent at which any holding may be reasonably expected to let shall be deemed to be the annual value thereof, and such value shall accordingly be determined by the Commissioners and entered in the valuation list.

" Provided that (except in the Darjeeling Municipality), if there be on a holding any building or buildings the actual cost of erection of which can be ascertained, or estimated, the annual value of such holding shall in no case be deemed to exceed an amount which would be equal to seven and a half per centum on such cost, in addition to a reasonable ground rent for the land comprised in the holding:

" Provided also that, where the actual cost so ascertained shall exceed one lakh of rupees, the percentage on the annual value to be levied in respect of so much of the cost as is in excess of one lakh of rupees shall not exceed one-fourth of the percentage determined by the Commissioners under sec. 102:

" Provided further that in estimating the annual value of a holding under this section, the value of any machinery that may be on such holding shall not be taken into consideration."

It thus results that the sole question for decision on this appeal is whether or not this balancing tank with its supporting structure is "machinery" within the meaning of the last proviso of this section. No definition of the term "machinery" is to be found in the Act. It is not an easy task to define its meaning. Perhaps the consideration of what are the precise functions which the tank and its supports respectively discharge may afford some assistance. The supporting structure merely serves to give the tank elevation so that the water which is allowed to escape from it may have a fall. The same function would be discharged by any hill-side into an excavation upon which a reservoir was constructed at an adequate height above the house or town which the reservoir has to supply with water.

Then as to the tank itself, what functions does it discharge? It is a receptacle for water. It holds the water that is poured into it as long as that is desired. It is stationary. It does not move, nor do any of its parts move, the one upon the other. While water is in it the force of gravity acts upon the water; but the strength and rigidity of its sides counteract that force and prevent the escape or movement of the water. When this water is allowed to escape from it through a hole or holes in its side into pipes, the same force of gravity acts upon the water and pushes or draws it down the pipes, but this force of gravity acting on the unimprisoned water is neither generated, modified, directed nor applied by the tank. The latter does not move anything automatically. If it be a machine and its parts be machinery, then it is difficult to see why every reservoir which holds the water that is poured into it and lets that water escape from it through an opening on its side or bottom when that opening is not blocked up, is not equally a machine.

With a view of showing that the tank was a machine or machinery, it was urged on behalf of the Appellants that the flow into the pipes of the water allowed to escape from it regulated, the course of the water in the pipes and kept up a uniform pressure. But the nature and character of the functions which a reservoir performs cannot depend upon, the work done by the water drawn off from it, or the use to which that water is put. These functions remain the same, whether the escaped water be allowed to flow over land and irrigate it, or be used to water roads, or to drive a dynamo for the purpose of lighting a house or houses with electric light.

Sec. 6 of the aforesaid Act, no doubt provides that holding means land held under one title, or agreement and surrounded by one set of boundaries, and further provides that where two or more adjoining holdings form part or parcel of the site or premises of a dwelling-house, manufactory, warehouse or place of trade or business, such holdings shall be deemed to be one holding for the purposes of the Act, other than those mentioned in cl. A of its 85th section (i.e., the taxing of persons), and further provides that holdings separated by a road or other means of communication are to be deemed to be adjoining within the meaning of that section. Mr. Macmorran, as their Lordships understood him, having regard apparently to these provisions, contended on behalf of the Appellants that in order to determine what was the true meaning of the word "machinery," as used in sec. 101 of this Valuation Act, the works and erections on the two lots numbered 1 and 2 respectively, should be taken as a whole, and viewed as so many interdependent parts of one mechanical unit, but if that contention were sound, the underground reservoir, the roof and walls of the engine-house, if not indeed the old stone building used as an office, would all be covered by the word "machinery," quite as completely as would the tank and its supporting structure. The word "machinery" is often used in an entirely metaphorical sense, as in the phrase "the machinery of Government," but, in their Lordships' opinion, neither this engine-house nor this office could, according to the ordinary use of language, possibly be held to be "machinery" within the meaning of this statute, while on the other hand, if the tank and its supports be "machinery," it is difficult to see why the underground reservoir is not also "machinery." There is no essential difference between the two, except their situation, the one is buried underground, the other is raised high into the air. Skill, care and money are expended equally on the construction of both. Water is pumped or let flow into the underground reservoir (it does not appear which) from some external source, is stored there and pumped out of it into the mains. Into the tank water is pumped, stored there and allowed when occasion requires to flow out of it through an aperture in its side or bottom into the same mains. Their respective functions so closely resemble each other as to be in essence identical, yet it was not contended, nor even suggested, that the underground reservoir was "machinery."

The functions discharged by the tank closely resemble those discharged by the cisterns built on the roofs of those country houses which are situated far away from any system of water-works. The rain water which falls upon the roof of the house is conducted by rain shoots or pipes into the cisterns, is stored there till needed, and is, through an aperture or apertures in its sides or bottom, drawn by the force of gravity through pipes into the interior of the dwelling-house to satisfy domestic needs of different kinds. If the cistern rested on a tower built purposely to support it, the case would not be altered. Yet, in their Lordships' view, no intelligent person would, in the ordinary use of language, describe this cistern, whether supported on the roof of the dwelling-house or on such a tower, together with the rain shoots and rain pipes, as "machinery" and still less would they describe the roof of the house, acting in this case the part of a catchment basin, as "machinery" nor even the water pipes in the interior of the house, nor all the four together. The money of the householder, the skill of the plumber, the carpenter, the mason, and possibly the slater, all have to be expended to fix in situ this system of water supply, just as the similar expense must have been incurred and skill exercised to erect the tank and its supports, but that consideration does not by itself make the one structure or the other "machinery." Nor in the case of the cistern would the fact that the water was drawn into it by the action of a hydraulic ram erected 100 yards from the dwelling-house on the bank of a swiftly flowing river alter the case.

Illustrations such as these may possibly be better guides to the true meaning of the word "machinery," when used in ordinary speech, than scientific definitions. For there is nothing in the language of this statute of 1884 or in the objects it was designed to effect, to suggest that its words are used in any special sense differing from their ordinary sense. A completed machine or a number of completed machines may of course, according to the ordinary use of language, be properly described as "machinery," so may those parts or members of a machine which when assembled, as it is styled, form a complete machine; so also may some of such of those parts which when assembled with the other necessary parts, would form a complete machine be styled "machinery"; but none of these conditions exist in the present case.

Much reliance was placed by the Appellants' Counsel in argument on a passage in the judgment of Lord Davey in the case of Chamberlayne v Collins (1) reported in 70 L. T. N. S. 217 and 218, but nowhere else. The question he was dealing with was whether within the meaning of a covenant in the lease with which he was dealing a switchback railway with its equipment was "operative machinery."

The first part of the passage runs thus :—

"There is always great danger in giving definitions, but I think I may say that 'machinery' implies the application of mechanical means to the attainment of some particular end by the help of natural forces, and the addition of the word "operative" means with the potentiality of operating or doing work. It is clear to my mind that a switchback railway comes within that definition."

(1) 70 L. T. N. S. 217 (1894).

He then gives his reason for so thinking in the following words :—

"because it is a thing skilfully built with curves of a particular shape, which by their peculiar form supply the motive power which actuates the carriages which run up and down the railway."

With all respect for Lord Davey, the words "supply motor power" do not appear to their Lordships to be very happily chosen. When a solid body is placed upon an inclined plane, two natural forces operate upon it—the force of friction and the force of gravity. If it moves down along this plane it is the resultant of those two forces which pull or push it down. The force which the inclined plane contributes is the force of friction. The force of gravity acts with equal strength, whether the slope of the plane be gentle or steep. The force of friction is in this instance a retarding not an accelerating force. If the incline of the plane be very gentle and its surface rough, the force of friction will so effectually counteract the operation of the force of gravity that the solid body will remain at rest. If, on the other hand, the incline of the plane be steep and its surface smooth, the force of gravity will so overcome the force of friction that the resultant of the two will pull or push the body down the incline. Of course, if the solid body be mounted on wheels running on rails the force of friction will be greatly diminished.

The curves of the switchback railway may by their shape favour the operation of the force of gravity, but they cannot increase or diminish that force. It is always constant. The only force the curves contribute to the action of the car is the retarding force of friction, which tends to prevent their movement. It is an error to say that the shape of the curves "supplies motive power." It may give and does give to the ever present force of gravity the opportunity of exerting itself more effectually. That is all.

If a man standing on the roof of a house and holding in his hand a stone, drops that stone into the street below, he does not in any way generate or supply the force which brings the stone to the ground with a velocity which increases as the square of the height of the man's hand above the street, and as momentum is weight multiplied by velocity, the stone strikes the ground with great force. But that force is, in no proper sense of the term, generated or supplied by the man. While he held the stone in his hand he overcame the action of the force of gravity by the upward pressure of his hand. When he drops the stone he simply withdraws that upward pressure and allows the force of gravity to take full effect.

So in the present case it would, in the view of their Lordships, be an entire mistake to treat the force which hurries through mains the water that escapes from this tank, as a force generated or supplied or directed by the tank itself. The tank no more actuates the rush of the escaping or escaped water than does, in the above example, the hand of the man on the roof of the house actuate the fall of the stone he held in it. The respective effects of the forces of gravity and friction on solid bodies resting on a sloping hill-side were much discussed in the case of the Rhondda Valley land-slip, Atty.-Gen. v. Cory Bros. & Co. (2) It may well be, however, that in the case of a switchback railway there is great art and ingenuity in constructing its curves in such a way that the momentum gathered by a car in descending one curve is sufficient to carry it up the next curve in front, but not to carry it over the summit of the latter with a dangerous speed, but there is no art or ingenuity of that kind expended in so raising the height of the structure on which water takes stand so that the head pressure desired will be obtained, no more than there would be in selecting the site of a reservoir to be constructed on a hill-side.

The word "machinery" must mean something more than a collection of ordinary tools. It must mean something more than a solid structure built upon the ground, whose parts either do not move at all, or, if they do move, do not move the one with or upon the other in interdependent action with the object of producing a specific and definite result.

Their Lordships concur with Lord Davey in thinking that there is great danger in attempting to give a definition of the word "machinery" which will be applicable in all cases. It may be impossible to succeed in such an attempt. If their Lordships were obliged to run the hazard of the attempt they would be inclined to say that the word "machinery," when used in ordinary language prima facie means some mechanical contrivances which by themselves or in combination with one or more other mechanical contrivances, by the combined movement and interdependent operation of their respective parts generate power, or evoke, modify, apply or direct natural forces with the object in each case of effecting so definite and specific a result. The tank and its supporting structure do not satisfy this definition.

But their Lordships think that however skilfully definitions of "machinery" may be framed, the determination in any given case of what is or is not "machinery," must, to a large extent, depend upon the special facts of that case. In the present case their Lordships' view is that if this tank were fed by water, whether continuously, or as it is, intermittently, but from a natural source such as a mountain burn for example, no intelligent person would, in the ordinary use of language, describe it with its supporting structure as "machinery." The fact that the water it receives does not flow into it from some such a source, but is pumped into it, does not alter its character essentially, especially as the pumps which supply the water are situated at a distance of over 300 yards from it on a holding different from, though adjoining that on which it stands, that these pumps were constructed and worked in all essentials as they are now worked long before its erection was thought of, and that it is only the unneeded surplus of the water raised by these pumps in their ordinary operation from the underground reservoir that is diverted into it. They are, therefore, of opinion that neither this tank nor its supporting structure, nor both combined, are "machinery," within the meaning of the 101st section of the above-mentioned statute of 1884; that the Respondent was justified in taking the value of these works into consideration as he has done in making the assessment of the Appellant's No. 2, holding; that the decree appealed from was right and should be affirmed, and this appeal dismissed, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. Some reliance was placed by the Appellants upon the case of Auckland City Corporation v. Auckland Gas Co., Limited (?). But that case is fundamentally distinguishable from the present one. What was then decided was that "the main pipes, gasometers and governors" of a gas company were, when taken all together, "machinery." The Appellants must pay the Respondent's costs.

NANKU PRASAD

SINGH, Appellant,

v.

KAMTA PRASAD

SINGH and ors.,

Respondents.

Mortgage—Equity of redemption, sale of—Purchaser retaining portion of purchase money to pay off mortgage, if personally liable for the mortgage debt.

A purchaser of mortgaged property who retains a portion of the purchase-money in order to enable him to pay off the mortgage does not thereby become personally liable to discharge the mortgage debt.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court, Patna (7th June 1918), reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Patna (29th March 1915).

The question for determination by the Board was whether the purchaser of mortgaged property from the mortgagor became, by retaining part of the purchase price to enable him to pay off the mortgage, personally liable to discharge the mortgage debt.

On the 17th August 1901 the 1st Defendant Babu Rakhal Chunder Sur (who was not a party to the appeal) mortgaged certain property to the Appellant.

On the 14th December 1908 the 1st Defendant sold the said property in two moieties to the Respondents for Rs. 32,000. In each sale deed there was a statement that the vendor had left with the purchaser Rs. 9,818, half of Rs. 19,636 due under the said mortgage for payment by the purchasers (Respondents) to the Appellant.

On the 28th August 1913 the Plaintiff (Appellant) instituted the present suit seeking the usual decree for sale of the mortgaged property and realization of any deficiency from the Defendants.

The trial Judge passed a decree on the 29th March 1915 for sale of the mortgaged property and for the recovery of the balance of the decretal money, if any, and costs from the Respondents personally.

On appeal the High Court at Patna set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge so far as it made the Respondents personally liable and dismissed the suit as against them with costs.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., (with him B. Dube) for the Appellant.—Urged that the decree of the Subordinate Judge was right and that the Respondents had become personally liable for the mortgage money.

Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondents.—Relied on the principle decided by the Privy Council in Jamna Das v. Pandit Ram Autar Pande (1).

THEIR LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD ATKINSON.—Their Lordships have considered this case, and they think it is clear that no personal liability was incurred by the purchasers of the equity of redemption, who, their Lordships understand, are Defendants Nos. 2 to 11 of whom only five are Respondents here. Their Lordships therefore think that the decree of the High Court was right and that the point made by the Appellant fails.

The decree of the High Court, which is in general terms will, however, be amended so as to make its intention clear.

NANKU PRASAD SINGH v. KAMTA PRASAD SINGH.

So much of the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge as relates to the sale will stand, but it will be modified to the extent of declaring that the purchasers of the equity of redemption are under no personal liability to the Plaintiffs.

As to the costs, their Lordships think that the decree in the Subordinate Judge's Court should be modified and that the Defendants Nos. 2 to 11 and the Plaintiffs should bear their own costs in that Court. The Appellant must pay the costs of this appeal.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

PROMOTHO NATH MULLICK v. PRODYMNO KUMAR MULLICK.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

In this suit the Plaintiff prays for an order that the Defendant Prodymano Kumar Mullick may be directed to make over to him a certain ornament, being a nath, or nose ring, or in lieu thereof may be directed to pay a sum of Rs. 25,000 being the value, according to the Plaintiff, of the said ornament.

The following genealogical table will explain the relationship of the parties herein :—

The Plaintiff is the executor of the last Will and testament of his mother Srimati Saraswati Dassi who died on the 16th April 1916. She made her Will on the 9th May 1913. Besides the Plaintiff, as will be seen on reference to the genealogical table set out above, Saraswati Dassi had two other sons, Anath Nath, who died on the 28th June 1900 leaving him surviving the Defendant as his only son (the latter having been born on the 20th November 1893), and Monmotho Nath who is still alive and who has given evidence in this case.

Saraswati Dassi's husband, Jadulal Mullick, died on 5th February 1894. The Plaintiff alleges that on the death of Jadulal, there was a partition of the properties left by him amongst his three sons and that some time in the year 1899 when the partition had been effected, but before the sons had separated from each other and had commenced to live separately, Saraswati Dassi deposited with her eldest son Anath a nath or nose ring consisting of two pearls, one pearl pendant, and a ruby, with a diamond suspender which belonged to her absolutely as her stridhan property.

The date of the deposit according to Plaintiff is fixed in this manner. The Plaintiff states that during the pujas of 1899 he went to Kashmir and his elder brother Anath went to Almorah. After the pujas were over, they returned to Calcutta and on one occasion when they were seated in the old family dwelling-house of Jadulal Mullick, Anath, the eldest son, who had been complaining that his mother was giving away all her ornaments to her daughters and was not keeping any ornaments for the wives of her sons brought up the subject again, and upon that Saraswati said to Anath "As you have always been bringing up this subject, here is this nath which you had better hold in deposit for me." Saraswati at that interview handed over the nath in question to Anath. It is alleged by the Plaintiff that upon the death of Anath in June 1900 his widow Srimati Kumudkumari Dassi took possession of the said nose ring on behalf of her infant son, the Defendant. It may be noted, in passing, that the Plaintiff had left the family dwelling-house in May 1899 and was staying in a house in Beadon Street and did not return to the family dwelling-house till the 28th June 1900, that being the date of the death of Anath. The Plaintiff alleges further that the Defendant who attained his majority in 1914 has since then been and is still in possession of the said nose ring and that although he has demanded from the Defendant the return of the said nose ring the Defendant has failed and neglected to comply with the Plaintiff's request. The Plaintiff obtained grant of the probate of the Will of his mother on 1st May 1919 but before that date he had addressed a formal letter of demand to the Defendant for the return of the nose ring in question, which demand was followed on 23rd April 1919 by the institution of the present suit.

PROMOTHO NATH MULLICK v. PRODYMNO KUMAR MULLICK.

The Defendant in his written statement denies the allegation that his grandmother Saraswati deposited with his father the nose ring in question. He states on information that on the occasion of his annaprasan ceremony, which took place sometime in May 1894, Saraswati made a gift of a nose ring of the value of Rs. 5,000 or thereabouts to his mother and that thereupon the nose ring became the absolute property of his mother. He further states that after the death of his father, disputes and differences arose between his mother and his grand-mother and in consequence thereof his grand-mother wrongfully demanded of his mother the return of the said nose ring, which demand was refused by his mother on the ground that the nose ring had become her absolute property by reason of the gift mentioned above. The Defendant also states that the Plaintiff's present action is barred by the statute of limitation.

On these pleadings the following issues were settled between the parties :

- (1) Was there a deposit of the nath as alleged in para. 3 of the plaint?
- (2) Was there a demand for the return of the said nath, and if so, was there a refusal to return it?
- (3) Is the suit barred by limitation?
- (4) What is the value of the said nose ring?
- (5) Does the plaint disclose a cause of action against the Defendant?

Before I deal with the evidence in this case it may be stated at this stage that the Defendant has produced before me two nose rings (Exbts. 2 and 3), Exbt. 2 being alleged by him to be the nose ring which had been given by his grand-mother to his mother on the occasion referred to above, and Exbt. 3 being a nose ring which his mother had apart from Exbt. 2. The Plaintiff after inspection of the nose ring (Exbt. 2) maintained that the nose ring which was deposited by his mother with Anath was not the same as Exbt. 2 produced by the Defendant. The Plaintiff lays no claim to the nose ring (Exbt. 3).

In his evidence, the Plaintiff stated that his mother, who had valuable ornaments of her own, made from time to time gifts of some of those ornaments to her daughters and also to the wives of himself and his two brothers. Saraswati Dassi had a nose ring which she considered to be the most valuable of her ornaments. As mentioned above, the eldest son Anath was apprehensive that this nose ring might be given away by Saraswati to her youngest daughter or to some one not belonging to Anath's branch of the family and he used to request Saraswati from time to time not to give away the nose ring in question to any body without his knowledge. The Plaintiff relates an incident which took place after the pujas of 1899 when, at an interview at which besides Saraswati, the persons present were the Plaintiff and Anath, Anath having renewed one of his usual requests about the nose ring, Saraswati felt annoyed and brought out the nose ring and handed it to Anath to be kept by him as deposit on account of Saraswati. The Plaintiff states that after the death of Anath which took place on 28th June 1900 he removed from his Beadon Street residence to the old family dwelling-house in Pathuriaghata Street. Sometime thereafter Saraswati enquired of Anath's widow about the nose ring whereupon the latter stated that she had the nose ring in her possession. After that, she brought it out and showed it to Saraswati. The Plaintiff stated that this incident took place in his presence in the Pathuriaghata house. The Plaintiff further alleged that Saraswati made demands from time to time for the return of the nose ring, but Anath's widow put her off on the pretext that inasmuch as her son, the Defendant, was still an infant she could not part with the nose ring till her son attained majority. The conversations between Saraswati and Anath's widow just referred to, according to the Plaintiff, took place in the latter's presence. The Plaintiff stayed in the old family dwelling-house from 28th June 1900 to 4th February 1911 when he removed to his present residence in Cornwallis Street. The Plaintiff stated that during this interval he saw the nose ring in the custody of the Defendant. One incident is referred to by the Plaintiff in some detail. He states that on one occasion during the rainy season it became necessary to clean the pearls pendant to the nose ring. The nose ring in question had been locked up in a safe which it was difficult to open. The Defendant's services were requisitioned and he succeeded in opening the safe and the Plaintiff found that the nose ring with the pearls, the ruby, and the diamond suspender, was kept intact within the iron safe which had been opened by the Defendant. The Plaintiff speaks to the fact that his mother felt considerably annoyed owing to the refusal on the part of the Defendant's mother and on the part of the Defendant to return the nose ring in question and that in consequence of this irritation and annoyance she removed shortly after the 4th February 1911 to the Plaintiff's new residence in Cornwallis Street. She remained there continuously from that time till her death except that on festive occasions, etc., she used to visit her grand-child and her son Monmotho in the old Pathuriaghata house. The Plaintiff states that on one occasion a friend of the family, Rai Chandi Charan Chatterjee Bahadur, who had been invited to a ceremony at the Pathuriaghata house, came to the Plaintiff's residence and interviewed his mother. The occasion for the interview was that this gentleman had made enquiries during his visit to the Pathuriaghata house about the cause of the absence of Srimati Saraswati therefrom and had been informed that inasmuch as her ornaments were being detained by the Defendant she was annoyed with the Defendant and for that reason would not come to the Pathuriaghata house. At the interview between Rai Chandi Charan Chatterjee and the Plaintiff's mother, it is stated that she complained about the detention of the nose ring, the subject-matter of the present suit, and thereupon Rai Chandi Charan Chatterjee offered to mediate and bring about a settlement of the matters in dispute between Saraswati Dassi, and the Defendant, and his mother. This, according to the Plaintiff, took place sometime in 1912. In 1915 the Plaintiff states that there was some talk of settlement between the Defendant and his mother on the one hand and Saraswati on the other, but apparently nothing came out of the negotiations. As I have said, Saraswati made her Will on 9th May 1913, and in cl. 1 of the Will she stated as follows :—

“ Whatever jewellerys and cash money given by my husband Mahasoy I had, or whatever money has since accumulated, a large portion thereof has been expended and I have from time to time given to my sons and daughters valuable jewellerys, etc. Moreover there are jewellerys of Rs. 7,600 in cash as per Schedule given below in deposit with my youngest son and I have kept in deposit with my eldest son one pearl nose ring with pendant of the value of about Rs. 25,000. Now my youngest son and the heirs of my eldest son are not willing to return to me the said jewellerys or the money and have been treating me badly in various ways.”

The Plaintiff denies that the Defendant's annaprasan ceremony took place in May 1894 as alleged in the written statement and he maintains that the real annaprasan ceremony of the Defendant took place in 1898 and was celebrated in Tarakessur when the Defendant was about five years old. As regards the value of the nose ring the Plaintiff states that in the life-time of his father Jadulal, i.e., in 1893 the nose ring had been valued by the late Rai Bahadur Badridas Mukim at Rs. 25,000. It was again valued in 1907 when it was in the custody of Anath's widow. The occasion of the last valuation, according to the Plaintiff, is this: "My elder brother's widow asked me to value some of her ornaments, that is to say, Prodyumno's ornaments, because the market was going up, and she was thinking what the valuation might be. The valuers were Arjun Thakur, a jeweller, who used to call at the Pathuriaghata house, and one Johuri Pande, and the valuation was at forty five to fifty thousand rupees." Rai Badridas and Arjun Thakur are said to be dead, and the whereabouts of Johuri Pande are now unknown.

In cross-examination the Plaintiff admitted that neither he nor his mother had any documentary evidence showing that the nose ring in question had been deposited with Anath as alleged by the Plaintiff. He admitted also that between the time when the Defendant attained majority and the date when Saraswati died, the latter had not made any demands of the Defendant for the return of the nose ring in question. His attention was drawn to certain entries in the account books of the family, and although he was unwilling to admit at first that the books which had been produced by Promotho Nath Mullick on subpoena were the account books of the family, he admitted in the end that the account books showed that certain moneys had been spent in May 1894 on account of the annaprasan ceremony of the Defendant. He maintained, however, notwithstanding the entries to which his attention had been drawn, that the real annaprasan ceremony took place in 1898 as stated by him in examination-in-chief. He detailed the circumstances under which he saw the nose ring in the custody of the Defendant in 1911 and in support of his contention that the annaprasan ceremony of the Defendant could not have taken place in May 1894 as alleged by the Defendant he called his priest Rishikesh Haldar as a witness in this case.

Rishikesh stated that the Defendant's grand-father Jadulal having died in February 1894, the period of mourning called "Kal Asauch" had not expired in May 1894 and therefore the annaprasan ceremony of the Defendant in May 1894 was an impossibility. Rishikesh stated that his father Shibchandra Haldar was the family priest of the late Jadulal Mullick and his family. The eldest son of Shibchandra was Upendra Nath who gave evidence on the side of the Defendant. Rishikesh's point was that after the death of his father and as a matter of fact during the life-time of his father it was he and not Upendra who used to assist in the performance of religious ceremonies in the house of Jadulal and his family. Rishikesh stated that he went to Tarakessur with a family party in 1898 and assisted in the performance of the annaprasan of the Defendant at Tarakessur.

The next witness was Rai Chandi Charan Chatterjee Bahadur. He stated, as has already been indicated, that on one occasion in 1912 he had an interview with the Plaintiff's mother at the house of the Plaintiff. I need not repeat here the occasion for that interview but it is sufficient to state that according to Rai Chandi Charan Chatterjee he tried to persuade Saraswati Dassi to go back to the family dwelling-house. Saraswati would not go back unless and until her ornaments had been returned to her and these ornaments included the nose ring mentioned above. The witness stated that upon hearing what Saraswati had stated about the nose ring, he reported the substance of the conversation to the Defendant when the latter stated to him that he (the Defendant) did not know anything about the matter personally; all he knew was that he had heard that his father (Anath) left the nath in a box and his mother did not know to whom it belonged. This concludes the evidence on behalf of the Plaintiff.

The Defendant in his evidence stated that he attained his majority in 1914 and thereupon the estate of his father, both moveable and immoveable, was made over to him by his mother who had been appointed his guardian by this Court. His father's moveable estates as made over to him did not include the nose ring which the Defendant produced in Court, being Exbt. 2. He had seen the nose ring in the custody of his mother and at the time when he was required to file his written statement in this case he made enquiries of his mother. The result of the enquiry is stated by the Defendant in his written statement. He stated that he had unfortunately been deprived of the evidence of his mother as she suddenly died on 19th March 1921. He had no personal knowledge of the circumstances under which the nath came in the possession of his mother but since he was 15 or 16 years old, he came to know that there was a dispute about this nose ring between his mother and his grand-mother. The grand-mother was claiming the nath as her own and his mother was contending that the grand-mother was not entitled to a return of the nath because the grand-mother had made a present of the nath to his mother. The Defendant was cross-examined at some length by Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri as to why the evidence of his mother had not been taken on commission although the suit had been in the prospective list for a considerable period before the 19th March 1921. The Defendant gave what to my mind was a sufficient explanation as to why the evidence of his mother had not been taken on commission.

The Defendant called as his next witness Upendra Nath Halidar, the elder brother of Rishikesh Halidar. Upendra stated that his father Shibchandra used to officiate as priest in the house of Jadulal Mullick. On occasions when Shibchandra was absent and after Shibchandra's death Upendra used to officiate as priest. He said that Defendant's annaprasan ceremony took place at No. 7, Prosonno Kumar Tagore street, which, I understand, is the same house which is known as the Pathuriaghata house. The Defendant was then six months old and at the time of the annaprasan ceremony a nath was given by the Defendant's grand-mother to the Defendant's mother. This incident, according to Upendra, took place in his presence and in the presence of the Plaintiff and of Monmotho Nath Mullick. He further stated that at the time when the partition proceedings were going on, the Defendant's grand-mother had asked him to speak to Babu Gopimohun Mullick the father-in-law of Anath, in order that the father might speak in his turn to Anath's widow and induce her to return the nose ring in question. Upendra Spoke to Gopimohun Mullick at a sitting held by the Commissioner of partition and in the presence of the Commissioner. Gopimohun thereupon, it is alleged, went away to make enquiry about the nose ring of his daughter, i.e., Anath's widow. He returned and stated to Upendra that his daughter (Anath's widow) claimed the nose ring in question as a gift by the grandmother (Saraswati) to her and would not on any account part with it. This message was subsequently communicated by Upendra to Saraswati. In cross-examination, he stated that it was customary on the occasion of an annaprasan ceremony that presents should be given to the mother of the child whose annaprasan was being celebrated.

On the day the Defendant was examined before me, the maternal grand-father of the Defendant Babu Gopimohun Mullick was in attendance in the Court house. Just as he was about to be called into the witness box, he met with an unfortunate accident in the corridor of the Court house and died. The further hearing of the case had to be adjourned on account of this incident and after an interval of several days, the hearing was resumed. When the Defendant called as his last witness his uncle Monmotha Nath Mullick.

The latter stated that the nose ring, the subject-matter of the present litigation had not been given to the Defendant's mother in his presence. It will be remembered that Upendra had stated definitely in his evidence that the nose ring had been presented to the Defendant's mother in the presence of the Plaintiff, Monmotho and himself. Monmotho stated that during the life-time of Anath he had not heard anything about the deposit of a nath by Saraswati with Anath; but subsequently he came to know that his mother Saraswati claimed the return of the nath on the ground that she had deposited the same with Anath. The witness corroborated what had already been stated by Upendra about Gopimohun Mullick being asked to plead with his daughter (Anath's widow) for the return of the nath to Saraswati.

In this state of the evidence, it has been contended by Mr. H. D. Bose, who appeared for the Defendant, that the Plaintiff's claim is barred by the law of limitation. His contention, shortly stated, was that on the Plaintiff's allegation there was a deposit by Saraswati of the nose ring with Anath; that Anath having died on the 28th June 1900 demands were made by Saraswati for the return of the nose ring; that on Anath's widow having refused to return the nose ring, the possession of the nose ring in the hands of the Anath's widow became wrongful; that the Defendant having attained his majority in 1914 obtained possession of the nose ring, and refused to return the nose ring and therefore continued to be in wrongful possession of the nose ring and that in the circumstances, Article 145 of the Limitation Act had no application, and that the proper article to be applied to the facts of this case was Art. 49 of the Limitation Act. He referred me to the cases: Administrative General of Bengal v. Kristo Kamini (1), Ganginani Kondiah v. Gothipati Padda (2), Narmadabai v. Bharani Shankar (3), Gobind Prosad v. Patna Municipality (4), Ram Krishna v. Panaya (5), Gopalswamy v. Subramaniam (6), Balkrishnaou v. Narayanaswami (7) and Gangabai Nabin Chander (8) and argued that as in none of these cases, sec. 162 of the Indian Contract Act was taken into consideration, the matter was res integra and that I should hold that Art. 145 of the Limitation Act could not possibly apply to this case. I do not propose to discuss in detail the cases referred to above, for, to my mind, the Defendant's contention is unsustainable.

having regard to the express language of Art. 145. It is a special article provided for application in cases where the depositor seeks to recover from the depository moveable property deposited and time runs from the date of the deposit. Art. 49 is, on the other hand, a general article for the recovery of specific moveable property or for compensation for wrongfully taking or injuring or wrongfully detaining the same and time runs from the date when the property is wrongfully taken or injured or when the detainer's possession becomes unlawful. For the reasons given by Sir Arnold White, C. J., in the case Ganginani Kondiah v. Gothipati Padma (2), I am of opinion that the fact of the possession by the depository after demand being wrongful does not make Art. 49 applicable. All actions for the recovery of a deposit of moveable property are, by the express words of Art. 145, comprised within it and no exception is made as regards deposits where demand and refusal make the continuance of possession unlawful. (In passing, it may be observed that there is a reference to Art. 162 of the Contract Act in the case in Ganginani Kondiah v. Gothipati Padma (2) at p. 60). The considerations arising from what obtains in England by reference to the case Bank of New South Wales v. O'Connor (9) are entirely out of place where you have a special article such as Art. 145. It is said however that as soon as Anath died, the relation of depositor and depository ceased and the person who obtained possession of the subject-matter of the deposit after Anath's death did not become the depository thereof and that therefore the Defendant is not a depository within the meaning of Art. 145 of the Limitation Act. There is a clear answer to this. As pointed out by Lord Macnaghten, the Indian Contract Act is not an exhaustive Code. Therefore it cannot be said that what is stated therein with reference to the question of bailments is exhaustive. Bailments, it is well known, are of two kinds, voluntary and involuntary. Assuming the Plaintiff's story to be true, so long as Anath was alive, the relationship was that of a voluntary bailor and a voluntary bailee. When Anath died and the subject-matter of deposit passed into the hands of his widow, the latter became an involuntary bailee. As long as the article was not returned to the true owner and it remained in possession of Anath's widow she remained an involuntary bailee thereof. The Indian Contract Act contains no definition of deposit; but there can be no doubt that it is one of the species of bailments dealt with in Chap. IX of the Act. For the purpose of the Limitation Act, I think involuntary bailees can be described as depositories. In this view also, Art. 145 would come into play. On these grounds, I am of opinion that the suit is not barred by the law of limitation.

It is common ground that this nose ring was stridhan property of Srimati Saraswati Dassi. The executor of Saraswati Dassi would therefore, prima facie, be entitled to the possession of the nose ring unless he is unable to make out the case of deposit with which he has come to Court or unless his title as executor is defeated by a paramount title in the Defendant.

Now before I examine the truth or otherwise of the Plaintiff's story of deposit I desire to advert for a second to the case set up by the Defendant. Now the Defendant's story about this nose ring having been given by the Defendant's grandmother to his mother rests on the evidence of Upendra alone. The Defendant has no personal knowledge about the matter as indeed under the circumstances he could not be expected to have any. His uncle, Monmotho Nath Mullick, has stated in definite and unambiguous language, that he was not present at the time when, it is alleged, the nose ring was given by Srimati Saraswati Dassi to Anath Nath's widow. Therefore, as I have said, the evidence so far as the question of gift is concerned, rests on Upendra's testimony. Having given to the matter my fullest consideration, I am unable to act on Upendra's evidence, because I do not consider the same to be satisfactory. The Plaintiff, however, is not entitled to judgment even if the Defendant fails to make out the case of gift alleged in his written statement. Now Mr. Bose has criticised the evidence of the Plaintiff at great length and he has pointed out that it is certainly very remarkable that the Plaintiff should have been present on the three material occasions when the matter of the nose ring in question was discussed. As regards the first occasion, Mr. Bose points out, that the Plaintiff had left the family dwelling-house on the 16th May 1899 and did not return to the family dwelling-house till the 28th June 1900. It is therefore very remarkable, argues Mr. Bose, that the Plaintiff should have been present at the Pathuriaghata dwelling-house after the pujas of 1899 when there was a discussion about the nose ring between Anath Nath and Srimati Saraswati Dassi and when Srimati Saraswati Dassi made over the nose ring to Anath to be kept by him as a deposit. In the second place, Mr. Bose points out that it is also remarkable that when after the death of Anath Nath Mullick the Plaintiff had returned to the family dwelling-house he should have been present at an interview between Saraswati Dassi and Anath Nath's widow when the question of the nose ring was under discussion. In the third place, Mr. Bose points out that it is remarkable that the Plaintiff should have been present when the iron safe in which the nose ring in question had been kept was opened by the Defendant. Now, having seen the Plaintiff in the box, I am unable to say that he is an untruthful witness. I ought to add that in my opinion the circumstances of the three occasions referred to above are not such as to lead to the necessary conclusion that the Plaintiff has deposed falsely. On the question of deposit, there is the Plaintiff's evidence which I have reviewed at length. The second point is this, it is clear that at any rate, after the death of Anath Mullick, Srimati Saraswati Dassi made consistent demands for the return of the nose ring. This is borne out by the evidence of Monmotho Nath Mullick. Thirdly, there is the statement in the Will of Srimati Saraswati Dassi. That statement cannot be used as evidence on behalf of the Plaintiff for the purpose of showing that the facts therein mentioned are true but it can be looked at for the purpose of finding out whether it is consistent with the assertions made from time to time by Srimati Saraswati Dassi in her life-time. I am not unmindful of the fact that the evidence of valuation as deposed to by the Plaintiff is such that it is impossible to place any reliance thereon. But the conclusion which I draw from the evidence taken as a whole is this that so long as Saraswati Dassi was alive, she had always made demands for the return of the nose ring. As against that, there is the fact that whenever demands were made, Anath Nath's widow always asserted that the nath in question had been given to her as a gift and had not been deposited with Anath Nath Mullick. Contrasting the evidence on behalf of the Plaintiff with that on behalf of the Defendant I have come to the conclusion that on the question of deposit I have no other alternative but to accept as substantially true the Plaintiff's account. The Plaintiff, it is true, did not admit that Exbt. 2 was the nose ring which had been deposited by Srimati Saraswati Dassi with Anath Nath Mullick but Mr. Mitter who appeared for the Plaintiff conceded that, in the absence of reliable evidence as to the valuation of the nose ring, I must accept the Defendant's word as true that Exbt. 2 was the ring which belonged to Saraswati Dassi and which was in the custody of his mother. I accept the Defendant's evidence and I find that Exbt. 2 was the nose ring which was with the Defendant's mother. There will, therefore, be judgment in favour of the Plaintiff for the return of the nose ring (Exbt. 2) to him. With regard to the costs of this suit, I have given the matter my best consideration. The Defendant, I think, has very frankly stated the circumstances which came to his knowledge in connection with the nose ring. He is in no way to blame for what has happened; there has been great delay in this matter and I think the Defendant ought not to be saddled in any way with the costs of this suit. Each party will pay his own costs. Exbt. 3 will be returned to the Defendant.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or.

XXXII, r. 3 - Appointment of certificated guardian as guardian ad litem R. 4, sub-r. (3), Court's power to appoint a guardian without his consent—Decree against a minor where his guardian was appointed without his consent, if binding upon him—Classes of guardians to whom sub-r. (3) applies—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), sec. 10, sub-sec. (3)—Willingness of the guardian to act, essential—Sec. 99, applicability of.

The generality of the language used in Or. XXXII, r. 4, sub-r. (3), makes it clear that the Legislature has prescribed that no person who is competent to act as guardian of an infant, either under sub-r. (1) or under sub-r. (2), shall be appointed guardian for the suit without his consent. The willingness of the proposed guardian is essential even in cases of appointments of guardians under the Guardians and Wards Act as guardians ad litem.

When a person has been appointed guardian without his consent, the infant is not represented and a decree made in a suit so constituted has no binding effect upon him.

The provision as to the consent of the person proposed to be appointed guardian for the suit is mandatory and imperative.

WALIA v. BANK (17) distinguished.

The fact that the guardian preferred an appeal cannot be taken as an index that he consented to his appointment as guardian for the suit, when in fact he never appeared during the trial of the suit.

ANNADA PRASAD GHOSE v. UPENDRA NATH DEY SARKAR.

This was an appeal preferred on the 10th November 1919 against a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Hughly (Babu Krishna Kumar Sen), dated the 19th June 1919 affirming a decree of the Munsif of that place (Moulvi Abdul Khaleque), dated 19th June 1917.

The facts of the case will fully appear from the judgment.

Babu Debendra Nath Mandal for the Appellant.

Babus Karunamoy Ghose, Bepin Behari Ghose and Sarat Kumar Mitter for the Respondent.

This is an appeal by the fourth Defendant in a suit for recovery of possession of immoveable property on establishment of title. The Appellant was an infant at the date of the institution of the suit on the 5th May 1916. An application was made on behalf of the Plaintiff that Hari Das Ghose who had been appointed guardian of his person and property under the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890 might be appointed his guardian for the suit. Thereupon notices were issued upon the minor and the proposed guardian. The notices were in the form proscribed in Appendix H to the Code of Civil Procedure, and stated that if within the period prescribed an application was not made to the Court for the appointment of the proposed guardian or some friend of his to act as guardian of the minor for the suit, the Court would proceed to appoint some other person to act as guardian ad litem of the minor. On the 6th June 1916 it was reported to the Court that the notices had been duly served both upon the minor and his proposed guardian. There was no appearance, however, on behalf of the proposed guardian; yet the Court proceeded to appoint him as guardian of the minor for the suit. At no stage of the suit, did the guardian appear and the result was that the suit was decreed ex parte against the infant described on the record as represented by the certificated guardian. Against this decree, the guardian on behalf of the infant preferred an appeal to the Subordinate Judge and contended that the decree could not stand as against the infant. This contention was overruled and the appeal was dismissed. Since the date of the decree of the Subordinate Judge, the infant has attained majority and the present appeal has been preferred by him in his own right. His contention is that the decree made by the primary Court is void and inoperative as against him and should be set aside with direction to that Court to re-try the suit so far as he is concerned. This position has been controverted on behalf of the Respondent. The decision of the question raised before us is not free from difficulty and depends upon the true construction of the provisions of Or. 32 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Or. 32, r. 3 (1) provides that where the Defendant is a minor, the Court on being satisfied of the fact of his minority shall appoint a proper person to be guardian for the suit for such minor. This makes it obligatory on the Court to appoint a proper person to be guardian of the minor Defendant for the suit. The Rule then prescribes the procedure to be followed for the purpose of such appointment. No order shall be made on any application under this Rule except upon notice to the minor and to any guardian of the minor appointed or declared by an authority competent on that behalf, and where there is no such guardian, upon notice to the father or other natural guardian of the minor, or, where there is no father or other natural guardian, to the person in whose care the minor is, and after hearing any objection which may be urged on behalf of any person served with notice under this sub-rule. R. 4 next deals with the question as to who may act as next friend or be appointed guardian for the suit. The persons who may so act are divided into two classes. Sub-r. (1) provides that any person who is of sound mind and has attained majority may act as next friend of a minor or as his guardian for the suit. Sub-r. (2) provides that where a minor has a guardian appointed or declared by competent authority, no person other than such guardian shall act as the next friend of the minor or be appointed his guardian for the suit unless the Court considers, for reasons to be recorded, that it is for the minor's welfare that another person be permitted to act or be appointed as the case may be. Then follows sub-r. (3) in the following term: "No person, shall, without his consent, be appointed 'guardian for the suit.'" The generality of the language used in sub-r. (3) makes it abundantly clear that the Legislature intended this sub-rule to be applicable as well to cases under sub-r. (1) as under sub-r. (2); in other words, the Legislature has prescribed that no person who is competent to act as guardian of an infant either under sub-r. (1) or under sub-r. (2) shall be appointed guardian for the suit without his consent. It was argued on behalf of the Respondent in essence that this sub-rule is applicable only to cases of persons other than certificated guardians. This result, it was contended, follows from the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, which defines, in secs. 10 and 27 the duties of a person appointed as guardian of the person and property of an infant. Sub-sec. (3) of sec. 10 provides that the application of a person to be appointed guardian of an infant must be accompanied by a declaration of the willingness of the proposed guardian to act and the declaration must be signed by him and attested by at least two witnesses. Sec. 27 provides that a guardian of the property of a ward is bound to deal with it as carefully as a man of ordinary prudence would deal with it, if it were his own, and, subject to certain qualifications, he may do all acts which are reasonable and proper for the realisation, protection or benefit of the property. The Respondent has urged that a guardian appointed under Act VIII of 1890 is under an obligation to defend a suit instituted against his ward; and that consequently, the Court where the suit has been instituted is entitled to presume, if not as a matter of law, at any rate as a matter of fact, that he will consent to be appointed guardian for the suit. We are of opinion that this contention should not prevail. If this were the intention of the Legislature sub-r. (3) of r. 4 might have been placed between sub-rs. (1) and (2) or might have been framed in different words. For instance, it might have provided that no person, other than a certificated guardian, shall, without his consent, be appointed guardian for the suit.

But, beyond this, a serious difficulty might arise, if the Court which had seized of the suit were held competent to appoint a certificated guardian as guardian for the suit even where he withheld his consent or expressly declined the appointment. A person appointed guardian for the suit in such circumstances, would, almost to a certainty neglect to look after the suit, and the interest of the minor would be placed in serious jeopardy. It may be conceded that a certificated guardian who takes up such an attitude may render himself amenable to the disciplinary jurisdiction of the Court which appointed him as guardian. He may, indeed, be removed under sec. 39 for breach of duty or neglect of trust. But that clearly does not afford adequate protection to the infant whose interests would be imperilled by the remissness of a person appointed, against his wishes, possibly in spite of his protest, to act as guardian for the suit. We are reluctant to adopt a construction of r. 4 which may conceivably lend to so disastrous a result. In our opinion sub-r. (3) of r. 4 controls both sub-r. (1) and sub-r. (2) and places a material restriction upon the power which the Court may exercise thereunder. It is thus plain that, in the case before us, as the proposed guardian did not signify his consent, the Court should not, in contravention of the express direction of sub-r. 3 of r. 4, have appointed him as guardian for the suit.

What then, is the effect of an appointment so made? It has been laid down in a long series of decisions that when a person has been appointed guardian without his consent, the infant is not represented and a decree made in a suit so constituted has no binding effect upon him. Amongst the decisions of the Judicial Committee, reference may be made to Khiraajmal v. Diam (1), Rashidannessa v. Mahammad Ismail Khan (2) and Partab Singh v. Bhabuti Singh (3). Amongst the decisions of this Court, reference may be made to Dakheswar Prosad Narain Singh v. Ruwat Marton (4), Narsingh Narayan v. Sheikh Jahi Mistry (5), Bal Kishan v. Topeswar (6), Dinabandhu Nandi v.

Mashuda Khatun (7), Purna Chandra v. Bijoy Chand (8), Baneswar v. Tara Pada (9), Radhashyam v. Ranga Sundari (10) and Barendra Nath Bose v. Aghore Nath Bose (11). A similar view was adopted by the Madras High Court in Chaudhuri Krishnayya v. Koripalli Raju (12) and Sharooof Sahib v. Raghunatha Sivaji (13), though a contrary view appears to have prevailed at one time in that Court as indicated by the judgment in Oodayanasamy Tevar v. Alagappa Chetty (14). Indeed, it is now well settled that the provision as to the consent of the person proposed to be appointed guardian for the suit is mandatory and imperative and this was emphasised by Patna High Court in Mohan Krishna v. Har Prosad (15). But the Respondent has urged that the present case falls within the principle of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Waliar v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (16), which is clearly distinguishable. As appears from the judgment of the Judicial Committee in that case, the mother who had been proposed for appointment as guardian of her minor son had entered appearance and acted throughout the trial of the suit. No trace, however, could be found on the record of a formal order for her appointment as guardian ad litem. The Judicial Committee held in substance that the absence of a formal order of appointment as guardian is not fatal to the validity of the proceedings, where the proposed guardian has in fact appeared and acted on behalf of the minor. In such a contingency, the absence of the formal order may well be treated as a curable irregularity. That this is the true effect of the decision of the Judicial Committee follows from the decisions in Janaki Das v. Mohabir (17), Pokhpal v. Chidder (18) and Asray Singh v. Sheo Naran Singh (19), and Keshwesarendra Sahi v. Ranec Debedra Bala Dasi (20). That principle has obviously no application to the circumstances of this case; nor can the provision of sec. 99, C. P. C., be invoked successfully, because as pointed out in Barendra Nath Bose v. Aghore Nath Bose (11), when the Court proceeds to make a decree against an infant who is not properly represented by a guardian as contemplated by the Code of Civil Procedure, the Court acts without jurisdiction, inasmuch as a decree is made against a person who is in essence not before the Court.

It has been finally urged that the fact that the proposed guardian had preferred an appeal to the Subordinate Judge may be taken as an index that he had consented to his appointment as guardian for the suit. We are unable to give effect to this contention. No doubt the proposed guardian preferred an appeal on behalf of the infant, but we have the equally important fact that he never appeared during the trial of the suit and took no steps to protect the interest of the infant. The view we take is supported by the decision of the Madras High Court in Sharooof v. Raghunatha (13). We hold accordingly that the decree made against the Appellant can not be maintained and must be vacated.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decrees of both the lower Courts set aside, only in so far as the Appellant is concerned, and the suit remitted to the Court of first instance to be retried against him. The Appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court from the Plaintiff Respondent. We make no order as to his costs in the Courts below.

It is conceded that this judgment will govern second Appellants Nos. 2377 to 2379 of 1919; a decree will be drawn up in similar terms in each of those cases.

Madras Estates Act (I of 1908)—Object of the statute—Rights conferred by the statute on occupying cultivators of raiyati lands, if can be claimed by middlemen who sub-let to occupying and cultivating tenants—Lease of Lanka lands for term—Passing of this Act before expiration of lease—Lessees who sub-let lands to cultivating tenants if can claim permanent occupancy rights and compel landlord to grant patta—Izadars and farmers of rent if identical, and if may acquire occupancy right.

The Appellants obtained from the Respondents a lease of certain Lanka lands for a period of three years at an annual rent. The lease contained various stipulations from which it was clear that the parties contemplated the cultivation of the land and the raising of crops upon it by raiyats and there was no clause forbidding sub-letting. It was further stipulated that at the conclusion of the term the lands were to be dealt with according to the pleasure of the Estate authorities without obtaining any release from the lessees. After obtaining the lease the Appellants did not cultivate the lands themselves but sub-leased them to cultivating tenants. On the termination of the lease the Appellants were served with a notice to quit. The Appellants, contending that inasmuch as they were cultivating the lands as raiyats when the Madras Estates Act of 1908 came into operation the contract of tenancy was entirely superseded by that statute, instituted a suit against the Respondents for determination of a fair and equitable rent for the holding leased to them and for a decree directing the Respondents to grant to them a patta in proper terms:

Held—That the object of the Madras Estates Act, 1908 was to improve the condition and confer new rights and privileges especially upon the occupying cultivators of raiyati lands and it would be quite opposed to its policy to confer on middlemen who sub-let to occupying and cultivating tenants rights and privileges at all resembling those conferred on occupying cultivators and indeed would result in depriving the latter class of the benefits intended to be conferred upon them.

The words “izadar and farmer of rent” in sub-sec. 1, sec. 6 are not synonymous. They denote two classes of persons. If izadars and farmers of rent are raiyats at all, they are, as appears from sec. 46, non-occupying raiyats and cannot be converted into raiyats with a permanent right of occupancy.

This was a consolidated appeal against two decrees, dated 14th April 1916, of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, affirming two decrees, dated 30th March 1914, of the Court of the District Judge of Kistna at Masulipatam, which affirmed two decrees, dated 25th April 1913, of the Court of the Suits Deputy Collector, Kistna District, Ellore, and made in Summary Suits No. 376 and No. 377 of 1912.

They arose out of two separate suits, wherein the parties as well as the subject-matter were different. There were, however, two questions which were common to both appeals, viz.: (1) whether the Plaintiffs-Appellants in each were occupancy tenants within the meaning of that term in the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908 (Madras Act I of 1908); and (2) whether the Plaintiffs-Appellants having given up possession of the lands in their respective occupations were entitled under sec. 55 of the said Act to a “puttah,” for Fasli 1320, which was the year after they had surrendered their rights, if any. There was also a further question in the first of the two appeals, viz., whether the Plaintiffs-Appellants could, under the circumstances of the case, maintain their suit?

The facts leading up to the present litigation may be briefly stated as follows:—The land in respect of which the Plaintiffs-Appellants claimed permanent occupancy rights measured 110 odd acres and was described as lanka-land (i.e., land formed as an island in the bed of a river). It was situate within the Zemindari of Maddur. There was litigation in connection with the right of succession to the Zamindari, and in 1908 it was under the management of a receiver appointed by the Court. The ijara of the land in suit was put up to auction sale early in 1908, when three persons, Butchayya and Venkataratnam (Plaintiffs-Appellants) and one Pedaswami, the husband of the second Respondent, became successful purchasers. Thereupon the receiver representing the

Maddur estate gave a joint and several ijara-puttah, dated the 31st March 1908, to the said three persons, who executed an ijara Muchilka bearing the same date in favour of the receiver. In these documents the lanka-lands were called ijara-lands, cists ijara-cists, rights created thereby ijara-rights and the lankas were described to have been given on ijara. The puttah and the Muchilka were executed for a period of three years, Faslis 1317, 1318 and 1319. The ijara-lessees covenanted not to transfer their ijara-rights without the approval of the Zamindar, and as regards giving up possession at the end of the term they agreed as follows :—

“At the conclusion of the term, the estate authorities may deal with the said lanka as they please without the necessity of relinquishment on our part.

“At the conclusion of the term, i.e., though it expires by the 20th June of Fasli 1319, we will for convenience of transaction, give up the lanka without leaving any produce belonging to us in the said lanka by the end of May of that Fasli.”

Under the terms of the ijara-puttah the ijara-lessees entered into possession, and for the entire term thereof they sublet the lands to other persons who actually cultivated the same.

On the 30th December 1909 the Appellants were served with a notice that the lease would expire Fasli 1319 and they were bound to quit the lands by the end of May 1910 and they were required to remove their things and quit the lands by that date.

On the 24th March 1911, two of the said three ijara-lessees instituted the suit under sec. 55 of the Madras Estates Land Act in the Court of the Sub-Collector, Narasapur Division, Narasapur, from which Court it was subsequently transferred to the Court of the Suits Deputy Collector, Kistna, at Ellore. The receiver of the estate was the first Defendant, and the Plaintiffs made the widow and the legal representative of the third ijara-lessee the second Defendant, alleging that she declined to join them in bringing the action. The Plaintiffs alleged that the said ijara-lands were raiyyati-lands, and that they were in possession thereof as raiyyats on the 1st July 1908, on which date the said Madras Estates Land Act came into force; that under sec. 6, sub-sec. 1, of the Act they had acquired occupancy right in the said lands, and that the first Defendant, the receiver, had not complied with their demand for a puttah for Fasli 1320. The Plaintiffs, therefore, prayed for a decree directing the first Defendant to grant them a “puttah” for Fasli 1320 in the prescribed form with proper terms for the holding in question and for costs.

On the 25th April 1913, the Suits Deputy Collector delivered judgment in favour of the first Defendant and passed a decree dismissing the suit with costs. He held that the lands in suit were raiyyati-lands, but that the Plaintiffs, who did not actually cultivate the lands, were ijaradars and not raiyyats, and consequently could not acquire occupancy rights under sec. 6, sub-sec. 6, of the Act. He also held that the Plaintiffs had given up possession as alleged by the first Defendant, and that as they were not in possession in Fasli 1320, they could not maintain the suit. He found the sixth issue in favour of the first Defendant. He finally held that even if the Plaintiffs had acquired occupancy rights, they being only two of the three joint tenants could not maintain the action as the lands had not been separated by metes and bounds.

Against the said decree of the Suits Deputy Collector, the Plaintiffs appealed to the Court of the District Judge, Kistna, at Masulipatam, who, on 30th March 1914, delivered judgment in favour of the first Defendant and made a decree, dismissing the Plaintiffs' appeal with costs. He held that as the widow of the third shareholder in the ijara-puttah had not joined the Plaintiffs either in their suit or appeal, the latter must fail, and that, if that view were wrong, the Plaintiffs, as decided by him that day in the appeal in the second case, were not the actual cultivators of the land but were holding the same as ijaradars as mentioned in sec. 6, sub-sec. 6, and were not holding as occupancy raiyyati tenants, and consequently they had acquired no occupancy rights in the land during their ijara. He also held that as the Plaintiffs were not in possession in Fasli 1320, they had no right to a puttah for that year and their action must fail.

Against the said decree of the District Judge the Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court at Madras, which Court delivered judgment on the 14th April 1916, in favour of the first Defendant and made a decree dismissing the Plaintiffs' appeal with costs. The learned Judges who heard the appeal held that though the Plaintiffs were only two of the three original joint puttah-holders, they were entitled to maintain their suit, but that, as held by them in the second case, the Plaintiffs were not the actual cultivators of the lands, and that they were not raiyyats within the meaning of the Act, and consequently had acquired no occupancy rights thereunder. They also held that though the Plaintiffs were out of possession in Fasli 1320, they were competent to bring the suit for a puttah for that year.

Against the said decree of the High Court the Plaintiffs have appealed in the ordinary way to His Majesty in Council and their appeal has been consolidated, as already stated, with the second appeal.

Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham for the Appellants.

Sir G. R. Lowndes, K. C., and Mr. J. M. Parikh, for the first Respondent.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., and Kenworthy Brown for the second Respondent.

Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham.—The point in this case is that after the lease was granted the Madras Estates Act I of 1908 was passed, and I now claim to hold under it. The Act supersedes this special lease.

The suit was begun by us for a new patta under sec. 53 of the Act.

Notice was given us in 1909 to quit the lands in 1910. Sec. 55 of Madras Act I of 1908.

The land is part of a Zamindari and so part of permanently settled estate under the Act. Sub-sec. 3, cl. (2).

[Sir George Lowndes.—There is a special definition of landlord under the Act and the question is whether the Appellants also are not sub-landowners.]

It is true that I have leased out portions of the land but it is not necessary that I should cultivate the whole.

Sec. 5 of the Act defines "landlord."

Sec. 3, sub-cl. (15) defines "raiyyati."

I say that everyone who holds "raiyyati land" for purpose of cultivation is a raiyyat. "Raiyyati land" is defined in the Act. Para. 10 of the section defines "private land."

It is only such persons as are entitled to collect the rents as come under the definition of landlords.

If I once establish I am a raiyyat I come under sec. 6 (1) and not under sec. 6 (6).

The definition of raiyyat says that I must hold the land for purposes of agriculture. This is the only condition. I need not cultivate the land myself.

I say I am neither a farmer of rent nor an ijaradar. It is no doubt true the patta is called an "ijara" patta but one must look at the whole deed.

SURISETTI BUTCHAYYA v. SRI RAJAH PARTHASARATHY APPA ROW.

[LORD PHILLIMORE.—I see the Act received the assent of the Governor-General (28th June 1908) six days before this patta. So the parties when they drew this up had the Act evidently in their mind.]

Collector of Tanjore v. Ramasamiar (1), ijara or lease defined.

Sec. 187 of the Madras Estates Act—“Any contract made before or after this Act shall take away, etc,” no freedom of contract. There is no condition in the lease which gave me a right to renewal. It is not suggested that any one else has occupancy rights. It is held that the land is raiyyati land and so the landlord's contention that he had possession fails from the very definition of “raiyyati” land.

The land was divided into six portions and I have always been cultivating three portions.

Ramasami v. Collector of Madura (2), defines the word “raiyyati.” Before the Act, in Act VIII of 1865, when word “tenant” is used the man need not cultivate it himself, or at any rate the whole of it himself. The sub-letting of a portion of the land should not be allowed to deprive the tenant of his rights.

The reason for the Courts below deciding against me is the way in which they treat the lease. They take it that it is an ijara lease. Krishnasami v. Varadaraja (3). Wilson's Glossary, p. 214. Definitions of ijara in judgment (p. 61 records).

Napier, J., seems to think that because my rent cannot be fixed, I cannot be a raiyyat:

There were no actual tenants of the land when possession was given to me.

[LORD PHILLIMORE called on the other side for reference to cases on this point.]

Sir George Lowndes referred to Debedra Nath v. Bibhudendra Mansingh (4), Rajani Kanta v. Secretary of State for India (5) and Yarlagadda Malakarjuna v. Somaya (6).

LORD ATKINSON.—This is a consolidated appeal against two decrees, both dated the 14th April 1916, of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, affirming two decrees, both dated the 30th March 1914, of the Court of the District Judge of Kistna at Masulipatam, which affirmed two decrees, both dated the 25th April 1913, of the Court of the Suits Deputy Collector, Kistna District, Ellore, made in Summary Suits No. 376 and No. 377 of 1912.

Though the parties in each of these suits, as well as the property affected, are different, the questions raised for decision in both appeals are practically identical, so that the decision made in one disposes of the other.

In the first suit the first Defendant who had been, in a suit dealing with the estate of the Zamindar upon which the Lanka lands, the subject of the suit, are situated, appointed Receiver by the Court by a lease bearing date the 31st March 1908, demised to the two Plaintiffs, the Appellants in this appeal, and to the deceased husband of the second of the two Defendants, the Respondents in the appeal, a considerable tract of Lanka land, over 100 acres in extent, for a term of three years from the 31st March 1908, reserving thereout a cist or rent of Rs. 2,420 per annum.

Some of the provisions of this lease demand consideration. It contains a recital that, in an auction held by the lessors, on whose behalf, of course, the Receiver acted, the lease had been made. The practice prevailing on this estate in reference to such lands as were demised was proved to be this : that when a lease was about to expire, or had but recently expired, an auction was held. Those who desired to become lessees of the land previously demised, bid at this auction, and the new lease was granted to the highest bidder, whether he was the old lessee or another. There was thus no custom of continuity of occupation. The outgoing lessee had no privilege or advantage. It is further recited that as the lessees had executed a Muchilka in favour of the lessors agreeing to cultivate the said Lanka lands under the conditions set forth in the lease, the lessors had "written and given their patta." One of these conditions was that as regards planting seeds, turfs, grass, etc., and enlarging the extent of land, the lessees were to regard all the orders the lessors had issued or might issue. Another condition was that the lessees were to continue to cultivate only 110 acres and 85 cents. A third, that if the Government should during the lease take any of the demised lands for conservance works or any other purpose, the lessees would get a remission for that land of only the average cist that might accrue with reference to the izara cist. That in the event of the Government taking lands with crops upon them the lessees might receive compensation from the Government for loss of profits, but would not be given any compensation out of the estate funds for such crops. A fourth condition, that if within the term silts should be formed and loss be caused by erosion, the lessees must bear the loss and pay the whole cist, etc., every year, and that they were not to apply for remission on any ground whatever. Again, the lessees were to bind themselves to all the steps the lessors might take against them under the Madras Rent Recovery Act 8, 1865, in regard to the collection of arrears. These are distress, sale or eviction. Another condition was that the lessees were not to transfer their ijara rights to others without the lessors' consent, and again, another, that neither the lessees nor the raiyyat who cultivates it, nor the merchant who purchases it, nor anybody else, shall take the tobacco and other produce raised on the izara Lanka to other places than the izara Lanka.

It is clear from this provision that the parties contemplated the cultivation of the land and the raising of crops upon it by raiyyats. No clause prohibiting sub-letting is to be found in the lease.

It is further stipulated that at the conclusion of the term the Lanka lands leased are to be dealt with according to the pleasure of the Estate Authorities without obtaining any release from the lessees, and that at the conclusion of the term, though it ends by the 30th June Fasli 1319, the lessees are to give up the Lanka land without leaving on it any produce whatever belonging to them by the end of May of that Fasli for the convenient transaction of business. Provisions so elaborate as these are scarcely such as one would expect to find in the contract of tenancy of an ordinary raiyyat.

The Appellants contend that by the provisions of certain clauses of the Madras Estates Act of 1908, this contract of tenancy is entirely superseded; that they are relieved from the obligations imposed on them by many of the covenants of their lease; that their tenure is changed, their occupancy continued, and their rent made subject to revision. If that be so, as they contend it is, then the burden rests upon them of clearly establishing that those clauses apply to their case. The obligation of proving the negative proposition that these clauses do not apply to their case does not rest upon the lessors.

On the 30th December 1909, a notice was, on behalf of the lessors, served upon the lessees informing them that as the term of three years' izara of the Lanka lands which they held from the lessors would expire by this Fasli 1319, and as they were bound to quit the lands at the end of May 1910, according to the contract of their registered Muchilka, they were required to remove by that date their things, etc., that were on the said Lanka lands and to vacate the same.

To this notice the lessees, on the 18th April 1910, sent a reply to the effect that they were cultivating the lands as *raiya*t when the Madras Estates Act, 1908, came into force; that they thereby acquired under sec. 6 of that statute permanent occupancy rights in the said Lanka lands and would not vacate them; and, further, that they possessed the right to obtain patta of the said lands; and that if patta should not be granted to them they would take legal proceedings. Accordingly the Appellants, in pursuance of this intimation of their intention, instituted on the 14th March 1911, against the Respondents, the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, praying the Court to determine what was a fair and equitable rent for the holding so leased to them, and further, to make a decree directing the Respondents to grant to them a patta in the form prescribed of their said lands on proper terms and to pay their costs.

In the judgment of Napier, J., who delivered the judgment of the High Court of Madras, the following passage is to be found: "It is admitted that the lessees did not cultivate the lands themselves, but sub-leased them to cultivating tenants." From the judgment of the Deputy Collector it clearly appears that it was proved before him by the witnesses examined on behalf both of the Appellants and the Respondents that the Appellants had sub-let, at all events, a considerable portion of the demised lands to sub-tenants who cultivated them personally, paying rent therefor. In the judgment of the Judge of the District Court is to be found the following passage:—

"Much stress has been laid upon the fact that there were no tenants on the lands when leased to the Plaintiffs. I do not see that this alters the case in the least, if the lands were leased to them under Izara tenure as I have held they were. It is in evidence the Plaintiffs did not cultivate the lands at all themselves, but let them out to cultivating tenants. Even if they had cultivated some of the lands themselves, I do not think it would have altered the position as the Izara tenure was clearly understood between the parties when it was entered upon."

The above-mentioned extract from the judgment of Napier, J., cannot, in their Lordships' view, be treated as merely a re-statement in wider language of the conclusion at which the District Judge had arrived. It may well be that, before the High Court the advocate who appeared for the present Appellants, feeling it hopeless, owing to the evidence that had been given, and to the judicial opinions which had been pronounced, to contest the point further, made the admission set forth by Napier, J. The passage from Mr. Justice Napier's judgment should, in their Lordships' view, be taken in its ordinary meaning, from which it follows that the Appellants dealt with the lands demised as middlemen, sub-letting them to tenants who held their holdings subject to a rent payable to their immediate landlords, occupied them and cultivated them. The lessees claim to have a rent fixed for all the land demised to them by their leases, and to have a patta granted to them of all these lands. Their Lordships have not to determine, if Mr. Justice Napier's statement be accepted according to its ordinary meaning, whether, if the Appellants had only sub-let to occupying and cultivating sub-tenants a substantial portion of their lands, they would be altogether disentitled to the relief they seek, or would only be entitled to that relief in relation to the portion of the demised lands which they had not sub-let, especially as this question was not raised or argued before their Lordships on the hearing of this appeal. A decision on either of them is not called for in this appeal, and their Lordships must not be taken to have formed, much less to have expressed, any opinion upon them.

It appears to their Lordships to be plain, from the provision of the first seven chapters of this statute of 1908, if not indeed from the whole of it, that the object of the Act was to improve the condition and confer new rights and privileges especially upon the occupying cultivators of raiyyati land such as these lands admittedly were. It would be quite opposed to its policy to confer on middlemen who sub-let to occupying and cultivating tenants, rights and privileges at all resembling those conferred on occupying cultivators, and, indeed, would result in depriving the latter class of the benefits intended to be conferred upon them. It could hardly be suggested that it was the object of the statute to bring about such a result as this, that the middleman could compel his landlord to grant him a patta at a rent to be fixed by a Court, and the middleman's occupying and cultivating sub-tenants should in their turn be able to compel their immediate landlord, the middleman, to grant to them pattas of their holdings at rents to be similarly fixed, and this, though the middleman was an absentee who never even visited his estate.

By sec. 50 of the Act, sub-sec. 1, the class of persons is described to whom the provisions of Chap. 4 are to apply. By sub-sec. 2 of that section, it is provided that a person of that class shall be entitled to have granted to him a patta for any current revenue. Turning back to sub-sec. 1 to find the description of the class to whom the right is given, it is to be composed of raiyyats with a permanent right of occupancy, and also raiyyats holding old waste lands under a landlord otherwise than under a lease in writing.

It is obvious the lessees in this case are not members of this latter section of the class. It is equally clear that they are not members of the first section of the class. They are not raiyyats with a permanent right of occupancy. It is to be observed the word is "occupancy" not "possession." An owner may in one sense be in possession of his estate by the receipt of rent from the tenants of that estate, but not occupancy.

Sec. 51 prescribed what the patta is to contain, and by sub-sec. 2 of that section it is enacted that any stipulation in restraint of cultivation or of harvesting by a raiyyat, or the giving up possession of his land by an occupying raiyyat at any specified time, is to be void and of no effect. A provision which in itself seems to suggest that the raiyyat, to be entitled to have a patta granted to him, has to be a cultivator of his holding.

Sec. 6, sub-sec. 1, defines the persons who are to be entitled to acquire the permanent right of occupancy in holdings. This definition qualifies the first section of the class mentioned in sec. 50 which are entitled to apply for a patta. They are those which were raiyyats, at the passing of the Act, and then in possession, or thereafter admitted by a landowner to possession of raiyyati land not being waste land situate on the landlord's estate. It is this permanent right of occupancy which entitles the raiyyat to apply for the patta.

Sec. 46 prescribes the mode by which a non-occupying raiyyat may acquire a permanent right of occupancy of his land, but cases falling within sec. 6, sub-secs. 4 and 5, are expressly excluded.

In the view of their Lordships the words "izadar and farmer of rent" occurring in this sub-section are not synonymous. They denote two classes of persons. They are not defined in the definition clause. If izadars and farmers of rent are raiyyats at all they are as appears from sec. 46, non-occupying raiyyats, and cannot be converted into raiyyats with a permanent right of occupancy. For these several reasons their Lordships are of opinion that the Appellants do not belong to the class of persons entitled to the kind of relief they seek to obtain, that the judgments appealed from were right and should be affirmed, and this appeal be dismissed; and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. The Appellants must in both appeals pay the Respondents separate costs.

MAHOMED IBRA-

Appellant,

v.

SHAIKH IBRAHIM

ROWTHER and

ors., Respondents.

Mahomedan Law—Proof of custom in derogation of, if permissible—Standard of proof—Onus—Lubbai Mahomedans of Coimbatore—Custom excluding females from succession.

The parties to the litigation were Lubbai Mahomedans of the Sunni sect residing in the District of Coimbatore in the Madras Presidency, the question was whether succession to the estate of a deceased member of the sect was governed by Mahomedan Law or by a rule of descent excluding females:

Held—That in view of sec. 16 of the Madras Civil Courts Act, III of 1873, prima facie all questions of succession amongst the parties who were Mahomedans were to be decided according to Mahomedan Law, but it is now well established that in India a custom at variance even with the rules of Mahomedan Law, governing the succession in a particular community of Mahomedans may be proved.

The onus of proof is on the party alleging the custom.

The custom should be ancient and invariable and established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence.

MAHOMED IBRAHIM ROWTHER v. SHAIKH IBRAHIM ROWTHER.

Held—That the evidence in this case fell far short of the standard of proof requisite to establish the custom alleged.

Apart from Madras Act III of 1873, the standard of proof found sufficient in FANINDRA DEB RAIKAT v. RAJESWAR DAS (1), could not be accepted as a guide in this case, upon the assumption that many of the Lubbais being recent converts from Hinduism retained the mode of the devolution of property according to Hindu usage even after their conversion.

ABRAHAM v. ABRAHAM (2) referred to.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court, Madras (12th August 1915) which reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore (7th January 1914).

The parties were Lubbai Mahomedans of the Sunni sect and the Plaintiffs sued to recover their share of inheritance in the estate of a deceased lady according to their personal law. The defence was that the parties were not governed by Hindu law, but by a special custom which excluded females from inheritance. The Subordinate Judge held that the onus was on the Defendants to prove the alleged custom and that they had failed to do so. He accordingly decreed the Plaintiffs' claim. On appeal the Madras High Court (Wallis, C. J., and Srinivasa Iyengar, J.) reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge and the Plaintiff now appealed to His Majesty in Council.

The facts of the case are fully set out in the judgment of their Lordships. The Respondents were not represented before the Board.

Mr. B. Dube for the Appellant. (Ex parte).

The question is whether this family is governed by Mahomedan or Hindu law.

The parties are Lubbais and are primâ facie governed by Mahomedan Law.

I concede that each family may have its own custom whether Lubbai or anything else but if it is apparently Mahomedan it will be presumed to be governed by Mahomedan Law until some other custom is proved. Proof here is not sufficient to discharge the onus.

Mirabivi v. Vellayanna (5), Madras Act III of 1873, sec. 16. Abdul Hussain Khan v. Bibi Sona Dero (3)

SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.—This is an appeal from a decree dated the 12th August 1915, of the High Court at Madras reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore, dated the 7th January 1914.

The litigants are Lubbai Mahomedans of the Sunni sect, and the contest is as to the devolution of the estate of Mahomed Hussain Rowther. He died in 1904 leaving a widow and three sons and also two daughters named Ponnuthayee and Sulaiha Bi.

Ponnuthayee died in September 1905, leaving a husband and a daughter. They are the Plaintiffs in this suit. The Defendants are the three sons of Mahomed Hussain Rowther, his widow and the two children of Sulaiha Bi who was dead at the institution of this suit.

The Plaintiffs claim shares in Mahomed Hussain's estate as heirs of Pannuthayee, and they are supported by the children of Sulaiha Bi, who make a similar claim as heirs of their mother. The contesting Defendants are the three sons and their mother.

The decision of the rival claims depends upon whether the devolution of Mahomed

(5) I. L. R. 8 Mad. 464 (1885).

MAHOMED IBRAHIM ROWTHER v. SHAIKH IBRAHIM ROWTHER.

Hussain's estate is governed by Mahomedan Law as the Plaintiffs contend or by a rule of descent excluding females as the contesting Defendants maintain.

Though it is common ground that Mahomed Hussain and the litigants are Mahomedans the contesting Defendants seek to escape from the course of devolution this would ordinarily involve by setting up what they describe as an immemorial custom and ancient usage.

In paras. 15, 16 and 17 of their written statement, they plead as follows :—

"15. It has been the immemorial custom and ancient usage in the Mahomedan families in the district of Coimbatore in general and in the families of these Defendants and the relations in particular that they have followed the Hindu Law as regards the law of property and succession and partition. Only the male members are entitled to succeed to the properties of their ancestors and females are excluded from inheritance when there are males. Besides it is also the custom in the Mahomedan families to give some amount including jewels at the time of or immediately after marriage to the female members in lieu of their shares; and consistently with that usage Defendants' father gave jewels, cash and other moveables worth about Rs. 4,000 to the mother of the second Plaintiff immediately after the marriage and the Plaintiff's conduct in not adverting to this in the plaint is fraudulent.

"16. According to that immemorial custom and usage the Plaintiffs have no right to claim a share in the share of Ponnuthayee Ammal while Ponnuthayee Ammal herself had no share.

"17. It has been the custom also in the family of the Plaintiffs."

On the settlement of issues the following (amongst others) were ordered to be tried :—

"(1) Are parties to suit governed by Hindu Law and whether Ponnuthayee, mother of the second Plaintiff, was not entitled to her share in the estate of her deceased father, Mahomed Hussain Rowther?

"(8) Whether the custom set out in para.

15 of the written statement is true and valid? and if so, was the claim of Ponnuthayee satisfied in accordance therewith?"

At the hearing an additional issue was framed at the request of the contesting Defendants which raised the question as to whether the suit was barred by an earlier decision. It calls for no discussion now as their Lordships see no reason to dissent from the concurrent determination of the lower Courts that this issue must be answered in the negative.

And thus the only question that remains for decision is as to this alleged custom or usage. The plea which professes to formulate it has been forcibly criticised by the learned Subordinate Judge in the course of his careful and discriminating judgment. He points out that in its wider assertion it is untenable, and even in its narrower form it is not established. He might even have gone further and pronounced the pleading bad.

In the result he held that the devolution was governed by Mahomedan Law and declared the Plaintiffs entitled to the shares claimed.

The Defendants appealed, and to meet the criticism of the Subordinate Judge they narrowed the definition of the custom. The 9th ground is that "the Court below ought to have found the custom alleged at any rate as regards the Lubbai community residing in the villages mentioned in the written statement."

On appeal the High Court reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit. The learned Chief Justice, instead of treating the custom or usage as a matter for proof by the contesting Defendants, held in effect that the Lubbai Mahomedans in that part of India at the date of their conversion from Hinduism to the Mahomedan faith elected to retain the Hindu rule excluding women, and that the real question in this suit was whether the Plaintiffs had proved an abandonment of the Hindu rule of exclusion.

Viewing the evidence in this light the Chief Justice held the evidence oral and documentary sufficient to show that the Defendants' family had adhered, with perhaps most of the Lubbais of the neighbourhood, to the Hindu rule excluding the succession of females.

Mr. Justice Srinivasa Ayyangar was more guarded in his opinion. Citing a passage from the judgment in Fanindra Deb Raikat v. Rajeswar Das (1) as a guide to the standard of proof required, he regarded it as probable that "many of the Lubbais being recent converts from Hinduism retained the mode of devolution of property according to Hindu usages even after their conversion."

He accordingly considered that the evidence to which he made special reference taken along with the evidence of the general prevalence of the practice was sufficient to prove the family custom set up.

But it is a misapprehension of the passage cited to treat it as a guide to the standard of proof in this case. There the question at issue was whether in the family then under discussion there was a legal power to adopt. Had its members been Hindus they would have been governed by Hindu law and there would have been this power. But though they affected to be Hindus, that in fact was not their status: the utmost that could be said was that though the family had introduced many Hindu customs, they in fact were governed by family customs. Of such a family it was manifestly appropriate to remark that "the question is not whether the general law is modified by a family custom forbidding adoption, but whether with respect to inheritance the family is governed by Hindu law, or by customs which do not allow an adopted son to inherit." But such a comment can have no application to conditions as they exist in this case.

No doubt in Abraham v. Abraham (2) it is said that a convert upon his conversion may renounce the old law by which he was bound as he has renounced his old religion, or if he thinks fit he may abide by the old law notwithstanding he has renounced his old religion. It is not, however, suggested in the present case that the Lubbais as a community have thought fit to abide by the entirety of their old law: the utmost that is said is that they, or some of them in a particular locality, have followed the Hindu law, not in all respects, but in relation to property, succession and partition. In their essential characteristics, custom and an election to abide by the law of the old status differ fundamentally as sources of law, still, making every assumption in its favour, in the circumstances of this case and on the record as it stands there is no mode of proving this alleged election except by way of inference from actings and conduct that would establish a custom, so that along whatever line this case may be approached the custom must be established and the burden of proof of this is on the Defendants.

Their Lordships have dealt with this aspect of the case at some length as it has evidently influenced the judgment of the High Court. But there is another aspect of it by which (in their Lordships' opinion) their decision must be guided.

It is enacted by the Madras Civil Courts Act, III, of 1873, sec. 16, that all questions regarding inheritance, marriage, or any religious usage or institution shall be decided where the parties are Mahomedans by the Mahomedan Law or by custom having the force of law.

The litigants are Mahomedans to whom this Act applies so that prima facie all questions as to succession among them must be decided according to Mahomedan Law. In India, however, custom plays a large part in modifying the ordinary law, and it is now established that there may be a custom at variance even with the rules of Mahomedan Law, governing the succession in a particular community of Mahomedans. But the custom must be proved. The essentials of a custom or usage have been repeatedly defined, but it will suffice to refer to the recent decision of Abdul Hussain Khan v. Bibi Sona Dero (3) where the essentials of a legal custom or usage and the requisites of proof are fully discussed. The following passage from the judgment in Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sivanantha Perumal Sethurayar (4) was cited as a correct and authoritative pronouncement of the law on these points.

"It is of the essence of special usages modifying the ordinary law of succession that they should be ancient and invariable; and it is further essential that they should be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence. It is only by means of such evidence that the Courts can be assured of their existence and that they possess the conditions of antiquity and certainty on which alone their legal title to recognition depends."

Though the custom or usage as pleaded is open to objection, still their Lordships will not reject the Defendants' contention on that ground, but will deal with the case as though the custom or usage had been pleaded in a form that was free from fault.

There is no suggestion on the record that the rule of exclusion on which the contesting Defendants rely has been established by judicial decision in the sense that this can be predicated of the rules of property and succession applicable to Khojas or Cutchi-Memons in the Bombay Presidency. Therefore it is necessary to examine the evidence to see whether it supports the rule of succession asserted by the contesting Defendants.

This evidence is documentary and oral, and as the former is more important and more trustworthy, their Lordships will first deal with that.

The documents on which the Defendants rely as proving the usage, begin in order of time with a decree of the Madras High Court in O. S. No. 5 of 1877, Exbt. XII, in which Mr. Justice Innes decided in its favour.

There was, however, an appeal from his decree which ended in a compromise, a circumstance which deprives his decision of much of its evidentiary value.

Moreover, in 1885, an Appellate Bench of the Court in Mirabivi v. Vellayanna (5) decided that the custom of exclusion in the case then before them had not been proved, and this decision has been recently approved by the Judicial Committee in Abdul Hussain v. Sona Dero (3).

The next document in order of time is the judgment in O. S. 22 of 1904, dated the 26th of February, 1906, Exbt. III, where the custom was affirmed; but the decision in fact was based on that in O. S. 5 of 1877, and has little or no independent value.

Then reliance is placed on the judgment in O. S. 755 of 1906, dated the 26th of September 1910, Exbt. IX. But it is open to the comment that the decision was influenced by that given in O. S. 22 of 1904, as also was the judgment on Appeal Exbt.

MAHOMED IBRAHIM ROWTHER v. SHAIKH IBRAHIM ROWTHER.

XVI. Thus on an examination of these documents it may fairly be said that the several judgments are substantially based on that pronounced in O. S. 5 of 1877, which is open to the comment that has been made on its value.

The documentary evidence on which the Plaintiffs rely starts with the judgment in Mirabivi v. Vellayanna (5). There the High Court held even in 2nd appeal that there was no evidence to justify the finding of the lower Courts in favour of the custom, and this decision, as already stated, has received the approval of this Board, in Abdul Hussein Khan v. Bibi Sona Dero (3).

Then there follows a series of documents, some negating the custom, others applying Mahomedan Law where the custom was not pleaded, and others proceeding on the assumption that it was Mahomedan Law that applied. In all these instances the parties before the Court were Tabbai Mahomedans. The first is a judgment of the 15th July 1890, in O. S. 85 of 1890, Exbt. L, followed by a judgment on appeal in that suit, Exbt. M, in both of which the right of a female to succeed under Mahomedan Law is recognised.

On the 3rd October, 1892, judgment was pronounced in O. S. 373 of 1891, Exbt. C, where the rights of females were treated as governed by Mahomedan Law.

On the 23rd January 1893, a Petition for a succession certificate, Exbt. F, was presented, and female members of the family were made counter Petitioners as though the rights of the parties were governed by Mahomedan Law.

On the 2nd August 1897, the High Court passed a decree, Exbt. G, confirming the decree of the lower Appellate Court, with the result that the sisters' right to shares, according to Mahomedan Law, was established, though the custom had been pleaded.

On the 30th September 1901, it was decided by the judgment in O. S. 753 of 1900, Exbt. B, affirmed on appeal by the judgment of the District Judge, Exbt. B1, that a female in a Tabbai Mahomedan family was entitled to a share. In this case a custom was alleged that a woman is given by her family, at or about the time of her marriage, her share, or the equivalent of her share, in the estate of her own family. The custom was negatived, though the District Judge seems to have thought that the Appellants would have been entitled to more favourable consideration had they pleaded that they had retained the Hindu Law of inheritance and succession, instead of setting up a special custom at variance with the Mahomedan Law.

On the 5th of June 1903, a plaint in O. S. 337 of 1903, Exbt. O, was presented in which it was taken for granted that the rights of a female were governed by Mahomedan Law.

On the 30th March 1903, there was a judgment in O. S. 238 of 1902, Exbt. R, which assumed a right to a share in a female, though it held that in the circumstances of the case the female's right was barred under Mahomedan Law.

The judgment dated the 13th January 1904, in O. S. 36 of 1901, Exbt. H, and that dated the 4th December 1905, in O. S. 34 of 1894, Exbt. N, proceed on the same assumption.

On the 18th October 1906, and the 2nd January 1907, petitions for succession certificates, Exbts. K and P were presented by daughters, and on the 2nd September 1910, by a judgment in O. S. 33 of 1908, Exbt. Q, the right of a widow and daughters to shares according to Mahomedan Law was affirmed.

It will thus be seen that over this series of years the rights of female members of the Lubbai Mahomedan community, under Mahomedan Law have been repeatedly asserted and recognised, and that on three occasions the rule of exclusion, when pleaded, has been expressly negatived.

When this documentary evidence is contrasted with that adduced in support of the alleged rule of exclusion, it cannot be said that the custom or usage is supported by clear and unambiguous evidence. On the contrary so far as the weight of documentary evidence goes the preponderance is on the side of the Plaintiffs.

Turning then to the oral evidence their Lordships cannot find in it sufficient proof to support the Defendants' plea.

The witnesses were all examined before the Subordinate Judge who made in his judgment a careful and critical examination of their evidence with the result that he was unable to find the custom or usage proved, and their Lordships can see no sufficient reason for questioning his appreciation of the evidence. He evidently did not consider that the witnesses called by the contesting Defendants held a position in the community entitling them to greater credit than those called by the Plaintiffs, and this appears to their Lordships to be a just estimate of their worth.

There is a witness who holds an office that should have enabled him to speak with some measure of authority and that is P. W. 5 a Khazi of Pallapati, and the same may be said of P. W. 7 a Moulvi, but the Subordinate Judge evidently was not impressed by either of them. For what it may be worth, however, both assert that a Lubbai's estate is divided according to Mahomedan Law.

Looking then at the whole of the evidence, documentary and oral, their Lordships consider it falls far short of the standard of proof requisite to establish a custom or usage excluding females from succession.

It merits notice too that the custom as pleaded is not limited to the exclusion of females, but asserts as a part or at any rate an accompaniment of it that it is the custom to make a gift to female members at the time of or immediately after marriage in lieu of their shares; and it is alleged that consistently with that usage the Defendants' father gave jewels, cash and other moveables, worth about Rs. 4,000 to the mother of the second Plaintiff immediately after marriage.

This is negatived by the Subordinate Judge and from this conclusion the High Court expresses no dissent.

The result then is that their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the High Court should be set aside and the decree of the Subordinate Judge restored, with the variation that a day be fixed by the Court of 1st instance for the appointment of a Commissioner in lieu of the 7th February 1914, and that the contesting Defendants do pay to the Plaintiffs their costs in the High Court.

Six years have elapsed since the date of the decree under appeal, and as no satisfactory explanation is given of this long delay there will be no order as to the costs of this appeal.

A Hindu by becoming a Brahmo does not necessarily cease to be a Hindu. Something further than the mere becoming a Brahmo is necessary for a man to cut himself off from Hinduism.

A declaration under the Special Marriage Act, 1872, cannot be taken as an abjuration for all purposes of Hinduism but is merely a statement for the purposes of the Act itself.

Order of Greaves, J., passed in the exercise of Testamentary and Intestate Jurisdiction, dated the 26th April 1922.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. H. D. Bose for the Applicant.—The application is for grant of letters of administration under the Indian Succession Act. The deceased was a Brahmo and so does not come under the category of Hindu, Mahomedan, Budhist, etc. and so the Probate and Administration Act does not apply. Brahmoism is distinct from Hinduism and Brahmos cannot be called Hindus. Refers to Bhagwan Koer v. J. C. Bose (1). Here the deceased made a solemn declaration under the Act III of 1872 at the time of his marriage that he was not a Hindu.

Mr. M. M. Chatterjee, Solicitor, guardian of the infant, in person.—Brahmoism accepts the fundamental principles of Hinduism. It may be said to be a branch of Hinduism. Mere profession of Brahmoism does not necessarily make a man cease to be a Hindu unless he abjures the social rules of Hindus and declares himself not to be a Hindu. Refers to

(1) I. L. R. 31 Cal. 11 : s. c. 7 C. W. N. 895 (P. C.) (1903).

Bhagwan Koer v. J. C. Bose (1). A declaration under the Act of 1872 is necessary to validate a marriage between parties who do not like to go through the ceremony of a strictly Hindu marriage. The Act itself was passed with that object. A declaration under that Act does not necessarily change the status. Again except in the case of In the goods of Benoyendro Nath Sen,* who was more or less an ardent Brahmo, the universal practice has been to make similar grants under the Probate and Administration Act.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an application by the widow of the deceased for a grant to her out of this Court of Letters of Administration of her deceased husband's estate. There is no doubt that she is entitled to a grant but she asks for it under the Indian Succession Act (Act X of 1865) which (see sec. 331) does not apply to intestate succession to the property of any Hindu, Mohammadan or Budhist and the question that falls for decision is whether, under the circumstances, the applicant is entitled to a grant under that Act or whether the grant should issue under the provisions of the Probate and Administration Act (Act V of 1881). The deceased left an infant son and if the grant issues under the former Act the widow will be entitled to 1/3rd of the estate, if under the latter Act she will only be entitled to the ordinary rights of a Hindu widow under Hindu law. Under these circumstances I directed that the infant son should be represented and a guardian ad litem was appointed and the matter was argued on his behalf.

The evidence is as follows. That the deceased was during his life time and at the time of his death a Brahmo by faith, that he was married under the Special Marriage Act, (Act III of 1872), that the marriage was registered under that Act after he and his wife had made declarations under the Act, that the Namkaran (naming) ceremony of the son of the deceased was performed under Brahmo rites, and that none of the ordinary rites and ceremonies usually observed in an ordinary Hindu family were observed by the deceased. The declaration made under Act III of 1872 is to the effect that the parties do not profess the Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Mahommadan, Parsi, Buddhist, Sikh, or Jaina religion. The preamble to the Act recites that it is expedient to provide a form of marriage for persons who do not profess (inter alia) the Hindu religion. Cl. 2 (4) provides (inter alia) that the parties must not be related to each other in any degree of consanguinity or affinity which would, according to any law to which either of them is subject, render a marriage between them illegal. Cl. 10 provides for the signature by the parties of the declaration already referred to. Cl. 16 provides that either party who contracts any other marriage during the life time of the other shall be liable to be punished for bigamy. Cl. 17 makes the Indian Divorce Act applicable to such marriages. Cl. 18 provides that the issue of any marriage solemnized under the Act shall be deemed to be subject to the law to which their fathers were subject as to the prohibition of marriages by reason of consanguinity and affinity. The short question which arises for decision is whether the deceased by becoming a Brahmo and remaining such until his death ceased to be a Hindu.

In Bhagwan Koer v. J. C. Bose (1) a similar question arose with regard to a

(1) I. L. R. 31 Cal. 11; s. c. 7 C. W. N. 895 (P. C.) (1903).

Sikh. The finding of the Chief Court of the Punjab was that the deceased in that case never renounced Hinduism, that he never became a professed Brahmo and that even if he did so he did not cease to be a Hindu thereby and that he was a Hindu within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Probate and Administration Act.

The Judicial Committee to whom the case went on appeal state at p. 33 as follows:—

“The second form in which the objection to the grant of Probate was put was that, assuming the testator as a Sikh to have been originally a Hindu within the meaning of the Probate and Administration Act, he had ceased to be either a Sikh or a Hindu by becoming a member of another religious body, the Brahmo Samaj. The learned Judges of the Chief Court examined the literature bearing upon the Brahmo society; they had before them much important evidence with reference to the Brahmos and the relation of their principles and their organisation to the Hindu system, and they came to the conclusion that a Sikh or Hindu by becoming a Brahmo did not necessarily cease to belong to the community in which he was born. They also found on the evidence that the testator never became a professed Brahmo at all. In both these conclusions their Lordships agree.”

I am inclined to think that this probably disposes of the matter so far as I am concerned as it seems to me to lay down that a man by becoming a Brahmo does not necessarily cease to be a Hindu, that is to say that something further than the mere becoming a Brahmo is necessary for a man to cut himself off from Hinduism. And I think that the passage is all the more forceful from the fact that it was not necessary for the purposes of the case for the Judicial Committee to express themselves on the point as it would have been sufficient for them to have merely adopted the finding that the Sikh in question never became a professed Brahmo at all.

But it is suggested that this case differs from the present by reason of the declaration made in the present case under Act III of 1872. It becomes necessary therefore to consider this declaration and as a result of so doing I have come to the conclusion that it cannot be taken as an abjuration for all purposes of Hinduism but merely as a statement for the purposes of the Act itself. I understand that the object of the Act was to assist those who having adopted Brahmoism felt scruples at being married under Hindu rites, some of which were repugnant to them, and who therefore desired some means of going through a form of marriage which would be legal and binding other than that prescribed by orthodox Hinduism. Moreover I think that the expression to which I have already referred in cl. 2 of the Act has some significance namely "according to any law to which either of them is subject." Now what is the personal law to which the contracting parties are subject? Surely it is Hindu law and no other, at least if this is not so I find some difficulty in saying what was the personal law of the parties. Moreover this is what the Judicial Committee's decision in Bhagwan Koer v. J. C. Bose (1) amounts to when they say that a Hindu by becoming a Brahmo did not necessarily cease to belong to the community in which he was born. And if this is so I cannot think that the declaration under Act III of 1872 was any more than the affirming of something which had actually taken place and that it could not by itself amount to an abjuration of the status and law under which the parties were born.

It will perhaps not be out of place to refer to the passage in Bhagwan Koer v. J. C. Bose (1) which deals with the position of a Brahmo.

"The next question is whether Brahmos can be said to be included within the term Hindu. We do not think we need discuss this question in any great detail. The founder of the sect was a Hindu who never abjured his ancestral religion. In fact he was a mere reformer and professed to restore the ancient faith to its original purity. There are now three sections of which the adi, which professes to follow the principles of the founder, has the fewest points of difference from the old religion. They all widely differ in their tenets from those of other Hindus, but there are still many points in common between them and the highest form of Vidantism or Brahmanism. Brahmoism is a faith of Indian origin and considering the extreme tolerance of Hinduism in matters of mere belief we are disposed to think that a mere profession of Brahmoism does not necessarily make a man cease to be a Hindu unless he also abjures the social rules of Hindus and declares himself not to be a Hindu."

So far as the last line is concerned I have already dealt with the effect of the declaration under Act III of 1872.

I may add that I am told that, except in a single instance "In the goods of Benoyendro Nath Sen"* where a grant was issued under the Succession Act, the invariable practice of this Court has been to make such grants in the case of Brahmos under the Probate and Administration Act subject to the appointment of the applicant as guardian of her infant son for the purpose of applying for a grant.

Insolvency—Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), secs. 55 and 56—Application, to be made by the Official Assignee—Creditor, if may apply when the Official Assignee refuses to act.

An application under secs. 55 and 56 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, should be made by the Official Assignee in whom the property of the insolvent is vested.

If the Official Assignee refuses to take action when asked, a creditor may make such an application with the leave of the Court.

Order of Rankin, J., dated the 25th August 1921 passed in the exercise of Insolvency Jurisdiction.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Gregory and Mr. S. Ghosh, Counsel, appeared for the Official Assignee.

Mr. A. N. Chaudhuri, Counsel, appeared for Madhoram Raghunath.

Mr. B. C. Ghosh, Counsel, appeared for Raghunath Dass Sewlal.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an application on behalf of Kissendass Banthia, the adjudicating creditor, asking for an order that Madhoram Raghunath do produce a certain deed of assignment executed by the insolvents in favour of Raghunath Dass Sewlal of all debts due to the insolvents and also another deed referred to in the summons executed by Raghunath Dass Sewlal assigning their interest under the first deed. The summons also asks that the first deed may be declared void and in the alternative that Raghunath Dass Sewlal do pay to the Official Assignee a sum of Rs. 30,000 received by them as consideration for the assignment executed by them above referred to.

A preliminary objection was taken that this application which is said to be made by virtue of the provisions of secs. 55 and 56 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act can only be made by the Official Assignee. I think the objection is well-founded and that such an application should be made by the Official Assignee in whom the property of the insolvents is vested and not by a creditor. If the Official Assignee, when asked to take action, refuses it may be that with the leave of the Court a creditor may make such an application but I have no evidence before me either that the Official Assignee has been asked to take action or that he has refused to move. This being so I think the preliminary objection must prevail and that on the materials before me I must refuse the application.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. Some parties referred their disputes to certain arbitrators stipulating in the agreement that they and their heirs and representatives would be bound by the award. After the hearing of argument was closed it was brought to the notice of the arbitrators that two out of the parties had died and the arbitrators allowed time for filing fresh achnamals and for appointment of a guardian for the minor heir of one of the deceased parties, but nothing was done. The arbitrators then made their award and on application being made to Court, the Court made the order for filing the award:

Held—That having regard to the subject-matter of the arbitration and the terms of the reference the legal representatives of the deceased persons would be bound by the reference to arbitration made by their predecessors.

person who is not a party to or properly represented in any proceedings should not be bound by those proceedings. But proceedings before arbitrators are not intended to be carried on according to the rules of procedure contained in the Civil Procedure Code. If there is a binding reference to arbitration all that it is necessary to be seen is that there is a substantial representation of the different interests before the arbitrators. There is no rule of procedure by which the arbitrators could substitute representatives or appoint guardian ad litem for infants.

The question whether the award would be binding or not must depend upon the circumstances of each case. The interests of the minors not having been prejudicially affected and having been properly looked after by the adult members who were present, the award ought not to be set aside on the ground of the defect in procedure not affecting the merits where substantial justice has been done.

This was an appeal preferred on the 19th December 1919 against an order of Babu Mati Lal Ray, Additional Subordinate Judge of Zillah Faridpur, dated the 22nd September 1919.

The second party known as Ula Babus are owners of another share of the same zamindari. Their entire share was let out in patni to the fourth party. The third party called the Kanchanpur Babus are owners of 6 annas share of Patpasha in zamindari and patni right and two annas share in ijara right and they are also owners of 8 annas share in the zamindari of estate Ujanchak. The fourth party as already stated are patnidars of the share of the second party in Patpasha, and the fourth Ka party are jotedars of Patpasha under the fourth party. The fifth party and sixth party are owners of remaining shares in the zamindari of Ujanchak. It appears there were long standing disputes between the parties about the boundary between the two estates with regard to certain chur lands alleged to be reformations in situ. It should be stated at the outset that owners of the share of the zamindary interest in Patpasha held by the third party in patni and ijara right were no party to the reference to arbitration. The reference was made by documents called achalnamahs executed by the parties in favour of the arbitrators and filed before them on the 16th October 1916. At the time of the reference a proceeding under sec. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code was pending between the parties and there was further likelihood of other Civil and Criminal cases arising between them. The parties stipulated that they and their heirs and representatives would be bound by the award made by the arbitrators. Bijoy Kumar Mukherjee of the second party executed the achalnamah for himself and as guardian of two minor nephews. The arbitrators commenced their work in January 1917. During the continuance of the proceedings before the arbitrators Bejoy Gopal Mukerji died. In May 1918 an ekrarnama was executed in favour of the arbitrators by Nripendra Kumar Mukherjee, son of Bejoy Gopal on his own behalf and as guardian of his minor brother Debendra Nath stating that they would be bound by all the conditions in the reference executed by Bejoy Gopal. Nagen-dra Nath Mukherji who was an executant of the achalnamah of the second party also joined in this ekrarnama as guardian of the minors on whose behalf Bejoy Gopal had executed the achalnamah as guardian. The arbitrators commenced to hear arguments on behalf of the parties in June 1918. The first, second, fourth and fourth Ka parties were represented by the same pleader before the arbitrators. The hearing of arguments before the arbitrators was closed on the 29th of September 1918. Then on 5th October 1918 it was brought to the notice of the arbitrators that Nripendra Kumar and Nilmani Mukherji of the second party had died in July or August and on the application of the second party the arbitrators gave time till the 8th November 1918 for filing fresh achalnamahs on behalf of the representatives of Nilmani and for appointment of guardian for the minor. It appears that Nilmani left three minor sons one of whom Nirode Kumar Mukerji is said to have now attained majority. No fresh achalnamah, however, was filed nor was any guardian for the minor Debendra appointed. The arbitrators made their award on the 22nd of December 1918. Application for filing the award was made in Court on 20th March 1919, and the learned Subordinate Judge made his order from which this appeal is brought on 22nd September 1919.

The third, fifth and sixth party applied for an order for filing the award.

The first, second and fourth party appeal against the order of the Court below. The appeal is supported on the following grounds, (1) the arbitrators were guilty of misconduct, (2) on the death of two of the second party their representatives were not made parties and no new guardian was appointed for the minor Debendra and therefore the award is null and void, and (3) the award has determined a matter not referred to arbitration and such matter cannot be separated without affecting the determination of the matter referred. The plea of misconduct is based upon two letters, Exbts. 12 and 13 which the arbitrators had placed on their record and it is urged that they had communications about the case with some of the parties without the knowledge of the others. We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that there is absolutely no ground for the allegation, and that there was no misconduct on the part of the arbitrators. With regard to the second ground the fact is as has been already stated that no new guardian was appointed for Debendra on the death of his brother Nripendra, and the heirs of Nilmani, i.e., Nirode, Kalisadhan and Rabindra were not substituted as parties before the arbitrators. Debendra was the heir of Nripendra. It is conceded on behalf of the Appellants that having regard to the subject-matter of the arbitration and the terms of the reference the legal representatives of the deceased persons would be bound by the reference to arbitration made by their predecessors. But it is urged that when two of the second party died during the period when arguments were being addressed to the arbitrators and the representative of one of them were not brought on the record and no guardian was appointed for the minor who was already a party, the arbitrators could not proceed to make an award. Reliance is placed on the case of Rashidun-nisa v. Mahomed Ismail

Khan (1). In our opinion that case has no bearing on the present one. There a reference to arbitration was made on behalf of a minor by her sister who professed to act as guardian for the minor. In the award her sister was described as acting for herself and guardian for the minor, but at the date of the award an application was pending before the District Judge for her appointment as guardian which was subsequently rejected. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the statement in the award was unjustified and the award was a nullity so far as the minor was concerned. The minor's share in the property was in that case reduced by the award and her interest in the proceedings was adverse to that of another minor for whom also the alleged guardian purported to act. It should also be observed that it was on those grounds it was not seriously contended before their Lordships that the arbitration proceedings, so far as the interest of the Appellant before them was concerned, could be supported. The Appellant also rely on the case of Manindra v. Mahananda (2). The decision in that case does not support the Appellants. But they say relying on a passage in the report that as the hearing before the arbitrators had not been completed before the death of the persons referred to, it was necessary to bring their representatives on the record and to make them parties and as this was not done the award is a nullity. It is true as a general principle that a person who is not a party to or properly represented in any proceedings should not be bound by those proceedings. But proceedings before arbitrators are not intended to be carried on according to the rules of procedure contained in the Civil Procedure Code. If there is a binding reference to arbitration all that it is necessary to be seen is that there is a substantial representation of the different interests before the arbitrators. In this case the reference was binding on the representatives of Nilmoni. There is no rule of procedure by which the arbitrators could substitute those representatives or appoint guardians ad litem for infants. If we were to hold that the arbitrators could not go on with the arbitration as the representatives or some persons on their behalf did not choose to come before the arbitrators, the result would be that although the reference would not abate on the death of a party under the law the arbitrators would in fact be unable to make an award and the arbitration would come to an end. We are therefore of opinion that the proposition urged by the Appellant cannot be of universal application. The question whether the award would be binding or not must depend upon the circumstances of each case. Here all the investigations had been finished and all the documents had been produced before the arbitrators when the parties were alive. The arguments for the second party were addressed by the pleader who also represented the first and fourth parties, as their interest was the same. Nagendra of the second party was there and he represented all the minors in the proceedings in the Court below as their guardian and is also now appearing as their guardian in this Court. There were also other adult persons of the second party. Then it must also be borne in mind that the whole interest of the second party, including that of the minors, in the property had been let out in patni to the fourth party, and the first and the fourth parties are really the persons who are directly interested in the matter of arbitration and the second party who are entitled to receive a fixed rent for their share of the property from the fourth party, have only a remote interest in the controversy. No question as to the rights of the minors as between the other members of the second party was involved in the arbitration and whatever concern the family had in it, it was properly looked after by the adult members who were present. Nothing was stated to us as having prejudicially affected the interest of the minors in particular apart from other members of the second party. It has been pointed out to us that none of the adult members of the second party brought the fact of the death of two of their parties during the course of their argument before the arbitrators. It was several days after the arguments had been finished that this was done. It is stated in the award that the second party asked for time to take the necessary steps and time was given to them but nothing was done. Nagendra did not come forward with any fresh ekrarnamah as he had done along with Nripendra on the death of Bejoy Gopal. It is urged by the Respondents, not without good reason, that when the persons who now purport to take up the cause of the minors anticipated that the decision of the arbitrators would not be quite favourable to them, they acted in this way with the evident object of finding a loophole to attack the award in subsequent proceedings. To give effect to the contention of the Appellants would be in our opinion to declare the award a nullity on mere technical grounds, although it seems to have been made after a long and protracted investigation with regard to long standing disputes in which a large number of persons were concerned.

We think that an award made on proper reference ought not to be set aside on the ground of the alleged defect in procedure not affecting the merits where substantial justice has been done. The Respondents also contend that even assuming that the interest of the minors cannot be affected by the award, the award cannot be held to be a nullity. The reference would have been good as regards the other parties without joining the predecessors of the minors as some of their co-sharers in the zamindari of Patpasha under whom the third party hold did not join in the reference. The Appellants reply that the others agreed to the reference because they knew that the second party was also prepared to execute an achalnamah and if some of the second party are not bound by the award the others are also not bound. It appears to us there is no substance in this because the second party did as a matter of fact execute an achalnamah in the same terms as others and if on account of death some of the second party cannot be bound by the award that would not affect the validity of the award as regards all. We are therefore of opinion that the award is not a nullity.

The third ground of the Appellants is formulated thus :—The disputed lands as pointed out by the parties to the Commissioner were comprised in Circuit No. 1 and Circuit No. 3 as depicted in the map of the Commissioner and therefore the arbitrators ought to have fixed the boundary line with regard to those two plots only and their award ought to have been confined to this. Instead of doing so they have declared that the land to the north of the district survey and settlement line from points A to B marked in the Commissioner's map appertain to Ujan-chak and so on. The result is that they have settled boundaries of lands which lie outside Circuit No. 1 and Circuit No. 3 of the Commissioner's map. It seems to us there is no substance in this objection. The reference was for fixing boundaries between two estates. The reference and the award show that the question for decision before the arbitrators was the ascertainment of boundaries between the two estates and the directions given to the Commissioner was also for that purpose. The fact that the parties pointed out two plots of land as disputed plots would not confine the reference made and require the arbitrators to give an award only with regard to those two plots of land. We think the arbitrators were quite right in not restricting their award to the two plots and in fixing the boundary lines between the two estates, and we agree with the learned Judge below in holding that the arbitrators have not exceeded their authority and determined matters not referred to arbitration.

The grounds urged in support of the appeal fail and the appeal must be dismissed with costs. Hearing fee, we assess at 10 gold mohurs.

The 20th January 1922.

On the second day of hearing of this appeal an objection was taken on behalf of the Respondent that Respondents Nos. 35 and 36 are dead, that there has been no substitution of their heirs and that the appeal has abated and that it cannot proceed by reason of that fact. We are not informed even now when those persons died. As a matter of fact the persons who are the heirs of the deceased Respondents Nos. 35 and 36 are on the record and are represented here before us. They were substituted under an order of this Court, dated the 27th July 1920. No objection appears to have been taken at the time when the order was made and the order has in fact been acquiesced in for a period now running up to two years. We accordingly hold that this objection fails.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, Appellant,
v.

RAJAGOPALA KRISHNA
YACHENDRA BAHADUR
VARU, RAJA OF VENKATAGIRI, since deceased, Respondent.

Lakheraj lands in the zamindari of Venkatagiri—Government, if may assess revenue thereon—Inam rules, if apply to them—Permanent settlement of revenue, if could be concluded apart from Reg. XXV of 1802 (Mad.)—Secs. 3 and 4—Reg. XXXI of 1802 (Mad.), scope of.

Sec. 4 of Reg. XXV of 1802 (Mad.), by which Government in concluding permanent settlement of revenue with the zamindars of the Madras Presidency reserved to itself the power of imposing additional revenue upon lakheraj lands, had no application to the Venkatagiri zamindari, inasmuch as the sunnud-i-milkeut istimrar granted by the Government to the zemindar in respect of it made no such reservation and must, in view of the provisions of sec. 3 of the Regulation and the necessity which arose of making separate arrangements with powerful zamindars, have been granted independently of the provisions of the Regulation.

Reg. XXXI of 1802 (Mad.) refers entirely to procedure appointed for the investigation of title to hold lands exempted from payment of revenue.

These were consolidated appeals against the judgment of the High Court of Judicature at Madras and five decrees passed in pursuance thereof dated the 29th March 1916, which affirmed the decrees passed by the District Court of Nellore and the Subordinate Court of North Arcot respectively in the suits mentioned in the following paragraphs.

The Plaintiff (Respondent) in each of the first four cases (in the District Court) was the Raja of Venkatagiri, who held the zamindari of Venkatagiri under a permanent settlement sanad. Within the ambit of his estate there were at the date of the sanad various parcels of land which had previously been alienated by inam grants. The first suit—which gave rise to the first of the present appeals—related to them generally, and he therein asked for and obtained an injunction restraining Government from holding any investigation into the nature of and title to inams and lakheraj lands in the said zamindari and from dealing with the same under the inam rules . . . or resuming them or assessing them to public revenue."

The second, third and fourth suits related to certain specific instances of such inams of the classes known as devadayam, dharmadayam and brahmadayam or religious inams. The inam lands in question in the second and third suits had been taken by the zamindar into his own occupation—the grants being (as the Plaintiff said) resumed—and that in question in the fourth suit had been bought up by him; and all were in the possession of the Plaintiff. In each case the Inam Commissioner had completed his enquiry, in the course of which he found that the inams should not be confirmed as such under the rules, and consequently ordered that they should be "resumed by Government," i.e., assessed to public revenue. In each case the Raja obtained a declaration that such order was invalid.

The fifth suit (in the Subordinate Court) was similar to the fourth, the holder of an agraharam inam having sold the endowment, and a similar decree was passed; but the purchasers, viz., the Plaintiffs (the third and fourth Respondents) were not the zamindars, and the lands were within the ambit of the Kalahasti zamindari.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. RAJAGOPALA KRISHNA YACHENDRA.

The High Court having affirmed the said decrees on appeal—though its judgment did not proceed on the same grounds as those of the original Courts—the Defendant preferred these appeals from the Appellate decrees.

Mr. A. M. Dunne, K. C. (with Mr. Kenworthy Brown) for the Appellant referred to Reg. XXV of 1802 (Mad.), Collector of Trichinopoly v. Leekamani (1), Proclamation of 23rd August 1800. Instructions of Government, 4th September 1799 and Vedanta v. Kaniyappa (2). Principle of res judicata was not applicable as previous decision did not deal with same property or same class of property.

Referred to Mangalathammal v. Narayanāswami Aiyar (3), Natesa Chetti v. Vengu Nachiar (4) and Moosa Goolam Ariff v. Ibrahim Goolam Ariff (5).

The sanad was accepted till 1897. "Lakheraj" cannot include "inam."

Referred to Reg. XXXI of 1802 (Mad.).

Taking the two Regulations together Government had the power to make the settlement. The letters are not admissible for construction of the sanad. Badar Bec v. Habib Merican Noordin (6) decided on whether a particular clause of a Will validates gifts. We started this enquiry under Inam Rules of 1859—22, 2, 3.

• Mr. Kenworthy Brown (following).—A Crown right must be parted with in express terms. The sanad is not an "act of State."

Mr. Upjohn, K. C. (with Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dubé) for the Respondents. Reg. XXV does not support their case. See cls. 3 and 4 of Regulation.

I am suggesting a view which would make Mr. Dunne's interpretation of cl. 4 agree with mine of cl. 12.

Aitchison's Treaties (1792) (Vol. V), p. 238. Treaty with the Nawab of Arcot. We are of Arcot. See Art. 5 of these treaties. We are one of these polygars mentioned. They say "polygar peshcush." This term is used there and is to be always the same.

The arrangement in 1802 was not a settlement of peshcush. There was a settlement of peshcush in 1792. Object in 1802 was to do away with military tenure and rights to make customary exactions such as sayer, etc.

Mr. A. M. Dunne, K. C. in reply: They have tried to make out that this is not a settlement under 1802, that there was already a peshcush, etc. We have nowhere anything against this that the only Regulation that made permanent settlements was that of 1802.

The sanad practically follows the Act except that it says nothing about lakheraj. It follows the Act throughout.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

MR. AMEER ALI.—The facts of this litigation take their origin in the early establishment of British rule in the Madras Presidency. The Raja of Venkatagiri holds a zemindari of considerable extent in the modern district of Nellore. His ancestors were admittedly in possession of the estate since the Mohammedan times, subject first to the Emperors of Delhi and afterwards, on the disruption of the Mogul Empire, to his representatives in the Carnatic, usually styled the Nawabs of Arcot. Besides the payment of a fixed revenue or peshcush they were bound to maintain an armed force for the assistance of Government in times of disorder or rebellion.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. RAJAGOPALA KRISHNA YACHENDRA.

In the year 1792 a treaty was entered into between the East India Company on the one side, and the Nawab of Arcot on the other, under which the administration of the country was assigned to the British. The arrangement, however, was found not to be satisfactory. It had left the Nawab a considerable amount of authority, which soon gave rise to cause of friction between him and the East India Company. Consequently, in 1801, a fresh treaty was executed under which the entire administration passed into British hands. In both the treaties the position of the Raja of Venkatagiri was maintained; and the revenue he became bound to pay to the East India Company continued to be the same as he had all along paid to the Mohammedan rulers.

In pursuance of the policy laid down by the Board of Directors, Lord Clive, who was at the time the Governor of Madras, proceeded to persuade the Raja of Venkatagiri and other polygars, who occupied a similar position, and whose zamindaries lay chiefly in Western Arcot, to abandon the system of maintaining an armed force for the assistance of Government. It was pointed out to them by the Governor in Council that the duty of maintaining an army for the service of Government imposed a heavy and costly responsibility; the East India Company would henceforward take over all charge for the preservation of law and order and thus relieve the zamindars of an irksome burden. They were at the same time assured that their fixed peshcush would remain invariable. The zamindars were thus induced to consent willingly to this arrangement, and in lieu of maintaining an army, which cost them a considerable amount of money, they undertook to pay an additional revenue on their estates, which was added to their peshcush.

Pursuant to this arrangement a sanad was issued, on the 24th August 1802, to the zamindar of Venkatagiri and other zamindars occupying a like position, embodying the terms which had been agreed upon. This document is called a "sunnud-i-milkcut istimrar, or deed of permanent property." The word istimrar denotes its character of perpetuity and permanency of revenue. The aggregate peshcush was, in the case of Venkatagiri, put down as 1,11,058 star pagodas. The clause in the sanad which relates to this particular arrangement is in these terms:—

"In consideration of your relief which your finances will derive from the relinquishment of your military service and from the discontinuance of the expenses to which you have on that account been liable, in consideration also of charging itself with the entire protection of the territories dependent on its power, the British Government has fixed your annual contribution, including equivalent for the military service and the established peshcush for every year, at the sum of star pagodas 1,11,058, which said amount shall never be liable to changes under any circumstances, and is hereby accordingly declared to be permanent annual demand of Government on your zamindari."

The only reservation in respect of the absolute abandonment on the part of Government of all claim to enhance the consolidated peshcush is contained in cl. 5, which runs thus:—

"The permanent peshcush fixed by this sanad in your zamindari is exclusive of the revenue derived from the manufacture and sale of salt and saltpetre, exclusive of the sayer or duties of every description, the entire administration of which the Government reserves to itself, exclusive of the tax on the sale of spirituous liquors and the intoxicating drugs, exclusive of all lands and rumsms heretofore appropriated to the support of the police establishment. The Government reserves to itself the entire exercise of its discretion in continuing or discontinuing temporarily or permanently.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. RAJAGOPALA KRISHNA YACHENDRA.

The articles of all sorts included according to the custom and practice of the country under the several heads above stated."

It is clear, however, that at this time two policies were on foot; one with regard to the powerful zamindars who maintained large armies, with whom a settlement was essential on a separate basis; the other a measure of general assessment in accordance with the instructions issued to the Board of Revenue on the 24th September 1799. In the carrying out of this latter policy the Government passed Reg. XXV of 1802, which came into force on the 13th July 1802. The preamble of this Regulation is important. It declared:—

"Whereas it is known to the zamindars, merassydars, ryots, and cultivators of land in the territories subject to the government of Fort St. George, that from the earliest until the present period of time, the public assessment of the land revenue has never been fixed; but that, according to the practice of Asiatic Governments, the assessment of the land revenue has fluctuated without any fixed principles for the determination of the amount; and without any security to the zamindars, or other persons, for the continuance of a moderate land tax; that on the contrary, frequent enquiries have been instituted by the ruling power, whether Hindu or Mohammedan, for the purpose of augmenting the assessment of the land revenue; that it has been customary to regulate such augmentations by the enquiries and opinions of the local officers appointed by the ruling power for the time being; and that in the attainment of an increased revenue on such foundations it has been usual for the Government to deprive the zamindars, and to appoint persons on its own behalf to the management of the zamindaries; thereby reserving to the ruling power the implied right, and the actual exercise of the proprietary possession of all lands whatever; And whereas it is obvious to the said zamindars, merassydars, ryots, and cultivators of land that such a mode of administration must be injurious to the permanent prosperity of the country, by obstructing the progress of agriculture, population and wealth; and destructive of the comfort of individual persons, by diminishing the security of personal freedom, and of private property: Wherefore the British Government, impressed with a deep sense of the injuries arising to the State, and to its subjects, from the operation of such principles, has resolved to remove from its administration so fruitful a source of uncertainty and disquietude; to grant to zamindars, and other landholders, their heirs and successors, a permanent property in their land in all time to come; and to fix for ever a moderate assessment of public revenue on such lands, the amount of which shall never be liable to be increased under any circumstances."

And in sec. 2 it proceeded to enact that:—

"In conformity to these principles, an assessment shall be fixed on all lands liable to pay revenue to the Government; and in consequence of such assessment, the proprietary right of the soil shall become vested in the zamindars, or other proprietors of land, and in their heirs and lawful successors for ever."

Sec. 3 will be referred to later.

Sec. 4, which forms an important element in the consideration of the present case, is in the following terms:—

"The Government having reserved to itself the entire exercise of its discretion in continuing or abolishing, temporarily or permanently, the articles of revenue included according to the custom and practice of the country, under the several heads of salt and saltpetre; of the sayer, or duties by sea or land; of the abkarry, or tax in the sale of spirituous liquors, and intoxicating drugs; of the excise on articles of consumption; of all taxes personal and professional, as well as those derived from markets, fairs or bazars; of lakheraj lands (or lands exempt from the payment of public revenue); and of all other lands paying only favourable quit rents: the permanent assessment of the land tax shall be made exclusively of the said articles now recited."

The drafting of this section can by no means be commended for preciseness or lucidity, but it is clear that the reservations in respect of the power of Government are wider than in the sanads referred to above.

It appears that the Venkatagiri estate, when it came under British administration, included a large number of inam lands, which had been expropriated by the zamindars from time to time for charitable or pious purposes, either free of rent or on favourable rent. Some lands had also been granted to people for services to the estate. In respect of the latter the zamindar had an absolute right of resumption. As regards the others, which came within the category of pious grants, his power appears to have been limited: he could resume them only on specific and apparently valid reason.

In 1816 the Government attempted to enforce its rights against the zamindar in respect of some of these alienated lands. The dispute was as to whether the zamindar was entitled to take possession of them without any liability for the payment of additional revenue, or whether the Government was entitled to the benefit of the resumption and possessed the right to assess revenue on those lands. The dispute was decided in favour of the zamindar, viz., that the Government had no such right as it claimed. Matters remained quiescent from the year 1822, when the action was decided in the Provincial Court, until 1897, when the Government again put forward the same claim as they had done in 1816 and attempted, by their Revenue Officers, to investigate into the title of the grantees who held the lands under the zamindar and to ascertain whether the grants were valid or not, and if they were not, to assess revenue on them. The Raja of Venkatagiri resisted the Government's claim, and after a good deal of correspondence brought in the Court of the District Judge of Nellore the four suits which form the principal foundation of the present consolidated appeal. The fifth suit, which has been made a part of the proceedings, was brought against the Government on similar grounds by another person in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot in respect of lands lying in another estate.

In para. 10 of the plaint the Raja states the nature of the grants and his rights with reference to the alienated lands, and in para. 11 he specifies his grounds of objection to the fresh assessment which the Government proposed to make on him. His ground of action is thus stated in the plaint:—

"That the Inam Deputy Collector of Nellore acting under the orders of Government, gave a notice to the Plaintiff that he would proceed to investigate the condition of deyadayam and dharmadayam inams in the Venkatagiri zamindari which had been granted prior to the permanent settlement, and that in order to enable him to do so, the Plaintiff should furnish him with a list of such inams containing the particulars specified in a statement annexed to the said notice, and that, in spite of the Plaintiff's repeated objections to the right of Government to resume such inams in the zamindari of Venkatagiri or deal with the same under the Inam Rules, the said Deputy Collector is proceeding with the investigation"

He pleaded res judicata on the basis of the proceedings in 1816, and alleged further that the Government by their own conduct were estopped from claiming the right of assessment. On these grounds he prayed for a declaration that the Secretary of State had no right to resume or assess to public revenue inams or lakheraj lands situate within the zamindari of Venkatagiri nor any reversionary right therein, or any such right in the inams or lakheraj lands which had already come in the Plaintiff's possession. He also asked for a permanent injunction restraining the Secretary of State and his officers from holding any investigation into the nature of and title to inams or lakheraj lands within his estate, and from dealing with the same under the Inam Rules sanctioned by Government on the 9th August 1859, or resuming them or assessing them to public revenue.

The Government joined issue with him on the question of the right of Government to resume and assess these expropriated lands; their principal contention being that under sec. 4 of Reg. XXV of 1802 the Government had expressly reserved its power and that the provisions in the sanad do not prejudice it or take it away.

The other objections in the written statement do not appear to their Lordships material for the purposes of the present judgment.

The District Judge states, in their Lordships' opinion, correctly and concisely the question for determination:—
“The main question really to be decided in this suit is, whether the reversion in respect of inams or lakheraj lands situated within the zamindari of Venkatagiri belongs to the Government or to the zaminder, and whether the Government is entitled to resume those inams or whether such right of resumption belongs to the zamindar.”

In a careful review of the facts, he held in substance that the Venkatagiri zamindari did not fall within the purview of the Regulation, and that consequently the contention of the Government was not maintainable; and he accordingly in the four suits before him made a declaration in favour of the Plaintiff's right and granted an injunction as asked for. On appeal to the High Court his decrees have been maintained, although the reasons which the learned Judges of the High Court have assigned for coming to the same conclusion as the first Court do not proceed on the same lines as those followed by the District Judge. In substance, however, there is absolute concurrence between the two Courts.

The Government appears to have failed also in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot, and their appeal to the High Court was dismissed.

As their Lordships substantially agree with the conclusions arrived at by the Courts in India, they do not think it necessary to traverse at any great length the grounds upon which the High Court and the District Judge have rested their judgments. It has been argued before the Board that the sanad of the Plaintiff could not possibly override the express provisions of the Regulation, and that the executive Government had no power to convey to the grantee—viz., the zamindar—larger rights than the statute provided. It was urged that the rights of the Crown cannot be taken away by implication, and it was stated that having regard to the terms of the section already referred to, the Government had absolute power at any time to direct an investigation into the title of the lakheraj lands to which the Plaintiff laid a claim as part and parcel of his estate not liable to assessment by Government. In view of this contention which has been strenuously pressed by learned Counsel for the Government, it becomes necessary to examine a little more closely the circumstances which led to the conferment of the sanad on the zamindar of Venkatagiri and the other zamindars who were in the same position with him, and to consider how far the grant is affected by the provisions of Reg. XXV of 1802.

As already observed, the British authorities appear to have taken in hand as early as the 24th September 1799, the regularisation of the land revenue in the Carnatics and to have issued instructions to the Board of Revenue as to the line of action to be taken, for the purpose of instituting a general enquiry into the conditions under which land was held within those territories. Reg. XXV of 1802 was an outcome of the enquiries made under those instructions to the Board of Revenue; but it appears that whilst these enquiries were proceeding with regard to a general settlement of revenue, simultaneously an enquiry was in progress respecting the amount the Venkatagiri estate should in addition to the "established peshcush" pay in lieu of its release from the liability to keep up an army for the service of Government.

Mr. Stratton, the peshcush Collector of North Arcot, had been deputed to make a thorough enquiry as to the resources of the different polygars, and the Report which he submitted to the Government on the 14th July 1801, contained all the requisite information, and upon that information the commutation which was granted to the zamindar of Venkatagiri in respect of his military force appears to have been fixed. He sets out in his Report the different kinds of inams, some of which the zamindar was at liberty to resume at his own discretion, others which he could not resume without sufficient reason, such as neglect of duty, etc. All these lands appear to have been taken into consideration in arriving at the estimate of the commuted amount.

The sanad to the zamindar of Venkatagiri was issued, as already stated, on the 24th August 1802, by the Governor in Council, Lord Clive, on behalf of the East India Company. The material terms of the sanad have already been referred to.

On the same date Lord Clive addressed a letter to the zamindar in terms which leave little doubt as to the meaning to be attached to the grant. He states first the object with which the sanad was granted, and goes on to say that—

"Under the circumstances, the amount which your brave self has to pay annually in future is fixed as follows:—

"In consideration of military service—eighty-nine thousand three hundred and eighty-five star pagodas.

"The fixed peshcush (tribute)—twenty-one thousand six hundred and seventy-three pagodas.

"Total—one lakh eleven thousand and fifty-eight star pagodas."

and what follows is important. The document goes on to say:—

"As the above-mentioned amount is the maximum portion of your exalted self's zamindari which should annually be sent to the Government on account of the expenses for general protection, therefore, sanad (deed) of perpetual ownership, to the effect that the sum of one lakh eleven thousand and fifty-eight star pagodas should be paid to Government annually, by the zamindari of your brave self, by way of permanent jama (assessed revenue), is sent to you under the seal and signature of the Members of Government."

and again:—

"Accordingly, having this matter in view, all the incomes from the lands of Amaram and Kattubadi retained in possession of foot soldiers were not included in the account of the item of the consideration for their services."

On the 25th August 1802, a letter was addressed by the Secretary to the Government to the Collector of Western peshcush, which included the three zamindaries principally concerned, viz., Venkatagiri, Calastry and Bonrauzepollam, making it clear that the revenues that were assessed upon these three zamindaries were deliberately fixed in the case of Venkatagiri at Rs. 1,11,058, to be paid annually by the zamindar.

Paragraph 10 of that document is important, and it is in these terms:—

"To remove from the minds of the zamindars all doubt of the permanency of the present arrangement the Governor-in-Council has caused sunmud-i-milkeut istimrar to be prepared under the seal and signature of His Lordship-in-Council for the purpose of being delivered to the zamindars, Kabooliats corresponding with these sanads are also transmitted, and the special commission desire that you will require the zamindars to sign and return them to you duly executed; to these kabooliats you will annex a kistbundy fixing the kists according to the seasons of produce."

In accordance with these instructions from the Government given to the Collector of Western peshcush, kabuliats were taken from the zamindar in identical terms, but before executing his kabuliyat the zamindar of Venkatagiri took particular care to have the extent of his zamindari inserted in specific terms in the sanad that was granted. That appears from Mr. Stratton's letter of the 17th September 1802. In para. 6 that officer states as follows:—

"The Venkatagiri zamindar further made objections to sign his kabooliat until I had specified therein the several Districts composing the Venkatagiri zamindari; considering this scruple of no material import, I was induced to accede to his request and at his suggestion to recommend to you that the districts under him should be particularised at the back of his sanad, for which purpose it is now accordingly returned."

So far as these documents are concerned, they leave no possible doubt that the Government, represented by the Governor-in-Council on the one side fixed a definite specific assessment on the whole zamindari of Venkatagiri irrespective of the particular assets derived from each particular unit of property within the estate, and that the zamindar, on his side, accepted that arrangement on that special understanding. The question now is whether that action of the Government was, in view of the provisions of Reg. XXV of 1802, valid or otherwise. As already stated, Counsel for the Appellant have strongly argued that, in view of the provisions of sec. 4 of that Regulation, excluding the "lakheraj lands (or lands exempt from the payment of public revenue) and all other lands paying only favourable quit rents" from the permanent assessment of the land tax, it was not competent for the Governor-in-Council to grant a sanad of the character that is in issue in this case; and much stress is laid upon the instructions that were originally issued in connection with the enquiry into the general resources of the different estates in 1799. It is said that in that document the Government took care to reserve its right on all lands "at present alienated and paying no public revenue which may have been or may be proved to be held under illegal or invalid titles and the revenue of which is not included in the Committee's account."

In respect of this contention two considerations arise—firstly, whether the lands which are now sought to be assessed were in fact paying no public revenue, and secondly, whether, in view of the provisions of sec. 3, it is open to the Government to contend that the sanad should not be taken into account in the construction of sec. 4. Sec. 3 declares as follows:—

"Where the conditions of the permanent assessment of the revenue may have been adjusted, a sunnud-i-milkeut istimrar, or deed of permanent property, shall be granted on the part of the British Government to all persons being, or constituted to be, zamindars or proprietors of land; and each zamindar or proprietor of land shall execute and deliver to the Collector of the district a correspondent kabooliat. The said sanads and kabooliat shall contain the conditions and articles of tenure by which the lands shall be held; in all cases of disputed assessment, reference shall be had to the sanads and kabooliats; and judgment shall be given by the Courts of Judicature, in conformity to the conditions under which the agreement may have been formed in each particular case."

The above section lays down a definite rule relative to the principles on which the provisions in the Regulation should be construed. Now the sanad in question contains no reference to the lakheraj lands within the Venkatagiri zamindari. It would follow, therefore, that in the case of this property the provisions of sec. 4 have no application, and that the assessment fixed upon it by virtue of the arrangements adopted in 1802 was upon a basis quite different from that provided in sec. 4 of the Regulation. In other words, both the assessment and the sanad are outside the Regulation under which the Government claims the right to resume the inam lands within the estate of the Plaintiff and to assess them separately.

It should also be observed that, although the Regulation was passed on the 13th July 1802, and the sanad was granted to the zamindar of Venkatagiri on the 24th August, the recommendation of the Commission of the 12th August 1802, on which the sanad was granted, recommended that the new assessment should be fixed to run from the 12th July of that year. After stating the principle on which they were proceeding in fixing the amount to be paid by the zamindar in commutation of the military service, in para. 40 they say as follows :—

“If the grounds on which we have now had the honour to propose that the assessment of public revenue should be fixed on the four Western zamindaries, including the customary peshcush and equivalent for military service, be approved by your Lordship-in-Council, the total amount of revenue derived to the State from those valuable provinces will exceed the amount of the old peshcush by the sum of 1,72,296 pagodas, and the aggregate amount of peshcush and the equivalent will, in future, be 2,50,000 pagodas per annum. We conclude the subject by recommending that the permanent assessment of the public revenue on these zamindaries be fixed accordingly at that rate, from the 12th day of July last.”

This also clearly shows that the arrangement in respect of “the four Western zamindaries” was made independently of the provisions of the Regulation. Another thing has to be observed in connection with this arrangement, viz., the difference in the terms of this sanad from the sanads granted to the other zamindars under the Regulation itself.

In the view their Lordships take of the general evidence in the case they do not consider it necessary to express any opinion on the question raised by the Plaintiff that the controversy in dispute is res judicata in consequence of the decision of the Provincial Court in 1822; but it is desirable to point out that since that decision the Government at various times expressly assented to the position which the zamindar had taken up in respect of the inam lands within his estate. Their Lordships will refer only to three documents: first, Ext. K.—a letter of the 24th April 1823, addressed by the Secretary to the Board of Revenue to the Chief Secretary to the Government, in which it was stated as follows :—

“The permanent peshcush of the zamindari of Venkatagiri was fixed upon the principles as upon Bomrauze and Calastray, and for the same reasons which induced the Board to state upon a former occasion that they considered the zamindar of Bomrauze not to be entitled to remission on account of certain villages having been taken from him by a decree of Court inasmuch as by the operation of that decree there was taken from him nothing on which his contribution to Government was fixed; they are now of opinion that the zamindar of Venkatagiri is entitled to benefit by the resumption of any villages formerly alienated from his zamindari without question on the part of Government or being liable to assessment on the increase to his resources thereby acquired.”

Again in 1839 the Board of Revenue, in a letter addressed to the Chief Secretary to the Government (Ex. N), stated as follows :—

“The zamindar now rests his claim on the ground that as his permanent cowl was framed without any reference to its assets, and as it contains no reservation in respect to the right of resuming lakheraj land, as in the case of the northern and other zamindaries, the right to resume inams or lakheraj lands in the position of Peddapoor belonging of right to him and by no means to the Government, and he cites a decree by the Provincial Court of the Northern Division in favour of the zamindar of Venkatagiri in a suit brought by the Collector of Nellore for the recovery of the village under similar circumstances."

and in para. 17 they say as follows :—

"On the other hand, the decrees of the Zillah Court of Chittoor and of the Provincial Court of the centre division are in favour of the right of Government to resume, in preference to that of the zamindar. But it will be noticed that they contain no allusion to the dissimilarity in the terms of the permanent settlement of Calcutta and the other Western polliams, assuming that the peshcush was fixed as on the zamindaries in the northern, upon the assets, and that Reg. XXXI of 1802 applies to the former as to the latter. By a reference to the kabooliat of the zamindar of Calcutta and the correspondence which passed at the time a permanent cowl was granted to him, it will be seen at once that the peshcush was not so fixed, and, as already shown, the Regulation above mentioned was not considered to apply to the case of the Venkatagiri zamindar."

On the 3rd September 1860, the Commissioner of the Division issued certain instructions for the guidance of the Deputy Collectors employed in inam investigation of the North Arcot district, and he correctly laid down the position with regard to the zamindar of Venkatagiri and the other zamindars who stood in the same position, in the following terms :—

"The private estates will be first noticed. The zamindaries of Kalahastri and Karvetinagar were, like the zamindari of Venkatagiri in the Nellore District, permanently settled in 1803 on the principle of the commutation of the military service tenure attached to them. The peshcush was not fixed upon the assets of the estates, but was a proportion of the cost of the zamindar's military establishment, inclusive of amarams and kattu badis, diminished by the amount of revenue derived from salt, sayer and abkari, which were reserved by Government. The inams were not excluded by the terms of the settlement, and the Government have therefore no right of reversion in them."

The revenue authorities in that part of the Presidency, in the face of the expression of opinion to which reference has been made here, have attempted to reverse the arrangement expressly entered into in 1802. In their Lordships' opinion this attempt fails.

Some stress was laid on behalf of the Appellant on the provisions of Reg. XXXI of 1802. It is sufficient, however, to point out that that Regulation refers entirely to procedure appointed for the investigation of the title to hold lands exempted from the payment of revenue. Here the lands which are sought to be resumed were not exempted from the payment of public revenue; the revenue which was paid on the estate included the lands in question and the jama was assessed on the whole estate inclusive of the lakheraj and inam lands.

For the foregoing reasons their Lordships are of opinion that the judgments and decrees of the Courts in India are right and should be affirmed and that these appeals should be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 109, cl. (c), scope of "Order" in cl. (c), meaning of, as distinguished from "final order"—Jurisdiction of High Court to grant leave to appeal to King in Council against interlocutory order—Fit case for the exercise of such jurisdiction.

The term "order" in cl. (c) of sec. 109 is intended to cover not merely a "final order" but is wide enough to include an interlocutory order. It has a different meaning to the expression "final order" in cl. (a).

In a fit case the High Court has jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council under cl. (c) of sec. 109 from an interlocutory order.

RADHA KRISHNA AYYAR v. SWAMINATHA AYYAR (1), BANARSI PERSHAD v. KASHI KRISHNA NARAIN (2) and DAMRA COAL COMPANY v. BENARES BANK (3) referred to.

This was an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against an order of a Division Bench of the High Court, dated the 9th February 1922 made in Civil Rules Nos. 91 of 1921 and 1 of 1922 in connection with appeals from original decrees Nos. 194 of 1921 and 51 of 1922.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an application by one Shiva Prosad Singh for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The suit related to an impartible estate of one Raja Sangram Singh. He left three sons. Durga Prosad Singh was the descendant of the first son. He died on the 7th March 1916 leaving three widows who are the Plaintiffs in the suit. Shiva Prosad, the Appellant is the descendant of another son of Raja Sangram Singh. He is the Defendant in the suit. After the death of Durga Prosad the Defendant entered into possession of the estate. There was an installation ceremony held in March 1916 and the Defendant's name was registered as the proprietor of the estate under the Land Registration Act. Durga Prosad had left a Will dealing with certain jewellery and money, the Will containing among other matters a provision that each of the widows was to receive Rs. 300 a month by way of maintenance. No probate was taken out of the Will. But in August 1916 certain arrangements by means of certain documents were made for the purpose of carrying out the Will, and, there being some money in the Bank of Bengal a suit was brought by Shiva Prosad against the Bank and against the widows, in which a decree was made in favour of the present Defendant who was the Plaintiff in that suit, in August 1917.

The present suit was brought in March 1919 in the Alipur Court, and the main claims were, first, to recover the impartible estate; secondly, to recover certain moveable and immoveable properties which were alleged to be the self-acquired properties of Durga Prosad; thirdly, for a declaration that the Will was not a genuine one; fourthly, that the decree in the suit was not binding upon the Plaintiffs; and fifthly, that the documents, to which I have referred, whereby the parties agreed to give effect to the Will, were not binding on the Plaintiffs.

The total value of the properties involved in this suit is said to be about a crore of rupees.

A long time was occupied in the disposal of the suit: and eventually the learned Subordinate Judge gave his judgment on the 3rd of November 1921. He found that the present Applicant, the Defendant in the suit, was the rightful owner of the impartible estate. He found in favour of the Plaintiffs as regards the properties, which were alleged to have been self-acquired by Durga Prosad, and he valued them at about 13 lacs. It was said by the learned Counsel for the Applicant and I think not disputed by the other side, that the impartible estate as to which the Defendant succeeded was of the value of about 86 lacs and the Plaintiffs' success related to property which was of the value of about 13 lacs.

In November 1921, the Plaintiffs filed an appeal to this Court and they applied for and obtained a rule calling upon the Defendant to show cause why an order should not be made in the terms of the petition and an ad interim injunction was granted to restrain the Defendant, his servants and agents from

"(1) alienating or otherwise dealing with any portion of the property in suit pending the final determination of this suit,

(2) "realising and appropriating any money in respect of the above-mentioned money-lending transactions, .

(3) "interfering with the Petitioners' possession of their said three-storied building at Jharia or any portion thereof or of any fixtures therein.

In December of the same year (1921) the Plaintiffs applied for execution of their decree by the arrest and imprisonment of the Defendant.

On the 4th of January 1922, the present Applicant Siva Prosad Singh appealed in respect of the decree in so far as it decreed the Plaintiffs' suit. On the 6th of January the Applicant obtained a rule which was issued by my learned brothers Mr. Justice Woodroffe and Mr. Justice Ghose calling upon the Plaintiffs to show cause why execution of the decree mentioned in the petition should not be stayed pending the disposal of the appeal on such terms as to this Court might seem fit. The interim injunction and rule to which I have previously referred were granted by my learned brothers Mr. Justice Mookerjee and Mr. Justice Cuming. Both these rules were heard by my learned brothers Mr. Justice Mookerjee and Mr. Justice Cuming, on the 20th of January. On the 9th of February the order from which it is desired to appeal, was made. The order runs as follows:—

"We have heard learned Counsel on both sides with reference to the various affidavits and counter-affidavits and have further ascertained the history of the case by an examination of the judgment under appeal. We have come to the conclusion that for the present, the following directions should be given and we order accordingly.

"(1) That the Defendant do deposit in this Court within four weeks from this date, a sum of three and a half lacs of rupees which the Plaintiffs will be entitled to withdraw from Court, in whole or in part, in partial satisfaction of the decree, upon furnishing security to the satisfaction of this Court for such amount as may be withdrawn by them from time to time.

“(2) That, with a view to expedite the disposal of both the appeals, the paper-book be prepared in the Office of the Court (under such special arrangements as may be necessary) and that the entire cost of the preparation of the paper-book be paid into Court by the Defendant in the first instance (within a time to be fixed later) the ultimate allocation of the costs to be determined by this Court at the time of the final disposal of the appeal.

“(3) That within six weeks from this date the Defendant do furnish security (other than the impartible Raj) to the satisfaction of this Court to the extent of five lacs of rupees for the due performance of such decree as may ultimately be made in the suit.

“(4) That Defendant do make over possession of premises No. 239, Lower Circular Road to the Plaintiffs and also of one of the Motor Cars decreed in their favour and the Defendant be restrained from interfering with the possession of the Plaintiffs of the three-storied building at Maria or any portion thereof or of any fixtures therein.

“(5) That the injunction already issued be maintained so as to restrain the Defendant from making alienations or entering into agreements to grant leases, or dealing or otherwise interfering with the estate, except with the express sanction of the Court previously obtained after due notice to the Plaintiffs.

“(6) That the Defendant do forthwith deposit in this Court, to the credit of the suit, all such sums as may from time to time be realised by him out of monies invested in the various money-lending businesses.

“We have not considered the question of the appointment of a Receiver which was mentioned incidentally at the hearing. The order now made will in no way debar the consideration of that question hereafter or of such other questions as may arise during the pendency of the appeal.

“The costs of those rules will be costs in the appeals. The hearing-fee is assessed at ten gold mohurs in each rule.”

As I have said, the order deals with the matters raised by the two Rules and it is in respect of three matters mainly that this application has been made: first, with regard to the injunction, secondly, with regard to the order for the deposit by the Defendant of 3½ lacs of rupees in Court and thirdly, with regard to the security, other than the impartible estate, which the Defendant is called upon to give to the extent of five lacs of rupees for the performance of the decree which the Court might think right to make upon the hearing of the appeal.

It was urged that the learned Judges had no jurisdiction to make the order in the terms in which it stands. Further it was urged that grave and irreparable injury would be caused by the order to the Defendant unless the application for leave to appeal were granted: and thirdly, it was urged that by reason of the restrictions imposed upon the Defendant it was not possible for the Defendant to raise sufficient money even to enable him to protect his rights on the hearing of the appeal. It was urged that an order ought to be made under sec. 109 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure that this is a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council under that clause.

With regard to the power of the Court to deal with applications such as this under that clause, it is desirable to refer to three cases. The first to which I refer is the latest in point of date, and it is the case of Radha Krishna Ayyar v. Swami-

natha Ayyar (1). In that case Lord Buckmaster in referring to sec. 109, cl. (c) said "This does not cover the whole grounds of appeal, because it is plain that there may be certain cases in which it is impossible to define in money value the exact character of the dispute; there are questions, as for example, those relating to religious rights and ceremonies, to caste and family rights, or such matters as the reduction of the capital of companies as well as questions of wide public importance in which the subject-matter in dispute cannot be reduced into actual terms of money." It was urged "however, that definition of the cases which are contemplated by sec. 109 (c) was not exhausted and that that was clear from the judgment of Lord Hobhouse in the case of Banarsi Pershad v. Kashi Krishna Narain (2), because, whereas Lord Buckmaster had referred to questions of "wide public importance in which the subject-matter in dispute cannot be reduced into actual terms of money," Lord Hobhouse in his judgment in the case, which I have just mentioned, referred to matters of "private importance" as well as to matters of "public importance." The passage in the judgment is at page 13 dealing with the corresponding sec. 600 of the Civil Procedure Code, which was then in force and it is this: "That is clearly intended to meet special cases such for example, as those in which the point in dispute is not measurable by money, though it may be of great public or private importance. To certify that a case is of that kind, though it is left entirely in the discretion of the Court, is a judicial process which could not be performed without special exercise of that discretion, evinced by the fitting certi-ificate." And the last case, to which I think it is necessary to refer, is the judgment delivered by my learned brother Mr. Justice Mookerjee sitting with Mr. Justice Beachcroft in the case of Damra Coal Company v. Benares Bank (3). In that case the Petitioner had instituted a suit for a declaration that a mortgage decree obtained by the Opposite Party was fraudulent and for a permanent injunction to restrain the execution of that decree. The Subordinate Judge during the pendency of the suit had granted a temporary injunction against the execution of the decree which the Petitioner was alleging was fraudulent. On appeal, however, to the High Court that order was reversed and the application for temporary injunction was refused. Thereupon the Petitioner asked for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against the refusal of the temporary injunction. The learned Judges after coming to the conclusion that the order was not a final order within the meaning of sec. 109 (a) dealt with the application under sec. 109 (c). My learned brother Mr. Justice Mookerjee is there reported to have said, "It has been argued in the next place that this is a fit case for a certificate under sec. 109, cl. (c). It is to be observed that whereas in cl. (a) the expression "final order" is used, in cl. (c) the term "order" is used, and consequently on the discussion of the second point, no question arises whether the order in question is final or not. It has been pointed out to us that if leave is refused and the order of this Court is allowed to stand, grave injury might be done to the Petitioners and that needless complications might occur much to their detriment;" and acting in pursuance of the powers given by the Code under sec. 109 (c), the learned Judges came to the conclusion that that was a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council.

I agree with the learned Judge's observations as to the meaning of the word "order" referred to in cl. (c) of sec. 109. The "order" there mentioned is obviously intended to be not merely a "final order" and the expression is wide enough to include an order such as that which the learned Judges were discussing in that case and that which we are now considering in this case. Obviously it has a different meaning to the words "final order" which are to be found in cl. (a).

In my judgment we have jurisdiction to certify that this is a fit case for appeal and the question arises whether, in our opinion, we ought to certify that this is a case which is fit for appeal to His Majesty in Council under cl. (c) of sec. 109.

The injunction is in very wide terms. It was argued that it goes beyond what is contemplated by Or. 39, r. (1). It was urged that it would prevent the Defendant from entering into an agreement for a lease, which was to come into force upon the disposal of the appeal and in the event of the Defendant succeeding in the appeal. It was further urged that though the Plaintiffs who had failed in their claim to the impartible estate could raise money on mortgage of their interest in the estate, if they could find any one to advance on such security, yet the Defendant, who had succeeded in the lower Court as regards the claim to the impartible estate and had been held to be the owner of the estate, was prevented from raising money on the estate even for the purpose of fighting the appeal or for meeting his liabilities to the Plaintiffs under the decree without the express sanction of the Court previously obtained after notice to the other side. It was further urged that the effect of the order was that, although the Defendant had succeeded as to the main question in the suit to the extent of property valued at about 86 lacs of rupees, he has been placed under such stringent restrictions as regards that property and at the same time has been ordered to deposit in Court 3½ lacs of rupees and to find security to the extent of 5 lacs of rupees, apart from the property as to which he has succeeded, that grave injury has been done to him.

A further point was made that, apart from the question of the injunction, there was no jurisdiction to impose such conditions as are contained in the order in question, except as conditions for stay of execution and that there is no stay of execution comprised in the order. The rule which was granted by my learned brothers Mr. Justice Woodroffe and Mr. Justice B. B. Ghose was in these terms: "Let a rule issue calling upon the Opposite Party to show cause why execution of the decree mentioned in the petition should not be stayed pending the disposal of the appeal on such terms as to this Court may seem fit. Pending the hearing of the rule let further proceedings in the matter be stayed. The rule is returnable within one month from this date unless the Plaintiffs Opposite Party apply for an earlier hearing of the rule. Let this order be sent down at once." It appears therefore that the rule was confined to the question whether execution should be stayed on such terms as to the Court might seem fit. The learned Counsel for the Plaintiffs, when asked what was the position with regard to the rule, having regard to the order which was made by the learned Judges, at first said that the rule was still in abeyance and then later, when his attention was drawn to the order as regards costs, the learned Counsel contended that it must be taken that execution had been stayed on the terms mentioned in the order. He contended that that must have been the intention of the learned Judges and that at any event there was liberty to apply which would give the Defendant an opportunity of protecting himself if any attempt to carry execution was made. On the other hand, it was urged by the learned Counsel for the Defendant that execution had not in fact been stayed, that the rule had not been made absolute on terms and that it was uncertain what would be the consequences to the Defendant if he did not obey the orders made by the Court, that the orders were not conditional and it was even possible that he might be committed for contempt of Court if he failed to carry out any of such orders.

I am most unwilling to grant leave to appeal to the Judicial Committee in respect of an interlocutory order, such as this, which does not determine finally any of the rights of the parties as to the matters in dispute in the suit, but in my judgment in this case there is a question of real importance involved. It is clearly of great importance to the Defendant, who has alleged that grave injury will be done to him thereby and that although he has won in the first Court on the main issue he is so hampered by the terms of the order that he cannot carry out the terms thereof and that it will be difficult for him to provide even sufficient funds to enable him to protect his interests in the appeal. The question of a stay of execution must obviously depend upon the facts of each case and the order to be made in respect of an application in respect thereof is largely a matter of discretion. In my judgment, however, this is not merely a question of stay of execution as I have already pointed out, but there is involved a matter of real importance, namely, as to whether the Court has jurisdiction to make such an order as that which is involved in this case. We are not sitting here as a Court of Appeal and it must be clearly understood that I am not expressing any opinion as to the merits of the controversy between the parties as regards this matter. My judgment is confined to the conclusion that the case does involve a matter of such importance that, in my judgment, we ought to certify that the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council under sec. 109 (c).

We grant a stay of execution of the order of 9th February 1922 pending this appeal to the Privy Council upon the undertaking given by Mr. Das on behalf of the Defendant to carry out all the directions in the order except those contained in cls. (1) and (3) until the hearing of this appeal by the Judicial Committee, and upon the condition that the Defendant deposits in Court rupees seven thousand and five hundred, which the Plaintiffs will be entitled to take out upon giving security to the satisfaction of the Court for such amount as may be withdrawn. With regard to the Rs. 7,500 or the security in respect thereof the parties will be subject to any directions that may be made by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Mr. S. R. Das has given an undertaking on behalf of his client to prosecute the appeal with every despatch and to apply to the Judicial Committee for the hearing of the appeal at as early a date as may be convenient.

We give a direction to the office to expedite this appeal with a view to the transcript of the record being despatched to England by the Mail on Thursday the 6th of April.

The preparation of the paper-book in the High Court appeal will proceed in the ordinary course.

This order will also govern application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council No. 3 of 1922.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

Leave is desired to appeal to England from an order of this Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction made on two applications, one preferred by the Plaintiffs in the suit, the three Ranis, widows of the late Raja of Jheria, and the other by the Defendant in the suit, cousin of the late Raja, who is in present possession of the Raj and whom the widows are seeking to oust. The Applicant for leave to appeal is the Defendant.

The value of the whole property in dispute is said to be one crore of rupees. In the trial Court the Plaintiffs have succeeded in respect of property said to be worth about 13 lacs and the Defendant has succeeded in respect of the remainder, said to be worth over eighty-six lacs. The Subordinate Judge's judgment was delivered on the 3rd November 1921, but the decree was not signed till the 6th December 1921.

Both parties have appealed. The Plaintiffs' appeal was filed on the 15th November 1921, before the decree was signed but no doubt a copy of the decree was supplied before the expiry of the time limited for appealing. On the same date the Plaintiffs applied for a rule upon the Defendant to show cause why he, his servants, and agents should not be restrained from doing certain things. A rule was granted in terms of the petition with an interim injunction.

The Defendant filed his appeal on the 4th January 1922, and on the 5th January the Defendant obtained from another Bench of the High Court a rule upon the Plaintiffs to show cause why execution of so much of the decree as was in their favour should not be stayed on terms, pending the hearing of the appeals.

On the 20th January the two rules came on for hearing before Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., the learned Judges who issued the first rule, and the order in question was made on the 9th February.

By this order the learned Judges gave certain directions, among others "that the injunction already issued be maintained so as to restrain the Defendant from making alienations or entering into agreements to grant leases, or dealing or otherwise interfering with the Estate, except with the express sanction of the Court previously obtained after due notice to the Plaintiffs."

Though exception is taken to the directions as a whole, a principal grievance is made of this direction in the nature of a temporary injunction to enure during the pendency of the appeals to this Court.

Rightly or wrongly, it is urged for the Defendant that the injunction is ultra vires in so far as it restricts him from entering into agreements for leases or sales, that the injunction unduly ties his hands and prevents him from complying with other directions requiring him to deposit money in Court and furnish security, that the order is so expressed that failure on his part to comply with any direction may expose him to attachment and imprisonment for contempt, that the order gives more to the Plaintiffs than they asked for, that the order has the appearance of being framed on the supposition that the decree of the Court below is erroneous so far as the Defendant is concerned, that no undertaking was given by or exacted from the Plaintiffs to indemnify the Defendant for any damage he might suffer by reason of the injunction, and that the liberty which the learned Judges gave to the parties to apply will not meet the difficulty in which the Defendant is placed. It is contended that the Defendant is entitled to the decision of their Lordships on these matters.

As to the time during which the injunction is likely to be in force we were told that the trial of the suit occupied five months, that twenty-four thousand documents were exhibited and that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge covers more than sixty folio pages in print. There may therefore be a considerable interval before the appeals to this Court are ready for hearing.

I am extremely loth to grant leave to appeal in respect of matters of merely temporary importance which have no bearing at all on the ultimate legal rights of the parties, matters which I feel might be better settled in India by some give and take on both sides and by the avoidance of that passionate hostility which litigation is apt to engender. The moves and countermoves so animated are the mere dust and ashes of controversy. They may multiply costs and delay the final decision but are of no avail when the merits come in the end to be considered in the dry light of reason.

All we have to determine, however, is whether leave to appeal should be given under cl. (c) of sec. 109 of the Civil Procedure Code. I see no reason to doubt that in a proper case leave to appeal from an interlocutory order may be given under that clause and cl. 40 of the Letters Patent. In support of that view the judgment of Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ., in Damra Coal Company v. Benares Bank (3) may be cited, though I understand that in the result the appeal for which leave was given was not prosecuted.

The question, then, is whether this is a proper case for such leave regard being had to the observations of their Lordships by the mouth of Lord Hobhouse in Banarsi Pershad's case (2) and by the mouth of Lord Buckmaster in Radha Krishna Ayyar's case (1). In these cases their Lordships were dealing with appeals from final decrees which are ordinarily governed by cls. (a) and (b) of sec. 109 read with sec. 110 and which come within cl. (c) of sec. 109 only in exceptional cases of the nature which their Lordships specify. Interlocutory orders, such as that before us, stand on a different footing. In the first place they are in the nature of original orders not appealable to any Court in this country and in the second place, whatever the property or risk at stake may be, cl. (c) of sec. 109 is the only clause which applies to them. It may, I think, be fairly said that the observations of their Lordships were made without direct reference to interlocutory orders, though in dealing with such orders, we may still be guided by the spirit of those observations. At that point, it has to be conceded that even interlocutory orders may sometimes involve questions of principle or practice of much general importance, and that the present case, involving as it does very large interests, is of an entirely exceptional character.

In the circumstances I agree with the learned Chief Justice that leave to appeal should be given under cl. (c) of sec. 109.

Lease of land under a compromise decree—Lessee, if entitled to suspension of entire rent when he does not get possession of a portion of the leasehold, known to both parties to be in the possession of a stranger—Liability for proportionate rent—Lessor's bonâ fides and malâ fides, effect of.

NARENDRA CHANDRA LAHIRI v. MANINDRA CHANDRA NANDY.

A. purchased a jote at a sale for arrears of rent, but found the major portion of it in the possession of B. and the rest in the possession of C. He thereupon brought a suit against B. for declaration of his title to, and khas possession of, the land in B.'s possession. The suit was compromised and under the compromise B. took a lease of the entire jote, but did not obtain possession of the portion which was in C.'s possession. A. subsequently brought a suit against B. for arrears of rent of the entire jote:

Held—That where the lessor has evicted the lessee from a part of the land demised the entire rent is suspended.

SARADA PRASAD v. MONMOTHA NATH (1) referred to.

In the present case there is no question of eviction by the lessor or by any one claiming under him or by his procurement

HURRISH CHANDRA v. MOHINI MOHAN (2), BULLAN v. LALIT JHA (3), NARAINA SWAMI v. YERRAMALLI (4) and ANNADA v. MATHURA NATH (5) distinguished.

The present case is not an ordinary case of settlement, where the lessor has to deliver possession of the land demised to the lessee. The lessee was already in possession (though wrongful) of the major portion and took settlement of the entire jote with full knowledge that a portion of it was in the wrongful possession of a third party. These indicate an intention that the liability of the lessee to pay rent in respect of the portion in his possession already did not depend upon the delivery of possession of the other portion which was in another's possession. The lessor never put any obstruction in the way of the lessee recovering possession and there is no question of malâ fides on the part of the lessor. Therefore the lessee cannot claim suspension of the entire rent, and he is liable to pay proportionate rent in respect of the portion of the jote in his possession.

MANINDRA CHANDRA v. NARENDRA NATH (6), STOKES v. COOPER (7), SMITH v. RALEIGH (8), REEVE v. BIRD (9) and NEALE v. MACKENZIE (10) referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 17th December 1919 against a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Rungpur (Jatindra Chandra Lahiri, Esq.), dated the 4th August 1919, modifying a decree of the Munsif at Kurigram (Babu Panna Lal Bose), dated the 4th May 1918.

Plaintiff purchased a jote of 244 and odd bighas at a sale for arrears of rent but found a portion of the jote in the possession of the Defendant and another portion in the possession of one Hellaluddin and others. The Plaintiff thereupon brought a suit for declaration of his title and recovery of possession against the Defendant. The suit was compromised and in the compromise petition 225 bighas of the jote were stated to be in possession of the Plaintiff and 19 and odd bighas in the possession of Hellaluddin and others. By the solenamah, the Defendant took lease of the entire 244 and odd bighas including the land in possession of Hellaluddin and others. The Defendant further stipulated to pay mesne profits for the 225 bighas at the proportionate rate of Rs. 184 taking Rs. 200 to be the rent for the entire 244 and odd bighas. The Plaintiff brought the present suit for recovery of arrears of rent with regard to the entire 244 and odd bighas and the Defendant pleaded that as he had not got possession of 19 and odd bighas of land in possession of Hellaluddin and others he was not bound to pay any rent at all. Both the Courts below gave a decree for proportionate rent against which the Defendant appealed to the High Court.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose (with Babu Jatindra Nath Sanyal) for the Appellant.—There was one entire rent for the whole area demised and it is impossible to say what portion of that rent is attributable to the lands in possession of Hellaluddin. Refers to Manindra Chandra v. Narendra Nath (6).

The cases of Annada Prosad v. Mathura Nath (5) and Sarada Prosad v. Monmotha Nath (1) do not apply as in these cases there had been acquiescence owing to payment of full rent after the eviction. Besides Annada v. Mathura (5) has been disapproved by Fletcher, J., in Manindra v. Narendra (6). The English case of Stokes v. Cooper (7) relied on by Chitty, J., in Annada v. Mathura (5) was disapproved by Ellenborough, C. J., in Smith v. Raleigh (8) and by Baron Parke in Reeve v. Bird (9).

In the absence of contract to the contrary the landlord is bound to give the lessee possession of the land demised. Vide sec. 108, Transfer of Property Act, cl. (b) and also Hurriah Chandra v. Mohini Mohan (2), Bullan v. Lalit Jha (3) and Udkab Chandra Singh v. Narain Manjhi (12). If the land is in possession of a third person to the knowledge of both the lessor and the lessee even in that case it would be the duty of the lessor to make it possible for the lessee to take possession. Refers to Naraina-swami v. Yerramalli (4) and Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 18, p. 485. He who lets, agrees to give possession and not merely a chance of a law suit: refers to Zemindar of Vizianugram v. Behara Suryanarayana (13) and Coe v. Clan (14).

To make out a case for suspension of rent, it is not necessary to establish that the landlord has been guilty of tortious dispossession. It is enough that he has failed to do his duty in the matter of putting the tenant in possession of the entire land demised. The question of the bonâ fides or otherwise of the landlord's conduct is immaterial.

Babu Ram Charan Mitter (with Babus Dwarikanath Chakraparty, Ram Chandra Mazumdar, Jyoti Prosad Sarbadhicary, Hemendra Nath Sen and Sarat Kumar Mitter) for the Respondent.—The case of Manindra Chandra v. Narendra Nath (6) was quite distinguishable. Here the land was in possession of a trespasser to the knowledge of both the parties and the Defendant had paid mesne profits for the three years from 1317-1320 at the proportionate rate and owing to the payment of rent or mesne profits, whatever it may be called, there has been acquiescence. The solenamah was entered into on 30th May 1914 or 16th Jaistha 1321 but the lease was to operate retrospectively from the beginning of 1321 B. S. and the settlement was taken with full knowledge that 19 and odd bighas of the land was in possession of a trespasser. These indicate an intention that the liability of the Defendant to pay rent in respect of land in his possession did not depend on the delivery of possession of land possessed by Hellaluddin.

In this case there has been no request by the tenant to be put in possession.

The whole of the land having already been demised to the Defendant the Plaintiff could not have sued Hellaluddin in ejectment.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose in reply.—In the written statement the Defendant stated that he made repeated requests to be put in possession and this question was not gone into by either of the Courts below. The Plaintiff might have asked the Defendant to join him in a suit to recover possession from Hellaluddin.

The fact that an increment of Rs. 5 in the rental was given shows that the landlord was to deliver possession.

This appeal arises out of a suit for rent. It appears that the Plaintiff purchased a jote of 244 bighas 18 cottahs 14 chitaks at a sale for arrears of rent but found that 225 bighas were in the possession of the Defendant and the rest in the possession of one Hellaluddin and others. He therefore brought a suit for declaration of his title to, and khas possession of, the 225 and odd bighas in the possession of the Defendant against him. This suit was compromised, and under the compromise the Defendant took a lease of the entire land 244 bighas 18 cottahs 14 chitaks at a rent of Rs. 200 from the Plaintiff from the year 1321 B. S. It was stated in the solenamah that the Defendant would pay mesne profits for the 225 bighas of land which were in his possession for the years 1317 to 1320 at the rate of Rs. 184 per year, that being the proportionate rent payable in respect of the lands which were in his possession. A decree was accordingly passed upon the solenamah. It is found that the Defendant did not obtain possession of the 19 and odd bighas of land which were in the possession of Hellaluddin. The Courts below held that the entire rent should not be suspended and gave the Plaintiff a decree for proportionate rent in respect of the 225 bighas in the possession of the Defendant, and disallowed the rent for the 19 bighas and odd which were not in his possession.

The Defendant has appealed to this Court, and it is contended that the Plaintiff having failed to deliver possession of the 19 and odd bighas of land, there should be suspension of the entire rent.

There is no doubt that where the lessor has evicted the lessee from a part of the land demised the entire rent is suspended [see the cases on the point collected in the case of Sarada Prosad v. Monmotha Nath (1)]. In the present case, however, there is no question of any eviction by the lessor or by any one claiming under him or by his procurement. The question is whether the Plaintiff not having delivered possession of the 19 bighas of land which were in the wrongful possession of a third party, the entire rent should be suspended. That question was not directly decided in any of the cases cited before us. In the cases of Hurish Chandra v. Mohini Mohan (2) and Bullan v. Lalit Jha (3), the tenant did not obtain possession of the demised land at all, and it was held that he was not liable to pay rent. In Narainaswami v. Yerramalli (4), it was held that where the lessor does not put the lessee in possession, but there is no obstruction or likelihood of obstruction to the lessee taking possession of the same, and he neither tries nor requests the lessor to put him in possession, the lessee is bound to pay rent. In that case the learned Judge (sitting singly) observes:—"But if the land is already in possession of a third person to the knowledge of both the lessor and the lessee I should be inclined to hold that it would be the duty of the lessor to make it possible for the lessee to take possession by removing the third person from the possession thereof, even though no express request for the purpose is made by the lessee." The lessee in that case appears not to have obtained possession of the land demised at all, and the observations were obiter. In Annada Prosad v. Mathura Nath (5), the lessee was prevented from taking possession of a portion of the demised land by another lessee to whom the said portion was demised by a subsequent lease. One of the Judges, Chitty, J., was of opinion that there was no eviction, properly so called, of the lessee by the landlord, while Vincent, J., was of opinion that there was eviction of the first lessee by the second by the procurement of the landlord. The land in that case was in the Sunderbans; there was a dispute as to the boundaries of the lands let out to the two lessees respectively, and the landlord was found not to have acted malâ fide. The lessee (under the first lease) so far from repudiating the lease kept possession of the remaining portion and even paid rent subsequently to the creation of the second lease, and it was held by both the learned Judges that the lessee could not ask for a suspension of the whole rent and was bound to pay proportionate rent. Chitty, J., in that case observed:—"It may be questioned how far the technicalities to be found in the English law should be allowed to affect the relations of landlord and tenant in this country. In one respect the principle underlying the English decisions appears to be inapplicable to the present case. Eviction is regarded as a wrong done by the landlord to the tenant, for which the former is to be penalised. Here not only, as I have said, was there no eviction properly so called, but there is no proof of malâ fides on the landlord's part. It may be that by a careless statement of boundaries in the two puttahs, lands which should be included in the Defendant's holding are also included in those of Rasik Lal Dutta. But that is all that can be alleged against the Plaintiff. On the facts of this case as admitted and as found by the lower Appellate Court, I think that the Defendant has no defence to the Plaintiff's suit for rent."

In the case of Manindra Chandra v. Narendra Nath (6) (which was between the same parties as in the present case) Fletcher, J., appears to have taken a different view. He pointed out that the case of Stokes v. Cooper (7) relied upon by Chitty, J., had been disapproved in Smith v. Raleigh (8) and also in another case [Reeve v. Bird (9)], and that in England there is no difference between the case when the landlord has ousted the tenant from a portion of the holding and the case where the landlord has let out the property to the lessee having already put an earlier and prior lessee in possession of it and referred to the case of Neale v. Mackenzie (10).

Those cases, however, are distinguishable from the present, as the lessee in those cases could not obtain possession, nor could the lessor deliver possession by reason of the lessor having granted a lease in favour of a third person in respect of a portion of the land demised to the lessee in question. The Defendant in the present case pleaded that the Plaintiff was in possession of the 19 bighas by letting out the same to Hellaluddin. That case has not been accepted by the Courts below. The learned Pleader for the Appellant however referred to a passage in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 18, p. 485, where it is stated "where part of the premises is held by a third person rightfully claiming under a title adverse to the lessor, so that the lessee cannot obtain possession, the result is the same as in the case of unlawful eviction by the lessor, and no part of the rent is recoverable. [Holgate v. Kay (11)]. Reference was also made to sec. 108 (b) of the Transfer of Property Act, which provides that in the absence of a contract to the contrary the lessor is bound on the lessee's request to put him in possession of the property. It is pointed out that the Defendant in the written statement stated that he had requested the Plaintiff to put him in possession of the land. The question, however, does not appear to have been gone into in either of the Courts below.

It is unnecessary in the present case to consider the broad question whether ordinarily the entire rent should be suspended when the lessor is unable to deliver possession of a portion of the land demised whatever might be the reason for his inability and whether the view taken by Chitty, J., in the case of Annada v. Mathura (5), that the English rule should not be applied to this country is correct.

The present case is not an ordinary case of settlement, where the lessor has to deliver possession of the land demised to the lessee. The Defendant was already in possession (though wrongful) of 225 bighas for several years, and as stated above 19 bighas of land was on the date of the solenamah in the possession of Hellaluddin. The solenamah was executed on the 30th May 1914, corresponding to the 16th Jaistha 1321, but the tenancy in respect of 244 bighas was to be operative retrospectively from the beginning of 1321, i.e., 1st Bysaksh 1321. The Defendant took a settlement of the entire 244 bighas though he was perfectly aware that a portion of it, viz., 19 bighas, was in the wrongful possession of a third party. These indicate an intention that the liability of the Defendant to pay rent in respect of the 225 bighas which were in his possession already did not depend upon the delivery of possession of the 19 bighas which were in the possession of Hellaluddin. The Plaintiff never put any obstruction in the way of Defendant's recovering possession and there is no question of malā fides on the part of the Plaintiff. We think that in the circumstances of the case, the Courts below were right in holding that the entire rent should not be suspended, and that the Defendant is liable to pay proportionate rent in respect of the 225 bighas of land in his possession.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed. Each party to bear his own costs.

The Petitioners were summoned under secs. 186 and 206, I. P. C. After the examination in chief of the witnesses for the prosecution in the regular manner the Magistrate being of opinion that no offence under sec. 206 was made out changed the procedure to that applicable to summary trials and ultimately convicted the Petitioners under sec. 186, I. Held—That the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was not authorised by law and caused prejudice to the accused and the conviction was therefore liable to be set aside.

The case was sent back for retrial by a new Magistrate upon the Petitioner undertaking not to ask for the prosecution witnesses to be again examined in chief.

This was a rule against an order of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Uluberia (Mr. R. L. Acharji), dated the 2nd December 1921, convicting the Petitioners under sec. 186, I. P. C. and sentencing them to pay fines of Rs. 150, 30 and 75 respectively, an application for reference of which case to the High Court was rejected by the Sessions Judge of Hughly (Mr. S. C. Mallick), on the 23rd January 1922.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment

Babus Nagendra Nath Ghosh and Dwijendra Krishna Dutt for the Petitioners.

Babu Narendra Nath Chowdhury for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

WALMSLEY, J.—The Petitioners have been convicted under sec. 186, I. P. C. and sentenced to pay fines of Rs. 150, 30 and 75 respectively. The Magistrate purported to dispose of the case under summary procedure. So under sec. 414, Cr. P. C., the Petitioners had no right of appeal. They moved the Sessions Judge for a reference to this Court, but without success.

The circumstances under which we issued a rule are as follows :—The Petitioners were summoned under sec. 186 and sec. 206, I. P. C. Offences under the latter section cannot be tried summarily, and the learned Magistrate began to try the case under Chap. XXI, recording the evidence in the manner prescribed in Chap. XXV. Seven witnesses for the prosecution were thus examined in chief on September 17th : the accused were also examined on that day. Then the Magistrate recorded this order : “As no offence under sec. 206, I. P. C. has been made out, the case will go on under secs. 186, 143, I. P. C. and will be tried under sec. 260, Cr. P. C.” Afterwards, on the 29th of September, the prosecution witnesses were recalled for cross-examination. Then defence witnesses were examined and the Magistrate then made use of one of the forms authorized for use in summary trials, and recorded a judgment which began on the first page of that summary form.

So far as the examination of the witnesses is concerned, it may be that the record is as full as it would have been if there had been no change of procedure. The cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses covers a fair amount of paper, and save for the fact that the usual details of parentage, residence and occupation are not given the same is true of the evidence given by the defence witnesses.

The argument pressed before us and the ground on which we issued the rule is that the learned Magistrate could not after examining the prosecution witnesses in chief in the regular manner, change his procedure to that allowed by Chap. XXII.

The Magistrate in his explanation has drawn our attention to several reported decisions but none of them touch the point now raised. We are not concerned with the question whether a Magistrate may strip a story of its embellishments, but with the question whether he may change his procedure in the middle of a trial.

The Code itself provides by the second clause of sec. 260 (2) for the converse of what has happened here, and requires in effect a de novo trial. I doubt, however, whether any useful inference can be drawn from the absence of any provision as to what should be done when in the course of a regular trial, it appears desirable that the case should be tried summarily.

It appears to me that the question resolves itself into the question whether the Petitioners have been prejudiced or not. The learned Magistrate says that they have not been prejudiced. I cannot agree. On the contrary I think the Petitioners have suffered prejudice in two ways. The first is in the recording of evidence. Possibly in fact the record is as full as it would have been had the Magistrate continued to try the case in the regular manner, but we have to look at what the law required of the trying Magistrate, and an accused person may reasonably complain of a procedure which has caused the examination in chief of the prosecution witnesses to be recorded in the form of a narrative under sec. 359, Cr. P. C., while the cross-examination of those same witnesses and the whole evidence of the defence witnesses need appear on the record at all. The second and graver prejudice is that two of the Petitioners have lost the right of appeal. That is a loss which needs no comment. I only wish to point out that the gravity of the prejudice seems enhanced rather than lessened by the fulness of the record actually prepared by the Magistrate. Primâ facie there is material on which an Appellate Court could exercise its judgment, but a few words in the order sheet and the use of a form with a particular heading have deprived two of the Petitioners of the right they would otherwise have had.

In my opinion the rule must be made absolute on the ground that the Magistrate's procedure is not authorised by law and has caused prejudice to the Petitioners.

The result is that the convictions and sentences are set aside; and it is ordered that the fines, if paid, be refunded.

We are asked to say that the case should not be retried by the same Magistrate as he has shown cause before us and also before the Sessions Judge, and consequently he may find it difficult to approach the case with an open mind. As the learned Pleader on behalf of the Petitioners undertakes that his clients will not ask for the prosecution witnesses to be again examined in chief, I think this concession may be allowed. The case will go back to be tried by some competent Magistrate, other than Mr. R. L. Acharji, to be nominated by the District Magistrate; and such Magistrate will proceed with the case from the point which it reached on 17th September, and dispose of it in accordance with law.

SUHWARDY, J.—I agree.

Judgment, 20, January.

JAGARNATH

DASS, Appellant,

v.

JANKI SINGH and

ors., Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), as amended by Act I, B. C., of 1907, secs. 3 (3), 4, 116, Sch. III, Art. 1 (a)—Khamat land, tenant of, for a term—Suit to eject after expiry of term—Limitation—Tenant if non-occupancy raiyat—Effect of repeal of sec. 45.

JAGARNATH DASS v. JANKI SINGH.

It is only under Chap. VI of the Bengal Tenancy Act that the status and rights of a non-occupancy raiyat can be acquired, and as that chapter does not apply to the private lands of a proprietor, a tenant of such land for a term of 9 years did not acquire the status of a non-occupancy raiyat, and, at the expiry of his term, became liable to be ejected as a trespasser.

Art. 1 (a) of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not apply to the landlord's suit to eject such a person.

Art. 1 (a) of Sch. III of the Act did not extend the limitation of six months to suits to eject persons who had not been non-occupancy raiyats within the meaning of the repealed sec. 45.

Sec. 3 (3) is merely a definition and sec. 4 merely a section specifying the classes of tenants to which the Act applied. Secs. 3 (3) and 4 did not separately or conjointly create or confer upon any one any status or any right.

GANPAT MAHTON v. RISHAL SINGH (1) and DWARKA NATH CHOWDHURI v. TAFARZAR RAHMAN SARKAR (2) referred to.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Full Bench of the High Court, Patna, dated the 24th July 1917, reversing a decree of the said Court passed by Atkinson, J., dated the 7th February 1917, which affirmed a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Monghyr, dated the 29th March 1915, modifying a decree of the 1st Court of the Munsif at Begusarai, dated the 31st March 1914.

The suit was brought on the 5th December 1912 by the Plaintiff-Appellant to eject the Respondent Janki Singh from certain land in Behar.

The Plaintiff alleged that the land was his "khamat, khudkasht" and sought to eject the Respondent, who was lessee thereof for a term of 9 years expiring on the 31st May 1912.

The Respondent in his written statement denied the Plaintiff's claim, alleged that the land was "raiya mal" in which he had a right of occupancy, and contended that the question whether the land in dispute was or was not the proprietor's private land was barred by limitation.

The Munsif in his judgment held that the land in suit was "khudkasht of the Plaintiff" and that the claim was not barred by limitation. On appeal the Subordinate Judge found that the land was "khamat" land, and that there was no bar by limitation and he dismissed Janki Singh's appeal.

From this decision the Respondent appealed to the High Court and his appeal was dismissed by Atkinson, J., who held that the land in suit was the "zirat" or "khamat" land of the Plaintiff and that the suit was not barred by the limitation of six months provided by Art. I (a) of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Against this decree Janki Singh further appealed under the Letters Patent, and his appeal was heard by a Full Bench of the Patna High Court.

The majority of the Judges (viz. Chamier, C. J., Mullick, and Roe, JJ.), held that the limitation provided by the Bengal Tenancy Act was applicable and dismissed the suit, while the other two Judges (Chapman and Jwala Prasad, JJ.) were of opinion that the limitation applicable was that provided by the Indian Limitation Act. Against the last mentioned decree the Plaintiff appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. Parikh and R. M. Palat for the Appellant (Ex parte).—Janki Singh's lease was for 9 years and terminated in May 1912. The suit for ejectment was not brought until December 1912, i.e., more than six months after the expiration of the term.

If Janki Singh during his tenancy became a non-occupancy raiyyat the suit for ejectment would be barred under Art. I (a) of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy (Amendment) Act, 1907.

All the Courts have found that these lands are "zirat" or "khamat" lands, and no right of occupancy can be acquired in such lands, provided they are leased out for a term of years.

See secs. 116, 45 and Chaps. V and VI of the Bengal Tenancy Act, VIII of 1885.

Non-occupancy tenants are defined in sec. 4 and sec. 41 of the Act.

Janki Singh was admittedly not a raiyyat holding at fixed rates, nor an occupancy raiyyat.

He does not therefore of necessity become a non-occupancy raiyyat. There can be other classes of tenants besides those mentioned in sec. 4.

At the conclusion of his term Janki Singh was a mere trespasser.

Sheo Nandan Roy v. Ajodh Roy (3), Damodar Narayan Chowdhuri v. Dalglish (4).

As to whether the limitation of six months does or does not apply to zirat lands there are conflicting decisions: Ganpat Mahton v. Rishal Singh (1) and Dwarka Nath Chowdhuri v. Tafazar Rahman Sarkar (2), but in the former case the lands were not zirat and the decision is obiter.

These lands have always been preserved to owners as lands in which you cannot create permanent tenancies and there is nothing in the Act to remove this impression.

Bhugwan Bhagat v. Jug Mohun Roy (5).

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is an appeal from a decree, dated the 24th July 1917, of the High Court at Patna, which dismissed the Plaintiff's suit to eject the Defendant No. 1, Janki Singh, from certain land in Bihar. The suit was dismissed by the High Court on the ground that it had not been brought within time. The land in question is small in extent and in value, but the question of limitation involved is of importance in Districts to which the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, as amended by the Bengal Tenancy (Amendment) Act, 1907, applies.

The land in question is within the meaning of sec. 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, proprietor's private land known in Bengal as khamar, nij, or nij-jot, and in Bihar as zirat, nij, sir or khamat. The Plaintiff is the proprietor of the land, as was his predecessor in title before him. Janki Singh held the land as a tenant under a lease which had been granted by the predecessor in title of the Plaintiff for a term of nine years, which expired on the 31st May 1912. On the expiration of the term the Plaintiff demanded possession of the land, but Janki Singh refused to quit and give up possession: hence the suit in which this appeal has arisen. The suit was brought on the 5th December 1912, in the Court of the Munsif of Begusarai in the District of Bhagalpur. The only question which it is now necessary to consider is—Was the suit brought within time? That question depends on whether the period of limitation applicable in this case is that prescribed by Art. I (a) of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, which for suits "to eject a non-occupancy raiyyat on the ground of the expiration of the term of his lease," is six months from the expiration of the term, or is that prescribed by Art. 139 of Sch. I of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, which is twelve years from the determination of the tenancy.

In his plaint the Plaintiff alleged that the land in question was his khudkasht land, prayed for a declaration that the land was his khamat land, and that he was entitled to possession, and asked for a decree for possession, and for mesne profits. In his written statement Janki Singh denied that the land was khamat khudkasht land of the Plaintiff, alleged that Plaintiff's claim for a declaration that the land was his khamat khudkasht was barred by limitation, and alleged that the land was raiyyati-mal land in which he had a right of occupancy. It is to be noticed that Janki Singh in his written statement did not suggest that he was a non-occupancy raiyyat or had any right of a non-occupancy raiyyat to resist the Plaintiff's suit to eject him. Janki Singh in his written statement was apparently relying upon a failure of the Plaintiff at the trial to prove that the land was the Plaintiff's private land as proprietor, his khamat zirat land.

The fifth issue as fixed by the Munsif was "whether any part of the claim is barred by limitation?" In his judgment the Munsif stated that the fifth issue had been "left untouched in arguments" by Janki Singh's pleader, and he decided the issue of limitation against Janki Singh.

The seventh issue, which was considered by the Munsif to be the most important issue in the case, was not directed to the question of limitation, but had indirectly a bearing on that question: it was, "Whether the land in suit is the khudkasht of the Plaintiff, or the raiyyati-jote of the Defendant first party." The Munsif's finding on that issue was that the land in suit was "khudkasht of the Plaintiff and not raiyyati-jote of" Janki Singh. It is not quite clear what the Munsif precisely meant by "khudkasht of the Plaintiff." He probably meant land cultivated by the Plaintiff as his own. In the plaint the land in question was alleged to be the Plaintiff's khudkasht khamat land—that is, khudkasht private land of the Plaintiff as proprietor. In his observations on the sixth issue the Munsif apparently treated zirat and "khudkasht of the Mahanth (the Plaintiff) alone" as convertible terms. In his observations on the seventh issue the Munsif mentioned sec. 120 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, which relates to the recording by a Revenue Officer of a proprietor's private land (khamar, khamat, zirat, etc.). On the whole, their Lordships are of opinion that the Munsif by his finding on the seventh issue meant that the land in question was the proprietor's private land (khamat, zirat), and was not land in which Janki Singh had, or could have, a right of occupancy. The Munsif had the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, before him, and he should have used the terms specified in the Act and not terms which might be ambiguous. The Munsif, on the 31st March 1914, gave the Plaintiff a decree for possession, and dismissed his claim for mesne profits.

From that decree Janki Singh appealed to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr on the ground that the suit was barred by limitation, and that the land was not khamat (private, zirat) land of the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff entered a cross-appeal against the dismissal of his claim for mesne profits. The Additional Subordinate Judge, before whom the appeals came, found that the land was khamat land, and that Janki Singh had no right to hold over, after the expiration of the term of his lease. In his judgment he said: "It is faintly urged that the suit is barred by limitation. But there is nothing to show that the rule of limitation of six months applies to the case. Moreover, the character of the land being khamat no limitation arises in the case," and he, on the 29th March 1915, made a decree dismissing Janki Singh's appeal, and in the cross-appeal decided that the Plaintiff was entitled to mesne profits and directed the Munsif's Court to assess the mesne profits in the executing of the decree. The rule of limitation, which the Additional Subordinate Judge held did not apply as the land was khamat land, was that of Art. I (a) of Sch. III of the Act.

From the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge Janki Singh appealed to the High Court at Calcutta. The appeal came on for hearing as a second appeal before Mr. Justice Atkinson in the High Court at Patna. The only grounds of the appeal to which it is now necessary to refer are that the suit was barred by limitation: that the land in question was not khamat land; and that the Additional Subordinate Judge had erred in decreeing costs and mesne profits. The ground that the land in question was not khamat land was concluded by the finding of fact of the Additional Subordinate Judge. The ground that the Additional Subordinate Judge had erred in decreeing costs and mesne profits does not appear to have been supported in the High Court. In the course of the arguments in the appeal a decision of Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ., in Ganpat Mahton v. Rishal Singh (1), in which they had held that Art. I (a) of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, did apply to zirat land, and the decision of Woodroffe and Chaudhuri, JJ. (overruling a decision of Newbould, J.), in Dwarka Nath Chowdhuri v. Tafazar Rahman Sarkar (2) in which they had held that Art. I (a) did not apply to khamar lands, were cited. Mr. Justice Atkinson rightly regarded the decision of Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ., as academical, as those learned Judges had already in the appeal before them decided that the land there in question was not zirat land. Mr. Justice Atkinson agreed with the decision of Woodroffe and Chaudhuri, JJ., that Art. I (a) of Sch. III did not apply to private land of a proprietor, and by his decree of the 7th February 1917, dismissed Janki Singh's appeal with costs in the High Court, in the lower Appellate Court, and in the Munsif's Court.

From that decree of Atkinson, J., Janki Singh appealed under the Letters Patent of the High Court, and as the appeal raised a question of limitation of considerable importance, it was heard by a Full Bench of the High Court at Patna, constituted of Sir Edward Chamier, C. J., Chapman, Mullick, Roe and Jwala Prasad, JJ. These learned Judges differed on the question of limitation, the Chief Justice, Mullick, and Roe, JJ., holding that Art. I (a) of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, applied, dismissed the suit as barred by limitation. On the other hand, Chapman and Jwala Prasad, JJ., held that the article did not apply. Each Judge gave his own reason for his conclusion, and some of the judgments contain much historical information.

Although the question as to whether this suit, when it was brought on the 5th December 1912, was or was not barred by limitation must depend on the true construction of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, as amended by the Bengal Tenancy (Amendment) Act, 1907, some historical information as to the origin and development in Bengal of rights of occupancy in agricultural land held by raiyats is interesting. It appears that in the Permanent Settlement of Bengal the proprietor's private lands (zirat, demesne lands), which were kept for his own and his family's cultivation, as distinguished from his lands which were usually let to raiyats, were recognised; that it seems to have been the policy of the Government for many years that no rights of occupancy in such private lands should be acquired by raiyats; and that the legislature for the first time by sec. 6 of Act X of 1859 defined how a right of occupancy could be acquired. By sec. 6 of Act X of 1859 it was further enacted "but this rule (as to acquiring a right of occupancy) does not apply to khamar, nijjot, or sir land belonging to the proprietor of the estate or tenure and let by him on lease for a term or year by year. . . ."

The Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, repealed Act X of 1859, and by Chap. V it was enacted how rights of occupancy could be acquired by raiyats. Chap. VI apparently created the "non-occupancy raiyyat," and for the first time conferred upon him a status and rights, but by sec. 116 of that Act it was enacted:—

"116. Nothing in Chap. V shall confer a right of occupancy in, and nothing in Chap. VI shall apply to, a proprietor's private lands known in Bengal as khamar, nij or nijjot, and in Bihar as zirat, nij, sir or khamat, where any such land is held under a lease for a term of years or under a lease from year to year."

By sec. 40 of the Bengal Tenancy (Amendment) Act, 1907, sec. 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, was amended, and as amended it is as follows:—

"116. Nothing in Chap. V shall confer a right of occupancy in, and nothing in Chap. VI shall apply to, lands acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 for the Government or for any Local Authority or for a Railway Company, or belonging to the Government within a cantonment, while such lands remain the property of the Government, or of any Local Authority or Railway Company or to a proprietor's private lands known in Bengal as khamar, nij or nijjot, and in Bihar as zirat, nij, sir or khamat, where any such land is held under a lease for a term of years or under a lease from year to year."

Sec. 45 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, which was in Chap. VI as it stood before the amending Act of 1907 was passed, was as follows:—

"45. A suit for ejectment on the ground of the expiration of the term of a lease shall not be instituted against a non-occupancy raiyyat unless notice to quit has been served on the raiyyat not less than six months before the expiration of the term, and shall not be instituted after six months from the expiration of the term."

As that section contained a prohibition against instituting a suit unless a notice to quit had been served six months before the expiration of the term, it was properly inserted in Chap. VI and not in a schedule of limitations. Sec. 45 was repealed, and the 'period of limitation which had been prescribed by it was by the Bengal Tenancy (Amendment) Act, 1907, inserted in Sch. III as Art. I (a). As sec. 45 stood in Chap. VI no one could have doubted that the non-occupancy raiyyat to whom it referred was a person who had obtained the status and rights of a non-occupancy raiyyat by reason of his having been a person upon whom that status and those rights had been conferred by Chap. VI.

But it would appear from the judgments of the Chief Justice, and Mullick, and Roe, JJ., that those learned Judges considered that the effect of the repeal of sec. 45 and the insertion of Art. I (a) in Sch. III was to extend the limitation of six months to suits to eject persons who had not been non-occupancy raiyats within the meaning of sec. 45. It is quite clear that Art. I (a) did not create or confer upon any one the status or rights of a non-occupancy raiyyat, and did not extend the limitation of six months to suits to eject persons who had not been non-occupancy raiyyats within the meaning of the repealed sec. 45. The non-occupancy raiyyat of Art. I (a) must be a person who before his term had expired had acquired the status and rights of a non-occupancy raiyyat.

The crucial question in this case is—When, if at all, and how had Janki Singh acquired, before the 31st May 1912, the status and rights of a non-occupancy raiyyat? He had not acquired that status or those rights under Chap. VI, as that Chapter does not apply to the private lands of a proprietor, and it appears to their Lordships that it was only under Chap. VI that the status and rights of a non-occupancy raiyyat could be acquired.

The learned Chief Justice apparently was of opinion that Janki Singh had acquired the status and rights of a non-occupancy raiyyat by virtue of the definition of a "tenant" in sec. 3 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, read in conjunction with sec. 4 (c) of that Act. As the decisions of the Chief Justice deservedly command respect, their Lordships will now in conclusion refer to secs. 3 (3) and 4 (c). Sec. 3 (3) is as follows:—

"3. 'Tenant' means a person who holds lands under another person, and is, or but for a special contract would be, liable to pay rent for that land to that person."

That is merely a definition. That definition applied to the position of Janki Singh during the continuance of the term for which he held the land, and did not apply to Janki Singh's position after his term had expired, as then, in the circumstances of this case, Janki Singh became a trespasser liable to be ejected.

Sec. 4 of the Act is as follows:—

"4. There shall be, for the purposes of this Act, the following classes of tenants (namely):—

"(1) Tenure-holders, including under-tenure-holders,

"(2) Raiyats, and

"(3) Under-raiyats, that is to say, tenants holding, whether immediately or mediately, under raiyats; and the following classes of raiyats (namely):—

"(a) raiyats holding at fixed rates, which expression means raiyats holding either at a rent fixed in perpetuity or at a rate of rent fixed in perpetuity,

"(b) occupancy-raiyats, that is to say, raiyats having a right of occupancy in the land held by them, and

"(c) non-occupancy-raiyats, that is to say, raiyats not having such a right of occupancy."

Sec. 4 was merely a section specifying the classes of tenants to which the Act applied; it did not confer upon any tenant a status or any right, that was done by Chaps. III, IV, V, VI, and VII. Secs. 3 (3) and 4 did not separately or conjointly create or confer upon any one any status or any right. With reference to (a) and (b) of sec. 4 the Chief Justice correctly said that Janki Singh was not a raiyyat holding at a fixed rate or an occupancy raiyyat, and then continued: "Primâ facie he was a non-occupancy raiyyat." But the Chief Justice did not suggest how or when Janki Singh had obtained the status and any right of a non-occupancy raiyyat in the land in question. The mere fact that Janki Singh had been for a term a tenant of private land (zirat land) of the Plaintiff and had not been a raiyyat holding at fixed rates or an occupancy raiyyat did not raise any presumption that he had acquired the status or the rights of a non-occupancy raiyyat. It is obvious from a passage which occurs towards the conclusion of his judgment that the Chief Justice doubted that it had been intended that Art. I (a) of Sch. III should apply to such a case as this. The passage is as follows :—

“I think it is doubtful whether the legislature intended by the amendments made in 1907 to compel a landlord to sue for ejectment of a tenant of his private land within six months of the termination of the lease held by the tenant, and it may be that the result of holding that a raiya of zirat land is or may be a non-occupancy raiya will be that landlords will be placed in a less favourable position than the framers of the Act intended, but we must take the Act as we find it, and on a consideration of the Act as it now stands it appears to me that the only possible conclusion is that Art. I (a) of Sch. III applies to such a suit as the one now before us.”

Their Lordships are of opinion that Art. I (a) of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, does not apply to suits to eject persons who were not in law non-occupancy *raiya*s of the land, and consequently does not apply to this suit, and that the suit was brought within time, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed; that the decree of the High Court of the 24th July 1917, should be set aside with costs; and that the decree of the 7th February 1917, should be restored. Janki Singh must pay the costs of this appeal.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an application made by the Defendant in the suit, who is the Appellant to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, to set aside an order made by the Registrar on the 24th April 1922 and for a direction that the papers referred to therein may be excluded from the printed record or in the alternative that the Appellant's petition of objection be also included therein or for such other order as the Court may deem fit and proper.

The circumstances leading up to this application are unusual and it is desirable to state the facts. Both the Plaintiffs and the Defendant in the suit filed appeals to this Court from the decision of the lower Court.

On the 9th February 1922 a certain order was made by my learned brothers Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., in respect of two rules obtained by the respective parties.

An application was made by the Defendant in the suit to the Bench (consisting of my learned brother Richardson, J. and myself) taking Privy Council business for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the above-mentioned order.

On the 10th March 1922 leave was granted. Inasmuch as it was an appeal against an interlocutory order and it was desirable that no time should be lost in bringing the matter before the Judicial Committee, we gave certain directions for expediting the appeal, as will appear on reference to our judgment.

On the 24th March 1922 the matter was before the Registrar on a question as to whether certain "suggestions" should be included in the paper-book, which is to be used in the appeal to the Judicial Committee. The Registrar made the following order: "I do not think it necessary to include the suggestions in the paper-book."

The "suggestions" referred to appear to be "suggestions" which were submitted in writing at the request of the Court by the learned Counsel for the respective parties to my learned brothers Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., during the argument on the rules, in respect of which the order of the 9th February 1922 was made.

The Registrar having made the above-mentioned order, the Respondents in the appeal to the Privy Council made an application to my learned brothers Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., that "they would issue directions to the effect that the suggestions made by the parties before the Hon'ble Judges on the 20th January 1922 and which are on the record of the said rules be treated as part of the record of the aforesaid rules Nos. 91 (F) of 1921 and 1 (F) of 1922" or to pass such other orders as the Court might deem fit.

On this application the learned Judges Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., on the 6th of April 1922 made what is in the nature of a statement, I do not know if it should be called a judgment or order. It was as follows: "With regard to this application it is sufficient to state what took place when the rules were heard by us on the 20th January 1922. In the course of the arguments, Sir Benode Mitter, Counsel for the Defendant, and Mr. Chakraverty, Counsel for the Plaintiffs, suggested certain terms on which the rules might be made absolute. To make sure what those suggestions were, we directed the learned Counsel to put their suggestions into writing and to hand them over to the Bench Clerk. This was done, and the suggestions on each side were set out in writing. Under our direction, those papers were made part of the records of the rules, and we took the suggestions into consideration when we delivered our judgment on the 9th February 1922. We may add that direction No. 5 in our judgment was given with reference to the suggestion No. 1 filed on behalf of the Defendant in Rule No. 91 (F) of 1921."

The "suggestions" were endorsed by the Bench Clerk under date 8th April 1922 as having been filed in Court on the 20th January 1922.

The matter then came before the Registrar again and he made a further order on the 24th April 1922.

"In view of their Lordships' statement that these papers were to be part of the record of the rules and were taken into consideration when judgment was delivered, I order that the suggestions referred to and their Lordships' order, dated the 6th April 1922, do form part of the paper-book.

"To save time, let the Appellants' application be returned to their Vakil to enable him to present it to the Privy Council Bench, if so advised."

It is this order which the Appellant to England now seeks to have set aside.

Amongst other arguments, it was urged by the learned Counsel for the Appellant to England that the suggestions submitted by Counsel should not be included in the paper-book, as they were really no more than arguments of Counsel as to what orders should be made by the Court; that no reference was made to the "suggestions" in the judgment of the learned Judges of the 9th February 1922: that, when the application to this Bench was made for leave to appeal to the Judicial Committee, no reference was made to these "suggestions" except incidentally, and that no argument was based on them.

It was further urged on behalf of the Appellant that when the Registrar by his order of the 24th March 1922 refused to include the "suggestions," the application in respect thereof should have been made to this Bench, which was dealing with the Privy Council business, and that the statement made by the learned Judges on the 6th April was in reality an addition to their judgment of the 9th February against which leave to appeal to the Judicial Committee had already been given. Particular stress was laid upon the last sentence of the learned Judges' statement, viz., "We may add that direction No. 5 in our judgment was given with reference to the suggestion No. 1 filed on behalf of the Defendant in Rule No. 91 (F) of 1921," which it was urged was really an added reason for the judgment.

We do not propose to take upon ourselves the responsibility of excluding these documents,

We think it right, however, to draw attention to the fact, that the judgment of the 9th February 1922 does not refer to the "suggestions" and to state that during the hearing of the application for leave to appeal to the Judicial Committee, it was not suggested that the judgment had been in any way based on the "suggestions." Para. 7 of the affidavit of J. C. Das, affirmed on the 25th April 1922, if read literally, might be taken to mean that the learned Counsel had drawn our attention to the "suggestions" and to the terms thereof. This was not so; and the learned Counsel (for the Plaintiff-Respondents) stated in Court that the words "incidentally" should have been added after the word "referred" in that paragraph.

My own recollection is that towards the end of the argument, it was mentioned incidentally that "suggestions" had been made by the learned Counsel as to the order which it was contended should be made by the learned Judges. The terms of the "suggestions" however were not submitted to this Bench and the impression on my mind was that, although "suggestions" had been made by the learned Counsel on the hearing of the rules, nothing had come of such "suggestions" and that the Court had delivered its judgment independently thereof.

It was not suggested that the order was in any way a consent order.

I express no opinion as to the argument that the above-mentioned statement is an addition to the judgment. It is not now necessary for me to say anything except that the facts, that the "suggestions" were made part of the record and that the direction No. 5 in the learned Judges' judgment of the 9th February 1922 was given with reference to the suggestion No. 1 filed on behalf of the Defendant in Rule No. 91 (F) of 1921, were brought to the notice of this Bench for the first time, when the statement of the learned Judges, dated the 6th April 1922, was read to us yesterday.

We are informed by the Officer of the Court that the printing of the paper-book is almost completed and if the order of the Registrar were to stand, it would cause considerable delay. Our object all along has been to avoid delay, though our efforts do not seem to have met with most success.

We therefore vary the Registrar's order and direct that the documents referred to in his order of 24th April 1922 are not to be included in the printed paper-book but that they are to be transmitted in the form of a supplementary paper-book.

By agreement between the parties the supplemental paper-book will include besides the documents, mentioned in the Registrar's order, the Appellant's objection to the inclusion of the papers mentioned in the Registrar's order, the Appellant's present petition presented to this Bench, and the Respondents' answer to that petition; the orders of the Registrar, dated 24th March and 24th April 1922, the Respondents' application to my learned brothers Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., and Mr. Cooper's report, dated 23rd March 1922, and the Respondents' petition to the Registrar, dated 11th April 1922.

The learned Counsel for the Appellant submitted that in view of the learned Judges' statement of the 6th of April 1922, he desired to submit further grounds of appeal; we give him leave to add such grounds, which are to be filed to-morrow.

Before leaving this matter, I desire to add that in my judgment the application of the Respondents to England in respect of the Registrar's order of the 24th March 1922, by which he refused the inclusion of the "suggestions" in the paper-book should have been made to this Bench and not to my learned brothers Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ.

This is the Bench, which is dealing with Privy Council business; this was the Bench which made the order, giving leave to appeal to the Judicial Committee and if directions became necessary with respect to the preparation of the paper-book, application should have been made to this Bench.

It is not necessary for me to dwell at any length on this point, for during the argument on this application the learned Counsel for the Respondents, in answer to a question by me, expressed his personal view that the application should have been made to this Bench.

I need hardly point out that if the application had been made to this Bench and if this Bench had thought it necessary to refer to the Bench, which made the order of the 9th February 1922, for the purpose of ascertaining what documents had been placed on the record, there would have been no difficulty in making such a reference and a considerable amount of time, expense and trouble would have been saved.

This judgment will be included in the supplemental paper-book.

The utmost despatch is to be given to the preparation of the supplemental paper-book. The costs of the supplemental paper-book are to be paid by the Appellant in the first instance. But, we direct the Registrar, Appellate Side, to assess the extra costs, which will be incurred with reference to the supplemental paper-book by reason of the Respondents to England not applying to this Bench in respect of the Registrar's order of 24th March 1922. Such extra costs are to be paid by the Respondents to England in any event, no matter what may be the result of the appeal.

The costs of this application, which we assess at five gold mohurs will be costs in the appeal.

RICHARDSON, J.—Leave was given by this Bench on the 10th March to appeal to England from the order, dated the 9th February, of another Divisional Bench of this Court. It appears that during the hearing of the rules on which that order was made, learned Counsel on either side handed up to the learned Judges suggestions in writing as to the directions or terms which the order should include. My recollection is that if the fact that such suggestions were made was referred to at all in the hearing before us of the application for leave to appeal, it was referred to only incidentally. Our attention was not drawn to the suggestions in the sense that we were made aware of their nature or of any special importance attaching to them or of the fact that the papers were extant on the record.

It further appears that the Registrar refused an application made to him on behalf of the Respondents to England to include these papers in the paper-book of the appeal. Thereupon an application was made by the Respondents to learned Judges upon which they made the order, dated the 6th April. In view of that order the Registrar then directed that the papers containing the suggestions should form part of the record of the appeal and part of the paper-book.

The application now before us is in effect an application to discharge the Registrar's second order on the grounds that the papers ought not to form part of the paper-book and that the order of the 6th April is an addition to the judgment of the 9th February.

I agree and I feel bound to express my agreement with the observation made by the learned Chief Justice that an unusual course was taken by the Respondents or their advisers. It was out of the ordinary course to apply to the learned Judges for an order upon an interlocutory matter arising upon an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, an application which had already come before the present Bench as the Divisional Bench dealing with Privy Council matters. The Chief Justice generally presides over that Bench but the principle of course is the same however the Bench may, for the time being, be constituted. If the Registrar's original order was mistaken, the application for the rectification of the mistake should, in my opinion, have been made to the Bench then dealing with Privy Council matters. Upon that if any question of fact had arisen as to what had occurred before the learned Judges who made the order of the 9th February, means could have been found of ascertaining the fact from those Judges. But it is unnecessary to say more as to the inconvenience which might arise if it became a general practice that more than one Bench should deal with the same subject-matter. It is unnecessary because the learned Counsel for the Respondents, though speaking, as he says, not for his clients but for himself, has conceded that the course adopted in the present case was irregular and there would, therefore, seem to be no present danger that that course forms a precedent for the future.

As to the particular application before us the order of the 6th April must be approached with all the respect due to an order made by two learned Judges of this Court. Nor are we sitting in appeal from that order. From the terms of the order, the learned Judges must, as it seems to me, have intended that it should become a part of the record of the appeal and I am clearly of opinion that in the circumstances we should not be justified in withholding from the Privy Council the written suggestions to which I have referred and the order relating to them. Those suggestions and the order must therefore be included in a supplementary paper-book to be laid before their Lordships of the Privy Council as a part of the record of the appeal, and if that be so the parties are agreed that the supplementary paper-book should also contain the connected documents which my Lord has specified.

It also appears to me to be fair that the Appellant to England should be at liberty to add to his grounds of appeal the supplementary ground which he will file to-morrow.

With these observations I concur in the order which my Lord has proposed.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

RANKIN, J.	}	Re ALLEN BROS. & CO.
1922,		v.
21, February		BANDO & CO.

Calcutta Rent Act (III, B. C. of 1920), sec 15—Order of Rent Controller refusing application for standardisation of rent on the ground of confusion in the number of premises in question—Scope and effect of sec. 15—Jurisdiction of High Court to revise orders made under sec 15—Government of India Act, sec 107.

The Controller of Rents refused an application under sec. 15 of the Calcutta Rent Act for the standardisation of the rent of certain premises on the ground that there was no satisfactory evidence to prove the Municipal number of the premises in question :

Held—That sec. 15 of the Calcutta Rent Act makes it obligatory on the Rent Controller to grant a certificate certifying the standard rent.

That in the present case the rooms let were certain, easily ascertainable and subject to no doubt, and the order of the Rent Controller rejecting the application for fixing a standard rent was liable to be set aside.

That the Rent Controller was a Court subordinate to the High Court which had jurisdiction to revise orders made under sec. 15 of the Rent Act under sec. 107 of the Government of India Act.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. L. Mitter appeared for Allen Bros. & Co. in support of the Rule.

Mr. H. D. Bose appeared on behalf of Messrs. Bando & Co. to show cause.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Applicants Messrs. Allen Brothers & Co. (India), Ltd. obtained a rule nisi on the 4th January 1921 calling upon the Respondents Messrs. Bando & Co. to show cause why an order made by the Controller appointed under the Calcutta Rent Act, 1920, should not be set aside. This rule was issued both under sec. 115 of the Code and under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.

The Applicants are tenants of certain premises in Hare Street and hold under the Respondents. Their complaint is that an application made by them to the Controller under sec. 15 of the Rent Act, for a certificate certifying the standard rent of the said premises, has been dismissed contrary to the terms of the section, which oblige the Controller to fix the standard rent and to certify the same.

In my opinion, upon the question of merits there is no answer to the Applicants. The judgment of the Controller is before me. It appears that in Hare Street there is a large building which is numbered 3, 4, 5 and 6, and there is some confusion on the part of many people as to which part of the whole building is properly designated by one or other of these numerals. It appears, however, that there is no doubt at all as to the rooms which were let to the Applicants. They are occupied by Messrs. Holling Hurst & Co. and the three rooms in question which Messrs. Holling Hurst occupy under the Applicants and which the Applicants took from Messrs. Bando & Co. are easily ascertainable. The Rent Controller in the course of his judgment says:—

“From the above it will be seen that there is no satisfactory evidence upon the record to prove the number of the premises comprising the three rooms let out to the Applicants, whether the number of the premises is 4 and 5 or 5 and 6 or 4, 5 and 6, Hare Street. On this very ground the suit fails.”

He also states that there is no satisfactory evidence before him to show what the rent of these identical rooms was in November 1918. The judgment concludes by saying that “in the circumstances stated above as there is a confusion in the number of premises of which the rent is required to be standardized, I dismiss this application.”

In my opinion, sec. 15 of the Calcutta Rent Act makes it obligatory on the Rent Controller to grant a certificate certifying the standard rent. In the present case it is beyond dispute that the rooms in respect of which the application is made are perfectly certain, easily enough ascertainable, and are subject to no doubt at all. Either the Rent Controller or any Surveyor appointed by him could have been taken and shown the actual rooms which Messrs. Holling Hurst & Co. are occupying. It is nowhere suggested and it is not the fact that the Controller required the Applicant to give him further particulars and that the Applicant made any default in complying with such order. In these circumstances it matters nothing whatsoever whether the premises in question have got three numbers or one number or have got no number at all, and there is no justification for the Rent Controller's refusal to comply with sec. 15 of the Calcutta Rent Act. Nor can any such justification be extracted from the fact that it may be difficult, owing to confusion of numbers, to say at what rent these very three rooms were let in any previous period. By the terms of sec. 15 the Controller may fix the standard rent at such amount as he deems just in any of a series of cases, and one of the cases in which he may act in that manner is thus defined: “where for any reason any difficulty arises in giving effect to this Act.” For these reasons I do not think that there can be any serious question that if I have jurisdiction to do so I should send the case back to the Rent Controller with a direction to hear and determine the application according to law.

Mr. H. D. Bose, showing cause, takes as his main point the preliminary objection that this Court has no power of superintendence and no revisional jurisdiction as regards the Controller. It is not however contended that such jurisdiction, if it exists in the High Court cannot properly be exercised by a single Judge sitting on the Original Side in a case such as this where the premises are situated within the limits of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction. This point of Revisional Jurisdiction has been considered and adjudicated on in more than one case on the Appellate Side, and on the Original Side before now a good many applications have been entertained for a revision of orders passed by the Rent Controller. Mr. Bose contended that the decisions and in particular the decision which contains the fullest treatment of the matter, H. D. Chatterjee v. L. B. Trivedi (1) can be shown to proceed upon cases which are not in point and upon principles which are not sound. He also contended that insufficient attention had been paid to the fact that the Rent Controller's Court is subject to a rule-making power which is vested, not in this Court, but in the Local Government. For these reasons he asked leave to argue this question of jurisdiction, and in the circumstances I allowed that to be done.

The decisions of an Appellate Side Bench are technically speaking not binding upon me. This is owing to the fact that in many cases the law administered on the Original Side is not the same as the law administered with reference to cases arising in the mofussil. The present question, however, is exactly the same on whichever side of the Court it arises. The only authority known to me as a guide upon this sort of question is the dictum of Mr. Justice Norris in The Oriental Banking Corporation v. Govindlal Sil (2). The learned Judge said that he was not prepared to say that he would consider every judgment of an Appellate Bench binding upon him when sitting on the Original Side, yet every such judgment should receive respectful consideration and careful attention and should be followed unless he was very clearly of the opinion that the conclusion arrived at was an erroneous one.

The questions raised, quite properly, by Mr. H. D. Bose are both numerous and difficult. I think it would be no recommendation of anyone's opinion to say that he was very clearly of opinion that the contrary view was erroneous. I propose to deal with this matter fully and carefully both out of respect to Mr. H. D. Bose's argument and because I think his client is entitled to this, but in my opinion it is not true that in the end the question has been decided upon a wrong footing, and it is a question on which, though with some difficulty, I incline to the opinion that the decision of the Division Bench is right.

In the first place it must be noted that the argument before me proceeded without either party calling into question the validity of the Calcutta Rent Act or the validity of the rules made thereunder. The first question on this basis is as to what the local Legislature has in fact done. In my opinion the Controller, in discharging his duty under sec. 15, and the President of the Tribunal in discharging his duties under sec. 18 act as Courts of Justice. Whether they are Civil Courts within the meaning of any particular enactment is another question but they are both Civil Courts in the general sense; they are authorised to decide judicially, and by judicial methods only, between persons seeking their Civil rights. [Nilmoni v. Taranath (3)]. Such functions as they perform under secs. 15 and 18 are neither administrative nor ministerial. It is written large, both over the Act and the rules, that the procedure to be followed is in general the procedure of a Court of Law.

By sec. 18, when the Controller has given a decision fixing the standard rent, and in that event only, a certain right is given to the parties. It is not called a right of appeal but a right "to apply for revision" of the Controller's order. As sec. 24 provides that the procedure shall be that laid down in the Code for the regular trial of suits "as nearly as may be," it seems that the right is to have a retrial before a higher Court. It is not what is technically known as "revision" or "reference" and it does not seem to me exactly the same thing as "appeal by way of re-hearing" means in England. But however the right in question is denominated or defined, its existence puts the Controller in the position of a Court subordinate to another Court, not simply as a matter of dignity or precedence, but in the sense that the one Court controls the other, to confirm, vary or nullify the orders of the other. If I may adopt the language used in Birendra Kishore Manikya v. The Secretary of State (4) "the index of the relation of superior and inferior tribunal" is there. The form of jurisdiction may or may not be one hitherto unknown in India as a form of Appellate Jurisdiction. It is by no means an unknown form elsewhere.

As regards the two classes of Courts that are mentioned in sec. 18, two features are clear: first that the decision shall be final, secondly, in addition to a general power to make rules "to carry out the purposes of the Act" the Local Government has a particular power to make rules regulating the procedure of these Courts. This power must doubtless be read with sec. 24.

By sec. 15 of the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, now replaced by sec. 107 of the Government of India Act, power of superintendence is given over all Courts subject to the Appellate Jurisdiction. By the respective secs. 9 and 106 of the same statutes the several High Courts have such Appellate Jurisdiction as is vested in them by Letters Patent. On turning to the Letters Patent to find what is the Appellate Jurisdiction, one finds that it is "from the Civil Courts of the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William" and "from all other Courts subject to its superintendence." These last words appear to make a vicious circle but are explained by the fact that sec. 9 of the Act of 1861 had transferred to the High Court every power and authority vested in the Courts which the High Court superseded. As neither the Rent Controller nor the President of the Tribunal were Courts known in 1861 a right of superintendence can only be made out under the Letters Patent in one or other of two ways: by establishing that it or some other form of Appellate Jurisdiction has been since granted with reference to the Rent Controller or the President, or secondly, by establishing that the High Court inherited a general jurisdiction over all Courts of Civil Jurisdiction established or to be established. "The High Court," as has been stated, "has superintendence where it has Appellate Jurisdiction, and has Appellate Jurisdiction where it has superintendence," Abdul Karim v. Municipal Officer, Aden (5), but some jurisdiction must be shown before the rest can be inferred.

In my opinion the position is in no way altered if the question be considered upon the language of the Code. The word "Subordinate" is not defined by the Code because sec. 3 is not a definition. This section does not claim to be and is not intended to be exhaustive: [Purshottam Janardan v. Mahadev Pande (6)]. Though not defined, the word "subordinate" plays an important part in the Code as may be seen from secs. 23, 24, 100, 115, 133, 136 and 137. There are also in the Code several phrases that may be contrasted and compared, thus:—Court of a grade inferior (sec. 3); any Court (sec. 113); Civil Courts subject to their superintendence (sec. 122); any Court of Civil Jurisdiction (sec. 141). The words "Civil Court" in the Code appear to have a special meaning though this again is nowhere defined. I take them to mean Civil Courts exercising all the powers of Civil Courts as distinguished from Courts which only exercise powers over civil matters of a special class or classes, e.g., the Rent Courts under Act X of 1859, and the Land Acquisition Judge. The two broadest phrases in the Code are to be found in secs. 113 and 141. The latter in no way touches upon questions of subordination; the former does, because reference is a form of Appellate Jurisdiction [Birendra v. Secretary of State (4)] but Or. 46 cuts down its application and it does not apply to the Rent Controller or the President. It may be argued that the High Court has superintendence over "any Court" because it has power to alter the Order and so to give a power of reference to "any Court." Beyond those arguments, which in reference to special statutory Courts unknown to the Code seem very precarious, I can see nothing in the Code which even promises to be of any assistance on the present question unless it be that a comparison between secs. 23 and 24 appears to show that a Court may be subordinate within the meaning of the Code in a purely administrative sense.

It was contended by Mr. B. L. Mitter in support of the rule that all other Courts of Civil Jurisdiction are subordinate to the High Court and under its Appellate Jurisdiction in a wide sense unless the Legislature has expressly provided to the contrary. I assume that for the purposes of this proposition some form of territorial limit is presupposed and I pass over the difficulty that arises from the fact that such a limit may be imposed in various ways. The proposition may mean that if a new Court was established for a new purpose and nothing was said to the contrary then there would be an unlimited right of appeal in the narrow sense as well as subordination in other ways. But if this is not meant then I think the proposition is seen to be indefinite and to stand in need of support and definition by authority. As a general proposition applicable to Bengal it seems to me that on the face of the Act of 1861 and the Letters Patent no proposition so simple and wide can possibly be correct. It is nowhere expressed and the several jurisdictions carefully defined and conferred are not to be extended or enlarged indefinitely upon general principles to the rigour of which His Majesty is in no way committed. The simple proposition is always tempting yet I know of no case decided on this simple principle. In many of the decided cases it would have been a complete answer to the problem, yet the Courts have met a heavy weather before arriving at another answer. As the present case arises within the Ordinary Original Jurisdiction it may be said that this principle was implicit in the authority of the Supreme Court and that, if so, it is continued by sec. 9 of the Act of 1861 and by the Government of India Act. This has not been argued before me. My own consideration of the matter leads me to reject the argument. This depends upon the charter of the Supreme Court of 1774. As cl. 21 applies only to the Courts and Magistrates therein specified as having been established or appointed by the charter of 1753 it has no application here. The only other clause that can be founded on is cl. 4. As to this clause, both Jenkins, C. J. and Stephen J., in The Amrita Bazar Patrika case (7) were of opinion that it refers to the individual Judges and not to the Courts. The frame of the charter, when the purview of its successive clauses is examined, strongly supports this reading. I would say that nothing that I am now stating is intended to abridge by a single inch the doctrine laid down with reference to cases which are within the revisional power, that "there is no form of judicial injustice which this Court, if need be, cannot reach" [Lekhraj Ram v. Debi Pershad (8)].

It remains therefore to enquire whether the Calcutta Rent Controller as a Court is under the High Court in any one of ways in which Appellate Jurisdiction can be exercised. The decisions of the Division Benches, in particular the case already cited [H. D. Chatterjee v. L. B. Trivedi (1)] deal with the problem in this way, in no way proceeding upon any more general principle.

The position under the Calcutta Rent Act of 1920 is this. The Act to begin with applies only to Calcutta in the sense of Municipal Calcutta, and the word "Calcutta" throughout the Act has that particular meaning. So far as I can find, the area to which the Act extends has never been enlarged since the Act was passed. The appointment of the Rent Controller is to be found in the Calcutta Gazette of 5th May 1920 No. 24 T. M. and is "as Controller for Calcutta for the purposes of the said Act." The rules made by the Local Government under the Act are dated 13th July 1920; the only amendment is dated 8th September 1921 and in no way affects the present question. The result is therefore that at present, taking the institution as it exists, no decision of the only Rent Controller appointed is in fact subject to revision by any Civil Court. If even the Act is extended to another area it will be in the option of the Local Government to appoint another officer as Controller for the new area or to appoint the same officer either as a separate office or by way of extension of the area over which his present jurisdiction holds. No doubt mere extension of his area by an administrative act would put him within the control of a Civil Court. As matters stand the only facts connecting him in any manner with the Appellate Jurisdiction of the High Court are these: that he is, as I think, subordinate to the President; that awards of the Tribunal made under the Calcutta Improvement Act (Bengal Act V of 1911) are appealable to this Court under Act XVIII of 1911; that in some cases the President may himself give decisions which are deemed to be decisions of the Tribunal; and that where the word "Judge," as distinct from "Court," appears in the Land Acquisition Act of 1894, the President is deemed to be the Judge. As between the Rent Controller on the one hand and the High Court on the other, the question is, is this a link or a gap?

Certain lines of decisions have been thought to touch this question. I will refer first to the cases under the Rent Act (Act X of 1859). By that Act certain suits were made cognisable only by the Collector's Court and upon the terms of the Act. In certain suits the judgment of the Collector was to be final; and in these, if they were tried by the Deputy Collector, an appeal lay to the Collector whose decision was to be final. In other suits, an appeal lay to the Zilla Judge or the Sadar Court according as the amount in dispute was under or over Rs. 5,000. In 1861 therefore the Sadar Court possessed Appellate Jurisdiction over the Collector's Court by the terms of the Act of 1859 itself and the High Court inherited therewith a power of superintendence. The cases were fully discussed in Chaitan Pajjosi v. Kunja Behari (9). They show that a right of appeal, however limited, will let in the full general power of superintendence, but the right of appeal in those cases is clearly given by the special

Code itself and applies to cases within the special jurisdiction conferred thereby. I may observe here that in dealing with a long line of decisions the important point to observe is the principle upon which the authorities in the end settle down. That is far more important than general language used in the earliest cases. The earliest case was apparently a Full Bench case [Goind Coomar v. Kristo Coomar (10)], where the order assailed was made under sec. 151 of Act X. There was no complaint that the Court of limited jurisdiction had exceeded its authority. The point was that the Court had refused to do something on the ground that it had no power. In that case the judgment of Mr. Justice Loch showed by its reference to "cases in which no appeal lies to the Judge" that there is no reason to attribute the decision to any wider principle than I have mentioned. Wider language was used in Deanutóollah's case (11), where the Collector had in fact exceeded his jurisdiction but I do not read that as laying down that every Court of limited jurisdiction must be under the superintendence of the High Court. The true basis of the Court's interference under the Act of 1859 was considered in Umacharan v. Midnapur Zemindary Coy. (12), where it is rested on the provision for appeals. Perhaps the latest illustration of this reasoning is afforded by the case of Kartik Chandra v. Gorachand (13), a decision under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (Bengal Act VI of 1908), where a general power of revision was based on the fact that by sec. 224, sub-cl. (2) a second appeal lay to this Court in certain cases. These cases deal also with difficulties as to whether the Acts expressly or impliedly vested power of superintendence elsewhere or took it away. They show that the rule-making power or even greater powers vested elsewhere do not avail to take away those powers of the Court which follow from its position as a Court of appeal, though a provision that the Commissioner shall be the High Court has this effect, Darbari Panjarth v. Bhola Roy (14) as also a provision that the appeal shall lie to the Commissioner, Umacharan v. Midnapur Zemindary Coy. (12). These cases therefore are in my opinion, as Mr. H. D. Bose argued, of no very direct application to the case of the Rent Controller.

By the Land Acquisition Act of 1894 an appeal lies to the High Court from any award of the Court established by the Act. Leaving on one side the cases in which the Collector's duty was not a judicial duty, I come to those in which it has been held that in acting under sec. 18 the Collector is a Court and his proceedings are subject to revision. [Administrator-General of Bengal v. Land Acquisition Collector, 24-Pergannahs (15) and Krishna Das v. Land Acquisition Collector of Patna (16)]. The latter case simply followed the earlier and not without doubt. In the earlier case attention was almost entirely devoted to the question whether the Collector's function was judicial. The reasoning on that assumption is very condensed but if this Court is a Court of appeal from the award it would certainly seem to have superintendence over judicial proceedings for the initiation of the reference.

It is clear enough that under all these special statutes an appeal lies to the High Court. "For the purpose of the application of the power of superintendence it is not necessary that an appeal should lie to this Court in the very proceeding in which the power of superintendence is invoked," Umacharan v. Midnapur Zemindary Coy. (12). If a case should arise by reason of an extension of the area under the Calcutta Rent Act, 1920, in which a Civil Court should have jurisdiction, a question would then emerge which the cases I have been referring to do not answer. That question but for the specific right of appeal conferred by the Land Acquisition Act would have arisen under it also. The question is this: where a new and special jurisdiction is conferred upon an ordinary Civil Court so as to make it for certain limited purposes a Court of special jurisdiction, the powers and duties of which are defined by statute, has the High Court in the absence of any special provision conferring Appellate Jurisdiction in any form as regards those purposes a right of superintendence arising out of the ordinary relationship between the two Courts. As I understand the view of the Division Bench in H. D. Chatterjee v. L. B. Trivedi (1), they answer this question in the affirmative, and I am in no way prepared to dissent. But the question at present is not solved by any reference even to this principle. From the Act of 1861, from the Letters Patent, and from the decisions, I draw this conclusion that it is not enough for the purposes of the Code or the Letters Patent which deal on definite principles with a regular order of Courts, that from the limited nature of the powers conferred, or from a mere comparison with other Courts, or from possible relationships thereto not yet subsisting, a new Court may be styled an "inferior Court." An actual relationship to this Court must be established: an existing thread of connecting authority must be disclosed. The President of the Tribunal is the person who is set up as a Court by sec. 18 of the Rent Act of 1920. Under the Calcutta Improvement Act of 1911 a "Court" is set up but that "Court" is the Tribunal and not the President (sec. 70). The Act of the Governor-General in Council of the same year deals with appeals from awards of the Tribunal as the preamble shows. For the purpose of determining what is the award of the Tribunal the President's decision is in certain cases the only thing that matters, and in certain cases he is entitled to sit alone and to exercise all powers of the Tribunal (sec. 77). In addition to that the Calcutta Improvement Act has made the President the "Judge" in the sense of the Land Acquisition Act, wherever the word "Judge" occurs. Now superintendence is over Courts, not over jurisdictions. The present question must, it seems to me, be decided ultimately upon consideration whether the giving of a new jurisdiction to the President is to be regarded as a new jurisdiction conferred on an existing Court or to be regarded as the setting up of a new Court for a new purpose. On that question I have entertained much doubt. The position is not quite the same as where a new jurisdiction is given to the Civil Courts. This Tribunal or the President has no general jurisdiction at all. On the question whether there is one Court from which in one jurisdiction an appeal lies to this Court or two Courts which should be regarded as absolutely separate, I have come to the conclusion that the decision of the Division Bench has all the common sense of the matter even if it may be doubted whether it has all the strict logic on its side. After all the President for some purposes is "the Judge" and is "the Tribunal;"

appeals within the Calcutta Improvement Act lie mostly from his decisions; and in view of the fact that appeals from a Rent Controller's decisions may come as occasion arises either to the Civil Courts of the District or, in Calcutta, to the President, I am in no way prepared to hold that an opinion which has been entertained by some four or five Judges of this Court is not the better opinion.

For these reasons perhaps I should say in these circumstances the rule will be made absolute with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, rr. 98, 99, 101, 103, order under, dismissing case for default—Suit by party against whom order made—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 11A.

In view of the decisions under secs. 332 and 335 of Act XIV of 1882 and the fact that the language of these sections has not been altered in the new Code, Art. 11A of the Limitation Act will apply only to an order under r. 98, r. 99 or r. 101 of Or. 21, which has been made upon investigation.

KUNJ BEHARY LAL v. KANDH PRASAD NARAIN SINGH (6) followed.

An order dismissing an application for default is not an order passed upon investigation.

This was an appeal preferred on the 15th August 1919 against a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan (Babu Phanindra Mohan Chatterji), dated the 14th May 1919, reversing a decree of the Munsif of Katwa (Babu Haripada Banerji), dated the 31st July 1916.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Sarat Ch. Roy Chowdhury and Haradhan Chatterjee for the Appellants.

Babu Samatul Ch. Dutt for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit for establishment of right to, and recovery of possession of, the property in dispute from which the Plaintiffs were dispossessed by the Defendants Nos. 1 to 15 who purchased the property in execution of a decree which they obtained against one Baidya Nath Sircar.

It appears that the Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 took possession of the property in dispute through Court, and the Plaintiffs applied to the Court under Or. 21, r. 100. On the day ultimately fixed for the hearing of the case, namely, on the 14th February 1914, neither the Petitioners nor their pleader appeared and the petition was accordingly dismissed for default.

SM. NIRODE BARANI DAS v. MANINDRA NARAYAN CHANDRA.

The present suit was instituted on the 27th July 1915 which was more than one year after the date of the said order.

The question is whether the suit is barred by the provisions of Art. 11A of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908).

The Court of first instance decided both the questions of title and limitation in favour of the Plaintiffs. The Lower Appellate Court has held that the suit is barred by limitation under Art. 11A of the Limitation Act.

Or. 21, r. 97 deals with a case of obstruction or resistance by any person to a holder of a decree for the possession of immoveable property, or the purchaser of any such property sold in execution of a decree; and sub-r. 2 of that rule lays down that the Court shall fix a date for investigating the matter and rr. 98 and 99 state what is to be done according to the result of the investigation.

R. 100 deals with the case of any person other than the judgment-debtor who is dispossessed of immoveable property by the holder of a decree for the possession of such property, or where such property has been sold in execution of a decree by the purchaser thereof.

Sub-r. 2, r. 100 lays down that the Court shall fix a day for investigating the matter and shall summon the party against whom the application is made to appear and answer the same.

R. 101 provides that the Court, if satisfied that Applicant was in possession of the property on his own account, or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor, shall direct that the Applicant be put into possession of the property.

Then comes r. 103 which provides that any party not being a judgment-debtor against whom an order is made under r. 98, r. 99 or r. 101, may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property, but subject to the result of such suit (if any), the order shall be conclusive.

There were similar provisions in Act XIV of 1882, sec. 332 of which dealt with the case of dispossession of any person other than the judgment-debtor by the holder of a decree for possession; sec. 334 dealt with cases of obstruction to the purchaser of any immoveable property by the judgment-debtor or anyone on his behalf; and sec. 335 dealt with cases where the purchaser of any such property was resisted or obstructed by any person other than the judgment-debtor claiming in good faith a right to the present possession thereof, or where in delivering possession any such person was dispossessed.

There is no doubt that upon an application being made to the Court under Or. 21, r. 100, the Court has to hold some sort of investigation as expressly laid down by sub-r. 2 of r. 100 and r. 101.

In this case there was no investigation and the case was dismissed for default. The question is whether under these circumstances the special limitation contained in Art. 11A of the Limitation Act applies.

The provisions of Or. 21, rr. 97 to 103 are analogous to secs. 278 to 283 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882, (corresponding to Or. 21, rr. 58 to 63 of the present Civil Procedure Code). Those sections relate to claims preferred to attachment of immoveable property.

There have been numerous decisions on the question whether the one year's limitation under Art. 11 of the Limitation Act, Act XV of 1877, applies to cases where there has been no investigation of a claim under sec. 278 or objections under sec. 332 or 335, C. P. C. (Act XIV of 1882). The decisions are not uniform.

SM. NIRODE BARANI DAS v. MANINDRA NARAYAN CHANDRA.

In the case of Sirdhari Lal v. Ambica Pershad (1) in dealing with a case under sec. 278 of Act XIV of 1882 the Judicial Committee observed that the policy of the Act evidently is to secure the speedy settlement of questions of title, and pointed out that the Code does not prescribe the extent to which the investigation should go. That indicates that in their Lordships' opinion (as the sections expressly laid down) there should be some investigation before the order can be treated as conclusive. There are various other cases in which it has been held that there must be some investigation by the Court before the order can be held to be conclusive and Art. 11 of the Limitation Act may be applicable to the case.

It is to be observed however with reference to claim cases, that secs. 278 to 282 provided for an investigation, and sec. 283 provided that "the party against whom an order under secs. 280, 281 or 282 is passed, may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive." But the corresponding provision of the present Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908), viz., Or. 21, r. 63 provides that "where a claim or an objection is preferred, the party against whom an order is made, may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive." It is to be observed therefore that whereas in sec. 283 of Act XIV of 1882 there was express reference to secs. 280, 281 or 282 which dealt with investigation into a claim, Or. 21, r. 63 does not make any mention of any specific rules under which orders in claim cases are passed. Upon these grounds, it has been held in some recent cases that there has been a change in the law and that the decisions under the old Code are no longer in force.

In the case of Nagendra Lal Chowdhury v. Fani Bhusan Das (2), it was held that where an application had been dismissed with or without investigation, a regular suit, if instituted, must be commenced within one year from the date of such order. The learned Judges held as follows:—"All that is now necessary is that a claim should be preferred under r. 58 and that there should be an order either allowing or rejecting it. The party against whom the order is made, may then bring a suit in the language of r. 63 to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute."

The same view has been taken in the case of Venkataratnam v. Ranganayakamma (3), where a Full Bench of the Madras High Court referring to the general policy of the previous Code as explained by the Judicial Committee in Sirdhari Lal v. Ambica Pershad (1) said that sec. 283 of the Codes of 1877 and 1882 only gave a right of suit to the party against whom an order had been passed under secs. 280, 281 or 282 and did not provide for the case when the Court under sec. 278 refused to investigate the claim on the ground that it had been designedly or unnecessarily delayed. In such cases, sec. 283 failed to provide for the speedy settlement of questions of title raised by the claim. The learned Judges held that the intention of the Legislature was to widen the scope of the rule in accordance with the general policy of this legislation as explained by the highest tribunal. It may be mentioned that in the case before the Madras Full Bench, there was no order either allowing or rejecting the claim and the Court directed that the allegations of the claimant would be notified to the bidders with the remark that she "did not take steps to have her claim inquired into during the last 10 months."

A similar view has also been taken in the case of Ponnusami Pillai v. Sanu Ammal (4), where it is held that, "the language of Art. 11 in the new Act is more comprehensive than that of the previous Act and that has been construed in this Court as covering orders after full investigation as well as orders passed on default." See also observations on the point in the case of Satindra Nath Banerji v. Shiva Prasad Bhakat (5).

These decisions relate to claim cases and, as stated above, they are based upon the alteration in the wording of r. 63, Or. 21 as compared with sec. 283 of the old Code.

So far as the provisions of r. 103 are concerned, there has been no change in the Civil Procedure Code as compared with secs. 332 and 335 of the old Code.

Sub-r. (2) of r. 100 and r. 101 (as also rr. 97 to 99) expressly provide that the Court shall investigate the matter and any order made under r. 101 (or r. 99) must therefore be the result of such investigation. When, therefore, r. 103 lays down that any party, not being a judgment-debtor, against whom an order is made under r. 98, r. 99 or r. 101, may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property but subject to the result of such suit (if any) the order shall be conclusive, it evidently contemplates an order passed after investigation as laid down in rr. 97 to 99 or rr. 100 and 101. The conclusiveness therefore attaches to an order made after investigation under those rules. The question has been considered with reference to sec. 335 of the old Code in the case of Kunj Behary Lal v. Kandh Prasad Narain Singh (6), where the learned Judges held that "it is manifest from the language of the Code itself that the only order upon which the character of finality is impressed is an order made upon enquiry" and that where there has been no investigation at all and no judicial determination and the Court without any enquiry dismissed the application for default and withdrew the proceeding, it is impossible to say that the order is of the description contemplated by sec. 335, and they approved of the decision in the case of Sarat Chandra v. Tarini Prasad (7).

We have been referred by the learned pleader for the Respondent to the cases of Shagun Chand v. Musammat Shibbi (8) and Chandi Prosad v. Nand Kishore (9) in support of the proposition that one year's rule of limitation has been applied even to cases where there has been no investigation. But in the first case it appears that the pleader for the Applicant appeared and stated that his client did not wish to adduce any evidence and the application was accordingly dismissed. In the second case, the pleaders for both parties were present; no evidence was adduced; and the learned Judges held that the dismissal of the petition under those circumstances could not be treated as dismissal for default of appearance. Neither of these cases therefore was dismissed for default.

It is also contended that the principle upon which it has been held that the limitation of one year applies to orders passed in connection with claim cases, even where there has been no investigation, should also be applied to a case like the present. But as pointed out above, r. 63 does not refer to orders passed under rr. 60, 61 or 62 of the Code under which the orders are made, and it is upon that ground that the learned Judges in Nagendra Lal Chowdhury v. Fani Bhusan Das (2) and some other cases referred to above held that the law had been changed.

So far as Or. 21, r. 103 is concerned, there has been no change in the law. That rule like sec. 335 of Act XIV of 1882 refers to the previous rules, viz., rr. 98, 99 and 101 under which orders are to be made after investigation. The distinction appears to be a narrow one, because orders under the claim sections have also to be made after investigation. But having regard to the fact that although there was express reference to secs. 280 to 282 in sec. 283 of Act XIV of 1882, there is no reference to those sections (corresponding to rr. 58 to 62) in r. 63, whereas in Or. 21, r. 103 there is express reference to rr. 98, 99 and 101 under which the investigation is to be made, and having regard to the decisions referred to above we are constrained to hold that in cases coming under Or. 21, rr. 98, 99 or 101, an order in order to be conclusive must be an order passed after investigation.

The next question for consideration is what constitutes "investigation," and it is a question of some difficulty in some cases.

As pointed out by the Judicial Committee (in connection with claim cases) in Sirdhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (1), the Court does not lay down to what extent the investigation should go. There seems to be a divergence of opinion as to what constitutes "investigation."

In a number of cases, mostly relating to claim cases, where the claimant did not adduce evidence and the claim was dismissed, it was held that a suit brought more than a year after the date of the order was barred. Some of the decisions were based on the ground that, where a party was allowed an opportunity of adducing evidence but failed to do so and there was an order rejecting the claim purporting to be made under sec. 281, there was investigation sufficient to bring the case under sec. 281. See Rahim Bux v. Abdul Kader (10) and the earlier cases of Gooroo Das Roy v. Sona Monce Dassya (11) and Srimuntho Hazrah v. Syed Tajooddin (12).

In some cases where the party was not even present as in Tripura Soonduree Debya v. Ijjatoonnissa Khatun (13), Gulab v. Mutsaddi Lal (14) and Jugol Kishore v. Ambika Debi (15) (the last two cases being under the present Code) and Lachmi Narain v. H. C. Martindell (16) (a case under the Rent Act XII of 1881), the same principle was applied.

On the other hand, in some other cases it was held that the limitation did not apply where the order was passed dismissing the case for default of appearance [see Kallar Singh v. Toril Mahton (17) and Sarala Subba Rau v. Kamsala Timmayya (18)].

It is difficult to reconcile all these decisions. It may be said (as it was urged in some of the cases) that there is no reason why the limitation should apply where the party appears and is unable to, or does not, adduce evidence; and that the limitation should not apply where the party takes care not to come to Court on the day fixed for hearing. But a distinction has been drawn in the Civil Procedure Code between a case where it is dismissed for default, and a case where the party appears and fails to adduce evidence and the case is in consequence dismissed in which event the dismissal is not one for default.

It is pointed out on behalf of the Respondent that Art. 11A of the Limitation Act does not refer to any section or rule of the Civil Procedure Code and is very general in its terms. It is accordingly contended that an order passed under r. 103 dismissing a case for default comes under Art. 11A of the Limitation Act.

Art. 11A refers to a suit by a person against whom an order has been made under the Code (among others) upon an application by a person dispossessed of immoveable property in the delivery of possession thereof to the decree-holder or purchaser. But although the article does not refer to any section, the order must be an order under Or. 21, r. 103. That rule expressly refers to rr. 98, 99 and 101 and these rules provide for investigation into a petition of objection. The right of suit is given by r. 103 only when there is any order under rr. 98, 99 or 101, and Art. 11A merely provides for limitation applicable to such suits.

We do not think it satisfactory to hold that although the provisions relating to claims and those relating to delivery of possession are similar in nature, different periods of limitation should be applied, but as already stated, having regard to the decisions under secs. 332 and 335 and to the fact that the language of secs. 332 and 335 has been retained in Or. 21, r. 103 though the language of Or. 21, r. 63 has been altered from that of sec. 283 of Act XIV of 1882, we must hold that the order dismissing the application under Or. 21, r. 101 for default is not barred by the provisions of Art. 11A of the Limitation Act.

The appeal must accordingly be allowed. The decree of the Lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. We make no order as to costs of this Court and of the Lower Appellate Court which will be borne by each party.

Appellants,

v.

MAHARAJ BAHADUR

SINGH and ors.,

Respondents.

Sub-mortgage by deposit by mortgagee of mortgage deed—Discharge of mortgage by mortgagor—Indemnity, deed of, by mortgagee to mortgagor—Preliminary decree on sub-mortgage, appealed to Privy Council—Appeal dismissed for non-prosecution—Application for order absolute when barred—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 179—Payment of decree more than three years after, if covered by deed of indemnity.

The mortgagor of certain properties after having created an equitable sub-mortgage by depositing the mortgage deeds with a firm S. K. C. accepted payment of his mortgage dues and by a deed, dated 23rd April 1894, released the mortgaged properties from all claims under the mortgage and covenanted to indemnify the mortgagor from all losses, damages, actions, claims, etc., in respect of the mortgage deeds or any money owing or due thereunder or otherwise howsoever or for any act done by him the mortgagee in respect of the mortgage deeds. The firm of S. K. C. recovered a preliminary mortgage decree inter alia against the mortgagor on their sub-mortgage on 26th August 1905, against which the mortgagor appealed to the Privy Council. But before the appeal was ready for hearing, the mortgagor on 2nd February 1910 made payments to an assignee of the decree, who having acknowledged satisfaction, the appeal to the Privy Council was not further prosecuted and the appeal was dismissed for want of prosecution on 16th April 1910. The mortgagor on 9th September 1912 sued the mortgagee to recover the amount paid to the assignee of the decree on the basis of the deed of indemnity.

Held—That the decree of 26th August 1905 became unenforceable under Art. 179 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act of 1877 by proceedings commenced after 26th August 1908, and time did not run either from the date when the appeal to the Privy Council was dismissed for default or from the expiry of the six months given for redemption in the decree of 26th August 1905, but from 26th August 1905 the date of the decree.

ABDUL MAJID v. JAWAHIR LAL (1) and BATUK NATH v. MUNNI DEI (2) referred to.

That the payment of the decree on 2nd February 1910 was voluntary in the sense that the mortgagor could not have been compelled by any proceeding founded upon the decree to make the payment.

That in view of the wide terms of the deed of indemnity, the fact that the payment was voluntary did not preclude the mortgagor from demanding payment from the mortgagee of the amount which they paid to the decree-holder in order to rid the property of the incumbrance which had been created by the mortgagee depositing the title deeds with the firm of S. K. C.

This was an appeal against a judgment and two decrees, dated the 21st July 1916, of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal reversing a judgment and decree, dated the 12th August 1914, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Murshidabad.

The main question for determination in this appeal is whether under a contract, dated the 21st April 1894 and made between the predecessors in title of the Plaintiffs-Appellants and one Rai Dhanpat Singh Bahadur in the appeal represented by the first four Respondents the Appellants were entitled to be indemnified and if so to what extent by the said Respondents.

On the 8th March 1886 the predecessors of the Appellants who are referred to in the record as the Roys gave the said Rai Dhanpat Singh Bahadur a mortgage on certain valuable zamindari properties as security for a loan of Rs. 3,00,000 and interest thereon. On the 12th May 1887 they gave him a second mortgage thereon to secure an advance of Rs. 20,000 with interest and on the 12th May 1892 a third mortgage as security for a further advance of Rs. 15,000 and interest.

On the 3rd June 1893 Rai Dhanpat Singh Bahadur borrowed Rs. 70,000 from Raja Gokul Das and others who carried on business at Calcutta under the name and style of Shewaran Khoshal Chand and hereinafter referred to as the Firm and deposited with them as security for the loan the said three mortgage deeds. He also agreed to give and subsequently gave the Firm promissory notes (Hundis) as collateral security.

Early in 1894 Rai Dhanpat Singh brought two suits against the Roys on the three mortgages claiming Rs. 2,26,450 as the total balance due under them but he did not make the sub-mortgagees parties to the suit.

The Roys contested the suits but on the 21st April 1894 the parties entered into compromise whereby Rai Dhanpat Singh Bahadur agreed to accept Rs. 1,20,000 in full satisfaction of all his claims against the Roys on the three mortgagees as well as "under any other deed or any account whatsoever" and to give them an undertaking to indemnify them against any loss they might be put to owing to any claims made against them by anybody under the mortgagees "or otherwise howsoever or for any act done by him the said mortgagee with respect to the said deeds." The Roys paid the amount and Rai Dhanpat Singh Bahadur executed a deed, dated the 21st April 1894, in favour of the Roys embodying the terms of the settlement the material portion of which is set out in their Lordships' judgment.

The parties thereupon presented petitions to the Court praying that the suits be decreed as being amicably settled and the Plaintiffs' claims satisfied and a decree in each of the suits was accordingly made.

In order to pay Rai Dhanpat Singh Bahadur and for other purposes the Roys borrowed Rs. 2,00,000 from the Eastern Mortgage and Agency Company, Limited (hereinafter referred to as the Company), for which they executed in its favour a mortgage, dated the 23rd April 1894, of the properties comprised in the three mortgages.

On the 17th July 1896 Rai Dhanpat Singh Bahadur paid to the Firm Rs. 42,000 in part payment of the amount due on the said promissory notes. The firm in consideration of that payment gave Rai Dhanpat Singh Bahadur and the latter accepted a release from further liabilities on the part of the latter under the promissory notes but the release was subject to a condition which was stated in the document executed by the Firm in favour of Rai Dhanpat Singh Bahadur as follows:—

"This release to you is without prejudice to our rights to enforce our lien for the balance due under the said Hundis from the properties comprised in the said mortgages from Bhagabati Charan Roy and others or their assigns or any persons having or claiming any interest in the said properties. It is clearly understood between us that we do not hold you in any way liable for the said balance."

On the 11th May 1897 the said Firm brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Murshidabad against the Roys and the Company to enforce its claim as to the balance due on the said promissory notes. The Firm's case was that they were equitable sub-mortgagees and had priority over the mortgage of 1894 in favour of the Company and that they were entitled to enforce their claim on the properties comprised in the said three mortgages as well as against the Roys personally. The Roys and the Company contested the suit and Rai Dhanpat Singh Bahadur having died his heirs and legal representatives, the first four Respondents to the present appeal, were made Defendants by an order of the High Court. On the 28th February 1903 the Subordinate Judge delivered judgment in favour of the Firm and gave them the usual mortgage decree subject to the Company's mortgage for Rs. 27,223-4-9 including costs with interest thereafter until realisation at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. Against that decree the Firm and the Roys appealed separately to the High Court and on the 26th August 1905 that Court delivered judgment allowing the Firm's appeal with costs and dismissing the Roys' appeal with costs. In the result two decrees both dated the 26th August 1905 were drawn up. The one in the Firm's appeal was in lieu of the decree appealed from and ordered the Roys or the Company to pay the Firm within six months from that date Rs. 24,305 with interest from the date of suit until realisation at 6 per cent. per annum together with costs and interest thereon at the same rate, that the Firm's lien to have priority over the Company's mortgage and that in default of payment on the appointed day the properties comprised in the said three mortgages should be sold. The second decree was drawn up in the Roy's appeal. Against the said two decrees the Roys duly obtained from the High Court leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council and the record was printed and sent over to the Privy Council Office where the appeal was numbered 56 of 1910.

On the 28th June 1907 the Firm assigned their decrees for Rs. 23,000 to one Edward Hugh Bray who was thereupon made party to the said appeal to His Majesty in Council. On the 2nd February 1910 the Roys paid Mr. Bray Rs. 50,000 in full satisfaction thereof. Thereupon the Roys ceased to further prosecute their said appeal to His Majesty in Council and on the 6th April 1910 it was dismissed for want of prosecution. On the 15th November 1910 Mr. Bray filed an application certifying the payment made to him and praying for an order that the said decrees were fully satisfied. To these proceedings the first four Respondents were parties and though notices were duly served upon them no objection was taken by them. On the 24th May 1911 the Subordinate Judge made an order that "the decree be noted as finally disposed of in full satisfaction."

On the 10th September 1912 the Roys instituted the suit giving rise to this appeal in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Murshidabad. The Defendants were the first four Respondents who are in possession of the estate of the late Rai Dhanpat Singh Bahadur and are herein-after referred to as the Defendants. The fifth Respondent was made a Defendant as one of the mortgaged properties stood in her name. The Roys claimed that under the said deed, dated the 21st April 1894, they were entitled to be indemnified from the estate of the late Rai Dhanpat Singh Bahadur in respect of the said sum of Rs. 50,000 paid by them to Mr. Bray together with interest and costs and prayed for a decree against the Defendants for Rs. 70,000 with further interest and costs of the suit to be realised from the said estate.

The first Defendant-Respondent who was the son of the late Rai Dhanpat Singh Bahadur filed a written statement and Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 who were trustees to his estate filed another written statement. Defendant No. 2 a third trustee did not appear. Their defence so far as it is now material was that the payment made on the 2nd February 1910 by the Roys to Mr. Bray was a voluntary payment and that in any event the Plaintiffs were entitled to recover only Rs. 27,130 which was the amount claimed by the Firm in its suit and not any costs of the said litigation.

The Subordinate Judge settled thirteen issues of which the following are material.

(1) Was the payment made on the 2nd February 1910 by the Roys to Mr. Bray voluntary?

(2) Are the Defendants estopped from raising the first point by their failure to raise it in the proceedings on Mr. Bray's application to enter satisfaction?

(3) What amount, if any, are the Plaintiffs entitled to recover under the said deed?

On the 12th August 1914 the Subordinate Judge delivered judgment. He held that the execution of the decree in satisfaction of which the said payment was made was not barred on the 10th February 1910 and consequently it was not a voluntary payment and that as the Defendant neglected to raise the first point in the proceedings on Mr. Bray's said application they were estopped in this suit from raising it. He however held that the Roys ought not to have appealed against the said decree of the Subordinate Judge dated the 28th February 1903 and consequently they were not entitled to recover costs and interest incurred and accruing thereafter and that they were entitled to a decree for Rs. 27,223-4-9 with proportionate costs and interest on the decretal amount from the date of the decree until realisation.

SACHINDRA NATH ROY v. MAHARAJ BAHADUR SINGH.

A formal decree dated the 12th August 1914 was accordingly drawn up.

Against the said decree of the Subordinate Judge both parties appealed to the High Court at Calcutta and on the 21st July 1916 that Court delivered judgment allowing the Defendants' appeal and dismissing the Roys' appeal as well as their suit with costs in both Courts. The learned Judges upheld the Defendants' contention and held that the said payment was voluntary, and that the Defendants were not estopped from raising the point. Two decrees both dated the 21st July 1916 giving effect to the judgment were then drawn up.

Sir George Lowndes, K. C. (with Mr. J. M. Parikh) for the Appellants.—The point is that I paid Dhanpat Singh by borrowing from the Eastern Agency Company (whose agents were Gillanders). Decree on the equitable mortgagee was under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act and was assigned to Bray. I had to pay Bray and I sue to recover.

Even under the old law payment was not barred and still less under the new law. Under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, they had to apply within 6 months as per terms of contract and make decree absolute. See sec. 90.

I paid while the appeal was pending. I paid in February. Appeal was not dismissed till April. I was acting in 1910; the decision of Board in Batuk Nath v. Munni Dei (2) and Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (1) was in 1914. Act IX of 1908 has changed the law of limitation. An application under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act was not governed by Art. 179 of the Limitation Act. This was the Calcutta view. Only applications under the Civil Procedure Code was contemplated by Art. 178. There must really be a second application under sec. 89. They did not make a second application. Law in Calcutta was firmly settled that the three years' rule did not apply.

Purna Chandra v. Radha Nath (3).

Suppose Art. 179 did apply, then application must be made within three years of the effective date of the decree.

Munna Lal v. Sarat Chandra (4). Under new Act of 1908, Art. 182 does not apply at all.

Now clearly Art. 181 of Act IX of 1908 applies, Art. 182 does not apply.

Application now is for a new decree and not for an order absolute by way of execution. This right to apply for a decree did not come till the new Act came into force.

There are two other small points.

One is that there is no consideration as the suit was barred. I say he could keep the deeds and so I gave the money for consideration.

spondents.—This was never suggested in the pleadings.]

As to what "decree" means. See Rameshwar Singh v. Homeshwar Singh (5), Batuk Nath v. Munni Dei (2) and Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (1).

Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Respondents.—An application for sale by holder of mortgage decree has to be made under Art. 179 of Act XV of 1877 within three years. Batuk Nath v. Munni Dei (2) and Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (1).

The only question open to the other side now is limitation and on this question, the decision of the High Court, Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (1), is on all fours with the present case. Munna Lal v. Sarat Chandra (4). The date of decree is the point of time. Rameshwar Singh v. Homeshwar Singh (5). That was an application under Arts. 181 and 178 of old Act. There sec. 179 (b) did not apply.

[Mr. Lowndes.—But see top of p. 181.]

The next point is whether the change of law in 1908 affects this case assuming that the other side could add six months. Does that really affect the matter?

[LORD ATKINSON.—When this arrangement was made by the Company to pay off Rs. 50,000 no evidence was given whether Bray got the deeds or the Roys asked for them, no evidence as to who has the deeds now.]

My objection is that this was not raised at the hearing when it might have been cleared up.

[LORD ATKINSON.—When a holder of property pays money to get rid of an encumbrance, is it a voluntary payment, when he merely pays off an equitable charge on his property?]

Had Bray the deeds? Had the Roys the deeds at all in their mind? Both are questions of fact. North Staffordshire Ry. Co. v. Edge (6) and cases cited therein. There as here a belated attempt was made to raise the effect of certain rights.

Other side should prove that Bray had the title deeds.

Sir George Lowndes.—The words in deed of indemnity are "loss, damages, etc." They would cover anything Dhanpat Singh did. Question of voluntary and compulsory payment not essential. They would cover anything done in reason.

Sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act says that I am entitled to get back the deed. Het Ram v. Shadi Lal (7).

I have paid this which Dhanpat Singh actually got, it was his debt, substantial justice is on my side.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD ATKINSON.—The financial dealings between the several parties concerned out of which the appeals in this case have arisen are somewhat complicated. It is, however, necessary to examine them in order to understand clearly the points calling for decision. On the 8th March 1886, the 12th May 1887, and the 12th May 1892, the predecessors in title of the Appellants in this litigation, styled the Roys, borrowed from one Dhanpat Singh three sums of Rs. 3,00,000, Rs. 20,000 and Rs. 15,000 respectively, and secured the repayment thereof with interest at the rates stipulated by three mortgages bearing the above respective dates of certain immoveable property belonging to them, the Roys. These mortgages were presumably in the ordinary form, conveyances of the absolute interest in the property pledged with the usual provision for redemption, coupled with covenants by the mortgagors to pay the debt due under them. The Transfer of Property Act permits in Calcutta the creation of equitable mortgages by deposit of deeds. Accordingly Dhanpat Singh on the 3rd June, 1893, created at Calcutta an equitable mortgage of the property of the Roys, comprised in these mortgage deeds, by depositing these latter documents with a firm trading at Calcutta as Shewaran Khoshal Chand, hereinafter styled the firm, to secure the repayment of Rs. 70,000 lent by them to him, with interest till paid. It is not clear whether at this particular date the Roys had notice of this transaction. Early in the year 1894, Dhanpat Singh instituted two ordinary mortgagees' suits against the Roys to recover the amount secured by the three first-mentioned mortgages. The equitable mortgagees, the firm, were not made parties to these suits or either of them. The Roys contested these suits and ultimately, a settlement was come to whereby Dhanpat Singh accepted a sum of Rs. 1,20,000 in full satisfaction and discharge of the amount due to him for principal and interest on the three legal mortgages. The Roys had not this sum of Rs. 1,20,000 available.

They were in consequence obliged to raise the money to pay Dhanpat Singh the arranged sum of Rs. 1,20,000. They accordingly borrowed from the Eastern Mortgage Agency Company, hereinafter styled the Company, a sum of Rs. 2,00,000, and secured the repayment of it with interest by executing to this Company a mortgage, dated the 23rd April 1894, of all the property comprised in the three first-mentioned mortgages. By reason, apparently, of the existence of the equitable mortgage created by the deposit of the mortgage deeds, an expedient was adopted. A deed of even date with the mortgage, namely, the 23rd April 1894, was executed by Dhanpat Singh, by which after he, acknowledging the receipt of the sum stipulated for, released the lands and premises mentioned in the three mortgages from all claims, etc., under these instruments and protected the Roys by a covenant in the words following from all claims which might be made against them in respect of any of the matters therein mentioned. The covenant ran thus:—

"2. The mortgagee doth hereby for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, representatives and assigns, covenant with the mortgagors, their heirs, executors, administrators, representatives and assigns in manner following:—

"(a) That the mortgagee, his heirs, executors, administrators, representatives and assigns shall at all times hereafter keep the mortgagors, their heirs, executors, administrators, representatives and assigns, their and each of their estate and effects harmless and indemnified against all losses, damages, actions, claims, suits, demands and accounts in respect of the said three several hereinbefore recited deeds of mortgage, or any money owing or due thereunder or otherwise howsoever or for any act done by him, the said mortgagee, with respect to the said deeds.

"(b) That the mortgagee shall forthwith cause the said two suits, respectively numbered 75 and 301 of 1894, now pending in the Court of Subordinate Judge in the district of Murshidabad to be forthwith compromised on these terms and petitions to that effect filed accordingly."

The deed containing this covenant was duly registered on the day it bears date. The Plaintiff Dhanpat Singh in each of the two suits instituted by him lodged, in pursuance of the terms of settlement a petition praying that these suits might be disposed of according to the terms of the settlement which had been arrived at. The Court granted the prayer of this petition, and made in the first suit a decree dated the 5th May 1894, and in the second suit a decree dated the 7th May 1894, whereby it was in each suit respectively decreed that the suit having been amicably settled it should be disposed of, that the claim of the Plaintiff should be taken to have been satisfied, and that each party should bear his own costs.

On the 17th July, 1896, Dhanpat Singh paid to the firm on foot of the hundis he had made to them, Rs. 42,000, and procured from the firm a release from all further liability on all these hundis on the terms that this compromise was to be without prejudice to the Company's rights to enforce their lien against the properties comprised in the three mortgages.

On the 11th May 1897, the firm instituted a suit against the Roys and the Company in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Murshidabad to recover the sum due under their equitable mortgage, which latter they claimed had priority over the legal mortgage executed to the Company on the 23rd April 1894, and further, that they were entitled to enforce their claims against the properties comprised in the three original mortgage deeds deposited with them, and also against the Roys personally. The heirs and personal representatives of Dhanpat Singh, deceased, were by the order of the High Court made Defendants in the suit. They are the first four Respondents in the present appeals. The Roys and the Company contested this suit, and on the 28th February 1903, the Subordinate Judge delivered judgment in favour of the Plaintiff firm, holding that they, under their equitable mortgage were, as regards the Roys, entitled to the sum of Rs. 27,223-4-9 for principal interest and costs with interest at 6 per cent, till paid, subject to the mortgage to the Company of the 23rd April 1894, which he held had priority over the equitable mortgage of the firm, and made the decree usual in ordinary mortgage suits that the Roys should pay the sums found to be due, with 6 per cent. interest, within six months from the date of the decree, failing which the properties covered by the three first-mentioned mortgages should be sold subject to the lien of the Company.

Against this decree both the Roys and the firm appealed to the High Court of Fort William. The appeal of the Roys was dismissed with costs. The Court held that the mortgage of the Company had not priority over the equitable mortgage of the firm, that the appeal of the latter should be allowed, and made a decree declaring that the firm was entitled to a valid equitable charge on the lands covered by the three mortgages, and that in default of payment either by the Company or the Roys of what was due upon that security, the mortgaged property or a sufficient part of it should be sold to meet the Plaintiffs' claim, and that unless the parties should agree as to the amount due to the Plaintiffs, an account should be taken of what was due. No absolute order for sale in default of payment of the sum due was ever made on this decree. Against these two decrees the Roys obtained from the High Court liberty to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The Record was printed, No. 56, 1910, and sent to the office of the Privy Council. Meanwhile, however, the firm, by deed dated the 28th June, 1907, reciting the execution of all the deeds hereinbefore mentioned, the creation of the equitable mortgage, the granting of the several decrees made in the litigation which had taken place between the parties, and further, that the two decrees of the High Court dated the 26th August 1905, made in the appeals, Nos. 184 and 208 of 1903 respectively, were still unsatisfied, that there was due thereon to the firm the sum of Rs. 45,377-5-16 with interest calculated up to date, that the firm had agreed to assign the said decrees to one Edward Hugh Bray (party thereto) at the "price or sum" of Rs. 23,000, assigned to him the two aforesaid decrees dated the 26th August 1905, and all moneys now or hereafter to become due thereunder respectively and all benefit and advantage under the said decrees respectively, including the charge created on the lands and premises described in the schedule thereto, to hold the decrees and all other the premises thereby assigned or mentioned or intended so to be assigned unto the said Edward Hugh Bray, his executors, administrators and assigns, absolutely and for ever. This deed was duly registered.

This Edward Hugh Bray was a director of a Company which acted as agents for the Company, the mortgagees in the deed of the 23rd April 1894. The Roys desired to pay to Bray the sum of Rs. 50,000 due under the two decrees assigned to him. They apparently had not money at their command for that purpose, and accordingly they borrowed from the principal, the Company, to pay that Company's agent, Bray, this Rs. 50,000. By deed bearing date the 1st February 1910, made between the Roys and the Company, reciting that the Roys had requested the Company to lend them the sum of Rs. 50,000 to enable them to pay and satisfy the amount then due to Edward Hugh Bray under the two decrees of the 26th August 1905, which the Company agreed to do on having the repayment thereof with interest secured on the lands of the Roys therein mentioned, these lands were thereby mortgaged to the Company. The deed expressly stated these lands were subject to the encumbrance created by the two decrees of 26th August 1905, alleged to be vested in Edward Hugh Bray, of 8, Clive Street, Calcutta.

To carry out this arrangement the parties had recourse to, probably having regard to their conflicting interests, the worst and most dangerous of all economies. The three parties, the Roys, Bray and the Company employed the same solicitors, Messrs Morgan & Company, by which imprudence each party had imputed to him or them all the information dealing with the transaction which the common solicitor had derived from both the other parties. The payment of the Rs. 50,000 was made in this way. The Company drew a cheque in favour of Morgan & Company for Rs. 50,000. Morgan & Company endorsed this cheque: "to Babus Shyama Charan Roy, Parbati Charan Roy and Sachindra Nath Roy, or order," and these three endorsees in their turn endorsed it to "E. H. Bray, Esq., or order." The cheque was paid to Bray and he, having thus been paid, the Roys ceased further to prosecute the appeal to His Majesty in Council. On the 16th April 1910 the appeal was by an order, made in the usual course in the office of the Privy Council, dismissed for want of prosecution.

On the 15th November 1910, Bray filed an application in the Court of the Subordinate Judge certifying that these two decrees had been fully paid and praying for an order that they were fully satisfied. The first four Respondents got notice of this application and did not object. On the 24th May 1911, the Subordinate Judge made an order to the following effect: that "the decree be noted as finally disposed of in full satisfaction."

Sir George Lowndes for the Appellants contended that no absolute order on the decrees for sale having been obtained, the equitable mortgage was, under the 88th and 89th sections of the Transfer of

SACHINDRA NATH ROY v. MAHARAJ BAHADUR SINGH.

Property Act, 1882, still alive and did not merge in the decrees. He also assured the Board that at this period it was considered in Calcutta that the period of limitation under the Statute of Limitation, of 1877, ran when a decree was dismissed for want of prosecution, not from the date of the decision of the decree appeal against, but from that of the dismissal. Of course the Board accepts with the utmost confidence that assurance, but it is not the law. Two cases decided in the year 1914 establish this. The first is the case of Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (1) and the second, Batuk Nath v. Munni Dei (2). In the first the judgment of the Board was delivered by Lord Moulton. It was decided that under the Statute of Limitation Act, 1877, Sch. II, Art. 179, the period of three years named therein ran in such a case from the date of the decree appealed against and not from the date of the order to dismiss the appeal for want of prosecution. The ground on which the decision was based was thus stated by Lord Moulton: "The order (i.e., the formal order) dismissing the appeal for want of prosecution, did not deal judicially with the matter of the suit, and could in no sense be regarded as an order adopting or confirming the decision appealed from. It merely recognised authoritatively that the Appellant had not complied with the conditions under which the appeal was open to him, and that therefore he was in the same position as if he had not appealed at all." The period of limitation ran from the date of the decree. The decision in the second of the last-mentioned cases is to the same effect.

The next question to be considered is which of the two Limitation Acts, that of 1877 or that of 1908, applies to this case. That must, it appears to the Board, be determined by the condition in which the decrees stood when the latter Statute came into force on the 1st January 1909.

Sir George Lowndes contended that where a decree nisi for sale is made in a mortgage suit the period of limitation mentioned in the Act of 1877 is in effect three years plus six months the period given by the decree for redemption. Their Lordships cannot accept that view. The sale is merely something to be done under the decree. A certain time is fixed by the decree within which it is to be done, but the decree is operative from its date and it is the length of time during which it is operative that the Statute of Limitation looks to. The date of the decrees being the 26th August 1905, they became unenforceable by proceedings commenced after the 26th August 1908. Bray was paid the amount due upon the 2nd February 1910, one year and three months after the statutory period had elapsed, and over thirteen months after the 1st January 1909, when the latter Act had come into operation. There is no provision in this latter Statute so retrospective in its effect as to revive and make effective a judgment or decree which before that date had become unenforceable by lapse of time. The payment of these decrees by the Roys on the 2nd February 1910, was voluntary in the sense that they could not, by any legal proceedings founded upon the decrees in which these facts had been elicited and relied upon, have been compelled to make them.

The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was, on the 9th September 1912, instituted by the Roys in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, as above mentioned, against the representatives of Dhanpat Singh and others, claiming to recover under the deed of indemnity of the 23rd April 1894 the amount paid by the Roys to Bray, with interest thereon till paid, and other sums amounting in all to Rs. 27,000. The plaint is long and involved. It states fully, however, the creation by Dhanpat Singh of the equitable mortgage by the deposit with the firm of the three mortgage deeds and the transfer of the two decrees of the 26th August 1905 to Bray on the 23rd June 1907, and then avers that Bray was about to execute those decrees, and that "considering it was more advisable to amicably pay off the decretal debt than bear the cost of execution," the Roys borrowed a sum of Rs. 50,000 from the Company on a mortgage and paid the same to Bray for the satisfaction of the debt due upon the decrees. In para. 11 of the plaint it is submitted that under the deed of indemnity the Roys were entitled to recover the whole of the debt due to the firm and the costs of the suits relating to it, which the Roys were obliged to pay.

Maharaj Bahadur Singh, one of the Defendants, filed in reply to this plaint a written statement, raising many quite untenable defences to which it is unnecessary to refer. In its third paragraph he, however, avers that the suit of the Plaintiffs is barred by limitation in respect of the different sums of money sought to be recovered, and in its fifteenth paragraph further avers that even if the Roys had paid to Bray the sum alleged, it was a mere voluntary payment, and that the Plaintiffs were therefore not entitled to recover it from the Defendants, the representatives of Dhanpat Singh, deceased. The Defendant No. 2 also filed a written statement raising the same defences.

The Subordinate Judge held (1) that the claim of the Roys under the indemnity deed was not barred by limitation, that under the 83rd section of the Limitation Act the right to sue ran from the time they, the Plaintiffs, were damnified, which was the 2nd February 1910, when they paid Bray the Rs. 50,000; and (2) that it was too late for the Defendants to raise the defence that the payment was a mere voluntary payment and that therefore the Plaintiffs were entitled to recover the sums claimed. On both these points the High Court came to a different conclusion. They held that as the decrees of the 26th August 1905 had not been kept alive by obtaining an absolute order for sale the remedies upon them were barred by limitation, that the decrees were not enforceable and that the Defendants were not precluded from raising this point. They therefore allowed the appeal.

Their Lordships concur with the High Court in the two conclusions above-mentioned, but they differ from them as to the consequences which the High Court apparently thought, necessarily followed from these conclusions.

The words of the indemnity are very wide and far reaching. They provide that the Roys are to be indemnified from and against all losses, damages, actions and claims, and or for any act done by Dhanpat Singh with respect to the three mortgage deeds. It was perfectly open to the Plaintiffs to have replied to this plea that, though the decrees could not have been enforced against them by Bray, Dhanpat Singh had by his own act in depositing the deeds as a security with the firm, blistered, encumbered and lessened in value their equity of redemption in the property mortgaged by these deeds, and that they were under the words of this indemnity entitled to recover from his representatives what it had cost them, the Roys, to remedy the damage he had done to their property by paying off the encumbrance upon it which he had by his own acts created.

The difficulty, however, is not in discovering a principle of law entitling the Plaintiffs to recover, it is in finding evidence in the case to show that the principle is applicable. This is possibly due to the fact that the whole litigation was based on the two decrees and on those alone. If the task of those conducting the case for the Plaintiffs had been to elicit the irrelevant and leave the relevant hidden and obscure, they could not well have succeeded better. It seems incredible, but so it is, that there is not a particle of evidence written or parol as to what was done with the three mortgage deeds, by the deposit of which the encumbrance on which the two decrees of 20th August 1905, were based was created. It is not shown whether the firm delivered them to Bray when the decrees were assigned, to him, or whether Bray delivered them to the Roys when the decrees were paid, or whether they were delivered by Bray or by the Roys to the Company when the mortgage of the 1st February 1910 was executed and the Company's cheque endorsed over to the Roys. On these important points the Board is left to conjecture what would be the natural and probable course for prudent men in their own interest to take. But that is not all. Not a particle of evidence is elicited to prove the important statement in the plaint that Bray was about to execute the two decrees, and that the Roys thought it wiser to settle the decrees amicably than to incur the costs of a sale. If this were true the fact that the Roys had to borrow money from the Company to pay these decrees, even though they might have been mistaken as to their enforceability, would not alter the position. Their expenditure would still have been incurred to cure the injury Dhanpat Singh had done to them by pledging the mortgage deeds. This point has been raised before their Lordships for the first time, and the difficulty which the Board have in dealing with it illustrates forcibly the wisdom of the rule which prohibits the raising of new points involving questions of fact after the trial is over, when evidence of fact could have been given touching those questions had they been then raised. It was suggested that this question was raised before the High Court. That is a mistake. The passage in the judgment of the High Court on which that suggestion was founded runs as follows :--

"For the Defendants, Appellants, three arguments were addressed to us:—(1) That the payment by the Roys to Mr. Bray was voluntary, and so they could not recover it; (2) that the contract of indemnity was in fraud of the sub-mortgagee, Raja Gokul Das, and that the Plaintiffs being parties with Rai Dhanpat Singh Bahadur to that fraud were not entitled to recover the amount from their joint wrong-doer; and (3) that the payment was really a payment by the Eastern Mortgage and Agency Company and not by the Plaintiffs.

"The third argument has not been seriously pressed. There can be no doubt whatever that the Plaintiffs got credit for the amount of the decree as part of the cheque, of Rs. 50,000, which undoubtedly passed through their accounts."

The point here raised was that it was the Company who really paid Bray, and it was supposed to be answered by the fact that the Company's cheque was endorsed to the Roys.

To send the case back to the Court of the Subordinate Judge to ascertain what has been done with these mortgage deeds, what was the arrangement made in respect to them, and who has got possession of them, would involve considerable expense, and might afford an almost too tempting opportunity for the concoction of evidence. Their Lordships are driven, in order to deal with the case, to assume that matters were conducted in a business way, and that what would have occurred had they been so conducted did in fact occur. In the ordinary course of business the mortgage deeds would have been delivered by the firm to Bray when the decrees were assigned, they would have been delivered by Bray to the Roys or more probably to the Company to fortify their legal mortgages when Bray was paid off. Their Lordships will therefore assume that they were so delivered. It would be the natural consequence of the proved acts of the parties. As has been already pointed out, the fact that the Roys were obliged to borrow money on mortgage to get rid of the encumbrance placed upon their property by the act of Dhanpat Singh does not prejudice in any way their rights under the covenant to indemnify. The expenditure to get rid of the encumbrance was equally incurred at their expense, but the amount of that expenditure must be measured by the sum paid to Bray on the 2nd February 1907, with interest, as it apparently has been measured by the decree of the Subordinate Judge dated the 12th August 1914. Their Lordships are, for these reasons, of opinion that this appeal should be allowed, the judgment of the High Court reversed and the aforesaid decree of the 12th August 1914, affirmed, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. But as the grounds upon which they base their judgment were not put forward in the High Court at all and for the first time mentioned before this Board, the respective parties must each bear their own costs in the Courts in India and of the appeal to His Majesty in Council.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION

No. 18 of 1921.

SANDERSON, C. J.

RICHARDSON, J.

1921,

30, November

SAILENDRA MOHAN

DUTT, Appellant,

v.

DHARANI MOHAN

ROY, Respondent.

High Court, Original Side, Taxation Rules, Chap. 36, r. 32, jurisdiction of Court or Judge to hear application and pass orders regarding payment of Counsel's fees as between Attorney and client, when no reference is made by the Taxing Officer under r. 9 - R. 6, applicability of, to fees to Counsel - Proviso to r. 32, if applies to and controls the jurisdiction and discretion of the Court or Judge - Proper time for making the application.

In a certain suit in the High Court, Original Side, the Judge allowed a change of Attorneys on behalf of the Defendant on condition that he should pay his former Attorney a specified sum, subject to re-adjustment after taxation. Upon taxation of the costs a question arose with regard to four fees of Counsel and the Taxing Officer said that he could not allow those fees without an order of Court as required by r. 32 of the taxation rules. Thereupon an application was made to the Judge by the said former Attorney for an order that in the taxing of his costs as between Attorney and client the Taxing Officer might do so irrespective of the taxation rules as regards payment of Counsel's fees. The learned Judge rejected the application on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to make the order asked for :

Held—That the fact that the matter was not raised by means of a reference by the Taxing Officer does not deprive the Judge of his jurisdiction under r. 32. The Judge had jurisdiction to deal with the application and to decide the matter on its merits. The proviso in r. 32 requiring client's written authority or ratification for payment of the fees applies to the jurisdiction and discretion of the Taxing Officer only and does not control the jurisdiction and discretion of the Court or a Judge. The proviso applies to a case when the Court or a Judge has not ordered or does not order otherwise. Even assuming that r. 6 must be taken to refer to Counsel's fees, although such fees are not specifically mentioned therein, the rule is a direction to the Taxing Officer only and does not limit or control the jurisdiction of the Court or a Judge given by r. 32.

It is open to the learned Judge to consider the question as to the proper time and procedure at and in which such an application should be made to him.

This was an appeal preferred on the 23rd of February 1921 against the order of Mr. Justice Greaves, dated the 2nd February 1921.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. N. N. Sircar and Mr. B. K. Ghosh, Counsel, appeared for the Appellant.

Sir B. C. Mitter and Mr. A. K. Roy, Counsel, appeared for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by Sailendra Mohan Dutt against the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves. Sailendra Mohan Dutt was acting as the Attorney for one Dharani Mohan Roy who was the Defendant in the suit and by an order of the 7th of April 1920 there was a change of Attorneys; the material part of the order being, "It is ordered that upon the Defendant paying to the said Mr. S. M. Dutt the sum of rupees six thousand on account of costs due to him in this suit including the costs of this application to be taxed by the Taxing Officer of this Court as between Attorney and client and upon the said Mr. S. M. Dutt undertaking to refund any excess amount that may appear to have been paid to him after taxation of such costs as aforesaid and the Defendant by his said Attorneys Messrs. Kally Nath Mitter and Sarvadhicary undertaking to pay to the said Mr. S. M. Dutt any sum that may be found due to him upon taxation in excess of the said sum of rupees six thousand and the sum already advanced to him, the said Messrs. Kally Nath Mitter and Sarvadhicary be appointed the Attorneys for the Defendant." Upon taxation of the costs a question arose with regard to four fees of learned Counsel; those four fees are mentioned in para. 4 of the affidavit of Gangadhar Bose at p. 37 of the paper-book. What happened with regard to the question is stated as follows :—"The said Assistant Taxing Officer, Mr. S. M. Roy referred the matter informally to the Taxing Officer and on the 9th day of September 1920 the said Taxing Officer after hearing Messrs. Kally Nath Mitter and Sarvadhicary and Mr. S. M. Dutt expressed his opinion that in view of r. 32 of the Taxation Rules he could not allow those fees without an order of Court as required by the said Rule." Thereupon, an application was made to the learned Judge dated the 14th of December 1920 and notice was given to the effect that an application would be made on the part of Mr. Sailendra Mohan Dutt, the former Attorney of Dharani Mohan Roy, the Defendant in the suit for an order that in the taxing of his costs as between Attorney and client the Taxing Officer of this Hon'ble Court may do so irrespective of the Taxation Rules as regards payment of Counsel's fees.

The learned Judge did not enquire into the merits of the case but disposed of it on a preliminary objection raised by the Respondent that the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to make the order asked for.

The learned Judge held that Chap. XXXVI, r. 6, did not apply to fees to Counsel and decided the case upon his construction of r. 32 of Chap. XXXVI, holding that he had no jurisdiction to allow the fees in question and that they could only be allowed by the Taxing Officer upon the production of a letter signed by the client authorising or ratifying the same and that no such letter had been produced.

On behalf of the Appellant it was argued that Chap. XXXVI, r. 32, overrides all the other rules in Chap. XXXVI so far as fees to Counsel are concerned, that the general rule to be observed by the Taxing Officer is contained in r. 3, but that r. 32 is the "special provision" as to the taxation of Counsel's fees, and that the learned Judge had jurisdiction to hear and determine the application under r. 32 on its merits. On the other hand, in support of the judgment it was first argued that the application should have been made when the change of Attorneys was made on the 7th April 1920.

In my judgment this might be a matter which the Judge on hearing the application on the merits might take into consideration, but the fact that the application was not made on the 7th April 1920 cannot take away the learned Judge's jurisdiction to hear the application; it is open to the learned Judge to consider the question as to the proper time and procedure at and in which such a matter should be brought before him. It was then urged that the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to hear the application under r. 32 unless a reference had been made by the Taxing Officer under r. 9.

In my judgment the fact that this matter was not raised by means of a reference by the Taxing Officer does not deprive the learned Judge of his jurisdiction under r. 32. It was then argued on behalf of the Respondent that under r. 32 the Judge's jurisdiction is limited: in other words that the learned Judge has power to increase the scale, and to direct that the maximum figure, specified in the scale in respect of the matter in question, should not apply; but that even if the scale were increased by the Judge's orders the proviso to r. 32 would apply.

For the purpose of illustration of the argument I will take a concrete instance, and I will refer to the first item in the table: according to the table the maximum fee for a leading Counsel on an appeal against an order is 15 gold mohurs. It was argued on behalf of the Respondent that if a fee of 20 gold mohurs had been marked on the brief of learned Counsel in respect of an appeal against an order, this could only be allowed by the Taxing Officer if (1) a letter signed by the client authorising or ratifying the payment of the fee were produced, and (2) if a Judge's order sanctioning an increase in the scale were produced to the Taxing Officer. In other words it was argued that the rule merely gives the Court or a Judge power to increase the scale and that even when the scale is increased by a Judge's order the above-mentioned letter signed by the client must be produced.

R. 32 was made in 1914, and it was stated by the learned Counsel for the Respondent that it was well-known that the rule was made because of complaints, which had arisen as to excessive fees of Counsel.

The rule was made before my time, but the terms of the rule lead me to think that there is little doubt but that the learned Counsel's statement was correct: the object of the rule, judging by its terms, seems to me to have been to limit the jurisdiction and discretion of the Taxing Officer as regards Counsel's fees, and to provide that under no circumstances can the Taxing Officer allow any fees to Counsel, higher than those set out in the table, unless an order of the Court or a Judge is obtained. No doubt the fees mentioned in the table were considered to be reasonable and sufficient in all ordinary cases and it was therefore hoped that the rule would result in Counsel's fees being kept within reasonable limits. It was therefore provided, so far as the Taxing Officer was concerned, that he could not go beyond those specified fees. At the same time a proviso was added that even with regard to the fees allowed by the table the Taxing Officer, even when dealing with a taxation as between Attorney and client, was not to allow the difference between the maximum fee allowed by the table and that actually allowed as between party and party if in his opinion such difference constituted an excessive fee unless a letter signed by the client authorising or ratifying the payment thereof was produced. It is however a reasonable construction of the rule, in my judgment that while it was intended thus to restrict and limit the jurisdiction and discretion of the Taxing Officer as regards fees to Counsel, it was at the same time intended to preserve the jurisdiction and discretion of the Court or a Judge in this respect unfettered in order that the Court or a Judge should have power to deal with exceptional cases as is shown by the insertion of the words "unless otherwise ordered by the Court or a Judge" in the first part of the rule.

In my judgment the proviso in r. 32 applies to the jurisdiction and discretion of the Taxing Officer only and does not control the jurisdiction and discretion of the Court or a Judge. In other words the proviso applies to a case when the Court or a Judge has not ordered or does not order otherwise. It was further argued that r. 6 of Chap. 36 applies to this matter. It seems to me obvious having regard to its terms that r. 6 was based upon the provisions of the English rule [Or. 65, r. 27 (29)]: that rule includes the words "special fees to Counsel." Those words are omitted from Chap. 36, r. 6 and it was argued for the Appellant that the framers of these rules intended that as far as the Taxing Officer was concerned the matter of Counsel's fees should be controlled entirely by the provision of r. 32.

The words at the beginning of r. 32 "notwithstanding any other provision in the rules" would point to there being some other rule relating to Counsel's fees. A sufficient meaning may be given to these words by reference to r. 3, which provides "The Taxing Officer shall, in the absence of any special provision in these rules, regulate the taxation of charges for retaining and employing Counsel, as nearly as may be, by the practice of the Supreme Court in England, reference being had to any difference which may exist between the two countries in the relative value and use of money." But even assuming that r. 6 must be taken to refer to Counsel's fees, although such fees are not specifically mentioned therein, the rule is a direction to the Taxing Officer only and in my judgment does not limit or control the jurisdiction of the Court or a Judge, given by r. 32.

SAILENDRA MOHAN DUTT v. DHARANI MOHAN ROY.

In my judgment, therefore, the learned Judge had jurisdiction to deal with the application and to decide the matter on its merits. I desire to make it clear that anything I have said is not to be taken as an opinion on the merits of the question. No enquiry has as yet been made with respect thereto. My decision is merely that the learned Judge had jurisdiction to hear the application on the merits. I am therefore not pressed by the argument of the learned Counsel for the Respondent that the salutary rule laid down in r. 6 will be abrogated by our decision. The learned Judge, who hears the application on its merits will consider all the facts relating to the case and when deciding the matter will no doubt take into consideration the well-known principles applicable thereto.

It was further argued for the Respondent that the learned Judge would not go into the question of amount unless upon a reference or a review. In my judgment, there is no weight in that argument, for if the question of amount does become material on the application, the learned Judge will be able, if he thinks right so to do, to refer the question of amount to the Taxing Officer. In my judgment, therefore, this appeal should be allowed, the order of the learned Judge should be set aside, and both the learned Counsels agreeing that this is the proper course, the matter is to be remanded to a learned Judge on the Original Side for a decision on the merits.

The Appellant will have the costs of the appeal; the cost of the proceedings before my learned brother Greaves, J., will be in the discretion of the Judge who hears the matter on remand.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 2627 of 1919.

SWARNA KUMAR GHOSH,

Defendant No. 7,

Appellant,

v.

WOODROFFE, J.

B. B. GHOSH, J.

1922,

PRAHLAD CHANDRA

SARKHEL, one of the Plaintiffs and ors.,

Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 179—Covenant in a permanent lease that the lessee or his representatives should not transfer without the lessor's permission and reserving a right of pre-emption in favour of the lessors, validity of—Such covenant, if void as offending against the rule of perpetuity.

In a certain permanent lease there was a condition that if the lessee or any of his representatives intended to transfer the whole or any portion of the lease, the transfer would be made in favour of the lessors for proper price, that the lessee would not be able to transfer in favour of a third party without the lessors' permission, or wishes, that in the case of transfer to a co-sharer of the lessee, lessors' permission would not be necessary, and that in case of any act against the aforesaid conditions, the said act would be invalid:

Held—That the covenant was void as offending against the rule of perpetuity, and was not therefore binding on the lessee.

This was an appeal preferred on the 19th of December 1919 against the decree of Babu Nagendra Nath Ghosh, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah Bakarganj, dated the 4th of September 1919, affirming the decree of Babu Banku

SWARNA KUMAR GHOSH v. PRAHLAD CHANDRA SARKHEL.

Behari Chatterjee, Munsif, 1st Court at Perojpur, dated the 20th of January 1919.

One Iswar Chandra obtained a lease (howla settlement) of some homestead and agricultural lands under a pottah and a kabuliyat. The pottah and the kabuliyat contained a covenant to the effect that if the lessee or any of his representatives intended to transfer the whole or any portion of the lease, the transfer would be made in favour of the lessors for proper price, that the lessee would not be able to transfer in favour of a third party without the lessors' permission or wishes, that in the case of transfer to a co-sharer of the lessee, lessors' permission would not be necessary, and that in case of any act against the aforesaid conditions the said act would be invalid. Iswar Chandra's sons transferred the lands to a third party, one Swarna Kumar Ghosh under a kobala, though the heirs of the lessors offered to purchase the lands for proper price. As the transfer to Swarna Kumar was made in contravention of the covenant of the pottah and kabuliyat, the said heirs of the lessors instituted the suit (out of which the present appeal arose) for recovery of possession on declaration that the kobala was null and void and in the alternative prayed for specific performance of the contract to sell the lands to them according to the aforesaid clause in the pottah and kabuliyat. The Court of first instance held that the covenant, not being in absolute restraint of alienation, was valid and decreed the suit declaring the kobala as null and void and directing the vendors to execute a kobala in favour of the Plaintiffs, but disallowing the prayer for khas possession. The purchaser preferred an appeal from the said decree. The lower Appellate Court held that under sec. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act, the condition or limitation, being for the benefit of the lessor or those claiming under him, the condition or limitation restraining alienation would not be void and sec. 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was also in Plaintiff's favour, and that the purchaser had notice of the restriction which was a covenant running with the land and accordingly dismissed the appeal. The purchaser thereupon preferred the present second appeal to the High Court.

Babu Abinash Chandra Guha for the Appellant.—The covenant in the lease relating to assignment consists of an affirmative clause, namely, that, if the leasehold interest is to be transferred, the lessee or his representatives shall be bound to transfer it to the lessor for consideration, coupled with a negative clause to the effect that the lessee or his representatives shall not transfer the same to any other person without the permission of the lessor. The Plaintiffs, who are the successors of the original lessor, sue for khas possession of the leasehold lands on the ground of breach of the negative covenant, or, failing that, for specific performance of the affirmative one. The Courts below have rightly held that, inasmuch as no right of re-entry was reserved in the lease in case of a breach of the negative covenant the Plaintiffs are not entitled to khas possession. Those Courts have, however, decreed the Plaintiffs' alternative prayer for specific performance. This, I submit, is erroneous. For, in the first place, the affirmative covenant is void as being obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities. Then, the covenant is not binding either on the Defendants Nos. 1 to 6, who are the sons and successors of the original lessee or on my client, the Defendant No. 7, who is the assignee of those Defendants. And the fact that my client purchased with notice of that covenant is immaterial. Nobin Chandra

SWARNA KUMAR GHOSH v. PRAHLAD CHANDRA SARKHEL.

Soot v. Nabab Ali Sarkar (1). Lastly, although a covenant not to assign without the lessor's licence may run with the land, a covenant to assign in favour of the lessor does not.

[B. GHOSE, J.—Nobin Chandra Soot's case (1) was not one between lessor and lessee?]

No, but the same principles would, I submit, apply as between lessor and lessee as well.

[B. GHOSE, J.—The latest English case on the subject between lessor and lessee is Worthing Corporation v. Heather (2).]

Their Lordships then stopped Babu Abinash Chandra Guha and called upon the Respondents to reply.

Babu Mahendra Nath Ray (with him Babu Nilkanta Ghosh) for the Respondents.—The covenant in question is perfectly valid and binding on the Defendants. Refers to sec. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act and sec. 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Besides, the covenant merely reserves a right of pre-emption in favour of the lessor, and to such a covenant it has been held that the rule against perpetuities does not apply. Karim Baksh v. Phula Bibi (3).

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal arising out of a suit brought for a declaration that a certain kobala in favour of Defendant No. 7, who is the contesting Defendant, and executed by Defendants Nos. 1 to 6 in 1323 is invalid, and that the same should be set aside.

The first Court decreed the suit against Defendants Nos. 1 to 7 and on appeal it was held that the appeal failed. We should also mention that besides prayer for a declaration, the plaintiff also asked for specific performance of a contract for sale.

Before us in appeal by Defendant No. 7, three points have been urged. First of all, that the covenant is bad which is referred to in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, namely, that if the lessee or any of his representatives intend to transfer the whole or any portion of the lease, the transfer would be made in favour of the lessors for proper price, that the lessee would not be able to transfer in favour of a third party without lessors' permission or wishes, that in the case of transfer to a co-sharer of the lessee, lessors' permission would not be necessary, that in case of any act against the aforesaid conditions, the said act would be invalid.

It was contended that this covenant was bad as offending against the rule regarding perpetuity. Secondly, if the covenant were a good one, it is not a covenant running with the land, and thirdly, in any event, it could not be enforced against the Appellant as he was an assignee of the lessee who entered into the covenant. It is unnecessary to consider the second and the third of these grounds, for, we think the appeal succeeds upon the first ground. We have been invited to consider in this connection certain cases which have been decided by the Allahabad High Court upon the law of pre-emption. It is not clear whether the cases are relevant but in any event it is observed that these cases of pre-emption stand on their own peculiar law. In the present case we think it is clear that the covenant offends against the rule of perpetuity, and the appeal succeeds and the suit is dismissed with costs.

The Defendant No. 7 will be entitled to his costs from the Plaintiffs in the first Court and in the lower Appellate Court

Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 16, r. 4—Sale of immoveable property in execution of an order for payment of expenses of witness, legality of. Sec. 36, scope and effect of.

In a certain suit the Plaintiff was ordered to pay a certain sum as expenses for one of his witnesses. The order was executed and certain immoveable property of the Plaintiff sold in execution. The present suit was instituted for a declaration that the sale of the immoveable property was without jurisdiction and illegal:

Held—That the sale of the immoveable property in execution of the order was illegal. Or. 16, r. 4 is not to be treated as a short and summary procedure for realisation of the expenses of a witness in addition to other modes of execution of orders under the provisions of sec. 36 of the Code. That section does not make any order capable of execution which was not so before. The section only means that the procedure prescribed for execution of decrees shall apply to execution of such orders as can be executed under the Code. There being a specific provision in that behalf in Or. 16, r. 4, the amount ordered to be paid ought to have been levied in that manner, and the immoveable property of the debtor could not have been put up to sale.

This was an appeal preferred on the 10th November 1919 against a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Chittagong (Babu Kumudini Kanta Roy), dated the 14th July 1919, affirming a decree of the Munsif at Patiya (Babu Jitendra Nath Sen), dated the 26th March 1918.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen for the Appellant.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy, Paresh Ch. Sen and Probhat Ch. Dutt for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that the sale held in execution of an order was without jurisdiction and illegal and for other reliefs.

It appears that the Plaintiff who is the Appellant before us, cited Rahaman Ali (the Respondent), as a witness in another suit, and the Court directed the Plaintiff to pay him Rs. 15 as his expenses. Rahaman Ali executed that order and in execution put up certain immoveable property of the Plaintiff to sale and the property was purchased by the Defendant No. 2.

The Courts below overruled the contention of the Plaintiff that the sale of the immoveable property was illegal and the Plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

It is contended that under Or. 16, r. 4, C. P. C., the Court, in default in payment, may order the expenses of a witness to be levied by attachment and sale of only the moveable property of the party obtaining the summons.

The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that Or. 16, r. 4 provides only a short and summary procedure for realisation of the expenses of a witness summoned to appear before a Court, leaving the other provisions of the Code unaffected.

MD. WARISH SADAGAR c. RAHAMAN ALI MEAH.

ed thereby. Reliance was placed by the learned Subordinate Judge as also by the learned Pleader for the Respondents before us upon the provisions of sec. 36 of the Code.

We do not think, however, that that section makes any order capable of execution which was not so before. All that it lays down is that the provisions of the Code relating to the execution of decrees shall so far as they are applicable, be deemed to apply to execution of orders, which, we think, means that the procedure prescribed for execution of decrees shall apply to execution of such orders as can be executed under the Code. There being a specific provision in that behalf contained in Or. 16, r. 4, the amount ordered to be paid by the Court, we think, ought to have been levied in that manner and that the immoveable property of the debtor could not have been put up to sale.

It is contended on behalf of the Respondents that there is nothing to show that the initial expenses were deposited under r. 2 by the Plaintiff-Appellant and that r. 4 therefore cannot apply as it applies only to cases where the sum paid into Court is not sufficient to cover the expenses of the remuneration of the witness.

But it was not suggested in either of the Courts below that the initial expenses were not deposited and neither of the Courts below was invited to go into the question; and we cannot presume that the initial expenses which r. 2 lays down shall be paid, were not, as a matter of fact, paid.

We are accordingly of opinion that the order of the Court below should be set aside and the suit decreed. There shall be a declaration in favour of the Plaintiff that the sale was illegal and did not affect the interest of the Plaintiff.

Each party to bear his own costs throughout.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 196—Sanction of Local Government—Officer of Government over whose signature sanction should issue—Defective sanction and illegality of proceedings based thereon—Cognizance—Jurisdiction of Magistrate making report to Government for sanction to take cognizance.

The sanction of the Local Government required by sec. 196, Cr. P. C. must be conveyed in an order signed by the Chief Secretary. Any such order signed by the Deputy Secretary for the Chief Secretary is not in form and the proceedings based thereon are liable to be quashed.

A Magistrate making a report to the Local Government for obtaining the sanction is not incompetent to take cognizance of the case on the ground that he has taken a part in the initiation of the proceedings.

This was a rule granted on the 22nd April 1922 against the proceedings under sec. 294A of the I. P. C., pending against the Petitioners in the Court of the Additional Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Chittagong.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal, Manmatha Nath Mukherjee, Tarakeswar Pal Chowdhury, Juan Chunder Roy and Lalit Mohan Sanyal for the Petitioner.

Mr. Orr for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

WALMSLEY, J.—The Petitioner has been placed on his trial upon a charge under sec. 294A of the Indian Penal Code.

MD. OZIULLAH v. BENI MADHAB CHOWDHURY.

The Police reported the facts upon which the charge is based, and Mr. Burrows as Additional District Magistrate submitted a report to Government for the purpose of obtaining the sanction required by sec. 196, Cr. P. C., and the authority was conveyed in a letter issued from the Chief Secretary's Office, and signed by Mr. A. Cassells for Chief Secretary. A Police Officer then made a complaint to Mr. Burrows, and the Petitioner was summoned. On the day fixed for hearing Mr. Burrows transferred the case to another Magistrate.

On these facts two objections are based. The first is that Mr. Burrows was not competent to take cognizance of the case at all, because he had taken a part in initiating the proceedings. The second is that the authority is defective because the letter is signed by Mr. Cassells, and not by the Chief Secretary himself.

I cannot see any merit in the first objection, save to the extent that Mr. Burrows would have been well-advised to direct some other Magistrate to receive the complaint, instead of transferring the case for trial after issuing process.

The second objection is extremely technical, but I think that effect must be given to it.

Under sec. 196, Cr. P. C. the complaint must be made by order of or under authority from the Local Government. The Evidence Act lays down the conditions under which the Court may accept a mere letter as proof that the order has been issued or the authority conferred by the Local Government. Under sec. 79 it must draw certain presumptions, and if Mr. Stephenson had himself signed the letter, the order would have been proved. When it was argued in the case of Apurba Krishna Bose v. Emperor (1), that the head of the Local Government, then the Lieutenant-Governor, ought to have signed the order, it was said that he "must necessarily, and ordinarily does communicate his orders through his accredited and gazetted Officers," but in that case the sanction had been signed by the Chief Secretary. That decision therefore has no bearing on the present case, for here the letter is signed by Mr. Cassells for the Chief Secretary. Mr. Cassells was at the time Deputy Secretary, according to the civil list, but he did not claim for himself any official position: he merely signed on behalf of the Chief Secretary. In these circumstances I think it must be held that there is no legal proof that the Local Government has ordered or authorized the prosecution. No presumption arises as to Mr. Cassells's capacity to sign the letter, and he could not certify the order on behalf of Mr. Stephenson, whose own capacity was that of a delegate.

The result is that the rule is made absolute, and the proceedings quashed; the Petitioner will be discharged from his bail.

SUHWARDY, J.—I agree. The first objection is that on general principles the Additional District Magistrate should not have taken cognizance of the case, as he had himself taken part in the initiation of the proceedings. It is argued that if a Magistrate in the position of the Additional District Magistrate takes cognizance of a case, the provisions of secs. 202 and 203, Cr. P. C. which empower a Magistrate to dismiss a complaint or enquire into its truth become futile and meaningless. I do not think there is any substance in this argument. As has been observed by Carnduff, J., in the case of Lakhai v. Emperor (2), there is no bar prescribed by the Code of Criminal Procedure to a Magistrate in such a position receiving a complaint whereas sec. 556

(1) 1 L. R. 35 Cal. 141 (1907).

(2) 14 C. W. N. 589 (1910).

MD. OZIULLAH v. BENI MADHAB CHOWDHURY.

may render him incompetent to try it. Moreover sec. 190 (c), C. P. C. gives express jurisdiction to a Magistrate to take cognizance of an offence even "upon his own knowledge" in which event, it is clear, secs. 202 and 203, Cr. P. C. are of as little avail as in the present case.

With reference to the second ground I agree in holding that the sanction required by sec. 196, Cr. P. C. has not been properly proved in this case. That section demands a sanction by the Local Government. The sanction in this case is contained in a letter which is headed "From H. L. Stephenson, Esq., C.S.I., C.I.E., Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal" and signed "A. Cassells for Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal." "This order of the Government sanctioning the present prosecution has to be proved according to the provisions of sec. 78 of the Evidence Act, which requires that an order of the Local Government may be proved by the record certified by the head of that department. The original letter is not on the record but there is a copy which is defective and does not appear to be a certified copy under sec. 76 of the Evidence Act. Besides, the letter does not purport to have been signed or certified by the head of the department to attract the presumption arising under sec. 79 of the Act. Had Mr. Cassells issued the letter in the official capacity he held, I doubt if it would not have then been in order as all orders of the Government are issued through its accredited Officers. We do not know and no evidence has been given to prove what authority Mr. Cassells had to sign for Mr. Stephenson. I am not sure if the prosecution cannot prove that proper sanction has been accorded by Government dehors the letter under consideration, but no such material being before us, we have no alternative but to quash the proceedings based on a document which does not satisfy the requirements of law.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 494 (n)—Order upon Public Prosecutor's application for withdrawal—Court must give its reasons in the order.

The order upon an application for withdrawal made by the Public Prosecutor under sec. 494 (a), Cr. P. C. is passed by the Court in its judicial capacity and must contain its reasons so that the High Court may be in a position to say whether the Court's discretion has been properly exercised.

UMESH CHUNDER ROY v. SATISH CHUNDRA ROY (1) referred to.

This was a Rule against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Sudar Dacca (Babu A. K. Banerjee), dated the 25th November 1920, discharging under sec. 494, Cr. P. C., the accused, Opposite Party, an application for revision of which order was rejected by the Sessions Judge of Dacca (Mr. C. Bartley), on 8th January 1921.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Atindra Nath Mukherjee (for Moulvi A. K. Fazlul Huq) for the Opposite Party.

JAGAT CHANDRA ROY v. KALIMUDDI SARDAR

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This rule is directed against an order discharging 9 accused persons, Opposite Parties, in a case brought against them under the provisions of sec. 147, I. P. C. The order of discharge followed upon an application made by the Public Prosecutor for permission to withdraw from the prosecution of these accused persons and upon the consent of the Court given to that application. In the case of Umesh Chunder Roy v. Satish Chundra Roy (1), it has been held that in according or withholding sanction to an application for withdrawal made by the Public Prosecutor under the provisions of sec. 494 (a) the Court acts in a judicial capacity, and for such order so judicially made the Court must give and record its reasons so that the High Court may be in a position to say whether the discretion vested in the Court has been properly exercised. In the present case for the order giving sanction to the Public Prosecutor's application for permission to withdraw no reasons have been given. But from the subsequent proceedings we are enabled to gather that the main reason or indeed the only reason for the withdrawal from this prosecution was that on a previous trial in connection with the riot in question six persons had already been convicted and punished, being sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. It appears that the riot was of a somewhat serious nature resulting in some 28 injuries upon seven persons; the riot, again, it being said, having arisen out of the opposition of certain persons to what were thought to be innovations in connection with certain religious ceremonies celebrated by the complainant. At the time of the trial of the persons previously convicted, it is stated that the present 9 accused were abscond-

ing. The conviction of the first six persons was had on the 7th August 1920, while the present accused, Opposite Parties, surrendered or were arrested on various dates extending from 7th July 1920 to the 15th October of that year. Whether these 9 accused were or were not absconding it is not for us to say, but it is obviously not advisable that a premium should be placed upon absconding and it cannot be held that the imprisonment of the first six is to be regarded as a vicarious atonement for the sins, if any, committed by the present accused, Opposite Parties.

We set aside the order of consent made by the trying Magistrate under the provisions of sec. 494 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the discharge consequent thereupon, and we direct that the present accused, Opposite Parties, be replaced upon their trial and that the case be dealt with and disposed of in accordance with law.

RAMKISHORE and

v.JAINARAYAN and
ors., Respondents.

Hindu law, customary law at variance with, if enforceable—Dhusars of Gurgaon, emigrating to the Central Provinces—Adoption of orphan, if valid.

It is beyond question that, according to the law of the Mitakshara, as recognised by the School of Benares, an orphan cannot be adopted. It is also beyond doubt that in some parts of Northern India particularly in Districts now in the Punjab or adjacent to the Punjab, the strict rules of the Mitakshara, as recognised by the School of Benares, have not been followed by some castes, tribes and families of Hindus, and that customs which are at variance with that law have for long been consistently followed and acted upon and that when such customs are established, they, and not the strict rules of the Mitakshara with which they are at variance, are to be applied. They are found principally amongst the agricultural classes, but they are also to be found among classes which are not agricultural.

(1) 22 C. W. N. 69 (1917).

RAMKISHORE v. JAINARAYAN.

The Dhusars of Gurgaon are governed in matters of adoption not by the orthodox Hindu law but by customary law: and the adoption of orphans by Dhusars being consistent with that customary law is valid.

This was an appeal against a judgment and decree, dated the 2nd October 1917, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces, reversing a judgment and decree, dated the 7th August 1916, of the Court of the District Judge, Wardha.

The main question for determination in this appeal was, whether the adoption of the first Defendant-Respondent, Jainarayan, alleged to have been made in 1886-87, when he was admittedly an orphan, by Jaidevi Bai as the son of her deceased husband Rambilash was valid.

The following pedigree will show the relationship of the parties to this litigation:—

The facts of the case either admitted or concurrently found by both Courts in India were as follows:—

The parties were Hindus of the Dhusar caste and claimed to be Brahmins. Their ancestors belonged to Kutubpur, tahsil Rewary, District Gurgaon, which formed part of the old Province of Agra and Oudh until the year 1858 when it was transferred to the Punjab Administration and became a part thereof.

In or about the year 1836 Harbhajan migrated from Kutubpur to the Central Provinces and settled down at Ashti in the Wardha District where he acquired considerable amount of property of which the property involved in the present litigation is a part. At the time of his migration Harbhajan was subject to the Mitakshara law as varied by special custom, and it was admitted that he carried his personal law with him and that this case is governed by it.

In 1858 as already stated Gurgaon District was transferred to the Punjab.

On Harbhajan's death in 1869 his sons Ramnath and Rambilas inherited the whole estate in equal shares. During the life-time of Ramnath he adopted Kedarnath, the third Defendant-Respondent.

Rambilas died in 1881 and on his death the name of his widow Jaidevi Bai was entered in the revenue records in place of that of her husband.

Ramnath died in 1883.

About the year 1886-87 Jaidevi Bai was alleged to have adopted the first Defendant-Respondent Jainarayan and shortly thereafter his name was substituted for hers in the revenue records. This factum of this adoption is not now disputed.

In 1898 there was a partition of the family estate between Kedarnath and Jainarayan in two equal parts and Jainarayan got as his share the property now claimed by the Plaintiffs-Appellants. Jai-devi Bai died in 1897.

In 1907 the Plaintiffs-Appellants, who were the four sons of Kedarnath instituted Suit No. 28 of 1907 in the Court of the District Judge, Wardha, against Jainarayan (Defendant No. 1) and persons claiming under him. They had also impleaded their father as Defendant No. 3. The Plaintiffs alleged that the parties were governed by the Mitakshara law and claimed recovery of possession from Jainarayan of the property which he had obtained on partition on the ground, amongst others, that his adoption was not valid.

Jainarayan contested the suit on the ground, amongst others, that it was barred by limitation.

The District Court dismissed the suit holding that it was barred by limitation, and on appeal this decree was affirmed by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces. But on further appeal by the Plaintiffs to His Majesty in Council those decrees were set aside, and by an Order in Council, dated the 24th, September 1913, "the suit was remanded to the District Court with a declaration that it would be competent for that Court in the event of Jainarayan failing in his other defences to make the whole or any part of the relief granted to the Plaintiffs conditional on their assenting to a partition so far as regards Kedarnath's interest in the estate so as to give effect to any right to which Jainarayan might be entitled claiming through Kedarnath."

After the remand the Plaintiffs filed an amended plaint, dated the 15th November and 1st December 1913, contending mainly that the property given by their father to Jainarayan was the joint ancestral property, belonging to them and their father, and that inasmuch as at the time of his adoption Jainarayan was an orphan his adoption was invalid under the Mitakshara law by which the parties were governed, and consequently Jainarayan had no title to the property in his possession and that the Plaintiffs and their father were entitled to recover it as their joint property.

Jainarayan and the second Respondent filed a joint written statement contending that Dhusars like all other tribes in the Gurgaon District were governed by the Punjab tribal customs and not by Hindu law, and that one of such customs allowed the adoption of an orphan. It was further contended that in any case Jainarayan was entitled to Kedarnath's share which would go to him upon a partition between him and his sons, and that any decree which might be made by the Court in favour of the Plaintiffs should be conditional on a partition of Kedarnath's interest in the property and allotting the same to Jainarayan. They further contended that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to recover possession of certain tenancy lands.

Kedarnath, the third Respondent, filed a separate written statement generally supporting the Plaintiffs' claim and contending that Jainarayan was not entitled to special relief claimed against him (Kedarnath).

The Plaintiffs in their reply stated that Dhusars were a sect of Brahmins called Bhargavas and were governed by the Mitakshara law as interpreted by the Benares school which was the law applicable to Gurgaon District at the time when their ancestor migrated therefrom in 1836, that inasmuch as that District became part of the Punjab in 1858 the Punjab tribal customs were not applicable to them, and that in any case the Dhusars were not agriculturists of the Punjab and consequently not governed by the said tribal customs.

The issues material to this report were the following :—

6.—(a) Can the Plaintiffs sue for the whole property or only for their share in it? What are their shares?

(b) If the Plaintiffs otherwise succeed, can the Defendant claim to retain the disputed property as Kedarnath's share or a portion of that property?

10. By what law are the parties governed?

What is their personal law?

When did the family migrate to these parts and did they abandon their original personal law and are they governed by the Mitakshara law as prevailing in these provinces? *

11. Have the Plaintiffs any right to the tenancy lands held by Defendant No. 1?

On the 7th August 1916, the District Judge delivered judgment. He held that the parties were governed by the Mitakshara law and also in certain cases by custom, that the family migrated to the Central Provinces about twenty or twenty-five years before the first settlement in those provinces in about 1855, and brought 'their personal law along with them which they have not yet abandoned, that the Mitakshara law prevailing in the Central Provinces was the same as that by which the parties were governed, and that Jainarayan's adoption was not valid as he was an orphan at the time of his adoption. He also held that the Dhusars were not agriculturists and that the presumption was that in matters of adoption they were governed by their personal law which was the Mitakshara law, and that anybody asserting that they were governed by a custom prevailing in the Punjab had to prove the same. As regards Jainarayan's allegation that the adoption of an orphan was permitted by custom the learned District Judge found that the oral evidence was wholly insufficient to establish a custom under which adoption of an orphan was permitted by the caste of the Dhusars, that the tribal custom of the Gurgaon District as evidenced by Revajiam prepared in 1879 did not expressly say anything about the adoption of an orphan, and that Jainarayan had failed to prove the existence of the custom under which the adoption of an orphan was valid. He finally held that the Plaintiffs were entitled to recover from Jainarayan their own shares and the latter was entitled to retain Kedarnath's share, which he erroneously calculated to be 2/5ths of the property in the possession of Jainarayan, and that the Plaintiffs' claim in respect of the tenancy lands must fail. In the result he ordered that the Plaintiffs should get a decree for possession of 3/5th share in the property in suit excluding tenancy lands, and that Jainarayan should pay the Plaintiffs one-half of their costs.

A formal decree, dated 7th August 1916, giving effect to the judgment was then drawn up.

Against the said decree of the District Judge Jainarayan appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces, and the Plaintiffs filed a memorandum of cross-objections.

On the 22nd October 1917, that Court delivered judgment allowing the appeal and dismissing the Plaintiffs' cross-objections and their suit with costs.

The learned Judicial Commissioners agreed with the Court below that the parties who were Dhusars were non-agriculturists, that the oral evidence alone did not prove the customs of adopting orphans and that the said Revajiam did not specially authorize the adoption of an orphan. But they held that the parties were not governed by the law applicable to Gurgaon in 1836, but by the present customary law of the Punjab tribes as evidenced by the Revaj-i-am prepared in 1879, according to which the Dhusars were governed in matters of adoption. They also held that the parties were not governed by the Mitakshara law, that they were governed by the Punjab customary law, and that under the latter adoption was merely a matter of appointing an heir to which no religious significance was attached and consequently there was no reason why an orphan should not be adopted.

They further held that though there was nothing in the Revaj-i-am specially authorizing the adoption of an orphan, yet inasmuch as the element of religion was eliminated the burden of proving that an orphan could not be adopted would lie upon the persons asserting it, and that in this case the Plaintiffs had failed to discharge that burden. In the result they held that Jainarayan's adoption was valid.

A formal decree, dated 22nd October 1917, was accordingly drawn up.

Against the said decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner the Plaintiffs appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. J. M. Parikh (with Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C.) for the Appellants.—Question raised is whether adoption of an orphan is valid. Parties are Hindus and claim to be Brahmins. They formerly belonged to Kutubpur in Gurgaon in the old Province of Agra and Oudh. In 1858 this province was transferred to the Punjab. In 1836 Harbhajan migrated to the Central Provinces. In 1869 Harbhajan died and his sons Ramnath and Rambilas inherited in equal shares. Ramnath adopted Kedarnath. Rambilas died in 1881 and Ramnath in 1883. In 1886-87 Jaidevi, Rambilas's widow, adopted Jainarayan. In 1898 there was partition between Kedarnath and Jainarayan. Law applicable is as it stood in 1836 before Harbhajan migrated when it was pure Mitakshara. Primary law is Mitakshara. Burden of proof of custom is on the other side. They say local law of the present day applies. In the Punjab, local customs are administered first and other law only as far as it has modified these.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiffs in the suit from a decree, dated the 22nd October 1917, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces, which reversed a decree, dated the 7th August 1916, of the District Judge of Wardha, and dismissed the suit. The suit is a suit on title for possession of the properties mentioned in the amended plaint. The Plaintiffs are the sons of Kedarnath, who is one of the Defendants. The principal Defendant is Jainarayan, and it is his title to the properties claimed by the Plaintiffs which is in question. Jainarayan's title depends on whether he was validly adopted as a son to Rambilas, who was a brother of Ramnath who had adopted Kedarnath. The following pedigree will show the position of the parties.

The parties to the suit are Hindus of the Dhussar caste. The members of the Dhussar caste claim to be Brahmins, but that claim is not admitted, nor is it proved in this suit. Ramkaran and his two sons lived at Kutubpur in the District of Gurgaon, which was a District of the North-Western Provinces until after the mutiny of 1857, when, in 1858, it was transferred to the Punjab. Balaram and his descendants continued to live at Kutubpur until after the adoption of Jainarayan, the validity of which is in dispute in this suit. In or about the year 1836, Harbhajan migrated from Kutubpur to the Central Provinces and settled at Ashti in the District of Wardha; and acquired considerable property, which included the immovable property to which the suit relates. It is admitted that Harbhajan carried his personal law with him, and that this appeal has to be decided in accordance with that personal law. Harbhajan died in 1869, leaving his sons, Ramnath and Rambilas him surviving. Ramnath married Sunder Bai, and, being childless, he adopted Kedarnath as a son to him. Ramnath died in 1883. The four Plaintiffs are the sons of Kedarnath. Rambilas married Jaidevi Bai and died childless in 1881, leaving his wife Jaidevi him surviving.

In 1886 or 1887, the exact date is uncertain, Jaidevi Bai in fact adopted Jainarayan as a son to her deceased husband Rambilas. Whether that adoption was or was not valid is the question upon which this appeal depends. At the time of the adoption of Jainarayan he was an orphan, his father and his mother being then dead, and he was nine or ten years of age, and was under the guardianship of Sunder Bai, the widow of Ramnath. Of the fact of the adoption there cannot be a doubt, the factum of the adoption is not disputed. It took place at Kutubpur, in the presence of members of the Dhussar caste then assembled, and of others, including Brahmins, some of whom recited Mantras, and the ceremonies observed on the occasion were apparently similar to those which were usually observed when Dhusars of Gurgaon adopted sons. Jainarayan was, in the presence of those assembled at Kutubpur, given in adoption by Sunder Bai to Jaidevi Bai and was placed by Sunder Bai on the lap of Jaidevi Bai as an adopted son. No one at the time, or for many years afterwards, questioned the validity of the adoption. On the adoption Kedarnath, without any protest or dispute, admitted Jainarayan as an 8 annas sharer in the joint family estate, that being the position which Rambilas had held when he was alive. Ramkishore, who is the Plaintiff No. 1, is said to have been born on the 20th December 1886, but whether he was born before or after the adoption of Jainarayan has not, so far as their Lordships are aware, been proved. His brothers, the Plaintiffs No. 2, No. 3 and No. 4, were born after Jainarayan had been adopted. In 1897 Jaidevi Bai died, and in 1898, Kedarnath and Jainarayan partitioned the family estate between them in two equal parts; and Jainarayan got as his share the property which is now claimed by the Plaintiffs in this suit.

The Plaintiffs' case is that the law of the Mitakshara, as recognised by the School of Benares, applies to the family, and that no custom at variance with that law has been proved; and, consequently, that the adoption of an orphan, as Jainarayan was when he was adopted, is invalid. The case of Jainarayan is that the Dhusars of the District of Gurgaon are governed by a custom and not by the law of the Mitakshara, as recognised by the School of Benares, and that according to that custom the adoption of an orphan is valid. It was for Jainarayan to establish that custom.

It is beyond question that, according to the law of the Mitakshara, as recognised by the School of Benares, an orphan cannot be adopted. It is also beyond doubt that in some parts of Northern India, particularly in Districts now in the Punjab or adjacent to the Punjab, the strict rules of the Mitakshara, as recognised by the School of Benares, have not been followed by some castes, tribes and families of Hindus, and that customs which are at variance with the law of the Mitakshara, as recognised by the School of Benares, have been for long consistently followed and acted upon, and that when such customs are established they, and not the strict rules of the Mitakshara with which they are at variance, are to be applied. Such customs relate to a variety of subjects, as for instances, to widows, adoptions, and the descent of lands and interests in lands; they are to be found principally amongst the agricultural classes, but they are also to be found amongst classes which are not agricultural. It has been found by each of the Courts below that the Dhusars are not an agricultural class, although many of them are owners of land.

The Trial Judge, in a very carefully considered judgment, came to the conclusion that "Jainarayan's adoption was not valid, as he was an orphan at the time of his adoption." There was evidence before him upon which he might have found that there was a custom amongst the Dhusars according to which an orphan might be validly adopted, but he did not consider it strong or satisfactory. Three cases in which it was alleged that orphans had been previously adopted were mentioned by witnesses; in one of those cases, that of Ramchandra, the evidence that an orphan had been publicly adopted was, their Lordships consider, convincing. In the other two cases, those of Harnarayan, otherwise Narayan Das, and Jwalaprashad, there was evidence that an orphan had been adopted, although the Trial Judge did not consider it satisfactory, in one case—because it appeared to be evidence of repute, and in the other case—because it did not appear that the witness had been present at the adoption. The evidence to which the Trial Judge referred had been taken on commission and not before him. It appears from his judgment that the Trial Judge in considering the evidence of witnesses as to adoption of orphans by Dhusars did not overlook the fact that such adoptions must have been few and of rare occurrence. In coming to the conclusion that Jainarayan's adoption was invalid, the Trial Judge was obviously much influenced by the fact that the "Code of Tribal Custom of the Gurgaon District" did not expressly say anything about the adoption of an orphan. The "Code of Tribal Custom of the Gurgaon District," to which the Trial Judge referred, was a record of the customs of the Gurgaon District, which was prepared at various dates in 1878 and 1879 by Mr. Wilson, who was the Assistant Settlement Officer in the revision of the settlement of the District of Gurgaon; it was prepared from the answers of the village headmen of each of the principal land-owning tribes of the District to a series of questions put to them with the approval of the Punjab Government. Some of those answers show that the Dhusars had by their customs materially departed from the rules of the Mitakshara, as recognised by the School of Benares, but no question was expressly directed to the adoption of an orphan.

That the adoption of Jainarayan was considered to have been a valid adoption at the time, and for years afterwards, by everyone concerned, the Trial Judge found. In his judgment he said: "Under the same impression (i.e., that the family was governed by special customs), the right of Jaidevi Bai to adopt a son for her husband was not disputed, and the status of Jainarayan as an adopted son of Rambilas, and as being capable of owning the share and interest of his adoptive father in the family estate, was as a matter of course recognised. None thought otherwise. There was no occasion for dispute—all concerned thought that what was done was perfectly valid. None had any idea that they were governed by the ordinary Hindu law, and that under the law by which they were governed, Jainarayan's adoption by Jaidevi Bai was invalid and had no legal existence. Several circumstances must have supported them in this their impression, which he, however, considered as mistaken. There was not that strictness in the observance of the conditions of an adoption, recognised by Hindu law, in their caste. The customs of the Punjab were being observed by them, and the landed property owned by them in that province was being dealt with accordingly, so everybody accepted the right of Jaidevi Bai to adopt, and the status of Jainarayan as her adopted son."

As the Trial Judge had come to the conclusion that the adoption was invalid he made a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs for possession of the lands claimed, except some tenancy lands, to which he held that the Plaintiffs had no title. From that decree Jainarayan appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, and the Plaintiffs filed cross-objections as to the tenancy lands.

The learned Judges of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, who heard the appeal, considered that if the Trial Judge had been of opinion that the Revaj-i-am applied to Dhusars, who are not an agricultural class, he would have held that the adoption of Jainarayan was valid, and they pointed out that some of the special customs relating to adoption set out in the Revaj-i-am are specifically stated to apply to Dhusars, and establish the proposition that Dhusars are governed in matters of adoption not by the orthodox Hindu law but by customary law. They came to the conclusion that under the Punjab customary law there is no religious significance attached to the appointment of an heir, and that there is nothing in the customary law applicable to Dhusars which precludes the adoption of an orphan, and as to the oral evidence as to orphans having been adopted by Dhusars, they said: "We agree with the District Judge's remarks in paragraph 23 of his judgment, to this extent, that if the oral evidence were the only evidence to prove a custom of adopting orphans, it would not be sufficient to prove such a custom if the parties were orthodox Hindus. The instances given of adoption of orphans do, however, support the view that the adoption of an orphan is not considered contrary to proper usage, and the adoption of at least one orphan besides Jainarayan, namely, Ramchandra, is satisfactorily proved. It is hardly possible to suppose that even one instance would be possible if the Dhusars consider themselves governed by the Mitakshara law as to adoption."

The learned Judges of the Judicial Commissioner's Court found that the adoption of Jainarayan was valid, and by their decree allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit. From that decree this appeal has been brought.

Their Lordships are satisfied that the parties to this suit are governed, not by the Mitakshara as recognised by the School of Benares, but are governed by the customary law of the Dhusars of the District of Gurgaon. They have further come to the conclusion that it is consistent with that customary law that the adoption of orphans by Dhusars is valid. They have come to that conclusion for the following reasons. Adoptions which would be invalid if not permitted by that customary law are by that customary law permitted, as for example, a brother can be adopted, a daughter's son can be adopted, there is no limit as to the age of the person who may be adopted, a married man who has had children may be adopted, and a guardian may give a boy in adoption. Besides the case of Jainarayan there is clear evidence of one who had been present at the adoption, that another orphan, Ramchandra, had been adopted, and there is evidence that Harnarayan and Jwalaprashad, who were orphans, had been adopted. Jainarayan's adoption took place openly in the presence of Dhusars at Kutubpur, and of many others who had been assembled there for the purpose of Jainarayan being adopted. There was no concealment. Everyone knew that he was an orphan. For years after that adoption everyone treated Jainarayan as a lawfully adopted son, and no one suggested that he had not been validly adopted. Kedarnath, who was the person who was most interested to dispute the adoption, acknowledged that the adoption was valid, and admitted Jainarayan, as a validly adopted son to Rambilas, to the share in the family property which a naturally born son of Rambilas, if there had been one, would have enjoyed. Their Lordships can come to no other conclusion than that Jainarayan was validly adopted.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DEGREE

No. 2450 OF 1919.

CHATTERJEE, J. JOGENDRA NATH

Judgment, TACHERJEE, Defendant,
17, January. Respondent.

Adverse possession—Question of mixed fact and law—Acts necessary to constitute adverse possession of one co-owner against another—Ouster, proof of—Principle, if applies to co-owners, not members of a family.

The question of adverse possession is a mixed question of fact and law. The facts found by the Judge must be accepted but the conclusion drawn from them, namely, whether the possession was adverse or not, is a question of law.

LACHAMESWAR SINGH v. MANOWAR HOSSEIN (1), RAM GOPAL v. SHAMSKHATON (2), CHINTAMONI PRAMANIK v. HRIDAY NATH RAMILA (3) and BALARAM GURIA v. SYAMA CHABAN MANDAL (4) approved.

To prove dispossession of one co-sharer by another, it must be shown that there was exclusion or ouster to the knowledge of the former and this principle is applicable to all cases of co-owners and is not confined to cases where the co-owners were persons who at one time had formed members of a family.

(4) 24 C. W. N. 1057 : s. c. 33 C. L. J. 344 (1920).

The possession of one co-owner is the possession of all for the purpose of limitation.

There can be no dispossession by one joint tenant in the absence of an assertion of a hostile title by him to the knowledge of the other joint tenants sought to be excluded from the joint tenancy and if no notice is given to the co-sharer of the denial of his right, the occupant must make his possession so visibly hostile and notorious and so apparently exclusive and adverse as to justify the inference of knowledge on the part of the co-owner sought to be ousted and of laches if he fails to discover and assert his rights.

JAGANNATH MARWARI v. CHANDNI BIBI (13) and JOY NARAIN SEN v. SRIKANTA RAY (14) approved.

This was an appeal preferred on the 16th November 1919 against a decree of Babu Bejoy Gopal Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Howrah, dated the 19th September 1919, reversing a decree of Babu Nripendra Nath Guha, Munsif of Howrah, dated the 30th April 1918.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Dr. D. N. Mitter and Babu Haradhan Chatterjee for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit for partition of a house described as the sadarbari which originally belonged to one Haridhan and his co-sharer.

The Plaintiff purchased the 4 annas share which belonged to Haridhan on the 26th April 1916, the Defendant having purchased the remaining shares so far back as 19th November 1901 from the other co-sharers. After his purchase, the Defendant blocked up the sadar door of the sadarbari.

The Plaintiff brought the suit for partition in 1917, and the Defendant pleaded that the claim was barred by limitation by reason of adverse possession on his part for 12 years.

The Court of first instance was of opinion that the possession of the Defendant was not adverse to Haridhan and that the claim of the Plaintiff therefore was not barred by limitation.

On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge held that the possession was adverse and that his claim was barred by limitation.

The Plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

It is contended that the facts found do not amount to an ouster by a co-sharer.

On behalf of the Respondent, it is contended that the question of adverse possession is a question of fact and that the finding of the Lower Appellate Court on the point cannot be considered by this Court in second appeal.

The question of adverse possession, however, is a mixed question of fact and law. The facts found by the Judge must of course be accepted, but the conclusion drawn from them, namely, whether the possession was adverse or not, is a question of law and can be considered by this Court [see the cases of Lachameswar Singh v. Manowar Hossein (1), Ram Gopal v. Shamskhaton (2), Chintamani Pramanik v. Hriday Nath Ramila (3) and Balaram Guria v. Syama Charan Mandal (4)].

(3) 29 C. L. J. 241 (245) (1913).

(4) 24 C. W. N. 1057 : s. c. 33 C. L. J. 344 (348) (1920).

With regard to the question of limitation, the learned Subordinate Judge, as stated above, found that the Defendant was in adverse possession since he blocked the entrance to the sadarbari. There is no doubt that Haridhan was a co-sharer and in order to prove dispossession of one co-sharer by another, it must be shown that there was exclusion or ouster to the knowledge of the former.

It is contended by the learned Pleader for the Respondent that the principle cannot apply to a stranger who is not a member of the family and we are referred to the case of Ram Lakhi v. Durga Charan Sen (5).

The question there was whether a person who had purchased a property from a member of a joint Hindu family* was entitled to the benefit of Art. 127 of the Limitation Act, and it was answered in the negative. One of the Judges, Garth, C. J., held that Art. 136 would apply to the case, while the other Judge, Ghose, J., held that Art. 144 was the article applicable.

The question of adverse possession as between co-sharers however does not appear to have been considered in that case.

We have also been referred to the case of Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (6), where the Judicial Committee, referring to the rule that the possession of one of several joint tenants or tenants in common is not adverse to the others so as to prevent the statutes of limitation from affecting them, observed : "Whether the rule is applicable to sharers in an unpartitioned agricultural village in India not holding their shares as members of a joint family, it is unnecessary for the purpose of the present case to decide." There is no expression of opinion by their Lordships that the principle was not applicable and when their Lordships expressly stated that it was unnecessary for the purpose of that case to decide the question, it cannot be contended that the principle is inapplicable.

It is true that in the case of Corca v. Appuhamy (7) and in some other cases, the question arose as between persons who had at one time formed members of a family. But the principle is not confined to such cases only. The principle does not depend upon whether the parties are members of a joint family but rest upon the ground that they are co-owners, and is applicable to all cases of co-owners. In the case of Balaram Guria v. Syama Charan Mandal (4), both the Plaintiff and the Defendants were strangers who purchased from the members of a joint family and the Plaintiff's vendor was not in possession for 50 years. The principle is that the possession of one co-owner is the possession of all for the purpose of limitation. No doubt the sole possession of one co-owner for a very long period may, having regard to other circumstances, show exclusion or ouster. The Judicial Committee in the case of Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (6) observed.—The limits of the rule were defined in Culby v. Taylerson (8) as follows:—"Generally speaking, one tenant in common cannot maintain an ejectment against another tenant because the possession of one tenant in common is the possession of the other, and to enable the party complaining to maintain an ejectment, there must be an ouster of the party complaining; but where the claimant, tenant in common, has not been in the participation of rents and profits for a considerable length of time and other circumstances concur, the Judge will direct the jury to take into consideration whether they will presume that there has been an ouster."

The question was also considered in Fisher and Taylor v. Prosser (9), Banda-charya v. Srinivasacharya (10) and Gangadhar v. Parashram (11) and in our Court, the circumstances which should be taken into consideration were pointed out in the case of Ayeneenussa Bibi v. Sheikh Isuf (12). See also Jagannath Murwari v. Chandni Bibi (13).

It is contended on behalf of the Respondent that, having regard to the length of time which has elapsed since the Defendant blocked up the entrance to the sadar-bari and to the notoriety attending on the closing of the door to the entrance, the Court below was justified in coming to the conclusion that the possession of the Defendant was adverse. But the learned Subordinate Judge has not considered the question whether Haridhan had direct knowledge of the blocking of the sadar dgor or that there were circumstances, from which one could impute knowledge to him.

There can be no dispossession by one joint tenant in the absence of an assertion of a hostile title by him to the knowledge of the other joint tenants sought to be excluded from the joint tenancy: and if no notice is given to the co-sharer of the denial of his right the occupant must make his possession so visibly hostile and notorious and so apparently exclusive and adverse as to justify the inference of knowledge on the part of the co-owner sought to be ousted and of laches if he fails to discover and assert his rights : See Jagan-nath Marwari v. Chandni Bibi (13) and Joy Narain Sen v. Srikantha Ray (14), where the question is fully discussed.

The learned Pleader for the Respondent lays much stress upon the fact that the Defendant blocked the entrance in 1901 and that the suit was not brought until 1917. But Haridhan was a minor for a greater part of this period and did not attain majority until 1911. It is also found that he did not go to Andul where the property is situated ever since the Defendant purchased the property.

We think that the Court must consider whether, having regard to all the circumstances, knowledge of Haridhan of the exclusion can be inferred.

The case must accordingly go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that the question may be considered and the case disposed of according to law. It will be in the discretion of that Court to take further evidence on the question of knowledge.

Cost to abide the result.

sec. 125, applicability of—Central idea and isolated expressions in a Will, which to prevail.

In a Will the testator provided that after his death his daughter would be malik vested with the power to transfer by sale and gift the entire properties and would enjoy and hold possession of the same down to her son, son's son and so on. The Will next provided that the daughter should live in the testator's ancestral bhita, and perform the pujas inaugurated by him, otherwise she would not be entitled to hold possession or transfer any portion of the property. The Will also provided that she would be entitled to transfer the property only if it was unavoidably necessary for the education of her son or if they fell into great calamity. In a suit for possession by the sons of the daughter, the Court of first instance held that the Will conferred an absolute estate on the Plaintiffs' mother, who having left a maiden daughter still living, the Plaintiffs had no title to the property. On appeal the Lower Appellate Court held that the questions raised should be decided after taking evidence and remanded the case for trial upon the merits :

Held—That the words in the earlier part of the Will, without anything to qualify them, would no doubt create an absolute estate and there was power of alienation expressly given. There is no doubt that if an estate conferred by Will is held to be absolute, the conditions as to the mode of its enjoyment are void. But considering all the terms of the Will it is clear that the provisions made in the earlier part of the Will are qualified by the provisions made in the other parts of it. Three things appear to have been uppermost in the mind of the testator : that his daughter and her sons, etc., should reside in his bhita, that power of alienation should be given only for meeting the education expenses of her son or in case of great calamity, and that she should hold the properties subject to performance of the pujas. Taking into consideration the central ideas of the Will, instead of isolated expressions, it is clear that the Will did not give an absolute estate to Plaintiffs' mother.

This was an appeal preferred on the 4th January, 1918 against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Zillah Burdwan (Babu Nagendra Nath Ghosh), dated the 10th October 1917, reversing an order of the Munsif of Katwa (Babu Lal Behary Chatterji), dated the 9th September 1916.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment.

Babus Pyari Mohan Chatterjee and Krishna Lal Banerjee for the Appellants.

Babu Bijan Kumar Mukerjee for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit to recover possession of the property in dispute. The Plaintiffs alleged that certain persons (who may be described as the Mandals) mortgaged the property in suit to their maternal grand-father Surjakanta Bhattacharji, that Surjakanta executed a Will in favour of his daughter Gopendrabala (the mother of the Plaintiffs), that after the death of Surjakanta the Mandals executed a mortgage kistbandi in favour of Gopendrabala, and that on her death, the Plaintiffs having succeeded to the estate of their maternal grand-father as heirs, brought a suit upon the mortgage and in execution of the decree obtained upon it, purchased the property and obtained symbolical possession, but that the Defendants were withholding possession from the Plaintiffs. Some of the Defendants are the mortgagees or their heirs, and the others are purchasers of portions of the property. The main points in dispute in the suit were first whether the Plaintiffs' mother Gopendrabala obtained an absolute or a limited estate under the Will, for if she got an absolute estate the Plaintiffs would not be heirs, as she left a maiden daughter who is still living; and secondly whether the decree and proceedings held thereunder are valid.

The Court of first instance did not take any evidence in the case, but held that the Will conferred an absolute estate upon the Plaintiffs' mother, that she left a maiden daughter who is still living, and that the Plaintiffs therefore had no title to the property, and accordingly dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that the questions raised in the case should be decided after taking evidence and remanded the case for trial upon the merits. The Defendants have appealed to this Court.

It is contended that the question whether the Plaintiffs' mother got an absolute, or a limited estate should be determined upon a construction of the Will only and that under the Will, she took an absolute estate; secondly, that in any case the Lower Appellate Court ought not to have remanded the case for trial, but should have proceeded under Or. 41, r. 25 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The first point for consideration therefore is what was the nature of the estate conferred upon the Plaintiffs' mother by the Will.

The Will states that the testator had become old and was suffering from diabetes, and for that reason rules should be framed regarding his properties. Then it states "I therefore make these provisions by this Will that you are my only daughter, there is no other nearer heir of mine than you. After my death, being malik, vested with the power to transfer, by sale and gift, the entire properties moveable and immoveable specified in Schs. I and II below, you will enjoy and hold possession of the same in great felicity down to your son, son's son and so on in succession and act in the following manner." Three provisions are made in several paragraphs which run as follows:—

"Living and residing in my homestead dwelling house (ancestral dwelling-house) in the village of Mowgachi, you will inherit (become uttaradhikari) the rent-paying and rent-free properties, moveable and immoveable, described in Schedules 1 and 2 which I at present possess and which will be acquired up to the time before my death, and the monies that are invested in money-lending business, and the cash money and the ornaments in stock, and the paddy and the metallic utensils, etc., all the properties left by me, down to your heirs in succession; you will, living and residing on my ancestral bhita in the village Mowgachi and by lighting lamp on the bhita, you will live and reside on my bhita down to your son, son's son and heirs in succession and hold possession of all the properties left by me. If there be any male child born of your womb, and if your husband (my son-in-law) Srijukta Haripada Bhattacharjee or you be totally incapable of bearing the expenses of his education, then you will be competent to sell the entire or a portion of my properties and meet the expenses of his education, and also if you fall into great calamity you will be competent to sell these properties. On any other grounds except this or if you do not live and reside in my ancestral dwelling-house, you will not be competent to transfer by sale or gift in any way any of my properties mentioned in this Will; if you do so, the same will not be valid.

It is my sole and principal object and my utmost desire that the autumnal Durga, Shyama and Jagadhatti Pujas inaugurated by me, shall be continued for ever, in the same manner, from generation to generation. For this reason I enjoin by this Will that after my death being entitled to all the properties left by me, you will continue to perform the said Durga, Shyama and Jagadhatti Pujas uninterruptedly, continually and uniformly down to your heirs and representatives in succession at an expense of Rs. 75 per annum. If for any special reason the same becomes impossible, then the three pujas must be performed uninterruptedly for at least 20 years after my death. If you fail to do the same, you will not be competent to hold possession of any of my properties, moveable and immoveable, left by me and if by living and residing in my ancestral dwelling-house, you do not perform the pujas, etc., both you and your husband Srijut Haripada Bhattacharjee would be sinners and thrown into hell for not obeying the orders of superior (father). If you do not perform the pujas, the principal gentlemen of the village such as Ram Nrisingha Ghose,

SURENDRA NATH CHATTERJI v. SAROJBAN DHU BHUTTACHARJI.

Upendra Narain Ghose, Jadab Chandra Pattack, Kedar Nath Gangopadhyay, Sasi Bhusan Pal, Gopal Chandra Khan, Surja Kanta Dey, Kali Bhanjan Shaha, Prosonna Kumar Raha and others shall have power to urge you in the act." In the 3rd and 4th paragraphs, the testator provides that certain persons are to be maintained as members of the family, and in case of disagreement they are to be accommodated each separately in a room, and a fixed amount of maintenance provided for them. The other provisions of the Will are not material for this case.

A large number of cases have been cited before us bearing upon the question whether the words malik and "putra poutradi krame" confer an absolute estate. It is unnecessary to deal with them, because the meaning of these expressions is now well-settled.

The Will before us states that not only is the daughter to be "malik" but "will be vested with power to transfer by sale and gift" and will "enjoy and hold possession in great felicity down to son and son's son and so on in succession." These words without anything to qualify them would no doubt create an estate of inheritance, and there is power of alienation expressly given. It is accordingly contended that the provisions in the subsequent part of the Will merely lay down the mode of enjoyment of the property, that those conditions may be disregarded having regard to the provisions of sec. 125 of the Succession Act, and that they do not qualify the absolute estate conferred in the earlier parts of the Will.

There is no doubt that if once an estate conferred by Will is held to be absolute, the conditions as to the mode of its enjoyment are void. But we have to look to all the terms of the Will and find whether an absolute or a limited estate was conferred. We have therefore to see whether the provisions made in the first part of the Will are qualified by the provisions made in the other parts of it. Now, three things appear to have been uppermost in the mind of the testator—the first is that his daughter and "her son, son's son and so on in succession" shall reside in the ancestral bhita in village Mowgachi and by "lighting lamp on the bhita" (an idea entertained by orthodox Hindus) hold possession of all the properties, and it is expressly stated that if the daughter does not reside in the ancestral dwelling-house, she will not be competent to transfer by sale or gift or in any other way any of the properties mentioned in the Will. The intention of the testator therefore was that the daughter and her heirs should reside in the ancestral dwelling-house and "light lamp on the bhita." If however an absolute estate was intended to be conferred she might sell away the properties and go to reside in her husband's house, which would defeat the intention of the testator. There appears to be special reason for the testator's making such a provision. Ordinarily the daughter would reside with her husband in the latter's house, and it was probably because the testator apprehended that she might go to live at her husband's house that he made the provision that she would not be competent to transfer by sale or gift or in any other way, any of the properties, and that if she did, it would not be valid.

The second is the education of the sons who might be born to her. In the same paragraph the testator says that if she or her husband be totally unable to bear the expenses of education of any sons who may be born to her, in that case or in case of great calamity she would be competent to sell the whole or a portion of the properties and meet the expenses of their education, and concludes by saying "on any other ground except this and if you do not live and reside in my ancestral dwelling-house you will not be competent to transfer by sale or gift or in any other way any of my properties mentioned in the Will. If you do so the sale will not be valid." The power of alienation therefore is given to her only in certain events, viz., for meeting the education expenses of her sons, or in case of "great calamity," and she would have no power of alienation at all if she did not reside in the bhita.

The third is the performance of the pujas.

In the second paragraph, it is stated that the testator's "sole and principal object" and his "utmost desire was that the autumnal Durga, Shyama and Jagadhatti Pujas inaugurated by him should be continued for ever in the same manner from generation to generation," and he enjoined that after his death the daughter being entitled to all the properties left by him will continue to perform the said pujas "uninterruptedly, continually and uniformly" down to her heirs and representatives in succession at an expense of Rs. 75 per annum, and if for any special reasons the same become impossible, then the pujas must be performed uninterruptedly for at least 20 years after his death. These pujas had been inaugurated by the testator himself, and it was of paramount importance to him that the pujas should be celebrated by the daughter and her heirs in succession for ever, at any rate for a period of 20 years. Now if she was to get an absolute estate, she might sell away the properties and go to reside in her husband's house. In that case, what would become of these pujas which the testator says were to be celebrated by her and her heirs in succession for ever, at any rate for 20 years? The intention of the testator is very clearly expressed, "it is my sole and principal object and my utmost desire" that the pujas should be performed, and if she failed to do the same, she "will not be competent to hold possession of any of my properties, moveable and immoveable." We think that the intention is clear and clearly expressed in the Will. It is not a mere moral injunction, though such an injunction is given in the lines which follow:—"If living and residing in my ancestral dwelling-house you do not perform the pujas, etc., both you and your husband Srijut Haripada Bhattacharjee would be sinners and thrown into hell for not obeying the orders of superior (father). If you do not perform the pujas, the principal gentlemen of the village (naming them) shall have power to urge you in the act."

It may be said that the pujas could not be performed for ever or even for 20 years, if the entire properties were sold away to meet the education expenses of the sons who might be born to her. But the provision with respect to the same was that she would be competent to sell a portion or the whole of the properties in case she and her husband were to become wholly unable to meet the education expenses. No grandson had been born up to that time. The testator evidently thought that the son-in-law would be able to meet the education expenses, as the words "if Haripada be totally incapable" would indicate, and although he gave power to the daughter to alienate in the latter case, the testator probably thought it was a very remote contingency for which he was providing. The provision for celebrating the pujas for ever shows that the testator did not contemplate the alienation of his entire property as a probable contingency, at any rate within 20 years.

Later on, it is stated in the Will "God forbid, if after my death you die without leaving any issue and your husband inherits the properties mentioned in this Will, he shall have to perform year after year the three pujas mentioned in my Will and enjoy the profits and hold possession of the said properties. If he does not perform the pujas, etc., in the manner stated in this Will, he will not be entitled to get anything out of the properties left by me." It is contended that the son-in-law could inherit the properties only if the daughter got an absolute estate, and that this provision shows that the testator intended to confer an absolute estate. But the Will apparently was not drawn by a lawyer, and the testator might have thought that in the absence of any issue of the daughter the property would devolve by right of inheritance upon her husband. It is no doubt difficult to reconcile all the provisions of this badly drawn Will, but the testator, an old man of 62 years of age, did say all that he could, to express his intention that the daughter and her heirs in succession should reside in the ancestral house, educate the sons who might be born to her, and perform the pujas, and she was not to get any property if she failed to comply with the first and third provisions though she was given a restricted power (and full power in certain events) of alienation for meeting the education expenses of her sons or in case of calamity. It may be contended that if that is the proper construction of the Will, the daughter would not get the estate at all in the event of her failing to perform the acts enjoined by the testator, as it has been found by the Court below (on remand) that the daughter did not reside in the house of the testator after his death nor perform the pujas after his death as directed by the Will. But the estate vested in the daughter on the death of the testator before any acts enjoined by the testator could be performed. Then there was no gift over on her failure to perform the acts, and, she was the heir-at-law. We have relied upon those provisions only for ascertaining whether the intention was to confer an absolute estate upon her or only a limited estate.

We do not think we should hold that she was given an absolute estate with absolute power of alienation merely upon what is stated in the earlier part of the Will entirely ignoring the other provisions of the Will, on the ground that she was given an absolute estate and the other provisions being repugnant to the nature of the estate must be rejected. The Will as stated above is badly drawn, but in construing it we must give effect to all its provisions. Taking into consideration all the provisions of the Will we think that the Will does not give an absolute estate to the Plaintiffs' mother.

As stated above it is unnecessary to discuss the cases which deal with the effect of the words "malik" or "putra poutradi krame" or similar expressions. In the present case both those expressions have been used in the Will, as also the power of alienation is expressly given in one part of the Will, while the other parts of the Will show that she was to have power of alienation only in certain events or indicate that she was not to have an absolute estate. We will only refer to the cases where the Will purports to confer an absolute estate in one portion of it, while other clauses indicate a contrary intention.

In Lala Ram Jewan Ram v. Dal Koer (1), it was held that the prohibition to alienate did not cut down the absolute gift conferred in that case and reference was made to the provisions of sec. 125 of the Succession Act. In Amarendra Nath v. Suradhani (2), where the testator provided that his widow would be malik like himself having right to give away, sell, etc., and after her death, the property would come into the control of his son if he was reformed, it was held that the intention of the testator was to confer an absolute estate, as otherwise the intention of the testator might have been completely defeated, for whatever portion of the estate might be left undisposed of by his widow would have passed by inheritance to the son, to meet which contingency it was provided that if any portion of the estate was left intact by the widow at the time of her death it was not to go to his son except on the event of a complete reformation of his habits in the interval. In Jitendra Kumar v. Nrittya Gopal (3), where the Will gave some properties to her wife with power of alienation and there was no gift over it was held to be an absolute gift. In Tripurari Pal v. Jagat-tarini (4) the Judicial Committee held that there was an absolute gift, as there was no provision for cutting down the absolute gift in what followed.

On the other hand in Shib Lakhan v. Srimati Tarangini (5), where the Will provided that the testator's widow was to be malik, with power to sell or make gift according to her wish if for any reason it became necessary to do so, it was held that she did not get an absolute estate. There was a clause in the Will which directed the widow to carry on out of the income of the properties the daily and periodical worship of the ancestral family idols, and there were other provisions in the Will which strengthened the view that the estate conferred was not absolute, one of them being a clause which authorized the widow to have recourse to a sale or gift in case of necessity which would be superfluous if the widow was already vested with absolute power of disposition.

In Kandarpa Nath v. Jogendra Nath (6) the learned Judges with reference to the words of the preamble of the Will that the widow was to "hold possession like the testator" which were taken to indicate that an absolute interest was intended to be created in her favour observed: "As pointed out however in the case of Shib Lakhan v. Tarangini (5) importance ought not to be attached to isolated expressions, but the Court must look to all the clauses of the Will and give effect to all the clauses ignoring none as redundant or contradictory." In that case it was pointed out that the central ideas of the testator were obviously two-fold, first that whatever properties might be left upon the death of his mother and his wife were to be applied for the establishment of a pious institution of a permanent character for commemoration of his name, and secondly that in no event was the estate to be alienated in favour of the reversionary heirs; and that they were inconsistent with the theory that the donees took an absolute and alienable interest in the estate. It was held upon those considerations and upon the other clauses of the Will that the donees did not take an absolute estate. In Hara Kumari v. Mohini (7), the Will gave to the widow power of alienation by gift or sale of all "the aforesaid moveable and immoveable properties" and directed her to purchase a house and establish a Mahadeb on it and perform its sheba and service, and that on her death his daughter would be entitled to whatever properties would remain after her death. It was held that giving effect to all the words of the Will the widow took an estate for life with a power of alienation, and to the extent to which such power was exercised, the daughter similarly took the property.

In the case of Radha Prasad Mulik v. Raneemani Dassi (8), the Judicial Committee in holding that according to the true construction of the Will the intention of the testator was to create in favour of his daughter an estate for life with a remainder over to their sons, relied upon the observations made in the case of Mahomed Shamsul Huda v. Shewakram (9) that "in construing the Will of a Hindu it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with respect to the devolution of property. It may be assumed that a Hindu generally desires that an estate, specially an ancestral estate, shall be retained in his family; and it may be assumed that as a general rule at all events women do not take absolute estates of inheritance which they are enabled to alienate."

We have been referred to an unreported decision of Mookerjee and Panton, JJ., dated the 10th June 1919 in (*Sulochana v. Jagat Tarini). There the Will (in the 6th clause) provided that the widow was to be full owner (sampurna malik), and the question was whether the full proprietary right had been cut down by the other clauses of the Will. The learned Judges held that the other clauses did not in any way qualify the effect of the 6th clause and referred to the observations of Lord Watson in Scale v. Rawlens (10), "we are not at liberty to speculate upon what the testator may have intended to do or may have thought that he had actually done: we cannot give effect to any intention which is not expressed or plainly implied in the language of the testator."

In the present case the paragraphs 1 and 2 of the Will clearly express the intention of the testator. Nothing can be clearer than the words "my sole and principal object and my utmost desire" used with reference to the provision for the pugas, and the provision as to residence in the house is also clear, and we do not think that the provisions of the said paragraphs merely lay down the mode of enjoyment of the property so that it can be held that the preamble to the Will gives an absolute estate, and the provisions in the 1st and 2nd paragraphs are void as being repugnant to the nature of the estate granted. The provisions of the 1st and 2nd paragraphs qualify and govern the provisions made in the earlier part, and in fact explain them, and as stated above, taking all the provisions together we think that the Plaintiffs' mother took only a limited estate. The Plaintiffs therefore on their mother's death inherited the property.

There are other questions in the case which have not been tried by the Courts below. The case should therefore go back to the Court of first instance for trial of the remaining issues and disposal of the case according to law.

Cost will abide the result.

Held.—That the covenant was one for renewal on the same terms as the previous tenancy.

LARI MIA v. MOHAMMED EASIN MIA (6) and SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. FORBES (7) referred to.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Jatindra Chandra Lahiri, officiating Subordinate Judge of Zillah Rungpur, dated the 29th of July 1919, affirming the decree of Babu Ram Chandra Banerjee, Munsif, 1st Court at Kurigram, dated the 23rd of April 1918.

The facts material to this report are as follows:—

Plaintiff brought this suit against the Defendant for khas possession of $3\frac{1}{2}$ cottas of land by ejectment and demolition of the structures standing thereon. The Defendant, on the 11th May 1908, executed a registered kabuliyat in favour of the Plaintiff in respect of Chukani bashabati land measuring $3\frac{1}{2}$ cottas, at a jama of Rs. 3-8 per annum for a term of 9 years to expire on the 13th April 1917. The said kabuliyat, inter alia, stated “after the expiry of the term I shall take a fresh settlement (বাদ বেবাদ দোসরা বন্দোবস্ত আমলে আনিব) of the same. If I fail to take the same then you (the landlord) shall be competent to grant settlement thereof to any other tenant by bringing the same under your khas possession.”

The Plaintiff brought this suit for ejectment on the 15th June 1917. The defence inter alia was that the kabuliyat contained a renewal clause for 9 years, that he offered to take a fresh settlement but the Plaintiff had wrongfully refused and that the Defendant was consequently entitled to remain on the land for a further term of 9 years and he was not liable to ejectment. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. On appeal by the Plaintiff the learned Subordinate Judge upheld the decision of the Court of first instance and dismissed the appeal.

The following portion of the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge will be found material to this report:—

“The covenant in question runs in the following terms:—‘On the expiration of the term, I shall take a fresh settlement (বাদ বেবাদ দোসরা বন্দোবস্ত আমলে আনিব).’ By accepting the kabuliyat the Plaintiff must be deemed to have agreed to grant such a fresh settlement. The document, however, does not state anything whatever as to what would be the term of the fresh lease or the rent payable thereunder. In the case reported in Surendra Nath Sen v. Dinabandhu Naik (8), it was no doubt said that in the absence of such particulars, the contract for the renewal of the lease would be too vague and uncertain for a specific performance but that ruling appears to have been dissented from in the case of Lari Mia v. Mohammed Easin Mia (6) in which all the rulings on the point were reviewed. . . . Thus I find that the case of Lani Mia v. Mohammed Easin Mia (6) is fully applicable to the facts of the present suit and the Defendant must be deemed to have acquired a right to obtain a fresh settlement for a period of 9 years as stated above. Admittedly he lost no time in praying for a renewal which the Plaintiff was not justified to refuse. Thus I find that the Plaintiff was not entitled to evict the Defendant before the expiration of the term of the renewal."

Plaintiff then preferred this second appeal.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta for the Appellant.—The expression দে'সরা বন্দোবস্ত really means a second settlement which need not be on the same terms as the previous one. The expression is ambiguous and therefore evidence is admissible to shew what is the true meaning [see Watcham v. The Attorney-General of African Protectorate (1)], the intention of the parties may be gathered from the kabuliyat executed by the vendor of the Defendant in favour of the Plaintiff on the 19th April 1903 and another executed by a previous tenant in favour of the Plaintiff on the 5th January 1901. All that therefore the parties intended was that the second settlement was not to be on the same terms.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen) for the Respondent.—The expression দো'সরা বন্দোবস্ত means "another settlement on the same terms," or "a second settlement on the same terms," or in other words "a renewal of the lease upon the same terms;" otherwise, the expression in the deed is meaningless, for, if the Plaintiff, i.e., the grantor of the lease be entitled to dictate his own terms it was not necessary to make a provision for the second settlement. The meaning of the word is free from ambiguity and the case comes within the principle enunciated in Lani Mia v. Mohammed Easin Mia (6) and Secretary of State for India v. Forbes (7). There is a clause of "renewal of lease" and if the contention of the Appellant is correct, he can then destroy the effect of the clause by demanding new terms.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta in reply.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal by the Plaintiff in an action in ejectment. The Defendant executed a kabuliyat in favour of the Plaintiff on the 11th May 1908 for a term of 9 years to expire on the 13th April 1917. As the Defendant did not give up the land on the termination of the tenancy the Plaintiff instituted the present suit on the 15th June 1917 after service of notice to quit. The Defendant pleaded that the kabuliyat contained what was in essence a renewal clause for 9 years, that he had offered to accept a new tenancy but the Plaintiff had wrongfully refused and that consequently he was entitled to remain in occupation for a further term of 9 years as if a new tenancy had been created in his favour. He also urged that the notice served was inadequate. It is plain that no question of notice arises, as the suit has been brought on the termination of the tenancy; if in law the tenancy has terminated, the Plaintiff is entitled to eject the Defendant without service of notice to quit. Consequently the only question for consideration is whether the provision in the lease operated as a renewal clause and entitled the Defendant to continue in occupation for a second term of 9 years. This question has been answered against the Plaintiff by both the Courts below. On the present appeal it has been argued that the kabuliyat has been mis-interpreted by the Courts below and that in substance there was no renewal clause of the scope alleged by the Defendant.

The kabuliyat states that after the termination of the tenancy the Defendant would make a দোসরা বন্দোবস্ত. The Courts below have taken this to mean a fresh settlement on the same terms as the first settlement. Mr. Gupta has contended that the expression দোসরা বন্দোবস্ত is really ambiguous, that it means in essence a second settlement and that such settlement need not be on the same terms as the previous settlement but may be a different settlement. In support of this argument he has invited our attention to two kabuliyats, one executed by the vendor of the Defendant in favour of the Plaintiff on the 19th April 1903 and another executed by a previous tenant of the disputed land in favour of the Plaintiff on the 5th January 1901. Mr. Gupta has contended that as the term দোসরা is really ambiguous, evidence is admissible to show its true meaning as used in the contract under consideration, and in support of this contention, he has relied upon a decision of the Judicial Committee in Watcham v. The Attorney-General of African Protectorate (1). Lord Atkinson stated in that case the principle that when the instrument contains ambiguity, evidence of user under it may be given in order to show the sense in which the parties used the language and their intention in executing the instrument, whether the ambiguity be patent or latent. We need not discuss whether one deed should be construed with reference to another unless the two form part of the same transaction. [Bhagwat Bhusi v. Sheo Per- shad (2), Kamaleswari v. Ramhari (3), Patiram Banerjee v. Kankinarah Co., Ltd. (4) and Smith v. Chadwick (5)]; but, let us assume that evidence is admissible to explain the meaning of the term দোসরা and that the two kabuliyats mentioned are for this purpose relevant evidence. In each of these documents, the term দোসরা occurs twice. In one place it is stated that after the expiry of the term, the tenant would take দোসরা বন্দোবস্ত from the landlord. In another place, it is stated that if the tenant failed to take a দোসরা বন্দোবস্ত then the landlord would be competent to re-enter on the land and realise rent by granting settlement to দোসরা-প্রজা. It has been contended that when the term দোসরা is applied to a tenant, it means a new tenant who need not necessarily hold on the same terms as the previous tenant. This may be conceded and this may show that the term দোসরা is used in more than one sense according to the context. The question for consideration before us is, what is the implication of the term দোসরা when used in relation to a second settlement. Mr. Sen has contended on behalf of the Respondent that in answering this question, we cannot overlook that if the argument of the Appellant prevails the result will be to nullify the clause which was inserted in the contract plainly for the benefit of the tenant. If দোসরা বন্দোবস্ত might be a second settlement on such terms as might be dictated by the landlord, the latter might destroy the protection afforded to the tenant by imposing terms so onerous and exacting that the tenant could not possibly accept them. We are of opinion that this aspect of the matter must be borne in mind when the contract before us is construed, and we agree with the Courts below that the intention of the parties was that the second settlement should be made on the same terms as the previous tenancy. Consequently the rule enunciated in Lani Mia v. Mohammed Easin Mia (6) on the authority of the decision in Secretary of State for India v. Forbes (7) becomes applicable, namely, that where there is a covenant for renewal, if the option does not state the terms of the renewal, the new lease would be for the same period and on the same terms as the original lease in respect of all the essential conditions thereof except as to the covenant for renewal itself. We hold accordingly that the covenant in this case was a true covenant for renewal on the same terms as before.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 491 OF 1922.

1922,
30, June.

Haji MD. ISMAIL,
1st party, Petitioner,
v.

Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 144, if empowers a Magistrate to stop prayers in a mosque to avoid a breach of the peace—Magistrate's jurisdiction to interfere with a mutwali's administration of wakf property—Proper course for Magistrate, when there is likelihood of breach of peace.

A certain mutwali of a mosque appointed as pesh iman, or the leader of prayers, a certain person, with whom the congregation got dissatisfied. The people therefore refused to read their prayers with him and the matter went so far as to necessitate police interference. Ultimately proceedings under sec. 144, Cr. P. C., were drawn up and the Magistrate passed orders forbidding people of either party to read prayers in the said mosque:

(6) 20 C. W. N. 948 (1915).

(7) 16 C. L. J. 217 (1912).

Held—That the order was a misconceived one. Unless the mutwali was displaced in due course of law, no one had a right to interfere with the management of the trust property. If the effect of the order of the Magistrate was that no Mahomedan would be allowed to say his prayer in the mosque, the order was not justified under sec. 144, Cr. P. C. Such an order is not proper and justified by the law. The proper course for the Magistrate is to find out which party is wrong, and if he finds one party interfering unnecessarily with the exercise of the legal powers of the other party, he ought to bind down that party restraining them from committing any act which may lead to a breach of the peace.

This was a rule granted on the 14th June 1922 against an order of the Deputy Magistrate of Asansol (Mr. J. Dutt), dated the 2nd May 1922, directing under sec. 144, Cr. P. C., that no man of either party will be allowed to read the prayer in the mosque, an application for revision of which order was rejected by the District Magistrate of Burdwan (S. G. Hart, Esq.), on the 26th May 1922.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. K. Fuzlul Huq and Babu Radhica Ranjan Guha for the Petitioner.

Mr. Nag, Counsel, M. Amiruddin Ahmed and Babu Profulla Chunder Ghose for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

SUHRAWARDY, J.—This rule was issued against an order passed under sec. 144,

Haji Md. Ismail v. Munshi Barkat Ali.

Cr. P. C., by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Asansol on the 2nd of May 1922. The grounds upon which the rule was issued are grounds Nos. 1, 3, 5 and 6 of the petition of motion, namely, that the order of the Magistrate was without jurisdiction and that sec. 144, Cr. P. C., was not intended to authorize a Magistrate to stop prayers in a mosque in the manner done in this case. It appears that the Petitioner is the mutwali of a mosque in Raneegunge Kasaipara, by virtue of a wakfnama executed by his grand-father. The Petitioner appointed Hafez Abdus Sobhan as the pesh iman or the leader of the prayers in the mosque sometime ago. The men of the locality followed his leadership for a number of years; but having, as alleged, subsequently discovered that he used to lend money on interest, they refused to read their prayer with him. The matter went so far as to necessitate the interference of the police. Ultimately, proceedings had to be drawn up against both parties under sec. 144, Cr. P. C. No evidence was taken in the case but attempts were made from time to time to bring about a settlement of the dispute between the parties. The learned Sub-Divisional Officer appointed some persons who intervened and brought about a settlement; but it did not last very long for shortly after, the Petitioner again applied for proceedings under sec. 144, Cr. P. C., saying that the second party were about to commit a breach of the peace. On this, the Magistrate passed the following order: "The only course left for me to be taken is to pass orders under sec. 144, Cr. P. C., to the effect that no man of either party will be allowed to read the prayer in the above mosque." Against this order, the Petitioner moved the District Magistrate of Burdwan who tried to bring about a settlement again by asking the Maho-medan Marriage Registrar of Raneegunge 'to report on the subject of dispute and to arrange for the parties to come to terms.' The Marriage Registrar reported that the Petitioner was the mutwali of the mosque and that he was unable to bring about a settlement of the dispute. The learned District Magistrate thereupon declined to interfere with the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer passed under sec. 144, Cr. P. C.

It seems to me that the order is a misconceived one. The Petitioner is the mutwali of the mosque and, unless he is displaced from his position as such, no one has any right to interfere with the management of the trust property. As the Superintendent or the mutwali, apparently, he has the right to appoint a servant of the mosque and, if the congregation is not satisfied with the appointment made by him, the only course open to them would be to go to the proper Court to have the mutwali removed or to make him adopt the proper and legal mode of managing the wakf property. But I doubt not that they have no right to interfere with his management and to threaten to commit a breach of the peace if a certain person appointed as the pesh iman is not removed from office. Apart from the question whether the public will follow the lead of Sobhan, the conduct of the Opposite Party seems to me to be far from justifiable as it has resulted in the mosque being practically deserted. If the effect of the order of the learned Magistrate is that no Mahomedan would be allowed to say his prayer in the mosque, I do not think that such an order is justified under sec. 144, Cr. P. C. I do not like to comment on the effect of this order upon the religious sentiments of the people of the locality but I only wish to suggest that such an order is not proper and justified by the law. I may add that the learned Counsel who appears for the Opposite Party admits, in my opinion rightly admits, that the order complained against is indefensible. But he asks us to direct the Petitioner to remove the objectionable iman from office which we are unable to do.

It seems to me that the proper course that the Magistrate ought to follow is to find out which party is wrong and, if he finds on the evidence that the second party is in the wrong and is interfering unnecessarily with the exercise of the legal powers of the first party, he ought to bind down the second party restraining them from committing any act which may lead to a breach of the peace. With these observations, I make the rule absolute and set aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Asansol, dated the 2nd May 1922 passed under sec. 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

J. N. R. Rule made absolute.

[APPEAL FROM PATNA.]

LORD ATKINSON.	RAI BAIJNATH
LORD PHILLIMORE.	GOENKA, since deceased
SIR JOHN EDGE.	(now represented
MR. AMEER ALI.	by Kedarnath
1922,	Goenka), Appellant,
Heard, 20, January.	v.
Judgment,	MAHARAJA SIR RAVA-
9, February.	NESHWAR PRASAD
	SINGH, Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec 47—Suit to recover possession of undivided share, decreed—Partition pending suit—Execution of decree—Decree-holder, if may obtain possession of the allotted share in execution—Decree, if must be amended for the purpose—Separate suit, if necessary.

Pending a suit to set aside a sale for arrears of revenue of an undivided share in a Mahal and for joint possession thereof, the Collector effected a partition of the estate under the Estates Partition Act and gave the purchaser separate possession of specific lands. The Court decreed the suit without being informed of the completion of the partition by the Collector. This decree being reversed by the High Court was ultimately restored with certain modifications by the Privy Council. The decree-holder having applied for execution of the decree and for possession of the lands which had been substituted by the partition for the undivided share decreed by the Court:

Held—That the decree could be executed by giving the decree-holders possession of the substituted lands, the question as to what were the substituted lands being a matter which arose within the meaning of sec. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code between the parties relating to the execution and satisfaction of the decree; neither an application to the Judicial Committee to vary their decree nor a separate suit for establishment of title was necessary.

These are two consolidated appeals from one judgment and two decrees, both dated the 24th April 1917, of the High Court of Judicature at Patna, which reversed a judgment and two decrees made by the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr on the 22nd February 1916.

The facts which are fully set out in the judgment of the Board were briefly as follows :—

The Respondents were part proprietors in Mahal Bisthazari.

Some of the proprietors obtained a separation of accounts under Act XI of 1859 and the Respondents were entitled to share in the ijmali.

In September 1901 the ijmali was sold for arrears of revenue and was purchased by Baijnath Goenka. Fifteen sharers in the ijmali then filed a suit to have the sale set aside.

Meanwhile partition proceedings had been taking place for some years and were completed prior to 30th June 1904, the date on which the Subordinate Judge gave judgment in the above suit and set aside the sale.

From this decision Baijnath Goenka appealed successfully to the High Court, but on the 3rd February 1915 the decree of the Subordinate Judge was restored by an Order in Council.

The ijmali sharers then applied for execution of the decree of 30th June 1904. Their application was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge but his decision was reversed by the High Court at Patna, (Chamier, C. J., and Roe, J.) and the present consolidated appeals were now brought by Baijnath Goenka.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and B. Dubé for the Appellant.—Referred to Ravaneshwar Prasad Singh v. Baijnath Ram Goenka (1) and contended that the decree-holders could not be awarded possession of lands which under the partition proceedings had been substituted for those previously held by them, inasmuch as the latter alone were specified in the decree of 30th June 1904.

Sir George Lowndes, K. C., and Mr Wallach for the Respondents.—Sec. 47 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code 1908 provides for matters of this kind being dealt with in execution but in any case a decision on this point is not essential because the decree actually refers to "the properties in dispute."

Mr. DeGruyther replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—These are three consolidated appeals. It will be convenient to dispose at once of the appeal in which Musammat Bibi Nabi Zohra is the Appellant. That appeal is not supported, and will be dismissed with costs.

In the other two appeals which will now be considered, Rai Baijnath Goenka was the Appellant; he is now dead, and is represented by his minor son through his mother and guardian, his next friend. These two consolidated appeals are from two decrees, dated the 24th April 1917, of the High Court at Patna, which reversed the decrees, dated the 22nd February 1916, of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr, by which the Subordinate Judge dismissed applications by the Respondents here or those whom they represent for the execution of a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr of the 30th June 1904, which on the advice of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had, by an order of His Majesty in Council of the 3rd February 1915, been restored, except as to villages Matasi and Mirzagunj.

In order that the questions in dispute in these appeals may be understood, it is necessary to refer briefly to some facts and to the history of the litigation in which these appeals have arisen.

Mahal Bisthazari, in the District of Monghyr, which included 360 villages was jointly owned by a number of persons, including the Respondents or those whom they represent. The owners of the specified but undivided shares had applied for and obtained from the Collector a separation of accounts under Act XI of 1859. There was left a large area of the Mahal called the ijmali, or joint share, the owners of which remained jointly liable for the revenues due, or to become due, in respect of that area. The Respondents or those whom they represent owned in the ijmali share 14 annas, 1 dam (pucca) out of 16 annas (pucca) of village Lohara, and shares in village Padmaot and other villages. The revenue due in respect of the ijmali share was in arrear in 1901, and the ijmali share was sold by the Collector by auction on the 9th September 1901, and was purchased by Baijnath Goenka, who was placed in possession as the purchaser. Applications to the Collector for the partition of Mahal Bisthazari had been made in 1876, and the proceedings to partition were continued under the Bengal Estates Partition Act, 1897. The partition had not been completed on the 9th September 1901, but it had been completed before the decree of the Subordinate Judge of the 30th June 1904 was made in suit No. 596 of 1902.

In 1902 the Respondents or those whom they represent and other share owners brought suit No. 596 of 1902 against Baijnath Goenka to have the sale of the 9th September 1901 set aside, and to obtain possession, and the Subordinate Judge, by his decree of the 30th June 1904, set aside the sale and decreed possession and mesne profits in favour of the Respondents, the mesne profits to be ascertained in execution. The Subordinate Judge, when he made that decree, apparently had not been informed that the Collector had completed the partition, or indeed that proceedings for partition had been commenced. He made his decree in favour of each Plaintiff or set of Plaintiffs in the suit for possession of his respective share as if no partition had taken place. The shares specified in his decree are the shares to which the Plaintiffs would have been entitled respectively if no partition had taken place, and sec. 26 of the Estates Partition Act, 1897, was not in the decree complied with. Baijnath Goenka appealed from that decree to the High Court at Calcutta, and that High Court, holding that the sale was valid by its decree of the 1st May 1907, set aside the decree of the 30th June 1904 of the Subordinate Judge. From that decree of the High Court at Calcutta, the Respondents appealed to His Majesty in Council. That appeal to His Majesty in Council came before the Board in 1915, and the Board taking the same view of the irregularity and invalidity of the sale of the 9th September 1901, upon which the Subordinate Judge had made the decree of the 30th June 1904, advised His Majesty that the decree of the High Court at Calcutta should be set aside and that the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be restored, except as to the villages Matasi and Mirzagunj, as mentioned in the order of His Majesty in Council of the 3rd February 1915. The Board in so advising His Majesty was unaware of the proceedings for partition, and was not informed by the parties or by any one of those proceedings.

After the order of His Majesty in Council of the 3rd February 1915 had been made, the Respondents applied to the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr for execution of the decree of the 30th June 1904, and for possession of the lands which had been substituted by the partition for the shares which they had been entitled to before the partition. Baijnath Goenka objected, and the Subordinate Judge, being of opinion that he could not, in execution of the decree of the 30th June 1904, grant possession of the substituted shares, as they were not the shares mentioned in the decree of the 30th June 1904, and that the decree-holders could not get possession of the substituted shares without bringing a regular suit to establish their title to them, by his decree of the 22nd February 1916, dismissed the applications for execution. From that decree of dismissal the Respondents appealed to the High Court at Patna. The appeals were heard together, and it was contended on behalf of Baijnath Goenka that the decree of the 30th June 1904 could not be executed, and that it would be necessary for the Respondents here either to get that decree varied by an application to the Judicial Committee, or to establish their titles by a suit. The learned Judges of the High Court at Patna held that the decree of the 30th June 1904 could be executed by giving possession of the substituted shares, and that an application to the Judicial Committee was not necessary, nor was a separate suit necessary, and by their decree of the 24th April 1917 they allowed the appeals and directed the Subordinate Judge to restore the applications for execution to his pending file and to hold the enquiries necessary for ascertaining which were the shares which by the partition had been substituted for the original shares. From these decrees of the 24th April 1917, Baijnath Goenka brought these two consolidated appeals.

Their Lordships agree with the High Court at Patna that the decree of the 30th June 1904 could be executed by giving these Respondents respectively possession of the substituted shares, and that no application to the Judicial Committee was necessary. The questions as to what were such substituted shares were questions which arose within the meaning of sec. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, between the parties and related to the execution and satisfaction of the decree of the 30th June 1904.

At the conclusion of the arguments in these two consolidated appeals their Lordships were informed by counsel that no stay of execution having been granted, the decree of the 30th June 1904 has been executed pursuant to the directions given in the decree of the High Court at Patna of the 24th April 1917.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that these two consolidated appeals should be dismissed with costs.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

SUIT No. 890 OF 1917.

PROMATHA NATH
MULICK
v.
PRADYUMNA KUMAR
MULICK and anr.

Rights of a shebait of an idol to impose restrictions on the powers of subsequent shebait—Acceptance of benefits conferred by a gift by the shebait—Effect of such acceptance on the restrictions imposed by the gift.

A Hindu governed by the Dayabhaga School established certain family deities, but imposed no condition as to their location. His son acquired a piece of land and erected thereon a separate Thakurbari for one of the deities. By a declaration of trust he declared that he, his heirs, executors, representatives and administrators should for ever hold the land to and for the use of the deity, that the Thakur should be located and worshipped in the premises and that the Thakur should not on any account be removed therefrom unless and until a similar or better Thakurbari was built. The grandsons of the founder separated and the palas of worship were divided. One of the said grandsons, not having got any part of the family house, removed elsewhere and built himself a separate residence, where he wanted to remove and worship the Thakur during his turn of worship, but was prevented by his co-sharers on the strength of the above declaration:

Held—That the founder of the idols having imposed no condition as to their location, it was not open to any subsequent shebait to impose restrictions which would fetter those who subsequently as heirs of the founder became shebaita. The said grandson is therefore entitled to remove the Thakur from the Thakurbari to his own house during his turn of worship.

GOSSAMI SRI GRIDHARIJI v. ROMANLALJI GOSSAMI (1) distinguished.

Quære:—Whether it is open to the shebaita to take for the Thakur the benefit of the Thakurbari without conforming to the restrictions imposed by the deed of trust.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. R. Das and Mr. S. K. Chakravarti, Counsel, appeared for the Plaintiff.

Mr. B. Chuckerbutty and Mr. H. D. Bose, Counsel, represented the Defendant Pradyumna Kumar Mullick.

Mr. N. N. Sircar and Mr. R. N. Banerjee, Counsel, represented the Defendant Monmotha Nath Mullick.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The Plaintiff in this suit seeks a declaration that he is entitled to remove certain deities named respectively Thakur Sree Sree Radha Shamsunderjee, Thakurani Sree Sree Radharanee and a Saligramsila known as Sree Sree Raj Rajeswar from the Thakurbari, where they are ordinarily located, to his residence during his turn of worship.

The deities above-named were established by one Mati Lal Mullick, the grandfather of the Plaintiff and of the second Defendant and the great grandfather of the first Defendant. During Mati Lal's life-time the deities were located in his family dwelling-house in Pathuriaghata Street. Mati Lal died in 1846 leaving a widow Sreemutty Rangomoni Dassi and an adopted son, Jadulal Mullick aged two years. Mati Lal left a Will, dated the 3rd September 1846 and thereby appointed his wife, so long as Jadulal did not attain the age of 20, malik or proprietor and attorney for the protection and care of the whole of his estate. And he left certain funds out of which his wife was to defray the expense of the daily sheba and of the festivals of the Thakur and Thakurani so long as his adopted son had not attained the age of 20 upon the happening of which event he directed his wife to make over the whole of the property to him fully. Jadulal, who attained his majority, pulled down the family dwelling-house and rebuilt it partly on No. 67, Pathuriaghata Street, and partly on No. 7, Prasanno Kumar Tagore Street. Jadulal who on Mati Lal's death became shebait of the deities acquired a piece of land, No. 1, Prasanno Kumar Tagore Street, and erected thereon a Thakurbari for the Thakur Radha Shamsunderjee and located and worshipped this deity there. By a declaration of trust, dated the 26th April 1888 Jadulal declared that he, his heirs, executors, administrators and representatives should for ever hold this land to and for the use of the Thakur Radha Shamsunderjee to the extent that the Thakur might be located and worshipped in the premises. A power was reserved by the instrument to the settlor, his heirs, executors, administrators or representatives to revoke the trusts upon providing and dedicating for the location and worship of the Thakur another suitable Thakurbari of the same or greater value and the settlor provided that unless and until this was done the Thakur should not on any account be removed from the said premises. The settlor further provided that he should be the sole shebait of the idol during his life-time and that his male heirs should alone be the shebaita after his death and that in case of disagreement between any future shebais the worship should be conducted by yearly turns. Jadulal died on the 5th February 1894 leaving him surviving his widow Sreemutty Saraswati and three sons Anathnath, who has since died leaving the first Defendant his heir, the Plaintiff and the second Defendant and four daughters. He left a Will but I understand that the provisions are not material for the purposes of this suit. In a subsequent appointment of new trustees of the Will the Thakurbari appears as secular property of the estate. An amicable partition took place between Jadulal's three sons and the Commissioner of partition, the late Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, made his award as Commissioner of partition on the 30th June 1899. By the said award the properties which formed the family dwelling-house of Jadulal were allotted to Anathnath Mullick and the Plaintiff got no part therein and ultimately built himself a residence in Cornwallis Street where he now resides. Disputes arose between the parties to this suit with regard to the provisions of the Will of Sreemutty Rangomoni Dassi, the mother of Jadulal who had devised certain property for the worship of the Thakur Radha Shamsunderjee and in Suit No. 799 of 1904 Mr. Bhupendra Nath Basu was appointed to frame a scheme of worship of the deity and to partition the residue of Rangomoni's estate. Mr. Basu directed that the worship of the deity should be performed by the parties and their heirs by turns of one year each, the 1st turn commencing from the 1st Baisack 1317 and going to the 1st Defendant in the present suit, the 2nd turn going to the present Plaintiff and commencing on the 1st Baisack 1318 and the 3rd turn going to the 2nd Defendant and commencing on the 1st Baisack 1319.

The dispute in this suit arose in this way. It appears that the Plaintiff during his turns of worship in 1911 and 1914 removed the deities to his house in Cornwallis Street and worshipped them in the Puja Dalan which he had made there but when his turn of worship came round in 1917 the 1st Defendant, who was then of age, and the 2nd Defendant refused to allow the deities to be removed relying upon the provisions of the deed poll executed by Jadulal on the 26th April 1888.

The dispute which I have got to decide is whether the Defendants were right in their refusal or whether the Plaintiff is entitled at his recurring turns of worship each 3rd year to move the deities to Cornwallis Street and worship them there.

The Plaintiff says, amongst other things, that the accommodation is not adequate at the Thakurbari and that there is no sleeping accommodation for him there and no conveniences and that he cannot properly carry out the worship there. The plan of the Thakurbari is Ex. I and the other plan, which is before me, shows the position of the Thakurbari with regard to the premises allotted to the 2nd Defendant and to the 1st Defendant's father.

The issues framed were as follows :—

(1) Was the deed of the 26th April 1888 a pretended document? Was it executed with a view to getting exemption from Municipal rates and taxes as alleged in para. 8 of the plaint?

(2) What is the effect of this deed upon the true construction thereof?

(3) Did the taking of the Thakurs to the Thakur Dalan constitute a removal thereof within the meaning and intention of the said deed?

(4) Was the Thakurbari ever treated as the secular property of Jadulal, if so what is the legal effect thereof?

(5) Was there any understanding as alleged in para. 14 of the plaint?

PROMATHA NATH MULLICK v. PRADYUMNA KUMAR MULLICK.

(6) Was there any consensus by all the members of the family as alleged in para. 23 of the plaint? What is the effect thereof? Did the consensus, if any, extend beyond the temporary taking of the Thakur from the Thakurbari to the Thakur Dalan?

(7) Could the Thakur Radha Shamsunderjee be severed from his consort the Thakurani and from the other ancillary deities?

(8) Were the Thakurs established by Mati Lal Mullick, Radha Shamsunderjee, Radharanee and Saligram?

(9) Is the Plaintiff entitled to remove the Thakurs to his residence No. 129, Cornwallis Street during his turn of worship?

(10) Is the Plaintiff estopped by his conduct from questioning the validity of the deed of dedication?

(11) Has the Defendant No. 2 replaced the silver articles referred to in para. 33 of the plaint? Which of these articles came into the hands of Defendant No. 2?

(12) Is the Plaintiff entitled to any and what damages?

So far as issues Nos. 1 and 4 are concerned the only evidence is that of the Plaintiff who stated that the Thakurbari was really secular property and that the deed of 1888 was prepared to avoid payment of rates and that his father on principle (what principle is not clear) applied for remission of rates thereon and not because it was dedicated property. He also stated that the Thakurbari was treated by himself and the other trustees as secular property and that his father told him in 1892 that he had made the deed of 1888 to exempt the building from taxation and that to effect this he had to state that the Thakurs would be permanently located there and that he did not mean to keep the Thakurs there himself. I am not prepared to accept this evidence as correct and as sufficient to displace the express provisions of the deed poll of 1888. I answer issues Nos. 1 and 4 in the negative.

The 3rd issue deals with the removal of the Thakurs and it will be convenient to state here the evidence with regard to this. The Plaintiff stated that when No. 67 was demolished the Thakurs remained in one room which was not demolished and that they were removed from room to room as convenience required during the rebuilding; that subsequently they were moved from No. 1 to No. 7 and to No. 67 passing through the public street even in his father's life-time. The Defendant Pradyumna denied that when they were moved to No. 7 and to No. 67 they were taken through the public street and stated that since he attained his majority they had not been moved from the Thakurbari. He stated that when they were moved they were kept in the Puja Dalan and taken back to the Thakurbari as soon as the ceremonies were over.

Upon the evidence it would appear that since the Thakurbari was built the Thakurs were not removed therefrom (apart from the removals by the Plaintiff of 1911 and 1914) except for the purposes of festivals when they were taken back to the Thakurbari at the conclusion of the festivals and it would appear that this has been discontinued.

I am not prepared to say that the removal for festivals constituted a removal within the meaning of the deed or that it affects the question which I have to decide.

With regard to the 5th and 6th issues the evidence does not support the understanding alleged in para. 14 of the plaint or the consensus alleged in para. 23.

With regard to the 10th issue no question of estoppel arises. The answer to the 1st point of issue No. 11 is in the affirmative and the 2nd point of this issue does not arise.

The real questions that arise for decision are contained in issue Nos. 2 and 9.

There is no dispute that the Thakurs were established by Mati Lal and that he imposed no condition as to their location and consequently I do not think that it was open to any subsequent shebait to impose restrictions which would fetter those who subsequently as heirs of the founder become *shebait*s.

But it is said that it is not open to those who are *shebait*s to take for the Thakurs the benefit of the Thakurbari founded and built by Jadulal without conforming to the restrictions which he imposed by the deed with regard to the removal of the Thakur Sree Sree Radha Shamsunderjee and reliance is placed on the case Gossami Sri Gridharaji v. Romanlalji Gossami (1).

But in the present case no question arises as arose in Gossami Sri Gridharaji v. Romanlalji Gossami (1), where the claim was to the shebaitship and to the temple. The only question that arises for my decision is whether Jadulal who was not the founder of the Thakur could impose a condition as to the location of the Thakur which would bind *shebait*s who came after him. I think he could not and I answer issues Nos. 2 and 9 accordingly. It may be that some day the question may arise for decision whether the Thakur can change his location every 3rd year and still keep his Thakurbari and he may be put to his election with regard to this but as already stated this question does not arise in the present suit as no claim is being made to the Thakurbari adversely to the Thakur. In the view I take issues Nos. 7 and 8 do not arise. With regard to the 12th issue this has not been argued and the only damages that I can see the Plaintiff has suffered are the loss of such spiritual benefit as may ensue from worshipping the Thakurs, and this cannot be measured in money. I accordingly declare that the Plaintiff is entitled to move the Thakurs from the Thakurbari during his turn of worship and the Defendants must pay the costs to be taxed on Scale No. 2.

Noabad lands, settlement of—Right of Government in respect of such lands.

Semle:—Government stands in the same position as an ordinary zemindar in respect of Noabad lands which it has a right to settle with whomsoever it likes.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Kumud Nath Roy, Officiating Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah Chittagong, dated the 28th of February 1920.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Jogesh Ch. Roy and D. L. Kastgir and M. Md. Nurul Huq Choudhury for the Appellants.

NAZIR AHAMAD CHOUDHURY v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

Babus D. N. Chakravarty, Surendra Nath Guha and Chandra Sekhar Sen for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit for possession of certain plots of land, on the allegation that some of the plots were reformations on their own land, that the remaining plots were accretions to the lands reformed, and that the Defendant No. 1, the Secretary of State, settled the lands with Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 disallowing Plaintiffs' petition for settlement.

The Court below gave a decree to the Plaintiffs for possession of the portion of the land found to be reformation of Plaintiffs' land and dismissed the suit in respect of the portion which was claimed as an accretion. The portion which was found to be reformation of Plaintiffs' land consisted of dags Nos. 6889 and 6890 and portion of 6888, and the claim of the Plaintiffs was decreed in respect of such plots. The appeal, therefore, relates to the land situate to the north of dag No. 6891, and to the west of the northern part of dag No. 6888 and the land to the west of the dag No. 6890.

Cross-objections have been preferred by the Respondents Nos. 2 to 5 with whom the lands were settled by the Defendant No. 1 (the Secretary of State) and relate to dag No. 6889, the northern portion of dag No. 6880, and the northern portion of 1762. There is no cross-objection with regard to dag No. 6890.

As the cross-objection raises the question of the correctness of the finding of the Court below in favour of the Appellant we would dispose of the cross-objection first.

It is contended on behalf of the Respondents that the kabuliyat, dated the 19th March 1916 (Ex. 5) under which the Defendants obtained a lease from some of the Duttas who had 12 annas share of the lands, refer to the entire dag No. 1762 which comprises these plots and dag No. 203 (which is not covered by the suit).

It is urged that the description in the document is absolutely clear, that there being no ambiguity, the Court ought not to have ordered a local investigation; and that the entire dag No. 1762, according to the description, falls within the kabuliyat. The kabuliyat, no doubt, refers to dag No. 1762, but it is contended on behalf of the Appellant that the word "entire" refers only to dag No. 203 which does not relate to any land in suit. However that may be, the kabuliyat purports to demise lands "appertaining to Taraf Azam Fateh" which the lessors obtained under the pottah, dated 8th Joist 1210 Magli (20th May 1848). The lease therefore was in respect of lands of Taraf Azam Fateh only; it had nothing to do with Taraf Joy Narain Ghoshal.

It is also to be observed that the pottah, dated 20th May 1848 [Ex. 1 (1)] refers only to dag No. 6888 (the southern portion) which corresponds only to part of dag No. 1762. Neither 6889 nor 6890 ever belonged to Mahal Azam Fateh, but belonged to Taluk Joy Narain Ghoshal. The kabuliyat, dated 19th March 1916 does not mention Joy Narain Ghoshal at all.

It is contended on behalf of the Respondents that the area mentioned in the kabuliyat would cover the entire land. That is not clear. But even if it is so, the boundaries also should be taken into consideration. The western boundary of 6891 would not cover the entire western boundary of 1762; it would cover only a portion of the western boundary. Having regard to the facts mentioned above, and taking the document as a whole, we think that the Court below is right in holding that the Defendants' lease did not cover the dags decreed to the Plaintiff, and that the cross-objections must fail.

Turning now to the appeal itself, the first question to be considered is whether the land in respect of which the Plaintiffs' claim has been disallowed, was an accretion to the plots of land which have been decreed to the Plaintiffs and whether the Court below is wrong in holding that it was not an accretion.

It is contended on behalf of the Appellants that there was no defence by the Government that the accretion was not gradual and imperceptible, nor was there any evidence in support of such a case and we were referred to the evidence of some of the witnesses to show that the accretion was gradual and imperceptible.

It appears, however, that all the lands now in dispute were in existence in 1839. They were submerged shortly after, and re-appeared shortly before, the Cadastral Survey. They can be and have been identified by the Commissioner who in his report (which has not been challenged by either party) states that they are reformations in situ of Mouza Kattali. In a suit brought by the Duttas in 1914 in respect of dags Nos. 6882 and 6888 they stated that the western portion thereof had been washed away by the sea long ago, and reformed in situ since a few years before the Cadastral Survey. If the lands are reformations in situ, the question whether the accretion was slow and imperceptible or not does not arise. The Court below has held that they are reformations in situ of lands belonging to the Government and has also found that there was no gradual and imperceptible accretion.

The Plaintiff No. 2 Gouri Charan ad-

mils in his deposition that the "western portion of the disputed lands which have filled up is Government Noabad property." He adds, "I tried to have a settlement of it as an accretion to the kaimi mahal on the east but got none, I am ready to pay fair and equitable rent for that portion" and in another place he admitted, "the said accreted land is Noabad land but I cannot say if it is Shabek Noabad."

We accordingly agree with the finding of the Court below on this point.

It is contended, however, that even if the land is not an accretion to the Plaintiffs' land, they were entitled to the settlement of the land on the ground of contiguity and possession. It has been strongly urged before us that the Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 obtained settlement from the Secretary of State (Defendant No. 1) on the representation that the entire dag No. 1762 belongs to the Plaintiffs and that therefore the ground upon which the lands were settled with Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 fails.

There is no doubt, as would appear from the application for settlement made by the Defendants, dated the 8th November 1916, that they prayed for settlement on the ground of their having obtained pottah of the lands from the Duttas, and having been in possession of the "said land along with the dag No. 1762 as appertaining to the said *raiya*ti." In the order-sheet of the khas tehsildar, dated 23rd April 1917, it is stated that "Faizali and others claim it on the ground of possession as contiguous to the lands of their jote comprising C. S. Plot No. 1762," and again "Faizali is possessing not only the decretal land but the whole of C. S. Plot No. 1762 and the present Plot No. 18."

The khas tehsildar evidently was under the impression that the lease obtained by

NAZIR AHAMAD CHOUDHURY v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

Faizali and others from the Duttas comprised the whole of Plot No. 1762. He says "Durga Charn Dutta relies more upon the boundary than upon the plot number given in schedule of the jote lease granted to Faizali and others. But from the jote lease itself it is quite clear that the whole of Plot No. 1762 and a portion of khass Plot No. 692 were settled with Faizali and others." The khass tehsildar took a kabuliyat from the Defendants on that very day (23-4-1917). The Collector approved of his order on the 14th May 1917. The khass tehsildar received rent on the 8th June 1917 from the Defendants, though a pottah was granted later, on the 26th July 1917. The Commissioner upheld the order of the Collector on the 17th August 1917. The khass tehsildar who has been examined in the present case says that he "did not make any inquiry as to any accretion as it was not an accretion" and that "other lands in the char were also let out not on the ground of accretion but on the ground of contiguity and possession."

The Secretary of State in his written statement stated: "The said land being situated contiguous west of C. S. Plot No. 1762 which is covered fully by the lease of Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 of date 6th Chaitra 1277 granted by Defendants Nos. 7, 8 and 11 was settled with Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 on the 23rd April 1917."

There is no doubt, therefore, that the lands were settled with the Defendants on the ground of contiguity and possession.

It is contended on behalf of the Respondents that the land might have been settled on the ground of its being contiguous to Plot No. 6891 which belonged to Razak Ali—one of the persons who obtained settlement of the land from Government. But the order-sheet of the tehsildar shows that the land was settled on the ground that it was contiguous to dag No. 1762.

Then it is contended on behalf of the Respondents that the Plaintiffs were not in possession of these lands. The Respondents do not say that they were in possession of these lands before they obtained settlement. What they say is that the lands were sandy char and not capable of cultivation, and that at that time no cultivation was possible without raising an embankment, and, so, after obtaining settlement, they constructed bunds and brought the land under cultivation.

Reference is made also to an application submitted by the Duttas in Settlement Case No. 200 of 1916-17, dated the 17th February 1917 in which it was stated that the land on the western part does not yield any paddy even now. "It remains under deep water in the rainy season. I possess by catching fish, etc."

Reference is also made to certain ek sona (এক সোনা) kabuliyats produced on behalf of the Plaintiffs and certain other documents to show that the western boundary of the land dealt with by them was described as dhum char or sandy char. It is accordingly contended that the lands were not cultivated and that they were not in possession of the Plaintiffs.

In the 10th column of Ex. 25 (dispute in settlement operation) however, it is stated that the khass mahal dag No. 18 (which comprises the whole of the disputed land) was formerly possessed by Ram Chandra Dutta and that then it was possessed by Faizali and others since it was leased to them. It also appears from the report in the Settlement Case of 1909-1910 that certain persons the Duttas among them had trespassed on the lands of dags Nos. 644 and 692 without the permission of Government and had sowed paddy therein. Dag No. 692 comprises the disputed lands and it is stated in the report with reference to dag No. 692 that "there will be about 500 aris of paddy." This report was on the 4th November 1911.

The learned Pleader for the Respondents Nos. 2 to 5 contended that the report referred to Plots Nos. 6889 and 6890; but it refers to dag No. 692 which comprises all the plots. The khas tehsildar in his deposition says that he learnt on inquiry that paddy was being grown on the land for the previous two or three years. This inquiry he made just before the settlement with the Defendants.

Now, the Defendants, as already stated, do not claim to have been in possession prior to their obtaining settlement from Government and if any one exercised possession over the lands, it must have been the Plaintiffs who were in possession of the lands to the east. The evidence shows that, at any rate, the land was under cultivation for two or three years before 1917, even if we agree with the Court below in holding that the oral evidence as to possession adduced by both parties is not satisfactory. The learned Subordinate Judge however in considering the question of limitation says:—

"On the evidence and probabilities, therefore, I find this issue partly for the Plaintiffs."

It is contended on behalf of the Respondents that the Court below merely meant to hold that the suit was not barred with respect to the plots for which the Plaintiffs got a decree in that Court. But that is not so, as appears from other passages in the judgment, namely, "I have disbelieved the Defendants' possession, even bonâ fide possession, in any portion of the disputed land," and again "The mere fact of possession cannot give Plaintiffs any right as they have not admittedly acquired any right by adverse possession against the Defendant No. 1 who represents the Government."

We are accordingly of opinion that the Plaintiffs were in possession of the lands. The lands were contiguous to the lands of the Plaintiffs which were in their possession. The Court below however has disallowed the claim for these plots as they are Noabad lands.

The question, therefore, for consideration is whether in respect of Noabad lands, Government has a right to settle lands with whomsoever it likes.

That the settlement was made on the ground of contiguity and possession, is clear from the proceedings, and reference is made even to sec. 13 of Reg. VII of 1882 in the order of the khas mahal tehsildar. But it has been contended before us by the learned senior Government Pleader that if Government had an absolute right to settle the land with anybody it liked, it was immaterial what procedure was adopted by the khas mahal officer; and that if any erroneous procedure was adopted by the officers of the Government, it would not create any estoppel or confer any right upon the Plaintiffs to claim settlement.

The determination of the precise nature of the right of Government in Noabad lands is not free from difficulty. The nature and incidents of Noabad lands have not been discussed by the Court below. The Plaintiffs do not appear to have raised the question as their case was that the land was an accretion and that they had a right to settlement. They did not pray in their plaint for settlement of the land on the ground of contiguity and possession though the facts were stated. Subsequently they applied for amendment of the plaint but the application was disallowed.

The learned Pleader for the Appellants referred to sec. 5, Chap. II of the Bengal

NAZIR AHAMAD CHOUDHURY v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

Survey and Settlement Manual, 1917 (p. 2) where it is laid down that "the assessment of revenue in temporarily settled private estates will always be made under Reg. VII of 1822. In such estates where there are proprietors but no tenants, the whole settlement will be carried out under that Regulation;" and contended that if the lands are to be settled under Reg. VII of 1822, then the Appellants have a right to settlement because under sec. 13 of the Regulation, possession is not to be disturbed. But sec. 5 of the Settlement Manual deals with the assessment of revenue, and the question before us is whether in Noabad lands the Government stands in the same position as an ordinary Zamindar.

The cases of Mahomed Israile v. Wise (1) and Watson & Co. v. Rani Brojo Soon-duree (2) referred to on behalf of the Appellant have no bearing upon the present case. The first deals with a lakherajdar's right to settlement, and the latter with the right to permanent settlement of char lands under Reg. XI of 1825. The case of Mohini Mohan v. Juggobundhu (3) also relates to a case of accretion under Reg. XI of 1825. On behalf of the Respondents we were referred to certain passages from "selections from the Records of the Board of Revenue L. P. correspondence on the settlement of the Noabad land in the District of Chittagong." The question of whether Noabad taluk in Chittagong should be treated as "estates" is discussed in Mr. Carlyle's letter to the Commissioner of Chittagong dated the 6th July 1891 (See Vol. V, p. 143). We have not however been referred to any definite and clear decision regarding Noabad lands. It appears from the letter of the Government of Bengal to the Board of Revenue dated the 3rd November 1891 (Vol. V, pp. 158-159) that the Noabad Talukdars will not have three incidents of the proprietary right, viz., the right to partition, to a separate account and to malikana. All these refer to Noabad Taluks. The cases of Prasanna Kumar Roy v. The Secretary of State (4) (known as the Ramoo case); and Haider Ali v. Secretary of State (5) and Gangadas Sil v. The Secretary of State (6) also relate to Noabad Taluks. The learned Government Pleader referred to Sarada Charan Mitra's Land Tenure in Bengal, 2nd Ed., p. 42 where it is stated that "Reg. III of 1828 declared the absolute right of Government to those Noabad lands." Reg. III of 1828 does not however appear to refer to Noabad lands in Chittagong; sec. 13 of the Regulation refers to lands in the Sunderbans. He also referred to Rampini's Bengal Tenancy Act, 4th Edition, p. 17 where a reference is made to letter No. 1729-173 dated the 24th July 1893 from the Government of India to the Government of Bengal in which it was stated that Noabad Taluks in Chittagong were to be treated as "tenures" and not as "estates." That indicates that Government is a proprietor in respect of Noabad lands. In the case of Dharma Charan v. Ramesh Chandra (7) the learned Judges observed that Noabad land is land which forms part of a Government estate. If Noabad is a Government estate, it would be similar to a Government khas mahal. In Aminaddi v. Tarini Charan (8) it was observed that as proprietor of the khas mahal, Government stands in the same position as a private Zamindar.

As stated above, the real contest in the lower Court did not turn upon the nature and incidents of Noabad lands; and although the matter has been argued before us on appeal, and the question is one affecting a large number of interests in Chittagong, it cannot be said that the evidence in the lower Court was directed to the point upon any comprehensive or exhaustive scale. We can only give our decision upon such materials as have been placed before us in the present case.

Having regard to the letter of the Government referred to in Rampini's Bengal Tenancy Act mentioned above, and the observation in the case of Dharma Charan v. Ramesh Chandra (7), it should be taken that the Government stands in the same position as an ordinary Zamindar in respect of Noabad lands. And if that is the position of the Government, it may settle lands like any ordinary Zamindar. In the case of Sheikh Hazari v. Khanoo Mirda (9) it was held that a Collector is not bound to grant a pottah of Government lands to the party in possession. We must accordingly hold that the Defendant No. 1 was not bound to settle the lands with the Plaintiffs.

Settlements made by the Government however appear to be made according to certain rules, and in the present case appear to have been made with reference to Reg. VII of 1882. The lands were settled with the Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 on the ground of contiguity and possession. So far as Plots Nos. 6888, 6889 and 6890 are concerned the settlement with the Defendants must fall through, having regard to the finding of the Court below with which we agree. The plots of land which are the subject-matter of the appeal were also undoubtedly settled with them on the ground of contiguity and possession. It is so expressly stated in the proceedings. It is accordingly urged on behalf of the Appellants that when it is found that the settlements with the Defendants were granted under an erroneous impression, we should declare that the Plaintiffs are entitled to settlement if contiguity and possession are to be considered in settling lands. The Court however can declare the title of the Plaintiffs to settlement only if they have got a legal right. As it is, we are unable to make any declaration in favour of the Plaintiff. It is for the Government to consider whether it should rectify its previous erroneous assumption by settling the land with the Plaintiffs.

The Plaintiffs are entitled to get mesne profits in respect of the portion of the properties decreed in their favour from August 1917 up to the date of delivery of possession, or until the expiry of three years from the date of this decree, whichever event first occurs with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum. There will be no decree against the Defendant No. 1 as the Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 agree to pay the entire amount of mesne profits payable to the Plaintiffs. The mesne profits are to be ascertained by the Court below and final decree will be passed by that Court for the amount so ascertained in favour of the Plaintiffs. The case will be sent down to the lower Court for that purpose.

The result is that, subject to the order for mesne profits mentioned above, both the appeal and the cross-objection are dismissed.

The Appellant must pay 5 gold mohurs as costs of the Secretary of State for India and the Respondents Nos. 2 to 4 must pay one gold mohur to the Appellant.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES

GOURI KUMARI DAS,

 v.
 INDRA KUMAR MUKHO-PADHYA and anr., Defendants, Respondents.

Hindu law—Debutter property—Order of succession of shebait as laid down in deed of endowment, if may be altered by donor.

It is clear law that the donor of a debutter property can make no change in the order of succession of shebaits as laid down in the deed of endowment in the absence of a reservation to that effect in the deed.

These were appeals against the decrees of Babu Parada Kinker Mukherjee, District Judge of Zillah Burdwan, dated the 31st March 1920, reversing the decrees of Babu Hem Chandra Mitra, Munsif, 1st Court of that place, dated the 29th of January 1919.

The facts of the case material to this report will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu Bankim Chandra Mookerjee for the Appellant.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy, Gopendra Nath Das and Pramatha Nath Bando-padhyia for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

WOODROFFE, J.—These are three appeals Nos. 1416, 1514 and 1515 of 1920 which are analogous though a question arises in the second and the third appeal as to whether an appeal lies, a question which does not arise in the first appeal.

The first appeal arises out of a suit brought by the second wife of one Uma-charan Dey for recovery of rent. An objection was taken by the Defendants in that suit that the Plaintiff-Appellant had no title to sue as the shebait and that the title of shebait was in the elder widow of Uma Charan Dey. Uma Charan Dey executed a deed of gift in respect of his movable and immovable properties, constituting the same debutter in the year 1915 and making himself the first shebait. That document provided for the devolution of the office of shebaitship as follows : “ After my demise my eldest wife Srimati Raman Kumari Dasi shall be the shebait of the deities and after her my youngest wife Srimati Gouri Kumari Dasi shall be the shebait. After the death of my both wives if there be any son born from the womb of my said wives then that son will be the shebait and for want of that if I take any son as dattak the said dattak son shall be shebait. If through misfortune there be no son born of me and in case I could not take a son as dattak, then the shebait or shebaits selected by me, by a Will or any other document, of my properties, he or they shall be shebaits. The debutter properties will be managed by the shebaits after me.” Now it is clear law that Uma Charan Dey could not make any change in the order of succession of shebaits unless he had made a reservation to that effect in the deed and the question before us in this appeal is whether upon a true construction of this document there had or had not been such a reservation as entitled him to appoint, as he subsequently did, his second wife as shebait. In my opinion he had no authority to appoint his second wife as shebait as he did in the year 1917. Upon the construction of this document I think that after the death of GOURI KUMARI DAS v. INDRA KUMAR MUKHOPADHYA.

Uma Charan Dey his eldest wife was to be the shebait and after her his younger wife and after the death of both of them either the natural son or the adopted son of the creator of the trust and it is only after the two wives had taken in the order mentioned in the document and in the absence of any natural or adopted son that provision was made in the deed for selection of a shebait. In my view therefore Uma Charan Dey was not competent to pass over the eldest wife who was the shebait under the deed of 1915 and to make an appointment in favour of the younger wife by the deed of 1917.

But then it is said that for 19 months of the period for which rent is claimed the rent accrued due during the life-time of Uma Charan Dey. It is then argued that even if Uma Charan Dey could not validly appoint his second wife to succeed him after his death he might have appointed his second wife to act during his life-time. Assuming that he could have done this and assuming that the Plaintiff-Appellant could have during the life-time of Uma Charan sued to recover on behalf of the deity the rent accruing due during the life-time of Uma Charan Dey we have it as a fact that no such suit was brought. Now there is an arrear of rent for the period as mentioned. The question arises who is entitled to sue for recovery of such arrears which involves the discussion of the question with which I have already dealt and the answer to which is that only the senior widow can sue to recover such rent on behalf of the deity.

Therefore in my opinion this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

As regards the two other appeals a further objection is taken on the ground that no second appeal lies and I am disposed to think that there are some grounds for this contention. But it is not necessary to decide this question because on the merits the two appeals must fail for the reasons which I have given in dealing with the construction of the deed of dedication in the first appeal. The second and third appeals are also dismissed with costs.

The connected Rules are discharged. No order is made as regards the costs of the Rules.

CUMING, J.—I agree.

APPEALS FROM ORDERS

No. 1, Appellant,

FATEH SINGH NAHOR

and ors., Respondents.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), sec. 4, sub-sec (1)—Decision of question of title, how far discretionary with Court—Sub-sec. (3), Court if bound to take evidence or give reasons for refusing to decide questions of title or for holding that the insolvent has a saleable interest in any property and ordering its sale—Nature of materials upon which Court may come to such decision.

A. was adjudicated an insolvent, and a Receiver was appointed. After various intermediate proceedings the insolvent's brother B. appeared in Court and laid claim to certain properties. The Judge put to him certain questions and elicited certain answers. The Receiver also submitted a report and a petition on the same date. The Judge after considering the report and the petitions submitted and after hearing pleaders refused to go into the question of title and decided that the insolvent had a saleable interest in the properties. He thereupon directed the Receiver to sell the insolvent's right, title and interest in the properties under the provisions of sub-sec. (3) of sec. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

JITENDRA NATH BHATTACHARJEE v. FATEH SINGH NAHOR.

Held—That though the Court had power under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 4 to decide a question of title, it had full discretion to follow the course laid down in sub-sec. (3), i.e., to refuse to decide questions of title and to direct sale of insolvent's right, title and interest, whatever that might be. Where the Court has reason to believe that the debtor has a saleable interest in any property, it may without further enquiry sell such interest. The matters stated in the report of the Receiver and the answers given by the claimant when questioned by the Judge, were sufficient materials for his coming to the conclusion that the debtor had a saleable interest in the property.

These were appeals preferred, one against the order of J. McNair, Esq., District Judge of Zillah 24-Parganahs, dated the 25th of September 1920, and the other against the order of H. M. Veitch, Esq., 1st Additional District Judge of Zillah 24-Parganahs, dated the 22nd of December 1920.

The facts of the case are briefly as follows:—One Girindra Bhattacharjee was adjudicated an insolvent by the District Judge of 24-Parganahs on the 29th November 1919 and a Receiver was appointed. After various intermediate proceedings the insolvent's brother Jitendra Bhattacharjee appeared in Court on the 25th September 1920, and laid claim to certain properties. Both he and the creditors then apparently asked for an enquiry into the title to the disputed properties under sec. 4 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920). The Judge put certain questions to Jitendra and recorded the purport of the answers in the order. The Receiver too submitted a report and a petition on that date. The Judge after perusing all the petitions, and the Receiver's report, and presumably considering also the answers mentioned above, decided on the said 25th September that in view of his heavy file, he would not go into the question of title and under the provisions of sec. 4 (3) directed the Receiver to sell the insolvent's right, title and interest in the properties for what they would fetch. Thereafter, Jitendra applied to the Additional District Judge, in whose file the case then was, for stay of sale and the said Additional Judge passed an order to the effect: 'Let the sale be stopped pending inquiry about insolvent's interest in the properties.' On the 22nd December 1920 when the matter came up before his successor, he held that his predecessor did not seem to have seen the District Judge's previous order (dated the 25th September) and his order was passed ex parte, and that in any case it could not be regarded as a definite order setting aside the District Judge's order, and he accordingly dismissed the application for further enquiry under sec. 4 (1). The claimant Jitendra thereupon preferred the present two appeals to the High Court against the orders, dated the 25th September 1920 and 22nd December 1920 respectively.

Dr. Sarat Ch. Basak (with him Babu Sarat Ch. Mookerjee) for the Appellant.

Babus Banku Behari Mullick Chowdhuri, Jitendra Nath Roy, Peary Mohan Chatterjee and Krishna Lal Banerjee for the Respondents.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Sarat Chandra Mookerjee) for the Appellant.—Everything was done in my absence. The Receiver's report was ex parte and I had no opportunity to meet the facts stated in the Receiver's petition submitted on the 25th September 1920. The Court also says that I appeared for the first time on the 25th September. I had not even a copy of the Receiver's report or the petition. Everything up to that time had been done behind my back and on that day orders were passed for selling the properties.

[Babu Jitendra Nath Roy for one of the Respondents.—The Appellant was served with notice in the beginning of September 1919 as the order-sheet will show (vide orders Nos. 3, 5 and 7, pp. 1 and 2 of the Paper Book). But he appeared in Court more than a year after that, i.e., on 25th September 1920. If everything was done in his absence he could thank himself alone for it.]

Sec. 4, sub-sec. (3) says: "But has reason to believe that the debtor has a saleable interest." But the condition is "where the Court does not deem it expedient or necessary to decide any question of title, etc." This condition must be satisfied. Sufficient reasons should be given for holding that it is not necessary or expedient to decide questions of title and evidence should be taken for coming to the conclusion that the debtor has a saleable interest in the properties. But this has not been done nor have sufficient reasons been given for adopting the course laid down in sub-sec. (3). The Judge said that he had no time to go into the question of title. But that is not sufficient reason or ground for deeming it inexpedient or unnecessary to go into questions of title. The Judge formulates as reason for rejecting the prayer for enquiry into title "other urgent work on the file." That is not at all a sufficient ground for proceeding under sub-sec. (3). Cites Re : Umbika Nandan Biswas (1).

The Court was wrong in saying that the Appellant in reply to its question had said that he was joint with his brother Harendra. He had said that he maintained his younger brother Harendra as the latter did not earn anything.

It is very necessary that the question of title should be gone into to do complete justice between the parties. And the Receiver too wants enquiry into title.

(1) I. L. R. 3 Cal. 434 (1878).

Cites Joy Chandra v. Mahomed Amir (2) and Nilmoni v. Durga Charan (3). The order passed by Mr. McNair as District Judge was superseded by the subsequent order of the Additional District Judge.

If without enquiry into the insolvent's title, his right, title and interest, whatever they might be, are sold, the jewellery shop is bound to suffer. It was a flourishing business. Its credit has already suffered heavily on account of this affair and it will further suffer.

Babu Banku Behari Mullick Chowdhuri for the Respondent No. 1.—Some of the creditors are willing to purchase the right, title and interest of the insolvent whatever they may be. One who knows what an unusually large number of insolvency applications are made at Alipur, will realise that that alone is a sufficient ground for refusing to decide questions of title in these cases. If the Judge has to do that, he will be wholly occupied with this work alone all the year round.

Babu Jitendra Nath Roy for the Respondent No. 2f.—The Appellant was duly served with notice before 8th September 1919 and he chose to stand by for more than a year. When he appeared for the first time on the 25th September 1920, he said that he did not appear so long to avoid spending money for nothing and being harassed. He did not plead want of knowledge or that no notice was served on him (vide order-sheet, p. 23 of the Paper Book).

Heaviness of the file was not the only reason—there were other reasons given. There were sufficient materials before the Judge for proceeding under sub-sec. (3).

(3) 22 C. W. N. 704 (1915).

JITENDRA NATH BHATTACHARJEE v. FATEH SINGH NAHOR.

The Receiver's report was accompanied by a petition verified by him and the facts stated in that verified petition could be acted upon by the Judge. The Judge was also guided by probabilities of the case, because the jewellery shop belonged to the insolvent's father and it was in the benami of the Appellant because the said father was a Government servant. The answers given by the Appellant to the questions put to him by the Judge could be taken as good evidence. It is discretionary with the Court to sell the undetermined right, title and interest of the debtor when he does not deem it expedient to enter into questions of title. He has given some reasons and the Receiver's verified petition, the answers given by the Appellant, and the petitions of the other creditors and the verbal submissions by the Receiver and the pleaders were sufficient materials for the Court's decision to proceed under sub-sec. (3). No separate evidence or further enquiry was necessary. Besides, the heavy nature of the file in this particular district is a very good reason for leaving questions of title alone for the time being.

The Appellant says that the lower Court wrongly recorded the answer given by him with regard to his brother Harendra. It is wholly an after-thought. The Appellant did not challenge it or take any exception in that respect in the long petition of objections which he submitted thereafter.

It was not at all necessary to decide questions of title. That would have been making a complicated matter still more complicated, and would have unnecessarily caused waste of a large amount of money. The ruling cited was a decision under the old law. The jewellery shop cannot suffer. It is not under attachment nor is it in the Receiver's possession. Its credit cannot have suffered. No notice has been hung up outside the shop to show its connection with any insolvent. Some of the creditors are prepared to purchase the undetermined right of the insolvent instead of spending good money over the determination of his right. If that only is sold, we believe we will all be paid in full. The lower Court was right in refusing to decide questions of title and in ordering sale of the insolvent's undetermined right, whatever that might be.

Babu Peary Mohon Chatterjee (with him Babu Krishna Lal Banerjee) for the Respondent No. 18.—The Judge has given very cogent reasons for refusing to decide the question of title in p. 23 (b), Reads. He said it would involve a very long and cumbrous process, and would be attended with hardships and difficulties and costs. Therefore he deemed it inexpedient to do so. That was a sufficient reason for proceeding under sub-sec. (3).

The Court, no doubt, under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 4 of Act V of 1920, has full power to decide a question of title, but the Judge has in the present case followed the course laid down in sub-sec. (3).

It is contended that no sufficient reasons are given for adopting this course, and that evidence ought to have been given before doing so. But the Court, where it does not deem it expedient or necessary to decide any question of the nature referred to in sub-sec. (1) but has reason to believe that the debtor has a saleable interest in any property, may without further inquiry sell such interest in such manner and subject to such conditions as it may think fit.

It appears that notice was served upon Jitendra Nath Bhattacharjee who is the Appellant before us, on the 8th September 1919. He did not appear in Court until the 25th September 1920. The learned Judge put to him certain questions and the purport of the answers is mentioned in his order. Upon a consideration of the matters stated in the report of the Receiver and of the answers given by the Appellant when questioned by the learned District Judge, he came to the conclusion that the debtor had saleable interest in the property.

At one stage of the case, it is true, the creditors wanted to have a decision on the question whether the properties were joint family properties or not; but we understand that the creditors are now willing to purchase whatever interest the insolvent had in the property.

In these circumstances, we do not think that we should interfere with the order of the Court below.

The appeals are accordingly dismissed with costs, two gold mohurs, to be divided among the persons who have appeared.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Kali Prasanna Sen, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zilla Sylhet, dated the 26th August 1919, affirming the decree of Babu Bhuban Mohon Sinha, Munsif, 3rd Court at Habiganj, dated the 24th February 1919.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Broja Lal Chakravarty and Preonath Dutt for the Appellants.

Babus Jogesh Chandra Roy and Birendra Kumar Dey for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of and declaration of title to lands and we deal with only one point in this case. The question which arises is this. It is admitted that the property which is the subject-matter of the suit belonged to a man of the name of Madan. The Plaintiffs-Appellants are the purchasers from the daughter's sons of the grandfather of Madan. The Defendants claim under purchase from the mother of Madan. Madan, the son died admittedly after the re-marriage of his mother. Now the question arises which of the parties has acquired title by their purchase; and this depends upon the question whether the daughter's sons of the grandfather of Madan were the heirs of Madan or whether Madan's mother was his heir. Both Courts have found in favour of the latter alternatively and accordingly dismissed the suit and the appeal. The question therefore which we have to decide is whether or not Madan's mother who is prima facie his heir under the Hindu law was incapable of inheriting by reason of the second marriage. The learned Judges of the two lower Courts have decided the case after having referred to two decisions, one of this Court, namely, the case of Akorah Sooth v. Boreanee (1), and the other a Full Bench decision of the Bombay High Court, namely, the case of Basappa v. Rayava (2). The learned Vakil for the Appellants has sought to distinguish these decisions on the ground that they deal with cases governed by the Widow Re-marriage Act (XV of 1856) and his contention is this that the Act was passed for the purpose of removing a bar or disqualification; that if there is no bar to a re-marriage then the Act does not apply and that such is the case here according to the evidence which has been accepted, that widow re-marriage was permissible amongst the caste to which Madan belonged.

HAR KISHORE SEAL v. THAKUR DHAN BAISHNUB.

On the other hand it is contended for the Respondents that the Act is of universal application and authority is relied upon in support of the respective contentions of both sides. In our opinion it is not necessary to decide the point. Whatever view we accept as regards the argument addressed to us on the point this appeal must fail.

It is conceded that if the Act applies then the decision of this Court to which we have referred is conclusive on the point which is now before us. We are of opinion that that decision is also an authority in favour of the Respondents and against the Appellants even on the assumption of the Appellants' argument that the case is not one under the provisions of that Act, because, in our opinion, it must be taken that apart from any special provisions of that Act it was decided in that case that a mother may inherit from her son after re-marriage. It has been held that under the general Hindu law the widow is entitled to succeed to the estate of her son. That case was followed by a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court and we agree in the decision of the learned Chief Justice in that case when he stated that whatever might have been his view had the matter been uncovered by authority it would (in his opinion) be wrong to disregard a rule affecting rights of property established as far back as, 1868 by the decision of a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Akorah v. Boreanee (1).

In our opinion therefore the appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Bengal Municipal Act (III of 1884, B. C.), secs. 261 and 273 (2)—“Using a place as a kiln for making bricks,” meaning and effect of—“Kiln,” what it actually signifies—Country panjas or clamps, if come within the definition of “kiln.”

A certain person was prosecuted for burning bricks in panjas in contravention of sec. 273 (2) of the Bengal Municipal Act, which prohibits using any place, within the Municipal limits, “as a kiln for making bricks without a license.”

Held—That the definition of a “kiln” points to a structure, which is of a permanent nature. The process used for making bricks (e.g., by panjas or clamps) did not amount to using the place as a kiln and hence no offence was committed.

If, however, there is a doubt about the interpretation of the word "kiln," the words of the section ought not to be strained unduly against the Defendant. In a case of this kind, it is not the function of the Court to strain the meaning of the particular section of the Act, because if the particular process in question is in the opinion of the authorities such a process as ought to be brought within the purview of the section, it is open to them to amend the Act.

This was an appeal preferred on the 3rd April 1922 against an order of acquittal made by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Ghatal (Babu Nirmal Kumar Sen), on the 3rd January 1922.

The facts are briefly as follows :—

Under the sanction of the Chairman of the Ghatal Municipality, one Trailakhya Nath Chatterjee was prosecuted under sec. 273 (2) of the Bengal Municipal Act in the Court of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Ghatal for having, without a license as required by sec. 261 of the Act, burned bricks in a kiln in a place called Konnagore within the said Municipality.

The accused was acquitted by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate and the present appeal was preferred by the Local Government against the said order of acquittal.

Mr. Orr for the Crown (Appellant).

Babus Manmatha Nath Mookerjee and Satindra Nath Mookerjee for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by the Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal, against a decision of a Sub-Deputy Magistrate, 3rd class, of Ghatal, and the matter arises out of a prosecution, in which one Trailakhya Nath Chatterjee was the Defendant, under sec. 273 (2) of the Bengal Municipal Act, which provides that, "whoever, in a Municipality, without a license, uses any place for any of the purposes specified in sec. 261, or sec. 263, or uses any place as a kiln in contravention of the provisions of sec. 262A and so on, shall be liable, for every such offence, to a fine." And the material part of the sec. 261 which is applicable to this case is as follows :—"Within such local limits as may be fixed by the Commissioners at a meeting, no place shall be used without a license from the Commissioners, which shall be renewable annually, for any of the following purposes, namely, as a tannery, slaughter-house, or kiln for making bricks, pottery, tiles or lime."

The allegation in this case was that the Defendant had, without a license, used a place as a kiln for making bricks. The brick-field was said to be about 50,000 square feet and the method of manufacturing bricks was, what is called in this country, in "panjas," or as it has been said by one of the witnesses "clamps." The description of a "panja" or "clamp" is given by the witness, Joy Kumar Sarkar, who was called for the Defendant. He says "there is a difference between a kiln and a clamp. In a "clamp" or "panja" the fuel and bricks are placed in alternate layers. In a kiln, which means a room or masonry enclosure with or without roof, the bricks are stacked without any fuel and burn from places or fuels arranged below the stack, in which the fires are lighted and kept up with fresh supplies of wood or coal till the bricks are burnt." Then he says, "we never say Bull's clamp but Bull's kiln and we say 'country clamp' which does not mean a kiln." Then in describing the process adopted by the Defendant, he said, "I would not say that the bricks were burnt there in kilns, but they were burnt in "clamps" or country "panjas."

SUPERDT. & REMEMBR. OF LEGAL AFFAIRS, BENGAL v. TRAILAKHYA NATH CHATTERJEE.

On the other hand, it has been contended that this process of burning bricks by placing the fuel and the bricks in alternate layers so that they reach up to a considerable height and cover a considerable area really in effect amounts to the creation of a kiln. The Magistrate decided in favour of the Defendant holding that this process was not a kiln and the Legal Remembrancer has appealed. The definition of a kiln in the Oxford Dictionary is as follows:—"A furnace or oven for burning, baking or drying of which various kinds are used in different industrial processes." Then it gives an instance, "An oven or furnace for baking bricks, tiles or clay vessels, or for melting the vitreous glaze on such vessels."

That definition in my opinion points to a structure, which is of a permanent nature. Further I was struck with the account which the learned Vakil read from the Encyclopædia Britannica in volume 4 at page 520. It runs as follows:—"It is evident that the best method of firing bricks is to place them in permanent kilns, but although such kilns were used by the Romans some 2,000 years ago, the older method of firing in "clamps" is still employed in the smaller brick fields, in every country, where bricks are made. These clamps are formed by arranging the unfired bricks in a series of rows or walls, placed fairly closely together so as to form a rectangular stack. A certain number of channels or fire-mouths are formed in the bottom of the clamp and fine coal is spread in horizontal layers between the bricks during the building up of the stack. Fires are kindled in the fire-mouths and the clamp is allowed to go on burning until the fuel is consumed throughout. The clamp is then allowed to cool, after which it is taken down and the bricks sorted." In that description there is clearly a distinction drawn between that which is a "clamp" and that which is a "kiln," and the process of making bricks by means of "clamps" seems to be older than the kilns which were used by the Romans about 2,000 years ago. Giving to the word "kiln" its ordinary meaning, I am inclined to the opinion that the Magistrate was right in his construction. If, however, there is a doubt about it, the words of the section ought not to be strained unduly against the Defendant. In my judgment there is force in the argument which the learned Vakil presented, upon the construction of this part of the section. The words are, "using a place as a kiln for making bricks." His argument was that if it had been intended to prohibit the manufacture of bricks not only by means of a kiln but also by means of the older system of "clamps," it would have been sufficient for the Legislature to provide that no place shall be used without a license from the Commissioners for the purpose of making bricks; consequently, we must take it that the words "no place shall be used as a kiln for making bricks," were advisedly used by the Legislature having regard to the ordinary meaning of the word "kiln" as distinguished from "clamps." In a case of this kind, in my judgment, it is not the function of the Court to strain the meaning of the particular section of the Act, because, if the process which is aimed at in this prosecution is really a nuisance and if it is in the opinion of the authorities such a process as ought to be brought within the purview of the section, it is open to them to amend the Act.

For these reasons, in my judgment, the appeal must be dismissed.

PANTON, J.—I agree.

K. RAMALINGA ANNAVI v. NARAYANA ANNAVI.

by them in the manner pointed out by him. The next item which the Subordinate Judge took up for examination was the sum of Rs. 19,725, with which he deals in the same exhaustive manner and shows how that sum was divided and how it was applied by the persons among whom the division was made. He shows that out of that sum Rs. 7,400 were set apart to Ramalinga, Rs. 7,400 to Lakshmivaraha and that Rs. 4,925 were given to Defendant No. 2. After an examination of the documents connected with this division he came to the conclusion that Lakshmivaraha received his share and applied the same to his uses, and that, therefore, he is not entitled to any share in the sums allotted to the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2. With regard to this item the High Court take a different view. They hold, upon a letter which Krishna Annavi No. 2, the first Defendant's father, wrote to the manager of the mortgagor on the 26th March 1909, saying that, "We consent to receive for the total debt due by the Zemindar a certain rate of interest," that there was no such division as the first Court had found. With regard to Ex. C., on which practically the decision of the High Court in respect of this particular item rests, it seems sufficient to say, as the Subordinate Judge properly observes, that a mere statement of Krishna Annavi No. 2 cannot outweigh the other facts.

With regard to the item of Rs. 6,550, the Subordinate Judge has applied the same method of examination and the High Court have affirmed his view. Regarding another item consisting of Rs. 1,795, due from a Mutt on a mortgage, the Subordinate Judge held that it had been divided among the parties in accordance with the allotments shown in the list. The learned Judges of the High Court have set aside his finding upon what appears to their Lordships a certain misapprehension of the facts. These facts are fully set out in the judgment of the first Court, and do not require repetition.

Regarding item (No. 2) in the first list, which amounted to Rs. 7,594, due to the Annavi family from a Zemindar, it appears that Rs. 2,847 were set apart to Ramalinga and the same amount to Lakshmivaraha and the balance of Rs. 1,898 was given to the second Defendant. Respecting this item the Subordinate Judge deals with it equally, exhaustively and holds—

"In this item, Rs. 2,847-15-9 was set apart to Ramalinga Annavi and the same amount to Lakshmivaraha Annavi. The balance, Rs. 1,898-10-6, was set apart to the 2nd Defendant. Exhibit XI is a pro-note for Rs. 3,185-2-1 executed to 1st Defendant's father, Krishna Annavi, by Sivan Sethuroyar on 13th August 1897. This amount is described as his father's share in the amount due under a pro-note executed to Ramalinga Annavi and on account of a chit conducted by Sivan Sethuroyar. This pro-note was attested by Lakshmivaraha Annavi and Ramakrishna Annavi. Ex. XI (a) is a pro-note for Rs. 3,846-13-8 executed by Sivan Sethuroyar on 5th August 1900, for the amount due under Ex. XI. Sivan Sethuroyar's son, Sundaramsubramania Sethuroyar executed to Krishna Annavi, the 1st Defendant's father, the pro-note, Ex. XI (b), on 28th July, 1903, for Rs. 4,671-7-0 being the Principal and interest due under Ex. XI (a). Defendants' 7th witness, Mana Rama Aiyar has attested Exs. XI and XI (b). Defendants' 5th witness, Jagannadha Aiyar who was Kariyasthan under Sivan Sethuroyar, swears that he wrote Exbt. XI and that first Plaintiff's father and second Defendant attested it. This witness also wrote the pro-note, Ex. XII, which was executed to second Defendant by Sivan Sethuroyar on the same date as Ex. XI, namely 13th August 1897, for Rs. 2,122-6-8. The amount is described in that document as his share. This pro-note was renewed in second Defendant's name on 5th August 1900, by Ex. XII (a) for Rs. 2,564-8-11 and a pro-note similar to Ex. XI (b) was executed to second Defendant for Rs. 3,114-4-0 on 28th July 1903. The pro-note executed to first Plaintiff's father on the dates of Exs. XI and XII has not been produced. But it is mentioned in the pro-note, Ex. XIII, for Rs. 3,844-13-8, which was executed to first Plaintiff's father on 5th August 1900, at the same time as Exs. XI (a) and XII (a). Ex. XIII (a) was executed to first Plaintiff's father in renewal of Ex. XIII by Sivañ Sethuroyar's son for Rs. 4,671-7-0 on the same date as Exs. XI (a) and XII (b). These documents are proved by Defendants' fifth witness, Jagannadha Aiyar. Defendants' 6th witness, Ganapathi Aiyar, wrote Exs. XI (a), XII (a) and XII.

K. RAMALINGA ANNAVI v. NARAYANA ANNAVI.

"On the first of December 1903, Sivañ Sethuroyar's son, Sundaramsubramania Sethuroyar, executed the sale-deed, Ex. XIV, for Rs. 15,350 in respect of certain lands in the village of Vellanguli, that is, the properties described in Sch. VIII, and a land in Uppubiyanputtur in the Oorkadu Zemin, that is, item No. 1 in Sch. XII (b). The sale deed was executed jointly to first Plaintiff's father, first Defendant's father and second Defendant. The recital in the sale-deed is that out of the sale price, Rs. 7,000 was paid in cash and that the balance, Rs. 8,350, was credited towards a portion of the amount due to the vendees."

In respect of this item the High Court took a different view. They state their reasons thus :—

"There is nothing in the document to show that this amount was not the common joint property of all the three persons. The balance of Rs. 8,350-0-0 was credited towards a portion of the amount due to the vendees under various promissory notes and a razi-namah decree. There is nothing in the document to show the debts that were due to each individual co-parcener. There is no doubt, therefore, that the property purchased under Ex. XIV was treated as common property. The purchase in the names of all the co-parceners jointly is inconsistent with the case set up by the Defendants so far as this property is concerned. The Subordinate Judge says that the three persons purchased the property with the intention of dividing it along with the other lands of the family which were left undivided. If this is so, there is nothing to suggest that this property was not intended to be treated as the other immoveable properties in which they were equally interested. There is nothing to support the inference of the Subordinate Judge that this property should be divided in the proportion in which the debts were divided. We therefore hold that the Plaintiffs are entitled to a half share in the property purchased under Ex. XIV."

In their Lordships' opinion the view expressed by the Subordinate Judge appears to be fully warranted by the evidence.

The theory that in 1895 there was only a partial division of the outstandings which only related to three items, whilst the rest were left joint, is not consistent with the evidence, nor indeed logical. The Defendant No. 2, in his written statement, gives the reason why the joint money-lending business was wound up. He says that in that year or about that time Lakshmivaraha desired to make some gifts of money to his daughter: the other members objected to those monies being paid out of the joint funds; it was then decided that the business should be wound up, and the shares of the different parties ascertained and divided: that Lakshmivaraha thus obtained his share, and out of that share made the gifts which are now impugned by the Plaintiffs. This statement is supported by Defendant No. 2 in his evidence. The reason for the division is clear and straightforward, and explains the subsequent conduct of the parties to the transaction. The deliberate preparation of the lists with their precise details and systematic apportionment of shares, the setting apart of a sum for worship, and the allotment of a sum to Muthuswami disproportionate to the share to which he was legally entitled, for reasons which do not seem at all illegitimate, betoken a design to wind up altogether the family money-lending business and divide the outstandings. That those outstandings were, in fact, divided and were taken by Ramalinga, Lakshmivaraha, and the second Defendant in certain specific shares which roughly came to three-eighths to the first two and two-eighths to Rama Krishna is proved beyond doubt. When subsequently the three combined in fresh purchases or mortgages they contributed towards such acquisitions in proportion to the shares they acquired on the division of the outstandings.

In connection with these purchases, the Subordinate Judge pertinently observes :—

“ In all these documents there is reference to Thamgal bhagam (your share). If there was no division, this recital would not have been made. The object of taking the signatures of the other two co-parceners in the documents executed to each of them was to prevent them from afterwards contending that the documents were taken without their knowledge.”

And the oral evidence shows that the rents and issues of the properties so acquired were taken by the parties in those shares. The High Court does not seem to have attached much importance to this circumstance. But the enjoyment of the subsequent acquisitions is strong evidence of the fact, the Subordinate Judge has found, that they bought them in those shares and enjoyed them in those shares.

It has been strongly contended, on behalf of the Plaintiffs, that Narayana was of age in 1895 and was not a party to the partition, and is, therefore, not bound by it. But it is conclusively proved that Narayana acquiesced in and adopted the acts of his father not only in his life-time, but also since his death. He cannot now turn round and repudiate the division made in 1895. On the whole, their Lordships are of opinion that the view taken by the High Court of what took place in that year cannot be sustained.

There remain now the two questions, one relating to the validity of the two gifts made by Lakshmivaraha to the fourth Defendant, Ponnu Annal. The first is an assignment of Rs. 5,000 out of the money which fell to the share of Lakshmivaraha due from the Thiruvavuduthurai Mutt. This was done at the instance of Lakshmivaraha. The other is an assignment of a usufructuary mortgage held by him. In the aggregate the two sums amount to Rs. 8,000. The father has undoubtedly the power under the Hindu law of making, within reasonable limits, gifts of moveable property to a daughter. In one case the Board upheld the gift of a small share of immoveable property on the ground that it was not shown to be unreasonable. In the present case, the gifts relate to sums of money. The only question is whether they were reasonable. Both the Courts in India have answered the question in the affirmative and their Lordships have no materials or ground to hold otherwise.

Regarding the prayer for the allotment upon partition of Rs. 2,000 for the marriages of Plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, the High Court disallowed the claim in respect of the prospective marriage, but allowed it for the expenses of the marriage that took place before the decree in the first Court, on the ground that the joint family status was not dissevered until the decree for partition, and that the joint family liability continued until then. This view is opposed to the law laid down in the case of Girja Bai v. Shudashiv Dhundiraj (2), where it was held expressly, that under the law of the Mitakshara, to which the parties in the present case are subject, an unambiguous and definite intimation of intention on the part of one member of the family to separate himself and to enjoy his share in severalty has the effect of creating a division of the interest which, until then, he had held in jointness. This intention was clearly intimated to the co-parceners when the Plaintiff Narayana served on them the notice, Ex. II, on the 30th of July 1909. That notice effected a separation so far as his branch of the family was concerned, and no obligation rested on the joint family in respect of his sons' marriages. The decree of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the claim was therefore correct.

As regards the properties in Schs. XI and XIII, there are not sufficient materials before their Lordships to determine whether they belonged to the joint family or formed the exclusive property of the Plaintiffs. It will be for the first Court to decide the question upon proper materials when giving effect to the decree for partition. But the parties would be well advised to settle it amicably.

It is admitted that the land allotted to the widow of Subramania Annavi (Defendant No. 5), on her decease, became divisible among the heirs of her husband, in other words the male members of the family, parties to this action. To this extent the declaration made by the Subordinate Judge will be varied.

The High Court directed in its discretion that each party should bear his own costs. With that direction their Lordships do not propose to interfere. But having regard to the nature of the contentions, they consider that the Plaintiffs must pay the costs of Defendants Nos. 1, 6 and 4. The Defendants Nos. 1 and 6, who alone impugned the right of Defendant No. 2 to a share in the joint family properties, must pay his costs. The Plaintiffs' cross-appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Their Lordships will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty to set aside the decree of the High Court and restore the decree of the Subordinate Judge, subject to the above variation, with the above directions as to costs.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 1660 of 1916.

TEUNON, J.

RICHARDSON, J.

1918,

21, May.

GURU CHARAN SIRKER,
Plaintiff, Appellant,

v.

UMA CHARAN SIRKER,
Defendant, Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, cls. 20 and 21—Private arbitration award filed and judgment pronounced and decree following, if can be re-opened in subsequent suit to set aside the award and decree—Res judicata.

Matters heard and determined in proceedings under cl. 21 of Sch. II of the Civil Procedure Code are res judicata and cannot be reopened in a subsequent suit between the same parties and brought for the purpose of setting aside the award and the decree following upon the judgment pronounced in accordance therewith.

A proceeding under cl. 21 of Sch. II, C. P. C. is a suit within the meaning of sec. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code.

This was an appeal against the decree of P. C. De, Esq., Covenanted Subordinate Judge of Zillah Nadia, dated the 20th GURU CHARAN SIKKER v. UMA CHARAN SIKKER.

April 1916, affirming the decree of Babu Kumud Nath Roy, Munsif, 1st Court at Kusthia, dated the 22nd of May 1915.

The facts of the case briefly are as follows :—

Appellant and Respondent are brothers. There were disputes between them over their paternal property—it was decided to settle them by arbitration : an arbitrator was appointed, and he gave an award. The Respondent applied in Court to have the award filed under sec. 20 of Sch. II of the Civil Procedure Code. Notices were issued by Court on the other party who objected on the ground that the award was fraudulently obtained. The Court disallowed the objection and filed the award. Then the Appellant sued the Respondent for setting aside the decree of the Court passed in accordance with the award on the grounds that the decree was obtained by fraud.

The learned Munsif of Kusthia did not enter into the merits of the case but held that the subject-matter of the suit was res judicata and dismissed the Appellant's suit and this decision was affirmed in appeal by the Subordinate Judge of Nadia.

The Appellant preferred this second appeal in this Hon'ble High Court.

Babu Shib Prosonno Bhattacharji (with Babu Pashupatinath Sastri) for the Appellant contended that—Proceeding before the first Court filing the award was not a 'suit' and hence the decision in that proceeding was not a bar to the present suit as res judicata. Har Chandra Pratap v. Lal Raghuraj (2) and Kunji Lal v. Durga Prasad (3) were referred to.

Babu Phanindra Lal Moitra, Vakeel, for the Respondent.—Sch. II, Art. 20, sub-cl. (2) shows that the application for filing the award "shall be numbered and registered as a suit," Art. 21 of that Schedule shows "that the Court shall proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award and cl. (2) states "upon the judgment so pronounced a decree shall follow : " definition of decree in sec. 2, cl. (2) shows that it means that it is an adjudication determining the rights of the parties with regard to matters in controversy "in the suit," and sec. 26 states that "every suit shall be instituted by the presentation of a plaint or in such other manner as may be prescribed." The latter portion of this section was added in the present Code of 1908. So an application must be treated as a suit if it is numbered and registered as a suit and if the judgment is delivered it is bound to be followed by a decree.

Under sec. 526 of the former Code there was no provision for passing any judgment and decree on an award. But that is no longer the law. Under the present Code there is no difference between corresponding secs. of 526 and 522 of the old Code.

Even under the Old Code in Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hossain (4) it was held that order under sec. 526 was decree under sec. 522 of the Old Code, the cases of Wazir Mahton v. Chamir Singh (5) and Vyankatesh v. Sakharam (6) are authorities for holding that the judgments on awards are res judicata.

In Mid. Wahid-uddin v. Hakimian (1), it was held that an order under sec. 525 of the old Code rejecting the application is a decree.

Therefore the word 'suit' in sec. 11 of the C. P. C. is wide enough to include proceedings under paras. 20 and 21 of the Sch. II of the Code. The decree passed under sec. 21 of Sch. II was in the nature of a consent decree and no appeal against that decree was allowed in the Code; but order filing the award was appealable. The Appellant did not challenge that order in appeal. The Court which tried the former proceeding is quite competent to decide the present suit. So all the elements of res judicata are present.

The cases cited by the Appellant have no bearing. The case in Har Shankar Pratap v. Lal Raghuraj (2) was under a special Act; it was with regard to an award by the Committee of Oudh Talukdars appointed under sec. 33 of the Oudh Estates Act. The case in Kunji Lal v. Durga Prasad (3) is distinguishable as the order was not followed by the decree.

Babu Shib Prosomno Bhattacharji replied.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

TEUNON, J.—The only question in this appeal is whether matters, heard and determined in proceedings under the 2nd Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, cl. 21, may be re-opened in a subsequent suit between the same parties and brought for the purpose of setting aside the award and the decree following upon the judgment pronounced in accordance therewith.

We have little difficulty in answering this question in the negative.

Even under the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, it was held by the Full Bench in the case of Mohammed Wahid-uddin v. Hakiman (1) that an order refusing to file an award was a decree. In cl. 21 of the 2nd Schedule it is now expressly provided that an order filing an award shall be followed by a judgment and a decree. These provisions and the further provision in sec. 26 that a suit may be instituted otherwise than by presentation of a plaint make it clear that a proceeding under cl. 21 of the 2nd Schedule is a suit and that a subsequent suit brought for the purpose of reagitating the matters therein heard and determined is barred by the provisions of sec. 11 of the Code.

The appeal will therefore be dismissed with costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree as in my opinion the word "suit" in sec. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code is wide enough to include proceedings under paragraphs 20 and 21 of the second Schedule. It is true that the adjudication by which the Court directs the award to be filed is in the form of an "order" from which only one appeal is allowed under sec. 104 (1) (f) and sec. 104 (2). It is also true that upon the order being made, the Court is to pronounce judgment according to the award and that from the decree which follows no appeal is to lie except in so far as the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award. Clearly the decree is in the nature of a consent decree. But inasmuch as the order under which the award is filed is made upon notice to the parties to the arbitration and it is open to any party objecting to the award being filed to prove any of the grounds mentioned or referred to in paragraphs 14 and 15, it seems to me clear that under sec. 11 the bar of res judicata applies to the matters which thus came to be directly and substantially in issue between the parties and that the issues so arising cannot again be raised in a subsequent suit, always assuming that the Court which made the order was a Court competent to try such subsequent suit.

Under Exp. II of sec. 11 competency is to be determined irrespective of any provisions as to a right of appeal.

In the present case it is clear that the suit re-opens questions which were fully dealt with in the order under which the award was filed. It may also be observed that no appeal was preferred from that order. It is sufficient to say that the whole matter was decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction in a former suit. I concur in dismissing the appeal with costs.

Chowkidari Chakran lands within the ambit of a putni, resumed by Government—Respective rights of putnidar and Zamindar in such lands.

The interest of the putnidar in resumed Chowkidari Chakran lands comprised in his putni is derived from the putni itself and nothing else and the Zamindar cannot claim a share in the profits derived from the settlement of such lands and thus in effect to vary the putni.

The law to the contrary laid down in MOHARAJA BIJOY CHAND v. KRISHNA (1) and the decisions followed therein is not correct, in view of the decisions of the Privy Council in RANJIT SINGH BAHADUR v. KALI DAS DEBI (2) and RANJIT SINGH BAHADUR v. MAHARAJ BAHADUR SINGH (3).

These were appeals preferred on the 5th December 1919 against the decrees of the District Judge of Birbhum (P. C. De, Esq.), dated the 13th September 1919, affirming the decrees of the Munsif at Rampurhat (Babu Ram Dulal Deb), dated the 30th September 1910.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Mahendra N. Roy and Priya Sankar Mazumdar for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

These appeals are preferred by the Plaintiff against decisions of the District Judge of Birbhum affirming decisions of the first Munsif at Rampurhat.

The suits were brought to recover khas possession of certain resumed Chowkidari Chakran lands together with mesne profits. The Plaintiff claimed these lands as included in the putni taluk granted to his predecessors-in-interest by the predecessors-in-interest of the first Defendant, who is the Zamindar, by a putni pattah of the year 1853, the Bengali date being the 29th Kartik 1260. It is not disputed that the lands in question were included in the putni pattah but it is said that these lands were not taken into account in settling the rent payable under the pattah and that consequently the Zamindar, the Respondent, is entitled to a share of the rent derived from settling the resumed lands with tenants. No dispute arises with regard to the payment of the Government revenue which has been assessed on the resumed lands and which, under the terms of the putni pattah, is payable by the Appellant. It is conceded that, from the time of the creation of the putni until the lanre were resumed, the Chowkidars rendered private personal services to the putnidar and not to the Zamindar.

The first Court declared the Appellant's title to the lands in suit and decreed khas possession on condition that the Appellant paid to the Zamindar in respect of the resumed lands an additional rent to that named in the putni pattah. The Appellant was awarded mesne profits. The District Judge affirmed this decision and remanded the cases to the first Court (1) for determination of the conditions and terms under which the putnidar was to hold the lands under the Zamindar, (2) for the ascertainment of mesne profits.

The Appellant resists the Zamindar's right to share in the rents and profits derived from the settlement of the resumed lands firstly on the ground that the lands are comprised in the putni pattah and that consequently the rents and profits are his; secondly, on the ground that these rents and profits must be taken as the equivalent of the personal services formerly rendered to him by the Chowkidars prior to the resumption.

The Zamindar Respondent, as already stated, claims a share of the rents and profits as he says that these lands were never taken into account when the jama was fixed and he relies on a long series of decisions, to which we have been referred, as establishing the Zamindar's right to a share of the rents and profits, in addition to the amount payable to the Chowkidari fund under the provisions of Act VI of 1870, unless it can be shown that the lands were taken into account in fixing the jama when the putni was created. These decisions have recently been considered and followed in the case of Moharaja Bijoy Chand v. Krishna (1), which was decided in December 1920, and no useful purpose would, we think, be served by going through them again. They undoubtedly do support the contention urged before us on behalf of the Zamindar Respondent and it is useless to suggest that they are in the main distinguishable from the cases before us. But, with the exception of the case of Moharaja Bijoy Chand v. Krishna (1), above referred to, they were all decided prior to the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Ranjit Singh Bahadur v. Kali Dasi Debi (2) and Ranjit Singh Bahadur v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (3). By the first of these decisions it was for the first time finally established that the Zamindar at the time of the permanent settlement obtained or retained in the Chowkidari Chakran lands situate within the territorial boundaries of a village comprised in his Zamindari an interest capable of being made the subject of a putni lease and in Ranjit Singh Bahadur v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (3), where the nature of the putnidar's rights in resumed Chowkidari Chakran lands was considered, it was laid down that upon the resumption of such lands by Government the rights of the putnidar were those conferred on him by the estate and interest created by the putni lease and that it was this right which was kept alive by sec. 51 of Bengal Act VI of 1870.

By the joint effect of these decisions the putnidar's interest in such lands if, as here, they are comprised in his putni, is derived from the putni itself and from nothing else. This being so it is difficult to see on what principle the Zamindar can claim to vary the putni by enhancing the rent in respect of lands which were included in the original demise even assuming that the profits of these lands were not taken into account in fixing the rent. The learned Vakil for the Respondent has not been able to suggest to us any principle, although by way of analogy he prays in aid the assessment by Government of additional revenue in respect of these lands. This analogy however cannot assist him as the Government's right to make such assessment is derived from the provisions of Act VI of 1870 and is therefore a right conferred by statute.

Under the circumstances stated above we do not think that the decisions relied on by the Respondent Zamindar can be taken now to be correct and the case of Moharaja Bijoy Chand v. Krishna (1) admittedly only follows these decisions. We think it would not be correct to say that the putnidar is only entitled to obtain possession on terms and that the Court is to assess rent on these lands when it has been held that his title accrued from the time of the putni settlement. We agree with the decisions in the unreported cases to which we have been referred, No. 1500 of 1914 and No. 2261 of 1916. In the result these appeals succeed and we set aside that portion of the decision of the District Judge which remands the cases to the original Court to determine the conditions and terms under which the putnidar is to hold the lands under the Zamindar. The rest of the remand order will stand. That portion of the Munsif's decree which imposes on the Appellant, as a condition of obtaining khas possession, the payment of additional rent to the Zamindar Respondent will be set aside. The Appellants will be entitled to their costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 2644 of 1919.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.	} BAMANDAS VIDYA-
PANTON, J.
1921,
Heard, 18 and
19, April.	SAGAR BHATTACHARJA, Plaintiff,
Judgment, 22, April.	Appellant,
	v.
	SADHU MAJHI and
	ors., Defendants,
	Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 50 and 115—Presumption—Record-of-rights—Presumption under sec. 50 if arises after finality of record-of-rights.

After the record-of-rights becomes final in respect of a tenancy under Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the tenant is precluded by sec. 115 from claiming the presumption under sec. 50 of that Act.

This was an appeal preferred on the 12th December 1919 against the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge of Faridpur (Babu Mati Lal Roy), dated the 5th September 1919, modifying that of the Munsif, 3rd Court at Bhanga (Babu Nishi Kanta Banerjee), dated the 2nd April 1919.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen) for the Appellant.

Babu Mukunda Behari Mallik for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of arrears of rent. The Plaintiff also claimed additional rent for additional lands found in the tenant's possession and also enhanced rent for rise in the price of staple food-crops.

It appears that originally there were two holdings, one consisting of 5 bighas

BAMANDAS VIDYASAGAR BHATTACHARJA v. SADHU MAJHI.

1½ cottas at a jama of Rs. 6-5-9 and Rs. 1-12-9 was reserved as hajat. There was another holding of 5 bighas ¾ cottas at a jama of Rs. 6-2-3 and Rs. 2-1-0 was kept as hajat. The total area of the two holdings was 10 bighas 2½ cottas and the jama was Rs. 12-8. The Plaintiff's case was that out of the total hajat of these two jamas, namely Rs. 3-13-9 a sum of Rs. 1-15 was made a part of the current rent and the jama became Rs. 11-7-0 by the amalgamation of the two jamas, taken with Rs. 1-15-0 on account of the hajat, and that there has been an increase in the area of 4 bighas 4½ cottas. The Plaintiff contended that he was entitled to the full hajat rent and additional rent for the additional area at the rate of Rs. 1-9-7 which would be the rate if the entire hajat jama were added to the rent.

The Court of first instance gave a decree to the effect that the Plaintiff was entitled to the full hajat jama, so that he was entitled to the full rent of Rs. 16-5-9 and additional rent for the additional area at Rs. 1-9-7 per bigha from 1321 to 1324. That Court also allowed enhancement at annas two per rupee from 1326.

On appeal the lower Appellate Court held that hajat jama could not be recovered, as it is an amount held in terrorem over the tenant and that the rent recoverable, therefore, was at the rate of Rs. 12-8. The additional rent accordingly was allowed at the rate of Rs. 1-3-9. The learned Judge was of opinion that there was a presumption under sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act arising from the payment of rent at a uniform rate for 29 years preceding the institution of the suit. He accordingly disallowed the claim for enhancement of rent.

Two questions arise for our determination in this appeal. The first is whether any presumption arises under sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in the circumstances of the present case.

Now, it appears that there was a record-of-rights and in the record-of-rights the tenant was shown as an occupancy raiyat and not a raiyat at a fixed rate. Sec. 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act lays down that when the particulars mentioned in sec. 102, cl. (b) have been recorded under Chap. X in respect of any tenancy, the presumption under sec. 50 shall not thereafter apply to that tenancy. There is no question in this case that the record-of-rights is final and that the Defendant is entered therein as only an occupancy raiyat. That being so, we think, having regard to the terms of sec. 115 and the decided cases on the point, that there is no presumption after the publication of the record-of-rights in respect of the ten provisions of sec. 115 from claiming the presumption under sec. 50 of the same Act.

In the case of Pirli Chand v. Basarat Ali (1) the question arose when an application was made under sec. 105. It was held that the presumption did arise under sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Full Bench, however, had to consider the meaning of the word "thereafter" contained in sec. 115, having regard to the decisions in the case of the Secretary of State v. Kajimuddi (2) and the case of Maharaja Radha Kishore v. Umed Ali (3). The learned Judges were of opinion that the decision in the former case disregarded the plain terms of the section which are general in expression, and contain nothing to justify the limited construction that had been placed on them. It has been held in a series of cases that after the publication of the record-of-rights in respect of a tenancy under Chap. X, the tenant is precluded by sec. 115 from claiming the presumption under sec. 50 of the Act. [See Muralidhar Aditya v. Radha Mohan (4), Jagdeo Narain Singh v. Bhagwan Mahto (5), Harihar Persad Bajpai v. Ajub Misir (6), Janki Kuer v. Hiranund Pande (7) and an unreported case* (Second Appeal No. 2319 of 1919) decided by Teunon, J., on the 6th January 1921]. We are accordingly of opinion that the Defendant is not entitled to the presumption under sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The next question is whether the Plaintiff is entitled to the rent reserved as hajat.

It is contended that a portion of the hajat rent was converted into the current rent two years after the execution of the kabuliyat. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, has found that "there is no evidence on the record to support the contention. It might as well have been for addition of some lands to the tenancy. The learned Munsif's finding that this alteration of rent in 1293 was on account of conversion of a portion of the hajat rent to current rent is not supported by evidence and is based on the mere statement in the plaint."

It does not appear for what period the rent was kept as hajat nor the circumstances under which and the date from which the hajat was to be recovered from the tenant. In the circumstances, we are unable to hold that the Plaintiff is entitled to the hajat as part of the rent. That being so, we cannot interfere with the rate of rent allowed by the Court of appeal below with regard to the additional area.

The result is that the decree of the Court of first instance so far as it allows an enhancement at the rate of two annas in the rupee will be restored and the decree of the Lower Appellate Court to that extent will be set aside. Otherwise, the decree of the Lower Appellate Court will stand.

The Plaintiff will get two-thirds of the costs incurred by him in the Lower Courts. We make no order as to costs in this Court.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs 50 and 115—Enhancement suit—If presumption under sec. 50 arises after a record-of-rights becomes final.

After a record-of-rights becomes final, a tenant is debarred by the provisions of sec. 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act from claiming the presumption under sec. 50 of that Act.

The expression "thereafter" in sec. 115 means "after the particulars have been finally recorded after recourse to all the provisions contained in Chap. X of that Act for the attainment of finality in this respect."

This was an appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent preferred on the 5th February 1921 against a judgment of Teunon, J., dated the 6th January 1921, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2319 of 1919, which had been preferred against a decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge of Faridpur (Babu Mati Lal Roy), dated the 9th July 1919, which reversed a decree of the Munsif, 3rd Court; at Bhanga (Babu Nishi Kanta Banerji), dated the 2nd January 1919).

The facts material to the report are as follows :—

This appeal arose out of a suit instituted on the 30th January 1918 for recovery of arrears of rent at Rs. 5-8 per year and for enhancement of rent on the ground of rise in the price of staple food-crops under sec. 30, cl. (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Defendant was entered in the record-of-rights as a স্থিতিবান রায়ত (i.e., an occupancy raiyat). The record-of-rights was finally published in 1914. After the final publication of the record-of-rights neither party took any proceeding under secs. 105, 105A or 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Defendant contended that he was entitled to the benefit of the presumption under sec. 50, cl. (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that his rent was not liable to be enhanced. The Munsif held that the Defendant was entitled to such presumption but on the evidence adduced the presumption was sufficiently rebutted. He granted a decree for arrears of rent as well as for enhancement at the rate of 4 as. 9 pies in the rupee.

On appeal by the Defendant the Lower Appellate Court allowed only a decree for arrears of rent but set aside the decree for enhancement of rent and held that sec. 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was no bar to the Defendant's claiming the benefit of the presumption under sec. 50, cl. (2) of the said Act, and that the Defendant proved that the rate of rent had not changed for more than 20 years before the institution of the suit and as such he was entitled to the said presumption.

Against this decision the Plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court which was allowed by Teunon, J.

The judgment of Teunon, J., was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit for rent and for enhancement of rent on the ground of rise in prices of staple food-crops. It is not disputed that in respect of the area within which the holding in question is situate there has been a record-of-rights prepared under the provisions of Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is also not disputed that in respect of the holding in question the tenants have been recorded not as tenants holding at fixed rate but as purely occupancy raiyats. The record-of-rights, it is also conceded, was finally published sometime in the year 1914. The present suit was brought in the year 1918. In respect of this tenancy there have been no proceedings under secs. 105, 105A or sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the time for any such proceedings has long gone by. It follows therefore that in this particular case we have a finally published and completed record. In such a case it has been held in this Court in the cases of Harihar Persad Bajpai v. Ajub Misir (1) and Murali- dhara Aditya v. Radha Mohan Hazra (2) that by the provisions of sec. 115 of the Act the tenants who are the Respondents before me are not entitled to claim the benefit of the presumption arising under sec. 50 (2) of the Act.

That being so, it follows that the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Faridpur must be set aside and the case remanded to him in order that approaching the case from the proper standpoint, namely, that the tenants are not entitled to the benefit of the presumption arising under sec. 50 of the Act he may consider and determine whether the rent is or is not liable to be enhanced. Should he decide that the rent is liable to be enhanced he must next proceed to determine the extent of the enhancement to which the landlord who is the Appellant before this Court is entitled.

The case is accordingly remanded to the Lower Appellate Court to be disposed of in accordance with the directions given above.

Costs of this hearing will be costs in the case.

[Against this judgment the Defendant preferred the present Letters Patent appeal.]

Babu Gunada Charan Sen (with him Babu Jnan Chandra Roy) for the Appellant.—The Defendant is a raiyat at a fixed rate and so his rent is not liable to enhancement. Uniformity of rent for 20 years immediately before the institution of the suit has been proved. The Defendant who was entered in the record-of-rights as an occupancy raiyat is therefore entitled to the presumption under sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Sec. 115 of that Act is not a bar to his claiming the benefit of the presumption under sec. 50. I rely upon the cases in Secretary of State

v. Kajimuddi (3) and Radha Kishore v. Umdu Ali (4). I submit that the word "thereafter" in sec. 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was, correctly interpreted in these cases.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babus Hemendra Chandra Sen and Rajendra Nath Bakshi) for the Respondent.—Sec. 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is a bar to the Defendant claiming the presumption under sec. 50, cl. (2). The record-of-rights was finally published in 1914. There were no proceedings under secs. 105, 105A, 106, 108 and 108A and the periods for such proceedings had expired. The present suit was brought in 1918.

The words "have been recorded" in sec. 115 mean "have been finally recorded after all corrections, if any, under the aforesaid sections." So, in proceedings under secs. 105, 105A, 106, 108, 108A the tenant is no doubt entitled to the presumption under sec. 50, inasmuch as the record cannot be said to have been finally prepared till then, and the particulars under sec. 102, cl. (b) can still be corrected. But when after the proceedings under the aforesaid sections are taken and the corrections, if any, are entered in the record, or when no proceedings are taken under those sections and the periods of limitation for taking those proceedings expire, and then a regular suit is brought in the Civil Court by the landlord, as in the present case, the tenant cannot then avail of the presumption under sec. 50.

The word "thereafter" in sec. 115 means that once the particulars under sec. 102 (b) have been finally recorded as explained above, i.e., after recourse to all the provisions contained in Chap. X for the attainment of finality in this respect, sec. 50 will cease to apply. The restriction is in regard to the period both prior and subsequent to the final preparation of the record-of-rights.

I submit that sec. 115 was not correctly interpreted in the decisions in Secretary of State v. Kajimuddi (3) and Radha Kishore v. Umed Ali (4) cited by the Appellant. In view of the conflict between the decision by Doss, J., in Radha Kishore v. Umed Ali (4) and that of Brett, J., in Ram Sewak v. Mahont Bansi Das (7), the question was referred to a Full Bench in which the case of Radha Kishore v. Umed Ali (4) was not approved. See the Full Bench case, of Pirithi Chand v. Sheikh Basarat (5). Following the principle of this Full Bench case it has been held in a series of cases that the presumption under sec. 50 (2) does not arise when a "record-of-rights has been finally prepared." See Harihar v. Ajub Misir (1), Muralidhar v. Radha Mohan (2), Jaydeo Narain v. Bhagwan Makto (8) and Bamandas Vidyasagar v. Sadhu Majhi (6), in which the judgment of Teunon, J., now under appeal was referred to with approval.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen in reply.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Teunon in a suit for enhancement of rent.

It appears that a record-of-rights was published in 1914 and an entry was made therein to the effect that the tenant Defendant was a হিভিবান রাইয়ত, that is, an occupancy raiyat. On the 30th January 1918 the Plaintiff landlord instituted the present suit for enhancement of rent on the ground of rise in the price of staple food-crops. The Defendant resisted the claim on the ground that he was a raiyat at a fixed rate, and in support of this allegation he invoked the aid of sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. His contention was negatived by the primary Court and the claim for enhancement was allowed. Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the Defendant was entitled to the benefit of the presumption mentioned in sec. 50 and disallowed the claim for enhancement. Upon appeal to this Court Mr. Justice Teunon has reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge on the ground that under sec. 115 the tenant was not entitled to rely upon the presumption mentioned in sec. 50; in support of this view, reference has been made to the cases of Harihar Persad Bajpai v. Ajub Misir (1) and Muralidhar Aditya v. Radha Mohan Hazra (2). On the present appeal the view taken by Mr. Justice Teunon has been assailed, as contrary to the decision in Secretary of State for India in Council v. Kajimuddi (3) and Radha Kishore Manikya v. Umed Ali (4). We are of opinion that sec. 115 was not correctly interpreted in the decisions mentioned, which are in conflict with the principle of the decision of the Full Bench in Pirithi Chand Lal Chowdhury v. Basarat Ali (5).

Sec. 115 provides that when the particulars mentioned in sec. 102, cl. (b) have been recorded under Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act in respect of any tenancy, the presumption under sec. 50 shall not thereafter apply to that tenancy. On behalf of the Appellant, reliance has been placed upon the dictum in the case of Secretary of State for India in Council v. Kajimuddi (3) that this section seems to contemplate a case in which a raiyat is seeking to get the benefit of the presumption for a period subsequent to the time when the record-of-rights was framed. We are unable to accept this interpretation of the scope of sec. 115. The expression "thereafter" in that section clearly signifies "after the particulars have been finally recorded after recourse to all the provisions contained in Chap. X for the attainment of finality in this respect." This was the view adopted by the Full Bench in the case of Pirithi Chand Lal Chowdhury v. Basarat Ali (5), where it was ruled that sec. 115 did not exclude the application of the presumption when the particulars had been recorded under Chap. X and it was found necessary still to have recourse to the procedure prescribed by one or other of the sections in that Chapter. The case before us however is of an entirely different description. Here the record was finally published in 1914. The tenant might have, but did not, come within the prescribed time to get the record altered by recourse to one or other of the provisions of Chap. X. The result was that the record became final. A suit has now been instituted for enhancement of rent. This is not a suit instituted under Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Consequently in such a suit the tenant is not entitled to the benefit of the presumption under sec. 50. The entry which was made in this case under sec. 102 (b) was that the tenant belonged to the class of occupancy raiyats; in other words, that he was not a raiyat holding at a fixed rate. His rent was consequently liable to enhancement in accordance with the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The landlord claims to enhance the rent of the tenant. The tenant sets up the defence that he is a raiyat holding at a fixed rate; and in support of this contention he relies upon the presumption mentioned in sec. 50. The presumption is excluded by the express terms of sec. 115 and is of no avail to him. In these circumstances, Mr. Justice Teunon has correctly held that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge which was based upon the presumption under sec. 50 cannot be supported and that the case must be remanded for reconsideration from this standpoint. We are of opinion that this view is in accordance with the decision in Bamandas Vidyasagar v. Sadhu Majhi (6), where the judgment of Mr. Justice Teunon now under appeal was referred to with approval.

The result is that the judgment of Mr. Justice Teunon is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

In a suit upon a mortgage bond, the Defendant admitted the execution of the bond but pleaded inter alia that the bond should not be regarded as a mortgage bond. The first Court held that the execution of the bond being admitted, the necessity of its proof did not arise and decreed the suit. On appeal it was held that the scribe having executed the deed on behalf of the Appellant was not competent to attest his own signature, and there being no other evidence, dismissed the suit:

Held—That the validity of a mortgage bond and the proof of its execution are two different questions. The question of the validity of a mortgage bond with reference to the provisions of sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act can arise even though the document might be proved according to law or is not required to be proved by calling an attesting witness under sec. 68 of the Evidence Act, by reason of the execution of the document being admitted by the executant, as laid down in sec. 70 of the Evidence Act.

opportunity of producing evidence to show that the document was executed in the presence of attesting witnesses so as to satisfy the requirements of sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act.

RAJANI KANTA BHADRA v. PANCHANAND (3) referred to.

This was an appeal against the decree of Krishna K. Sen, Esq., Officiating Additional District Judge of Zillah Khulna, dated the 9th of September 1919, reversing the decree of Babu Jogen-dra Kumar Das, Additional Mansif of Khulna, dated the 18th of November 1918.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment.

Babu Nalin Chandra Pal for the Appellant.

Babu Samatul Chandra Dutt for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit upon a mortgage bond.

The Defendant admitted the execution of the bond but pleaded payment and satisfaction of it. He also raised the defence that the bond should not be regarded as a mortgage bond.

The Court of first instance held that the execution of the bond not being challenged, the necessity of its proof did not arise. That Court overruled the other pleas of the Defendant and gave a decree to the Plaintiff.

On appeal by the Defendant, the learned Additional District Judge was of opinion that the provisions of sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act had not been complied with. He held that the scribe having executed the deed on behalf of the Appellant was not competent to attest his own signature, and there being no other evidence, allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit.

It has been contended on behalf of the Plaintiff who is the Appellant before us that, having regard to the provisions of sec. 70 of the Evidence Act, there was no necessity for calling any attesting witness under sec. 68 of the Act; and reliance was placed upon the cases of Sydis Chandra Mitra v. Jogendra Nath Mahalanabis (1) and Nibaran Chandra Sen v. Ram Chandra Sen (2).

In those cases, however, the only question related to proof of execution of the mortgage bond. No question was raised before, or decided by, this Court, in either of the two cases as to the validity of the mortgage bond with reference to the provisions of sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. The two questions are different, one being the question of proof of execution of a document required to be attested by calling one attesting witness under sec. 68 of the Evidence Act, which, however, is not required where the execution of the document is admitted by the executant as laid down in sec. 70 of the Evidence Act. The other question relates to the validity of the mortgage even though the document might be proved according to law. This distinction does not appear to have been kept in view in the Court below; and although the question of the validity of the mortgage bond was set up in the written statement and put in issue, the Court of first instance, at any rate, does not appear to have appreciated the distinction between the two.

It appears that the mortgage bond, on the face of it, contained the names of four attesting witnesses, of whom two were illiterate and the scribe of the deed says that he put down the names of those illiterate witnesses at their request. It is not clearly stated, however, whether they were attesting witnesses in the sense that the document was executed in their presence. There were, however, two other witnesses who signed their own names and although the scribe by reason of his having signed the name of the executant on the document on his behalf is not a competent attesting witness as laid down in the case of Rajani Kanta Bhadra v. Panchanand (3), there are, as stated above, other persons whose names appear as attesting witnesses in the document. Under the circumstances, the Plaintiff should be given an opportunity of producing evidence to show that the document was executed in the presence of attesting witnesses so as to satisfy the requirements of sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. This, however, must be on terms, as the point was taken in the written statement.

We accordingly direct that upon the Plaintiff-Appellant paying to the Defendant-Respondent all the costs incurred up to this stage within a fortnight of the arrival of this order in the Court of appeal below, that Court will allow the Plaintiff an opportunity of adducing evidence to show that the document was properly attested within the meaning of sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act and then dispose of the case according to law. The Court of Appeal below may direct the Court of first instance to take fresh evidence under Or. 41, r. 28.

If the aforesaid costs are not paid within the time specified, the appeal will stand dismissed with costs.

Dayabhaga family with a minor coparcener—Loan by karta for new business started after father's death—Liability of minor—Adult brothers adjudicated insolvent and Receiver appointed of their share—Partition between Receiver and minor and share of all properties including after-acquired given to minor—Suit against minor for money borrowed for new business—Receiver if necessary party—Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 247, scope and meaning of—Order directing accounts to ascertain Defendant's liability, appeal against—Order, if "final"—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), secs. 109, 97.

The Defendant a minor and his brothers were members of a Dayabhaga family. The ancestral businesses which their father had were carried on after the father's death by the eldest brother as karta assisted by the adult brothers and they started a new business for which they borrowed sums of money from the Plaintiffs in the two suits out of which the present appeals arose. Proceedings under the Insolvency Act were taken and the adult brothers were adjudicated insolvent and a Receiver was appointed to take possession of the adult brothers' proportionate share of all ancestral and after-acquired properties. A partition took place between the Receiver and the infant's guardian and the infant was given his proportionate share in all properties ancestral and after-acquired. The dividend received by the Plaintiffs in the insolvency falling short of the amount ~~due~~ they sued to recover from the share of the Defendant, the minor, who disclaimed all interest in the new business:

Held—That the suits to which the Receiver was not a party were misconceived. In the circumstances the Receiver was a necessary party to any proceeding for the purpose of realising assets liable for the firm's debts and the proceeds of any realisation would be applicable not towards the exclusive discharge of any individual debt but for rateable distribution among the whole body of the firm's creditors.

All the property of the firm vested in the Receiver on the making of the order of adjudication and if any part of it got improperly into the possession of the minor the right to recover it was in the Receiver.

The distinction between an ancestral business and one started after the death of the ancestor as a source of partnership relations is patent. In the one case these relations result by operation of law from a succession on the death of an ancestor to an established business with its benefits and obligations. In the other they rest ultimately on contractual arrangement between the parties.

Under sec. 247 of the Contract Act a minor may be admitted to the benefits of partnership but cannot be made personally liable for any obligations of the firm, but the share of such minor in the property of the firm is liable for the obligations of the firm. This share is no more than a right to participate in the property of the firm after its obligations have been satisfied.

The High Court in reversing a decree dismissing the suits against the minor Defendant directed certain accounts against the Defendant, not because his liability was established but for the purpose of determining whether or not he was liable. On appeal to the Judicial Committee a preliminary objection that the order was not "final" and in consequence not appealable was overruled by the Judicial Committee.

Consolidated appeals against two decrees of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated the 31st January 1919, reversing two decrees of the Subordinate Judge of Alipur, dated the 28th February 1916.

The suits in which these decrees were passed were brought by the present Respondents respectively against the present Appellant, a minor, who attained majority during the course of the litigation.

The first suit was brought to recover Rs. 5,329 and the second suit to recover Rs. 19,000 in respect of money borrowed from the Plaintiffs by Nil Ratan under the circumstances hereinafter mentioned. Both suits were dismissed with costs by the Subordinate Judge, but his decrees were reversed on appeal by the High Court, which remanded the cases for trial ordering certain accounts to be taken and enquiries made.

Bhuban Mohan, a Hindu governed by the Dayabhaga law, was a merchant who carried on business at Munshigunj and Kalibazar. He died in November 1899, leaving five sons of whom the present Appellant, then a child, was the youngest. The eldest son, Nil Ratan, was appointed guardian of the infant in 1900 under the provisions of Act VIII of 1890. In 1912 he was removed from the office of guardian and a new guardian was appointed who defended the present suits on behalf of the infant.

After the death of their father, Nil Ratan and his adult brothers carried on the said businesses at Munshigunj and Kalibazar and after an interval started a new business at Orphangunj close to the Kalibazar business. Both the lower Courts found that the new firm was not a branch of the ancestral business. It carried on business till 1912 and for this purpose moneys were borrowed from among others the respective Respondents in the present appeal. The first Respondent on the 7th June 1908, advanced the sum of Rs. 5,000 on a hand-note executed by Nil Ratan and his two adult brothers and his claim in the said suit was for the sum now due thereon. The second Respondent based his claim on a hath-chitta for Rs. 19,700, dated the 1st October 1909 and executed by Nil Ratan and his three adult brothers, the third having meanwhile attained his majority.

In 1912 Nil Ratan and his adult brothers were adjudicated insolvent and Ashutosh Ghose was appointed Receiver of four-fifths of the property.

The Receiver thereupon brought a suit against the present Appellant, which resulted in a decree in the terms of the award of an arbitrator to whom the matters in dispute were referred with the consent of the District Judge. By the award and the decree passed in pursuance thereof, the ancestral properties and the after-acquired properties were divided between the Receiver and the minor, "with a provision that the portion of the after-acquired properties to be allotted to the said minor according to the share claimed by him, shall remain in the possession of the said Receiver until the final hearing of the appeal in the Honourable High Court, and that the same will be dealt with according to the decision in the said appeal." The decree on this award was dated the 4th January 1913 and the judgment on appeal in Sanyasi Charan Mandal v. Ashutosh Ghose (2) was pronounced on the 17th March 1914. Meanwhile the present Respondents proved in the insolvency and received a first dividend of three annas in the rupee.

SANYASI CHARAN MANDAL v. KRISHNADHAN BANERJI.

From the evidence given by the Receiver in the present litigation it appears that he had in possession about Rs. 4,000 worth of the insolvents' assets and had still to realize two decrees of the aggregate value of Rs. 10,000.

On the 27th March 1914 the first Respondent brought his suit, and on the 2nd December 1914, the second Respondent brought the second of the said suits to recover from the Defendant the sums due to them respectively. Each Plaintiff pleaded (to avoid the bar of limitation) acknowledgments signed by Nil Ratan by which they submitted the infant was bound. Their case was that the money was borrowed for the purposes of an ancestral business of the family and that for this reason the present Appellant's property was liable for their claims.

On behalf of the Defendant it was denied that he was liable for the debts incurred by his brothers in their business either by reason of the business being the ancestral business of the family or otherwise. The defence of limitation was set up and it was submitted that in view of the insolvency proceedings and the decree obtained by the Receiver the Plaintiffs were not entitled to maintain the suits at any rate, without joining the Receiver.

Two other like suits against the same Defendant were pending in the same Court, they were all tried together, and the same issues were raised in all of them.

On the 28th February 1916 the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment, and passed decrees dismissing the suits of the present Respondents respectively with costs.

Against the said decrees appeals were preferred to the High Court and judgment was delivered therein on the 31st January 1919.*

The learned Judges were in substantial agreement with the trial Judge as to the questions of fact, but the case having been re-argued with reference to new contentions raised on behalf of the present Respondents, they determined not to affirm the decree of the trial Judge. They considered that the minor (by reason of his having lived with his guardian and other brothers as a member of a joint family) had, at some date not stated, been "admitted to the benefit of partnership" in the insolvent firm. That although it was not shown that he had in his possession any share in the property of the firm, and although the plaint did not ask for an account, an account should be taken to ascertain whether or not this was the case, and they considered that such property, if any, was available to the Plaintiffs suing as individual creditors and was not recoverable only by the Receiver. Further, the learned Judges were of opinion that the enquiry which they directed might show that the Defendant was actually subject to a personal liability for the Plaintiffs' claim under Contract Act, sec. 248.

The High Court say it is not clear that the share taken by the minor included a share of the profits of the new Orphan-gunj business. So there must be an account, because until an account has been taken I cannot acquit the Appellant of liability.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.—These are consolidated appeals from two decrees of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, passed in separate suits on the 31st January 1919, reversing two decrees of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Parganahs, dated the 28th February 1916.

In each suit a money decree was sought against the present Appellant, who was a minor at its institution. One suit was brought on a hand-note signed by the minor's three adult brothers; the other on a hath-chitta, signed by his four adult brothers, the youngest of them having then attained majority.

The ground of liability stated in the plaint is that the Defendant and his brothers are owners and partners in ancestral businesses, and the money claimed was borrowed by the brothers for the purposes of the businesses.

The minor defended in each case by his guardian for the suit.

The Defendant and his brothers were the five sons of Bhuvan Mohan Mandal, a Hindu governed by the Dayabhaga school of law. He died in November 1899, and at that time his two younger sons were minors. Nil Ratan, the eldest brother and the karta of the family, was appointed their guardian under Act VIII of 1890.

Bhuban Mohan had two businesses, one for fuel wood at Munshigunj, and the other for rice and other articles at Kalibazar. Each devolved as an ancestral business on the five sons, and was carried on by Nil Ratan as the karta, assisted by his adult brothers. After the father's death a new business in rice was started by Nil Ratan at Orphangunj, and it is the Defendant's case that the money sued for was borrowed exclusively for the purpose of this business, and that the business was not ancestral.

The Subordinate Judge decided in the Defendant's favour and dismissed the suits. The High Court on appeal apparently took the same view in the first instance, but as the result of a re-argument, set aside the Subordinate Judge's decrees and directed certain accounts against the Defendant, not because his liability was established but for the purpose of determining whether or not he was liable. It is from these decrees of the High Court that the present appeals have been preferred.

A preliminary objection was taken that the appeals did not lie "because the order was not final," but their Lordships did not give effect to it and the appeals have been heard.

The businesses were conducted by Nil Ratan and his adult brothers for many years with success. Ultimately, however, there were financial difficulties, and on the 19th February 1912, proceedings under the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907, were commenced by a creditor against all five brothers in the Court of the District Judge at Alipur. It was established to the satisfaction of the Judge that the Defendant was a minor and so could not be adjudicated insolvent, and that the minor was a joint owner in the family business inherited from his father. There was, however, an adjudication against the adult brothers, "they being the members of the firm Bhuban Mohan Mandal and Nil Ratan Mandal."

A Receiver was appointed under sec. 18 (1) of the Act, and the property of the insolvents thereupon vested in him. He was ordered to realise not only the four-fifth shares of the insolvents in the joint property, but also the minor's share in the joint properties acquired after the father's death. As a result of his insolvency, Nil Ratan was removed from the guardianship of the minor, and Mati Lal Roy was appointed in his place.

On the 19th August 1912, with the sanction of the Judge, Mati Lal Roy and the Receiver agreed to appoint an arbitrator to effect a partition of the immoveable properties, and on the 8th October 1912, an award was made under which the minor got one-fifth in both ancestral and after-acquired properties, Mati Lal Roy having claimed that the after-acquired properties were purchased out of the income of the ancestral properties. On the 14th January 1912, a decree was passed in terms of the award.

In the meanwhile cross-appeals had been preferred by Mati Lal Roy and the creditors from the orders of the Judge in Insolvency, and on the 17th March 1914, they were heard by the High Court with the result that the order refusing to adjudicate the minor an insolvent was affirmed, but so much of the order as directed the Receiver to realise the minor's share was set aside, and in lieu thereof it was ordered that the Receiver should "take possession of four-fifths share of the business, and four-fifths share of all the properties purchased since the death of Bhuban Mohan Mandal, and also four-fifths share of the other properties jointly held by the infant and his brothers."

It is in these circumstances that the present suits were commenced, as the dividend received by the Plaintiffs in the insolvency fell short of the amount due.

It is established by concurrent findings by the Lower Courts, first, that the money now in suit was borrowed exclusively for the purposes of the Orphananj business, and secondly, that this business was neither ancestral nor an extension of the ancestral business. These findings must now be deemed conclusive, and this strikes at the very root of the case made by the Plaintiffs in the first Court.

The distinction between an ancestral business and one started like the present after the death of the ancestor, as a source of partnership relations, is patent. In the one case these relations result by operation of law from a succession on the death of an ancestor to an established business, with its benefits and its obligations. In the other they rest ultimately on contractual arrangement between the parties. The inability of a karta to impose on a minor co-parcener the risks and liabilities of a new business started by himself, is fully discussed by both Courts, and their Lordships agreeing with the conclusion at which they have arrived on this point, do not deem it necessary to enter on a further discussion of this aspect of the case.

What has to be seen in the peculiar circumstances of this dispute is not merely whether the minor has come under any liability in respect of the debts of the Orphananj business, but whether that liability can be enforced by the Plaintiffs in the suits as constituted.

It is important at this point to bear in mind (a) that at the institution of the suits the Defendant was a minor; (b) that in the written statement filed in each suit on his behalf by his guardian for the suit, it was denied that he was a co-sharer in the business, or had any responsibility with regard to it; (c) that when at a later stage of the litigation the minor attained majority, he adopted these written statements; and (d) that at that time the business of the firm had ceased.

The ancestral character of the Orphananj business being negatived, the Plaintiffs have attempted to formulate other grounds of liability. Before the Subordinate Judge the claim seems to have been rested on general principles rather than on the specific provisions of the Contract Act. Thus in the grounds of appeal it is contended that the Defendant and his four brothers having all along lived as members of an undivided Hindu family, and properties having been acquired with the joint funds and the Defendant having got some of those properties in his share on partition with the Receiver, the learned Subordinate Judge ought to have passed a decree against the Defendant at any rate so far as the assets of the firms allotted to his share are concerned.

The answer to the case thus made is given by the Subordinate Judge towards the close of his careful and well-reasoned judgment, and their Lordships are in complete agreement with what is there said. In the High Court, however, reliance was evidently placed on the Contract Act for its provisions are mentioned and discussed. It becomes necessary, therefore, to examine the Act so far as it bears on the question now in contest.

Sec. 247 provides that a person who is under the age of majority according to the law to which he is subject may be admitted to the benefits of partnership but cannot be made personally liable for any obligation of the firm; but the share of such minor in the property of the firm is liable for the obligations of the firm.

To bring this section into play it must be proved that the minor has been admitted to the benefits of the partnership. This is a fact to be established by evidence, and though it was neither pleaded nor made an issue at the trial, the High Court, without inviting evidence specifically directed to this point, held the admission proved, and thus set up a new case in appeal. The Defendant has just ground of complaint as to this, and the procedure is not one to be commended; still in the view their Lordships take they will deal with the case on the basis of the High Court's finding without expressing an opinion as to its correctness. Under the section liability is limited to the share of the minor in the property of the firm.

In sec. 239 there is a definition of the word "firm." It is there said the persons who have entered into partnership with one another are called collectively a "firm." In the earlier part of the section it is enacted that "partnership" is the relation which subsists between persons who have agreed to combine their property, labour or skill in some business and to share the profits thereof between them.

A person under the age of majority cannot become a partner by contract [Mohori Bibee v. Dhurmodas Ghose (1)], and so according to the definition he cannot be one of that group of persons called a firm. It would seem, therefore, that the share of which sec. 247 speaks is no more than a right to participate in the property of the firm after its obligations have been satisfied.

Though there may be this right, in fact it is not claimed by the Defendant. On the contrary, the written statements deny his membership of the partnership; this denial was made on his behalf during his minority, and it was adopted by him when he attained his majority. This attitude he still maintains, and it can only be regarded as a relinquishment of all claim to a share in the property of the firm. It is still the property of the firm, and is liable as such to the obligations of the firm.

But all the property of the firm vested in the Receiver on the making of the order of adjudication (Provincial Insolvency Act, sec. 16), and if any part of it has got improperly into the possession of the minor, the right to recover it is in the Receiver. This is not disputed by the Defendant; and it is only by its coming into the hands of the Receiver that its rateable distribution among the general body of creditors can be secured. Nor does it make any difference that the business was conducted by the male adult members of a Hindu family governed by the Dayabhaga; the rights and liabilities of a minor member of such a family would be measured by similar principles for the purpose now under consideration.

The learned Judges in the High Court seem to have thought that the judgment on appeal in the insolvency proceedings put a bar in the way of a recovery by the Receiver, and so justified the Plaintiffs' suits; but this proceeds on a misconception of what was actually decided.

It is quite true that in that judgment it was said that "the essence of the matter is that the share of the infant has not vested in him and he is consequently not entitled to deal with it. . . . But whatever remedies may be available hereafter to the Receiver or to the creditor, it is clear that the properties of the infant cannot be dealt with by either of them in these proceedings." This was a correct statement of the legal position; but it in no way justifies the conclusion in the judgment now under appeal that in consequence of it "the Defendant cannot now contend that it is only the Receiver (and not any individual creditor) who can deal with his share of the partnership properties." No property belonging to the minor could vest by the adjudication in the Receiver, but what would vest in him would be the right (if it existed) to recover from the minor property in his possession belonging to the firm.

It was then urged that any suit now instituted by the Receiver would be barred by limitation; but when Counsel for the Plaintiffs was asked whether to obviate this, he was prepared to add the Receiver as a party, so that any assets realised could come into his hands for rateable distribution, he declined the offer, and frankly admitted that it would be of no use to his clients unless they could recover for their own exclusive benefit.

The absence of the Receiver from the suits is not an objection taken for the first time at this stage of the litigation. It was pleaded as a defect in the written statement, and an issue was framed on the point.

The Plaintiffs do not now contend that the Defendant has become personally liable, and so it is unnecessary to discuss the terms of sec. 248.

In their Lordships' opinion, therefore, these suits constituted as they are, are misconceived. In the circumstances the Receiver is a necessary party to any proceeding for the purpose of realising assets liable for the firm's debts, and the proceeds of any realisation would be applicable not towards the exclusive discharge of any individual debt as the Plaintiffs desire, but for rateable distribution among the whole body of the firm's creditors.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the appeals be allowed, and that in each suit the decrees of the High Court, dated the 31st January 1919, be discharged, and the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 28th February 1916, be restored, and that the Respondents to each appeal do pay to the Appellant the costs of the appeals in the High Court. They will also pay the costs of these appeals.

v.

G. DIAS.

Calcutta Rent Act (III, B. C., of 1920), sec. 8—Standardisation of rent by the Rent Controller—Certificate to be issued under sec. 8—Rent increased by the Tribunal, whether a fresh notice is necessary to be served on the tenant.

A notice under sec. 8 of the Calcutta Rent Act, 1920, is not necessary when the standard rent as fixed by the Controller has been further increased by the President of the Tribunal, the landlord having complied with the provision of sec. 8 as regards the increase allowed by the Controller.

This was a reference under sec. 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act by Mr. T. Thornhill, Chief Judge, Calcutta Court of Small Causes.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment of the High Court.

The judgment of the learned 3rd Judge (Mr. J. C. Gupta) of the Small Cause Court was as follows:—

In this suit the Plaintiff is seeking to recover the balance of the standard rent from 5th May 1920 to June 1921 at the rate assessed by the President of the Tribunal.

I. J. COHEN v. G. DIAS.

Originally the Controller fixed the rent at Rs. 93-12 a month; against this order the Plaintiff moved the Tribunal which modified the decision of the Controller and raised the standard rent to Rs. 100 a month.

The Defendant contends that he should have been served with a notice in terms of sec. 8 of the Rent Act before the landlord could recover at the enhanced rate. He also takes the plea of jurisdiction during the trial.

Plaintiff's case is Defendant deposited rent at the enhanced rate fixed by the Controller after due notice and when the matter had been referred to the Tribunal, no fresh notice was necessary, and sec. 8 has no application.

In my opinion, when the order of the Controller has been modified or set aside by the Tribunal under sec. 18 of the Act, it is not necessary for the landlord to give another notice. Sec. 8 deals with those cases where rent has been standardised by the Controller only; it does not apply to the Tribunal where it has been referred for considering the adequacy of the enhancement made by the Controller.

The reference to the High Court was in these terms—

"The Plaintiff (I. J. Cohen) is the landlord of certain premises in Calcutta called Cohen Mansions, and the Defendant (G. Dias), tenant of Suite No. 8 thereof. The monthly rent of the suite was Rs. 75. The Rent Controller appointed under the Calcutta Rent Act by his order of July 15, 1920, fixed the standard rent at Rs. 93-12. Being disappointed with the said order, the Plaintiff, on August 24, 1920, applied under sec. 18 of the Act to the President of the Tribunal, for revision of the said order. By the decision of the President of the Tribunal the standard rent was fixed at Rs. 100 per month. It is admitted that subsequent to the Rent Controller's order the Plaintiff complied with the provisions of sec. 8 of the Act by serving on the Defendant a notice in writing of his intention to increase, accompanied by a certificate from the Controller fixing the standard rent at Rs. 93-12. This increased rent has been paid by the Defendant up to January 30, 1921. The Defendant did not appear in the revision proceedings before the President of the Tribunal. It is admitted that the Plaintiff gave notice in writing to the Defendant of the further increase made on revision. The Plaintiff now claims to be entitled to recover the difference between the standard rent fixed by the Controller and the revised rent fixed by the President of the Tribunal. The Defendant's contention is that the notice mentioned above not having been accompanied by a certificate from the Controller this sum is irrecoverable under sec. 8 of the Rent Act. The decisions of the judges of the Small Cause Court have not been uniform and there are a number of similar cases pending.

From sec. 2 (b) of the Act the expression "standard rent" would appear to mean the rent fixed by a definite individual who is called the Rent Controller. There are, however, strong indications throughout the Act that that expression applies also to the rent fixed by revision; otherwise, the Act would appear to be unworkable. The decision of the President of the Tribunal or of the Controller is in no way a decree capable of execution. The landlord may, or may not, wish to collect rent according to that decision. If he does, his only remedy against an unwilling tenant is under sec. 8 of the Rent Act. According to my reading of sec. 8, the tenant has one month to consider whether he will hold on at the revised rate or vacate and, this month counts from the day of service of the certificate from the Rent Controller. The present Defendant's means may quite entitle him to pay a rent of Rs. 93-12 which he has paid, but not a rent of Rs. 100 which he has never paid. A further increase by the President of the Tribunal of the rent fixed by the Controller is, in my opinion, just as much an increase of the rent of the premises as an increase by the Controller of the rent payable by mutual agreement."

Sec. 15 of the Act appears general. "The Rent Controller shall grant a certificate certifying the standard rent." It is pointed out and is a fact that the order made by the Controller in such cases is to the following effect:—"The order of the President of the Tribunal not having been communicated to this Court, I am not in a position to grant you a revised certificate." It would, therefore, appear to be the duty of the person requiring such certificate to see that the President's decision is so communicated. A case might arise where the Rent Controller would fix the standard rent at the same sum as the tenant had been paying but this might be increased on revision. Could it then be said that the landlord is exempted from the provisions of sec. 8?

This case came before the Third Judge. A similar case came before the Sixth Judge. One decision was quite contrary to the other. It then came before a Full Bench, consisting of the Third Judge, Sixth Judge and the Chief Judge with the result that the opinion of the Sixth Judge was upheld, the Third Judge dissenting. The learned Third Judge's opinion was that when the order of the Controller is set aside or varied by the Tribunal under sec. 18, it is not necessary for the landlord to give another notice. His reason is that sec. 8 deals with those cases where rent has been standardised by the Controller only, it does not apply to the Tribunal where the matter has gone upon appeal to decide the adequacy of such enhancement. In fact, the Controller refused to grant a certificate when asked by the landlord to do so, on the ground that the order of the Tribunal had not been communicated to him. The suit has been dismissed by the Full Bench, subject to the opinion of the Honourable Judges of the High Court. The questions referred to the High Court are:—(1) whether notice under sec. 8 of the Rent Act is necessary, when the standard rent as fixed by the Controller has been further increased by the President of the Tribunal, the landlord having complied with the provisions of sec. 8 as regards the increase allowed by the Controller; (2) If so, whether the said notice should be accompanied by a certificate from the Controller in order to entitle the landlord to recover rent so increased by the President of the Tribunal.

Mr. F. S. R. Surita for the Plaintiff.

Mr. M. Ashraf Ali for the Defendant.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a reference

by the learned Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes in Calcutta; and, the facts which are material for this reference are set out in the reference. They are stated as follows:—

"1. The Plaintiff is the landlord of certain premises in Calcutta known as Cohen Mansions and the Defendant is tenant of Suite No. 8 thereof.

"2. The monthly rent was Rs. 75.

"3. The Rent Controller appointed under the Calcutta Rent Act, 1920, by his order, dated 15th July 1920, fixed the standard rent at Rs. 93-12-0.

"4. Being dissatisfied with the said order, the Plaintiff on the 24th August 1920, applied under sec. 18 of the said Act to the President of the Tribunal appointed under the Calcutta Improvement Act for revision of the said order.

"5. The decision of the President, dated the 11th February 1921, fixed the standard rent at Rs. 100 a month.

"6. It is admitted that subsequent to the Rent Controller's order the Plaintiff complied with the provisions of sec. 8 of the Rent Act by serving on the Defendant a notice in writing of his intention to increase, accompanied by a certificate from the Controller fixing the standard rent at Rs. 93-12-0.

"7. This increased rent has been paid by the Defendant up to 30th June 1921.

"8. The Defendant did not appear in the revision proceedings before the President of the Tribunal.

"9. It is admitted the Plaintiff gave notice in writing to the Defendant of the further increase made on revision. The Plaintiff now claims to be entitled to recover the difference between the standard rent fixed by the Controller and the revised standard rent fixed by the President of the Tribunal.

"10. The Defendant's contention is that the notice mentioned in para. 9 hereof not having been accompanied by a certificate from the 'Controller' this sum is irrecoverable under sec. 8 of the Rent Act."

I. J. COHEN v. G. DIAS.

The questions which are submitted to this Court are—

"(1) Whether notice under sec. 8 of the Rent Act is necessary when the standard rent as fixed by the Controller has been further increased by the President of the Tribunal, the landlord having complied with the provisions of sec. 8 as regards the increase allowed by the Controller.

"(2) If so, whether the said notice should be accompanied by a certificate from the Controller in order to entitle the landlord to recover rent so increased by the President of the Tribunal."

The only fact which it is necessary for me to add to the facts, which are stated in the reference, is that it appears that the Defendant was given notice of the landlord's application to the President of the Tribunal. He did not appear in the revision proceedings and we were informed that after the President had given his decision, the Defendant appeared and alleged that the notice had not been served upon him. The President of the Tribunal, we were informed, came to the conclusion that the notice had been served. Therefore, it must be taken as a fact that the Defendant was served with the notice of the landlord's application to the President of the Tribunal and he did not appear in the proceedings.

The first question which is referred to this Court is with reference to the notice under sec. 8. With reference to that question, it is necessary to refer to three or four sections of the Act.

The first section to which I wish to refer is sec. 2, cl. (f) which defines "standard rent." It says "standard rent" in relation to any premises means,

(i) the rent at which the premises "were let on the first day of November 1918, or, where they were not let on that date, the rent at which they were last let before that date and after the first day of November 1915, with the addition in either cases of ten per cent., on such rent; (ii) in the case of any premises which were or shall be first let after the first day of November 1918 the rent at which the premises were or may be first let; (iii) in the cases specified in sec. 15, the rent fixed by the Controller."

On reference to sec. 15 we find that there it is provided that "The Controller shall, on application made to him by any landlord or tenant, grant a certificate, certifying the standard rent of any premises, leased or rented by such landlord or tenant, as the case may be." Then the section sets out certain cases in which the Controller is given power to fix the standard rent at such amount, as having regard to the provisions of the Act and the circumstances of the case, he deems just; and it is further provided by sub-sec. (4) that "before exercising any of the powers conferred on him by this Act the Controller shall give notice of his intention to the landlord and tenant, if any, and shall duly consider any application received by him from any person interested, within such period as shall be specified in the notice." By sub-sec. (5) it is provided that "All orders of the Controller passed under this Act shall be in writing, and a certified copy thereof shall be affixed to some conspicuous part of the premises to which it relates, or to some conspicuous object near such premises and a certified copy shall also be delivered to the landlord, or his authorised agent, in such manner as the Local Government may, by rule, prescribe." In this case, the application was made to the Controller by the landlord. We were informed by the learned Counsel that the Controller fixed the rent, basing his decision upon sec. 2, cl. (f), sub-sec. (1) and, that the application was made to the Controller in pursuance of sec. 15, cl. (1). The Controller granted a certificate certifying the standard rent in accordance with that section. It is admitted that in accordance with the provisions of sec. 8, the landlord gave a notice in writing of his intention to increase the rent, accompanied by the certificate from the Controller fixing the standard rent. So far the landlord complied with the provisions of the Act in every respect. Then comes sec. 18 for consideration; and, that section provides, "If the decision of the Controller fixing the standard rent for any premises is questioned, either the landlord, or the tenant may, in respect of premises in Calcutta, apply for revision of such order to the President of Tribunal appointed under sec. 72 of the Calcutta Improvement Act, 1911."

The decision of the President of the Tribunal shall be final." The provision in the Act as to the procedure to be followed by the President of the Tribunal is contained in sec. 24, which provides, "In revising the decisions of the Controller, the President of the Tribunal. . . shall follow as early as may be the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for the regular trial of suits." I take it, therefore, that in applying the procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code, the President of the Tribunal would see that the parties received such notice as would be given to the parties in the regular trial of suits, and, as it has been already stated, in this case the tenant did receive notice before the President of the Tribunal entered upon the consideration of the application of the landlord. Then the President of the Tribunal gave his decision and after that the landlord gave notice of the decision to the tenant.

The question is whether sec. 8 applies to the decision of the President of the Tribunal. That section is as follows, "(1) Wherever an increase of the rent of any premises is allowable under the provisions of this Act, no such increase shall be recoverable until the expiry of one month after the landlord has served on the tenant a notice in writing of his intention to increase the rent, accompanied by a certificate from the Controller fixing the standard rent."

In my judgment, construing the various sections of this Act, as best as I can, the meaning of the Act is not that that section should apply to the decision of the President of the Tribunal. Further, it seems to me that this must be so from that wording of sec. 8 itself. The certificate which is to accompany the notice in writing, contemplated by that section, is a certificate from the Controller fixing the standard rent; that must mean, in my judgment, a certificate which certifies the decision of the Controller himself, whereby he fixes the standard rent. When a party applies for a revision of decision of the Controller, fixing the standard rent, to the President of the Tribunal, it is the President of the Tribunal who fixes the standard rent and his decision is final. When the President of the Tribunal has revised the decision of the Controller and fixed the standard rent, the Controller has no power to interfere with the President's decision: it is provided that the decision of the President of the Tribunal shall be final. The certificate contemplated by sec. 8, in my judgment, is the certificate to be granted by the Controller when he, the Controller fixes the standard rent.

I. J. COHEN v. G. DIAS.

There is no corresponding section in the Act applicable to the decision of the President of the Tribunal, nor is there any provision, directing a remission of the case to the Controller after the decision of the President of the Tribunal in order that the Controller might issue a certificate fixing the rent. In my judgment, the true construction of the Act is that the provisions of sec. 8 are not applicable to the case when the President of the Tribunal revises the decision of the Controller and fixes the standard rent.

Therefore, I answer the first question in this way, that a notice under sec. 8 of the Rent Act is not necessary when the standard rent as fixed by the Controller has been further increased by the President of the Tribunal, the landlord having complied with the provisions of sec. 8 as regards the increase allowed by the Controller.

As regards the second question it seems to me that the answer to that must follow the answer to the first one, because it is based on the conclusion that the provisions of sec. 8 are not applicable. I answer the second question, therefore, by saying that under the circumstances which are stated in the reference, a certificate from the Controller was not necessary in order to entitle the landlord to recover the rent so increased by the President of the Tribunal.

I wish to add for the purpose of safeguarding myself that we do not express any opinion on the question, which was raised by the learned Counsel for the Respondent during the argument, namely, in respect of what period is the increased rent recoverable in consequence of the decision of the President of the Tribunal. That question may or may not have to be decided when the suit is tried. This suit has been dismissed merely on the ground that the suit would not lie in consequence of the notice and the certificate referred to in sec. 8 not having been served in respect of the decision of the President of the Tribunal. The merits of the suit, as I understand, have not yet been investigated.

We make no order as to the costs of this reference.

RICHARDSON, J.—With much respect to the opinion of the learned Chief Judge and the learned Sixth Judge, I agree with my Lord that in view of the terms of sec. 8 of the Calcutta Rent Act, that section can have no application to a decision of the President of the Tribunal under sec. 18, revising, in the sense of increasing, the rent fixed by the Controller under sec. 15. In the Act the provisions relating to the Controller and his powers are kept separate and distinct from the provisions relating to the President of the Tribunal and his powers. We are told from the Bar that the Controller and the President do not occupy the same building. I agree generally with what my Lord has said, and it does not appear to be desirable at present to say more than is necessary, because a further question has been raised and may require decision when the suit comes to be tried, as to the precise effect of the President's decision in relation to the Controller's certificate fixing the standard rent in the first instance, or as to the date from which the President's decision operates.

There is one point however on which a word may be added. A difficulty perhaps arises as to the effect of cl. (1) of sec. 15. That clause enables the Controller on the application of any landlord or tenant to certify the standard rent of any premises leased or rented by such landlord or tenant as the case may be. As I conceive, what is contemplated is not a certificate of a ministerial character stating what rent has been fixed as the standard rent, but the power conferred by the clause is one of the powers before exercising which the Controller is to give the notice required by cl. (4) of sec. 15. Sec. 15, including cl. (1), must be read with reference to the definition of "standard rent" in sec. 2. As I understand the matter, therefore, a standard rent certified by the Controller under cl. (1) of sec. 15 may be revised by the President under sec. 18. The Act appears to be so understood, because in the present case the rent revised by the President was a standard rent certified by the Controller under cl. (1) of sec. 15. Accordingly, it would not seem to be the intention of the Act, that after the President has given his decision under sec. 18, the Controller should have any power under cl. (1) of sec. 15 to certify or recertify a standard rent.

The Act was hurriedly passed and is in some respect not easy to construe, but the view I have expressed receives confirmation from the fact that sec. 8 speaks of "a certificate from the Controller fixing the standard rent." With these words in mind, the phraseology of sec. 18, "the decision of the Controller fixing the standard rent" would seem to apply as much to a certificate given under cl. (1) of sec. 15 as to an order, for instance, fixing the standard under cl. (3) of that section.

With these observations I agree with the answer which my Lord has proposed to the questions referred to us by the learned Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 1608 OF 1921.

MOOKERJEE, J.

CHOTZNER, J.

1922,

Heard, 25 and

Judgment,

SARAT CHANDRA SEN,
Defendant, Appellant,
v.

RAJ KUMAR MOOKERJEE,
Plaintiff, Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para. 18—Suit pending decision of arbitrators—Award of arbitrators whether a bar to the suit where no application for stay of suit made—Proper procedure.

The Plaintiff and the Defendant were owners of adjoining parcels and the controversy between them constituted a boundary dispute. On the 19th May 1915 they executed a deed of agreement and referred the matter in dispute to three arbitrators who held an enquiry. On the 4th November 1917 one of them announced a decision which was signed only by himself and was unfavourable to the Plaintiff. On the 8th March 1918 the Plaintiff commenced a suit to establish his title and enforce his claim. The arbitrators were apprised of the institution of the suit and on the 30th March 1918, they published their joint award. The Defendant who did not receive notice of the suit till the 4th April entered appearance on the 11th April and filed his written statement on the 26th April:

Held—That as the Defendant did not take recourse to the proper procedure, namely, apply for stay of the suit, cancellation of the award as made without jurisdiction and thereafter remission of the matter to the arbitrators, the award had been rightly rejected by the Court below as made without jurisdiction and the suit was properly tried on the merits by the Court.

SARAT CHANDRA SEN v. RAJ KUMAR MOOKERJEE.

RAM CHANDRA v. KRISHNA LAL (1), DINABANDHU JANA v. DURGA PROSAD JANA (2), RAM PROSAD v. MOHAN LAL (3), JOKIRAM v. GHANESHYAM (6) and RAM CHAND v. GOBINDRAM (7) considered.

That the Defendant should not be given an opportunity at this late stage to comply with the requirement of the law as the death of one of the arbitrators rendered a reconsideration by the original arbitrators impossible, the agreement not containing any provision for a reconstitution of the committee of arbitrators upon such a contingency.

This was an appeal preferred on the 25th of July 1921, against the decree of Babu Hem Chandra Das Gupta, Officiating Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah 24-Parganahs, dated the 20th of May 1921, modifying the decree of Babu Saroda Kumar Sen Gupta, Munsif, 1st Court at Sealdah, dated the 29th of May 1919.

The Plaintiff and the Defendant referred a boundary dispute to the arbitration of three persons. There was no time limit within which the award was to be made. On the 4th November 1917 an award purported to be signed by one of them was published. On the 8th March 1918 the Plaintiff-Respondent instituted a suit relating to the matter which was the subject of the arbitration proceedings alleging that the award made on the 4th November 1917 was invalid as it was vitiated by misconduct. On the 30th March 1918 all the arbitrators joined in making another award which was in agreement with that made on the 4th November 1917. On the 4th April 1918 the Defendant was served with summons of the case. The learned Munsif held that the only award that was operative in law was the award of the 30th March 1917, the earlier one being no award at all not being duly stamped, and the said award was a bar to the Plaintiff's suit. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal held that the award made on the 4th November was invalid as all the arbitrators did not join in making it and the award made on the 30th March was without jurisdiction as the institution of the suit made the arbitrators functus officio. He held therefore that the suit was maintainable and gave the Plaintiff a decree after going into the merits of his claim.

The Defendant appealed to the High Court.

Babu Monmotha Nath Mukherjee (with him Babu Pannalal Chatterjee) for the Appellant.—The suit was not maintainable, otherwise if the view of the Subordinate Judge be maintained, a party who has a suspicion that the arbitrators are going to decide against him can nullify the whole proceeding by rushing into Court at the very last moment. See Jokiram Kaya v. Ghaneshyam Das Kedarnath (6). Here the award was made before the Defendant had any opportunity to apply for a stay of the suit under para. 18 of Sch. II of the Civil Procedure Code.

Babu Rupendra Coomar Mitra for the Respondent.—The institution of a suit ousts the jurisdiction of the private tribunal. The history of the law of arbitration shows that the authority of a private tribunal to decide disputes was one of gradual growth. In England in the first stage an agreement to have a dispute decided by private persons was considered illegal as interfering with the jurisdiction of the King's Court. In the second stage such agreements were given a limited effect. The existence of such an agreement did not prevent either party from having the dispute settled in Court, the remedy of the parties only lay in instituting a suit for damages for breach of the agreement. In the third stage when such damages were considered as inadequate a party could at the earliest opportunity apply for a stay of the suit, which had an indirect effect on the other party. See Fletcher Moulton, L. J., in Doleman & Sons v. Ossett Corporation (4), also Russell on Arbitration, p. 75. Hence the jurisdiction of the Courts is curtailed only to the extent as provided by express statute. This case is not provided for in the Civil Procedure Code and hence the institution of the suit ousts the jurisdiction of the private tribunal, otherwise there would be a race between two tribunals, the public and the private.

In Doleman's case (4) it is pointed out that the institution of the suit makes the arbitrators functus officio, the fact that the award is made after the institution of the suit but before the summons is not treated as material.

See also Appavu v. Seeni (5), which has been approved in Dinabandhu v. Durga Prosād (2).

Secondly when there is a reference which does not in express terms provide for making more than one award, the arbitrators have power to make one award only.

See Halsbury, Vol. I, p. 468, Gould v. Staffordshire Potteries Waterworks Co. (8). When award was made on the 4th November 1917 the arbitrators had no jurisdiction to make a second award namely of the 30th March 1918 and the award of the 4th November 1917 being invalid as it was signed by only one of them, there was no bar to a suit.

See Abu Hamid v. Golum Sardar (9) and Ramesh Chandra v. Karunamoyi (10), Ibrahim Ali v. Mohsin Ali (11) and Stalworth v. Innes (12).

Babu Monmotha Nath Mukherjee in reply.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the Defendant in a suit for recovery of possession of land upon establishment of title. The Plaintiff and the Defendant are owners of adjoining parcels and the controversy between them constitutes a boundary dispute. On the 19th May 1915, they executed a deed of agreement and referred the matter in dispute to three arbitrators. The arbitrators held an enquiry, and on the 4th November 1917, one of them announced a decision which was signed only by himself and was unfavourable to the Plaintiff. On the 8th March 1918, the Plaintiff commenced the present litigation to establish his title and to enforce his claim. The arbitrators were not apprised of the institution of the suit, and on the 30th March 1918, they published their joint award. The Defendant, who did not receive notice of the suit till the 4th April, entered appearance on the 11th April and filed his written statement on the 26th April. Amongst other defences, he urged that the award was a bar to the maintenance of the suit. Thereupon the following issues were raised :—

SARAT CHANDRA SEN v. RAJ KUMAR MOOKERJEE.

1. Has the Plaintiff any title to the land in suit?

2. Does the disputed land appertain to holding No. 161?

3. Is the suit barred by law of limitation?

4. Is the Plaintiff's suit barred by the laws of estoppel and acquiescence?

5. Is the suit maintainable under the law?

6. Is the award made by the arbitrators with reference to land in suit void and inoperative?

7. To what relief, if any, is the Plaintiff entitled?

The trial Court held on the authority of the decision in Ram Chandra v. Krishna Lal (1) that the Plaintiff was not competent to resile from the agreement to refer to arbitration and that the award was not void and inoperative. The Court also investigated the case on the merits and finally dismissed the claim. Upon appeal, the Subordinate Judge held that as soon as the suit was instituted, the arbitrators became functus officio and the award was consequently invalid. On the merits, he held that the Plaintiff had established his title as found by the Commissioner, and in this view he decreed the claim in part. On the present appeal, the Defendant has contended that the award was not void and must be deemed operative, till, at any rate, the Plaintiff should establish that the proceedings of the arbitrators had been vitiated by corruption or misconduct. The Plaintiff has argued, on the other hand, that para. 18 of the second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 shows that the only remedy of the Defendant, if any, was to apply to the Court to stay the suit, and that as he did not take recourse to the procedure prescribed, the suit could not be deemed barred by the award.

(1) 17 C. W. N. 351 (1912).

The true effect of para. 18 has been considered by this Court in three recent cases. In Dinabandhu Jana v. Durga Prasad Jana (2), it was pointed out that where, for the determination of the controversy between the parties, two competent tribunals are available, the Court and the arbitrators, and Plaintiff chooses the latter but in fact has recourse to the former, it is not open to the Defendant to enforce specific performance of the contract or to plead the contract as a conclusive bar to the suit, but the Defendant may apply to the Court to stay the suit in the exercise of its judicial discretion, so as to enable either of the parties to obtain a decision from the arbitrators. When the Court is apprised that the suit has been instituted in contravention of an arbitration agreement, the Court has thus a discretion to stay the suit. The burden lies upon the Plaintiff to show that some sufficient reason exists why the matter should not be left to be decided by the arbitrators and not on the Defendant to show that no such reason exists; it is the prima facie duty of the Court to act upon the agreement between the parties. It may be added that in the case then before the Court, the suit had been instituted two days after the agreement to refer the matters in controversy to arbitration.

The question presented itself for consideration again in the case of Ram Prasad v. Mohan Lal (3) in connection with sec. 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, which furnished the model for para. 22 of the second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code. There, a reference to arbitration was made by a buyer of goods on the 3rd May 1919. On the 21st May 1919, the sellers instituted a suit for damages for breach of contract. On the 20th June 1919 the award was made, and on the 9th July following, it was filed in Court. On the 22nd July, the sellers applied to set aside the award. Mr. Justice Greaves granted the application on the ground that though the reference to arbitration had been made before the suit in terms of the contract between the parties, the award was of no effect, as the suit had not been stayed pending the arbitration. This conclusion was approved by the Court of appeal, as supported by the decisions in Doleman and Sons v. Ossett Corporation (4), Apparu v. Secni (5) and Dinabandhu v. Durga Prosad (2). It cannot thus be disputed that if the Court has refused to stay the action, or if the Defendant has abstained from asking it to do so, the Court has seisin of the dispute, and it is by its decision and by its decision alone that the rights of the parties are settled. We need not consider whether a Plaintiff who has instituted a suit in contravention of the agreement to refer to arbitration may not deprive himself of his right to prosecute the suit if, at the same time, he goes on with the arbitration and obtains an award. The facts of the present case do not raise such a question; if it did require examination, it might be difficult to reconcile the views of Fletcher Moulton, L. J., and Farwell, L. J., as expounded in Doleman & Sons v. Ossett Corporation (4).

SARAT CHANDRA SEN v. RAJ KUMAR MOOKERJEE.

The point arose again in Jokiram v. Ghaneshyam Das (6). In that case, a seller of goods referred a dispute between him and his buyer to arbitration on the 24th April 1919, in accordance with an arbitration clause contained in the contract. On the 14th August 1919, the buyer, with full knowledge of the arbitration, instituted a suit for recovery of damages from the seller on the allegation that the seller was in default. The seller received intimation of the suit on the 24th August 1919, but the writ was not served on him till the 26th September 1919. On the 16th October 1919, the arbitrators made an award in favour of the seller. On the 17th November 1919, the buyer made an application to the Court to set aside the award on the ground that by reason of the institution of the suit the arbitrators were functus officio and their award was consequently void for want of jurisdiction. This application was granted and the award was set aside on the 28th November 1919. On the 1st December 1919, the seller applied for stay of the suit under sec. 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act. This application was refused by the trial Court but was granted by the Court of appeal. The arbitrators were thus left free to proceed with the arbitration. It was pointed out that though as the result of the institution of the suit the arbitrators became functus officio from that very moment and their authority to deal further with the matter referred became extinguished, the validity of the reference itself, which, when made, was in exact conformity with the agreement of the parties, was not affected.

The true position consequently is that as soon as the suit is instituted the arbitrators lose their authority. If the Defendant still desires that the controversy should be decided by arbitration he must endeavour to obtain a stay of the suit by an appropriate application under para. 18 of the second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code. If the application is refused by the Court in the exercise of its discretion, the remedy by arbitration ceases to be available. If the suit is stayed, two possible contingencies may require consideration. If the arbitrators have not yet made an award, they are free to bring their proceedings to a termination and make an award in accordance with law. If, on the other hand, the arbitrators have made an award after the institution of the suit as happened in Ram Chand v. Gobindram (7), the award cannot be pleaded as an effective bar to the suit. The award so made should be brought up before the Court under para. 20 of the second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code; the Court will refuse to enforce it under para. 21 read with para. 14 (c), and as the award will thus stand cancelled because made without jurisdiction, the arbitrators will be left free thereafter to resume their proceedings on the basis of the original reference. If this view were not adopted, the result would follow that a party to a submission, who had appeared throughout and had taken his chance before the arbitrators, might, at the very last moment, when the award, possibly an adverse award, was about to be made and when there would be no time left for his opponent to obtain a stay order, institute a suit and thereby render infructuous the entire proceedings.

In the case before us, the Defendant did not take recourse to the proper procedure, namely, apply for stay of the suit, cancellation of the award as made without jurisdiction, and thereafter remission of the matter to the arbitrators. His failure was possibly attributable to ignorance of the law which was explained in the case of Dinabandhu v. Durga Prosad (2), long after the institution of this suit. We have accordingly considered whether the Defendant should at this late stage be given an opportunity to comply with the requirements of the law, as was done in the case just mentioned. In our opinion, the answer must be in the negative for the death of one of the arbitrators renders a reconsideration by the original arbitrators impossible. Unlike the case of Jokiram v. Ghaneshyam Das (6), the agreement to refer to arbitration here does not provide for reconstitution of the committee of arbitrators if one of them should die. Consequently, even if we were inclined to concede to the Defendant the same advantage as was given to the Appellant in Dinabandhu v. Durga Prosad (2), he would not be benefited thereby. There is thus no escape from the position that in the present case the award has been rightly rejected as made without jurisdiction and the suit tried on the merits by the Court. The appeal consequently fails and is dismissed with costs.

ABDUL GOHUR SIRKAR v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Held—That this was misdirection which vitiated the verdict and rendered the conviction liable to be set aside

This was an appeal preferred on the 15th May 1922 against an order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Backergunj (Mr. H. G. Blomfield), dated the 27th January 1922.

The material portion of the Sessions Judge's charge to the jury is set out below :—

" The case for the prosecution is that one evening early in last October the female accused Sarojini, who with her daughter Sukhadha, a girl of about 14, was staying in the house of her brother Prasanna, took her daughter out for a walk, but instead of returning to her brother's house, took her to that of Abdul Gahur, one of the two male accused. From there she was removed to Sabi Mullah's house, where she stopped that night, and the next night she was taken by the two male accused and 3 or 4 other men to the house of Erfan, her intended husband, her mother also being one of the party. That night she was left alone in Erfan's room, and he outraged her, repeating the performance during the next 4 or 5 nights, her own mother and his mother conniving at his villainy. She was then taken to various places, and finally ended up at Pirojpur, where the party took up their abode in a boat on a khal near the house of one Mafezuddi Mukhtar, who for some reason best known to himself afforded shelter to the abductors. From this ignominious position she was eventually rescued by the prompt action of the S. I., who took her before the Magistrate, by whom she was made over to her brother-in-law and her uncle, who were members of the search party.

The case for the defence is that mother and daughter were a bad lot, and that so far from the latter having been abducted by the former, on the contrary, the pair were turned out, bag and baggage, by their righteous uncle, who resented the slur cast on the fair fame of his family. Thereafter, it is said, they embraced Muhammadanism, and the two male accused embraced them; for not only is it alleged (or at any rate suggested) that the daughter went through a form of marriage with Erfan, but also—and this the prosecution admit or rather expressly state—that the mother is the mistress of Abdul Gahur. Thus there was no guardianship, the girl was not either kidnapped or abducted, and the accused Erfan merely had connection with her, not against her will, but with her consent. Ergo no offence has been committed.

(The evidence on both sides was here referred to.)

Two stories are thus before the jury—one in which a definite and palpable offence has been committed—the offence of kidnapping or abduction cum procuration or disposal of a minor for immoral purposes, and the other in which the accused have done nothing contrary to law (for seduction per se is no offence). It is for the gentlemen of the jury to decide which hypothesis the better fits the facts and the probabilities—that of guilt or innocence.

The question which the jury will have to answer is this.

Did the accused either kidnap or abduct the girl with an immoral purpose, and was that purpose carried out? For if it was, that will be the best evidence of the purpose. So with the charge of disposal and obtaining possession of a minor.

Now as regards the charge of kidnapping, the question of guardianship is material. But for abduction it is not. For one can abduct any person. Therefore, whether the girl was in anyone's custody or not, she may still have been abducted with intent that she should be seduced.

There seems very little reason to doubt that the accused Erfan had intercourse with her. He does not trouble to deny it, but instead asserts that he married her, after she had become a Muhammedan. Positive evidence of conversion and marriage, especially of the latter, are alike wanting. At the same time it is but fair to point out that in a case like the present the so-called conversion is no more than nominal, or is at best but a very perfunctory performance dictated entirely by ulterior motives and accepted as purely utilitarian by the other members of both religions. Evidence has been adduced to shew that the two women were expelled by their own family with no more than the clothes they stood up in. If this version is believed, then mother and daughter were in a very awkward predicament. They could not return to their relations for their own relations had themselves turned them out; the other members of their caste would have nothing to do with them; and they had neither food, shelter, nor money. What was to be done? Go to the landlord, or go to the devil? Become (and marry) a Muhammedan and become a prostitute? They had little choice. The only religion that would have taken them in on equal terms, and would have provided them with husbands of their own choice, had they so desired, was one of which they could know nothing, but it is still open to them. If the jury accept the testimony of the three Hindu gentlemen as to their being turned out of their habitations in pious honour by their self-righteous brethern, this will materially weaken the prosecution case.

If they go further and believe that the women voluntarily went, or allowed themselves to be handed over, to Erfan and Gohur respectively, and of their own accord lived with them, whether married or not, then the case for the prosecution will go altogether.

Before, however, coming to any such conclusion, let the jury consider well the narrative of events that culminated in the finding and recovery of the girl from the clutches of the lawyer of Pirojpur. The motives of the person in harbouring the accused I must leave to the jury; to me they appear questionable, in view of the allegation against him made by the girl, and of his refusal to give her up when called upon to do so. If Sukhada was voluntarily living with Erfan, why was she carted about from place to place, and finally taken to Pirojpur? Here again the defence have an answer ready: they say that the two women went to Pirojpur of their own accord, to take legal advice for the recovery of their property from their relations.

It is necessary to point out that the persons chiefly concerned, viz., the brother-in-law and the uncle, as well as the women-folk of the family, flatly deny that they have turned out either the mother or the daughter, and especially not the latter. If they had already done so, would they have troubled to run this case and to give evidence for a girl in whom they had on their own shewing no further interest. I would ask the jury to give careful consideration to this point before they conclude that the girl was already outcasted at the time either of the alleged abduction or of the recovery. Briefly, if the jury believe that the girl was to any extent removed or made to go from any place to any other with intent to force or seduce her to any (even one act of) unlawful intercourse against her will or even against her inclinations, then they will be bound to return a verdict of guilty under sec. 366, I. P. Code.

—The jury must ask themselves which view of the facts they find the more consistent and the more probable, and which seems to them the better supported by the evidence they have heard; and should return a verdict accordingly."

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

WALMSLEY, J.—The three Appellants were all charged under sec. 366, I. P. C. and there were separate charges, against Abdul Gohur under secs. 372, 109, I. P. C., against Erfan under sec. 373, I. P. C. and against Sarojini under sec. 372, I. P. C. They were found guilty on all the charges, and the learned Judge sentenced Abdul Gohur to three years' rigorous imprisonment, and the other two to four years' rigorous imprisonment each all under sec. 366, I. P. C., but did not pass any separate sentences on the other charges.

The girl in the case is Sukhada, the daughter of Sarojini, and briefly stated the story is that Sarojini took her to Abdul Gohur's house and afterwards made her over to Erfan for purposes of co-habitation. The defence is that the woman became a Musalman, and that Erfan wanted to marry the girl.

So far as the charges under secs. 372 and 373, I. P. C. are concerned, the age of the girl is an essential point. It was necessary for the prosecution to prove that she was under the age of sixteen years. For this purpose the Assistant Surgeon was examined, and he expressed a definite opinion that she was below sixteen years.

The first objection taken to the learned Judge's charge is that he has not dealt properly with the question of minority. In explaining the law he said that for kidnapping, the girl must be under sixteen years, and in explaining the terms "disposing of" and "immoral purpose" he used the word minor, but he nowhere said that if the girl was not proved to be under sixteen, there could be no offence under sec. 372 or 373, I. P. C. Further on the question of fact, he merely referred to the medical evidence, said that the defence tried to make out that she was sixteen, and left it to the jury to decide. That seems rather a summary treatment of an important matter, but looking at the evidence on the record I am not prepared to hold that the verdict is vitiated by the defects. Secondly, it is said that the learned Judges did not explain to the jury that the burden of proof lay on the prosecution. It is pointed out that at the beginning of the summing up, he said "It is for the gentlemen of the jury to decide which hypothesis the better fits the facts and the probabilities—that of guilt or innocence," and that his conclusion is in similar words, "The jury must ask themselves which view of the facts they find the more consistent and the more probable, and which seems to them the better supported by the evidence they have heard; and should return a verdict accordingly." On the other hand, the charge began with general remarks on the burden of proof and the benefit of the doubt and the earlier of the two passages which I have quoted is immediately followed by the words: "The question which the jury will have to answer is this: Did the accused either kidnap or abduct the girl, etc." In the absence of details as to what the learned Judge said about the burden of proof I think this criticism is well founded, for when the jury was asked to decide which hypothesis suited the facts better, they were in effect told that the prosecution would discharge its onus by producing the better hypothesis. That was the last instruction they received from the Judge, and I think it is very probable that in consequence they looked at the evidence from a wrong point of view.

Thirdly, it is said that the learned Judge has expressed his own views very emphatically with nothing more than a conventional direction that the responsibility of deciding questions of facts rests with the jury. This criticism does not commend itself to me, for I find it difficult to understand what view of the facts as a whole the learned Judge did take. He certainly takes it for granted that Erfan was cohabiting with the girl, to the knowledge of Sarojini but those are facts not in dispute, for the Appellant's story is that the mother and daughter were married to Abdul and Erfan respectively. So far from taking from the jury the duty of determining questions of fact, I think the charge is defective rather because it does not set out all the questions that required decision, and because it offers extremely little guidance.

Another criticism, affecting only Abdul Gohur, is that he is not said to have taken the girl to his house, and that he was not at home when she was brought there. The learned Judge has not said anywhere in his charge what act on the part of Abdul Gohur could render him liable to a charge under sec. 366, I. P. C. : he took no part in bringing the girl to his own house : the removal on the first night to Sabi Molla's house does not appear to have been in furtherance of any scheme for abducting the girl, so that if Abdul Gohur participated in any abduction it must have been when he escorted the girl to Erfan's house. The learned Judge has not dealt with this matter, although he should have told the jury when and where the abduction was said to have taken place, and asked them to say whether Abdul Gohur took any part in it.

In regard to the exposition of secs. 372 and 373, I. P. C. I wish to point out that the learned Judge was wrong in referring to the amendments proposed in 1914, for they have not become part of the law, and also to say that the meaning of the sections has been discussed in the case of Queen-Empress v. Sukee Raut (1). If the Judge had studied that authority his explanation of the terms "dispose of" and "use" would have been very different.

As I have indicated the charge is defective in several respects particularly in the manner in which the burden of proof was treated. The case is a very perplexing one, and I cannot say that in spite of misdirections the jury has arrived at a right decision.

The course which we must adopt is to set aside the convictions and sentences, and leave it to the authorities to decide whether there should be a fresh trial or not. The Appellants will be released.

STRAWARDY, J.—I agree.

v.

T. G. VIJAYARA-

GHAVACHARIAR,

Respondent.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 106—Money received by partner after dissolution of partnership—Suit by other partner for recovery of share therein, if maintainable after suit for general accounts barred—Position where an item falls in after accounts squared off—Fresh cause of action.

It is contrary to the policy of the Legislature to allow a partner, whose right to sue for a general partnership accounts has been barred by limitation, to sue for his share of specific payments received from debtors by one partner subsequently to the dissolution of the partnership, permitting the latter by way of set off to claim what may be found due to him upon taking the partnership accounts.

If a partnership has been dissolved and the accounts have been wound up and each partner has paid what he has to contribute to the debts of the partnership and received his share of the profits, the mutual rights and obligations having been thus all discharged, and then it turns out afterwards that there was some item to the credit of the partnership which was either forgotten or treated as valueless by reason of the supposed insolvency of the debtor or for any other cause, which item afterwards becomes of value and falls in, it ought to be divided between the partners in proportion to their shares in the original partnership.

If on the other hand no accounts have been taken and there is no constat that the partners have squared up, then the proper remedy when such an item falls in is to have the accounts of the partnership taken; and if it is too late to have recourse to that remedy when it is too late to claim a share in an item as part of the partnership assets.

KNOX v. GYE (1) considered.

Obiter dictum to the contrary in DAY v. KHATAV (2) and decisions in MERWAT v. RUSTOMJI (3), SOKKANADHA v. SOKKANADHA (6) and THIRUVENGADA v. SADAGOPA (7) overruled.

This was an appeal against a decree of the High Court of Madras in its Appellate Jurisdiction, which affirmed subject to a variation a decree of the said Court in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The facts are set out in the judgment of the Board but may be shortly stated as follows:—

The two Appellants, the Respondent and Narasimhachariar carried on business in partnership from June 1908.

In 1911 Narasimhachariar died and in November 1913 his adopted son filed a suit for an account and for payment to him of his adopted father's share. The claim of the adopted son was settled and the present Respondent was by order of the Court made Plaintiff.

The latter (inter alia) prayed for an account of the partnership business.

The suit was tried before Bakewell, J., who delivered judgment on the 26th February 1915, and held that the partnership having been dissolved in April 1910 the suit was barred by sec. 106 of the Limitation Act. From this judgment no appeal was made but on the 30th April 1915 the Respondent filed the present suit to recover his share of certain monies alleged to have been received by the Appellants from a debtor of the late firm.

The suit was tried by Kumaraswami Shastriar, J., who held that the monies received by the Defendants were monies due to the late firm and that "a suit by the Plaintiff to recover his share out of the specific items of the partnership assets recovered by the Defendants would lie, although a suit by him for a dissolution of the partnership and taking of the partnership accounts would be barred."

In the course of his judgment the learned Judge referred to the decisions in:—

Sokkanadha Vannimundar v. Sokkanadha Vannimundar (6) and Saḍhu Narayana Aiyangar v. Ramaswami Aiyangar (9) and said "It is argued by Mr. Krishnaswamy Ayyar that the effect of allowing a Plaintiff to sue for the recovery of specific items alleged to have been received by the Defendants and of allowing the Defendants to set up the plea that if a general account is taken the Plaintiff would be entitled to no relief, would virtually be to put an end to any period of limitation for taking the partnership accounts. Were the matter "res integra" I should think there is considerable force in the argument: but I am concluded by the Madras cases above referred to."

An appeal by the Appellants to the High Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction was dismissed by Wallis, C. J., and Napier, J. In the course of their judgment the learned Judges referred to the above-mentioned decisions and stated: "They appear to proceed upon the view that the receipt of assets by a former partner after dissolution gives rise to a fresh cause of action, otherwise it would be quite impossible to distinguish the decision in Knox v. Gye (1)."

The Appellants now appealed to His Majesty in Council.

M. Talbot for the Appellants.—The suit is not maintainable in any event.

Partnership in India is codified in the Contract Act, IX of 1872; sec. 265 of which enables a partner to recover his share of profit from partnership transactions but only by taking a general account.

The English Law of partnership is the same:—

Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 22, sec. 104.

Richardson v. Bank of England (10) and Marshall v. Maclure (11).

In India the High Court has decided this in Sokkanadha v. Sokkanadha (6), Thiruvengada Mudaliar v. Sadagopa Mudaliar (7), Gottipati China Kondian v. Gottipati Narasappa Naidu (12) and Merwanji v. Rustomji (3).

In the latter case certain dicta in Knox v. Gye (1) have been misconstrued.

Their true meaning was that if a general account has been taken and adjusted and subsequently a further asset is received by a surviving partner the executor of a deceased partner can maintain a suit.

Apart from these dicta the decision is in my favour. Merwanji v. Rustomji (3) was based on the judgment of Green, J. in Dayal Jairaj v. Khatao Ladha (2), but the Court in Merwanji v. Rustomji (3) overlooked the fact that in that case it was expressly held that the transaction in question was wholly outside the partnership transaction.

Merwanji v. Rustomji (3) was adversely criticised in Rivett Carnac v. Gocul- das Sobhanmull (4), by the trial Judge (Candy, J.), though he felt bound to follow it.

His judgment was confirmed on appeal but on quite a different ground, [vide Rivett Carnac v. Goculdas Sobhanmull (4) and Bhugwandas Mitharam v. Rivett Carnac (5)], and the point that is now being argued was never alluded to. In Nehal v. Kishen (8), the Court rightly refused to follow Mertanji v. Rustomji (3).

The Indian cases which have been followed in this suit are in any case distinguishable, because here a suit for a general account had already been brought and had been dismissed as barred by limitation.

The items now sued on were received prior to the judgment, and therefore the doctrine of "res judicata" applies:-- Vinayak Shirrao v. Dattatraya (13).

The payment gave rise to no new cause of action [Vide Knox v. Gye (1)] and the present suit is barred by Or. 2, r. 2 of the Indian Civil Procedure Code, 1908.

Mr. Parikh for the Respondent.—A partner can always sue for a specific item in the hands of another partner but subject to the latter's right to a general account.

This is established by a long line of decisions and should not be overruled unless subversive of justice, equity and good conscience.

There is no suggestion that this is the case.

There is no new cause of action here arising out of obligations under secs. 258 and 263 of the Indian Contract Act IX of 1872.

Such an action is maintainable in England.

Lindley on Partnership, 8th Edn., pp. 628 and 630.

Knox v. Gye (1) was decided under the English Statute of Limitations.

The fact that the claim is not by the representative of a deceased partner is immaterial. The case of Nehal v. Kishen (8) was based on totally different considerations.

Sir G. R. Lowndes in reply.—The rule of justice, equity and good conscience is the rule of English law unless inapplicable.

Waghela Rajsanji v. Sheikh Mushudin (14).

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD PHILLIMORE.—About the year 1908 a partnership was formed between Narasimhachariar, the Respondent Vijayaraghavachariar, the Appellant Gopala now deceased and the Appellant Ethirajulu, who for the purposes of this appeal also represents the first Appellant. Narasimhachariar having died in 1911, a suit was filed on the 15th November 1913 in the High Court at Madras by his adopted son against the Respondent and the two Appellants, praying for partnership accounts, and payment to him of his adopted father's share. The Plaintiff in this suit was, in some manner not now important to consider, settled with, and retired from the suit and by an order of the High Court the Respondent was transposed from his position as Defendant and became Plaintiff, continuing the suit against the other Defendants, the present Appellants.

The suit came on for hearing before a Judge of the High Court on the 26th February 1915, when it was found that the partnership had been dissolved before the death of Narasimbachariar, namely, in April 1910, and that therefore the suit was barred by Art. 106 of Sch. I of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, which provides that a suit for accounts and a share of the profits of a dissolved partnership must be brought within three years of the date of dissolution. The Respondent did not appeal. But on the 30th April of the same year he launched a second suit against the present Appellants, which is now in question before their Lordships.

In this suit, after setting out the proceedings in the previous suit and admitting that he had become disentitled to claim a general account and the payment to him of what might be found due and payable on the taking of a general account, he said that the sum of Rs. 18,842 had been received by the Appellants in various payments on various dates from debtors to the old firm, and he claimed his quarter share in this total sum. The Appellants put in a written statement in which they denied that they had received any assets of the firm, said that if the accounts were to be taken the Respondent would be found to be indebted to the firm, pleaded the Indian Limitation Act, and that the suit was barred by res judicata and certain other defences. The suit was tried before Kumaraswami Sastriar, J., who gave judgment on the 27th March 1916, deciding the bulk of the issues in favour of the Plaintiff, now Respondent, and giving him a declaration that he was entitled to a quarter share of the amount claimed and ordering an account to be taken with a view to showing whether there was any set off in respect of sums which might be due from the Respondent to the Appellants. By the schedule of the decree it appeared that approximately Rs. 11,000 of the sum claimed had been received before the institution of the first suit, and the whole of the balance before the decree in the first suit. The learned Judge held that though a general partnership account was barred by the Indian Limitation Act and by the decision in the first suit, there was nevertheless a right in a partner to sue his other partners for his share of the assets of the partnership, for which the period of limitation would be six years and not three; and that, therefore, the second suit had been brought in time. The learned Judge came to this conclusion on the authority of certain cases decided in the High Court of Madras, following earlier decisions in the High Court of Bombay.

The present Appellants appealed to the High Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction. The appeal came on before Sir John Wallis, C. J. and Napier, J. and was dismissed, the learned Judges saying that they were not prepared to go behind three Madras decisions to the effect that a cause of action arises from the receipt after dissolution of partnership of assets by a former partner.

They observed that these decisions appeared to proceed upon the view that the receipt of assets by a former partner after dissolution gives rise to a fresh cause of action. Otherwise, as they said, it would be quite impossible to distinguish the decision in Knox v. Gye (1). It is from this dismissal that the present appeal is brought.

Though in the opinion of the Appellate Judges the case of Knox v. Gye (1), unless it can be distinguished, would destroy the case of the Respondent, it so happens that it is upon a reading of certain passages in the speeches of the noble Lords who took part in that judgment that the series of cases in the Bombay and Madras High

K. GOPALA CHETTY v. T. G. VIJAYARAGHA VACHARIAR.

Courts, upon the authority of which judgment has been given for the Respondent, proceed. It is, therefore, important to begin the consideration of the law with a careful analysis of that case.

Gye was lessee of the Covent Garden Theatre and for the purpose of the concern obtained in 1853 a considerable sum of money from one Thistlethwayte on terms of partnership. Thistlethwayte died in 1854, making Knox his executor. Knox in the second bill which he filed (which was the one that came under consideration in the House of Lords) contended that thereafter he and Gye continued the partnership. In 1854 negotiations were entered into with one Hughes for the temporary use of Her Majesty's Theatre, and a sum of £5,000 was paid to Hughes in advance for this purpose. Hughes did not carry out his share of the bargain. Gye sued him for the £5,000 and recovered judgment, but not succeeding in getting the money, he ultimately accepted, in 1862, the sum of £2,500 by way of compromise. In 1856, the Covent Garden Theatre was burnt down and Gye took the Lyseum Theatre. In October 1864, Knox, filed the bill against Gye, praying for accounts from the date of the original advance by Thistlethwayte, for the winding up of the alleged partnership between Gye and Thistlethwayte, that Knox might have his share of the sum advanced by Thistlethwayte, including a share of the money recovered or which ought to have been recovered from Hughes, and a share of the profits of the partnership. The answer set up by Gye in substance pleaded that Thistlethwayte's share was confined to the business of the old theatre, the whole capital of which was lost by the fire; that Knox was not entitled to any accounts; that his rights if any arose at law and not in equity; and that whichever way they arose, the statute of limitation was a good answer.

The Vice Chancellor, Sir William Page Wood, made a decree in favour of Knox, being of opinion that the statute of limitation did not apply, either as regards the money received from Hughes, which he treated as an equitable claim enforceable in equity, or as regards the share of Thistlethwayte, in the partnership, the statute being prevented from applying to that part of the claim because of the fiduciary relation between Thistlethwayte and Gye, and by the fact that the money recovered from Hughes was received within six years before the institution of the suit.

On appeal the Lord Chancellor, Lord Chelmsford, reversed this decree. When the case came on for hearing before the House of Lords, the House was composed of Sir William Page Wood, now become Lord Hatherley and Lord Chancellor, Lord Chelmsford and Lords Westbury and Colonsay. At the close of the Appellant's case the House was of opinion that the partnership never extended to the Lyceum business, and counsel for the Respondent were directed to confine themselves to the argument upon the statute of limitation. It was apparently considered that if the statute of limitation was to be applied, the right of Knox accrued in December 1854, upon the death of Thistlethwayte, the partnership being dissolved by his death; and that the bill not being filed till 1864 was out of time; and with the possible exception of Lord Hatherley, the noble and learned Lords who composed the House held that the receipt of money from Hughes more than six years after the partnership was dissolved did not take the case out of the operation of the statute. If, therefore, the statute was to be applied it constituted a good defence. The matter then remaining for decision was whether this was a case where equity followed the law, and consequently the relief was barred. This was so held, Lord Hatherley dissenting, and the suit was accordingly dismissed.

Now it will be observed that the sum of £2,500 was received within the statutory period, and its receipt was the receipt by Gye of a partnership asset.

The case would seem, therefore, to be in point, and (the suit having been dismissed) adverse to the present Respondent. But as the suit was one for a general account and not merely or even by way of addition to recover Knox's share of the sum received from Hughes, and as there are in the speeches of the noble and learned Lords some passages where a case like the present is put by way of hypothesis, the decision in Knox v. Gye (1) need not be taken for the purposes of the present judgment as laying down a final determination of the law on this point.

Nevertheless the observations in that case when carefully considered do not warrant the construction which has been put upon them by some of the Courts in India, but on the contrary warrant the conclusion to which independently of authority a little clear thinking leads.

Lord Hatherley, for the purposes of his observations, takes the case of a partnership dissolved by death and an account being taken "that everything which could be ascertained had been then ascertained and adjusted, that the account was complete and that releases were given"—releases which as he says "could only go to the extent of the claim that then existed against the surviving partner." He assumes that in that case an asset for which no allowance has been made falls in and is received by the surviving ex-partner; and he holds that in such a case the executor of the deceased ex-partner could claim his share.

Lord Colonsay with a similar train of thought speaks of a sum of money "unexpectedly recovered."

Lord Chelmsford says: "It was said that upon payment of the debt by Hughes a new right had accrued to the Appellant. But the right to sue for what? The answer must be for an account. But that he was entitled to all along, and the account must have included this very debt of Hughes, the receipt of which is supposed to have created a new right to an account." It is true that there is later on in his speech some rather vague language which may have led to his having been supposed to take the view that even when partnership accounts cannot be taken a suit may be brought for a specific item; but the whole tenor of his reasoning shows that he is contemplating the circumstances supposed by Lords Hatherley and Colonsay. Lord Westbury's language is striking—he is not contemplating this particular case, but discussing the effect of the statute of limitation. He says:—

It will be asked whether the bar by statute can be greater than a release between the parties. In the answer to that question the nature of the release must be required to be stated. If on an account stated a release is given, the release will be limited to that account, and will not bar the right of an executor to have an account of subsequent receipts. But if the release be of the right to an account altogether, then the release will be exactly equivalent to the bar here created by the statute and will bar all right whatever to claim the benefit of any subsequent receipt by the accounting party.

The rule of law then is the following:—

If a partnership has been dissolved and the accounts have been wound up and each partner has paid what he has to contribute to the debts of the partnership and received his share of the profits, the mutual rights and obligations having been thus all discharged, and then it turns out afterwards that there was some item to the credit of the partnership which was either forgotten or treated as valueless by reason of the supposed insolvency of the debtor or for any other cause, which item afterwards becomes of value and falls in, it ought to be divided between the partners in proportion to their shares in the original partnership. There is no reason why one should have it more than the other.

(1) L. R. 5 H. L. 658 (1872):

K. GOPALA CHETTY v. T. G. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARIAR.

The case will not often occur. If the debt is incurred to the firm and both the ex-partners are alive the debtor can only safely pay upon the receipt of both, for the agency of each for the other has ceased with the dissolution of partnership, and both receiving and being in possession each can insist upon his proper share.

Lord Hatherley points out the most probable occasion when it would arise, namely, when one of the partners is dead and the debt has accrued at law to the surviving partner who thus becomes solely possessed of the former partnership item; and he says that in such a case the executors of the deceased ex-partner would have a right to recover their testator's share from the ex-partner who has received the whole. It is not so certain that this particular case would arise in India by reason of the provisions of sec. 45 of the Indian Contract Act, upon which section apparently different decisions have been given in the several High Courts in India. (See Sir F. Pollock's work on the Indian Contract Act, p. 193). It is, however, possible to conceive of other cases in which this principle might have to be applied. A partner might contract really for the partnership, but apparently as sole principal and in that capacity be the sole recipient of a partnership item.

"At any rate, in all cases where for any reason it did occur that after the dissolution and complete winding up of a partnership an asset which had not been taken into account fell in, it ought to be divided between the ex-partners or their representatives according to their shares in the former partnership.

If on the other hand no accounts have been taken and there is no constat that the partners have squared up, then the proper remedy when such an item falls in is to have the accounts of the partnership taken; and if it is too late to have recourse to that remedy, then it is also too late to claim a share in an item as part of the partnership assets, and the Plaintiff does not prove, and cannot prove that upon the due taking of the accounts he would be entitled to that share. It might well be the case that one of the reasons why no final balancing of accounts took place was that A. owed the partnership so much money and that it was anticipated that B. would hereafter receive a particular item which would operate substantially to balance the claim.

The principle above set forth being reasonably clear and intelligible, it remains for their Lordships to discuss certain decisions in the Indian Courts.

The first case on this matter was Dayal v. Khatar (2) decided in the year 1875. The judgment in that case rested upon other and incontrovertible grounds, but there were obiter dicta in the course of the judgment which no doubt would help the present Respondent. These obiter dicta were relied upon by Latham, J., in Merwanji v. Rustomji (3), decided in the year 1882. That decision is no doubt in point and in favour of the Respondent; but it is to be observed that it was largely based upon the obiter dicta in the previous case.

The third Bombay case was Rivett Carnac v. Goculdas (4). Candy, J., sitting as a single Judge in the first Court criticised the previous Bombay decisions, but said that he was bound by them. Accordingly he held that though a claim for a general partnership account was barred by limitation a claim for a share of moneys received by the partnership within the period of limitation was not barred; that the Plaintiff was entitled to recover Hemabai's and Goculdas's shares of the said money; and that the second Defendant was entitled to set off against this his share of certain moneys received by the Plaintiff as part of the assets of the said partnership. The High Court in appeal held that the Respondent's claim to an account of the partnership dealings was not barred by limitation because under sec. 17 of the Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877) when a person, who, if living, would have a right to sue, has died, the period of limitation is to be computed from the time when there is a legal representative of such person capable of instituting the necessary suit, and gave the Plaintiff a decree for the assets which he claimed. The case came on appeal to His Majesty in Council in 1898, and is reported as Bhugwandas Mitharam v. Rivett Carnac (5). This Board agreed with the decision of the High Court that the claim was not barred by the Limitation Act, but their Lordships thought that the decree given by the High Court was too wide, and directed an account to be taken of the partnership transactions. They made no observations on the particular point now under consideration, and the case may be left out of consideration except to the extent to which it embodies the criticisms of Candy, J.

Their Lordships now turn to the Madras cases. In Sokkanadha v. Sokkanadha (6), decided on appeal by the High Court in 1904, the decision in Merwanji v. Rustomji (3) was followed as an authority, and reasons were superadded why in the opinion of the learned Judges it was right. One passage may usefully be quoted:—

Even on principle it would seem that this conclusion is the better one, for why should the fact that a suit for a general account is no longer maintainable be used to secure some of the partners exclusively the benefit of realisation of assets made under circumstances which raise no question of limitation with reference to a claim strictly confined to a share of what was realised. Of course, to allow such a claim to be maintained without the Defendant being at liberty to go into the whole accounts and if possible defeat the Plaintiff's claim by showing that the net balance is against the Plaintiff would be quite unjust. The view we follow avoids such undesirable results while it secures to all the partners their fair and proper shares in assets with reference to which no question of lapse of time is capable of being raised under the law.

With great deference this reasoning begs the question. How is it to be known that some of the partners would exclusively benefit by the realisation of assets which come in after dissolution? To meet this objection the learned Judges assume that accounts may be taken and that they have done enough for the ex-partner who is sued in saying that he may have the accounts taken. But if the policy of the law be that after the period of limitation no accounts shall be taken, for the excellent reason that materials for taking such accounts may have disappeared, it is not legitimate to say to the person sued, "Either pay on the footing that accounts have been taken which we know have not been taken and on the footing that all matters have been squared up between you and your partner when we have no knowledge that there has been any such squaring up, or submit to that taking of accounts against which the legislature has protected you."

Thiruvengada v. Sadagopa (7), also referred to in the judgment of the High Court in the case now under appeal may be taken to be to the same effect.

On the other hand, the Chief Court of the Punjab has expressed its inability to follow these cases [Nehal v. Kishen (8)].

Their Lordships have no information as to the matter having come before the High Court of Calcutta.

These decisions having been thus analysed appear to rest upon some obiter dicta which do not purport to express Indian law, but are the result of the construction which some learned Judges have put upon the decision of the House of Lords in Knox v. Gye (1) and inferences drawn from that decision, and except for the reasoning upon which their Lordships have already commented in Sokkanadha v. Sokkanadha (6) to have no other basis. As their Lordships have already pointed out the obiter dicta in the Bombay High Court are founded upon a misapprehension of what took place in Knox v. Gye (1).

The present case is a striking illustration of the mischief which might result from following the conclusion at which the learned Judges in the Court of Appeal have arrived. The very items for which the Respondent is now suing were actually items which would have come into the account on his claim against the Appellants for a partnership account in the suit in which he failed.

As their Lordships have arrived at this conclusion, it is unnecessary to consider the further point raised on behalf of the Appellants that the dismissal of the previous suit constituted the bar of res judicata.

Their Lordships will humbly recommend His Majesty that the appeal be allowed and that the suit be dismissed and that the Appellants have their costs here and below.

and not right and interest of judgment-debtor only.

The Plaintiffs were the owners of a miras tenure and under them was a dāmiras tenure held by the Defendants. This under-tenure was sold in execution of a rent decree and purchased by a third party who never obtained possession and in execution of a rent decree obtained against the latter the under-tenure was again sold more than twelve years after and purchased by the Plaintiffs who sued for possession :

Per WALMSLEY, J. (WOODROFFE and SUHRAWARDY, JJ., contra).—That Art. 137 of the Limitation Act applied to the case and the suit was barred.

Per SUHRAWARDY, J.—Art. 140 or Art. 144 applied to the case.

Per WOODROFFE, J. (to whom the case was referred under sec. 98, C. P. C.).

That none of the articles of the Limitation Act applied to the case but the suit was barred under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Where a rent-decree has been properly obtained the tenure itself passes to the purchaser and not the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor only and the rights of the purchaser must be determined by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act under sec. 158B and sec. 159. The Plaintiffs by their purchase acquired the under-tenure with power to annul encumbrances and the interest acquired by the Defendants by adverse possession against the recorded tenants, of which the Plaintiffs were aware, was an encumbrance which the Plaintiffs could have and should have annulled under sec. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act, within one year; and not having done so their right to recover possession was lost.

The word encumbrance as used in secs. 159 and 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act includes a statutory title acquired by a trespasser by adverse possession ~~of the~~ land of a defaulting tenant.

Per WOODROFFE and SUHRAWARDY, JJ.—Art. 137 of the Limitation Act ~~does~~ not apply to a case where the tenure itself and not the right, title and interest alone of the judgment-debtor is purchased.

Per WOODROFFE, J.—That the difference of opinion not having arisen in a Letters Patent Appeal, sec. 98, C. P. C., covered the case and the objection that the reference was not in order and should have been decided by the opinion of the senior Judge failed.

That under the present law the third Judge cannot dispose of the appeal generally but can only decide the point of law referred and then dispose of the appeal, the referring Judges having indicated how it should be disposed of according to the possible answers to be given.

As the question of law actually referred to the third Judge was not decided by him, and the reference consequently proved infructuous, the Division Bench disposed of the appeal under cl. (2) of sec. 98, C. P. C., the decree appealed against being confirmed.

This was an appeal preferred on the 10th November 1919 against a decree of the Additional District Judge of Zillah Dacca (B. K. Bose, Esq.), dated the 23rd July 1919, reversing a decree of the Munsif of Dacca (Babu Mohini Mohan Banerjee), dated the 29th July 1918.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu Paresh Lal Shome for the Appellants.

Babu Sachindra Kumar Roy for the Respondents.

This appeal first came on hearing before Walmsley and Suhrawardy, JJ., who delivered the following judgments :—

WALMSLEY, J.—The Plaintiffs are the owners of a miras. They created a dar-miras in favour of the Guhas, the Defendants, and in execution of a decree for rent they put the dar-miras to sale in the year 1890, when it was brought by Purna Chandra Dutta, who afterwards sold a six annas share to Sarat Chandra Dutta. The Plaintiffs looked to the purchasers for the rent, and obtained two decrees for rent against them. In execution of a third decree for rent they put the dar-miras to sale and bought it themselves on 13th August 1904. They instituted the present suit on 11th August 1916.

The first Court decreed the suit, but on appeal the learned Judge held that the suit was barred by Art. 137 of the Limitation Act.

On behalf of the Plaintiffs the first point urged is that this plea of limitation is not raised in the pleadings. It is true that no reference is made to the particular article of the Limitation Act, but the written statement does assert that the suit is barred by limitation. Considering what Plaintiff alleged as his cause of action I do not think we can say that the Defendants' plea ought to have been stated more explicitly.

The second point is that Art. 137 is not the appropriate article: that Art. 139 is applicable, or failing that the general Art. 144.

If Art. 137 is the appropriate one, the time that has elapsed since the purchase makes no difference to the case: the suit was barred on the day of the purchase in 1904 as hopelessly as on the day when it was instituted nearly twelve years later. Two suggestions are made for taking the suit out of Art. 137. One is that that article applies to suits where the purchaser is a stranger, but the article says nothing of the kind, and we must not read into it words which are not there. A second is that the Guhas were really the judgment-debtors, because they had allowed Purna and Sarat to represent them and were consequently bound by the decree. The objection to this view is that the landlords were aware of the fact that the Guhas, and not Sarat and Purna, were in possession, but they did not have them joined as Defendants in the rent suit, in fact the Plaintiffs have always taken the position that the Guhas are not tenants. I do not think they can now be allowed to say that they were none the less their judgment-debtors.

The learned Pleader for the Plaintiffs, however, relies more upon his other contention, that Art. 139 is the appropriate article. If it is, the Plaintiffs are within time for the period of twelve years will begin to run from the date on which the sale was confirmed. The article refers to a suit by a landlord to recover possession from a tenant, and time runs from the moment when the tenancy is determined. It is said that these conditions are satisfied by the third prayer in the plaint, that is the prayer for a declaration that the dar-mirasi right (acquired at the auction-sale) was merged in the mirasi right. I fail to see, however, that by this prayer the Plaintiffs seek to recover possession from a tenant; for their case is that the Guhas are not tenants, and the men who were their registered tenants are not parties to the suit. Similarly, if we look to the starting point the Plaintiffs do not allege that any tenancy of the Guhas has been determined. In my opinion the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court is right in holding that Art. 139 is not applicable.

As for the contention that Art. 144 applies to the suit if Art. 139 does not, I cannot agree because in my opinion Art. 137 does apply.

I am not troubled by the suggestion that the case is a hard one for the Judge finds that Purna and Sarat never got possession and we were told in the course of the hearing that the Plaintiffs were aware of the fact.

In my opinion the decision of the Lower Appellate Court should be affirmed, and the appeal dismissed with costs.

SUHRWARDY, J.—I regret, I am unable to agree with my learned brother in the order he proposes to pass in this case.

On the question of limitation the first Court held that the Plaintiffs' cause of action arose on the date of the sale of the tenure, i.e., 13th August 1904, or when the sale was confirmed, viz., 14th September 1904, the Plaintiffs' suit having been instituted within twelve years of those dates, it overruled the plea of limitation and decreed the suit on the merits. The Lower Appellate Court without entering into the merits of the case held on the allegations made in the plaint that the suit was barred under Art. 137 of the Limitation Act, 1908.

In order to face the plea of limitation, it is necessary to examine the facts as stated in the plaint and as found by the learned Munsif. It appears that the Defendants held a dar-miras under the miras held by the Plaintiffs' predecessor-in-title which was sold in execution of a rent decree obtained by the Plaintiffs against the Guhas in 1890 and purchased by Purna who subsequently sold a portion of it to Sarat. Since then the names of Purna and Sarat were recorded in the Plaintiffs' books as the tenants of the dar-miras, the Plaintiffs looked to them only for their rent. The Plaintiffs aver, and it has been found by the first Court, that "the Plaintiffs were in possession of that miras tenure by realising rent from the dar-mirasdars Purna and Sarat as is proved by contested decrees Exs. 3 and 4. Subsequently the rent of the dar-miras having fallen into arrears the Plaintiffs brought a suit for rent against Purna and Sarat and in execution of the decree therein put the dar-miras taluq to sale and purchased it themselves in 1904. The Plaintiffs brought the present suit for recovery of khas possession on the ground among others that the tenure became extinguished by merger in their superior tenure.

It is found that Purna and Sarat never obtained possession of the dar-miras after their purchase in 1890 which remained in the possession, which must be wrongful, of the Defendants. It is therefore argued that as the judgment-debtors were out of possession on the date of the sale in 1904, limitation should run against the Plaintiffs auction-purchasers from the date when the judgment-debtors were first entitled to possession, viz., 1890, and as it was over twelve years from that date when the Plaintiffs brought the present suit their claim is barred under Art. 137. It is beyond cavil that what the Plaintiffs sold and purchased in execution of their decree in 1904, was not the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors but the tenure itself which is described in the sale-proclamation Ex. 1 as বিত্তিক তালুকদারী পাতিহি নক (miras taluqdari right under patta).

Reading Arts. 136 and 137 together it is clear that the latter article intended to make the law uniform in cases of private and Court sales and the two articles in conjunction lay down that where the purchaser of an immoveable property at a private sale or at a sale in execution of a decree sues for possession of the property of which the vendor or judgment-debtor was out of possession at the time of the sale, he, the purchaser, is not entitled to get a fresh start of limitation from the date of his purchase, but the time is to be calculated as running against him from the date of dispossession of the vendor or judgment-debtor as if there was no sale.

JNANENDRA MOHAN DUTT v. UMESH CHANDRA GUHA.

This premises and presupposes that the purchaser has purchased the interest of the vendor or judgment-debtor, has stepped into his shoes and is claiming through him.

In the present case, as I have observed, the Plaintiffs purchased not the interest of the judgment-debtors, but the tenure itself, and hence they cannot be said to be entitled to the possession of the property through the judgment-debtors. A purchaser in such circumstances is not a purchaser within the meaning of Art. 137. The same consequence will follow if the landlord purchases a tenant's right or the tenant surrenders his interest to the landlord. In all these cases, the landlord is not the transferee of the interest of the tenant but the effect of the transfer is to extinguish the tenancy giving immediate right of entry to the landlord. The revenue sale law affords an analogy for the proposition as it has been held that the purchaser at a revenue sale even of a share of a revenue paying estate is not a person claiming from or through the defaulter, but rather adversely to him and under a paramount title—[Bilas Chandra v. Akshoy Kumar (1)]. The terminus a quo in cases like these should be the date when the right to immediate possession accrued to the purchaser or, as is otherwise expressed, when the estate fell into possession.

There is another point of view from which the present case should be looked at. It is conceded and rightly conceded in view of authoritative judicial pronouncements from the time of Sir Barnes Peacock to the present day that possession adverse to the lessee is not necessarily adverse to the lessor. Here the Plaintiffs were in receipt of rent of the tenure from Purna and Sarat during the period that the Defendants were holding adversely to the latter. The possession of the Defendants as against Purna and Sarat in the circumstances was not of such a nature as to operate as an ouster of the Plaintiffs.

In the above view of the law I hold that the article of the Limitation Act applicable to the present case is Art. 140 or Art. 144, and time against the Plaintiffs is to be taken to have begun to run from the date of the confirmation of the sale of the tenure in September 1904, and that the suit is within time. [Krishna Gobind v. Hari Charan (2)]. To hold otherwise would be to violate the maxim that "prescription does not run against a party who is unable to act" (contra non valentem agere nulla currit prescriptio). Art. 139 contemplates a suit against the tenant and is not applicable in the present case.

For the Appellants it is also contended that as the Defendants had before the sale in 1904 acquired by adverse possession the right and interest of Purna and Sarat they had become unrecorded tenants of the Plaintiffs and as the sale in 1904 was of the tenure in execution of a rent decree obtained against the recorded tenants, it passed the interest of the Defendants in the tenure also. No doubt there is a great deal of force in this contention. In the circumstances of this case what the Defendants acquired by adverse possession was the interest of Purna and Sarat, viz., the tenant's right which should be taken to have been extinguished by sale in execution of a rent-decree obtained against Purna and Sarat who were the registered tenants of the Plaintiffs and against whom alone could they proceed. An analogy is to be found in the effect of sales under the Revenue Sale law where a purchaser has been held to be entitled to recover possession, even though the adverse possession was completed before the sale. [Kumar Kalanand v. Syed Sarafat Hossein (3) and Rahimuddi v. Nalini Kanta (4)].

In my judgment this appeal succeeds and should be allowed. The case will be remanded to the Court of Appeal below for the decision of the other issues and for disposal of the case. Costs to abide the result.

WALMSLEY and SUHRAWARDY, JJ.—In view of our difference of opinion in this case, under the proviso of cl. (2) of sec. 98, C. P. C., we state the point of law on which we differ in this manner: "On the facts stated in this case, what is the article of the Limitation Act which is applicable?" Let the case be laid before the learned Chief Justice for reference to another Judge or Judges.

[The matter then came on before Mr. Justice Woodroffe.]

The JUDGMENT OF WOODROFFE, J., was as follows:—

WOODROFFE, J.—This matter has been referred to me on a difference of opinion between Mr. Justice Walmsley and Mr. Justice Suhrawardy, the actual point referred being as follows "On the facts stated in this case what is the article of the Limitation Act which is applicable." A preliminary objection has been taken on the ground that the reference was not in order and that the case should have been decided by the opinion of the senior Judge. But I am of opinion that though that procedure is applicable in the case of Letters Patent Appeals, sec. 98 of the Code governs this case, I therefore overrule the objection. I would first shortly state the facts for the purpose of this judgment. The Plaintiffs are the owners of a miras tenure. There was a dar-miras tenure under them of which the Guha Defendants were tenants. This under-tenure was sold in execution of a rent-decree in 1890 and Purna Chandra Dutt was the purchaser. This Purna subsequently sold a six annas share to Sarat Chandra Dutt and Purna and Sarat whom I call the Duttas were registered tenants of the under-tenure. The Duttas never obtained possession. On the 13th August 1904 the under-tenure was again sold in execution of a rent-decree obtained against the Duttas who were registered tenants. It was purchased by the Plaintiffs. The Plaintiffs brought this suit for possession on the 11th August 1916.

The question now is what is the nature of the interest acquired by the Plaintiffs by their purchase on the 13th August 1904. If they purchased the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors only they purchased nothing as the right of the judgment-debtors was extinguished by adverse possession for over 12 years by the Guhas and the Plaintiffs therefore acquired no title to the under-tenure. No question of limitation as regards the Plaintiffs' right arises at all in that view. Because, a question of limitation arises only on the assumption that there is a title which may be made subject to the operation of the Limitation Act. Nor where no title is shown is recourse to the provisions of the Limitation Act necessary. Art. 139 of the Limitation Act is applicable only where the purchaser acquires the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor. But the rights of a purchaser at a sale under a decree for rent must be governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act. Where a rent-decree has been properly obtained the tenure itself passes to the purchaser and not the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor only. The rights of the purchaser then must be determined by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act under sec. 158B and sec. 159. The Plaintiffs by their purchase therefore acquired the under-tenure with power to annul encumbrances under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The interest which the Guhas had acquired by their adverse possession against the recorded tenants was according to the decisions of this Court an encumbrance under the Bengal Tenancy Act. If so, the Plaintiffs could have annulled the encumbrance created by the adverse possession of the Defendants and they could do so only under the provision of sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. According to that Act (sec. 167), however, if the party does not follow the procedure within one year as laid down in that section his right to recover possession as against the tenant is lost.

In this case there is a finding that the Plaintiffs knew about the possession of the Defendants all along and there is no allegations nor is it suggested before me that notice was served under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This doubtless is not the way in which the case has hitherto been treated; but no question of fact is involved. It is found that there had been adverse possession, that the tenure itself was purchased, and there is no doubt whatever that no proceedings were taken to annul the adverse possession as an encumbrance. The question then is one of law arising on the facts, whether on such facts the suit is barred, Mr. Justice Walmsley thought it was barred, according to the opinion of Mr. Justice Suhrawardy it was not barred.

It has been argued however that opinion has varied as to whether adverse possession is an encumbrance under the Bengal Tenancy Act. But without discussing this question for the moment it appears to me that the Plaintiffs in this suit can not have it both ways, that is, they cannot invoke the Bengal Tenancy Act in order to establish that they bought the tenure and not the judgment-debtors' interest and at the same time contend that the adverse possession is not an encumbrance under that Act. If they could claim to have purchased a tenure and that the previous adverse possession was not an encumbrance on it then the limitation would run from the date of their purchase. But this, I am of opinion, cannot be so in the circumstances of this case. They can not say that they purchased the tenure under the Bengal Tenancy Act free from adverse possession without first annulling the latter as an encumbrance.

Moreover, as at present advised I see no reason for differing from the decisions of this Court that the word encumbrance as used in secs. 159 and 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act includes a statutory title acquired by a trespasser by adverse possession of the land of a defaulting tenant.

There appears to me to be no substance in the contention that there is no question of encumbrance, because the dar-miras which was the subject of the encumbrance had ceased to exist being merged in the superior tenure on the Plaintiffs' purchase. There is in my opinion no merger in the circumstances above stated.

The result is that the suit is in my opinion barred under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy and not in my opinion under any of the articles of the Limitation Act mentioned in the reference.

The position then is this: Walmsley, J. is of opinion that Art. 137 applies and that the suit is barred. But in my opinion that article does not apply to a case such as this where the tenure itself and not the right and interest alone is purchased. Suhrawardy, J. is of opinion, as I am, that Art. 137 does not apply because the tenure was sold but he goes further and holds that the suit is not barred. But if the tenure was sold it could only be sold under the Bengal Tenancy Act and sub-to avoidance of encumbrances. And as this encumbrance was not set aside the suit is barred under sec. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act, though not under Art. 137 of the Limitation Act. My answer then is that Art. 137 does not operate to bar the suit but that other sections are not applicable so as to admit the suit which should in my opinion be dismissed under Bengal Tenancy Act, sec. 167.

This finding, however, raises a question of difficulty in disposing of the reference. The learned Judges who made it assume that one or other of the sections of the Limitation Act mentioned in their judgments apply. I am asked to decide which. My answer is none of the sections apply. Substantially considered I do not therefore answer the question put to me. It is only on my deciding the question referred one way or the other that I have power to dispose of this appeal. This difficulty arises from the change in the law. Formerly the third Judge could dispose of the case generally, now he must decide the point of law referred and then dispose of the appeal, the referring Judges having indicated how it should be disposed of according to the possible answers to be given. The result is that under the present law a Judge may be asked to decide whether this or that applies when his opinion may be that neither does apply.

There is a further difficulty, namely, that the ground upon which I would hold the suit barred was not taken before the referring Judges. No doubt as I have said the question is under the circumstances one of law. But the point of law which is an important one was not referred to me nor even discussed by the learned Judges, viz., whether adverse possession is an encumbrance under the Act, a proposition which is contested before me. I have expressed my view on this matter but the question still remains whether whatever be my view upon it I can act on my opinion when this point was not referred to me. If I were at liberty to dispose of the appeal I would dismiss it but I am not satisfied that I have under the circumstances power to dispose of it.

I therefore answer the question referred by saying that none of the sections of the Limitation Act referred to apply and direct that this judgment be placed before the referring Judges. As this reference is infructuous possibly the result may be that as there is no majority of Judges reversing the judgment of the Court below the appeal may be dismissed. But this is a matter for the learned Judges themselves to determine.

The Division Bench (Walmsley and Suhrawardy, JJ.), then passed the following order on 26th May 1922.

In view of the judgment delivered by Mr. Justice Woodroffe to whom this appeal was referred under the proviso of cl. (2) of sec. 98, I. P. C., we think we ought to proceed under cl. (2), that is, the part preceding the proviso and hold that this is a case in which there is no majority which concur in a judgment varying or reversing the decree appealed from and accordingly order that the decree appealed from be confirmed and this appeal do stand dismissed with costs.

of the owner of the estate - Fiduciary relation ship, necessity to establish.

The owners of an estate brought a suit for account against a Tehsildar of their estate who had been appointed by a Receiver who had been in charge of the estate under an order of Court but had since been discharged :

Held—That a suit was not maintainable. Such a suit can be sustained only on proof of fiduciary relation between the parties. But the Receiver is not a representative of the owner; he is an officer of the Court. Hence an officer appointed by the Receiver does not stand in the same position as an officer appointed by the owner.

JATINDRA NARAYAN ACHARJYA v. RAJENDRA KISHORE DAS (1) followed.

Although a Receiver has been discharged, it is still open to the party entitled to surcharge him in his accounts and obtain relief against him; and a suit may be maintained against the Receiver if it is established that he has monies belonging to the estate still in his hands, notwithstanding his discharge.

RE EDWARDS (2) and OSMOND BEEBY v. KHITISH CHANDRA ACHARJYA CHOWDHURY (3) referred to.

This was an appeal from a decision of J. A. Woodhead, Esq., District Judge, 24-Parganas, dated the 14th May 1917, affirming that of Babu Umes Chandra Chakravarti, Subordinate Judge, Alipore, dated the 19th January 1916.

The facts will appear from the judgment.

(3) L. L. R. 41 Cal. 771; 9 C. 18 C. W. N. 631 (1914).

MOOKERJEE, C. J.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiffs in a suit for account against a Tehsildar of their estate who had been appointed by a Receiver who was in charge of the estate under an order of Court.

The Courts below have held that the suit as framed is not maintainable, but they have made a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs for a sum of Rs. 463-14-6 ps. which it was established was money belonging to the estate, but still in the hands of the Defendant. The Plaintiffs have contended that the suit as framed was maintainable and an enquiry into the accounts should have been directed at their instance. We are of opinion that this contention is not well-founded.

It was ruled by this Court in the case of Jatindra Narayan Acharjya v. Rajendra Kishore Das (1) that a suit for account is not maintainable by the owner against a Tehsildar who was appointed by a Receiver to his estate. The reason assigned for the decision was that the Tehsildar was a sub-agent under the Receiver who might be regarded as an agent of the principal, and, as sub-agent, he was liable to render accounts to the Receiver and not to the principal. On behalf of the Appellants, the correctness of this decision has been called in question, and we have been invited to refer the matter to a Full Bench; but we are of opinion that the case is well-founded on principle. A suit for an account of the description now before us is really on the same basis as a bill of discovery, and such a bill can be sustained only on proof of fiduciary relation between the parties. It has been argued that the Receiver appointed by the Court is really a representative of the true owner and that consequently an officer appointed by the

(1) 8 O. L. J. 114 (1908).

HARIHAR MOOKERJEE v. JAHARUDDIN MANDAL.

Receiver stands in the same position as an officer appointed by the owner. This contention is manifestly fallacious. The Receiver is not a representative of the owner : he is an officer of the Court.

It has further been argued that in the present case the Receiver has been discharged and that the Plaintiffs are accordingly entitled to proceed directly against the Tehsildar appointed by the Receiver. There is plainly no substance in this contention. Although the Receiver has been discharged, it is still open to the Plaintiffs, if so advised, to surcharge him in his accounts and obtain relief against him. [See in Re Edwards (2)]. On the other hand, the decision of this Court in the case of Osmond Beeby v. Khitish Chandra Achariya Chowdhury (3) shows that a suit may be maintained against the Receiver if it is established that he has monies belonging to the estate still in his hands, notwithstanding his discharge. It follows that the Courts below have rightly held that a suit for account, as framed, does not lie.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed with costs.

MUNICIPALITY,

Defendant,

Respondent.

Bengal Municipal Act (III of 1884, B. C.), sec. 261, manufactory or place of business from which offensive or unwholesome smell may arise—Cases in which the offensive smell arises when the water from a mill comes in contact with the stagnant water of the Municipal drain, if come within the purview of the section—The manufactory or business, if must be per se offensive or unwholesome

In a rice-mill within a certain Municipality the water, in which the paddy was steeped, was offensive when it flowed from the drain, but not so offensive as when it came into contact with the stagnant water of the Municipal drain and the finding was that the flow of a large quantity of filthy water was the direct cause of the bad smell:

Held—That the finding was sufficient to bring the case within the category of places of business from which unwholesome or offensive smell may arise and therefore within the purview of sec. 261 (Bengal Municipal Act), which covers not only cases which are per se offensive or noxious but also a manufactory or place of business from which offensive or unwholesome smells may arise.

GOBINDA CHANDRA MULLIK v. CHAIRMAN, HUGHLY AND CHINSURA MUNICIPALITY.

This was an appeal preferred on the 16th January 1920 against the decrees of Babu Lal Behari Chatterji, Subordinate Judge of Hughly, dated the 24th November 1919, reversing the decrees of Babu Rash Behari Mukerji, Munsif at that place, dated the 8th June 1918.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Dr. D. N. Mitter, Babus Monindra Nath Banerjee and Debendra Nath Mandal for the Appellants.

Babu Amarendra N. Bose (for Babus Manmotho Nath Mookerjee and Nanda Gopal Banerjee) for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Plaintiffs who are the Appellants in this appeal brought a suit against the Hughly and Chinsura Municipality for a declaration that the action of the Municipality in levying a license-fee from them and realising the sum by distress was ultra vires and for a permanent injunction restraining the Municipality from levying the fee in future.

The Plaintiffs have a rice-mill within the Municipality and the latter imposed a fee under sec. 261 of the Bengal Municipal Act (III of 1884).

The Court of first instance decreed the suit. That decree has been set aside by the Court of appeal below.

Two contentions have been raised before us; the first is that there is no clear finding as to whether it was a manufactory or place of business from which offensive or unwholesome smell arises and secondly that in order to bring a case within the section, the manufactory or business must be per se offensive or unwholesome.

With regard to the first contention, we think the findings are sufficient. The result of the findings is that when paddy is boiled, there is some smell emitted but that is found not to be offensive. When the water in which the paddy is steeped flows from the drain, it is offensive but not so offensive as when it comes into contact with the stagnant water of the Municipal drain. The learned Subordinate Judge further finds that the flow of such a large quantity of filthy water is the direct cause of the bad smell. We think these findings are sufficient to dispose of the first contention.

As regards the second contention, we have been referred to the case of Wethington Local Board of Health v. Corporation of Manchester (1). There a local urban authority proposed to erect a temporary small-pox hospital on land of their own within the district of an adjoining local authority without their consent. The adjoining local authority brought an action and moved for an injunction restraining them from erecting the hospital. The Court of Appeal held that the small-pox hospital was not a noxious or offensive business within sec. 112 of the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 and 39 Vict. c. 55). That section lays down that any person who after the passing of this Act establishes within the district of an urban authority without their consent in writing any offensive trade, that is to say, the trade of blood-boiler, bone-boiler or fell-monger or soap-boiler or tallow-melter or tripe-boiler or any other noxious or offensive trade, business or manufacture shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding £50 in respect of the establishment thereof.

Having regard to the terms of the section the case is clearly distinguishable. Lindley, L. J., after referring to the words of the section such as, "blood-boiler, bone-boiler, fell-monger, etc.," and the words "any other noxious or offensive trade, business or manufacture" observed "when you bear in mind that those words have been construed already so as not to include business which may or may not be noxious, the conclusion at which I have arrived is clear and strong that even assuming a hospital to be in some sense a noxious business, still it is not a noxious business to which sec. 112 has any application; but it is a thing to be dealt with under the other group of sections which relate specifically to hospitals and noxious diseases."

(1) [1883] 2 Ch. 19.

GOBINDA CHANDRA MULLIK v. CHAIRMAN, HUGHLY AND CHINSURA MUNICIPALITY.

In the case of Wanstead Local Board of Health v. William Hill (2), which also has been relied upon, the question was raised whether brick-making was "other noxious business, trade or manufacture" within the meaning of the section. The Court held that to bring the case within the general words, the business or trade must be of itself of a noxious or offensive nature.

Sec. 261 of the Bengal Municipal Act on the other hand covers a case of a manufactory or place of business from which offensive or unwholesome smells may arise. There is thus a clear distinction between the English and the Indian statutes.

It is further contended that the clause "manufactory or place of business from which offensive or unwholesome smells may arise" "should be construed ejusdem generis with the clauses preceding it, viz., "melting tallow, boiling offal or blood" and so on. But the previous clauses cover not only such cases but also places used as kiln for making bricks, pottery, tiles or lime, or used as a shop for the sale of meat. It appears therefore that the genus comprises trades, business or manufactory which are not offensive per se and which would not come within the English statute. We are of opinion that the section covers not only cases which are per se offensive or noxious but also a manufactory or place of business from which offensive or unwholesome smells may arise.

The appeal must accordingly fail and is dismissed with costs.

ABDUL GOFUR and anr., Appellants,

v.

THE KING-EMPEROR,
Respondent.

Jury, trial by—Heads of charge must be sufficiently full to enable High Court to ascertain what was actually said to the jury—Verdict set aside on ground of misdirection and accused acquitted.

The law requires the Judge to record only the heads of charge to the jury but this record should be sufficient to enable the High Court to ascertain what was actually said to the jury.

The High Court set aside the verdict on the ground of misdirection to the jury and acquitted the accused.

This was an appeal preferred on the 22nd February 1922 against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Mymensingh (D. Vaughan Stevens, Esq.), who accepting the verdict of the jury convicted the accused to 10 years' rigorous imprisonment under sec. 395, I. P. C.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The heads of charge to the jury are set out below—

Heads of charge.

Preliminary.—Jury judges of fact. Judges explain law. Prosecution to prove case. Accused need not adduce defence and no adverse inference if he does not (here he did). Benefit of doubt. Where more than one accused, evidence against each to be considered.

ABDUL GOFUR v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Story.—On Sunday 19th Bhadra Abdul Jabbar of Kandapara was sleeping in kachari house with four servants. His mother, two daughters, two sons, a beggar woman and daughter were in northern hut. His elder brother Abdul Nabi and his wife in western house.

About midnight 10 or 12 dacoits appeared hanging on roof and walls. One man entered northern hut and threatened mother of Abdul who showed box containing Rs. 650, ornaments and clothes. With the aid of another man took this out. The box was broken open and contents taken and broke door.

They also broke open a box in western hut.

Abdul Nabi, Nobjan Bewa and others fled to Nabi Hossen's bari. They roused neighbours and came back after dacoits had gone.

Abdul Jabbar then came out. He had been hiding in the ghor.

He said he recognised Chottu Khan and Kala Chand among the dacoits.

Rajar ma, his sister, appeared from "Tusher ghor." She said she first hid under the platform, and then fled to Tusher ghor.

Nobjan, mother of Abdul, said she recognised Chottu Khan as the man who entered her hut with a lamp and dao.

*Ejaha*r was laid on second morning after occurrence, by Abdul Jabbar.

As to fact of a dacoity.

Evidence.—Three baris only are at all near to complainant's. These people called and other neighbours. Prove being roused, collecting together, and going to the bari after dacoits had left.

State of bari, boxes broken, N. and W. houses' doors smashed. Two bamboo lathis.

Tin box found near river one mile off next day by one witness. Prove statements of Nobjan and son; Moslem nearest neighbour says went out, heard dacoits, saw light.

Alamatos produced in Court.

Abdul Jabbar, Rajar ma, Nobjan prove 10 or 12 men implicated. Dress of dacoits. Neighbours prove being told of this.

In effect 10 or 12 men beat on roof and walls, broke open door, threatened Nobjan, broke open boxes, terrified inhabitants of bari, were armed with daos, looted cash, clothes, ornaments.

Is there any reason to doubt there was such an occurrence.

Law "theft" explained—dishonestly—moveables—out of possession—moving with such intention, this with violence or putting in fear of immediate death or hurt is "robbery."

Five or more committing robbery or where whole number present and assisting more than 5—all guilty of "dacoity." Secs. 391, 390, 378 (395).

Occurrence was "Dacoity," sec. 395.

Evidence as to the two accused being concerned.

Kala Chand's daughter married to Abdul Nabi, who took another wife, and Kala Chand's daughter remaining with her father. Kala Chand wanted new Kabin refused.

Daughter had been to see Abdul Jabbar's father Rahim just before death about 10 days before dacoity. Kala Chand visited the bari.

Kala Chand not well off. Had been helped. His hut built by Rahim. Lent money. Was now aggrieved party. Chottu his brother.

Kala Chand identified by Abdul Jabbar only. Chottu by Abdul Jabbar, says saw them between bahir and bhitor bari—lamp on bamboo N. of bari.

Police map and Sub-Inspector's evidence—Abdul could see from lakrir ghar into andar bari.

ABDUL GOFUR v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Nobjan says Chottu entered N. hut where she was with lamp and dao. Threatened her.

Lamp in hand not same as Abdul Jabbar's evidence.

Neighbours corroborate being told this not sure which said first.

Rajar ma in hut with Nobjan. Now says recognised Chottu by feet when hiding under platform. Not too probable.

Moslem Khan, nearest neighbour, says came out by tank and saw Chottu by light of lamp to N. of bari. First said nothing through fear, later told Sub-Inspector. Accept with caution.

Against Chottu's brother (Ct. witness) says brother in house all evening.

Two witnesses prove Kala Chand could not have returned home till late that day. His bari 10 or 12 miles from place of dacoity. They not sure originally whether it was Saturday or Sunday.

F. I. R. lodged 2nd morning. Delay. Reason given illness of elder brothers. Thana close—baitok in bari. Still Abdul a boy only—choukidar came late.

Both accused known to inmates. Would they dare openly enter bari—Even disguised with topi and shirts?

Considerable doubt.

Rajar ma and Moslem's evidence not too good. Nobjan unintelligent witness. Abdul Jabbar clear and unhesitating as against both accused.

If you believe Abdul Jabbar and his mother you will convict, otherwise if you think they could not have recognised in fright, men in topis, in nearly dark you will acquit both accused.

Mr. A. K. Fazlul Huq and Babu Sachindra Kumar Roy for the Appellants.

Mr. Orr for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

WALMSLEY, J.—The Appellants Abdul Gafur Khan alias Kala Chand Khan, and Abdul Sakar Khan alias Chohe Khan, have been convicted, on a unanimous verdict, under sec. 395, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to undergo ten years' rigorous imprisonment each.

The inmates of the house in which the dacoity is said to have been committed were Abdul Jabbar, the complainant, a boy of fifteen, his elder brother Abdul Nabi, another brother, two sisters, one of whom is the witness Alekjan, a girl of eleven, their mother, some servants and a beggar woman.

The occurrence is said to have taken place on the night of September 4th, and information was lodged at the Thana seven miles distant, on the morning of the 6th.

The description of the dacoity is of the usual kind, but there is this singular feature in the case that the Appellant Kala Chand Khan has given his daughter in marriage to the Abdul Nabi just mentioned. Relations are strained because Abdul Nabi has married a second wife and Kala Chand's daughter is living with her father. The second Appellant is brother of the first.

The case for the prosecution is that Kala Chand was recognised at the time of the dacoity by Abdul Jabbar, and by no one else, while Chottu Khan was recognised by Abdul Jabbar and his mother and his sister and a neighbour named Muslem. Apart from this oral evidence there is nothing whatever to show that the Appellants joined in committing the dacoity.

The objections to the charge are threefold. First it is urged that the whole charge is so condensed that it is difficult to understand exactly what the learned Judge really said. Secondly it is said that there ought to have been a reference to the fact that the prosecution did not examine all the servants and the beggar woman, and that there ought to have been a direction as to the inference to be drawn from the omission.

Thirdly the manner in which the learned Judge dealt with the evidence of identification is criticised as being incomplete and unlikely to help the jury in arriving at a right conclusion.

With the first objection I agree. It is true that the law requires a Judge only to record the heads of his charge; but the meaning of those words has often been explained in this Court, and I should like to draw the attention of the Judge to the case of The Queen v. Kasim Shaik (1). I have no doubt that the learned Judge could from his brief notes prepare a full statement of what he said to the jury, but it is hardly possible for others to do so.

As to the second objection, I think the point is one which ought not to have been overlooked by the Judge; but the case is not one in which it would be reasonable to hold that the witnesses not examined were really important witnesses, and on this ground alone I should not be prepared to hold that the charge was bad.

The third criticism which is to some extent a repetition of the first has much more substance. The Judge's comments on the evidence of identification like the remainder of the charge are recorded in a form which makes it difficult for us to know what was actually said.

In dealing with the evidence of identification there were several points which deserved careful treatment. There was the relationship between the parties, with the question of probability which it raised; there was the long delay in reaching the Thana; there was the fact that only Abdul Jabbar pretended to recognise Kala Chand, and Abdul Jabbar is a mere boy, and the defence suggested that he had hidden himself in a place from which he could not see the dacoits: there was the absurd story of Alekjan that she recognised Chottu Khan by his feet: there was the contradictory evidence about Muslem's pretended recognition; there was the evidence of neighbours about what they did and did not learn when they came on the scene; all of it coupled with the fact that not a word was reduced to writing for nearly thirty six hours.

I do not mean that the learned Judge did not refer to these points, for he did, but in my opinion, his comments, so far as we can guess what they were, did not give the jury the help that they needed.

It would be tedious to deal with this matter at greater length. For the reasons given I think the charge is vitiated by misdirection.

It remains to consider what order we should pass. Against the first Appellant there is nothing but the evidence of Abdul Jabbar, and against the second Appellant nothing but the evidence of Abdul Jabbar and his mother, after eliminating, as we must, the evidence of Alekjan and Muslem. In the strained relations between the parties it seems to me very doubtful whether those two witnesses should be believed, when there is not a scrap of independent evidence to support them, and my distrust is increased by the extraordinary delay that took place in going to the Thana. In these circumstances I think the case is one in which there ought not to be a retrial. Accordingly I set aside the verdict of the jury and acquit the two Appellants.

SUHWARDY, J.—I agree.

Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code, (Act V of 1898), secs. 145, 146—Evidence of possession on both sides equally unreliable—Order under sec. 145, based on presumption of possession arising from 'title, if valid—Such presumption when applicable—Interference by High Court—Magistrate directed to act under sec. 146.

Where in a proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., a Magistrate found that the evidence of possession on both sides was equally unreliable, but declared the second party to be in possession relying on the presumption as to possession arising from the title he found in that party:

Held—That the order of the Magistrate under sec. 145 was bad, and he was directed to act under sec. 146, Cr. P. C.

Where a Magistrate finds the evidence on both sides, which in itself is reliable, equally balanced, and he is unable to conclude from such evidence which party is in possession then he is entitled to corroborate the evidence of possession given by one side by the presumption as to possession arising from the title which he finds in that side. But this principle does not apply in a case like the present one where the Magistrate finds that the evidence of possession on both sides is equally unreliable.

This was a revision against an order of Babu Upendra Nath Ghosh, Deputy Magistrate of Khulna, dated the 31st May 1922.

The facts appear from the judgment.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukerjee (with Babu Saraj Kumar Chatterjee) for the Petitioners.

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal (with Babu Mon Mohun Bose) for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a rule calling upon the District Magistrate, and the Opposite Party to show cause why the order complained of should not be set aside on the second and fifth grounds mentioned in the petition.

The second ground is, “for that with regard to the portion lying to the east of Thia khal the Magistrate’s finding being that there was no satisfactory evidence of possession on either side, the order in respect of the said portion is without jurisdiction.”

The fifth ground is, “for that the order is without jurisdiction as relating to 112 bighas of land when the entire area according to the learned Magistrate himself is not less than 250 bighas and no attempt has been made to define a smaller area.”

The proceedings were under sec. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the learned Magistrate declared that the second party was in possession of the disputed land and that the disputed land was bounded on the North by Kangal Mandal’s bhari, on the East by Guatolar khal or Guatola kata khal, on the South by Siminar kata khal and on the West by Thia khalel kata khal.

The disputed land has been described in the judgment as being divided into two parts, one being called the western portion, which lies between the Thia khalel kata khal on the west and Thia khal original on the east. The north and the south boundaries are those which I have already mentioned. The other was called the eastern portion, lying between Thia khal original on the west and the Guatolar khal on the east, the northern and southern boundaries being those which I have already mentioned.

The learned Magistrate came to the conclusion on the evidence that the second party was undoubtedly in possession of the western portion; and in my judgment, there is no reason for interfering with the learned Magistrate's order as regards that portion, which I have described and which is called the western portion.

As regards the eastern portion the Magistrate in his judgment said this:—

"Though neither Sovaram nor the first party could adduce satisfactory evidence of possession in respect of the eastern area, I should also find possession of it with Sovaram and his co-sharers with whom I have found the title to this land to be by relying on the recognised principle enunciated in various rulings of the Calcutta High Court, which is very much applicable to a case like the present one and accordingly, as I have already stated, the Magistrate declared the second party to be in possession not only of the western portion but also of the eastern portion of the disputed land."

It has been argued that having regard to the finding of the learned Magistrate that neither party had adduced satisfactory evidence of possession in respect of the eastern portion, the Magistrate was not entitled to take into consideration the presumption as to possession which might arise from the title which he found to be in the second party. The principle which may be applied to this case is that where a Magistrate finds on each side evidence which in itself is reliable and he finds that the evidence on the one side and the evidence on the other side is equally balanced and he is unable to conclude from such evidence which party is in possession then he is entitled to corroborate the evidence of possession given by one side by the presumption as to possession arising from the title which he has found to be in that side. In my judgment, however, the principle does not apply to a case where the Magistrate has come to the conclusion that the evidence as regards possession is equally unreliable on both sides. The question is, in which category does this case lie? I have been placed in somewhat of a difficulty by the fact that the explanation of the Magistrate, which he has forwarded to this Court, does not seem to me to be consistent with the judgment which he has given. I have already read what the Magistrate said in his judgment and but for his explanation I should have come to the conclusion that he meant to find that there was no satisfactory evidence on either side with regard to the question of possession, and if that be the proper construction to put upon his judgment then, in my judgment, he was not entitled to rely upon any presumption as to possession from the title which he had found in the second party.

In his explanation, however, the Magistrate has said, "Both parties adduced evidence of their respective possession over the portion lying to the east of Thia khal, but I found it evenly balanced on both sides, so I referred incidentally to the question of title and found possession with the party with whom I have found the title to this land, in addition to the evidence of possession adduced by them."

In my opinion if his explanation had been embodied in his judgment then this Court should not have interfered with the order which the Magistrate made. But in my opinion that explanation is not consistent with the Magistrate's judgment. I have carefully considered the judgment of the learned Magistrate and I am bound to put the natural meaning upon the words used by the learned Magistrate in his judgment and I have come to the conclusion that at the time when he delivered his judgment, he meant to find that there was no satisfactory evidence on either side with regard to the question of 'possession', consequently in my judgment, he was not entitled to declare that the second party was in possession of the eastern portion. In my judgment, with regard to the eastern portion, the proper course for the Magistrate to adopt would have been to apply the provision of sec. 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The result is, in my judgment, that this rule should be made absolute only so far as the eastern portion is concerned. We do not intend to interfere with the Magistrate's order as regards the western portion. As regards the eastern portion we remit this matter to the Magistrate and direct that the Magistrate do put in force the provisions of sec. 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

KING-EMPEROR

v.

DURGA CHARAN BEPARI
and ors., Accused.

Jury, trial by—Misdirection on points of law and improper direction on facts.

The three accused were found guilty by the unanimous verdict of the jury, two under secs. 302/34, I. P. C. and one under secs. 302/149, I. P. C. and further all under secs. 364, 148, I. P. C.

The Sessions Judge in charging the jury said—"Sec. 34 provides that where it is doubtful which of several persons has taken the chief part in any given crime committed in furtherance of the common intention of all of them each of such persons is severally liable as if he alone had done the deed."

Held—That it is necessary for the Judge to read the very words of the section itself to the jury if he purports to give them what are the provisions of the section and then if necessary to explain what is the meaning of the section and the direction with regard to sec. 34 was not a proper direction.

In charging the jury as to what constitutes murder the Sessions Judge said—"Murder is the intentional killing of another human being with malice aforethought."

Held—That it is not the way in which Judges ought to charge the jury in this country. It is usual to refer to the sections which relate to culpable homicide and to direct the jury as to what is culpable homicide and in what circumstances culpable homicide amounts to murder.

As to the charge under secs. 302/149, the Sessions Judge charged the jury as follows:—"This charge is to some extent redundant and strictly applies only to one accused A for the other accused are supposed to have been the actual murderers. By sec. 149, A becomes a constructive murderer and liable for the substantive offence just as by sec. 34 all the accused are equally liable for the murder as though each of them had committed it single-handed."

Held—That this was a misdirection.

Held further—That the Sessions Judge was in error in not drawing the attention of the jury to some material evidence and to the fact that many of the prosecution witnesses were related to a person who was the prime mover in the prosecution or to one another and to the discrepancies in the evidence and his direction on the evidence in one instance was not borne out by the record.

That the attention of the jury should have been directed to the individual cases of the three accused.

On the ground of misdirection the High Court set aside the verdict of murder as regards all the accused and holding that there was no misdirection as to the charge under sec. 364, I. P. C., upheld the conviction of two of the accused on that charge, but set it aside in the case of the other accused and set aside the conviction of two of the accused under sec. 148 and upheld it in the case of the other.

This was a reference, dated the 11th March 1922, by the Additional Sessions Judge of Backerganj for confirmation of the sentence of death passed by the Court of the first Additional Sessions Judge of Backerganj (Mr. H. G. Blomfield), upon the accused on the 10th March 1922. There was also an appeal from the conviction and sentence.

Material portions of the heads of charge to the jury are given in their Lordships' judgment.

The Sessions Judge's charge to the jury in dealing with the evidence was as follows:—

III.—The case for the prosecution is that about 11 p.m. on the night of 13th October 1921, a widow lady Nandarani, of Baher Char, P. S. Mendiganj, in the sadar Sub-Division of this District, was forcibly abducted from her house by three men—Durga Charan Mandal, Tarini Mandal and Hasan Dewan—the first two of whom were her nephews by marriage, and dragged through the paddy-fields to the river Kalabador, on the bank of which she was strangled with her own cloth, and her body cast into the river, where it was discovered shortly afterwards by her lover, Ananda Mandal, one of a search party that had come to look for her. A cloth was found tied tightly round the neck, and the greater part of the left thigh as well as part of the left heel had been eaten by some aquatic or amphibious reptile, probably a crocodile, though the witnesses suggest a tortoise.

The motive for the crime is to be sought in the bitter mutual hatred that is alleged to exist between Kalidas, the father of Durga Charan and Tarini, on the one hand and the deceased on the other, concerning the lands that she inherited from her late husband, who was the younger brother of Kalidas.

IV.—The defence is that this long-standing quarrel was settled recently by a deed of compromise filed in Court, by which half shares in the property were assigned to the respective claimants, Nandarani and her brother-in-law Kalidas. He had therefore no reason to do away with her, and even if she were removed, he, as brother, would not inherit: her daughters (Swarna and another) would come first. Ergo, Kalidas and sons had nothing to gain by killing Nandarani. On the contrary, Ananda, the patron of the deceased, had a motive for falsely implicating both the brothers, Durga Charan and Tarini, because his mistress's litigation with their father had already cost him close on Rs. 800. Hasan Dewan was involved because he had bought some of the land, and Alimuddi was added because (1) he is a friend of Hasan's and (2) he was acquitted in a case brought against him by Ananda's nephew, Raj Mohon Mandal. Moreover, the so-called sale by Kalidas of a kani of his share of the land to Hasan was not a politic move to import a newcomer on to his side in this family conspiracy against his sister-in-law, but was rather the natural outcome of Kalidas's own financial straits consequent on his expensive litigation with the widow. Again, in the quarrel between the parties over the betel-nuts, it was Hasan who proposed that they should be deposited with a third party, thus shewing his fair and impartial attitude.

From all this and from similar a posteriori considerations it is argued that the account of events on the Thursday night given by the prosecution cannot be believed, and is really false. What probably happened was that the woman disappeared earlier in the night, and was discovered much later; her absence was not noticed at the time, and all this about the forcible abduction by the three men and the abortive pursuit in the paddy-field is a mere yarn; and (generally) there is nothing to connect these three with her disappearance, still less with her murder.

V.—The evidence is that at the time of her decease Nandarani was living in a house of her own built for her by her protector and paramour, Ananda Mandal, whose own house was close by. At the time of occurrence her son-in-law, the complainant, and her daughter, were staying with her. They are the eye-witnesses of the abduction. They were in the kitchen at the time, while she was in the sitting room, hemming a hogla mat with the door of communication open, through which they could apparently both see her. On hearing her screams they rushed into the room and found Durga Charan half throttling her with a cloth, while the other two had pinioned her arms. She clutched the mat wall by the door post, but was torn from it by her captors, who dragged her away across the verandah and the yard, into the paddy-field close by. Her son-in-law Nagarbashi came out into the yard, and made a feeble attempt to rescue her, but retired at the sight of Alimuddi's spear, and of the other armed men. He and his wife screamed and this (added to the shrieks of Nandarani herself) brought the neighbours to the scene, amongst others Ananda himself. These persons ran after the accused, the complainant himself bringing up the rear; but they had hardly come up with the accused when they were violently threatened by Alimuddi and Jabbar Ali—members of the gang—and fell back in terror on Nandarani's house. Here they collected reinforcements and again started in pursuit. By this time, however, the abductors had got clean away; but by following their track they came to the river bank, and there, in the marshy water at the river-side, half covered with water-hyacinth, they came upon the body of the unfortunate woman. The dafadar and chaukidar were sent for, and the body was removed to the hut in which Ananda kept his oil-press; and information was given to the police next morning.

So much for the events of the night of Thursday, 13th. October between the hours of 11 p.m. and 2 or 3 a.m. (on the Friday morning). We must now return to the night of Tuesday the 11th. This was Dasahara day, and there was some form of bean-feast (Harir Lut) at Ananda's house that night, at which most of the actors in this tragedy were present. During an interval in the singing, the widow is said to have proposed to convey some of her land to Ananda in payment of her debt to him, and it is said that this was overheard by Durga Charan, and was the immediate cause of the conspiracy.

Going back still further, we come to the 4th October, on which day Kalidas made over a kani of his land to Hasan; and then going forward, we come to the betel-nut incident of the 7th October, in which Hasan claimed the whole plot and all the nuts, and in which the widow and he, each, threatened the other with violence, his threat to her being one of death. This aggravated the existing bitter feelings between the parties, and the proposed transfer of land brought matters to a head.

The plot was apparently hatched on the Wednesday and carried into effect on the Thursday. On this night the evidence is that Ananda was kept in play by one Biraj—type of the unwelcome caller—who seems to have extended his inopportune visit right up to the time of the abduction, thus keeping the only person likely to interfere, out of the way.

Besides the two eye-witnesses of the actual seizure, the initial stages of the dragging through the paddy were seen by Ananda Mandal himself (P. W. 3), Nishi Kant Byapari (P. W. 4), Radha Charan Byapari (P. W. 7), and Badan Byapari (P. W. 9), these last two coming from Ananda's house and arriving on the scene with him. Nishi Kanta had already got there, and was apparently the first to do so. These, with Banamali Byapari (P. W. 14), were the first persons who, with the complainant lagging in the rear, were so easily routed by the display of armed force. Ram Sundar Taluqdar (P. W. 8) arrived in time to join the tale-end of the stern chase, and elicited from Badan the names of the abductors.

The second search party was composed of the above persons, with the addition of Raj Kumar Byapari (P. W. 11), Nikunja Byapari (P. W. 13), and apparently others. Other witnesses are the police, the civil surgeon, the dafadar, the linkman Abdul (P. W. 16), and a miscellaneous collection of deed-writers, pleaders and persons who prove the relationship between Hasan and Alimuddin (the latter is the father-in-law of the former by the second marriage of his daughter Amina), and also the ceremony of the Harir Lut on the Tuesday night.

VI.—Summing up. The plain questions for the jury are two:—(1) Was Nandarani murdered? And (2) if so, did the three accused persons murder her?

(1) The medical evidence shews conclusively that death was due to strangulation. This is confirmed by the accounts of all the witnesses who saw the body with its neck tightly bound with a cloth. The only alternative event suggested by the defence in the lower Court was expressly ruled out by the Civil Surgeon, who stated that in suicide by hanging, the symptoms are quite different. Moreover one must hang oneself to or from something, and the body was not found hanging from a tree or lintel or wall, but was discovered in water knee-deep. The cloth round the neck and the expert evidence of the Civil Surgeon, then, exclude the possibility of the woman's having met her death either by natural means or by suicide. I may add here that it has not even been suggested by the defence that she was either drowned or eaten by a crocodile; the damning noose round the neck is against that. The conclusion is irresistible that the deceased was murdered.

(2) If so, by whom? This, as I have now shewn, is the real question for the jury, though technically they have to decide the other also. In coming to a decision, the jury must ask themselves who were the persons last seen with the deceased and under what circumstances and must remember the circumstances under which the body was found; the evidence is that Durga Charan had tied the cloth round the poor woman's neck at the time of the capture, and that so they dragged her away: long before she got to the river she must have been half choked, and it would require little more pressure to complete the suffocation. The jury must also take into consideration the admitted hatred that existed between the deceased and her husband's relations, and must ask themselves whether in their experience such hatred does not, in nine cases out of ten, at any rate in Backerganj District, furnish a powerful motive for such a crime. Here the attitude of the accused is indicated by the threats of Hasan on the occasion of the betel-nut incident. The jury must take account of the track through the paddy which was made by the accused and which directly led to the finding of the body, and the apparent impossibility (humanly speaking) of accounting for its discovery under such circumstances except on the hypothesis that those who dragged away Nandarani also made away with her, and slung her body into the nearest river, or left it where it fell when they had choked the life out of her.

Of course all this is a matter entirely for the jury to decide. I regret that my opinion is not binding on the jury, and that the above considerations are merely offered as a guide to the jury in their task of deciding the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused. As I have already said, which of the three abductors actually applied the pressure that ended her life—if this was how she died—is immaterial under sec. 34, I. P. C., all are equally guilty, if the evidence is believed. As against Alimuddi, it is the charge under secs. 302/149 that mainly applies.

If the jury believe that these three men murdered Nandarani, they must find them guilty of murder; if they believe that they did not, they will return a verdict of not guilty.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a reference under sec. 374 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in a case which was tried by the learned first Additional Sessions Judge of Bakerganj and a jury and in which the three accused were found guilty of murder and were sentenced to death. There is also an appeal by the three accused. Two of the accused Durga Charan Byapari and Hasan Dewan were found guilty of murder by the unanimous verdict of the jury under secs. 302 and 34 of the Indian Penal Code and the other Alimuddi Mistry was found guilty of murder under secs. 302 and 149 of the Indian Penal Code. All three were found guilty on the remaining two charges, namely, under sec. 364 which is the section dealing with abduction with intent that the person abducted may be murdered or may be so disposed of as to be put in danger of being murdered, and under sec. 148, which is the section which deals with rioting by a person or persons armed with deadly weapons.

The first ground or rather the ground, upon which the learned Vakil, who argued the case on behalf of the accused, mainly relied, was, that the direction of the learned Judge to the jury was open to criticism. In my judgment the direction by the learned Judge to the jury is open to certain criticism and I have come to the conclusion that there are material matters which, as far as I can ascertain from the heads of charge to the jury which are now before us, were not brought to the attention of the jury. Before I deal with those matters attention should be drawn to the way in which the learned Judge dealt with sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code. I am quite aware that the document, which we have before us is not more than "heads of charge to the jury" and I cannot accept the suggestion which was made by the learned Vakil for the accused, that the learned Judge said no more to the jury than what appears in the heads of charge. The case lasted, (if my recollection serves me right), for six days and the seventh day of the trial was reserved for the learned Judge's summing up; it was not until about 3 o'clock in the afternoon that the jury retired to consider their verdict. I therefore regard this document as no more than "heads of charge to the jury." But even so, I may say that there are certain matters in the heads of charge which are open to criticism. In the first place, the learned Judge has stated as follows:— "Sec. 34 provides that where it is doubtful which of several persons has taken the chief part in any given crime committed in furtherance of the common intention of all of them, each of such persons is severally liable as if he alone had done the deed." If the learned Judge intended thereby to be informing the jury as to what were the provisions of sec. 34, no one can deny that it is a misdirection, because the provisions of sec. 34 are not as stated by the learned Judge.

But I take it that the learned Judge was giving his own view of the meaning of the section. In my judgment it is necessary for a learned Judge to read the very words of the section itself to the jury, if he purports to give them what are the provisions of the section, and then, if necessary, to explain what is the meaning of the section. The learned Judge did go on to say: "in other words, it provides for those cases in which all help to commit, e.g., a murder, but in which it is, in the nature of things, difficult to say exactly whose hand actually caused the death of the murdered person." It seems to me that in that sentence the learned Judge was on sounder ground; but even then, having regard to the first part of the direction, I regret to say that I cannot regard it as a satisfactory direction with regard to the provisions of sec. 34.

Then his only direction as to what constitutes murder is contained in one sentence "Murder is the intentional killing of another human being with malice aforethought." That may be a comprehensive way of describing what the meaning of murder is but it is not the way in which learned Judges ought to charge the jury in this country. It is usual to refer to the sections which relate to culpable homicide and to direct the jury as to what is culpable homicide and in what circumstances culpable homicide amounts to murder. I should not however reject this direction to the jury by the learned Judge on this ground alone, if I felt quite clear that the misdirection had not occasioned a failure of justice. Further I do not approve of the last paragraph but one at page 40 of the paper-book where the learned Judge was dealing with secs. 302 and 149, viz.: "This charge is to some extent redundant, and strictly applies only to Alimuddi, for Hasan and Durga Charan are supposed to have been the actual murderers. By sec. 149 Alimuddi becomes a constructive murderer and liable for the substantive offence, just as by sec. 34 all these accused are equally liable for the murder, as though each of them had committed it single-handed." In my judgment if the charge was, in fact, delivered to the jury in those words or in words which would convey that meaning, in my opinion the jury might misinterpret it and they might have been thereby induced to come to the conclusion that there was no more to be said about the matter. In my opinion, this amounts to a misdirection.

The next paragraph is material in another respect. The learned Judge was dealing with sec. 148 and said: "Similarly, though all three are charged with rioting armed with deadly weapons under sec. 148, Indian Penal Code, it appears from the evidence that the charge will only apply to Alimuddi who was armed with a spear, the other two being unarmed." In spite of that direction by the learned Judge the jury found all three of the accused guilty under sec. 148. This goes to show that apparently the jury had not appreciated the learned Judge's direction: in effect he directed the jury that only one could be convicted under sec. 148 and yet the jury found all three of them guilty under that section.

It is difficult to believe that all that the learned Judge said about the evidence is represented in his heads of charge: If it be a full and correct representation of his charge with regard to the evidence, then it appears that the learned Judge did not draw the attention of the jury to the fact that many of the witnesses who were called on behalf of the prosecution were related to Ananda, who was alleged to be the prime mover in the prosecution, or to each other; nor did he draw the attention of the jury to the discrepancies in the evidence of some of the witnesses, discrepancies which certainly did occur.

Again, the learned Judge said: "The plot was apparently hatched on Wednesday and carried into effect on Thursday." I have read the evidence carefully. I do not know what evidence is supposed to support the suggestion that a plot was hatched on Wednesday. The learned Counsel and the learned Vakil were not able to assist me on this point: there is the evidence of Iswar Charan Byapari who proved that at Sabdar's house there was a feast and that Alimuddi, Biraj Ali Jamadar, Kuti Mollah and Jabbar Ali were invited to it. Hasan Dewan is the son-in-law of Alimuddi and he lived in that house. The feast took place on Thursday and not on Wednesday and I do not find anything in that evidence which would justify the suggestion that any plot was then hatched.

Towards the end of the learned Judge's summing up he said, "the evidence is that Durga Charan had tied the cloth round the poor woman's neck at the time of the capture, and that so they dragged her away." It is true that Swarna the woman who is alleged to have been present at the time the abduction took place, used the words "tied a cloth round her neck." On the other hand, the first witness for the prosecution Nagarbasi said, "Durga Charan had put the upper part of her cloth round her neck and so had caught her" which may mean that he tied it or it may mean that he had merely wrapped it round her neck for the purpose of dragging her away. That by itself would not be so important but for the sentence which follows it: because the learned Judge says, "long before she got to the river she must have been half-choked, and it would require little more pressure to complete the suffocation." That depends to some extent upon how the cloth was tied, and the learned Judge did not draw the attention of the jury to this question. The learned Judge further said: "The jury must also take into consideration the admitted hatred that existed between the deceased and her husband's relatives and must ask themselves whether in their experience such hatred does not in nine cases out of ten, at any rate in Backergunj District, furnish a powerful motive for such a crime."

In my judgment the learned Judge ought to have drawn the attention of the jury to the evidence of Nagarbashi with regard to this point; Nagarbashi said that as between Kalidas and the deceased there was a settlement of the dispute and it was called an amicable settlement, and he went so far as to say "there was no quarrel between them after the case between them was amicably settled last Assarh." In view of this statement I fail to see how the Judge was justified in telling the jury that there was existing "admitted hatred." Finally, the learned Judge directed the jury as follows: "As I have already said, which of those abductors actually applied the pressure that ended her life—if this was how she died—is immaterial."

There were three men involved in the charge of murder. It seems to me that the attention of the jury should have been directed to the individual cases of the three men. As for instance, it may be that Alimuddi had no intention of murdering Nandarani, though he may have been willing to take part in the abduction of the woman; there is no evidence that he laid his hand upon the deceased though there is evidence that he assisted the actual abduction by holding back and threatening the would-be rescuers. For these reasons, in my judgment, it would not be right to allow the verdict of murder to stand in respect of the three accused. Consequently in our judgment, the verdict of murder and the sentences of death passed upon the three accused must be set aside.

That however does not dispose of the case.

The learned Vakil for the accused pressed us to remit the case for a fresh trial, but with regard to the charge under sec. 364, the learned Vakil frankly admitted that he could not say that there was a misdirection as regards that charge, at all events, so far as the two accused, Durga Charan Byapari and Hasan Dewan, were concerned; in my judgment there was ample evidence in this case to justify the jury in coming to the conclusion that these two men did abduct the woman and that they abducted her either with the intention of murdering her or with the intention that she might be so disposed of as to be put in danger of being murdered. The jury unanimously accepted the evidence in this respect, and there being no misdirection in respect of this charge as regards these two accused, it is not necessary to send this case back for a fresh trial, and in our judgment this Court should uphold the convictions of Durga Charan and Hasan Dewan in respect of the charge under sec. 364 of the Indian Penal Code.

With regard to Alimuddi I have considerable doubt whether the conviction under sec. 364 ought to be upheld. As I have already said, it is possible that this man may have taken part in the abduction without any intention of murdering the woman or putting her in danger of being murdered. The object of the abduction, so far as he was concerned, may have been something quite different. In this connection it is to be remembered that the evidence of Abdul was to the effect that he had seen two men only near the place where the body was found, and in our judgment it would be safer in the interests of justice to hold that in the case of Alimuddi, the conviction under sec. 364 should be set aside.

There remains the conviction under sec. 148. With regard to Durga Charan and Hasan Dewan, I agree with the learned Judge that there is no evidence that those two men were armed with any deadly weapon, or with any such weapon as is mentioned in sec. 148. Consequently, the convictions of those two men under sec. 148 must be set aside. The conviction of Alimuddi however under sec. 148 ought in our judgment to stand. He was armed with a deadly weapon and he was guilty of rioting. There was an assembly of five or more persons and on the evidence which has been accepted by the jury, there is no doubt that the common object of that unlawful assembly was to abduct the woman, and by means of criminal force, or show of criminal force, to compel the deceased woman to do what she was not legally bound to do. In other words, the case would come within the meaning of sec. 141, sub-cl. (3) or sub-cl. (5) of the Indian Penal Code. In our judgment therefore the conviction of Alimuddi under sec. 148 must stand.

The result of our judgment is that the convictions of all the three accused, namely, Durga Charan Byapari, Hasan Dewan and Alimuddi Mistri, for murder, and the sentences of death passed upon them are set aside. The conviction of Alimuddi Mistri under sec. 364 of the Indian Penal Code and the convictions of Durga Charan Byapari and Hasan Dewan under sec. 364 of the Indian Penal Code are upheld and the conviction of Alimuddi Mistri under sec. 148 is upheld. Under these circumstances we do not think it necessary to direct a new trial.

Now there remains the question of sentence. My learned brother and I regard this as a very serious case and it is such a serious case that we have had considerable hesitation whether we ought not to remit the case in order that there should be a further trial on the charge of murder, but after due consideration we have decided not to take that course.

Having regard to the facts of the case, the sentence we pass upon each of the accused Durga Charan Byapari and Hasan Dewan is ten year's rigorous imprisonment under sec. 364; and the sentence on the accused Alimuddi Mistri is three years' rigorous imprisonment under sec. 148 of the Indian Penal Code.

KING-EMPEROR

v.

BISESWAR DEY and ors.

Confession, retracted, evidentiary value of—Necessity of corroboration—Effect if any against person other than maker.

It cannot be laid down as an inflexible rule that a confession made and subsequently retracted by a prisoner cannot be accepted as evidence of his guilt without independent corroborative evidence. The weight to be given to such a confession must depend on the circumstances under which the confession was originally given and the circumstances under which it was retracted including the reasons given by the prisoner for its retraction.

It is unsafe for a Court to rely on and act on a confession which has been retracted unless, after a consideration of the whole of the evidence in the case, the Court is in a position to come to the unhesitating conclusion that the confession is true, that is to say, usually unless the confession is corroborated by credible independent evidence.

A retracted confession should carry practically no weight as against a person other than its maker.

Held, on a consideration of the circumstances, that the confessions were obtained in some manner under threats and inducements such as would render them inadmissible under sec. 24 of the Indian Evidence Act.

This was a Reference under sec. 307, Cr. P. C., dated the 14th July 1921 from the Sessions Judge of Noakhali (Mr. S. C. Ghosh), disagreeing with the unanimous verdict of the jury who had found the accused not guilty of the charges framed against them.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

Five accused persons were put on their trial before the Sessions Judge of Noakhali and a special jury. They were all charged with conspiracy to murder Bipin Behari Shaha; one of the accused Biseswar Dey alias Biseswar Raj was charged with having actually committed the murder; two of them Jotindra Mohan Das and Satish Chandra Shaha were charged with having been present abetting the murder and Jotindra Mohan Das was further charged with having abducted Bipin Behari Shaha in order that he might be murdered; the remaining two Kshetra Mohan Shaha and Maharani were charged with abetment of the murder. After a trial held for 28 days the jury returned a unanimous verdict stating that the case against the first four accused was doubtful and they gave them the benefit of the doubt and that Maharani was not guilty. The Sessions Judge agreed with the verdict as to Maharani and acquitted her. In respect of the others he disagreed with the verdict and held it to be perverse and thought it necessary for the ends of justice to refer the case to this Court under the provision of sec. 307, Cr. P. C. In his opinion these four accused are guilty of the offences mentioned in the charges laid against them.

The case against the accused rested mainly on the evidence of an approver Bidhu Bhusan Shaha (P. W. No. 1) and retracted confessions of the accused. Before considering the strength of the case so made out it will be convenient to state certain facts which are either undisputed or which have in our opinion been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

Bashpara is a village in the jurisdiction of the Chhagaluaya Police Station and the Feni subdivision of Noakhali District. It is 1½ miles from Chhagaluaya and 9 miles from Feni. In this village a rich Shaha family, of which the principal member is Babu Amar Krishna Chaudhury, own a large pucca house. Babu A. K. Chaudhury who is called by the witnesses Amar Babu, lived some times in Chittagong and some times at Bashpara. The accused Maharani was a servant of Amar Babu, and came from Chittagong to Bashpara at the time of the Durga Puja of 1920. The accused Kshetra Mohan Shaha is the brother-in-law of Lall Mahon Babu who is a brother of Amar Babu. The accused Satish Chandra Shaha is a nephew of Amar Babu. Jotindra Mohan Das is the son of Ambika who had long worked for the family as a mason and was maintained by Amar Babu and his two sharers. The accused Biseswar Dey was brought by Ambika a few months before the occurrence to, work as a mason. Bidhu Bhusan Shaha, the approver, is the brother of the widow of a cousin of Amar Babu. The accused Kshetra had a tailor's shop in one of the rooms of the Shaha's house. The accused Satish and Jotindra and the approver Bidhu were students at the Chhagaluaya School. The ages of the accused are as recorded by the Sessions Judge, Biseswar 22, Jotindra 18, Kshetra 20, Satish 16 and Maharani 19. Bidhu's age is about 16 years.

Bipin Behari Shaha, whom the accused are charged with having murdered, was aged about 21 years. He was a nephew of Amar Babu and came from Amar Babu's house in Chittagong to Bashpara on the 10th March last. On the night of Sunday 12th March Jotindra, Bipin, Bidhu and Kshetra were seen playing cards at about 9 or 9-30 p.m. The following morning the corpse of Bipin was found lying on the masonry platform of a tank about 300 feet distant from the place where he and the others had been seen playing cards. The right hand was amputated and there was a wound on the throat cutting the wind pipe, gull, and carotid arteries. There were also cuts on the left and right ears. From the quantity of blood on the pavement and the marks of spurting of blood there can be no doubt that Bipin was killed near the place where his corpse was found. Information of the finding of the corpse was given to Sub-Inspector Pramatha Nath Mukherji at the Chhagaluaya Police Station at 8 a.m. and he came to the place and recorded a first information there at 9 a.m. on the 13th March. The enquiry into the case was commenced by this Sub-Inspector. The Subdivisional Officer went to the place of occurrence accompanied by the Feni Inspector of Police Annada Charan Bandopadhyaya on the afternoon of the 13th. The Inspector personally took charge of the investigation on the 17th March. The Deputy Superintendent arrived at the place on the 16th March and supervised the investigation. Kshetra, Jotindra and Bidhu said that Bipin had played cards until about 10 or 10-30 p.m. and had left them saying he would sleep at his father's house and go to Feni the next morning to get his cycle repaired. An examination of Bipin's father's house showed that Bipin could not have slept there at any time during his visit to Bashpara. On the 20th March Amar Babu's house was searched. In this room occupied by Maharani was found a blood-stained quilt. Maharani was arrested at 8-0 or 9-0 o'clock that morning. In consequence of statements made by her, Jotindra, Kshetra, Satish and Bidhu were arrested at 8-0 or 9-0 o'clock that night. The following day Biseswar was arrested at 1-30 p.m. On the 22nd these six accused persons were sent to the Subdivisional Officer at Feni to have their confessions recorded. They were produced before him at 12-20 p.m. and on hearing that they had just arrived and had not had their meal he told the Court Sub-Inspector to feed them and give them a rest in the Court lock-up and to produce them before him at 3 p.m. They all made confessions that afternoon and were remanded to custody. For some reason that has not been disclosed Jotindra was sent to the Noakhali jail on the 26th March. While there, he admitted to the officiating Civil Surgeon who was in charge of the jail that he was present at the murder and held down the feet of the man when the Raj Mistri gave the finishing stroke. On the 2nd of May the hearing before the Subdivisional Officer of Feni as Committing Magistrate commenced. After the case had been opened by the Government pleader the confessions made by them on the 22nd March were read to each of the accused and each of them said: "I made this confession. It is true. I have nothing more to say." Bidhu was then tendered a pardon and examined as a prosecution witness. At the close of the day's proceeding Jotindra, Satish and Kshetra retracted their confessions. Witnesses were examined daily till the 6th May on which date the accused were again examined. Jotindra, Satish and Kshetra denied having committed any offence and said their confessions were false and made under threats and inducements. Biseswar Dey said, "I committed the offence. I have nothing more to say here." Maharani only said, "I am guilty." The following day at the commencement of the sitting of the Court Maharani said that the previous day through mistake she stated that she was guilty although she was not guilty. The trial in the Sessions Court commenced on the 6th June and when the charges were read all five accused pleaded not guilty. Bidhu the approver was examined as a prosecution witness on the 6th and 7th June. The Court did not sit on the 8th and 9th. On the 10th June he resiled and said that all he had previously said was false. When examined by the Sessions Judge at the conclusion of the trial all the male accused made statements accusing the police of ill-treatment and alleging that they were tortured to make their confessions. Maharani made a statement denying the truth of certain evidence implicating her to which her attention was drawn by the Judge but she was not asked and said nothing about her own previous admission. The story told by the accused in their confessions and by the approver before he resiled is to the following effect: Maharani was a woman of loose character, Satish and Bidhu used to sleep in the varandah of the room where Maharani lived and carried on an intrigue with her. Jotindra became enamoured of her and threatened Satish and Bidhu with disclosure to the Babus and got them to agree to call Maharani's mother and to go and sleep elsewhere. Kshetra had also been misbehaving with Maharani at the same time as Satish and Bidhu, but Kshetra and Jotindra were fast friends and continued visiting the woman together when the deceased Bipin came. He visited Maharani on the Thursday and Friday nights. According to Jotindra it was Kshetra and according to Kshetra it was Jotindra who suggested that Bipin should be killed in order to prevent him taking the woman back to Chittagong and informing Amar Babu. Biseswar was promised Rs. 500 if he would commit the murder. Satish and Bidhu were persuaded to join the conspiracy for fear of their misconduct being revealed. On the Saturday night Kshetra, Jotindra and Bidhu got Bipin to play cards with them after supper. They stopped playing about midnight and then Jotindra took Bipin to the platform of the tank where the murder was committed. Bidhu went and woke up Satish. A kharga (sacrificial knife) had been placed in readiness under Satish's bed. Bidhu and Satish went with the kharga, there are discrepancies as to which of the two carried it, and called Biseswar. Biseswar did not get up and they started back. They met Kshetra and told him they could not wake up Biseswar and then Kshetra went and woke Biseswar by poking him with bamboo. The kharga was given to Biseswar and Kshetra went off to bed. Bidhu, Satish and Biseswar then went to the place where Jotindra and Bipin were sitting talking.

KING-EMPEROR v. BISESWAR DEY.

Biseswar came behind Bipin and struck him on the neck. Bipin fell down and began to groan. Biseswar struck him again and Jotindra held Bipin's legs while he was writhing in agony and dragged the dead body to the water where it was found the next morning. According to Jotindra and Maharani, Kshetra and Jotindra took a blood-stained quilt to show her that her lover had been murdered but Kshetra denies that he came out of his house again that night.

The principles which should govern a Court in considering the evidential value of retracted confessions have frequently been considered by the High Courts in India. It cannot be laid down as an inflexible rule that a confession made and subsequently retracted by a prisoner cannot be accepted as evidence of his guilt without independent corroborative evidence. The weight to be given to such a confession must depend on the circumstances under which the confession was originally given and the circumstances under which it was retracted including the reasons given by the prisoner for its retraction. It is unsafe for a Court to rely on and act on a confession which has been retracted unless after a consideration of the whole of the evidence in the case the Court is in a position to come to the unhesitating conclusion that the confession is true, that is to say, usually unless the confession is corroborated by credible independent evidence. A retracted confession should carry practically no weight as against a person other than its maker.

On a consideration of the circumstances under which these confessions were made and retracted, it is clear that the confessions made by the approver and the three accused other than Biseswar were made in the belief that they would be tendered a pardon and made King's Evidence.

Apart from other reasons this view is strongly supported by their behaviour on the 2nd May. Though these accused had adhered to their confessions in the morning, at the end of the day when they realised that Bidhu alone had been selected as an approver they retracted then alleging they had been made under threats and inducements. We do not believe the statements made by the accused at the trial as to positive ill-treatment by the police. Nor do we believe that the whole story was a concoction by the police. We think the learned Sessions Judge was misled by the falsity of a great part of the case for the defence set up before him. If the defence at the trial had been conducted with the same ability and moderation as it was before us we doubt if he would have thought it necessary to make this reference. That Maharani was threatened when the blood-stained cloth was found in her room is not unlikely and the fact is deposed to by witnesses who seem the more credible since they speak with moderation, the denial of this fact by the police witnesses who were present renders their conduct open to suspicion. What we believe to have happened was that after Maharani's arrest Jotindra, Kshetra, Bidhu and Satish were arrested on suspicion because she stated they were her lovers and because three of them were the last people with whom Bipin was seen alive. These accused were then closely questioned by the police and threatened and cajoled into making various statements. A statement made by one accused would be made the basis of future questioning of another and each would be told, when so much had been discovered, his only hope of safety lay in making a confession. Out of the facts ascertained and such admissions as were made, a theory of the crime would be constructed and this would be put to the accused individually. Once they had been convinced, that their best hope of safety lay in becoming King's Evidence they would be only too willing to adopt the suggestion made to them. There is no direct evidence that this was what happened in the present case but from the circumstances under which these confessions were made and retracted and from the nature of the confessions themselves we have no doubt that they were obtained in some such manner under threats and inducements which render them inadmissible under sec. 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. Apart from their confessions there is no evidence to support a conviction of any of these three accused. The evidence of Bidhu is absolutely worthless, not only on account of his denial of its truth, but apart from that the story told by him is highly improbable and there are discrepancies on important points between the evidence given by him before the Committing Magistrate and that given at the trial. The more incriminating evidence is that relating to the card party on the night of occurrence. But it is not shown that the account given the next morning by the accused as to the termination of the party is false. The learned Sessions Judge appears to have overlooked the possibility that Bipin may have given his companions a false reason for his departure. Though it is clear that Bipin did not go to his father's house that night, this does not prove that Jotindra and the other accused were not telling the truth when they said Bipin had made this statement. Other facts like the swooning of Jotindra after arrest are equally consistent with the guilt and innocence of the accused. Jotin's confession to the Civil Surgeon at Noakhali is of no more value than his first confession to the Magistrate. He may well have thought that repeating his confession would strengthen his chance of being made an approver. When the confessions and evidence of the approver are rejected the circumstantial evidence is not sufficient to do more than raise some suspicions against these accused and this suspicion is increased by the falsity of their statements at different times. But we agree with the jury that they cannot be convicted on any of the charges framed against them.

The case of Biseswar remains to be considered. He did not as did the other three accused retract his confession on the 2nd of May after Bidhu's examination but adhered to it even on the 6th May. It may be that being unlike the others uneducated he had still hope of a pardon. There is no reason to think that he was treated differently from the others during the police investigation and this renders it difficult to act on his confession now that "it has been retracted." However that may be we are not in a position to come to unhesitating conclusion that the confession is true. The whole story of the murder is improbable. We are unable to believe that these young men would conspire in the way alleged to deliberately murder Bipin because he was carrying on an intrigue with a woman of Maharani's character. Nor can we believe that a mere promise of Rs. 500 from a man in Jotindra's position would be a sufficient inducement for the commission of a murder. We also cannot overlook the possibility that Biseswar may have been induced to make himself a scape-goat. Further we find absolutely no corroboration of his retracted confession. The retracted confessions of his co-accused would be of no evidential value against him even if we had not rejected them as against the makers and Bidhu's evidence as already stated is worthless. The learned Sessions Judge has stated in his letter of reference that foot-print found close to pool of blood was according to the foot-print expert the foot-print of the accused Biseswar; but we can find no such statement in the evidence given by the foot-print expert Inspector Ananta Kumar Chakravarty (P. W. No. 20). He has stated in detail the points of similarity and dissimilarity between the impression that was taken of Biseswar's foot-print and the foot-print found at the scene of the murder. But he has not stated that the prints of similarity preponderate over those of dissimilarity nor has he expressed his opinion as an expert that the two foot-prints are of one and the same person. We are told by the learned Counsel for the Crown that he did give evidence to this effect before the Committing Magistrate. But this deposition was not put in evidence at the Session trial and cannot be considered by us. In the case of Biseswar we therefore hold there are no materials on the record to justify our setting aside the unanimous verdict of the jury.

We accordingly acquit the accused on all the charges framed against them and direct that they be released.

SARAT CHANDRA MANDAL v. RAMSASHI ROY.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

C. C. GHOSE, J.—This rule was issued calling upon the District Magistrate of 24-Perganahs and upon the Opposite Parties to show cause why the order passed by the learned Additional Sessions Judge, dated the 16th March 1922, confirming the order of the learned Subordinate Judge should not be set aside and sanction granted to the Petitioners under sec. 195, Cr. P. C. to prosecute the Opposite Parties on various charges of perjury and forgery.

The facts which have given rise to the application on which the rule was issued are as follows :—

On the 28th October 1919, a suit was instituted being Title Suit No. 233 of 1919, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of 24-Perganahs, 1st Court, by a company called the Chitpore Golabari Company, Ltd., of which the Managing Agents are Messrs. Andrew Yule and Co., against three persons named Srimati Alladi Dasi, Sarat Chunder Mondal and Sasi Bhusan Mondal for specific performance of an agreement for sale of certain lands for Rs. 10,000 alleged to have been executed by Srimati Alladi Dasi on the 18th May 1919, on receipt of a sum of Rs. 1,201 by way of earnest. The suit was not contested by Srimati Alladi Dasi but the other two Defendants, who were the reversionary heirs, defended the suit on the ground that the agreement in question had not been executed by Srimati Alladi Dasi. The suit came on for hearing on the 26th July 1921, when the Opposite Parties Ramsasi Roy and Kiran Chunder Ghose gave evidence in the cause to the effect that the agreement in question was executed on the 18th May 1919, and that the sum of Rs. 1,201 was paid in Currency Notes which, amongst others, consisted in particular of two Notes bearing Nos. as follows :—

$\frac{VB}{ST}$ 14820 for Rs. 500.
 $\frac{VB}{ST}$ 68788 for Rs. 500.

It transpired however from the evidence of a witness from the Currency Office, who was subsequently examined, that the Currency Note for Rs. 500 which bore the No. $\frac{VB}{ST}$ 68788 was not in existence on the date of the said agreement and was in fact issued from the Currency Office more than two months after the said date. The suit itself was withdrawn on the 28th July 1921, on the ground that it had been prematurely instituted inasmuch as the period within which the agreement was to be performed had not expired on the date of the institution of the suit. The Petitioners thereafter applied before the learned Subordinate Judge for sanction to prosecute a number of people including the Opposite Parties under various sections of the Indian Penal Code on the allegation that the agreement in question was a false and fabricated document and brought into existence long after the date it bore and that the Opposite Parties Ramsasi Roy and Kiran Chunder Ghose were guilty of perjury when they stated in the course of their evidence that the consideration mentioned in the agreement was paid in their presence. The learned Subordinate Judge for the reasons given by him in his judgment dated the 7th February 1922, was not satisfied that the agreement in question was a forgery. He thought that apparently a wrong number was noted against the Currency Note in question and that the wrong number had been evidently taken from a hundred rupee Note which had been given to Srimati Alladi Dasi at the time of the agreement. The matter was taken by the unsuccessful Petitioners to the District Judge under the provisions of sec. 195, cl. 6, Cr. P. C., but the application to the SABAT CHANDRA MANDAL v. RAMSASHI ROY.

District Judge did not succeed, he being of opinion that there was no reasonable ground for suspicion against the Opposite Parties on the materials placed before him.

On behalf of the Opposite Parties it has been contended that the present application to this Court is not maintainable either under the provisions of sec. 107 of the Government of India Act or under sec. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure and further that having regard to the language used in sub-secs. 6 and 7 of sec. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, only one application by way of appeal or revision against an order passed by a Court of first instance is contemplated in cases which are not covered by the provisions of sec. 439, Cr. P. C. and lastly in any event having regard to the facts of this case and having regard to the fact that two Courts have refused to grant sanction, this is not a fit and proper case for this Court to interfere.

In support of the first contention that sec. 107 of the Government of India Act does not apply to a case of this nature, our attention has been called by Mr. Sanyal to a number of cases decided in this Court and elsewhere. It is unnecessary to go through the cases. The principle, as we understand, is this that although this Court is vested with very wide powers of superintendence over the proceedings of Subordinate Courts, these powers are not to be exercised for the purpose of interfering with the order of a Subordinate Court merely on the ground of error in law or error in fact. In other words, the powers of superintendence are not applicable where the only question is whether the decision of the lower Court is against the weight of evidence. Now applying this principle to the facts of the present case, we cannot but come to the conclusion that sec. 107 of the Government of India Act cannot be invoked in support of the present application for sanction to prosecute. Nor can we hold that this is a sustainable application under the provisions of sec. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There has been no excess of jurisdiction nor failure to exercise jurisdiction; and on the facts it is difficult to say that this case can be brought within the last clause of sec. 115 [see in this connection Re : Ram Prasad Malla (1)].

There now remains the question whether having regard to the terms of sub-secs. 6 and 7 of sec. 195, Cr. P. C. one or more applications against an order passed by a Civil Court of first instance are contemplated in cases not covered by sec. 439, Cr. P. C. The decided cases on this point are not uniform and we think the solution of the question ought to be determined on a consideration of the terms of the sub-sections. Now reading the words of sub-sec. 6, I doubt if the words "any sanction given or refused under the section" could have been intended to mean anything else but the sanction given or refused in the first instance. If that is so, then only one appeal or rather one application in revision would appear to have been contemplated by this sub-section. Then look at the words of sub-sec. 7. It provides that for the purposes of the section every Court shall be deemed subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from such Court ordinarily lie. I doubt very much if the legislature intended in cases not covered by sec. 439, Cr. P. C., to allow a succession of appeals or applications in revision. However that may be, we think this application must fail on the facts. In this case, two Courts have refused to grant a sanction, because they have held that there is no clear prima facie case against the Opposite Parties. This is in accordance with the principle that a sanction given under this section is not a mere formal matter and that before sanction can be granted it is necessary for the Court to see if there is a prima facie case against the Opposite Parties. Further the Court will be astute to see that no abuse of the administration of Criminal Justice takes place. We think there is much to be said in favour of the view taken by the District Judge that a mistake was probably committed by the Opposite Party Ramsashi Roy in setting out the numbers of the Currency Notes. At any rate on the entire facts of this case, we are not prepared to differ from the view taken by the two Courts below.

(1) I. L. R. 37 Cal. 13 at p. 22 (1909).

The rule therefore fails and must be discharged.

CUMING, J.—The facts are these.

The Petitioners sought for sanction to prosecute the Opposite Party for using as genuine a certain bainapatra which they allege is a forgery and has been fraudulently antedated.

The learned Subordinate Judge for reasons which at present it is not necessary to specify refused the sanction. The District Judge was then moved and he also refused the sanction. The Petitioners have moved this Court and obtained this rule. The first point that has been argued is whether this Court has any power to interfere and if so under what provision of the law. The Petitioners contend that under sub-sec. (6) of sec. 195 the Subordinate Judge is a Court subordinate to the High Court and so is the District Judge. The Subordinate Judge having refused sanction, application for sanction could be made to the District Judge and he having refused sanction, application could then be made to the High Court. Sub-sec. (6) provides : "any sanction given or refused under this section may be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate." Sub-sec. (7) provides : "for the purpose of this section, every Court shall be deemed to be subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the former Court ordinarily lie, that is to say, (a) where such appeals lie to one or more Courts the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction shall be the Court to which such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate."

Reading the plain words of the section it is quite clear that for the purposes of sec. 195 the Court of the Subordinate Judge is subordinate only to the District Judge. The use of the word "only" would seem to make this clear. The decisions on the point in this Court are somewhat conflicting.

In favour of the view which the Petitioner desires us to take there are the cases of Habibar Rahman v. Khoda Bux (2) and Girija Sankar Roy v. Benode Sheik (3). These authorities favour the view that this Court could deal with the matter under sec. 195, sub-sec. (6).

The contrary view has been taken in the case of Hamijuddi Mondal v. Damodar Ghose (4). This ruling was followed in the case in Re : Ram Prasad Malla (1).

In the case of Hamijuddi Mondal v. Damodar Ghose (4), it was held that the High Court was not an appellate authority within the meaning of sub-sec. (7). In that case the District Judge had revoked the sanction granted by the Munsif.

It is perhaps difficult to distinguish this case from the two cases of Habibar Rahman v. Khoda Bux (2) and Girija Sankar Roy v. Benode Sheik (3), though one learned Judge was a party to all three rulings.

(1) I. L. R. 37 Cal. 18 (1909).

(2) 11 C. W. N. 125; s. c. 5 C. L. J. 219 (1906).

(3) 5 C. L. J. 222 (1906).

(4) 10 C. W. N. 1026 (1906).

SARAT CHANDRA MANDAL v. RAMSASHI ROY.

In the case of Re : Ram Prasad Malla (1), the learned Judge followed the ruling reported in Hamiyuddi Mondal v. Damodar Ghose (4). Reading the plain words of the section, it would seem quite clear that in the present case the Court has no jurisdiction to interfere under sec. 195 (6) and (7) and I have no hesitation in following the rulings in Hamiyuddi Mondal v. Damodar Ghose (4) and Re : Ram Prasad Malla (1).

The point then remains, is there any provision of law under which this Court can deal with the present case? In the case of Re : Ram Prasad Malla (1) this Court held that the matter could be dealt with under sec. 115, Civil Procedure Code. In the case of Emperor v. Har Prasad Das (5) the Full Court held that the Court could interfere under sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code or under sec. 15 of the Charter. That was a case under sec. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Speaking for myself and with great respect to the learned Judges who have held otherwise I should have great difficulty in holding that an application for sanction to prosecute could be the subject of revision under sec. 115, Civil Procedure Code.

Sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code obviously refers to civil matters and civil matters only. It is found in the Code of Civil Procedure and can have no application to criminal matters.

An application for sanction to prosecute is made under sec. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The fact that it is made to a Civil Court seems to me immaterial. It is granted under a section of the Criminal Procedure Code and I must admit I find some difficulty in understanding how a section of the Civil Procedure Code could be invoked to deal with a sanction granted under a section of the Criminal Procedure Code.*

It has further been suggested that the Court has power under sec. 107 of the Government of India Act.

Here again speaking for myself and again with great respect I have considerable difficulty in seeing how it can come within the purview of this section. Assuming however that the matter could be dealt with either under sec. 115, C. P. C., or sec. 107, Government of India Act, we could not interfere with the findings of the lower Court. The two Courts have held after considering the evidence that the evidence would not justify granting sanction to prosecute. In doing so they may or may not have come to a wrong finding of fact but it is obviously not a case which would fall within sec. 115. It is not a question of exercise or non-exercise of jurisdiction nor is it a material irregularity or illegality.

Nor would it fall under sec. 107, Government of India Act. That power is exercised only in exceptional cases and this is clearly not an exceptional case. Here two Courts have held that on a review of the evidence they will not grant sanction. I therefore agree in discharging the rule.

order if appealable—Sec. 2 (2), such order of rejection if comes within the definition of "Decree."

In an appeal the lower Appellate Court called upon the Appellant to furnish security for costs under Or. 41, r. 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the order not having been complied with dismissed the appeal. Against this order an appeal was preferred to the High Court:

Held—That an order of rejection of an appeal under Or. 41, r. 10 is not appealable either as a decree or as an order. If it is treated as an order, it is not included in the list of appealable orders set out in Or. 43, r. 1, nor is it covered by the provisions of sec. 104.

That the order further did not fall within the definition of a "Decree" contained in sec. 2 (2), because the Court did not deal with the merits of the controversy between the parties.

LEKHA v. BHANNA (1), SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL v. JILLO (2) and FIROZI BEGAM v. ABDUL LATIF KHAN (3) approved and followed.

This was an appeal from a decision of W. A. Seaton, Esq., District Judge, Chittagong, dated the 25th June, 1919, affirming that of Babu Kunja Behari Biswas, Additional Sub-Judge, Chittagong, dated the 15th June 1918.

The facts will appear from the judgment.

Babu Kanaidhone Dutt for the Appellant.

Babu Chandra Sekhur Sen for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiff in a suit for recovery of possession of land upon partition. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit after trial on the merits. The Plaintiff then appealed to the District Judge. The lower Appellate Court called upon him to furnish security for the costs of the appeal and of the original suit under sub-r. (i) of r. 10 of Or. 41 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Plaintiff did not comply with this order. Thereupon the Court proceeded to make the order contemplated by sub-r. (ii) of r. 10 which provides that where such security is not furnished, the Court shall reject the appeal. The order of the District Judge is not accurately expressed, because it states that the appeal is dismissed and not that the appeal is rejected. This inaccuracy in expression, however, does not alter the nature of the order. The Plaintiff has now appealed to this Court.

On behalf of the Respondents, a preliminary objection has been taken that the appeal is incompetent. This raises the question whether an order under Or. 41, r. 10, sub-r. (ii) is or is not appealable. If it is treated as an order, it is clearly not appealable because it is not included in the list of appealable orders set out in Or. 43, r. 1 nor is it covered by the provisions of sec. 104. Consequently, if an appeal is to be entertained, the Appellant must satisfy us that the order of rejection is, in essence, a decree. We are of opinion that the order does not fall within the definition of a decree contained in sec. 2 which provides that "Decree means the formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit." The order in this case does not determine the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit, inasmuch as the Court rejected the appeal and did not deal with the merits of the controversy between the parties. This view was adopted by a Full Bench in the case of Lekha v. Bhanna (1), which was mentioned with approval in Secretary of State for India in Council v. Jillo (2) and Firozi Begam v. Abdul Latif Khan (3). We observe that in the case last mentioned, it was remarked that it would be well if the legislature would consider whether it would not be advisable to embody in the Code of Civil Procedure some provision analogous to that contained in the second paragraph of sec. 381 of the Code of 1882 and thus to give a right of appeal from orders passed under sec. 541 of that Code. The legislature, however, does not appear to have taken notice of the suggestion. It may be pointed out further that sec. 2 includes in the term "Decree" an order of rejection of a plaint but not an order of rejection of an appeal. It is also worthy of note that Or. 25, r. 2 which deals with the dismissal of a suit on failure to furnish security describes the order, not as that of rejection of a suit but as that of dismissal of a suit, and such order of dismissal is made expressly appealable under Or. 43, r. 1, cl. (u). We are consequently of opinion that an order of rejection of an appeal under Or. 41, r. 10 is not appealable, either as a decree or as an order. This appeal is plainly incompetent and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

The application, filed in Court to-day with a view to have the order set aside in the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction or of our power of superintendence, is refused.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER.

No. 157 of 1920.

MOOKERJEE, J.	}	RAJA JOTE COOMAR
PANTON, J.		MUKHERJEE, Plaintiff,
1921,		Appellant,
28, July.		"v.
		JADUNATH BOSE and

		Respondents.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), secs. 92 and 98, parole evidence to explain an unambiguous word in a lease, admissibility of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 41, rr. 27 (1) (a), 28, 29, reversal of decree for improper exclusion of evidence and remand of suit by Appellate Court, legality of.

The right of fishery in a tank was let out for a term of 9 years by a lease which specified the period to be 1316 to 1324 San. The lessor having instituted a suit for ejectment on the ground of expiry of the period of the lease, the Defendant stated that the year in respect of jalkars begins from the commencement of the rains, i.e., from Ashar, and the term of yearly settlement subsists till then, so that the term of the aforesaid settlement did not expire before Ashar 1325. The Court of first instance held that the expression used in the contract was unambiguous and that oral evidence was not admissible to show that the expression San meant not the Bengali year which ends on the last day of Chaitra, but another period which ends in Ashar:

Held—That it is well-settled that various words in written documents which prima facie present no ambiguity may be interpreted by extrinsic evidence of usage, and their peculiar meaning, when found in connection with the subject-matter of the transaction, fixed by parole testimony.

Therefore evidence was admissible to show that the term San did not signify the Bengali year, but a different period specially applicable to jalkar tenancies.

RAJA JOTE COOMAR MUKHERJEE v. JADUNATH BOSE.

-GRANT v. MADDOX (1), RE : ANON (2) and R. v. NEWSTEAD (3) and other cases referred to.

Held further—That the circumstance that evidence had been improperly excluded by the trial Court did not justify a reversal of the decree and a remand of the suit. Under the provisions of Or. 41, rr. 27, 28 and 29, it was open to the Appellate Court either to take the evidence itself or to direct the primary Court to take the evidence and to send it to the Appellate Court for consideration.

This was an appeal against the order of Babu Lal Behari Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah Hooghly, dated the 10th of March 1920, reversing the order of Moulvi Abdul Khaleque, Munsif, 2nd Court at that place, dated the 30th April 1919 and remanding the suit to his Court for fresh trial.

The facts will appear from the judgment.

Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitra for the Appellant.

No one appeared for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal from an order of remand made by the lower Appellate Court in a suit for ejectment and mesne profits. The subject-matter of the litigation is the right of fishery in a tank let out by the Plaintiff to the Defendants on an yearly rent of Rs. 18. The kabuliyat executed by the tenants stated that the tenancy would last for a term of 9 years from 1316 to 1324 (সন) (San). The Plaintiff instituted this suit on the allegation that the tenancy had terminated and yet the Defendants were in occupation. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge has reversed that decision on the ground that evidence legally admissible had been erroneously excluded by the trial Court. It appears that in the sixth paragraph of the written statement the Defendants alleged that the year in respect of jalkars begins from the commencement of the rains, that is, from the month of Ashar, that the term of yearly settlement subsists till then, that old fishes are caught till that time and there is right to catch and take the same; and that according to this practice, settlement of the disputed jalkar was taken in Sraban 1316, so that the term of the said settlement did not expire before Ashar 1325. The Court of first instance held that the expression used in the contract was unambiguous and that oral evidence was not admissible to show that the expression (সন) (San) meant, not the Bengali year which commences on the first day of Baisakh and ends on the last day of Chaitra, but another period which commences in Sraban and ends in Ashar. The Subordinate Judge has held that evidence was admissible to show that the term সন (San) has, by custom and usage, a special meaning in connection with tenancies of fisheries. In our opinion, the view taken by the Subordinate Judge on this point is correct, and is supported by sec. 98 of the Indian Evidence Act.

It is well-settled that various words in written documents which prima facie present no ambiguity may be interpreted by extrinsic evidence of usage; and their peculiar meaning, when found in connection with the subject-matter of the transaction, has been fixed, by parole testimony of the sense in which they were usually received, when employed in cases similar to that under investigation. As an illustration of this principle, reference may be made to the decision in the case of Grant v. Maddox (1). In that case, the Plaintiff by a written contract, agreed to perform at the Defendant's theatre and the Defendant agreed to engage her for three years and to pay her a salary of £5, £6 and £7 per week in those years respectively. It was ruled that parole evidence was admissible to show that according to the uniform usage of the theatrical profession, the Plaintiff was to be paid only during the theatrical season, that is, during the term that the theatre was open for performance in each of those years. It was argued that the word "year" was unambiguous, signifying the calendar year which commences on the first day of January and terminates on the last day of December, and that consequently the Defendant was bound to pay to the Plaintiff at the agreed rate for the 52 weeks included in the year between its commencement and its termination. This contention was overruled. Similar illustrations are afforded by the decisions in Re : Anon (2), R. v. Newstead (3), R. v. Sayer (4) and Myer v. Sarl (5). In our opinion evidence was admissible in this case to show that the term (সন) (San) did not signify the Bengali year which commences on the first day of Baisakh and ends on the last day of Chaitra but a different period specially applicable to jalkar tenancies as stated in the written statement.

But although the view taken by the Subordinate Judge upon the question of admissibility of evidence is correct, we are of opinion that the order of remand made by him cannot be supported. The circumstance that evidence has been improperly excluded by the trial Court does not justify a reversal of the decree made by that Court. The Code of Civil Procedure provides the method to be followed in a case of this description, Or. 41, rr. 27 (1) (a), 28, 29; it is open to the Judge either to take the evidence himself or to direct the primary Court to take the evidence and to send it to the Appellate Court for consideration.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the case remitted to him to be dealt with in accordance with law.* As the appeal has not been opposed, there will be no order for costs in this Court.

REPORTS (See Index.)

The Long Vacation in the East and West.

The Calcutta High Court re-opened after the Long Vacation on Friday last. The legal new year in Bengal practically synchronises with the legal new year in England. Both in these Eastern and Western seats of culture, the autumn has from the distant past been observed as a general time of recess. While the autumn, in the East, which follows the monsoons, is associated with a clear azure sky pouring down a deluge of bright sunshine and plentiful fields rejuvenated with fresh green life, the autumn in the West shrouds the departing days of the summer in sombre hues and ushers in a dark, dull and dreary winter, mercilessly robbing nature of all her charms of foliage yet not without its tribute of bounty to mankind. In England the autumn, following as it does the charming days of the summer, is the time for reaping. It is for such reason, in the old days, that the seats of learning, be it the Universities or the Law Courts, all used to close their portals for furnishing facilities for harvesting. Times have now changed and men and their occupations also. Lawyers in England have of late been bitterly complaining about the length of the Long Vacation, as during these ten weeks they are deprived of the opportunity of continually fleecing their fellow beings. We are not aware that the litigant public have much to complain. Most of them know that they will reap as they have sown and the Long Vacation does as a matter of fact afford them a temporary relief. We have little sympathy with those who are keen on getting their pound of flesh with as much expedition as possible. Except in cases of fraud or bad faith human sympathy is always on the side of those whose misfortunes are exploited by their more fortunate brethren. If people would be reasonable and lawyers no less, many of the contentious cases for which they would often stake all that they have in the world, may be settled out of Court. The Autumn Vacation in Bengal is crowded with religious festivals peculiar to Bengal, and the most remarkable of these is the peace-celebration day of the Dushera (the Bijoya) when all are expected to forget and forgive all past wrongs and to embrace even one's enemy with good-will and amity. It is therefore very appropriate that the Law Courts in Bengal should re-open after this unique ceremony for the chastening of the human soul. Thus it is in a spirit of love and charity that we meet again to-day and such spirit is the key-note to the doing of justice in all affairs of men.

The re-opening of the Calcutta High Court.

The reopening of the High Court is not marked by anything similar to the Lord Mayor's show in London. The Bench and Bar resume business after a ceremonial exchange of civilities. We have enough of pageants during the celebration of pujas in these provinces. The dewali marks the advent of a new year and the feast of light with which the dark night preceding the new moon is made resplendent is meant to dispel the dark forces of nature. It is an agreeable coincidence that the Court commenced business this year by the solemn observance of silence for two minutes in commemoration of the day of armistice on which the most devastating war that the world has ever seen came to a close. Has the world been in peace since? War still continues in the near East. The embers of civil war are smouldering still within an integral part of the United Kingdom. The pan-Islamic fire is still adding fuel to Indian unrest. The ideal of world-peace will never be accomplished till peace is restored in the Near and the Far East. It will tax the resources of the best brains of the world to lay the spirit of universal unrest that is now threatening to throw society out of gear. But we are great believers in the good sense of the East and if these temporary ebullitions of the human mind are treated with tact, judgment and sympathy, society will eventually settle down to its normal activities. On the judiciary rests a grave responsibility at the present moment. It is for them to maintain law and order but they must always be prepared to make allowances for the abnormal conditions of the present time and temper justice with mercy.

Mr. Justice Bepin Behari Ghosh.

We offer our congratulations to Mr. Justice Bepin Behari Ghosh on his elevation to the Bench. He was a prominent member of the Vakil Bar and is well known for his legal attainments and scholarly habit. We wish him success in the discharge of the onerous duties of his office.

The departed.

On the re-opening of the Courts, we are greatly grieved to miss from amongst us two familiar figures at the Bar, Mr. P. K. Ray Chaudhuri who died just before the Commencement of the Long Vacation and Mr. J. N. Roy who passed away during the close holidays. Both made themselves very popular by the amiability of their character and their self-sacrificing zeal in every public cause. Mr. P. K. Ray Chaudhuri joined the Calcutta Bar exactly twenty two years before his death. He began his career as a promising junior and his devotion to his duties met with much appreciation from the leaders with whom he worked. He was also for sometime on the staff of this journal and many of the cases reported by him in these columns testify to the thoroughness with which he used to do his work. But he was one of those who gradually cut himself adrift from the profession and devoted a great deal of his time in serving the public. He was for some years the Honorary Secretary to the Bar Library. The industrial development and the political advancement of the country engaged a good deal of his time since the days of the Bengal Partition. Latterly he identified himself with the labour movement and helped in the organisation of the Press and Taxi Cab Unions. Although he warmly advocated legitimate labour grievances he was averse to promoting strikes and always threw the weight of his influence in bringing about a reasonable compromise. His premature death is a great loss to the Bar and the public.

The death of J. N. Roy was equally unexpected. He was senior to Mr. Ray Chaudhuri by only a year, having been called to the Bar of England in June 1898 and enrolled in the High Court of Calcutta in December of the same year. He was a man of brilliant parts. His studies with a view to enter the Indian Civil Service greatly stimulated his intellectual faculties. He possessed literary talent, strong imagination and deep and generous emotions. He made his mark at the Bar quite at an early part of his career. To men of his temperament the practice of criminal law offers a peculiar fascination. His brilliant parts enabled him to get up a large criminal practice. But a man of his generous impulses can never make money-making at the Bar the sole aim and end of his life. He always took an active interest in Indian politics. During the Partition and the consequent unrest and repression in Bengal, he took a prominent part in the defence of political prisoners, mostly as a labour of love, and conducted the cases with an amount of zeal and earnestness which love of gain can seldom inspire. He was one of the first to offer his services for the defence of the political prisoners during the administration of the martial law in the Punjab. It has been the proud privilege of the English Bar to protect the rights and liberties of the subject and in this respect he was always staunch in maintaining the best traditions of the Bar to which he belonged. He had very pronounced sympathy with all democratic movements of the present age and latterly made the cause of the Bengal peasantry his own. It was hard work in connection with the now notorious Munition case, that undermined his health, which was never strong. The Bar has been a grave to many a men of literary promise and but for his choice of the legal profession he would have, like his talented cousin, the late poet Rajani Sen, been also a worshipper of the muse. He was in the prime of life and his untimely and unexpected death, which took place on the 11th October last, has been a great shock to his numerous friends and a very serious loss to the Bar and the country.

LONDON LETTER.

The list of business for the Michaelmas Sittings of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council contains 47 Appeals. The Sittings commenced on the 18th October and Prize Appeals and Appeals from Crown Colonies were the first to be heard.

Indian Appeals are to be taken next, but at the time of writing it has not been decided whether one or two Courts shall sit simultaneously to hear them.

The inconveniences to Counsel of two Courts are obvious, and it is somewhat of a hardship on the litigant if, in the final Court of Appeal, the Counsel whom he has retained is unable to give his whole attention to a case.

The argument contra is that—the litigant benefits by having his case heard with greater despatch.

There are 26 Indian cases in the list, the majority coming from Madras, 6 from Bengal and 5 from Patna.

Sir Lawrence Jenkins will once more take his place on the Board during this term.

In the Kings Bench Division, Rowlatt, J., has delivered judgment in Reader v. S. E. and C. Ry. and L. and N. W. Ry. and in a number of similar cases brought against Railway Companies for the value of goods sold by the Companies during the Railway Strike of 1919.

When the Strike broke out the goods were in transit and it became impossible to forward them or to communicate with the senders. The goods consisted of apples and margarine and were thereupon sold by the Food Controller as being perishable, with the concurrence of the Railway Companies.

The actions were brought by the consignors who contended that the goods were not perishable, and that the Railway Companies had not proved that the Food Controller had authority to take and sell the goods.

In the case of the apples they had been booked through from Kent to the North of England over the S. E. and C. Ry. and L. and N. W. Ry. Companies' lines, one consignment was still in the custody of the S. E. and C. Ry. at the time of the Strike, the other had gone into the custody of the L. and N. W. Ry. Judgment was given for the Railway Companies. It was held by his Lordship that "in a commercial sense" the goods were "perishable" although in particular circumstances they might have lasted for weeks or even months.

In respect of the consignment of apples sold from the custody of the L. and N. W. Ry., the S. E. and C. Ry., the other Company was not liable owing to a condition on the back of the consignment note confining their liability to the limits of their own system.

The S. E. and C. Ry. were held to be not liable on the other consignment on the ground that the consignor had sufficient notice of and was bound by the Company's general conditions which were displayed in the Company's stations and to which reference was made on the back of the consignment note. The Food Controller was held to have taken the goods under his statutory powers and not as agent of the Railway Companies and the charge made by him for his services was disallowed.

The learned Judge in particular draws a distinction between the amount of notice required by a consignor carrying on a settled business with the Railway Co. and a mere passenger or depositor of luggage in a cloak room.

G. D. M.

THE HINDU LAW OF REVERSIONS AND REVERSIONERS.

Priyambada's case, just cited, illustrates two things :

Firstly, that a "life estate" can, of course, be created independently of (the Hindu law of) Inheritance, that is to say, by act of the parties, as in the case of Meda v. Mitta, where a member of an undivided Hindu family granted to his deceased brother's widow the share her husband would have been entitled to on partition.

Secondly, that this is the usual type of reversion under the English law, which is, of course, always a vested one, that is to say, it remains vested in the grantor, subject to the particular estate granted—the grantor, (or his heir), in virtue of his present estate, is ready at any moment to receive possession of the fee simple back, so soon as the particular estate, or, if there be more than one, all the particular estates shall fail or determine. In other words, the right of ownership, subject to the particular estate granted, whether for life or for years, or even in tail, remains vested in the grantor, which is, accordingly, descendible to, and transferable by, his heirs.

This distinguishes a reversion under Hindu law, which, unlike the English one, is always future, uncertain, and contingent on survivor- ship to the widow, or other limited owner in possession, in the line of succession and non-interposition of any nearer heirs (but the possibility of the contingency ceasing by such limited owner forfeiting, or voluntarily giving up or surrendering the estate inter vivos is another matter), such only of the surviving reversionary heirs taking the estate after her as would have been the heirs of the last male owner had the latter lived up to and died at the moment her death. Therefore the reversioners of a Hindu widow—a convenient term descriptive of all like limited owners, that is, all female takers with qualified estates of inheritance—have not, during the life of the 'widow,' it is so stated in Mustt. Bhagbutte Thakur v. Choudry Bholanath Thakur (1), "a vested remainder" according to the language of English law, "but merely a contingent one."

Such contingent reversioners cannot be better described than in the language of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bahadur Singh v. Mohan Singh (2), viz., "expectant heirs with a spes successionis," (i.e., a naked chance, or bare possibility of succeeding).

"None of these reversioners, strictly speaking," it was accordingly observed by a Madras Full Bench—vide the case of Chiruvolu Pannamma v. Chiruvolu Perrazu (3)—"can be said individually to possess any certain or tangible interest in the reversion, for the person who will get it is only he (i) who shall actually survive the qualified proprietor and (ii) who shall occupy at her death the position of heir to the last full owner, and who that will be, it is, of course, impossible before hand to say." In short, these would-be claimants under the Hindu law to a future, contingent reversionary estate, are quite unlike the owners of reversions as known to the system of law from which the term has been borrowed, for the obvious reason that, while the right of such owners is indefeasible, that of these so-called reversioners of a Hindu widow is defeasible either by their death in the life-time of the qualified owner, or by the adoption of a child, or by the birth of a nearer heir than themselves in the line of succession. What interest these contingent reversioners possess in the reversion merely amounts to what the Privy Council has termed a spes successionis or bare possibility of succeeding. This from the very nature of the case is so with reference to every such reversioner irrespective of the proximity or remoteness of his relationship to the last male owner.

What is then the true character of the position of a reversioner under Hindu law? The answer is: "His interest involves nothing of a present proprietary nature. His right (e.g., to safe-guard the reversion by challenging acts of alienation and spoliation by a qualified owner), no doubt, is a consequence of the doctrine of reverter incident to the qualified estate of females taking as heirs of a deceased Hindu" male owner (1).

In other words, according to the language of the English law, the "widow"—the type, in general, of all limited owners (2) as the "husband" is, of all full owners—"holds an estate of inheritance to herself and the heirs of her husband. Until the termination of it, it is impossible to say who are the persons who will be entitled to succeed as heirs of her husband. Upon the termination of that estate the property descends to those who would have been the heirs of the husband if he had lived up to and died at the moment of her death;" (3) for it is always to the heirs of the last full owner that inheritance is traced by Hindu law. For instance, in cases, as pointed out by Mookerjee, J., in Abinash Chandra Mazumdar v. Harinath Shaha (4),—where "upon the death of a full owner, the estate successively passes through the hands of a series of female heirs, who take only a qualified estate before the property vests in another full owner, they may rightly be regarded in the aggregate as the holder of a limited interest which intervenes between the full ownership of the original," (i.e., the immediate prior male owner), and the ultimate "absolute" "taker;" and the estate would, on the death of the last of these female takers, devolve on those who would have been the heirs of the last full owner if he had lived up to and died at the moment of her death.

Separation of Judicial and Executive functions.

We understand that a Committee appointed by the Bengal Legislative Council is now sitting for framing a scheme for the separation of the executive from the judicial functions in this Presidency. The Committee is presided over by Mr. Justice Greaves who is noted for his progressive and liberal views. The principle of the separation has been repeatedly recognised by the Government of India and was recently affirmed by the Bengal Council and the Indian Legislature. The Reform has so far been postponed on the ground that such separation would make administration more costly. In reviewing Mr. R. C. Dutt's proposal we showed some years ago that the separation may be brought about in a manner which need not add to the cost of administration at all (4 C. W. N. clxxii (182)). Having regard to the present conditions of the Provincial Finance, the Committee in putting forward any scheme must take care to cut their cost according to their cloth. Accepting an amendment proposed by the member for the Rajshahye and Chittagang Division to a resolution relating to such separation, moved at the last Sessions of the Legislative Assembly, Sir William Vincent said that the Government of India would be glad to undertake any legislation that may be required to give effect to the provincial recommendations in this behalf but the Central Government was not in a position to give any financial assistance to any provincial Government for carrying on any scheme for such separation. The Bengal Government will have to make provision for a deficit of nearly a crore and a half at their forthcoming budget. So to put forward any scheme that would make administration more costly would be to postpone the reform indefinitely. We may mention that a similar resolution was adopted by the Madras Legislative Council some months ago and we have been told that it had to be turned down from financial considerations. We hope that Bengal will be able to lead the way in this matter and show to the rest of India that the reforms may be carried out without any fresh financial burden.

We shall offer a few suggestions as to how the reforms may be carried out without adding to the cost of the administration. We shall in the first place relieve the District Magistrates in Bengal of all judicial functions. At present they do very little of judicial work. Only occasionally they hear a few criminal appeals from Subordinate Magistrates. Formerly they used to hold Courts, entertain complaints and distribute work amongst the Subordinate Magistrates. But they have long discontinued doing such work in Bengal. They now occupy themselves chiefly with administrative and revenue work. Now that the local bodies have been made independent of the Magistrate, he has also been relieved of a great deal of administrative work in their connection. As Collector of the district he has to do a certain amount of revenue work. The Magistrate in Bengal cannot also properly speaking be said to be the head of the Police in his own district. The Police are no doubt under his orders but he cannot exercise any disciplinary powers over them. We would make him the head of the District Police in every sense and confer on him the powers of a Commissioner of Police in Calcutta. But he should have nothing to do with the trial of cases. If the Magistrate is made the head of the Police, we do not see the necessity of continuing the present office of the District Superintendents of Police. It is well-known that these offices are more or less sinecure and the real work is done by the inspectors and sub-inspectors of Police. In other words the office of the District Magistrate and Superintendent of Police may be combined. For disciplinary and other administrative work in connection with the Police, he may be assisted by an officer of the rank of the Deputy Superintendent of Police who may be styled Deputy Commissioner of Police and the Magistrate the Commissioner.

Then we would further suggest that the office of the Divisional Commissioners should be abolished. With the expansion of the scope of local self-government and the transfer of local matters to the portfolios of ministers; there is no longer any necessity of retaining these highly paid officials. Their functions may be split up and distributed amongst the Collector of the District, the Board of Revenue, the members of the Executive Council and the Ministers. Whatever justification there might have been for the existence of the office of Divisional Commissioners when Bengal, Behar, Orissa were under one administration and there were no ministers and members of the Executive Council, there can be no excuse for their continuance at present. If the office of the Divisional Commissioners are dispensed with, then the present nomenclature of the District Magistrates may be changed into District Commissioners and their assistants may be called Deputy Commissioners. The designation of Magistrates should be limited to officers presiding over criminal Courts. This will require some legislative changes both in the nomenclature and the powers and functions of such officers. But that would not present any difficulty. It will result in very substantial saving in the cost of Provincial administration and having regard to the financial difficulties of the provinces, the pruning knife should be used without any hesitation for lopping off all surplusages.

As regards the administration of law and justice in the provinces, we would entrust the work entirely to the members of the Provincial Services. We would do away with the distinction between the provincial, judicial and executive services and place the members exercising judicial functions on an equal footing in every respect. They may be required to do civil and criminal work alternately at different periods of their service. In the Districts the Courts may be called Civil Courts and Magisterial Courts and officers presiding over them, Civil Judges and Magistrates and ranked first, second and so on in accordance with the Courts over which they preside. The District and Sessions Judge should be the head of the District Judiciary. The Magistrates and Civil Judges should all be under the administrative supervision of the District Judge and under the superintendence and guidance of the High Court as the Provincial Judicial Service is at present. These are the broad outlines of our scheme and we believe that it is possible to give effect to it not only without throwing any additional burden on the province but by effecting a saving in the cost of administration. It might be said that our scheme would interfere with vested interests. But that is a matter of secondary consideration. Essential administrative reforms cannot be put off from such considerations. When the Government of India is unable to come to the help of Bengal it is the obvious right of the Provincial Government to reduce the cost of administration by any legitimate means available to it.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Privy Council commenced the hearing of Indian Appeals on Monday last, the 24th instant.

The first case heard was Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab & anr., an appeal from the High Court of Bombay regarding the construction of a will drawn in Guzrati. The case had already been before the Board on a preliminary question of procedure which their Lordships decided in favour of the Appellant on the 11th February 1921.

The will was made by one Nathoo Moolji who left a widow and two daughters. He appointed his widow "waras" and "malik" of his estate and directed that after her death she should give "whatever property may remain either by will or other writing" to the Testator's two daughters.

The main question for the decision of the Board was whether according to the terms of the will the widow took an absolute estate or whether her estate was subject to a trust in favour of the daughters, so as to give the objects of the trust a vested estate in default of its exercise.

DeGruyther, K. C. (with him Parikh) argued in favour of the Trust.

Sir G. R. Lowndes, K. C. (with him Raikes), argued contra for the Respondent.

The judgment of the Board consisting of Lords Buckmaster, Atkinson, Carson and Sir John Edge was delivered on the 25th at the conclusion of the argument. Their Lordships dismissed the appeal and found in favour of the Respondent's contention. Reference was made to the following authorities.

Horwood v. West, 1 Siman and Stuart 387; 9 Ch. D. 96, Parnall v. Parnall, 35 I. A. 17; 34 I. A. 93 and 11 I. A. 89, Mayne; secs. 614 and 615.

The judgment was delivered orally and will be reported when the printed judgment is available.

The same Board strengthened by the addition of Sir L. Jenkins are hearing the case of Nalam Pattabhirama Rao & ors. v. Mandarilli Narayanamoorthy & ors.; in which the Respondent is claiming a share of the joint family property of the Appellants. The suit was dismissed by the first Court but this decision was reversed by the High Court. The Respondent is not represented before the Board and the question seems to be mainly one of fact.

A judgment which has caused considerable agitation in the press was delivered by the House of Lords yesterday in the case of Sutlers v. Briggs. In effect their Lordships held that money paid by cheque in settlement of a betting or other gambling transaction could be reclaimed by the loser, his heirs, executors, or trustees. It is anticipated by a section of the press that the Courts will be inundated with suits by both backers and book-makers asking for the repayment of money paid by them in the settlement of bets. The agitation would appear to be ill-founded. Though the provisions of the gaming act are well-known, it is seldom that this defence is pleaded, owing to the recognition by public opinion that there is a strong moral obligation on a loser to discharge his gambling debts, and the real sanction is the fear of being posted as a defaulter. On the other hand, it is probable that a certain amount of litigation will ensue owing to the efforts of trustees, in bankruptcy and otherwise, to recover on behalf of their estates moneys that have been paid away for bets.

THE HINDU LAW OF REVERSIONS AND REVERSIONERS.

Accordingly, as observed in Rooder Chunder Chowdry v. Shonibhoo Chunder Chowdry, (1) "property which had devolved on the widow by the death of her husband goes at her death to the heirs of her husband, and their right begins to accrue from the date of the death of the widow, and not from the date of the death of the husband."

In Gobind Monce Dasse v. Sham Lall Bysack (2) the right of succession of nephews (sister's sons), whether born before or after the death of their maternal uncle, was similarly held to accrue to them, not on the death of the maternal uncle, but on the death of his widow.

Any way, as pertinently put by Peacock, C. J., in Nabin Chunder Chukrabarti v. Iswar Chunder Chukrabarti (3), "it is a very anomalous position that a person should take as heir and that his right to take should be determined according to a state of facts, not existing at the time of the death of the ancestor, but caused by events which may have occurred many years after his death."

This points to an important distinction in the nature of a woman's estate under Hindu law. The distinctive feature of the estate is that at her death it does not go to her heirs as such, but reverts to the heirs of the last male owner. "Generally, if not always, the heirs of the female holder and the heirs of the last male owner are different;" but if ever any of her heirs takes the estate it is not as heir of her, but as heir of the immediate, prior male owner to whom she herself succeeded as heir. In other words, she lacks full proprietorship and does not (1) (except in Bombay if she is a daughter, sister, niece, or grand-niece), become a fresh stock of descent (2).

On the other hand, when a male owner of property dies, his heirs, and not the heirs of any previous holder of the property, succeed to it. In other words, every male owner is full proprietor and can become a fresh stock of descent. This distinction in the nature of a Hindu woman's estate is put more fully in Abinash Chundar Mazumdar v. Harinath Shaha, cited above, as follows: "Each of these recipients" (in this case there were several female holders in succession)—"of the limited interest has three common characteristics, namely, first, each possesses only a qualified right of alienation; secondly, not one of them can transmit the property to her own heirs as such, but it passes upon her death to the heir for the time being of the last full owner; and thirdly, none of them can," (apart from legal necessity), "alienate the estate absolutely, even with the consent of the next female reversionary heir, for where the next reversionary heir is herself a female who only takes a 'life-estate,' her consent will not bind the next reversioner who takes an absolute estate," for the simple reason that such consent cannot invest the alienation with "a character of greater validity than it would have possessed if it had been made by herself." The 'widow'—(using the expression generally for any limited female holder)—has a qualified power to dispose of her husband's estate—(using the expression 'husband,' again, for a fully capacitated owner)—"the limits of which," it was observed by a Bengal Full Bench in the leading case of Cassecnath Bysack v. Hursoondree Dassee (1), "it is difficult, if not impossible, to define further than by saying that the propriety of any particular exercise of that power must depend upon circumstances under which it is made, and must be consistent with the general principles of the Hindu law regarding such dispositions."

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before NEWBOULD, J. CIV. RULE No. 297 of 1921. MAINADDIN BEPARI and ors. Defendants, Petitioners v. SM. RADHARANI DASSYA, Plaintiff, Opposite Party. The 18th November 1921.

Suit for money—Existing debt whether consideration of a money bond.

In a suit on a bond for the repayment of money alleged to have been paid in cash, the Defendants pleaded that no consideration passed but the bond was executed for the satisfaction of a decree which had already been paid off. The Court below found that the bond was executed in settlement of the said decree and the money only changed hands to make the sureties liable:

Held—That there was no such variation between the pleadings and the findings as would justify the dismissal of the suit, having regard to the fact that it is customary in India when a bond is given in consideration of an existing debt to describe the consideration as ready money received. *Hukum Chand v. The present unrest, its cause and remedy.

We are glad to note that before long the British Government is likely to come to as satisfactory an arrangement with the Angora and Turkish Governments as has been arrived at with Afghanistan. When we say satisfactory, we mean that the terms of the Sevres Treaty should be so modified as would restore not only friendly relationship between the British Government and the Mahomedan powers concerned but would restore confidence and goodwill towards the British Government in the minds of our Mahomedan fellow subjects. The present Indian unrest is very largely due to the chagrin of the followers of Islam at the disintegration of the Turkish Empire that followed the great European War. But Egypt is now on a fair way to regain her independence. There is also every prospect of the British Government arriving at a perfectly satisfactory settlement with regard to the Turkish treaty. In that event, we anticipate, that the present unrest amongst our Mahomedan fellow subjects will cease. They do not seem to be very keen about the swaraj movement in India. They are still too much engrossed in their own communal integrity to look with equanimity on any democratic form of Government which would level down all distinctions based on class, communal or sectarian basis. Before we can establish a thoroughly democratic form of government, we must inculcate the democratic spirit amongst the different sections of the community. So far as our Moslem brethren are concerned they are thoroughly democratic in their spirit so far as their own community is concerned. But they have yet to acquire the same spirit outside their communal life. We are far from saying that the Hindus are quite free from such a spirit. But it must be said on their behalf that although more exclusive in their social and religious life, they have through superior education acquired more liberal views with regard to civic life and so are less influenced by communal interests in their political ideals and aspirations. The root cause of the present Mahomedan unrest is more religious than political. When the former is allayed, as we expect it will be by British diplomacy at no distant date, our Mahomedan brethren in India will be less keen about securing self-government or swaraj. In such circumstances a great deal of educational work amongst the people, both political and general must precede before we can establish self-government in its truest sense in this country. The forces of disorder would only retard our progress.

We do not understand what advantage is to be gained by letting loose the forces of disorder amongst us. Swaraj or full self-government cannot, surely, be obtained by promoting ill-will or feelings of enmity between the different sections of the community in India. Any form of national Government must be based on national good-will. The Indian nationality does not comprise people of any particular religion, sect, creed or coterie but to be worthy of its name, it must comprise all and all of them must regard India as their common motherland and must be prepared to sink their differences for her common weal. Difference of views amongst different classes of people is bound to exist in a progressive community. The higher they are in the scale of civilization, they settle these differences by appeal to reason, and the lower they are, they resort to argumentum ad hominem. Even civilized people may at times be unreasonable and then force may have to be resorted to for vindication of one's right and liberties. Even when nations fall out and decide to settle their differences by resort to force they weigh their relative strength very carefully beforehand, also the pros and cons of such methods of settlement and would not have recourse to force except when they have exhausted all other methods of amicable settlement. After the bitter lessons of the last war, all the great powers are busy devising means for the maintenance of peace without resort to arms.

We are sorry that the present national movement is drifting towards the rousing of passions and prejudices of the people against those who happen to differ from them as also against the constituted authority. Their attention has been diverted altogether from the reformed constitution. We never come across any criticism of its defects and short-comings as may have been disclosed in its practical working. Those who have studied the reformed constitution are well aware that it has conferred very large powers on the representatives of the people. They have furnished a platform for fighting the people's battle in a peaceful manner. If control can be secured over the reserved subject, it is bound to lead on to the attainment of swaraj. It is a law of nature that forces follow the path of least resistance. This is equally true of human actions. No sensible man will prefer a perilous path which is beset with pit-falls at every step to one attended with less risk. There are two paths by which swaraj may be attained. Either by steady progress along constitutional lines or by resort to revolutionary methods. The latter is the more risky, uncertain and leads on to a chaotic end. Every Government worthy of its name is for this reason alone, if for no other, bound to combat every revolutionary movement. It is a fundamental principle of constitutional law that all manifestations of physical force against the State must be repelled by force. We believe that the progress of India will be indefinitely postponed by calling into being forces of destruction. A nation can only be great by bringing into play its forces of construction. It is not by rousing blind passions and prejudices but by appealing to the eternal moral laws and by patient industry, hard work, devotion, and knowledge that we can work out our salvation.

The Anglo-Afghan treaty.

It is gratifying to note that a satisfactory arrangement with Afghanistan has at last been come to. It is real statesmanship and sound foreign policy to maintain friendly relations with a neighbouring State and the Government of India is to be congratulated on this diplomatic success which fittingly marks the administration of one who has acquired a world-wide fame by his diplomatic services during the Great War. Looking at it from the point of view of the Afghan Government the record of its development is unique. The installation of Amir Abdur Rahman by the British is not a matter of ancient history and it was only in the reign of the late King Edward VII that the Amir of Afghanistan was recognised as a King and was designated His Majesty. After the Dane Mission the ruler of Afghanistan gained in status and His Afghan Majesty has advanced his status to that of an international sovereign on the present occasion. The enemies of law and order perhaps built many a fond hope on the possible breakdown in the long protracted negotiations now brought to a successful termination, to the satisfaction of both parties primarily concerned. The menace to India by the contemplated establishment of Soviet consulates in important places on the border line has been swept away by the assurances given by the Afghan Government. In the treaty itself provision is made for establishment of British consulates in Kandahar and Jelalabad. It can fairly be expected that the renewal of the traditional friendship between the two countries will be conducive to the welfare of both. The agencies which tried to seduce Afghanistan away from the path it has so long followed in its dealings with the British Government must have now realised to their discomfiture that the shrewd Afghan people have intelligence enough to see through the game. By the treaty just now concluded the British Government agrees that a Minister from His Majesty the Amir of Afghanistan shall be received at the Royal Court of London, like the envoys of all other powers and permits the establishment of an Afghan Legation in London and the Government of Afghanistan likewise agrees to receive in Kabul a Minister from His Britannic Majesty, the Emperor of India and to permit the establishment of a British Legation at Kabul. This will now enable the Amir of Afghanistan to occupy the place he desires to hold among the rulers of the world.

The treaty further provides for the carrying on of trade between Afghanistan and India on a sound basis and as regards the frontier tribes it is stipulated that the parties to the treaty will inform each other in future of any military operation of major importance which may appear necessary for the maintenance of peace and order before the commencement of such operations. The treaty is drafted throughout in a spirit of cordiality and solicitude for the welfare of both parties concerned. It is no doubt a tremendous blow to the revolutionary movement in Central Asia and with His Excellency the Viceroy at the helm of foreign affairs, we hope that it will mark an era of renewed and ever increasing friendship between Afghanistan and Great Britain to the mutual advantage of both.

From Bengal.

K. S. BONNERJI

v.

SITANATH DAS & ANOR.

Appeal allowed.

The first case was noted last week. The case of Pandurang Krishnanji v. Markandeya Tukaram & ors., was a claim to recover possession of land. The Plaintiff was the purchaser and his claim was resisted on the ground, that his Vendor had no title. The facts are briefly as follows:—

The members of a joint Hindu family had agreed that P. should be manager of certain family property on the terms contained in a registered deed. The deed provided that, if there were losses on the property, and if the other co-sharers failed to pay on demand their proportion of the losses, they should be held under the deed to have lost their shares. Losses occurred and the co-sharers K. & V. failed to pay up and passed a letter to P. acknowledging their inability to pay. The letter was not registered—K. & V. later purported to sell their shares to the predecessor in title of the Plaintiff.

The District Judge dismissed the suit, but this judgment was reversed on appeal by the Judicial Commissioner. It was argued for the Appellant that P. obtained his title from the registered deed. For the Respondent the arguments taken in the lower Court were advanced, namely, (1) that P's title could only come from the letter, this was invalid as not being registered and (2) that P. having attested the sale deed of the Plaintiff's predecessor was estopped from denying the latter's title.

The judgment of the Board consisting of Lords Buckmaster & Carson, Sir J. Edge, & Sir Lawrence Jenkins, was delivered by Lord Buckmaster allowing the appeal. The Board pointed out that mere attestation of a deed did not imply any knowledge of its contents and could not raise an estoppel as suggested by the Court below.

The appeal from Patna, Sasiram Chowdhurain v. Shib Narayan Chowdhury, raises very much the same point over the construction of a will as was raised in the case of Bhaidas Shirdas v. Bai Gulab & anr., which was decided by the Board last week. Their Lordships after hearing arguments have reserved judgment.

Judgment was delivered to-day (November 1st) in the case of K. S. Bonnerji v. Sitanath Das & Anor.

In this case property at Tallah was settled by Padmabati on herself and her eldest son Protap Chandra Ghosha upon trust for certain religious purposes.

Bhupendra Shri Ghosha, Protap's son purporting to act on behalf of his father executed a permanent lease in favour of the Respondents. Bhupen's authority to make the lease was called in question in the appeal and the Board in giving judgment for the Appellant, who was Receiver in charge of the property, held that Bhupen could not have had such authority, and that even if such authority had been proved it would have been a delegation by Protap of his fiduciary powers which was not permissible.

An application was made to the Board this morning in the case of:—

Soni Reddi v. The King-Emperor (Madras) for special leave to appeal against a conviction for murder. In refusing leave Lord Buckmaster said that Criminal appeals to the Board should not be brought on the ground that the evidence could bear a different construction to that placed upon it by the Courts below.

Special leave to appeal was granted by the Board in the case of Ghulam Rasul Khan v. The Secretary of State for India in Council.

The suit was for a declaration that the Plaintiff was a Rajput by caste and as such entitled to hold land. Leave had been refused by the Lahore Court on the ground that the suit was not of the value of Rs. 10,000. For the Applicant it was argued that this was a case in which it was impossible to define in money value the character of the dispute and reference was made to Radhakrishna Ayyar v. Swaminatha Ayyar, L. R. 48 Indian Appeals 31.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 153—District Judge, if has jurisdiction to reverse decision of Munsif empowered under sec. 153, on a point of law—Jurisdiction.

The point for determination in this Rule was whether the District Judge had jurisdiction under sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to reverse the decision of the Munsif empowered under that section on the ground that an error of law had been committed.

Held—That the District Judge had no such jurisdiction, and the decree of the learned District Judge was set aside and that of the Munsif restored.

Held, further—That the powers of revision under the proviso to sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act are practically the same as those contained in sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Charge under sec. 379, Indian Penal Code failing, accused convicted under sec. 457—Amendment of charge if necessary.

The accused Petitioner was tried on a charge of breaking open the khirki door of the complainant to commit theft of property when he was caught, red-handed. The trying magistrate and the Appellate Court both held that the prosecution had failed to establish that theft was the object with which the accused entered into complainant's house. They both held that he came to complainant's house to carry on an intrigue with his wife and convicted him under sec. 456, I. P. C.

Held—That when a charge had been definitely framed in which theft was alleged the accused could not be convicted of house trespass with some other object without an amendment of the original charge unless the Court was satisfied that he had not been prejudiced in his defence by the omission to amend the charge 16 C. W. N. 606 and 41 Cal. 743 followed. There is no finding by the Courts below on this point.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Sex disqualification for the Bar in India.

The application of Miss Sudhangsu Baia Hazra, B. L., in the Patna High Court for permission to practise as a lawyer was rejected by the Hon'ble Judges on the 28th of November last. Their Lordships in rejecting the application followed the reasoning and decision of the Calcutta High Court in a similar application by the late Miss Regina Guha reported in 21 C. W. N. 74.

Women and the Bar in England.

Since the sex disqualification for the legal profession has been removed in England, women in England have been distinguishing themselves at the Bar examinations. We note that seven ladies gained a first class at the recent Michaelmas examinations, one in the Final, one in Constitutional Law and Legal History and five in Criminal Law and Procedure. The examination results also show that not only in qualitative but also in quantitative test they have scored a fairer success than even men. Altogether 29 ladies succeeded at the various stages of the Bar examination; four in the Final, ten in Criminal Law and Procedure, six in Real Property and Conveyancing, five in Constitutional Law and Legal History and four in Roman Law.

Miss Ivy Williams who is the first woman who has taken first class honours at the Bar Final was also the first to obtain the B. A. degree at Oxford. Ladies were allowed to sit for and pass the University examinations at Oxford but it is only recently that the University has decided to confer degrees to women. At Cambridge they are not admitted to degrees. Oxford, though believed to be more conservative, keeps herself more abreast of the times. Miss Ivy Williams has also obtained the master's degree and the B. C. J. from there. Although this lady has passed her Bar final, she does not get called to the Bar before April next as she has yet to keep four more terms of which two will be excused for having taken first class honours. In Ireland, the ladies have forestalled their English sisters. Three lady graduates of the Dublin University have already been admitted to the Irish Bar after passing the Bar examination. Miss Frances Christian Kyle of Belfast has carried off the John Brook Scholarship, which is the highest award in law, after beating all her male competitors.

In intellectual qualities, especially in their youth, women are in no way inferior to men and are perhaps quicker in acquiring knowledge than men. But in the race of life they are apt to lag behind. It is because they are differently constituted by nature and are hampered by encumbrances from which men are free. In America women have long enjoyed the privilege of practising at the Bar, but the Bar in America is certainly not crowded by women. We understand from our contemporary of the English Law Journal that Miss Ivy Williams who won such high distinction at the Michaelmas examinations has announced that she does not intend to practise at the Bar, but desires to fill the role of a law lecturer at one of the Universities. This would surely be a more congenial occupation for a lady lawyer. Of the rest we are sure many of them would much more prefer to enter into legal partnerships of a more congenial character, whether with lawyer or layman, than the profession of law can ever offer to a feminine soul.

Secretary of State v. Rajah of Vizianagram and Venkata Row v. Tuljaram Row & others.

Both were appeals from Madras—

The former (Secretary of State v. Rajah of Vizianagram) is a most important case, and the Board have reversed the judgment of the Court below. The facts are comparatively simple, and relate to an alluvial formation which appeared in the River Godavari. A portion of the land formed in this manner was claimed by the Government, the Rajah refused to admit the claim, and Government thereupon imposed a penal assessment on the property and the Rajah brought his suit asking for a declaration of his title to the alluvial land. Both the Madras Courts had found in favour of the Plaintiff on the ground that the land in suit was an accretion to the Plaintiff's pre-existing lands.

For the Government it was argued inter alia that the formation of the land was not "gradual, slow, and imperceptible," so as to bring it under the English law of accretion, and that the lower Courts were not justified in adopting American principles as the basis of their decision.

The case of Venkata Row v. Tuljaram Row & others, raises a question of Hindu law relating to the rights of after-born sons of a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law. Venkata Row, the grand-father of the present Appellant and his four sons formed a joint Hindu family. Venkata Row died in 1871 and his sons survived him. In 1881 there was a dissolution of the joint family, and a division of part of the joint estate leaving the bulk of it undivided and in the hands of Tuljaram Row who was the Manager of the family. In 1897 under a decree for partition of the family property Tuljaram was liable to his brother Rajaram Row and the son of the latter (viz. the Plaintiff-Appellant Venkata Row alias Ganesha Row) in a sum of Rs. 86,000 and cross-appeals were pending against that decree. Rajaram, who was the guardian ad litem of his son, entered, without the leave of the Court, into an arrangement of compromise in pursuance of which he entered up satisfaction of the said amount due from Tuljaram and the latter withdrew his appeal. The son Venkata when he came of age repudiated the compromise and instituted the present suit against his uncle Tuljaram joining Rajaram as a Defendant. He stated the relevant facts in his plaint and prayed for a decree for the said sum of Rs. 86,000 and interest.

In 1913 the Judicial Committee held that the said compromise was not binding on Venkata and remitted the suit to the Madras High Court for the disposal of other questions arising between the parties. That judgment is reported in L. R. 40 I. A. 132.

When the suit came on remand to the High Court, two after-born sons of Rajaram, aged 6 and 3 years respectively, were added, represented by their father as guardian ad litem, and put forward their rights as co-parceners in the fund in dispute.

The judgment of the Board composed of LORDS BUCKMASTER, CARSON, SIR JOHN EDGE, SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS and MR. AMEER ALI was delivered by Lord Buckmaster at the conclusion of the arguments. They held that the compromise was not binding on any of the parties but had failed altogether, that Tuljaram could go on with his appeal, and the cross-appeals might be prosecuted. It had been argued for Tuljaram that although the Privy Council had held the compromise as not binding on the infant Venkata, yet that Rajaram had bound himself and the after-born children by it.

RIGHT TO PETITION.

The resolution moved in the Council of State by Sir M. B. Dadabhoy of the Central Provinces on the 15th September last to the effect "that this Council be authorised, if necessary, by statute to receive from the public, petitions on all matters relating to public wrong, grievance or disability or to any act or acts of public servants or to public policy, to investigate that complaint and make a report to this Council and that a Committee be constituted on public petitions with power to examine witnesses and record evidence," raises a question of considerable constitutional importance. In resisting it, Mr. Craik put the Government case fairly and squarely but stated that they were prepared to refer the question to a small committee of experts. Sir B. C. Mitter's opposition went upon historical grounds only, and not upon legal grounds nor upon grounds of practical politics though we had a right to know the views of perhaps the ablest lawyer in the Council on this supremely important question. Such being the case, it is necessary that, the question should be considered in the light of constitutional law and procedure which it was the object of the resolution to establish.

Sir Maneckjee's resolution meant to introduce an almost effete and obsolete principle of English Constitutional law into Indian parliamentary procedure that is in the making. He, however, erred upon the vital point in that he moved for "this Council," namely, the Council of State to be invested with the authority. If it is our intention to follow closely upon the heels of English constitutional principles the error appears to reside in the fact that the Council of State, which admittedly is no more than a revising Chamber, like the House of Lords, should be invested with an authority which legitimately belongs to the popular House, and which the Peer's Chamber at no period of its long history possessed even in a shadowy form, to the exclusion of the Lower Chamber. Sir Maneckjee's resolution suffered from this fundamental defect. But a still greater blunder appears to lie on the face of the resolution which purported to recognise the right to petition without recognising the right of assembly. These two are inseparable under the English law, the basic principles of which do not permit any abridgment of the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. Two rights are protected by this provision: the right of the people to assemble themselves together, and the right of petition.

When the term the people is made use of in constitutional law or discussions, it is often the case that those only are intended who have a share in the Government through being clothed with popular elective franchise. Thus, the people elect delegates to a constitutional convention, and determine by their votes whether the completed work of the convention shall or shall not be adopted; the people choose the officers under the constitution and so on. For these and similar purposes the electors, though constituting but a small minority of the whole body of the community, nevertheless act for all, and as being for the time the representatives of sovereignty, they are considered and spoken of as the sovereign people. But in all the enumerations and guarantees of rights the whole people are intended, because the rights of all are equal, and are meant to be equally protected. In this case therefore, the right to assemble is preserved to all the people.

The right of assembly, however, always was, and still is, subject to reasonable regulation by law. Parliament has sometimes been compelled to interpose strict regulations, when a great and tumultuous body of people threatened to appear at its doors to present a demand for a change in the law.

The right of petition though inseparable from, is not co-extensive with the right to assemble; for in its nature it can have no place in merely social affairs, though it has a limited range in religious and industrial organisations. Petition is for the redress or prevention of grievances, and is addressed to some person or body having, in respect of the matter in hand, superior authority. It is a generic term, however, and applies to all recommendations to office or public position or privilege, as well as to remonstrances against them, and to appeals of every sort, and for every purpose, made to the judgment, discretion, or favour of the person or body having authority in the premises.

A petition is, nevertheless, merely a privileged publication, and the right to be heard by means of it may be so abused as to take away the privilege. One must not resort to it for the purpose of visiting his malice upon others, through the publication of false charges; but when the occasion is proper for petition, good motives in presenting it will be presumed, and the fact that it contains false and injurious aspersions of character will not make out a right of action, but malice in the Petitioner must be established also. The petition must be for something within the authority of the person or body addressed to grant, or must in good faith be supposed to be; and when it is, it will be protected while circulating for signatures as well as after it has been presented. But if a false charge is merely put in the form of a petition, without the intent to present it, it is not within the privilege.

So much about the principle of the right of petition but the right of the Commons to receive petitions is as old as Edward II. "The Commons first of all demand to be informed of the petitions that flowed in from the most various sources" writes Professor Gneist. And again "as early as 3 Edward II. we meet with 'receivers of petitions' also in the Commons. After the manner of the Magnum Concillum, in 12 Edward III, there was also conceded them a share in the appointment of the reporters, although they have no right of decision and no participation in the resolutions of the Great Council. Their altered position became also gradually apparent in the phraseology of the time." For we see that under Richard II, the humbles pauvres communes were called the right wise, "right honourable, worthy and discreet Commons" and the Petitioners came to address their requests to "the Right Honourable the House of Commons" itself. But it is not really till the succeeding reign of Henry IV, that we have the custom of presenting petitions to the Commons House direct, firmly established, even though they are directed sometimes to the King, sometimes to the King in Council, sometimes to the King, Lords and Commons, at times to the Lords and Commons but more often to the Commons alone with the request "to use their good offices with the King and Council." Prof. Gneist elsewhere, in discussing the right of the Commons to receive and entertain petitions direct, observes that "the answer to the complaints was generally made known at the close of the proceedings, that is, after the votes of money supplies." To those who are acquainted with British constitutional principles and practice, it is a conclusive evidence of the fact that the right to entertain petitions belongs exclusively to the Commons.

FAMOUS ADVOCATES AND THEIR SPEECHES.
By B. W. Kelly, Messrs. Sweet and Maxwell, Ltd. London.

The Bar in England has played no small part in building up the noble edifice of personal liberty and constitutional freedom which has been the model of the civilized world. The constitutional battles at which the Bar scored such singular victories all raged round the law Courts since the peaceful revolution of 1688. It was only in 1695 that persons accused of high treason were first allowed to be defended by counsel. Be it at treason or state trials, the attitude of even eminent counsel was then apologetic, necessarily to the prejudice of the accused. It was almost a century afterwards on the eve of the American war of Independence and the French Revolution that the struggle for constitutional liberty in England also began. During the reign of terror in France the Government in England through panic decided to prosecute some of the English sympathisers of the French Revolution. Many eminent persons known as "Friends of the People" were arrested. Charges of high treason were brought against Thomas Hardy, Horne Tooke and ten other persons. The Attorney-General, Sir John Scott (afterwards Lord Eldon) in an address for nine hours decried much that told most seriously against Thomas Hardy. Thomas Erskine, who has been rightly called the Demosthenes of the English Bar, defended the prisoners. "Himself of noble extraction—son of the tenth Earl of Buchan—his early years had been spent as an officer in the Navy and afterwards in the Army as a preliminary to assuming the forensic toga." His speech in defence of Hardy, as is the case with the most effective orators, combined the hard logic of facts with close reasoning and force and elegance of language seldom surpassed in the annals of advocacy. He convinced the Court and the jury that the opinions of the accused, however objectionable they might be regarded by the authorities, were all directed towards bringing about reforms in the constitution and not revolution. Hardy was acquitted amidst transports of tumultuous joy. His counsel became the idol of people. But Erskine was no demagogue. After this historic victory within the precincts of the law Courts, he felt that its glory would be gone if it was followed by any public disorder outside. He came out of Court and, in an impassioned address to the seething multitude who had besieged the Courts, reminded them that the laws of England were, after all, the best guardians of public liberty and that any outrage or unseemly demonstration on the occasion could only terminate in throwing discredit on a righteous cause. The appreciative crowd soon melted away and Old Bailey, where the trial had taken place, soon became deserted. This short account of the memorable trial we have culled from the pages of this very interesting and instructive little book. The biographical sketches of the stalwarts of the English Bar as also the extracts from their speeches given in this volume are very pleasant reading. Lord Thurlow, the Great Chancellor, of whom Fox said "no one ever was as wise as Thurlow looked," who used to browbeat the Lords and Bishops, was the most potent force in the council of George III. How eventually this Goliath of the Bar met his David in youthful Pitt, the "heaven born" Minister, is depicted in its true light both in the pictorial and biographical sketch given in this volume. How the passion for distributing patronage by the talented Lord Westbury amongst his own favourites contributed to his ultimate downfall is not without its morals even to-day. The remarkable career of Daniel O'Connell, the Tribune of the Irish people, both at the Bar and in public life, is very sympathetically reviewed. The book is of fascinating interest and both the busy practitioner and the student will find in its pages enjoyment and inspiration.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Lord Sinha's retirement.

It is very unfortunate that Lord Sinha had to retire from the Governorship of Behar and Orissa owing to a break-down in his health brought about by the strains of his office. Amongst Indians as also amongst the members of the legal profession in this country he was the first to be appointed to such a high office under the British rule. Even in the Dominions and the self-governing Colonies it is contrary to practice to appoint any native of such Colonies to provincial Governorships. But during the better part of the Mogul rule all high offices, be it civil or military, were open to Hindus and Mahomedans alike. So Lord Sinha's appointment was quite in accordance with pre-British precedents. Lord Sinha's career has been conspicuous for his being singled out as the first recipient of every high office that has for the first time been thrown open to an Indian. Lord Sinha had a very successful career at the Bar. He has excellent qualities both of the heart and mind and has always been a thorough gentleman. But he has seldom taken any active interest in politics and a political career was practically thrust upon him by Government. So in every high office he has filled, he has felt somewhat out of his element. He has not been wanting in tact and judgment but the constant strain and tension of the head of a provincial executive especially in the present troublesome times brought on nervous prostration. He is not unique in this respect. President Wilson, a great scholar and a life-long politician also broke down from the strains of after-war peace negotiations in his attempt to reconcile the views of the European Allies with those of his own country-men. We hope Lord Sinha will soon be restored to health and we wish him a long and a happy life.

Political trial and trials in Camera.

We have never been in love with repressive laws. We have always expressed the view that putting such laws into operation precipitates the mischief which they are intended to suppress. So long as force is not used, it is always wise to allow the people to give free vent to their opinions and feelings. We consider it very unfortunate that arrests should have been made on such a large scale amongst men who had been going about wearing or selling homespun cloth, even if some amongst them asked people to close their shops on the next Christmas Eve. If these people had been left alone and the Government had confined its activities to taking only precautionary measures, no shopkeeper with the prospect of making a brisk business on that day would have taken serious notice of any such request. But the arrests have had the very contrary effect. From the newspaper reports we gather that these men have not only not used any violence but have not even suggested by words or conduct any use of force. Many of them are not members of any organisation which have been proclaimed under Part II of the Criminal Law Amendment Act. We and the public are absolutely in the dark on what evidence, under what procedure and provisions of the law, the persons arrested are being convicted and sentenced to long terms of imprisonment.

We do not understand why the trial of these men are being held in camera and in jails. It is reported to us that even lawyers interested in the trial of such prisoners are unable to get any information about the place and time of their trial. May we ask if this is how the police, the magistracy and the local Government are displaying their regard for the often repeated announcement of the Viceroy that justice shall be the watch-word of his policy in India? We fail to understand also why the trial of Mr. J. L. Banerjee for sedition in the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta was held in camera. The Court was not invested by crowds, there was no disturbance or demonstration during the trial and we can find no justification for holding the trial in camera. It is of the greatest importance that state trials should not be held in camera and Star Chamber procedure followed in the trial of political prisoners in India so late in the day. The Government of this country are surely aware that only cases of incest are heard in camera in England. The Presidency Magistrate will do well to look up the dictum of Lord Shaw with regard to trials in camera and hold trials before the public gaze and in broad day-light. We earnestly invite the attention of the Government and the High Court to this question of supreme constitutional importance.

Free State of Ireland.

We are glad to note that the Irish question has after all been settled to the mutual satisfaction of the Sinn Féin party and the British Government. Ireland is henceforth to be known as the Irish Free State and is to have the constitutional status of a Dominion. Ireland is to have her own Parliament with full powers of making laws for the peace, order and good government of Ireland. The position of the Irish Free State in relation to the Imperial Parliament is to be similar to that of the Dominion of Canada and the representative of the British Crown in Ireland is to be appointed in the same manner as the Governor-General of Canada. The members of the Irish Parliament are to take oath of true faith and allegiance to the constitution of the Irish Free State and solemnly swear to be faithful to H. M. King George V, His Heirs and Successors and acknowledge the common citizenship of Ireland with Great Britain in the British Commonwealth of Nations. The Ulster Parliament is to be given a month's time after the ratification of the above terms to decide whether she desires to be excluded. If she does, the constitution and powers of the Ulster Parliament is to continue as at present and then the frontiers of North and South Ireland are to be demarcated by a special commission. It is, however, hoped that the North and South will both be included in the new Irish Free State. Then it will be seen that Ireland after fighting for freedom for centuries has accepted the Dominion status within the British Commonwealth. It has secured for Ireland perfect freedom with regard to her own affairs and has given her the security of being a member of a Federated British Empire. This leads us to a hope that India may at no very distant date secure a similar status by quite constitutional means.

RIGHT TO PETITION.

On the same principle the Canadian House of Commons has adopted the right to entertain petitions to the exclusion of the Senate. Commons Standing Order 19 under the British North America Act 1867, lays down the routine of business (in the Commons) to be (1) Presenting petitions, (2) Reading and receiving petitions, (3) Presenting reports by Standing and Select Committees and (4) Motions. After the routine business come questions, notices of Motions, Private Bills, Government Orders, and Public Bills but the order in which these matters are taken varies.

In the beginning of the last century all petitions had to be read to the House by the members presenting them, giving rise often to lengthy and sometimes to endless discussions. The result was a huge waste of time and the fear of frequent arrivals at Westminster of large bodies of Petitioners. The inconvenience to the progress of public business felt was great. These huge gatherings sometimes led to riots. The entrance of the House of Commons was completely blocked by a great crowd of women in 1641. Immortalised by Butler in his "Hudibras"

"The oyster women locked their fish up "And trudged away to cry 'No Bishop'!". They were led by a certain Mrs. Anne Stagg, a gentlewoman and Brewer's wife, and their object was to present a petition directed against the Popish bishops. They were spoken fair and sent away by the Sergeant of the Parliamentary Guard. Two years later a large crowd of "mean women" wearing white ribbons in their hats invaded Westminster with another petition, crying out "Peace! Peace! Give us those traitors that are against peace that we may tear them to pieces! Give us the dog Pym!" The conduct of these women became so violent that to maintain peace the king's infantry had to be called out and order to fire on the mob had eventually to be given in justification of which a contemporary historian states that "when the gentle sex can so flagrantly renounce their character, and make such formidable attacks on the men, they certainly forfeit the polite treatment due to them as women." Evidently the "gentle sex" forgot themselves but their forgetfulness cost them several lives. In still more recent times female deputations in favour of Women's Suffrage, accompanied by a mob of inquisitive sight-seers and a section of the criminal classes, had besieged the Palace of Westminster in a vain attempt to gain admittance to the House of Commons. Half a century ago a mob of match makers marched to Westminster to protest against a tax on matches but were dispersed by the Police—rather a gloomy outlook for Mr. Hailey when he was holding forth his Budget at Delhi last March. But all these in spite of the One Mile Act of George III under the provisions of which no assembly of Petitioners or public meeting can be permitted within a mile of the Palace of Westminster.

Let us examine for a moment how petitions are dealt with by the House of Commons itself. They are dealt with in a summary manner which does not admit of any time being wasted. The House of Commons allows no debate to be raised on the subject of petitions and the mode of their presentation which is nothing but rigorously formal has given place to a more satisfactory, if somewhat perfunctory, procedure in dealing with them. This is best recorded by Harry Graham, a most popular exponent of Parliament at work. "Behind the Speaker's Chair," writes the historian, "hangs a large bag. In this a petition may be placed, at any time during a sitting, by the member in charge of it. Thence it is sent to the Committee on Public Petitions, and presumably never heard of again. Petitions sometime contain so many signatures, and are consequently so bulky, that no earthly bag could possibly contain them. In 1890, for instance, a petition eight miles in length, in favour of Local Taxation Bill, was presented to Parliament, and in 1908 another, almost as voluminous, provided a material protest against the Licensing Bill. Petition of such properties are carried into the House on the shoulders of stout officials, and, after reposing for a brief space upon the floor, are presently borne away to be no more seen or remembered."

Such are the privileges of the House of Commons under the English constitution as well as under a constitution modelled upon that of England. Must the popular chamber (by that I mean the popular chamber in the making) in India give up a valued right, if it is to be had recourse to at all, in favour of the Council of State, which is admittedly a revising Chamber and by virtue of its composition is likely in times to come to shape its policy not always in sympathy with the more popular and democratic limb of the legislature.

But after all we in India seem to have a sneaking affection for things which are hopelessly out of date in England. There are constitutional difficulties in the way of either House of Legislature entertaining petitions without full responsible Government to which Mr. Craik in his speech in opposition to Sir M. Dadabhoi's motion alluded. Even if we brushed all that aside for the moment the fact remains that in these days of easily accessible Courts of Justice, a free press and a free platform and activities of news-vendors and correspondents, the need of petitions is not nearly as great as when the voice of the people obtained but an inadequate hearing. Newspapers are never known to be reluctant to lend their columns to the ventilation of grievances, personal, communal or national, sometimes real, at others imaginary, and politicians are only too eager to make capital of any individual injustice, oppression and even discourtesy.

LEADING CASES ON THE COMMON LAW. With Notes, explanatory and connective. By the late Ernest Cockle and W. Nembhard Hibbert, LL.D. (Lond.), London: Sweet and Maxwell, Ltd., 3 Chancery Lane, W. C. 2. 1921.

This is a very welcome addition to the Students' Library, and will be greatly appreciated also by the practitioner, because whilst on the one hand it is not too voluminous for the former, it is, on the other, not too brief for use as a book of reference for purposes of practice, at the same time that in the interest of both it more than makes good the claim of the compiler that it presents a systematic view of the whole subject. It naturally covers a fairly wide field. The cases and the connecting and explanatory notes are classified under three heads (I) Law of things, (II) Law of Persons and (III) Conflict of Laws. The first is divided into three sections, viz., Contracts, Torts and Damages in Contracts and Torts. The part dealing with the Law of Persons treats of from the Sovereign down to Trade Unions. The selection of the leading cases and the extracts from the judgments therein appear on the whole to be made with excellent judgment, and the connecting and explanatory notes show careful study and are, what they should be, instructive. It would be obviously unfair to criticise the selection and the notes because they are not at all points what the critic if he had been the author would have liked to embody in the book. For ourselves, we would have liked to see one or two recent cases in which Salto Mayor v. DeBarros, L. R. 3 P. D. 1 has been considered and to a considerable extent modified and these cases should at any rate have been dealt with in the notes. We would also perhaps have liked to put in one or two recent cases on frustration of contracts. But we feel that it would be hypercritical to lay emphasis on these differences in points of view rather than defects in execution and we gladly express our appreciation of the thousand pages of really solid readable matter which has been presented for the benefit of both students and practitioners. In the preface Dr. Hibbert expresses his indebtedness for a considerable amount of material and method to the late Mr. Cockle whose death he rightly laments as a very special loss to the literary branch of the law, whilst he takes full responsibility for the classification of the topics, the notes to the cases and all cases from 1908 onward. Very wisely he has not left doctrines of equity altogether out of consideration where they have materially modified the rules of common law. We think, we can safely assure him that his expectation that the present work will achieve a success equal to Mr. Cockle's "Leading Cases on Evidence" will not be disappointed.

TRIAL OF CASES. By F. B. Taylor: Third Edition; by P. C. Sarkar. Catholic Orphan Press. Rs. 4 annas 8.

The new edition of this useful book is very welcome as there is clearly room for a workman-like guide to the Civil and Criminal Court-work of lawyers and judges. Junior lawyers, after they have been through a course of the theories of law, often feel the need of a book giving the chief points of practice and procedure from a practical point of view; and Magistrates, who, in India, very often come to their duties without previous training in judicial work, feel seriously handicapped by their ignorance of the regular methods of procedure. The little book under review will be of immense help to both these classes of persons. It is a clearly-composed summary from which a man of affairs could get a fair knowledge of the fundamentals of Court procedure. Two new chapters on Criminal Courts have been added in this edition which enhance the usefulness of the book.

GHOSH'S LAWYER'S DIARY FOR 1922. Compiled by J. N. Ghosh and published by Messrs. M. C. Sarkar and sons. Price Re. 1 as. 4.

Ghosh's Diaries hardly need any introduction. They are too well-known to the public. These diaries are published in different varieties. The one that we have before us is generally intended for the legal profession and we have not the slightest doubt that they will be accorded the same treatment this year as in previous years. As usual Mr. Ghosh has spared no pains to make the Diary acceptable to his customers. There is a decided improvement this year in the paper used and a very large amount of valuable information legal and otherwise has been given, so as to make the diary well worth the price.

THE DECENIAL DIGEST OF INDIAN DECISIONS, 1911-1920. By R. Narayanaswami Iyer, B. A. B. L. Vakil High Court. Published by The Madras Law Journal Office, Mylapore, Madras. Volume III.

We had occasion to review the first two volumes of this very useful digest and we have no hesitation in saying that the same standard of efficiency has been fully maintained in the present volume which reaches up to "Light and Air." We expect the early publication of the other volumes.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Proclamation under the Criminal Law Amendment Act and trials thereunder.

We are glad to be able to announce that in pursuance of our representation the Government has given directions that the trials of the volunteers and others charged with sedition and other political offences held in the Presidency Magistrate's Court will be in open Court and not in camera. The members of the Bar and the public may attend the trials up to the limit of the capacity of the Court. Since last Thursday the principle that all trials political or otherwise should be held before the eyes of the public is being observed in the Police Court. We congratulate the Government for directing the attention of the Presidency Magistrate to this matter and also the members of the general public whose conduct in and about the Courts during these trials has been exemplary.

We think that the Government of Bengal have committed a grave error of judgment in bringing into requisition the Criminal Law Amendment Act, Part II, to cope with the present situation. We have always maintained the view that the ordinary law of this country clothes the executive with sufficient power to prevent breaches of the law or order even on extraordinary occasions. We shall illustrate that by a reference to recent events in Calcutta. In justification of the promulgation of the Criminal Law Amendment Act for proscribing volunteer associations as being of an unlawful nature, it has been said that the Khelafat and the Congress Volunteers used intimidation and violence on the 17th of November last in order to close down shops and businesses, and stop all vehicular traffic, and that they did actually resort to force, coercion and threat on those who were of a contrary view and who very legitimately felt that their personal liberties were most unjustifiably interfered with. On the 17th of November last if the rights of such people to transact business or go about freely in their carriages had been interfered with by any individual or body of men, it was quite open to the Government to arrest those persons who resorted to either threat, intimidation, violence, coercion or obstruction and prosecute them and get them punished either under the Police Act or under the Indian Penal Code. If the Government had done that no one could have legitimately brought any charge of oppression and repression against such a course and such action would have been a sufficient warning against its repetition on the 24th December next.

But instead of taking this quite legitimate course under the ordinary law the Government has been so ill-advised as to take action under the Criminal Law Amendment Act. Under this Act it has proclaimed certain volunteer associations as unlawful. Thereupon the leading members of the non-co-operation party in Bengal, evidently by way of protest against the Government proclamation, have taken to enlisting volunteers, enjoining upon them not to resort to violence of any kind. These men, as we have already said, had been going about the streets of Calcutta offering for sale homespun cloth, dressed in similar cloth, and were requesting people quite peacefully not to open their shops on the 24th of December next with a view, when H. R. H. the Prince of Wales arrives in Calcutta, to impress upon the Prince the idea that the people of India are not satisfied with the bureaucratic powers of the executive in this country. We presume that no one will have the hardihood to say that by so doing they have infringed the spirit or even the letter of any law, including the Criminal Law Amendment Act.

We shall take the Criminal Law Amendment Act itself. The object of the Act, as it appears from sec. 15 (2) (a), read with sec. 16, is to empower the Governor-General in Council (now also the Governor in Council) to prescribe unlawful associations. An "unlawful association" in sec. 15 (2) (a) is said to mean "an association which encourages or aids persons to commit acts of violence or intimidation or of which the members habitually commit such act." It is evident that the volunteers as above described cannot possibly come under the above section. Sub-cl. (2) of the above section no doubt says that an association is unlawful if it has been so declared by the Governor-General (or Governor) in Council. Sec. 16 further says that they may declare any association unlawful if they are of opinion that such association "interferes or has for its object interference with the administration of the law or with the maintenance of law or order or that it constitutes a danger to the public peace." It would be too absurd to suppose that the Government may at their pleasure and for no good or sufficient reason declare any association or "body of persons" as unlawful. According to the ordinary canons of construction of statutes, the sections referred to contemplate that the Governor-General or Governor in Council would only be justified in proclaiming an association as unlawful if its object and acts are such as would bring them within the scope and description of sec. 15 (2) (a) and sec. 16. An illustration will make our meaning clear. A Bar Association or a Vakils' Association may displease the executive, and individual member of it may commit, promote, aid or abet breaches of the peace, violence or intimidation. Such individual member may be arrested and punished under the ordinary law but surely that would be no justification for proclaiming such associations unlawful. Similarly with regard to the voluntary associations which have been proclaimed, their avowed object as also the conduct of the persons belonging to such associations have to be taken into consideration and it cannot surely be said that these bodies come within the contemplated scope of sec. 15 or sec. 16. To punish persons simply for being members of such associations with imprisonment or fine under sec. 17 amounts to punishing people not for any offence known to law but at the command of the executive. We publish a letter from a leading member of the Mofussil Bar which will show that the same view prevails all over the country. The Government has blundered and now finds itself in a difficult position. It would be wise to withdraw the proclamation and take to conciliation.

CHAMPERTOUS AGREEMENTS WHETHER SHOULD BE MADE ILLEGAL IN INDIA.

We cannot conceive what really it was that induced Dr. Gour to introduce his bill to amend the Indian Contract Act, which, if passed into law, will make agreements to furnish any information or assistance in consideration of receiving a share in the proceeds of a litigation unenforceable in this country as subject to certain well-defined exceptions, they are in England. Such agreements are called in English legal terminology champertous agreements. A champertous agreement may or may not, as between the parties to it, be unconscionable. If it is unconscionable, it is, under the law now in force in this country, unenforceable not because it is champertous but because it has been induced by means or influences reprobated by the law as embodied in one or other of the relevant sections of the Indian Contract Act. Dr. Gour would apparently go further; he would have all agreements of this description declared illegal merely because they involve a division of the proceeds of litigation between the claimant and a stranger, however just or fair intrinsically they may otherwise be.

But who are the people whom Dr. Gour specially expects to benefit by this law? Not the claimant, if he is poor and unable to meet the expenses of the litigation which he must commence and fight to the finish if he is to have his own—expenses which in existing conditions seldom bear a reasonable proportion to the matter at stake and which tend to increase indefinitely with the means and resources of the opponent. Given therefore a powerful desseisor (and it is but seldom that any other dares to act in violation of other people's rights), the claimant, if he is poor, must seek the assistance of another who has the necessary resources to fight his opponent on more equal terms. We are not aware that this or any other country breeds philanthropists who will lend this assistance without stipulating for a substantial return. Considering the well-known uncertainties of litigation, we shall also not be surprised if the stranger who is induced to risk money on other people's litigations should, in striking his bargain, specially remember the adage: "a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush." But provided it is not an unconscionable bargain, it is to the interest of the claimant that it should be enforced, even if it be a hard one. To make all such bargains unenforceable would be to deprive the claimant of this assistance altogether, and owing to it, of all access to the Courts, to the immense advantage of the dispossessor. The proposed law, if passed, will thus put a premium upon unlawful dispossession of the poor by the rich and upon dishonest denial by the latter of the former's rights. This, we conceive, can hardly be what Dr. Gour is desirous of achieving by his Bill. In Ramcoomar Coondoo v. Chunder Canto Mookerjee, 1 L. R. 2 Cal. 233, the leading case upon the question of the application in India of the law of champerty and maintenance, the Judicial Committee observed: "A fair agreement to supply funds to carry on a suit in consideration of having a share of the property, if recovered, ought not to be regarded as being per se opposed to public policy. Indeed cases may be easily supposed in which it would be in furtherance of right and justice and necessary to resist oppression that a suitor who had a just title to property and no means except the property itself, should be assisted in this manner." What, one wonders, has happened since 1876, to provoke Dr. Gour to fly directly in the face of these very wise observations in a judgment which was delivered by Sir Montague Smith with the concurrence of Sir Barnes Peacock and Sir R.P. Collier?

No doubt, in that judgment, their Lordships observe further that "agreements of this kind ought to be carefully watched, and when found to be extortionate and unconscionable, so as to be inequitable against the party; or to be made, not with the bona fide object of assisting a claim believed to be just, but for improper objects as for the purpose of gambling in litigation, or of injuring or oppressing others by abetting and encouraging unrighteous suits, so as to be contrary to public policy, effect ought not to be given to them." "Gambling in suits" is a figurative expression. If every transaction in which an element of speculation enters is to be stigmatised as gambling, then no agreement to divide the proceeds of a litigation by a stranger with the claimant can possibly escape that designation. Their Lordships, it is therefore clear, did not wish to condemn all gambling in litigation, understood in this sense, but only gambling in unrighteous litigation knowing it to be such. That this was so appears from the judgment of the Judicial Committee delivered by Sir Arthur Wilson in Bhagwat Doyal Singh v. Debi Doyal Sahu, 1 L. R. 35 Cal. 420 (1908). The agreement in question in that case was concurrently declared by the Courts in India to be "one opposed to public policy as fostering and promoting gambling in litigation, and hence void." It is clear from the judgment that, in the opinion of the Judicial Committee in 1908, an agreement, being champertous, which cannot be questioned as champertous, cannot also be questioned on substantially the same ground, by being called a gamble in litigation.

The law as it stands sufficiently protects the person who has made not merely an improvident, but also an unconscionable bargain with the champertor. It was also laid down in Ram Coomar Coondoo's case, following English precedents, that a stranger to the agreement who by reason of it has been subjected to a malicious and causeless action and has suffered damage in consequence has his remedy in an action for damages. We do not really see at what points and in whose interest this law needs further stiffening. Dr. Gour, in his statement of Objects and Reasons, speaks vaguely of "abuses," "the time for checking which is ripe." The time, in our view, is ripe for earnestly appealing to all private members to put a check upon this growing misuse of their privilege, viz., in putting forward proposals for legislation from considerations of a more or less academic character, which cannot even be remotely connected with any of the claimant necessities of the hour, and which needlessly take up the time not merely of the Government and the Legislative Assembly but of the various public bodies to whom they are necessarily referred for opinion.

In his statement of Objects and Reasons, Dr. Gour refers all who may seek to probe beneath the surface of his Bill, to a somewhat lengthy discussion of the topic contained in one of his own books. This discussion does not offer any light on just that one topic which properly illuminated would have enabled his readers to test his Bill. e.g., the history of the law of champerty. The statutes which hit at champerty and maintenance—to the extent indeed of making them indictable offences—originated in the reign of Edward I. In the framing of these statutes, the Commons who had yet to find their feet, could have had no real part or share, and they were laws as the Feudal Barons chose to make them. It was just the time when the high-handed violence of the powerful feudal lords was beginning to be tempered by the skilful utilisation of the law and the law Courts by others less endowed with force than wile. Instead of backing the victims of an obnoxious baron's oppression by armed force, they took to backing them by pecuniary and other aids in the law Courts. The bluff old school of physical force, with their rough and ready methods, very naturally regarded this insidious undermining by the slow processes of law, as a nuisance, and being all-powerful in the Councils of the King, made haste to suppress it by declaring champerty and maintenance to be indictable offences and actionable as civil wrongs. These laws were framed to prevent poor people who had suffered at the hands of the governing class from seeking redress in Courts of Law with the (to them) indispensable aid of strangers. It may interest Dr. Gour to learn that as originally framed, they were understood to exclude lawyers from the precincts of Courts and witnesses from the box. They were impossible laws and were defied with impunity, and became tolerable by reason only of numerous exceptions and qualifications, statutory and otherwise, which nearly ended in eviscerating the law. The criminal law of champerty and maintenance has fallen in England into practical desuetude. No wonder, the Privy Council, with its finer sense of historic perspective wherein Dr. Gour is so entirely lacking, made haste to repudiate the law for India, lock stock and barrel. Why is Dr. Gour so anxious, in this the latter end of 21st year of the Nineteenth Century, A. D., to tie this age-worn Medieval halter round India's neck?

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."
DEAR SIR,

The Governor has been pleased to proclaim the volunteer associations unlawful obviously under cl. (b) (2) of sec. 15 of the Act read with sec. 16. The Governor says that these associations interfere or have for their objects interference with the administration of the law, or with the maintenance of law and order. It is well-known that the Criminal Law Amendment Act was an emergent legislation enacted under extraordinary circumstances for the suppression of associations dangerous to the public peace, as the statement of objects and reasons of the Act will show. The volunteer organisations in the country can by no means be accused of having for their object the commission of any act of violence or intimidation, for this simple reason that their object is exactly the reverse of it, viz., to carry on their propaganda on strictly non-violent lines, by moral persuasion and not by intimidation. If any particular member of the organisation was actually found guilty of any violence (though I think there is no such record) it only showed that that member was guilty of violating the principle enjoined by the leaders of these associations. Particular instances might be dealt with according to the existing laws. If then the object is not the commission of violence or intimidation; is the Governor in Council justified in issuing the proclamation? In other words does the Act authorise the Governor to suppress any association he chooses, if only he dislikes it? The action of the Government has brought on a grave crisis. Is not the time come for persons of all shades of opinion to combine and protest? Will you kindly consider the legal aspect of the question and enter your protest in the columns of the C. W. N. if you agree that the proclamation is unjustifiable.

Yours, etc.,

Member, Mofussil Bar.

POLLOCK AND MULLA'S INDIAN CONTRACT ACT. Student's edition. By Dinshah Fardanji Mulla and J. S. Khergamvalu. Bombay. Messrs. N. M. Tripathi & Co. Book-sellers and Publishers. 1921.

This is an abridged edition of Messrs Pollock and Mulla's Commentary on the Indian Contract Act adapted to the use of students. The increasing bulk of the parent work made it unsuitable for such use. We have no doubt the book will serve the purpose for which it has been prepared. It gives all that a student needs to obtain an insight into the principles of the English law of contract and the manner in which they have been adapted or altered in the Indian Code.

Separation of Judicial and Executive Functions

REPORTS (& Index.)

Separation of Executive and Judicial Functions.

The following communique issued by the Government of India on the 10th of December last, unless explained by reference to the debate on the question in the Legislative Assembly on the 20th of September last, is likely to create a misapprehension in public mind that the Government of India is not favourable to the question of separation of the executive and judicial functions. The communique, we refer to, is in the following terms:—

The Governor General in Council has expressed his inability to accept the resolution of the Legislative Assembly adopted during the last Simla Session regarding the separation of Judicial and Executive functions on the same grounds as stated in the debate by the Home Member in opposing the motion. At the same time he desires to reiterate that if any Province decides on the separation of Judicial and Executive functions and makes proposals to that end, and Government of India will facilitate the passing of such Legislation as may be required for carrying them into effect.

The facts are that Rai Taraprasanna Mukerjee Bahadur moved a resolution recommending the separation and the appointment of a Committee by the Governor-General in Council for preparing a scheme for the purpose. Sir William Vincent while accepting the principle of the separation pointed out that it was for the Provinces who are autonomous in such matters to frame their own scheme and submit it to the Government of India for necessary legislation. Mr. J. Chaudhuri thereupon moved an amendment to the effect that when the Provincial schemes are received the Government of India should appoint a Committee to give effect to the scheme. Sir William Vincent accepted this amendment with the qualification that although the Government of India was quite prepared to undertake the necessary legislation for giving effect to the scheme, yet they were not in a position to assist the Provinces with funds. Mr. Chaudhuri then entered his protest with regard to the financial adjustment between the Imperial and Provincial Governments, and accepting Sir William Vincent's assurance with regard to legislation, he withdrew his amendment to which the House assented without a division. Rai Taraprasanna Mukerjee Bahadur, however, pressed his original resolution to a division and as the first portion of it affirmed the principle of the separation, the majority of the House including the mover of the amendment voted in its favour. But when we look at the debate as a whole we find that the Government accepted the principle of separation and also Mr. Chaudhuri's amendment that when the Provinces submitted schemes for separation the Government of India would come to their assistance for giving legislative effect to it. Thus, it will be seen, that the Government of India communique only follows the net result of the debate and in no way trenches upon the assurance given by the Home member in the course of the debate. A Committee presided over by Mr. Justice Greaves is now sitting to frame a scheme of separation for Bengal. A scheme was presented in our columns (ante, pp. v and vi) for effecting a separation without throwing any additional burden on the provincial finance. The Editor of this journal was examined by the Committee in relation to the scheme.

SEPARATION OF JUDICIAL AND EXECUTIVE FUNCTIONS.

(DEBATE IN THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.)

Rai T. P. Mukerjee Bahadur.—Mr. President, the Resolution which I beg to move before this House runs as follows:—

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that Judicial and Executive functions should be separated and steps should be taken to appoint a committee consisting of officials and non-officials for preparing a scheme for the purpose at an early date.'

The Honourable Sir William Vincent.—This subject is mainly a Provincial subject and we cannot get over that fact. Honourable Members of this Assembly cannot have it both ways; at times they speak of Provincial autonomy in regard to their own Province, but when they want anything done by the Government of India, then all principles of Provincial autonomy vanish, and, as in the present case, the Government of India is asked to interfere in what is definitely a Provincial subject, namely, the administration of justice and land-revenue administration. These are the two branches of administration which are mainly affected by the present proposal. At the same time, this question of separation does also affect the Central Government, and it was for this reason I did not attempt to get the Resolution disallowed, indeed, I am very glad to have this opportunity of stating what the intentions of Government are in regard to this matter. But I can only really repeat to this Assembly what I said last year in the Council of State, namely, that the subject is a Provincial one, but if any Local Government decides to take up the question—and the matter is one for them—the Government of India will proceed to make such legislative changes as may be necessary in order to give effect to the proposals of the Local Government, but we are not prepared to interfere with the discretion of the Local Governments in a matter which is mainly one of Provincial administration.

Now let us look at the position at the present moment. Two Local Governments have already appointed Committees to inquire into this matter, one being the Government of the United Provinces and the other the Government of Bengal. The Committee appointed in Bengal will be presided over by an eminent Judge of the Calcutta High Court. I ask the Assembly, does it now seek to interfere in what is a Provincial subject and thus duplicate the steps already taken by two Provinces to inquire into it and to investigate a matter which will probably be made the subject of inquiry by other Provinces? It would be unreasonable to interfere in the matter. Non-officials have a majority in the Provincial Councils, and they can see to it that the matter is taken up at once. Hitherto, I imagine, the difficulty has been largely a financial one. We have been told, for instance, that in Bengal they have a deficit of 2½ crores, that was the last figure I heard, but I do not know whether it will affect them in taking up this question. In any case, it is not right for this Assembly to be guilty of vicarious generosity and to force Local Governments to take up schemes which they may not have the funds to finance.

Let any Local Government come up and say that they want this change made and we are prepared to do our best to give effect to their recommendations, but we do not want to force our views on them.

In one Province I know the question was considered last year and for good reasons or bad reasons—I was told at the time they were very bad reasons—the proposal was turned down. That was in Madras. All I do want to ask this Assembly to do, is not to ask the Government of India to appoint a Committee on a matter which is already being inquired into by two Provincial Committees which is a Provincial matter and which this Assembly generally ought not really to attempt to control.

* * * * *

Mr. J. Chaudhuri.—Sir, I have given notice of an amendment which will obviate the difficulties that have been pointed out by the Honourable Home Member. May I move it now? My amendment is in the following terms:—

'The Provincial Governments be asked to submit schemes for such separation in their respective Provinces in consultation with the Provincial Legislative Councils, and the schemes when received be submitted to a Committee consisting of Members of the Indian Legislature composed of two-thirds non-official and one-third official members to consider and recommend measures necessary for effecting such separation.'

The object of my amendment is this, that although schemes of separation may be formulated by the Provincial Governments, the Central Government will have to introduce legislation to give effect to them. Besides, that, a scheme that will suit Bengal will not necessarily suit the United Provinces or Sind or Madras or Bombay. So, each Provincial Government should be left to itself to formulate its own scheme, and when those schemes are received by the Government of India, we may have a Committee to consider these schemes and consider what legislation will be necessary for giving effect to these schemes. It may require amendment of the Code of Criminal Procedure and in certain respects the revenue and the civil law as well. I do not wish to go into the history of this question, but I must mention that the Executive Government have opposed this scheme on the ground that it will be found financially to be much too expensive. But we are prepared in Bengal to present a scheme by which we can effect the separation without increasing the expenditure. Since a Committee has been appointed, I am not going to fasten any suggestions of my own on that Committee. I have pointed out that legislation by the Central Government may be necessary, and further, assuming that the giving effect to this scheme involves additional expenditure on any Provincial Government, the question of finding the necessary money for carrying out the reforms will have to be considered between the Provincial Government and the Imperial Government.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent has referred to the particular grievances of Bengal in this respect. We have been running the province with a deficit of $2\frac{1}{2}$ crores. This question may be brought up before this Assembly in another connection, but in passing I must observe that the financial adjustment that has been made by the late Finance Minister of the Government of India with the Provinces is pressing hard against every Province, and it is very unjust to the Provincial Governments. I shall only mention here that we in Bengal are merely revenue farmers on behalf of the Government of India. We raise nearly seven crores on income-tax for the Government of India and we do not get a pice.....

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar.—I rise to a point of order, Sir.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri.—I have only mentioned this point to indicate the injustice of the adjustment. I will not refer to it in detail. But I say this, that even my friend Mr. Rangachariar will admit that it is the unprogressive revenues that have been allotted to the provinces. For instance, we have to rely on land revenue and excise.....

Mr. President.—Order, order. The Honourable Member is breaking his own undertaking.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri.—I was mentioning those facts because occasion may arise when the Provinces may have to come up to the Government of India not only for legislation, but also for helping them with assignments on a more equitable basis for carrying out the necessary reforms. I need not dilate upon the grievances of the Provinces at the present moment. But I invite the attention of the House to them only to show that in this matter the Provinces are not the final authority on this question, and there will soon be occasion for the Provincial Governments to come up to the Government of India not only for legislation, but to appeal to them to come to their rescue with necessary allotment of funds. That is sufficient for me to explain the scope of my amendment. I say in the last part of my amendment: 'to consider and recommend measures necessary for effecting such separation.' Sir, my object 'in placing these facts before this House is that it will be necessary for the Central Government not only to take up the necessary measure of legislation, but it may also be necessary to go into the question of finance. I, therefore, beg to move my amendment, and I am sure that it will meet with the acceptance of this House. The Committee need not be committed to any definite scheme. My amendment is wide enough to meet any contingency that may arise. With these words, Sir, I beg to move my amendment.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent.—I think I can go some way to meet the Honourable Mover of this Amendment, though I cannot by any means accept all the proposals. I think I may guarantee that when proposals for separation are received by the Government of India, we shall be ready to appoint such a Committee as Mr. Chaudhuri proposes to ascertain what would be the best method of giving effect to the proposals. I agree with a great deal of what he said as to conditions varying in different provinces, and it seemed to me that, if that view be accepted, it was a convincing and a very cogent argument against the appointment of an All-India Committee. Surely, if conditions differ in different provinces, then the matter is one for the provinces to consider. I have no doubt also that legislation will be necessary finally and the assistance of members of this Assembly, official and non-official, will be readily accepted by the Government of India in framing that legislation. When, however, the Honourable Member suggests that the Government of India are to make assignments or give doles to the Government of Bengal or any other Government for a purpose of this kind, then I must say quite definitely that I can hold out no hopes of that being done, and indeed I hope that it will never be done, because this system of doles has proved in the past a very evil one.....

Mr. J. Chaudhuri.—I did not expect any dole. I simply suggested :.....

Mr. President.—Order, order.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent.—The Honourable Member did not use the word 'dole,' but he used the word 'assignment:' whatever be his word for monetary assistance, whether it is subsidy, dole, or assignment—none of these things will the Government of India, if I know anything about them, give the Provincial Government of Bengal for carrying out the separation of executive and judicial functions. But if it is a question of appointing such a Committee, as the Honourable member suggests to consider the legislation necessary to give effect to schemes of separation, I think I can meet him. On the other hand, I am not prepared to ask the Local Governments to submit such schemes. Indeed, I think it is really an insult to a large Provincial Government like Bengal, Bombay or the United Provinces, to suggest to them that they have not considered this matter and that we seek to control them in a provincial matter of this kind. As soon as we do get schemes from them, or when we have even two or three schemes, I am quite ready to take steps for the constitution of such a Committee as the Honourable Member proposes.

Dr. H. S. Gour.—I move that the question be now put.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri.—In view of the assurance given by the Honourable Sir William Vincent I do not press my amendment. I only want to correct certain misapprehensions in his mind. I did not say that we want any dole from the Government of India. What I meant was that Lord Meston's assignment as between the Provinces and the Central Government is considered unjust all over India, and the day is not far distant when this Assembly will have to take up the question of a fairer apportionment of the revenues between the Government of India and the Provincial Governments and pass a final judgment on Lord Meston's award. That is all that I meant.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

24-11-21.

The Board suspended the hearing of Indian Appeals during the past week, and it is said that there will be two Courts hearing them next week.

Lords Buckmaster and Carson, with Sir Lawrence Jenkins, Sir John Edge and Mr. Ameer Ali have been sitting to hear most of the Indian Appeals so far.

The following cases have been heard.

(1) Mohammed Hafiz v. Mirza Mohammed Zakariya.

(2) Sabz Ali Khan v. Khair Mohammed Khan.

(3) Naba Kishore Mandal v. Upendra Kishore Mandal.

In the 1st case—A hypothecation bond contained a clause enabling the creditor to sue either for interest alone or for principal and interest. A suit was brought for interest alone and the decree obtained was satisfied. The creditor then brought a further suit for the principal sum and interest accrued since the previous decree. The Board upheld the judgment of the Allahabad High Court, and dismissed the Appeal on the ground that the suit was not maintainable owing to the provisions of Or. II, r. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

2. The parties in the second case are Bugti Bilochis, and the claim by the Plaintiff-Appellant was for possession by pre-emption as a collateral of the alleged vendors of the land in suit.

The suit was decreed by the District Judge of Dera Ghazi Khan. This decree was reversed by the Punjab Chief Court and the Privy Council after hearing an ex parte argument have reserved judgment.

3. In the third case, an Appeal from Bengal, the Board upheld the judgment of N. R. Chatterjee and Smither, J.J., delivered on the 5th August 1918. On the question, whether a Hindu widow was justified in making an alienation.

They held that a permanent lease executed by a Hindu widow had not been shown to be for legal necessity nor for the benefit of the estate, and therefore was not binding on the reversioners. The reversioners were similarly not bound by a sale of certain property which the widow had purported to convey, and which was held to be in reality accretions to her husband's property.

Reserved judgment was delivered by the Board during the week in the case of Nalam Pattabhirama Rao v. Mandavalli Narayana Moorthy allowing an ex parte appeal from Madras.

The suit was brought by the Plaintiff who claimed to have an interest in a Hindu joint family business, alleging that the joint family had agreed to take in as partner the person through whom the Plaintiff was claiming.

The Sub-Judge of Rajahmundry found that the arrangement had not been proved and dismissed the suit.

On appeal to the High Court at Madras this judgment was reversed and the present appeal to His Majesty in Council was lodged by the family and it was allowed.

REPORTS (See Index.)

The late Lord Halsbury.

By the death of the right Hon'ble Lord Halsbury the world has been deprived of one of its greatest lawyers. He could rightly be called the grand old man of law who wonderfully retained his mental powers up to the end which took place at the age of ninety-eight. Age seemed to have no influence on him and he often sat on the bench to help the Judges in cases involving difficult questions of law at an age of life which the average man is seldom found to reach, not to speak of working in any responsible capacity. The decisions of Lord Halsbury which have been regarded as leading cases are very many and confining ourselves to cases from this country, it may not be out of place to mention that it was he who delivered the famous judgment in the case of Subramanya Ayer in which he laid down that the disregard of an express provision of law as to a mode of trial in a criminal case is not a mere irregularity but an illegality vitiating the whole trial.

Lord Halsbury was called to the bar in 1850 and at the time of his death he was perhaps the seniormost lawyer living on the face of the earth.

New year's day honours.

Amongst the recipients of honours on the occasion of the New Year's day we are glad to notice the name of Mr. Justice Richardson on whom a knighthood has been very fittingly conferred. Our heartiest congratulations to his Lordship.

American Colonial Administration.

In the October number of The Journal of Comparative Legislation and International Law, there are two contributions, by José P. Melencio, Esq., (of the Philippine Bar) and R. T. Clark, Esq., respectively, upon "The Constitution of the Philippine Islands" the "The Constitution of Esthonia." Mr. Melencio is not sure that it is correct to talk of a "constitution" of the Philippine Islands, since it is only the expression of the popular will, framed by representatives of the people and deriving its force from the people, that can be properly called the constitution of that people. The term in this sense is more appropriately applicable to the Constitution of Esthonia. The constitution of the Philippine Islands is derived by grant from the United States Congress. "By virtue of the Act of Congress, 29th August 1916," says Mr. Melencio, "the Philippine Government to-day is practically autonomous. Broad powers have been delegated to it by the Congress of the United States. This is in keeping with the intention of the United States to grant independence to the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable Government has been established therein. In fact, the Act is preparatory to the withdrawal of American sovereignty as soon as that stable Government is established." The form of the Government, Mr. Melencio proceeds, "is democratic in the sense that there is a Government by the representatives of the people chosen by the people. It is thus a Government of laws, and not of men. The majority rules, as in the case of the United States. The principle of Governmental division of powers which is characteristic of the United States system is maintained. The separation of powers is complete as in every other Government founded on that principle." The Governmental relationship between the United States and the Philippines, according to Mr. Melencio, is much like that maintained between England and her self-governing Dominions. The control which the former exercises over the latter, he notes, is exercised through five channels: (1) Through the Governor-General, the Executive head appointed by the President of United States. (2) Through the veto power of the Governor-General. (3) Through the veto power of the Congress of the United States. (4) Through the control of foreign relations by the United States, (5) Through the provision for appeal from the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands to the Supreme Court of the United States in certain cases. "With the exception of the third item, substantially the same modes of control are" in Mr. Melencio's opinion, "exercised by Great Britain over the affairs of her dominions."

So far as can be judged from the details which follow this general description, we are unable to see that the former really bear out the latter. The constitution of the Philippine Islands is certainly more advanced than the constitution of the Crown Colonies of the British Dominions, because the Legislature is undoubtedly representative of the people. But it is very far removed indeed from the constitution of the self-governing Dominions, which Mr. Melencio had apparently in mind when he spoke of the control exercised by the United States over the Philippines being substantially the same as that exercised by Great Britain over the affairs of her Dominions. The following passages from Mr. Melencio's article dealing with the "Executive Power" will make this clear. "He (the Governor-General) is granted extraordinary powers in case of rebellion or invasion, and, when the public safety requires it, he may suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus and place the islands or any part of them under martial law. . . . He has the exclusive power to grant pardons and reprieves, and to remit fines and forfeitures. . . . He can veto any legislation enacted by the Philippine Legislature . . . In the exercise of his executive power, he is assisted by six departments and several bureaux of the Philippine Government. . . . Each department is headed by a Secretary assisted by an under-secretary . . . The secretaries of departments, together with the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives constitute the Council of State . . . The Council of State is not a constitutional body, inasmuch as it was created by the executive order of the last Governor-General. Succeeding Governor-Generals are not bound to recognise it. If, however, a Governor desires to form another advisory body, the act would be justified because of precedent." The Philippine Cabinet as Mr. Melencio calls this body, is thus composed virtually of appointees of the Executive and not of the Legislature. It is more like the Executive Councils of the few British Crown Colonies which still possess a representative legislature, but the executive power of which is vested in nominees of the Governor-General or of the Home Government. The form of Government in the Philippines is thus inferior both to the Home Federal Government and the Government of the self-governing Dominions of the British Empire, though it is superior to that of the Crown Colonies of that Empire without representative legislatures.

Upon the character of American Colonial administration it was stated in the Tagore Law Lectures for 1918: "Looking at it from outside, the organisation of the American Colonies appears to be a close copy of that of the Home Federal Administration . . . (But) the fact that the Governor is a person appointed from Washington and so necessarily pledged to carry out the policy of the Home Government, whilst the Legislature which makes laws and votes supplies is freely elected by the people of the localities, makes the administration of the colonies fundamentally different in character from the Home Administration. In fact the United States Colonial Administration is in its essential features similar to that of non-self-governing British Colonies, possessing representative legislatures. To prevent deadlocks, inseparable from such an arrangement, it is generally provided (as in the constitutions of the British Crown Colonies, to which they bear the nearest resemblance) that colonial laws may be vetoed by the Governor and, if passed over his veto, by the President and finally by the Congress (e.g., in the Constitution of the Philippine Islands, as amended in 1916). Acts of Congress, moreover, may and often do impose important limitations on the "legislative power of colonial legislatures" (Ghose's Comparative Administrative Law, p. 271).

No Indian Appeals have been heard during the past week. It is probable that two Boards will sit to hear them next week.

[APPEAL FROM EAST AFRICA.]

Stephens v. Allen.

The Appellants, a firm of builders entered into contracts with a Company. Disputes arose which went to arbitration. The Respondent was retained as Solicitor for the Appellants.

An award was made by the arbitrator in favour of the Appellants but in 1914 this was set aside by the High Court at the instance of the Company on the ground that the agreement to refer to arbitration was not under the Company's seal. In 1916 the Respondent sued the Appellants for Rs. 4,000 odd for professional services rendered. The Appellant paid into Court Rs. 772 for matters for which he admitted liability and denied the balance. The Respondent thereupon under r. 377 of the Rules of Civil Procedure (which seems to resemble very closely Or. XXIV of the Indian Civil Procedure Code) took out the amount paid in and sent a notice to the Registrar that it was accepted in full satisfaction of the claim. The Appellants subsequently filed the present suit against the Respondent claiming damages for his neglect in not seeing that the Company's seal was affixed to the reference to arbitration.

The Appellants contended that since the Respondent had withdrawn the money paid into Court in the former suit he was now estopped from disputing his negligence.

The Board held that the acceptance of the amount under the words of the Rule as satisfaction in full of the Plaintiff's claim did not amount to an admission of the grounds of defence set up by the Defendant and the Defendant was consequently not estopped from raising in the present proceedings the plea that he was guilty of no negligence at all.

With regard to the question of negligence their Lordships held that the local Judges acquainted with local conditions were best able to decide it and they were unwilling to disturb the decision of the lower Court that the Respondent's action was reasonable.

12-12-21.

Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C., instructed by Mr. Delgado applied to the Board for special leave to appeal against a decision of the High Court of Madras in the case of Khan Sahib S. Chinna Saheb v. Markanda Kothan alias Markanda Royan.

In dismissing the application Lord Buckmaster said:—

"Their Lordships have often considered these applications for special leave to appeal, and they have attempted, as far as they can, to lay down something in the nature of a guide to help practitioners in knowing what are the cases which will be properly entertained by the Board. It is not merely because it is a difficult question of law. It must be an important question of law. It must be something more than a question merely affecting the rights between two people. If it is merely that and nothing more, and unless it can be shown that it is such a question that its decision will guide and bind others in their commercial or domestic relations, it really is not a case in which their Lordships would advise His Majesty to interfere."

HINDU LAW. By J. R. Gharpure, B. A., LL.B. Third Edition. Poona. Printed at the Aryabhushan Press. 1921.

This is the third edition of a book originally compiled for the benefit of students preparing for law examinations. As in the case of other similar text books, with every fresh edition there is an increase in bulk resulting from a desire to make it serve the purposes of legal practitioners as well. If this tendency is allowed to take its course, it will before long cease to be a student's book, on account of the mass of details which are being allowed to overlay the discussion of principles. The special features of the book, viz., the map shewing the local extent of the several schools of Hindu law, the notes on the principles of interpretation according to the mimansa and sapinda relationship are maintained in this edition. The book will be useful to both students and practitioners. We notice a curious omission which seems inexcusable. The provisions of the Hindu Disposition of Property Act, XV of 1916, are not noticed at all.

Recent decisions not yet reported

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before CUMING, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2534 of 1919. OSMAN SHEIKH, Plaintiff, Appellant v. FAKIR MAMUD SHEIKH and others, Defendants, Respondents. Heard 23rd November 1921. Judgment 30th November 1921.

Bengal Tenancy Act, sec. 85—Permanent lease, by under-raiyat, if valid.

The suit out of which this appeal arose, was brought by the Appellant for recovery of possession on declaration of his permanent under-raiyati title to the land, the Defendant having wrongfully dispossessed him therefrom. The Plaintiff's case was that he held under a permanent under-raiyati lease granted to him by one Umesh Chackrabarty, who in his turn obtained a similar lease granted to him by one Ellae Sheikh who was a kaimi raiyat of the land; both leases, viz., lease to Umesh and that to the Plaintiff being under-raiyati leases. The question for determination in this appeal was whether the permanent under-raiyati lease granted to the Plaintiff, an under-raiyat, by the under-raiyat Umesh was valid and operative under the provisions of sec. 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act as against the Defendant, a wrong-doer:

Held—Reversing the decision of the lower Appellate Court, that the provisions of sec. 85, Bengal Tenancy Act do not apply to a permanent under-raiyati lease granted by one under-raiyat to another under-raiyat. There is nothing in the Tenancy Act to prevent an under-raiyat sub-letting his land.

Guru Das v. Kali Das, 18 C. W. N. 882 and Parushulla v. Sital, 19 C. W. N. 110, referred to.

Dr. Jaddunath Kanjilal and Mr. Benode Lal Mukherjee for the Appellant.

No one appeared for the Respondents.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before SUHRAWARDY and CUMING, JJ. CIVIL RULE No. 563 OF 1921. HARI CHARAN KORANJAI, Plaintiff, Petitioner v. BAHAR SHEIKH, Defendant, Opposite Party. The 19th December 1921.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 115, and Or. XLI, r. 27—Refusal to admit additional evidence by Appellate Court—High Court, if has jurisdiction to interfere under sec. 115, C. P. C.

The facts material to this report are as follows:—

Plaintiff brought this suit for recovery of money due on two unregistered bonds alleged to have been executed by the Defendant. The Defendant denied the execution of the bonds and pleaded that the suit was the outcome of enmity. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. On appeal by the Defendant the learned Subordinate Judge allowed the appeal and dismissed the Plaintiff's suit. The learned Judge disbelieved the Plaintiff's case and held inter alia that the account books filed by the Plaintiff were not kept in regular course of business and there were entries which disclosed clear evidence of interpolation. On the 20th May 1921 the learned Judge heard the arguments and reserved judgment. On the 23rd May the Plaintiff filed some account books for receiving them in evidence with a view, as was stated, to clear up a misapprehension regarding the account books already exhibited in the case. On the said date the learned Judge refused to admit the account books in evidence, and recorded the following order: "Respondent filed some khatas to-day in order to use them in evidence. No fresh evidence can be taken now. Prayer disallowed. Return the khatas to the Respondent's pleader after taking receipt." On the 27th May, the learned Judge delivered judgment and allowed the appeal. Against that decision, Plaintiff moved the High Court under sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and obtained the present Rule.

The ground urged on behalf of the Petitioner was that the learned Subordinate Judge acted with material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction in refusing to take in evidence the account books filed by him. On behalf of the Opposite Party it was submitted inter alia that under Or. XLI, r. 27 of the Civil Procedure Code, it was entirely in the discretion of the lower Appellate Court to admit additional evidence or not, and in the exercise of its discretion it having refused to admit the additional evidence, the High Court was not competent to interfere in revision under sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the case in I. L. R. 21 Cal. 484 at p. 486 was referred to:

Held—That under Or. XLI, r. 27 of the Civil Procedure Code, the admission of additional evidence was a matter within the discretion of the lower Appellate Court, and the learned Judge in refusing to allow the account books to be put in evidence did not act with material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction, and the case did not come within sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta for the Petitioner.

Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen for the Opposite Party.

Rule discharged with costs.

REPORTS (See Index.)

The Recognition of the Soviet.

In a recent case, A. M. Luthér v. James Sagor & Co., [1921] 3 K. B. 532, which engaged the attention of the Court of Appeal in England for a number of days, the validity of the acts of the Soviet Republic was impugned by the Plaintiffs. The Plaintiffs had a factory or mill in Russia. The Soviet Republic passed a decree in June 1918 confiscating all mechanical sawmills and woodworking establishments. In pursuance of this decree the agents of the Republic seized the Plaintiffs' mill or factory and the stock of manufactured woods therein and purported to sell the quantity in dispute to the Defendants who were in England. In the present action for a declaration that they were entitled to the wood, the Plaintiffs submitted that the so-called Republican Government of Russia had no existence as a Government, that it had never been recognized by His Majesty's Government; and that the seizure of their goods was pure robbery. The Defendants contended that the Republican Government which had passed the decree nationalizing all factories was the de facto Government of Russia at the time, and had been recognized by the British Government as such. Roche, J., found that the British Government had not recognized the Soviet Government as the Government of a sovereign state or power and decreed the suit. Thereupon the Defendants appealed. In two letters dated in April 1921 the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, stated that the British Government recognized the Soviet Government as the de facto Government of Russia and that the British Government also recognized the Provisional Government which was in power from March to December 1917 until dispersed by the Soviet. The Court of Appeal held that the British Government had recognized the Soviet Government as the de facto Government of Russia existing at a date before the confiscatory decree of June 1918 and that the validity of that decree and the sale of the wood could not, therefore, be impugned. The Defendants established a valid title derived from a recognized sovereign state which cannot be questioned in the Court of England. In the result, the judgment of Roche, J., was reversed and the suit dismissed with costs.

Vakils and their Clients—Non-payment of fees—Change of Vakil.

A question of considerable importance to the legal profession in India was recently discussed by a Bench of Judges of the Madras High Court, consisting of the Chief Justice (Sir John Wallis) and Mr. Justice Krishnan. (Vide, Muthu Krishna Yuchundra v. Nuree, I. L. R. 44 Mad. 978). In a probate case instituted on the Original Side of that Court, which had been ordered to be tried as a suit under sec. 85 of Act V of 1881, the caveator had engaged certain Vakils, who unlike those of Calcutta and Bombay are allowed to act as well as plead on the Original Side of the Madras High Court. It appeared that the caveator who had agreed to pay the Vakils the full amount of their fees before written statement was filed, had paid only a portion of it, whereupon the Vakils in question considered themselves justified in refusing to act further on behalf of their client. The latter then engaged another Vakil, who filed a written statement on the last day allowed by the rules, but without the consent of the former Vakils. The written statement was under the rules of the Court returned, because there had been no change of Vakils and the consent of the former Vakils was wanting. The caveator thereupon applied for a change of Vakils, which was ordered on condition of payment of a certain sum of money to the former Vakils. The payment was made. But meanwhile the case had been posted as an undefended suit, and the application of the caveator to the Judge to treat the written statement previously filed as properly presented or if necessary to excuse the delay in presenting it was refused. On appeal by the caveator against this order, the Appellate Bench, constituted as stated above, held that the Vakils whom the caveator had first engaged but had not fully paid were not entitled on that ground to refuse to take a necessary step in the suit and at the same time to refuse their consent to a change of Vakil, and that delay in filing a written statement within the time fixed thereby in consequence of the refusal should be excused.

The Chief Justice in the course of his judgment observed: "Vakils, as regards acting, are very much in the same position as solicitors in England. Now it is, I think, well settled in England that attorneys or solicitors are not entitled to refuse to go on with an action for want of funds, unless they have given their client sufficient notice of their intention to make other arrangements. . . . It is true that on the common law side an attorney could resist a change of attorney unless his costs were paid, by which must be understood his costs for work already done, in the action, not as in the present case an agreed payment towards the general costs of the action. On the equity side a change of solicitors was allowed without insisting on the payment of costs, and this equitable rule has been held to prevail by reason of the provisions of the Judicature Act; but even the common law rule must be read in the light of the other rule already mentioned, that it is the solicitor's duty to go on if put in funds to meet out-of-pocket expenses." His Lordship then went on to observe that "the rules requiring pleadings to be filed promptly were passed to avoid delays in the disposal of the business of the Court and not as a means of enabling practitioners to obtain prompt payment of their fees . . . It is also unnecessary and undesirable that they should be used for such a purpose, as solicitors and vakils are otherwise sufficiently protected. They can insist on payment of their fees in advance, or rely on their lien on the client's papers and on the fruits of the litigation as well as on their right to sue for their fees. They are also in a better position than barristers who cannot sue at all and than first and second grade pleaders who under the Legal Practitioners' Act cannot recover on special agreements unless they are in writing and filed in Court and then only to the extent to which they are reasonable." Krishnan, J., concurring said: "I agree with the learned Chief Justice that the action of the Vakils was not justifiable and that the rules were not intended for the purpose of enabling the Vakils to force their clients to pay their fees at the risk of having their cases dismissed by the Court." The Court's ruling in this case is obviously confined to determining the obligation of the Vakil to continue acting for the client or consent to a change. It does not cover the question of appearance in Court. A Vakil fulfils the functions in part of a solicitor and in part of an advocate, and the rules governing the conduct of either solicitors or counsel in England do not furnish altogether satisfactory precedents to govern the relations of a Vakil to his client. It is a matter which should be taken up by the Vakils themselves with a view to arrive at a solution which will be just to the Vakils without being unfair to the litigants.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The following cases have been argued before the Board during the past week, (Lords Buckmaster, Atkinson, and Carson, Sir Lawrence Jenkins, and Mr. Ameer Ali).

T. B. Ramachandra Rao, Appellant v. A. N. S. Ramachandra Rao, Respondent, on appeal from Madras.

Dec. 8 and 9, 1921.

There are two main questions for determination in this appeal.

(1) Whether a Hindu lady took an absolute or a qualified estate in property given to her by her husband under a deed of gift.

The trial Court held that the deed conferred on her a widow's estate for life, the High Court held that she took an absolute estate.

(2) Whether the principle of "res judicata" was applicable having regard to a judgment of the High Court delivered in appeal in certain Land Acquisition proceedings which contained a finding that only a widow's estate passed.

Both lower Courts held that the principle of "res judicata" applied only to the portion of the property comprised in the Land Acquisition proceedings.

DeGruyther, K. C. and Narasimham on behalf of the Appellant argued that only a life estate passed to the lady and that the principle of "res judicata" applied to the whole of property comprised in the gift.

Dubé for the Respondent was asked to confine his argument to the point of "res judicata" and contended that inasmuch as the earlier Land Acquisition suit was merely a question of compensation any decision therein could not operate as "res judicata."

Their Lordships reserved judgment and informed Mr. Dubé that they would hear his argument on the other point should it be necessary.

The same Board is sitting to hear the case of:—

Ramalinga Annavi v. Narayana Annavi and others and cross appeal.

Dec. 9, 12 and 13, 1921.

These were consolidated appeals from the High Court of Madras in a suit for partition of properties belonging to a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law.

The question for determination is whether certain properties belong to the joint family or to an individual member.

Lord Buckmaster unfortunately became indisposed and was unable to preside over the Board after the first day's hearing.

The following Counsel are engaged:—

Sir George Lowndes, K. C. and Dubé for K. Ramalinga Annavi.

A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for Narayana Annavi.

DeGruyther, K. C., Narasimham and Parikh appear for other interested parties.

The argument is expected to continue for another two days.

There now remain only four Indian cases in the list and it is anticipated that the Board will sit until December 21st.

An important case on appeal from Madras was argued before a Board consisting of Lords Summer Wrenbury and Carson during last week by:—

DeGruyther, K. C. and Harold Morris, K. C.—Ex parte.

L. Oppenheim & Co. v. Hajee Md. Haneef Saheb.

The Appellant and Respondent contracted for the sale of goods and the contract contained a clause for "differences to be submitted to arbitration in London in the usual manner."

The Appellants contended (inter alia) that the arbitration clause provided for arbitration only in England and according to English law and that any alleged defect or misconduct in the course of the arbitration should be adjudicated upon according to the provisions of the English Arbitration Act.

Judgment has been reserved.

Dec. 13, 1921.

Now that the railways can no longer look to the State to provide their dividends, economy is a major consideration, and in conjunction with this a rigid enforcement of the rules and bye-laws. This probably accounts for an appeal which yesterday came before a Kings Bench Divisional Court consisting of Horridge and Shearman, J.J. The Great Western Railway are apparently seeking a legal definition of the term "personal luggage." Mr. Warwick Evans, a musician while travelling on the G. W. Ry. took with him his cello weighing something under 14 lbs. In the County Court the Railway Co. sued him unsuccessfully for 2s. 7d. for the carriage of the instrument and accordingly appealed to the Divisional Court.

Mr. Schiller, K. C. for the Railway Co. contended that the instrument was not ordinary personal luggage but was carried for the purpose of his business; a commercial traveller's samples could not be considered as personal luggage.

Mr. Harold Morris, K. C. for Mr. Evans contended that the only question for consideration was whether it was ordinary luggage, or not.

To consider that it ceased to be personal luggage if carried by the passenger for the purpose of his profession would prevent a barrister from carrying his wig and gown.

HORRIDGE, J. (Shearman, J., concurring) gave judgment for the Railway Co. and allowed the appeal. He declined to give any definition of ordinary luggage, but held that the cello was carried by the player for the purpose of his profession and was not personal luggage.

Leave to appeal was granted.

INTRODUCTION TO THE CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE. By Nagendra Nath Ghose, M.A., B.L., Vakil, Calcutta High Court, and Professor, University Law College, Calcutta. Published by the Weekly Notes Printing Works, 3, Hastings Street, Calcutta: 1922. Price Rs. 4.

To make a text-book out of a statute—out of the Civil Procedure Code, to be more precise—is the task the author of this hand-book set himself to accomplish, and he would be a carping critic indeed who would fail to recognise the ability and insight which have been brought to bear on the performance of the work. One notable feature in the curriculum of legal studies in India is the preponderance in the prescribed courses of statutory enactments; and this is unavoidable since the major portion of the law in force in this country has been framed into statutes. But how many of them really lend themselves to use as text-books? Not very many, and least of all the Civil Procedure Code. Cut up, as it has been, since the passing of the Act of 1908, into a "Body" of the Code and "Rules," even practised lawyers stumble at it, and it is only after several years' diligent study that the beginner in the practice of law (not to speak of students) learns to handle the Code with competence. If there is an Indian statute which more than others stands in need of an "Introduction" to bring it within the range of beginners, it is the Civil Procedure Code. Mr. Ghose has wisely refused to follow the arrangement in the Code, which is both artificial and unsuited to students. The chapters of his book and the topics dealt with in them follow each other in natural sequence. But the book is not just a restatement of the provisions of the Code in a different order. What makes it a real text-book is the skilful blending of the provisions of the Code and the best there is in the case law, which it presents to the reader. Some of the chapters, as for instance, those on Res. Judicata (Ch. VIII), Execution (Ch. IX) and Incidence of Appeal (Ch. XII) are little theses combining in themselves the qualities of lucid exposition with sound judgment and scholarship. It is a book for students and practitioners alike, if the aim of the reader is to gain insight into the Code. It is pioneer work too, ably executed, and legal education in this country would owe a great debt to it, if, as we hope, it will induce others to bring out equally well-executed treatises on the remaining statutes which usually figure in the courses of legal studies.

(CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before SANDERSON, C. J. and CHOTZNER, J. S. A. Nos. 1777 AND 2047 of 1919. RAJA SASI KANTA ACHARJYA BAHADUR, v. SANDHYA MONI DASIA. The 10th August 1921.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885, B. C.), sec. 103B (3), presumption of correctness when entry relates to land not within the scope of the Act—Sec. 102 (b), weight to be attached to entries not properly made.

The Appellant sued for khas possession of some lands which were recorded in the record-of-rights as chandina land. He, however, did not produce his papers which would have shown the origin and nature of the tenancy. The lower Court in dismissing the suit held that by chandina the settlement authorities meant bazar land not subject to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and as such no presumption as to the correctness of the entry arose, as it was an entry which the settlement authorities had no jurisdiction to make in the record-of-rights.

Held—That the presumption arising from the entry cannot be of such great weight as would be the case if the entry were with regard to matters which are rightly and properly included in the record-of-rights. The non-production of papers by the Plaintiff-Appellant coupled with the statement of the Defendant was sufficient to rebut the statement in the record-of-rights.

Babus Jogesh Chandra Dey and Gobinda Chandra Dey Roy for the Appellant.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Common Law of England how far applicable to India.

The Madras High Court has held that the common law of England may be applied to India except when a statute either expressly or by implication abrogates it (Ramasami Ayyer, 1. L. R. 44 Mad. 913). In support of the view taken reference is made to In re Venkata Reddy, 1. L. R. 36 Mad. 206, where the question arose in a case of defamation in connection with the statement made by the accused in a certain case. A Full Bench of the Madras High Court held that although the English doctrine of absolute privilege was not expressly recognised in sec. 499 of the Indian Penal Code which dealt with defamation it did not necessarily follow that it was the intention of the legislature to exclude its application from the law of this country and by the application of the English common law, the statement was absolutely privileged and could not be the subject of an indictment. There is considerable divergence of judicial opinion on the point, the trend of the decisions in the Madras and Bombay High Courts being one way and that of the Allahabad and Calcutta cases the other way. In the present case, the question of the applicability of the common law of England to this country arose in a case the facts of which were as follows:—On the day in question the Petitioner's attention was drawn to the misconduct of a drunken and disorderly man who was not only threatening to commit a breach of the peace but was a danger to the other villagers. The Petitioner with the help of several persons tied his hands and removed him to the police station. For this the Petitioner was convicted on a charge of wrongful restraint. The High Court held that under the common law of England, the Petitioner was justified in doing what he did. The rule of common law invoked is thus stated by Baron Parker in Timothey v. Simpson, (1885) 4 L. J. (Ex.) 81. "It is clear that any person present may arrest the affrayer at the moment of the affray and detain him till his passion has cooled and his desire to break the peace has ceased and then deliver him to a police officer. And if that be so what reason can there be why he may not arrest an affrayer after the actual violence is over but whilst he shows a disposition to renew it by persisting in remaining on the spot where he had committed it. Both cases fall within the same principle which is that for the sake of the preservation of the peace any individual who sees it broken may restrain the liberty of him whom he sees breaking it so long as his conduct shows that the public peace is likely to be endangered by his acts." The principle was approved of in Queen v. Light, (1857) 27 L. J. (M. C.) 1, by the Court of Crown Cases Reserved consisting of Cockburn, C. J., Erle and Williams, JJ., Martin and Channell BB. who held that there was a power not only in a constable but in all subjects of the Sovereign to apprehend a person as to whom there was reasonable ground for supposing that he was about to commit a breach of the peace. As observed by the learned Judges the power given in this matter is one which is very essential to the orderly government of society and the preservation of the peace. No doubt the magistracy and the judiciary should jealously watch any interference with the liberty of the subject and scrutinise carefully the acts of any person who alleges that in order to preserve the peace he had to interfere with the liberty of his fellow citizen. But if that necessity is once clearly established it is not only the law but it is extremely expedient that the power of interference should be upheld.

only voidable and was binding until set aside by a competent Court, his Lordship held that the indictment of bigamy was sustainable.

Abetment of bigamy by a Hindu father.

A curious case of bigamy recently came up before the Punjab High Court, Gajja Nand and another v. Crown, 3 Lahore 288. The facts are these. An unfortunate dispute arose between a Hindu wife and her husband regarding the right to give their daughter in marriage. The wife left her husband's house and migrated with her minor daughter to the house of her brother and while there she married the daughter only nine years old to a man of forty. The child was practically sold to this man who paid Rs. 5,000 as the price of the girl. The father on coming to know of this unfortunate affair took the help of the Criminal Court and the girl on being produced in Court in pursuance of a warrant was handed over to him. A few months later the father solemnised the marriage of the daughter with a suitable bridegroom and this led to the prosecution of the father and the son-in-law for abetting the offence of bigamy. The conviction was upheld by the High Court and the reasons given by Shadi Lal, C. J., are as follows :—

"There can be no doubt that the marriage of a girl of nine years with a man of forty prompted as it was by the cupidity of her maternal uncle and the resentment of her mother against her husband was not in the interests of the girl; but the crucial question for determination is whether it was a void transaction and had consequently no existence in the eye of the law. Now it has been found as a fact that the mother actually celebrated the marriage and the presumption is that the usual ceremonies were performed. The law is perfectly clear that the father is the proper person to give his daughter in marriage, that unless the father has deserted his wife and daughter the mother cannot give the daughter in marriage without the consent of the father. But a Hindu marriage is a sacrament and the rule is now firmly established that a marriage which is duly solemnised and is otherwise valid is not rendered invalid because it was brought about without the consent of the guardian in marriage or even in contravention of an express order of Court." In this view and further holding that even if the first marriage was brought about by fraud it was

A Hindu father in the position disclosed by the facts of this case would naturally command the sympathy of every one but under the law as it stands, there is perhaps no answer to a criminal charge. But so far as the man who marries the girl is concerned it is absolutely necessary that it should be found against him that he had knowledge of the fact that the girl had a husband living. This is all the more necessary in a case where the girl in question has not passed the age at which marriage usually takes place and there is no reason to suspect any foul play. The judgment of the High Court no doubt affirms the conclusions arrived at by the lower Court but in a criminal case one would expect to find some indication in the judgment of the High Court showing that this very material point was taken into consideration. There is no doubt that in such cases the person who marries the girl is in a different position so far as mens rea is concerned from the person who gives away the daughter.

From the point of view of the father also cases like these ought to engage the serious attention of Hindu society, for so far as these matters are concerned the Government is totally helpless and cannot be expected to take any initiative to bring about a change of law. Without meaning to say anything derogatory to the sacrosanct character of marriage in Hindu law it seems to be repugnant to all notions of justice and common sense that a girl practically sold as a slave to a rogue under the garb of ceremony of marriage should be given up as lost for ever.

A Suggestion from the Administrator-General and Official Trustee's Office.

The Administrator-General and the Official Trustee has drawn our attention to the fact that members of the legal profession in addressing communications to him do not head those communications so as to indicate the estates or trusts to which they refer. This omission, he writes, causes a considerable amount of inconvenience and confusion in the records of the Administrator-General and the Official Trustee, and also leads to delay in attending to communications. We think it desirable that the suggestion should in the interest of all parties concerned be followed.

A Correction.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyengar, Vakil, Madras High Court, writes to inform us that the Privy Council, on the 19th December last, has affirmed the decision of the Madras High Court in the appeal of the Secretary of State for India in Council against the Rajah of Vizianagram, and not reversed it as has been announced in our correspondent's London Notes published in the issue of the 5th December 1921. Our correspondent evidently recorded these notes prior to the delivery of the written judgment. The judgment delivered by the Privy Council is presumably what Mr. Iyengar says it is, and we are awaiting confirmation thereof from our correspondent.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Dec. 23, 1921.

During the past week the Board concluded the hearing of Ramalinga Annani v. Narayana Annani, an appeal and cross-appeal from Madras in which the argument took six days. The suit out of which these appeals arise is one for partition and the main questions that arise are (1) what are the joint family properties available for division? (2) Whether one of the Defendants is or is not to be treated as a member of the joint family entitled to a share on partition? (3) Whether the properties in the possession of Defendants 2 and 4 are their exclusive properties?

Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Dubé appeared for the Appellant-Defendant No. 1.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the cross-Appellants.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., Narasimham and Parikh for other members of the family with divergent interests.

The arguments were almost entirely directed to the facts.

Sarju Prasad Missir v. Maksudan Chaudhuri, an appeal from Patna was argued before the Board on the 19th and 20th December.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dubé appeared for the Appellants;

Mr. Parikh (for Mr. Abdul Majid) appeared for the Respondents.

The principal question for determination is whether the Appellants can challenge the purchase at an auction of the property in dispute by the predecessor of the Respondents, seeing that they had allowed the Respondents to remain in possession for 20 years and had acquiesced in a decision of the Court excluding the properties from sale and whether the suit is barred by limitation. Having heard the arguments the Board reserved judgment, but on the following day they informed counsel that they desired to have further evidence from India and would give counsel the opportunity of again addressing the Board when this evidence was received.

The last case heard by the Board consisting of Lords Buckmaster and Carson and Sir J. Edge was an ex parte appeal from a Full Bench decision at Patna, Mahant Jagannath Das v. Janki Singh.

The suit was one for the recovery of possession of certain property which has been held to be zirat land. The main question for decision is whether the suit is governed by the limitation provided by Art. 139 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act, 1908, or whether it is governed by the provisions of Art. (1) (A) of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, as amended by the Bengal Council Act I of 1907.

The Chief Justice and Mullick and Roe, JJ., had held that the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act were applicable on the ground that the Defendant was a non-occupancy tenant (Chapman and Jwala Prasad, JJ. contra).

Mr. Parikh for the Appellant argued that the majority of the Full Bench were in error. At the conclusion of his argument their Lordships said that they would consider the advice that they would tender to His Majesty; and the Court rose for this term.

The next sitting begins on the 19th January and the intention at present is to commence with the hearing of Colonial appeals.

Reviews.

TRIAL OF THURTELL AND HUNT. By Eric R. Watson, LL.B., Bar-at-Law. Butterworth & Co. (India), Ltd. 6, Hastings Street, Calcutta. Price Rs. 6-8.

This is one of the latest additions to the Notable British Trials series. It took place in the year 1824 and was almost the last famous trial to take place under the Tudor procedure, rightly described as "inquisitorial." It stands out with hardly a parallel as a murder undertaken with no other object but lucre by several persons unconnected by domestic ties. To the criminologist any case of such a nature presents itself as a rarity in the psychology of murder. Such enormity of guilt as is implied in a cold-blooded mercenary murder almost forbids the association of several for its accomplishment—the mutual confidence essential to criminal conspiracies would be lacking in men so utterly depraved.

"The final purpose of murder considered as a fine art," says DeQuincey "is precisely the same as that of tragedy . . . to cleanse the heart by means of pity and terror. Now terror there may be but how can there be any pity for one tiger destroyed by another tiger." Yet observes the master critic "The world in general are very bloody minded; and all they want in a murder is a copious effusion of blood; gaudy display in this point is enough for them." To this base love of the vulgar for the merely horripilant element in murder must be attributed the immense reputation of Thurtell as a murderer. The incident was a sensational one. At the trial the prisoners were defended by counsel like Chitty and Thesiger. It is interesting to read the report of the motion in arrest of judgment made by the former of these celebrated lawyers when he found that all his other efforts failed to save his client. The following description of what took place is quoted in the introduction to the book from a M. S. of Lord Chelmsford himself. "We were all exhausted and in a state of nervous excitement and the Judge was preparing to put on the black cap to pronounce sentence. At this awful moment Chitty, the celebrated special pleader, rose to move in arrest of judgment. He was always a confused speaker at the best of times but he was then in such a state of nervous trepidation that he was hardly articulate and in the midst of a confused jumble of words it was with difficulty that we could understand his objection—that the trial had begun on January the sixth, the feast of the Epiphany, which was a Dies non like a Sunday and therefore that the whole proceeding was void. The only answer given by Mr. Justice Park was expressed in these terms. "Why Mr. Chitty, the Lord Chief Justice frequently tries cases on Good Friday" to which Chitty answered "Talking of Good Friday puts me in mind of a story" and then he told the well-known anecdote but with the omission of Pontius Pilate, the only point." The present volume like others of the series will be read with interest by laymen and lawyers alike.

THE LAW RELATING TO CONTRACT OF SALE OF GOODS. By William Wallis. Second Edition. By W. Nembhard Hibbert, LL.D. (London). Published by Sweet and Maxwell, Limited.

This carefully prepared little volume of about 200 pages consists of six lectures delivered by the author at the request of the Council of Legal Education on the law relating to the Contract of Sale of Goods. The object in delivering the lectures was to facilitate the study of the provisions of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893. In the present edition of the book which is the second, certain matters contained in the Errata of the former edition have been incorporated with the text and some few alterations necessitated by recent decisions and statutes have been set out in foot-notes. The Text of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, has been printed in the appendix. The book which is one specially suited for students of law contains a clear exposition of the law of contract relating to the sale of goods as contained in the English statute. The printing and get up of the book are as they are always found to be in Messrs. Sweet and Maxwell's publications.

REPORTS (See Index.)

The late Viscount Bryce.

A Reuter's message received last week announces the death of Viscount Bryce, a prominent figure during the last forty years in the literary, legal and political world of the British Isles. More a litterateur than a politician, and a scholar more than a lawyer, his claims to remembrance by posterity will rest more on his contributions to the scientific study of history and politics, than on the impress he may be supposed to have left upon the public life of his country, inspite of his intimate association with the Government of the United Kingdom for many years. His book on "The American Commonwealth" is one of the acutest and most informing studies in politics in the making, and as brilliantly executed as it is original. No one can read his Studies in History and Jurisprudence without pleasure and profit. He was as robust a believer in democracy as Mr. Elihu Root, the American politician and publicist, and it is worthy of notice that recent events in Russia and elsewhere failed to shake his faith in it, as his latest publication, "Modern Democracy," clearly shows. He was a finished scholar of the widest and most all-embracing culture, and a philosophical thinker of the highest acumen, combining breadth of view with acuteness of insight, both of which he maintained to the last. It will not be easy to fill the void in the literary and political world of the British Empire left by his death. He was born in May, 1838, so that he died at the ripe age of 83 years.

Where orders under sec. 151 of the Civil Procedure Code are appealable.

A correspondent has asked us to discuss what he considers to be a very knotty question, viz., whether orders under sec. 151, C. P. Code are appealable. An order under this section may be made in such varieties of circumstances and may take such a variety of shapes that it is impossible that they should all be appealable or the contrary in the same uniform way. The answer in each case will depend upon the nature in that case, and appeal will lie or not according as the order comes or not within the description of "decree" as defined in sec. 2 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code. Our correspondent suggests a concrete case, viz., an order of the Court purporting to be passed in the exercise of the Court's inherent power under sec. 151 setting aside an order dismissing a suit for default. In such case, the Court would seem to entertain the application under Or. IX, r. 9, Civil Procedure Code, though sec. 151 of the Code would enable the Court to act on a ground not specified in Or. IX, r. 9. Upon this view, the order would not be appealable. If this argument should appear to be a somewhat strained one, it would probably be held that it would still not be held to be a decree within the general definition of "decree" in sec. 2(2) of the Code. We do not think we need enlarge upon the matter any further, as a general answer cannot really be given to the question propounded by our correspondent.

When execution sale after judgment-debtor's death binds legal representative not made party under Or. XXII, r. 22, C. P. C.

Shankar Dayi v. Dattabaya Venayak, I. L. R. 45 Bom. 1186, is another case which puts the soundness of the decision of Lord Hobhouse in Malkarjun v. Narhari, I. L. R. 25 Bom. 337, severely to the test. Plaintiff in the case applied after the death of the Defendant against whom he had got a decree for execution and caused notice under Or. XXII, r. 22, C.P. C., to be served on the judgment-debtor's brother's widow as his legal representative, in spite of the fact that he was aware that the debtor had bequeathed his properties to his mistress. The High Court (Macleod, C. J. and Shah, J.) held that the debtor's mistress who was to the Plaintiff's knowledge his real legal representative was not bound by the sale which in the circumstances was void and not voidable only. The only circumstance which differentiates this case from Malkarjun's case is that in Malkarjun's case the decree-holder may be assumed to have sought to cause the wrong person to be made a party as the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor under a bonâ fide mistake. The knowledge on the part of the decree-holder of the actual state of things was no doubt relied on by the Privy Council in Raghunath Das v. Sunder Das, L. R. 41 L. A. 251, as a ground for differentiating that case from Malkarjun's case. But we fail to find what difference that circumstance makes in the application of the general principles enunciated in Malkarjun's case, since the making of a person a party as legal representative is in every case dependent on the adjudication of the Court. The Chief Justice in the case under notice appears to think that the difference lies in the fact that in Malkarjun's case there was an adjudication, and none in this case. The present case could be differentiated on the ground of fraud on the Plaintiff's part but that is not the footing upon which the judgment of the Court proceeds; and it is doubtful if even fraud would make the sale void and not voidable only.

ATTESTATION OF MORTGAGE BOND.

By MR. KSHETTRA NATH SINGH,
MUNSIF OF RANCHI.

Can the admission of a party as regards execution of a mortgage bond render valid that which is invalid?

The above point was first raised by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Dass in Mussammat Hira v. Ramdhan in 2 Pat. Law Times 752 at page 754 (s. c. 1922 Pat. 42) with reference to the question of the valid attestation of a mortgage bond by at least two attesting witnesses under sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is ruled in 35 Mad. 607 (P. C.), that attestation of a mortgage bond must be made by witnesses signing their names after seeing the actual execution of the deed and that mere acknowledgment of signature by the executant is not sufficient. His Lordship after citing Woodroffe on Evidence and 44 Cal. 345, 22 C. W. N. 444 and 4 P. L. J. 511, as established authorities of the Calcutta and Patna High Courts for the view that the admission of execution of a mortgage bond renders it unnecessary for the Plaintiff to prove its valid attestation according to sec. 59, goes on to observe as follows:—"If the matter were res integra, I should doubt whether admission of a party can render valid that which is invalid. The question is—Is the rule enunciated in sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act a rule of law affecting the validity of the mortgage or is it a rule of evidence affecting proof of the document? My own view is that sec. 70 of the Evidence Act operates only when the mortgagee has not given any evidence at all of due execution of the document by the mortgagor, but relies on the admission by the mortgagor But the matter would stand on an entirely different footing if the mortgagee produces his evidence of the execution and that evidence establishes that the document was not attested in the manner required by sec. 59 of the Act."

The identical question arose in Paban v. Badal, 34 C. L. J. 498, in which the Hon'ble Justice Sir N. R. Chatterjea and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Panton, while coming to the same conclusion, did not feel themselves bound by the rulings of 44 Cal. 345 and 22 C. W. N. 444, mentioned above, and observed as follows:—

"In those cases, however, the only question related to proof of execution of the mortgage bond. No question was raised before or decided by the Court, in either of the two cases as to the validity of the mortgage bond with reference to the provisions of sec. 59. The two questions are different, one being the question of proof of execution of a document required to be attested by calling one attesting witness under sec. 68 of the Evidence Act, which, however, is not required where the execution of the document is admitted by the executant as laid down in sec. 70 of the Evidence Act. The other question relates to the validity of the mortgage even though the document might be proved according to law." It is also interesting to observe that 2 P. L. T. 752, was decided in June 10, 1921, and that in July 26 of the same year 34 C. L. J. 498, was decided obviously without reference to the former.

Another point which often comes up before the trial Courts is the stage at which the validity of a mortgage bond can be questioned. In 29 Ind. Cases 991 (Mad.), it is ruled that where in the course of the trial and not on the pleadings a Defendant raises the plea that the mortgage is invalid, because the signature of the mortgagor was not attested by two witnesses the Court should not dismiss the suit for that reason. It is only upon a distinct and supplemental issue framed on the point and after giving both the parties an opportunity to address fresh evidence on it, that the Court should find for or against the invalidity of the document for that reason. This ruling merely lays down that a plea of invalidity of the document should not be allowed to be raised by the Defendant at a late stage, without allowing the Plaintiff mortgagee an opportunity to adduce all available evidence to meet the Defendant's case: similarly in 34 C. L. J. 498, the trial Court failing to appreciate the distinction between proof of execution of the mortgage and its validity under sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, held that the execution of the bond not being challenged, the necessity of its proof did not arise and overruled the other plea of one of the Defendants, viz., that the bond should not be regarded as a mortgage bond. The lower Appellate Court, however, held that the only attesting witness examined was the scribe who also executed the document on behalf of the mortgagor and, there being no other evidence, dismissed the suit, holding that sec. 59 had not been complied with. Their Lordships, however, pointed out that, unlike 23 C. W. N. 290, the scribe was not the only one of the attesting witnesses who signed their own names. Their Lordships, in the result, remanded the suit for fresh evidence on the ground that though the point was taken in the written statement, the distinction, as pointed out above, was lost sight of by the lower Courts.

The case, however, stands on a different footing when after a distinct issue has been raised and the Plaintiff has called all his available witnesses, it transpired at the cross-examination of the attesting witnesses that they did not see the executant to sign. In such a case, the only thing to do is to dismiss the suit, if a personal decree cannot be given. See 31 Ind. Cas. 706 (All.). Even if no issue is raised by the Defendant as regards the validity of the document, if the Plaintiff mortgagee chooses to examine all his available attesting witnesses and it transpires at the cross-examination of the Plaintiff and his witnesses that the condition of sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act were not fulfilled, the Court has ample power to frame an issue at that stage and to decide the suit forthwith on the admission of the Plaintiff's witnesses as regards the invalidity of the mortgage. In 35 Madras 607 (P. C.), mentioned above, this was exactly what was done and there was no contention before their Lordships of the Judicial Committee that the Plaintiff had not been given sufficient opportunity to let in evidence on the new issue.

Another point which arises in connection with the question of valid attestation of a mortgage bond is, if the mortgagee fails to prove his document as a mortgage bond, is he entitled to a simple money decree? It seems in the first place that where a personal liability is reserved in the mortgage bond, a money decree may ordinarily be given, unless it is barred by limitation. In 31 Ind. Cas. 706 (All.), it is however, ruled by the Hon'ble Sir H. Richards C. J. and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Rafique that under the circumstances of the suit, no simple money decree could be given because that would entirely change the character of the cause of action. In this case, the Defendant was the son of the executant and their Lordships ruled:—"This would be entirely a new cause of action in which there might entirely be a new defence." Their Lordships also remarked thus:—"In order to give a simple money decree, we should either amend the plaint or treat the plaint as amended." Again in 33 Ind. Cas. 111 (All.), it was ruled by the same Judges that "a Court is not bound to give a simple money decree where the Plaintiff sues to realise his debts on foot of a mortgage. A simple money decree is frequently given by the Courts but that is a matter of grace; when it does so, it should amend the plaint by adding a claim for a simple money decree. Their Lordships were inclined to give a money decree in that particular case but it transpired that the suit was instituted more than 6 years after the date of the bond for which personal liability was barred under Art. 116 of the Limitation Act. In the Calcutta High Court, it is distinctly ruled that an improperly attested document will fail of its effects but it may be used to obtain a personal decree against the executant. A different note is struck in 18 Mad. 29, which is, however, dissented from in 26 Cal. 222 and is also disapproved in 30 Mad. 284. But if the personal covenant reserved in the document cannot be dis-entangled from the mortgage, it cannot be enforced at all and the deed then wholly fails. (See 5 Cal. 611).

The attestation of a mortgage bond within the meaning of sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act is a pitfall of many a money-lender in the backward parts of this country and is a source of much litigation in which the mortgagees appear to be at the mercy of much too common dishonest attesting witnesses.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before CHATTERJEA and PANTON, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1396 of 1919. SARASIBALA DASI, (Plaintiff) Appellant v. CHUNILAL GHOSE, (Defendant) Respondent. Heard 22nd November 1921. Judgment 23rd November 1921.

Indian Contract Act, IX of 1872, secs. 201 and 209—Limitation Act, IX of 1908, Arts. 89-120 of Sch. II—Agency conclusion of—Suit for furnishing account against agent; death of the principal Agent or Trustee.

The Appellant brought this action on 21st December 1916 against the Respondent claiming accounts for the years 1301 to 1321 B. S. and for recovery of the amount found due upon such accounts being taken.

The Defendant was the agent of the Appellant's husband, Jotindra, for collection of the rents and profits from his landed properties and for payment of the dues of the superior landlords and so forth. Jotindra died on 25th July 1912. The question in this appeal was whether the Plaintiff's claim for accounts was barred by the statute of limitation—the suit having been brought beyond three years from 25th July 1912, the date of the Plaintiff's husband's death.

The lower Appellate Court on appeal by the Respondent, found that he was the agent of the husband down to his death, i.e., till 25th July 1912 and he then remained in the service of the Appellant, his widow and administratrix, till the end of 1321 (about middle of April 1915) when his services were dispensed with. The contention was that the agency having terminated on 25th July 1912 by the death of the principal and this suit not having been brought before 25th July 1915 the Appellant's claim for accounts for the period prior to (the Plaintiff's husband's) death, i.e., till 25th July 1912 was barred. The said Court then holding that having regard to sec. 201 of the Indian Contract Act, Art. 89 and not Art. 120 of Sch. II of the statute of limitation applied to the case, dismissed the claim of the Plaintiff for the period prior to the date of the Plaintiff's husband's death, viz., till 25th July 1912.

It was contended for the Appellant before their Lordships, that the position of the Defendant (Respondent) having been altered to that of a Trustee after the death of the Appellant's husband so far as the interest of the deceased was concerned—by operation of sec. 209, Indian Contract Act, Art. 120 applied to the case and not Art. 89 which limits the agent's liability from the conclusion of the agency. (1) Nabin Chunder Barua v. Chundra Madhub Borua, (1916) 44 C. I. (P. C.) and (2) Modhusudan v. Rakhal, (1915) 43 C. 248 at p. 254:

Held—That the suit being one for accounts on the ground, that the Defendant-Respondent was bound to render accounts to his principal, and there being no question here of suing the Defendant for acts done by him after the death of his late principal which he might have done as Trustee, Art. 89 and not Art. 120, Sch. II of the Limitation Act applied to the case.

Dr. Sarat Chunder Bysack for the Appellant.

Mr. Monmotho Nath Ganguly for the Respondent.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Local inspection by Magistrates:

A practice has grown up of Magistrates holding local inspections in connection with cases which they are trying. There is absolutely no foundation for this in the Code of Criminal Procedure, but the practice has nevertheless been a long standing one. A distinguished criminal lawyer was once arguing a case in the High Court before Sir Henry Thobey Prinsep and in the course of his argument took strong exception to the local inspection by the Magistrate in the case in question. This evoked a prompt remark from Sir Henry, than whom no one was more competent to pronounce on questions relating to the practice of Criminal Courts, that he had done it ever since he was an Assistant Magistrate. On examining the matter the learned Judge at once agreed that the practice was wholly illegal. Judicial decisions while pointing out the unfounded nature of the practice in question have countenanced it to this extent that the Magistrate can hold a local inspection only for the purpose of understanding the evidence placed before him. The reasoning is that although our judicial system does not admit of the decision of cases in any other way than on the evidence before the Court the Magistrate if he finds himself in a situation which makes it impossible for him to understand the evidence without the aid of a local inspection may do so but the safe-guard has at the same time been laid down that he must keep a note of his inspection on the record. We very often find that Magistrates omit to bear in mind this wholesome injunction, the result being that not only an illegal practice is resorted to but it is done in a wholly unwarranted manner which is opposed to all notions of justice and common sense. The safe-guard laid down acts as a salutary check on the Magistrate and enables the party who may be aggrieved to get the case transferred to some other Court, have the Magistrate called as a witness by the Court and then test the accuracy of the record by cross-examination. In Athar Hus-sain v. The King-Emperor, 1921 Pat. 27, it appears that after the close of the case for the prosecution and the defence and at the request of the prosecution the Magistrate inspected the place of occurrence and relied on his inspection in deciding the case. In his explanation the Magistrate stated that he did not import anything in the judgment which was not in the evidence and therefore did not think it necessary to write an inspection report and that there was no provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure making it obligatory on a Magistrate to do so. This is a typical case which shows the mischief of allowing an illegal practice to grow. It shows how one illegality leads to another and is resorted to as a justification for the other. His Lordship Jwala Prasad, J., very rightly disapproved of the Magistrate's action and set aside the conviction relying on the well-known case of Babban Sheikh v. Emperor decided by the Calcutta High Court (14 C. W. N. 422).

THE HINDU LAW OF REVERSIONS AND REVERSIONERS.

The main points of distinction in the position of Reversioners under the English and Indian Systems of Law.

In the first place the Reversioner under the English Law has always a vested interest in the reversion, which can, therefore, be dealt with as an actual interest in land, and so is capable of being inherited and transferred (1).

On the other hand the Reversioner of a Hindu widow has a future, uncertain and contingent interest in the reversion: in other words, he has a mere naked chance of succession to the widow, contingent on survivorship to her, (and non-intervention of any nearer heirs than himself), for before her death it is, of course, impossible to say (i) who shall actually survive her and (ii) occupy at her death the position of heir to the last full owner (2). A mere possibility of succeeding to a reversion of this kind cannot be inherited or transferred (3) as if it were a vested interest, as in the case of a reversion under English law.

Secondly, the grantee of a particular estate, (say, a lease for a term of years, or for life, sliced off out of a fee-simple), of course derives his title by grant. Upon the determination of that estate, therefore, the tenant-in-fee, or his heir will again become tenant-in-fee-simple in possession.

A Hindu widow, on the other hand, does not derive her title to her deceased husband's estate by grant from her so-called reversioners, for they themselves have no vested interest therein in the life-time of the widow to grant.

Indeed, as put by Lord Darvev in Bejoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Maheshi Devi, "A Hindu widow is not a tenant for life, but is owner of her husband's property, subject to certain restrictions on alienation, and subject to its devolving upon her husband's heirs upon her death. But she may alienate it subject to certain conditions being complied with. Her alienation is not, therefore, absolutely void, but it is primâ facie voidable at the election of the reversionary heir."

Thirdly, the holder of a particular estate—a tenant for life, for instance—is not permitted by English law to deal with the estate as if he were seized in fee, and, therefore, no acts of his can, under any circumstances, defeat or destroy the ulterior interest, which remains vested in the grantor during the continuance of such particular estate.

Under the Hindu Law, on the contrary, the widow, the holder of her husband's estate, can under certain circumstances give an absolute and complete title so as to defeat or destroy altogether the prospects of reversioners, (the whole estate being, for the time being, as observed in Shivagunga case (1), vested in her absolutely for some purposes, though in some respects for a qualified interest). Hence the interest of the reversioners of a Hindu widow cannot, strictly speaking, be said to be an estate in reversion, neither can the estate of the widow herself be rightly called a life estate, even according to that very system of law from which the terms themselves have been borrowed.

Fourthly, the estate of a Hindu widow cannot in any sense be said to be an estate held in trust for the ulterior heirs, i.e., reversioners (2). In other words, there is no relationship of Cestui-que-trust and Trustee between the reversioner on the one hand and the widow on the other during the continuance of her estate. The only right allowed to the reversioner by Hindu Law is the right to guard against wilful waste and unauthorized alienations by her, no doubt a consequence of the doctrine of Reverter incident to her qualified estate. This right relates rather to the limitations of that qualification than to the limits of her rights as heir-at-law, i.e., to the restraints or fetters on her power of alienation which are inseparable from the very nature of her estate and have nothing to do with the existence or non-existence of reversionary heirs capable of taking on her death (3); for on their failure the Crown possesses the same power which they would have of protecting its interests by impeaching any unauthorized alienation by her. Indeed, the concession of a right of suit in these cases to the reversioners, and, failing them, to the Crown as ultimus hoeres is allowed, as pointed out in Chirucolu v. Chirucolu (4), only for the purpose of protecting the interests of the person or persons who may eventually turn out to be the heir or heirs, and the object of the legal proceeding is really the perpetuation of testimony, which, owing to lapse of time might not be available for the heir when the succession actually opens.

Therefore, except as limited by this right of suit in favour of the reversioners, the widow cannot be said to be life-tenant or trustee for the latter. "Within the limits imposed upon her the female-holder has the most absolute power of enjoyment. She is accountable to no one, and fully represents the estate, and so long as she is alive no one has any vested interest in the succession" (1).

Accordingly it has been held, (2) "a widow is not bound to mortgage any portion of her husband's estate if that would be more prejudicial to her than sale by reducing her income to a greater extent as she does not hold the property for the benefit of the reversioner." Again, conversely, a reversioner "does not derive title from a restricted owner, (3) nor does one reversioner claim through another; but each derives his title from the last full owner (4). So, where "of several kindred of equal degree who would have jointly succeeded but for the widow, if any die in the interim between the deaths of the husband and the widow, their heirs are excluded."

For the same reason, "there is no privity of estate between one reversioner and another as such, and, consequently, an act or omission by one reversioner cannot bind another reversioner who does not claim through him" (5). There is, however, an apparent exception as regards, firstly, those cases, (e.g., suits impeaching adoptions) where there has been a virtual and constructive representation of the whole body of reversioners through one of them (6); and, secondly, as regards those cases where the presumptive reversioner for the time being consented to an alienation by the limited female, whether or not he eventually succeeds to what remains of the reversion undisposed of, on grounds justifiable by Hindu law and, therefore, fairly raising a presumption, albeit rebuttable, of the propriety of the transaction (1).

Where, however, as in Rangappa Naik v. Kampti Naik (2), the actual reversioner, (i.e., the one among possible heirs, who eventually succeeds to the widow's estate participates in the consideration paid to his ancestor by the widow as the price of his assent to an alienation by her, he is estopped from impeaching the transaction, for one cannot participate in such benefit and at the same time call in question the propriety of the transaction.

As regards the class of suits, (such as those relating to adoption), where one reversioner has in a representative capacity virtually represented the whole body of reversioners for the time being, "the principle of finality of litigation, which alone would be the foundation of the rule, would apply equally to suits by remote reversioners when they are allowed to institute and carry on such suits" (3).

suance of the said order of attachment the Court stayed execution on 25th January 1916. On that very day the Appellant applied for execution of his decree under Or. XXI, r. 53, sub-r. 1, cl. (b) and the Court allowed him to proceed with the sale on condition that the money for which his decree was attached should be paid out of the sale proceeds. The sale was held on 26th January 1916 and the Appellant who purchased the property applied for and was allowed to have the purchase money set off against a part of the dues under his decree. This fact was brought to the notice of the Court by the judgment-debtor and the Court set aside the sale and directed stay of execution until further orders on 5th February 1916. On the 25th January 1917 the Court received back the records from the Appellate Court and directed the decree-holder to take steps by 31st January 1917. Nothing having been done on that date the execution case was dismissed for default. The present application for execution was filed on 22nd January 1920. The properties sought to be sold in the present execution case were different from those comprised in the execution case started on 28th August 1915. Both the Courts below held that inasmuch as the only effective stay order was made on 5th February 1916, which lasted till 25th January 1917, when the Court directed the decree-holder to take steps, the present application for execution was barred by limitation:

Held (without entering into the question whether the period between 24th January 1916 and 4th February 1916 should be excluded or not)—That the Appellant should be allowed to exclude the period from 5th February 1916 to 3rd February 1917, when the attachment order by the other Court was withdrawn and that the last step in aid of execution having been taken on the 26th January 1916, when the decree-holder applied for a set-off, the application for execution was not barred by limitation.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before WALMSLEY and SETHAWARDY, JJ. REVISION No. 1009 of 1921. HARI MOHON GHOSE, Accused, Petitioner v. THE KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party. The 17th January 1922.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec.

420, elements constituting an offence under—Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 25, proving of admission before a police officer, if vitiates the conviction.

The Petitioner lodged a complaint at Alipur against one Gurupada under sec. 406, I. P. C., for his refusal to return certain instruments which he had taken from the Petitioner on hire. Thereafter the said Gurupada lodged a complaint against the Petitioner in the Chief Presidency Magistrate's Court on the allegation that the Petitioner represented to him that he had got some order from a polishing firm and took loan of a sharpening machine from him, promising to return it after a few hours, but that he did not return it. While the Petitioner's Alipur case was pending, the case against the Petitioner in the Presidency Magistrate's Court came up for hearing before a Bench of Hony. Magistrates, and the prosecution examined, amongst other witnesses, one Asst. Sub-Inspector of Police of the Tollygunge Thana to prove that the Petitioner had admitted before him that he had taken the sharpening machine and that he promised to return the same to the Thana. The Petitioner was convicted under sec. 420, I. P. C. and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 100. Against the said conviction and sentence the Petitioner moved the High Court and got the present Rule:

Held (in setting aside the conviction and sentence)—That the elements necessary to constitute an offence under sec. 420, I. P. C., had not been established and that the Hony. Magistrates acted illegally in allowing the prosecution to adduce evidence to prove the alleged admission of the Petitioner before the Asst. Sub-Inspector of Police, and the conviction passed relying thereupon was bad in law.

Disproportionate sentences in criminal cases.

We have from time to time commented on disproportionate sentences passed in criminal cases. With the advance of the human race in intelligence and morality, in enlightenment and civilisation the criminal law has been steadily improving, subjectively and objectively both as regards the character and extent of crimes and the nature and severity of punishment and also as regards the conditions of liability and the methods of enforcing it. The question of the nature and extent of punishments is as important as difficult. The entire history of the Criminal Law shews a decided and growing decrease of severity in the punishments inflicted upon criminals. The change was to a great extent due to the greater recognition of the true object and requirements of punishment and to the greater predominance of the relative theories of determent and reformation—theories which distinguish modern criminal jurisprudence from the system of blind and indiscriminate severity which they have happily helped to supersede and which seemed to regard a criminal as a heinous excrescence on society to be ruthlessly extirpated, rather than as a diseased member to be rendered whole if possible. It came to be gradually admitted that it was a kind of quackery in Government and argued a want of sound judgment to apply the same universal remedy, the ultimum supplicium, to every case of crime; and though it was much easier to extirpate than to amend mankind yet that Magistrate must be deemed a weak and cruel surgeon who cut off every limb which through ignorance or indolence he would not attempt to cure.

In a recent case decided by the Patna

High Court (Gossain Misser v. The King-Emperor, 1922 Pat. 14), Bucknill, J., has delivered a very learned and instructive judgment and has clearly and forcibly laid down the circumstances in which only a deterrent sentence should be inflicted. The case in question arose out of a complaint of criminal intimidation lodged by the European manager of a certain factory against two residents of the locality. The trying Magistrate passed a sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment, meaning to make it a deterrent punishment. His Lordship, however, reduced the sentence to one of fine. The learned Judge observed that deterrent punishments should be passed only when waves of initiative crime such as for example garroting, gang robbery and forgery of counterfeit coin or notes commence to sweep over a State or in times of public tumult when there is danger of a wide breach of the public peace or security or where a highly organised or what one may call semi-professional association of persons engineer series of offences such as swindling or burglary.

The deterrent mode of punishment is based on the propriety and feasibility of operating on the criminal will of a person and of preventing the existence of such will by furnishing sufficient motives to counteract the temptations to crime by making the crime more an object of dread than an object of desire and the repressive motives stronger than the seductive. This theory has been assailed from various points of view. It has been condemned as unjust, absurd, unnecessary and even ineffective. Humanitarians scold the notion that punishment should ever be inflicted with a view to make a public example. The advocates of the theory of the criminal's reformation respect the human being in the criminal and refuse to use him merely as a means for the preservation of the State and therefore accept punishment for the crime not so much with a view to deter persons from its commission as to preserve the criminal from a relapse. They maintain that this end is more effectively attained by reform than by terror because while violent punishments become familiar and are despised and habitual criminals are more common in countries where the severest penalties are inflicted, mild punishments avoid stirring up hatred and the desire of revenge in the mind of the criminal and may easily tend to his reform. This mode found special favour with the Church, the chief punishment of which in the Middle Ages was penitence with a view to the improvement of the criminal; the Canon Law making the improvement the principal object of the punishment.

The proper view appears to be that while the theory of reformation alone is not adequate or correct yet whatever the mode or theory of punishment adopted the desirability of the offender's reform should not be lost sight of; and though punishments must be determined with a view to restrain and deter persons from crime they should be so inflicted as to afford the greatest possibilities for the training best calculated to help the offender's reform. A certain amount of evil or rather pain is essential to punishment without which there should be no punishment at all. Too much would make it vengeance while too little would reduce it to connivance. Between the two there is ample room for giving effect to considerations based on deterrent and reformatory theories.

The standardisation of punishments in statutes is not possible and the legislature cannot do anything more than laying down the maximum penalty for an offence leaving it to the discretion of the Court to find out what punishment will be appropriate to the circumstances of the case. The task is indeed a difficult one and even judicial officers of considerable experience are often found to fail in the discharge of their duty in this respect. It is a pity, as observed by the learned Judge, that few make a serious study of this almost un-written branch of criminal jurisprudence. It is a matter of great importance that the theory of deterrent punishment should not be loosely put into practice and the principles upon which alone a deterrent penalty should be inflicted clearly apprehended. Our Magistrates will do well to bear in mind the observations of Bucknill, J., in the case noted above.

THE APPLICABILITY OF ENGLISH COMMON LAW TO BRITISH INDIA.

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

DEAR SIR,

In your issue of 23rd January, you have editorially noticed the case of Ramaswami Ayyar, I. L. R. 44 Mad. 913, under the caption "Common Law of England how far applicable to India." In this case, the Judges (Ayling and Cottle-Trotter, JJ.) find authority in a previous decision of the Madras High Court, In re Venkata Reddy, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 216, for the view that "the Common Law of England may be applied to India except where a statute either expressly or by implication abrogates it." That no doubt was what was laid down in that case by a bench of three Judges (White, C. J., and Sankaran Nair and Ayling, JJ.), upon a review of previous decisions of the several High Courts, but the grounds upon which it was variously held or assumed in those decisions that the Common Law of England was or was not applicable were not freshly considered in that case. In Venkata Reddy's case, the actual decision was that the statement made by the accused as a witness, which was found to be defamatory within the meaning of sec. 499 of the Penal Code, was yet absolutely privileged, the doctrine of absolute privilege of witnesses not having been, in their Lordships' opinion, abrogated by the provisions of the Penal Code. In Satish Chandra Chakravarty v. Ramdayal De, 24 C. W. N. 982 a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court arrived at exactly the contrary conclusion on the ground that the provisions of sec. 499 of the Penal Code embody a deliberate departure on the part of the Indian Legislature from the Common Law, and that the Courts here are bound to give effect to the intentions of the Legislature without reference to the principles of English Common Law upon a point on which there is an express enactment in the Penal Code. The general question of the applicability of the Common Law to India is adverted to in the judgment, but in the view the Court took of the express provisions of the Penal Code, it became unnecessary for the Judges to pronounce any definite opinion upon it.

Upon the general question, it should be noticed that the Common Law has been expressly applied to the Presidency Towns by Parliamentary Statute. But there is no such express provision so far as the rest of British India is concerned. It seems also to be generally agreed that in the absence of specific statutory provisions, the Courts in British India, in applying (as they are authorised to do by statute) the principles of justice, equity and good conscience, would be justified in applying such rules of English Common Law and Equity as may be applicable to Indian society and circumstances. (Vide the judgment of Mookerjee, C. J., in the case last cited). Practically the whole of the English law of torts has in this way, with slight modifications, been held to apply to British India.

There is, however, another point of view, which I have ventured to put forward in my Tagore Law Lectures on Comparative Administrative Law, viz., that "every fresh accession of territory in India to the British Crown under the Common Law of England applicable, modified, in greater or less degrees, by circumstances, amongst which must be reckoned the systems of personal law prevailing in those territories and the rule, sanctioned by legislation, of justice, equity and good conscience," and modified of course by subsequent legislation (see p. 120, p. 364). Superficially, these two points of view appear to present no perceptible difference. But there is a difference, as is shown by the practical results which have followed from the application of the former rule. Sir Lawrence Jenkins, for instance, found it difficult to hold in Legal Remembrancer v. Moti Lal Ghose, 17 C. W. N. 1252, that contempts of Mofussil Courts which are not made offences by the Penal Code (e.g., scandalising of Courts and Judges outside the Court house, unfair reports of judicial proceedings, and comments on pending cases which may prejudice fair trial) are offences under the Common Law, because the Common Law does not apply in the Mofussil. It is easy to see that no such difficulty would have been encountered if the test put forward by me had been held to apply. According to the reasoning of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Moti Lal Ghose's case, the High Courts, though Courts of Record, would not have jurisdiction either summarily or upon indictment to punish contempts not covered by the Penal Code, committed outside their Original Jurisdiction, even when directed against themselves—a conclusion which militates against the expression of opinion by the Privy Council in In re Sarbadhicary, 11 C. W.

N. 273 (the point was not argued in that case); and by the same reasoning, attempts upon the person of the King in India would not be treason. No such anomalies arise if the view put forward by me is accepted.

I am bound to say, however, that my view has not commended itself to a well-known writer on constitutional law, Dr. A. Barriedale Keith, who, in a review of my book, published in the Royal Asiatic Society's Journal of April 1920, said: "To lay this down as a general doctrine is impossible and the needs of the situation are met by remembering the clear distinction between the Common Law as a whole and the Common Law in its application to the Crown. The existence of sovereignty carries with it the application to the whole of British India of the latter, save where expressly varied by statute law applicable to India and thus offences against the King's person are offences pleno jure in India, requiring no express statutory enactment. The other case which perplexes Mr. Ghose is even more simple; the fact that the High Court at Allahabad has power to punish summarily a contempt by fine or imprisonment does not depend on a very problematic extension of the Common Law to the Mofussil, but on the fact that the Court is established by letters patent under a statutory authority and that such power is an essential adjunct of such a Court and is thus derived mediately from Parliament. It need hardly be said, therefore, that it is impossible to accept the suggestion (p. 571) that the provisions of the Act of 1833 (now sec. 65 of the Act of 1915) which forbids Indian legislatures to make laws affecting any part of the constitution of the United Kingdom 'whereon may depend in any degree the allegiance of any person to the Crown' could ever have been construed so as to afford all persons in British India the guarantee of the fundamental rights of British subjects and to limit Indian legislation as the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution has limited the powers of American legislatures. The plain meaning of the statute is far limited, and nothing but confusion could have resulted from efforts to apply to India conflicting judicial theories of the Common Law rights of British subjects." With reference to sec. 65 of the Government of India Act of 1915, it is pertinent to observe that the Privy Council in Besant v. Adv.-Genl. of Madras, 23 C. W. N. 986 and Bugga v. Emperor, 24 C. W. N. 650 have, since the publication of my Lectures, declined to accept the interpretation I have desired to see placed upon the section, and Dr. Keith's views may be taken to represent the opinion which finds favour with those in authority in and over the affairs of British India. But if that be the correct view of the matter, does it not amount to this, that in the field of public law, at any rate, the Common Law must be taken to extend to British India "pleno jure" or as "an essential adjunct" whenever it is necessary to strengthen the hands of authority, but not when it is relied on to support the claims of the subject against the State? The very high authority which may obviously be called in aid to support the view does not suffice to gloss over the faulty logic which vitiates the reasoning on which it is based.

Before I close, I should like to point out that even if the Common Law should be generally held to be applicable to British India in so far as the same has not been modified by statute, the machinery provided for enforcing it is so defective that much of it is bound to remain a dead letter. This too is adverted to in my Lectures (see pp. 633-636). In any view of the matter, a state of the law which, whenever a question of fundamental importance not clearly provided for by statute is in issue, entails references to the English Common Law on the chance of the Court being induced to apply it in the special circumstances of the case, cannot be regarded as satisfactory in the domain, at any rate, of public law which in India has a great deal of lee-way to make up. Is it not time, therefore, that the Indian Legislature took upon itself the task of defining for British India what would stand for the fundamental rights and obligations of British Indian subjects in relation to the State and to their fellow-subjects, instead of leaving these to be determined by a standard which is uncertain on all but one point, namely, that it will always magnify the State at the expense of the individual?

Yours, etc.,
NAGENDRANATH GHOSE.

THE BENGAL TENANCY ACT. By Mr. Surendra Chandra Sen, B.L. Fourth Edition. Published by Messrs. Das Gupta & Co., 54/3, College Street, Calcutta. 1922. Price Rs. 12.

Mr. Sen is not an author who suffers himself to rest on his laurels. The fact that his commentary on the Bengal Tenancy Act has already taken a front rank amongst the most reputed legal publications of this side of India has merely operated on him as an incentive to further efforts towards expanding and completing his work, which in this edition has assumed the proportions of a commentary and a book of reference rolled in one. So thoroughly has this work been performed that more than was the case with former editions of this work, whoever may be in search of light, information or guidance on any point appertaining to the Act will not fail to turn for it in the first instance to Mr. Sen's book and will not go back disappointed. It goes without saying that the text of the Act and case law has been brought quite up to date, the new decisions incorporated in the notes being also subjected to critical analysis wherever called for. Considering the bulk of the case notes, the enumeration of headings and sub-headings which precede the notes, the marginal notes, and the exhaustive subject-index (which alone covers a hundred and fifty pages) are a great assistance to practitioners. Some idea of the large assortment of miscellaneous information collected in the book may be formed from the following brief reference to the contents of the appendices. They are (i) the Bengal Government Rules, (ii) Important Notifications of that Government, (iii) Notifications extending the Act, (iv) Some of the Amending Acts, (v) Registration Rules, (vi) High Court Rules, (vii) Former Chapters X and XIII A, (viii) Forms of Notices, (ix) Scale of Court-fees, (x) Miscellaneous notes on such points as "the Relationship of landlord and tenant," "Res judicata" and so on, (xi) price lists and (xii) mode of calculation in a suit for enhancement of rent on the ground of rise of prices of staple food crops. The present edition, even more than its immediate predecessor, will fully maintain the reputation of the work as the completest commentary and book of reference upon the Bengal Tenancy Act.

THE DECENNIAL DIGEST OF INDIAN DECISIONS, 1911-1920. By R. Narayanswami Iyer, B.A., B.L., Vakil High Court. Published by the Madras Law Journal Office. Mylapore, Madras.

The fourth volume of this excellent digest is just to hand. The same standard of efficiency has been maintained in the present volume as characterised the volumes that preceded it. The digest is now complete and will be of great use to lawyers.

Gaps in the Law of Limitation.

The Indian Limitation Act has been amended and re-amended so often that the Legislature may justifiably feel confident that it has produced a Code which is calculated to cover and provide a just solution for every case calling for its application. The scheme of the Act is simple. It provides a table of all possible varieties of suits and applications, the period of limitation applicable to each, and fixes for each class of suits and applications the point of the time from which limitation should run. Any suit or application not specially provided for will be governed by the residuary Arts. 120 and 181, as the case may be. Part II of the Act provides exemptions and extensions to cover cases in which the circumstances require that strict adherence to the periods of limitation prescribed in the schedule should be relaxed. With reference to these last mentioned provisions, the Legislature apparently thought that all possible cases of unfairness and hardship had been so completely provided for that it proceeded to lay down expressly in sec. 9 that "when once time has begun to run, no subsequent disability or inability to sue stops it." Cases nevertheless arise of inability to sue supervening after the limitation had begun running, owing either to the union in the same person of the rights of the claimant and the person against whom the claim is alleged, or owing to a decision of a Court of Law, subsequently reversed, temporarily allowing the claim. In such cases the High Courts and the Privy Council have held that limitation is suspended, in spite of sec. 9 of the Act. See Surnomoyee v. Soshee Mookhee, 12 M. I. A. 244; Prannath v. Rookea, 7 M. I. A. 357 and Lakhan Chandra v. Modhu Sudan, 35 Cal. 209 (affirmed by the Privy Council in Nrityamai v. Lakhan, 20 C. W. N. 522).

That there may arise other cases not covered by the principle of suspension enunciated in the above cases is borne out by the case of Ummathu v. Pathumma, recently reported in I. L. R. 44 Mad., p. 817. In this case, the limitation for a suit which should have been instituted before the Subordinate Judge in his ordinary jurisdiction having expired during the Christmas Holidays, it was filed on the re-opening day in the Small Cause Side of the Subordinate Judge's Court. The plaint was returned some days later and was refiled in the same Court in its ordinary jurisdiction, when the Defendant contended that the suit was barred by limitation. The High Court upheld this objection. The Plaintiff sought to get over it by relying on the principle recognised in several cases, under which the period requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment for the purpose of appealing has been allowed to be tacked on to the period during which the Court that passed the decree appealed against was closed, if it was too late to apply for a copy on the date when the judgment was pronounced. But it was pointed out by Spicer, J., that in order that the principle should apply, it is (according to the decisions) necessary that the Appellant should have a subsisting right to appeal when he applied for the copy and that he should apply on the re-opening day. His Lordship pointed out further that it had never been held that the period which may be excluded under sec. 14 can be tacked on to the period when the Court having jurisdiction was closed under sec. 4—the reason being that, the Courts are different and a Plaintiff who fails to institute his suit in the Court having jurisdiction before the limitation period expires, or on the re-opening date if the period expires during the vacation of that Court, has no longer a valid and subsisting cause of action.

The logic of the above reasoning is unassailable. Equally incontestible is the fact that in this case the Plaintiff was put out of Court on a highly technical ground which had no relation whatever to the justice of the case. There is obviously no principle discoverable in the Act itself or outside it which could be made available to give relief to the Plaintiff in this case. The case proves the existence in the Act and in the Indian law of limitation of a serious gap or lacuna which must be made good, if at all, by fresh legislation.

THE HINDU LAW OF REVERSIONS AND REVERSIONERS.

Fifthly, the widow and the next reversioner do not, between them, (as was wrongly held in an early Calcutta case) (1), represent the whole estate, for "having regard to the series of decisions that limit the widow's powers of disposal, and those which put the reversioner's right as a mere spes successionis, it is difficult to hold," observed Kumar Swami Satri, J., in Nachiappa Gownden v. Ranga Sami Gownden (2), "that the widow and the next reversioner represent the entire inheritance and could deal with it as effectively as if the inheritance devolved on the next male heir." Indeed to do so would virtually mean investing a mere possibility of succeeding, a spes successionis, with a far greater degree of substantial legal character than is allowed by Hindu Law itself.

Sixthly, the actual reversioners of a Hindu widow, (i.e., those among the whole class of possible reversionary heirs, who eventually get the reversion), have been held to be her legal representatives, and not her personal heirs, for purposes of pending suits. So on the death of the restricted owner the actual reversioner takes her place in suits pending by or against her on account of the estate (3).

Seventhly, as between themselves one reversioner is not the legal representative of another reversioner, and consequently the right to carry on a suit brought by a reversioner to impeach an alienation by a qualified owner does not survive to the next reversioner, or any other reversioner; the right is personal, to each individual reversioner (1). Not even the presumptive reversioner represents the remote reversioner (1).

Thus, "having regard to the peculiar position of reversioners who possess no more than a contingent right there would not be enough warrant to treat any one reversioner to bind others who do not join in the litigation. Consequently, whenever a reversioner sues, and there is an adjudication, such adjudication would not be binding upon every other reversioner (1)."

Eighthly, reversioners do not, but the widow does represent the estate, for, as already stated, until the termination of her estate, whether by death or otherwise, they have only a bare possibility of succeeding, a spes successionis as it is technically called, irrespective of the proximity or remoteness of their relationship to the last full owner. Hindu widows might be likened to tenants-in-tail representing the inheritance, and the same principle which applied in the one case would equally apply in the other (2).

Ninthly, there is a strong resemblance between reversioners of a Hindu widow and members of a Hindu co-parcenary. In the one case there is a naked chance of heirship or succession in the other, "there is co-parcenaryship and survivorship following upon it. There is community of interest and unity of possession between all the members of the family, and upon the death of any one of them the others may well take by survivorship that in which they had during the deceased's lifetime a common interest and common possession (3)."

As to the separately acquired property of an united family the other members of that family have neither community of interest nor unity of possession. The foundation, therefore, to take such property by survivorship fails, and his widow succeeds to such property by the Hindu Law of Inheritance to the exclusion of the co-parceners. The persons entitled to the estate on her death are not, of course, her heirs, "but the next heirs of her husband according to the Canon of Hindu Law which defines the succession to separate estate (1). The distinction between coparceners and reversioners may be put thus: the co-parcener has, before succession, community of interest and unity of possession in respect of the joint estate with the deceased, while the reversioner has neither community of interest nor unity of possession with the widow in respect of the "reversionary" estate.

According to the late Golap Chandra Sarkar Sastri (2), however, surviving co-widows (or daughters) take between them the share of the deceased co-widow (or daughter) as the next-takers or reversionary heirs of the last male owner. This view seems opposed to the Canon of Inheritance which allows only of one but by no means piecemeal, succession to their heir. All the co-widows (or daughters) having as a class already inherited together as joint tenants with a power of survivorship between them, on the death of one of them her share simply survives over to the others. This is not a case of death succession. If they originally took as tenants-in-common and not as joint tenants, something then might have been said in favour of Mr. Sastri's view. Survivorship is the general rule, and tenancy-in-common the exception under Hindu Law (3). The Mitakshara law, which is practically the common law of Hindu India in matters of inheritance and succession, favours the one, and the Dayabhaga, which is the exception to the general rule, favours the other.

Male reversioners to the estate of a qualified owner do not take like several daughters (or co-widows) as joint tenants with survivorship, but there seems to be one exception—the case of a single daughter's sons, who, by Mitakshara law, take their maternal grandfather's estate jointly (4), and not as tenants-in-common without survivorship.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The following Indian appeals have been heard during the past week.

Nanku Prasad Singh v. Kanta Prasad Singh and ors., from Patna, which raised the question whether the Respondents as purchasers of an equity of redemption were personally liable to discharge a mortgage debt.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. and Mr. Dubé appeared for the Appellants.

Mr. E. B. Rajkes for the Respondents.

The judgment of the Board consisting of LORDS ATKINSON and PHILLIMORE, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMEER ALI was delivered by LORD ATKINSON at the conclusion of the argument and the appeal was dismissed with costs.

The same Board heard arguments and reserved judgment in the case of Sripat Singh Dugas v. Rai Hariram Goenka, an appeal from Bengal, which raised the questions whether an application by the decree-holder for execution of the decree was duly made and was not barred by limitation and can be prosecuted against the Appellants.

Sir Geo. Lowndes, K.C.S.I., K. C. and Mr. Kenworthy Brown appeared for the Appellants.

Mr. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Mr. B. Dubé for the Respondents.

The case of Sarada Nath Bhattacharji and others v. Srijukta Sarajubala Debi Chowdhurani and ors. was the subject of an application to the Board and was dismissed for want of prosecution.

Rai Baij Nath Goenka v. Maharajah Sir Ravaneshwar Prasad Singh and connected appeals from a judgment and decrees of the Patna High Court were heard by the same Board.

The question for determination was whether an Order in Council determining an appeal was enforceable in the present form. Judgment has been reserved.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. and Mr. Dubé appeared for the Appellant.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Wallach for the Respondents.

At present Colonial appeals are being heard, but it is anticipated that these will be concluded to-morrow, and that two Boards will sit to hear Indian appeals as from Monday January 30th.

The list does not contain many cases which are expected to last and it is possible that a supplementary list will be issued later on.

A claim was heard in the Prize Court at the end of last term which is of interest to the general public as well as to the legal profession. It concerned the capture of Turkish vessels in the Tigris during the advance on Baghdad in February 1917.

Mr. Wilfrid Lewis on behalf of Captain Nunn C. B., D. S. O., and the Officers and Crews of H. M. S. "Tarantula," "Mantis" and "Moth" outlined the operations resulting in the capture and claimed £7,745 on the usual basis of £5 a head on the total number of enemy persons captured.

Mr. Lilley on behalf of the Procurator General resisted the claim contending that this was a case of joint capture by the Army and Navy and that therefore no bounty was payable. He relied on the case of "La Bellone," 2 Dobson 343.

Mr. Lewis in reply contended that in order to withstand the claim it was not sufficient to allege a common enterprise. There must be a joint capture and that in the present instance the capture was effected by independent operations initiated by the Naval Forces.

THE PRESIDENT (SIR HENRY DUKE) gave a considered judgment awarding the amount claimed and stated that in his opinion the naval operations, although originally made in conjunction with the army eventually became separate and independent so as to justify the award of the bounty.

PRIVY COUNCIL.—Thillai Chetty v. Shanmuganathan Chetty. Dated the 19th December 1921.

Sir George Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. K. Narasimham applied for special leave to appeal to the Board in the above case. He stated that in 1866, Thillai settled property and founded a Chatram for feeding Brahmins. Subject to this he left his property to his wife for life with remainder to his daughters.

His wife succeeded to the property, and enlarged the endowment just before her death out of her own property. The husband had provided for the management to be conducted by the direct heirs of himself and his wife.

The wife varied the management with regard to her own endowment and a question arises whether the wife has augmented the original charity or created a new one.

The High Court affirmed the decision of the Trial Judge and refused leave to appeal to the Board on the ground that although the suit value was more than Rs. 10,000 yet the appeal did not involve a substantial question of law.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—When the Courts in India say there is no point of law it is difficult for the Board to say there is.]

There was not only one substantial question of law, but one over which the Indian Judges have differed. He referred to I. L. R. 40 Mad. 612.

Leave was refused.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Immunity of State from action at the in- stance of subjects.

A North Dakota statute provides that the State shall establish a bank, to be financed by sale of State bonds, to be operated by a State Administrative Commission. Provision is made in the statute for bringing civil actions against the "State, Doing Business as the Bank of North Dakota." In the circumstances, the Supreme Court of North Dakota held in a recent case [Sargent County v. State, Doing Business as Bank of North Dakota, 182 N. W. 270 (N. D. 1921)] that a depositor of the Bank, was entitled to garnish credits of the Bank. Commenting on this decision, a writer in the Harvard Law Review for January 1922 asks, "Does the mere fact that the State is engaging in a heretofore private venture make it amenable to suit?" In the writer's opinion, when the State, under legislative authority, engages in such enterprises, it does so for the benefit of the community as a whole and that "the conclusion seems inevitable that the State in the exercise of these enlarged functions, acts in none other than its sovereign capacity." The writer appears to be a thorough-going supporter of the doctrine of State immunity not on the early technical basis that the "King cannot be sued by writ, for he cannot command himself," but "on the broader ground" "that it would hamper the performance of the sovereign's public duties to subject him to suits as a matter of right." This broader ground, the writer concedes, loses much of its force when the public duty concerned is that of conducting a commercial enterprise, not necessarily incident to Government or regarded as such; he concedes further that expediency demands that in the conduct of such business parties to transactions have reciprocal remedies; so that, in view of these considerations, it is possible to argue "that the Court should abrogate the rule in so far as the reasons underlying it are no longer persuasive."

But such action, on the part of the Court, would, in his opinion, be open to grave objections; and he concludes his comments with the following homily: "The doctrine of the immunity of a Sovereign in his own Courts is thoroughly and unqualifiedly established in our system of law. Though in particular cases, its reason may be attacked as valueless, its existence must be recognised, and for a Court to overthrow or modify it would be judicial legislation. Further, in every case, the question would arise how to determine which undertakings should and which should not subject the State to suits. Rules of law would not answer that question. An examination of the particular enterprise, considered in its relation to other State undertakings with a careful weighing of the conflicting interests and of the various considerations of expediency involved would be necessary. Such a problem is in its nature one with which legislatures rather than Courts should deal. Actually, legislatures do deal with it. When they provide for administration of State activities they explicitly declare in what manner, claims against the State may be settled and what legal proceedings, if any, may be brought against it. Such provisions are results arrived at with deliberation and unless the Courts can find therein consent expressed or implied, no suits against the State should be permitted."

British India provides the one exceptional instance of a country governed by the Anglo-Saxon system of law, where owing to the accident of the Government having in its inception been placed in the hands of a private corporation, viz., the East India Company. State immunity was abolished not by statute but through the operation of the ordinary rules of common law, and this state of things was deliberately ratified and continued by the British Parliament, when the Government of India was taken over by the Crown and departmentalised (Vide Glase's Tagore Law Lectures on Comparative Administrative Law, Lect. XIII). But that has not prevented the Courts in India from entering into fine-woven arguments directed to determining whether in entering into a particular enterprise, the Government of India was acting in the discharge of its sovereign functions or of its activities as a business corporation, and, upon the basis of such distinction, from seeking to confer immunity on the Government of India in respect of activities which appear to the Court to be governmental as distinguished from other activities which the Courts regard as purely commercial. The numerous considerations mentioned by the writer in the Harvard Law Review have had no effect upon the tendency of the Courts here to trench upon the province of the legislature for the purpose of restricting the liability to action of the Government of India sanctioned as it has been by the British Parliament (Ibid, pp. 317-326).

There does indeed seem to exist a widespread tendency in legal minds to uphold the immunity of the State from actions by its subjects. The "broad ground" of policy suggested in support of it, viz., that it would otherwise hamper the performance of the Sovereign's public duties to subject him to suits as a matter of right, does not however stand examination any better than the "early technical ground," that the King cannot command himself to appear in his own Court. The fact of the matter is that no Government so far has been able to raise sufficient confidence in its capacity to conduct its affairs in a fair and business-like manner, so that it is generally presumed that its agents will bungle in so many instances that to take away its immunity from action would really be to court national bankruptcy. If this fact be admitted, it will probably also be admitted that this bungling of its operations by its agents is greatly encouraged by this very rule of Governmental immunity. Nobody, we presume, really wants that Government business should be carried on eternally in its present haphazard and unbusiness-like manner. If that be so, then the only way to get Government business performed satisfactorily is to abolish this immunity. The Government is a big corporation, a big Trust. The remedies which have been found so useful to keep Trusts and Corporations to their proper functions may admit of application, tentatively at any rate, to the biggest of Corporations and Trusts, the State, with possibly quite desirable consequences. Let Courts and legislators (and we may add commentators also) take heart from the remark which a consideration of this very subject drew from the late Mr. Maitland: "It is a wholesome sight to see the Crown sued and answering for its torts."

THE HINDU LAW OF REVERSIONS AND REVERSIONERS.

The test to apply to the question of who are, and who are not, reversioners as known to Hindu Law is, whether the right of one claiming as such is or is not contingent on survivorship to the widow (1). In the case of presumptive heirs the right is contingent on survivorship to the widow alone, and in that of non-presumptive heirs, on survivorship to the widow as well as all prior heirs in the line of succession.

Thus, judged by this test an adopted son is not a reversioner, for his title is not contingent on survivorship to the widow; but is founded on the factum of adoption.

A female heir to a male, such as a daughter taking after her mother, is a reversioner because her title to succeed is contingent on survivorship to the widow.

There are two sets or classes of possible or prospective reversionary heirs known to Hindu law, that is, possible reversioners before the succession opens out by the death of the widow, namely, proximate and remote; and these classes are denoted by terms more or less expressive of comparative proximity, or remoteness of kinship to the last male owner. The first set are those who, if the widow were to die, renounce, surrender or forfeit her estate, (as the case might be), at once, would take the property, whether with a life-estate, or a full estate and are accordingly termed 'next,' 'nearest,' 'immediate' and—more commonly—'presumptive' reversioners. They are sometimes described—specially in the old Reports—as 'heirs apparent,' and sometimes spoken of as 'prior' in contra-distinction to 'subsequent' reversioners; but the division of such heirs into 'near' and 'remote' is a convenient, but by no means a scientific one. For reversioners, even though of equal degree, need not necessarily be co-reversioners. For example take this illustration. A and B are descendants (grandsons), of the ancestor X by his first wife, and C is a descendant, (grandson), of X through his second wife. A is the last male owner.

(1) The term 'widow' is here used as a type of 'limited owner' of a similar legal status to the widow under Hindu Law.

A, B, and C stand in the same degree of relationship, yet C, being remote through the difference of the mother, is not co-reversioner with B or A. Again, "of several persons living," to quote Mayne's Hindu Law (1), "one may be the next heir in the sense that if he lives he will take at her (the widow's) death in preference to any one else then in existence. But his claim may pass away by the birth or adoption of one who would be nearer than himself." Further, a Hindu widow may surrender her estate to the second class of reversioners with the consent of the first (1) and (2), and thus the two classes might change places.

The distinction between these two possible sets of reversioners of course retains its importance only during the life-time of the widow, or, to be more precise, during the continuance of her estate, for, upon its determination, whoever turns out to be the actual, (as distinguished from the possible), reversioner, takes the property with a life-estate if a female, or with a full estate if a male; and consequently, all speculation as to who shall succeed ceases, unless, of course the next-taker is herself a female, when the reversion is left open for all classes of reversioners.

Both sets are equally interested in the succession during the continuance of the widow's estate, and their reversionary right, or rather chance of heirship is founded on a common basis, viz., that of survivorship to the widow, (besides, in the case of the second set, non-intervention of reversioners of the first set). Indeed, so long as the widow lives the first set, any more than the second set, can have no interest higher than that of a spes successionis, or a mere hope of succession to the reversion: their special right to impeach by suit alienations by the widow or other qualified owner stands on a common footing, viz., protection of the reversionary estate for whomsoever may turn out to be the actual reversioner.

Indeed, "the Hindu Law does not," as pointed out by Ramaswami, J., in Nachiappa Gounden v. Rangaswami Gounden (3), "make any distinction between the next and the more remote reversioners, or display any preponderating preference over another more remote.

The texts speak of the husband's kinsmen, and the words "paternal uncles" in the text of Brihaspati, where the paternal uncles of the husband of the widow are spoken of have been interpreted to mean the sapindas of her husband. Narada speaks of the husband's kin being the guardians of the widow. The rule laid down in Bajrangji Singh v. Manokarnika Baksh Singh (1), that the assent by the next reversioners is enough is only a practical working rule and cannot be construed to mean that the consent given by remote reversioners has no legal effect, even though the immediate reversioner is the alienee, and his assent as evidence of necessity is of no value."

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Canadian Appeals occupied the attention of the Board during the latter part of the past week, and on Monday the 30th January two Boards were constituted to hear Indian Appeals.

The case of Panna Lal v. Nihal Chand, an appeal from Lahore was heard by LORDS HALDANE and PHILLIMORE and MR. AMER ALI. The Respondent represented the interest of the Marwar Bank in liquidation and the question for decision was as to the construction of a contract of guarantee.

Messrs. Clauson, K. C. and Wallach appeared for the Appellants and Messrs. Langdon, K. C. and Dubé for the Respondents.

The Board delivered judgment dismissing the appeal without calling on the Respondents.

The same Court commenced the hearing of another case from Lahore, Chajju Ram v. Neki and others.

Sir George Lowndes and Mr. Dubé were for the Appellants ex parte. The subject-matter of the suit is a claim to a right of pre-emption, but a preliminary point was raised as to the powers of the Court under Or. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. This point is to be argued before a Full Board to-morrow.

In the other Court VISCOUNT CAVE, LORDS DUNEDIN and SHAW, and SIR JOHN EDGE, commenced the hearing of an appeal from Bengal, Khajeh Solehman Quadir and others v. Nawab Sir Salimullah Bahadur and others.

(2) Pratab Chunder Roy-Chowdhry v. Sreenuttu Joy Moner Debee, 1 W. R. C. R. [1865] 99.

(3) 26 Indian Cases, [1915] 757.

(1) I. L. R. 30 All. 1; s. c. 35 I. A. 1.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., Ramsay and Palat appeared for the Appellants.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Respondents.

The suit concerns the validity of a Waki, and a claim by the Appellants to certain allowances under an agreement. Mr. DeGruyther had not yet finished his opening when the Court rose yesterday.

Judgment was delivered on 31st January by LORD BUCKMASTER in the case of Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao and others which was heard by the Board on December 8th and 9th. The decree appealed from was reversed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge restored.

The Judgment is an important one and explains the previous decisions of the Board in Mt. Surajmani v. Rubi Nath Ojha, (35 Ind. App. 17) and The Rangoon Co. v. The Collector of Rangoon, (39 I. A. 197).

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before WALMSLEY and SUHRAWARDY, JJ. CR. REV. NO. 30 OF 1922. AMINULLA and ors., Accused, Petitioners v. THE KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party. The 27th January 1922.

Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860), sec. 147, out of six accused persons three found to have a common object different from that set out in the charge—Legality of conviction of any of the accused—Secs. 323 and 324, alternative charges under, legality of additional sentences under the sections—Court's duty in cases where parties want to compound.

The six Petitioners were convicted under sec. 147, I. P. C. and sentenced to 15 days' rigorous imprisonment. In addition, two of them Nur Ahmed and Aminulla were convicted under sec. 323, I. P. C. and sentenced to 15 days' rigorous imprisonment, and Faizulla under sec. 324, I. P. C. and sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment. In the charge the common object of the unlawful assembly was stated to be to assault Akamuddin and his son. During the pendency of the case the complainant and his son, who were near relatives of all the accused, wanted to compound the case, but the Magistrate did not allow them to do so and convicted all the accused as stated above. In his judgment he found that three of the accused persons did assault Akamuddin and his son. As to the other three, he said "there is no positive evidence on the record that they took any serious part in the marpit or caused injury to any person, although I am perfectly satisfied that they went with the other three accused to snatch away the cattle of the complainant in common object with that of the other accused persons."

Held—That clearly there was a difference between the common object the Magistrate found in the case of the latter three persons. If the common object of Nur Ahmed, Aminulla and Faizulla was to beat Akamuddin then there were not five persons that shared in the common object and the ingredient of an offence under sec. 147 was wanting. "It is a great pity that so many Magistrates when dealing with charges under sec. 147, I. P. C. are careless in setting out the common object and in directing their attention to whether that particular common object is proved or not." On this ground the convictions under sec. 147, I. P. C. against all the Petitioners must fail. The additional sentences passed under secs. 323 and 324, I. P. C., on three of the Petitioners cannot stand with the sentences under sec. 147, I. P. C. Further, the complainant had an absolute right to compound the charge of simple hurt against Nur Ahmed and Aminulla under sec. 323, I. P. C. As to the charge under sec. 324, I. P. C., against Faizulla, the complainant had no such absolute right: his power to compound was subject to the Magistrate's approval. "It is a great pity when parties who are apparently nearly related to one another succeed in patching up their quarrels, that the Magistrate should not do what he can to restore peace and goodwill." The Petitioners Nur Ahmed and Aminulla should be acquitted of the charge under sec. 323, I. P. C., on the ground that the complainant did not wish to proceed any further against them. So far as Faizulla is concerned, taking into consideration that he has already undergone some days' rigorous imprisonment and that the complainant did not wish to proceed against him either, the conviction and sentence in his case too should be set aside. The result is that the convictions and sentences on all the Petitioners are set aside.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Paramount public rights—Sentiment versus Civic consciousness.

The case of Muhammad Zaman and others v. Marzur Hasan and others, reported in 1. L. R. 43 All. at p. 692 arose out of a squabble between the Sunni and Shiah inhabitants of Aurangabad in the United Provinces, but the judgment in the case deals with a question the interest of which is by no means confined to the Sunnis and Shiabs of that town. The Shiabs in this case sought for a declaration of their right not merely to lead a religious procession (connected with the Moharrum festival) over a public road 12 feet wide—a right which was not disputed—but also their right to halt and form themselves in a circle every few yards and within that circle to perform the matam, a ceremony which consists in wailing and beating of the breast and crying of the names of Hasan and Hussain. It appeared that about 400 or 500 persons, if not more, took part in the procession, so that there was no question whatever that to admit this right would have had the consequence of authorising the complete blocking of the roadway for nearly as long as the procession lasted. The Court (Tudball and Sulaiman, JJ.), disposed of the case against the Shiabs on the ground that the claim would be inconsistent with the maintenance of the paramount idea that the right of the public on a public road is a right of passage.

Although the judgment does not make the point very clear, it may be taken for granted that the Shiah Plaintiffs must have insisted that according to their religious tenets, the performance of the matam was an essential ingredient in the leading of the procession, so that the decision really amounted to this that particular sects or communities must submit to have practices sanctioned and enjoined by their religion regulated and even cut down in favour of the paramount right of the public as a whole to have free passage over a public road. It is not merely a question of the minority being required to hold the most powerful sentiment that can operate on the human mind under leash for the mere convenience of the majority; for, clearly, if the majority of the population of Aurangabad had been Shiabs, the Courts would have felt constrained to deliver the same opinion in order to uphold the paramount right of the public to have the roadway kept free from obstruction for purposes of traffic. The implication of the decision appears to be that claims supported by the strongest of sentiments conceivable, and backed even though they may be by the wishes of the majority must yield before certain paramount civic rights which may be unsupported by any such strongly felt sentiment and the exercise of which may for the time being at any rate concern a very few individuals.

What are these paramount civic rights? It would be instructive to have a table of such rights prepared even tentatively. According to the Judges in the case under notice, the right of free progress along public roads is such a right. But the civic consciousness of the entire community must be schooled to the habit of subordinating even their most strongly felt sentiments to the paramount claims of such bloodless public rights as free passage along public roads, if the assertion of such rights is to pass without provoking public disturbance. In Calcutta, the practice followed by the authorities is to stop traffic temporarily on well-known occasions when religious processions are taken through its streets. Such concessions to sectarian sentiment do not show that much progress has been made in even the commercial capital of India towards the evolution of a paramount civic consciousness before which every consideration of a sentimental nature must yield. Are we really progressing towards it at all, even slowly? Perhaps; perhaps not. Again, if concessions must be made, in the existing state of things, to largely expressed sectarian sentiment on stated occasions according to well-established practice, should the stoppage of traffic be condoned, if not sanctioned, on occasions of largely expressed ebullitions of public feeling brought about by temporary causes?

POSITION OF AN UNRECORDED CO-TENANT IN A RENT SALE.

BY MR. KHETTRANATH SINGH,
MUNSIFF OF RANCHI.

If the landlord desires to obtain a decree good against the land under the Bengal Tenancy Act, he must ordinarily, apart from any question of representation, implead all the co-tenants including the heirs or legal representatives of a deceased co-tenant. But for the purposes of a money decree, in the absence of any express agreement to the contrary, he is free under sec. 43 of the Contract Act to sue any or all of the tenants. This is the ruling of Sir N. R. Chatterjee, J., and Richardson, J., in 22 C. W. N. 289, which is a leading case on the point. The reasoning of the above proposition is succinctly expressed in the argument of the Vakil for the Appellant, which may thus be quoted:—(1) If lands are let out to two or more tenants, their liability to pay rent is joint and several. (2) If lands are let out to one or more tenants, and others become entitled to the tenancy right by purchase, the liability of the purchasers is joint and several. (3) If lands are let out to one tenant or more and their rights devolve upon many by reason of succession, their liability is joint and not joint and several. (4) If a joint decree be passed against many, it can be executed against any one (8 C. L. R. 34). The principal difference between a joint liability and a joint and several liability has been pointed out by Richardson, J., at p. 295 of the Report, with reference to sec. 43 of the Contract Act.

The above distinctions have to be remembered in order to appreciate the ratio decidendi of each ruling, because different results flow "where the Defendants were the representatives of a single tenant and not the co-tenants who had themselves contracted with the landlord." Thus, obviously referring to one of the above mentioned classes of tenancies, it is ruled by Sir Ashutosh Mookerjee, C. J., in 25 C. W. N. 525 at p. 527:—"Each tenant is not plainly liable for the entire rent and cannot be sued alone. Besides the Defendants are some of the representatives of the original tenant, all of whom constitute one body liable for the whole rent. Finally the tenancy must be represented in its entirety before a decree can be made binding on the tenure." The point which arose in 22 C. W. N. 289 did not arise there.

It is ruled in 13 C. W. N. 270 at p. 272 that in the case of tenures sold for arrears of rents, there are two distinct kinds of procedure:—(1) procedure under the Rent Act, where the whole tenure passed whoever might be interested in it; (2) procedure under the Civil Procedure Code where the thing which passes to the purchaser is the interest of the person against whom the decree has been made and no more. There are, however, exceptions to the general rule and these are cases where persons are sued in their representative capacity, which term includes (a) guardians of infants and (b) kastis in a joint Mitakshara family. 10 Cal. 996 is an instance in point of the latter class, where though the sale was under the Civil Procedure Code, the rent decree was obtained by the sole landlord for the entire rent of the tenure and the execution proceeding shows that the tenure was proceeded against and the whole tenure was actually sold. This ruling is followed in 26 Cal. 677 and both these rulings are founded on the doctrine of representation and the principle of estoppel. In 10 C. W. N. 176 at p. 181, it is ruled that it is for the landlord to prove everything which is necessary to bring his case within the exception to the general rule as enunciated in 26 Cal. 677. The same principle is observed by Sir Ashutosh Mookerjee, J., in 26 C. W. N. 138 at p. 139. Says his Lordship:—"In order to entitle the execution purchaser to invoke the aid of the principle enunciated in the case of 26 Cal. 677, which followed the rule recognised in 10 Cal. 996, it is not sufficient to show that the landlord has chosen to obtain a decree for rent against one out of several heirs. It has to be established that the tenants have held out one of them as representative in their transactions with the landlord . . . such co-owner would be affected by the sale even though they were not parties to the decree."

As pointed out in 25 C. W. N. 525,¹ cited above, in a case in which all tenants are not made parties, nor are properly represented, the defect cannot be cured by invoking the aid of sec. 99, Civil Procedure Code, because each tenant is not liable for the entire rent and cannot be sued alone.

Thus a Hindu reversioner, whether of the first or of the second set, as observed by the Right Hon'ble Ameer Ali in Amrit Narayan Singh v. Gaya Singh (1), "has no right or interest in presenti in the property which the female owner holds for her life. Until it vests in him on her death should he survive her, he has nothing to assign or to relinquish or even to transmit to his heirs. His right becomes concrete only on her demise; until then it is mere spes successionis. His guardian, if he happens to be a minor, cannot bargain with it on his behalf, or bind him by any contractual engagement in respect thereto." In default of all classes of reversionary heirs to the estate of a Hindu widow the Crown as ultimus heres has a right to step in and claim the estate, taking rather by escheat than by inheritance proper. Yet inasmuch as the Crown claims the same power as a reversioner would have of impeaching any unauthorized alienations by the widow it might as well be called a quasi-reversionary heir. "When by the Law applicable to the last owner," said their Lordships of the Privy Council in The Collector of Masulipatam's case (2), "there is a total failure of heirs the claim to the land ceases to be subject to any such personal law,--and there can be, legally speaking, no unowned property,—the law of escheat intervenes and prevails: private ownership not existing, the State must be owner as ultimate tort," to negative "the King's right," say, "to Brahminical property," (their Lordships were confronted with texts of Hindu Law making an exception in the case of Brahminical property), while, affirming "his title to the wealth of all other classes" of his subjects "in such circumstances," would be "the derogation of the general right of the British Sovereignty." This, however, by the way.

After all, the interest of a reversioner under the Hindu Law, all said and done, is as difficult to define as a widow's estate; the one is as anomalous as the other. The right of a Hindu reversioner is a contingency dependant on no man's will, but upon the happening of an uncertain event, that is, upon the chance of the reversioner surviving the widow and occupying at her death the position of heir to the last male owner. Nevertheless, "the law as to the situation of the reversionary heirs," as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Januki Ammal v. Narayan Aiyar (1), "is in substance quite clear; there is, as stated, no vesting at the death of the husband's death; and it follows that the questions of who is the nearest reversionary heir or what is the class of reversionary heirs fall to be settled at the date of the expiry of the ownership for life." The rule of Hindu Law with regard to the nature of the reversioner's right may have been subject to various forms of expression, but in substance it is not doubtful. A reversionary heir, although having only those contingent interests which are differentiated little, if at all, from a spes successionis, is recognized by our Courts as having a right to demand that the estate be kept free from waste and free from danger during its enjoyment by the widow or other owner for life.

Thus the terms "Reversion" and "Reversioner" which, although borrowed from the English Law of Real Property where they connote different incidents, are, as used in modern Hindu Law, free from doubt, and, by their continuous employment for a century or more as technical terms, have become almost classical.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

On the 6th February an application was made to the Board, consisting of VISCOUNTS HALDANE and CAVE, and LORD DUNEDIN, in the case of Lim Ho Seng v. The King, for special leave to appeal from a decision of the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements. The Appellant was convicted of murder and sentenced to death subject to the determination of a question of law by the Supreme Court. This question was as to whether what purported to be a voluntary confession of the prisoner, retracted by him at the trial, had been properly admitted as evidence. The Supreme Court held that although the method of taking the confession was not beyond reproach, yet in their opinion substantial justice had been done. The applicant now moved the Board for leave to appeal from this decision.

Their Lordships dismissed the application pointing out that their functions were not those of a Court of Criminal Appeal, and that inasmuch as there was evidence to go to the jury on which they could pronounce a verdict, the Board were unable to advise His Majesty to interfere with the result.

The case of Khajeh Sulaiman Quadir v. Nawab Sir Salimullah Bahadur, mentioned in my notes of last week, has occupied the attention of the Board since then, and still remains part-heard. This case was not heard on Tuesday (7th) owing to the absence of LORD DUNEDIN. An appeal from Allahabad, Ram Narayan v. Harnam Das was taken instead and heard by VISCOUNT CAVE, LORD SHAW, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMER ALI. Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dubé appeared for the Appellants and Mr. Parikh for the Respondents. The question in dispute was one of fact as to whether the property in which the Plaintiffs, Respondents, claimed a share was joint family property or the separate property of the Appellant.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit but it was decreed by the High Court on appeal. The Board upheld the decision of the High Court and dismissed the appeal without calling on the Respondents.

THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE (ACT V OF 1898) WITH NOTES AND COMMENTARIES. By G. P. Boys, B. A., LL. B. (Cantab), Bar-at-Law. New Edition, 1921. Printed and Published by the Pioneer Press, Allahabad.

It is refreshing to glance through this work which is marked by a methodical and systematic classification in all its details. The first volume which is very handy gives the text of the Act with a key to the annotation given in Vol. II. Vol. I not merely gives below each section numerical reference to the paragraphs of Vol. II, where the commentary and annotations are to be found but also to the corresponding sections of the Codes earlier than 1882 to which reference may with advantage be made. The amendments since 1882 are indicated in the text of the Code of 1898 itself. Such references to the previous Codes are very useful in determining the applicability of the earlier cases to the present Code. Any one handling the Code either in a Court of law or outside knows how very perplexing it is to use the various annotated editions both large and small. It is often a great relief to refer to the bare text of the Act itself. We congratulate the author for leaving us free to read the sections by themselves unencumbered by any notes and to form our own independent judgment in the first instance; and then as to our doubts, difficulties and misgivings, for giving us just the sort of help and guidance that one would like to have from one who has made a thorough study of the Code and the case-law on the subject. The chief merits of the author's annotation consists in the systematic arrangement of his notes and commentaries preceded by a syllabus. The syllabus to each section gives in skeleton all the important and material elements of the section itself and the general scope of its applicability. Against each item of the syllabus reference to the number of the paragraph of the annotation is given which enables one to find out at once the relevant passages and the case-law on the subject. Some of the more important sections such as sec. 145 have a general and a special syllabus, the former dealing with the general procedure and scope of the section and the latter analytically dealing with the material elements of the section. The labour that the author has bestowed in dealing with the text analytically and with the case-law synthetically, has enabled him to compress his annotations and commentaries within a very reasonable compass and avoid repetitions and other redundancies. The author does not satisfy himself by merely citing the cases or presenting them in the form of an abbreviated digest but very often introduces or supplements them by observations of his own which are conducive to an intelligent appreciation of the question of law or principle involved.

The great merit of this work is that it not merely gives a real guidance to find out one's law but also to form an intelligent appreciation of it.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Rights of Railway passengers.

The Indian Railways Act contains some provisions of a penal character which are no doubt necessary for the proper administration of the Railways but it is painful to see the abuse of these sections to the prejudice of the passengers. The case noted below is an instance in point—Ishwar Das v. King-Emperor, 1922 Pat. 63. The Petitioner was convicted under sec. 108 of the Railways Act for having caused the train while travelling to stop by means of the alarm signal. The reason for giving the signal by pulling the chain of his compartment was said by the accused to be that the compartment had become overcrowded on account of 70 passengers having entered into it, whereas the compartment was marked for 27 passengers only. He stated that the compartment in question was an Intermediate class compartment, whereas most of the passengers had only third class tickets. He further stated that at Dhanbad when his compartment became overcrowded, he complained to the Railway employees but received no attention and then when the train started he felt suffocating sensation and consequently he pulled the chain in order to stop the train. These facts were not disputed but the Magistrate found the accused guilty and convicted him as stated above evidently taking the view that there should have been a more serious case in order to entitle the accused to pull the chain, such as that stated by the guard of the train, namely, murder or fire.

One would fain credit public officers entrusted with magisterial duties in this country with a greater sense of proportion than was apparently shown in this case, which from the point of view of the public is one of very great importance. The evidence of the Railway guard on the other hand pointed to a deplorable lack of consideration on the part of the Railway administrators for the convenience and safety of the passengers. An individual Railway servant is not to be severely blamed if he simply expressed the opinion which he must have gathered to be the prevailing opinion amongst his comrades and superiors. It is startling to think that the Railway authorities should solemnly claim in a Court of law that when a compartment labelled to carry only 27 passengers is occupied by as many as seventy, in other words, is packed to suffocation, the occasion does not entitle a passenger to stop the train by giving the alarm signal. An examination of the provisions of the Act shows that under sec. 63 of the Act, it is the bounden duty of every Railway administration to fix, subject to the approval of the Governor-General in Council, the maximum number of passengers which may be carried in each compartment of every description and under sec. 93 of the Act the Railway Company is enjoined to comply with the provisions of sec. 63 on pain of a fine of Rs. 20 per diem. A corresponding obligation has been cast under sec. 109 of the Act upon passengers to prevent the over-crowding of a compartment which already contains the maximum number of passengers.

Now what does the penal provision in question, namely, sec. 108 lay down? It says that if a passenger without reasonable and sufficient cause makes use of, or interferes with, any means provided by a Railway administration for communication between passengers and Railway servants in charge of a train, he shall be punished. It is clear beyond doubt that the provisions of the Act noted above confer a right upon the occupants of a compartment to resist the entry of passengers in the circumstances which arose in the present case. His Lordship, Jwala Prasad, J., in setting aside the conviction delivered a very well-considered judgment and pointed out that in order to enforce this right every passenger is entitled to invoke the aid of the Railway officers in any station or of the officer in charge of the train when it is in motion or is not in any station and in the circumstances of the case the Petitioner did not act without reasonable and sufficient cause and sec. 108 of the Act consequently did not apply to the case.

This important decision on a point affecting the Railway-travelling public should be widely circulated to all Railway administrations and we invite the attention of the authorities to the following remarks of the learned Judge:—“The Railway people were guilty of negligence in not carrying out the provisions of the Act which are meant entirely for the safety and comfort of passengers and instead of thanking the Petitioner for having drawn their attention to it they prosecuted him and thus transferred their own liability to the shoulder of the Petitioner.”

POSITION OF AN UNRECORDED CO-TENANT IN A RENT SALE.

By MR. KHETTRANATH SINGH,
MUNSIF OF RANCHI.

In a case where a money decree was passed for arrears of rent by the trial Court against one only out of the heirs of the original tenant, it was ruled in 24 C. L. J. 371 that the entire decree could not stand inasmuch as it was not a case of a joint contract which might be enforced against any one of the joint contractors; but the Defendants became jointly interested by operation of law in a contract made by a single person. A similar question was considered in 15 C. W. N. 191 by Sir Ashutosh Mookerjee, J. At first sight, these rulings appear to conflict with the proposition of law enunciated in 22 C. W. N. 289 mentioned above but they are to be distinguishable mainly on the ground that the decree made against one only was set aside because it was inconsistent with the pleadings of that case and the written contract of the parties. This was the argument put forward at the Bar and was supported by Sir N. R. Chatterjea, J., at page 295. At page 296, Richardson, J., did not express any opinion and merely observed as follows:—“The question was decided in both cases on the footing that different considerations arose where the Defendants were the representatives of a single tenant and not the co-tenants who had themselves contracted with the landlord.” So far as the Province under the Patna High Court is concerned, 22 C. W. N. 289 has been followed in 5 P. L. J. 32 and 1 P. L. Times 55 in which it was ruled inter alia that there is no reason why a money decree cannot be passed. 15 C. W. N. 191 also reported in 12 C. L. J. 642 has been followed in 25 C. W. N. 525 mentioned above.

Thus, the ruling reported in 8 B. L. R. 1 that a Zamindar is bound to sue the actual tenant when known to him, though the tenant's name has not been registered in his sherista, appears to be still good law though of course it is subject to several exceptions some of which have already been mentioned above. In case of benamdar whose name was registered in the landlord's sherista, it was ruled by Sir N. R. Chatterjea, J., in 23 C. W. N. 166 notes that a person beneficially interested is bound by the rent decree against his benamdar. Such a case is, of course, founded on the above-mentioned doctrine of estoppel and representation. On the same principle it was ruled in 23 C. W. N. 136 notes (which is a single Judge ruling of Newbould, J.) that the landlord is bound to sue only the heirs in possession of the original tenant. Full argument of the ruling does not appear from the short notes reported therein, but apart from the question of representation, the above proposition appears to be somewhat broadly stated. Possibly the learned Judge means that those heirs being admittedly in possession of the land, were liable for the rent and that they could not defeat the landlord's suit merely by showing that there were other heirs equally liable unless they went further and showed that their names have been notified as successors of the original tenants or that they had been paying the rent and getting receipts as successors. See 3 C. W. N. 371. In 23 C. W. N. 590, it was ruled by Sir N. R. Chatterjea, J., that where a landlord obtained a decree for arrears of rents of a tenure against all the tenants who were the recorded tenants except one who, after acquiring title by purchase, never got his name registered in the landlord's sherista, the entire tenure passed by the sale in execution of such a decree. At page 592, his Lordship observed as follows:—

"During these seven years or more he has never asserted his rights as a tenant; and the finding is that he has never been recognised as a tenant nor was any rent realised from him."

Thus, though the landlord cannot arbitrarily choose one of the heirs of the original tenant and get a rent decree passed as distinguished from a mere money decree, he must have notice, actual or constructive, of the existence of other heirs of the original tenant. The actual notice includes the case of registration of the tenants' names in his sherista but its absence does not entitle any dishonest landlord to shut his eyes against the existence of actual heirs of the tenant, whose existence could have been known to him by the slightest enquiry. The position of the landlord is also not more favourable even if the name of the judgment-debtor alone was registered in the record-of-rights as the sole possessor of the rent-claimed land. This principle is deducible from 26 C. W. N. 138 at p. 140, a case which is distinguishable from 23 C. W. N. 136 notes, referred to above.

26 C. W. N. 138 is also an authority for the proposition that even omission by heirs of a tenure-holder to give the prescribed notice under sec. 15 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not entitle the landlord to recognise one of the heirs as the representative of the tenancy. It may, usefully, be remembered that there is no corresponding provision in the same Act in regard to occupancy holdings.

Thus, it seems to me that it is to the interest of both landlord and tenant to get the names of proper heirs of the late tenant registered in the landlord's office. In some parts of the country where relations between landlord and tenant are strained, the landlord refuses to register the heirs of the deceased tenant, except upon payment of a premium, sometimes at a high rate; which the latter are unable to pay or will not pay; but it seems to me that it is the landlord who suffers in the long run more than the unrecorded tenant for obvious reasons. The latter can defeat the landlord's rent decree-affecting the land by a plea of non-joinder of parties known to the landlord. The unrecorded heir may, however, avoid this litigation by entering into a compromise with the landlord, viz., by paying a reasonable premium and getting his name registered in the landlord's sherista.

The misunderstanding referred to above is the source of much fruitless litigation in the Mofussil Courts and unless it is avoided amicably, it is for the Legislature to intervene and fix a rate of premium for registration of the tenant's name, or declare such a demand on the part of the landlord as illegal.

(Concluded.)

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

During the past week the Board have concluded the hearing of Khajeh Sulhman Quadir v. Nawab Sir Salimullah Bahadur and have reserved their judgment.

On the 9th February judgment was delivered in the Patna Appeal, Rai Baijnath Goenka v. Maharajah Sir Rameshwar Prasad Singh. Their Lordships dismissed the appeal with costs.

At present the Board are hearing the arguments in certain appeals from Madras Sri Chidambara S. P. Sannadhiyal v. Veerama Reddi. These are five consolidated appeals in which questions are raised under the Madras Estates Land Act. The suits were brought for ejectment. Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellant. Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Dubé for the Respondents.

A somewhat similar question was raised in the case of Radhakrishna Ayyar v. Sundaraswami which was argued before the Board during the past week by Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Appellants and Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. and Mr. Parikh for the Respondents. This appeal originally came before the Board in December 1920 and was dismissed on the ground that the subject-matter was under Rs. 10,000 and there was nothing in the certificate to show that the High Court had exercised the discretion conferred on them by sec. 109 of the Civil Procedure Code (vide L. R. 48 T. A. 31). A fresh certificate had been granted by the High Court and the case again came before the Board. A preliminary objection was taken by Mr. DeGruyther that the value of the subject-matter was below Rs. 10,000 and there was no ground for appeal to His Majesty in Council. After hearing counsel the Board intimated that they would reserve this point and hear the appeal on the merits. Judgment was eventually reserved. The Board consisted of VISCOUNT CAVE, LORD SHAW, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMEER ALI.

Judgment was delivered by the Board on the 14th February in the case of Sripat Singh Dugar v. Rai Hari Ram Goenka, an appeal from Bengal. The Appellants are the representatives of the late Chatrapat Singh who died in 1918. In 1896 a decree was pronounced ex parte against Chatrapat and the questions in the appeal were whether an application by the decree-holder for execution of the decree was duly made and was not barred by limitation and could be prosecuted against the Appellants. These questions were answered by the lower Courts in the affirmative. The Board dismissed the appeal with costs, but ordered a declaration to be made saving the rights of the insolvency Receiver or Trustee.

DOES PAYMENT UNDER INSTALMENT DECREE REQUIRE ANY NOTICE UNDER OR. 21.

R. 1, C. P. C.?

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."
SIR,

In the mofussil, there exists diversity of practice as regards notice to be given to the decree-holder, when any payment is made into Court according to instalment-decree. Some Courts do not think it necessary to serve any such notice, while others insist upon the payment of costs for service of notice along with the deposit of the instalment-money, according to Or. 21, r. 1, sub-r. (2). The latter course does not seem to be reasonable and legal. Instalments are granted to persons who are hard up in pecuniary circumstances, and in a large proportion of cases, especially in the mofussil, the amount of instalments is often small, ranging from Rupee one upwards. If notice is insisted upon every time such a paltry amount is paid into Court, the poor judgment-debtor would have to pay each time 8 as. or Re. 1 extra as notice-fee, according as the total amount of claim is Rs. 50 or upwards. Moreover, there would be incidental expenses for having the notices written out, etc. The sub-rule referred to has been introduced in the new Code of 1908. Now let us see if the intention of the Legislature was such as to put additional burden on indigent judgment-debtors at every time they come to Court with their instalment-money.

The sub-rule runs as follows:—"Where any payment is made under cl. (a) of sub-r. (1), notice of such payment shall be given to the decree-holder." According to sub-r. (1) of r. 1, "All money payable under a decree shall be paid as follows, namely,--

(a) into the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree; or

(b) out of Court to the decree-holder; or

(c) otherwise as the Court which made the decree directs."

Now when an instalment-decree is passed, the Court directs payments of the decretal amount to be made by instalments at certain periods. So long as these periodical payments are made, no Court can execute the decree, and certainly during that period "it is not the duty of any Court to do so," as cl. (a) contemplates. So it can be said that cl. (a) does not apply to such cases. Cl. (b) is clearly out of the scope of such payments. The only clause which can be applied to payments under instalment-decree is cl. (c), which contemplates cases which do not come under the purview of the other two clauses. Instalment-payments are made according to the direction of the Court which makes the decree, and not according to the method described in cl. (a) or cl. (b). But the only clause for which notice has been provided is cl. (a). Hence no notice is required for payments under instalment-decree according to cl. (c).

The intention of the Legislature in making provision for notice in r. 1 seems to be that the running of interest on the decretal amount will cease as soon as the decree-holder will come to know of the deposit. In instalment-decrees generally no question of interest can arise as long as the periodical payments are regularly made according to the direction in the decree. So the non-service of notice will not affect any right of the decree-holder. Reference may in this connection be made to 42 Mad., p. 576 (Ramaraya Shanbogue v. Sherbott Venkataramanayya).

Under the circumstances, it seems proper that the anomaly in the practice which at present obtains in different Courts as regards notice in connection with payments under instalment-decree should be removed, and all Courts should follow a consistent procedure by dispensing with such notices.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Resignation of Mr. Montagu.

Mr. Montagu has been obliged to vacate his office as Secretary of State for India as the result of a most unfortunate Cabinet squabble. Into the merits of the point of etiquette which is the immediate cause of his resignation, we have no inclination to enter, for intrinsically they are of no importance, however large they may appear at this moment in the eyes of those immediately concerned. India, frankly, is more exercised over the severance of Mr. Montagu's connection with the India Office than the causes which have led to it. Mr. Montagu was at the helm of the affairs of India at a most critical period of her history. He was unquestionably the only Secretary of State who, fortunately for himself and India, had the opportunity (of which he fully availed himself) of acquainting himself at first hand with the manifold difficulties that beset the governance of India in a spirit of equity and justice; and we may affirm without fear of contradiction that no Secretary of State for India has shown himself more genuinely inspired by sympathy for Indian feelings and aspirations than Mr. Montagu. No Indian under his regime had the galling experience of feeling that, in the eyes of the Minister in charge, he was an inferior being; and no British statesman has done more than Mr. Montagu towards assuring to the Indian equality of status within the Empire with his other fellow-subjects. And yet Mr. Montagu was a strong man who, every Indian felt, would never allow himself to be carried off his feet by weakly sentimentalism whether in favour of a person or of a political creed. It was his genuine sympathy for the Indian people and his real understanding of the basic problems of Indian politics that gave him this strength, and the fact that he failed to satisfy any single body of Indian opinion completely, testifies to his strength, and impartiality. Thoughtful Indians, whilst they did not naturally endorse every single item that figured in his policy, yet never lost that saving confidence in him which led them to expect that he would not consciously or unconsciously swerve from what is ultimately for the benefit of India and of the Empire as a whole.

The loss to India of the services of a statesman who could be unceasingly wide-awake without being fussily interfering, sympathetic without being weak, and tactful without yielding on matters which are really essential, at a time when her destinies are being hammered into shape by forces which need the most careful guidance, is incalculable, but the loss to the Empire is even greater. Those who rejoice at his resignation do not realise the difficulties which the Government will experience, and is perhaps experiencing at this moment, in finding for him a suitable successor. We are not aware of any single British statesman whose past records are such as will entitle him to command a degree of confidence at all approaching that which Mr. Montagu enjoyed amongst almost every shade of Indian opinion, official and non-official. There is no room at the present moment for either a weak or a hectoring Secretary of State, and even men like Lord Derby whose name has been mentioned in this connection may well hesitate and take counsel before making up their mind to accept the appointment. This is not the time for governing India by party shibboleths or by the petty tricks of politicians. It needs large-hearted statesmanship and strength to defy cowardly counsel from friends and foes alike. We earnestly hope that Mr. Montagu's passing from the India office will not mean his entire withdrawal from Indian politics and we are fully confident that nothing that has happened will stand in the way of his placing his experience, his sympathies and his commanding abilities at the disposal of India, whenever and from whatever quarter the call may come.

THE HINDU LAW OF REVERSIONS AND REVERSIONERS.

I.—DOCTRINES AND MODES OF ACCELERATION OF REVERSIONARY ESTATES.

$ (i)—Acceleration by Renunciation of the World.

Not only upon the demise of a widow, or other limited heir, but upon her renunciation of worldly affairs, which is accounted a species of civil death according to Hindu Law (1), inheritance, in effect, by anticipation as it were, attaches upon her estate, and the rights of the nearest reversionary heir or heirs for the time being of the last full owner immediately begin to exist (2).

Thus a person—(the sex is immaterial)—who is clearly proved to have completely and finally abandoned all worldly concerns, as by entering into an order of religion, is excluded from inheritance (1). This rule does not apply to the sects of Hindus known as Byragees (2) and Gossains (3) because they pursue secular occupations, nor, apart from usage, to Sudra ascetics because Sudras are denied by the Hindu Canon Law the right to enter the order of Yati or Sanyasi. Moreover the Sanskrit texts which ordain forfeiture of secular estate or inheritance in the case of ascetics apply only to the three higher "regenerate" castes (4). In fact inheritance is the general rule and disinheritance the exception, and, consequently, the burden of proving the exception may legitimately be laid upon the party who relies upon it. This is all the more reasonable since Hindu asceticism admits of degrees, but what degree of asceticism or renunciation does or does not work disinheritance, or forfeiture of property is a question of fact to be proved by the party pleading the affirmative (5).

As early as 1852, in the case of Radha Binode Misser v. Kripamoyee Debia and others (6) the question was raised and answered in the affirmative as to whether one Taramonee, having relinquished all connection with worldly affairs by becoming Tarik-i-dooniya or Teerth-basi, was to be regarded as civilly dead. Inter alia the Court declared, firstly, no particular acts are enjoined by the Hindu religion to render a renunciation of the nature valid, and, secondly, as to the particular ceremonies necessary for one becoming a Byraghin (i.e., a Sanyasini), they are not so important as to render the renunciation invalid, merely for want of notice thereof.

In Indoo Monee Debee v. Saroda Prosunno Mookerjee (7), Jackson, J., observed: "On the occasion of a widow becoming a Byraghin (or Sanyasini) the estate would at once descend to the nearest heirs living at the time."

The authority for the proposition is the case of Hafeezun-nissa Begum v. Radha Binode Misser (8), which laid down that "a widow can, by adopting a certain form of religious life, N. B.—At the end of the para. headed "serenithy," page liv. (Vol. 26 C. W. N. No. 14) read—"All these several propositions enunciated in Sakyahani v. Bhavani (1. L. R. 27 Mad. 588), since overruled by Challagundia v. Madala (1. L. R. 41 Mad. 659, F. B.), are the logical conclusions to which the doctrine that one reversioner does not derive title from another reversioner could be pushed; but, having regard to the outstanding fact of identity of interest on the part of the general body of reversioners, near and remote, in the preservation of the reversion the right to carry on a suit brought by a reversioner to impeach an alienation by a qualified owner may on his death legitimately devolve on 'the next presumable reversioner,' (Venkatanarayana v. Subammal, 1. L. R. 28 Mad. 406 (411), P. C.). "Such a suit brought by the presumptive reversioner," (or, where permitted, by any other reversioner), "is in a representative capacity and on behalf of all the reversioners," (ibid. Janaki v. Narayana Sani, 1. L. R. 39 Mad. 684, P. C.). Therefore, the decision in such a suit, provided it has been honestly conducted, would operate as res judicata against the other reversioners, i.e., they would all be equally affected by the rule of res judicata. (Challagundia v. Madala, see supra; also Brojo Kishore v. Sreenath, 9 W. R. 423 (465); Cheruvolu v. Cheruvolu, 1. L. R. 29 Mad. 394 (401), F. B. and Narayana v. Ruma, 1. L. R. 38 Mad. 396).

divest herself of the estate and accelerate its devolution on the next heir in her life-time."

Whether the adoption of any particular form of religious life by the widow has or has not that effect is, of course, a question of fact and must depend upon the circumstances of each case. Until the estate renounced has got legally vested in the next reversioner the widow may at any time, unless otherwise precluded from doing so, resume her own. In every such case of disputed renunciation of worldly affairs by the widow the factum as well as the nature of the renunciation should be determined by an issue framed accordingly.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The Board continued the hearing of the appeal in Sri Chidambara Sivaprakasa Pandara Sannadhigal v. Veerama Reddi and connected appeals on the 16th and 17th instant, and will deliver a considered judgment.

The Madras appeal of E. Oppenheim & Co. v. Haji Mahomed Hancef, which was argued before LORDS SUMNER, WRENBURY and CARSON on December 1st was re-argued on February 17th before VISCOUNT CAVE, LORDS SHAW and PHILLIMORE, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMER ALI. The questions raised will probably be of considerable importance to the commercial community. The contest between the parties related to the construction of the Arbitration Clause in a Contract for the sale of goods. Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Harold Morris, K. C. appeared for the Appellants (ex parte). Judgment has been reserved.

Sheo Darshan Sing v. Deputy Commissioner of Partabgarh, consolidated appeals from Oudh, were argued before the Board on the 17th and 20th instant. The suits were brought by the Plaintiff-Respondent as Court of Wards on behalf of reversioners to recover possession of properties alienated by the late Raja Rampal Singh, on the ground that the latter never had more than a life estate. The suits were dismissed by the trial Court but on appeal were decreed by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. Mr. S. Hyam appeared for the Appellant. Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dubé for the Respondent. The Board (VISCOUNT CAVE, LORD SHAW, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMER ALI) dismissed the appeal without calling on the Respondents and intimated that they agreed entirely with the findings of the Judicial Commissioners.

Abdul Ghani v. Fakhr Jahan Begam, an appeal from Oudh dealing with the construction of an alleged deed of gift, is now part heard before the same Board. Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown are for the Appellants and Mr. Dubé for the Respondents.

The Board will not sit again until the 27th instant, and will not sit on February 28th or March 1st.

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before CHATTERJEA and PEARSON, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2250 of 1919. JAMINI MOHON SARCAR and others, Plaintiffs, Appellants v. CHAITANYA CHANDRA PROHORAJ and others, Defendants, Respondents. The 9th February 1922.

Or. XXII, r. 4, C. P. C.—Death of one of several Defendants, Respondents—Abatement.

The Plaintiffs brought a suit against a large number of Defendants for declaration that the Defendants had no niskar (rent-free) right to Mouza Kataldale and for recovery of khas possession thereof. Some of the Defendants in their written statement sated inter alia that they were interested in specific plots of land and some of them filed a solenama in which separate boundaries were given of lands in their possession. The trial Court dismissed the suit on a preliminary ground which was found erroneous by the District Judge on appeal. But at the time of the hearing of the appeal the Defendants took the objection that the Defendant-Respondent No. 20 had died six months ago, and his heirs not having been brought on the record in time, the appeal against the heirs of the deceased Defendant had abated and therefore the whole suit should also fail. On the authority of the rulings reported in XI C. W. N. 501; XVIII Indian Cases 182; XXI Indian Cases 951 and XXXII Indian Cases 829, the District Judge gave effect to the contention and held that in the absence of anything from which the interests of the several Defendants can be discriminated the whole suit must be dismissed :

Held—That the whole suit should not be dismissed. The suit shall fail only so far as the deceased was jointly interested with the other Defendants. With regard to those plots which the Defendants held separately from the deceased the suit shall not fail. The suit shall be dismissed with regard to those plots in which the deceased had share.

Babus Panchanon Ghose and Jatindra Nath Sanyal for the Appellants.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Bysack and Babu Narendra Nath Chowdhury for the Respondents.

Appeal allowed;
Case remanded.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before RICHARDSON and GHOSE, JJ. CIVIL RULE No. 515 OF 1921. RAJ KUMAR MUKERJI, Petitioner v. W. J. GODFREY, Opposite Party. The 26th January 1922.

Act IX of 1897—Provident fund if attachable by a creditor after the member retires from service.

The Opposite Party while in service of the Eastern Bengal State Railway borrowed from the Petitioner some money for which a decree for Rs. 850 was obtained against him. In March 1921 the Opposite Party retired from service. He had a sum of Rs. 1,400 to his credit in the Provident Fund after his retirement. The Petitioner applied to attach his interest in the Provident Fund in the hands of the Chief Auditor of the Railway Co., who had the monies in the Provident Fund standing to the credit of the Opposite Party. The Small Causes Court attached this fund but on the Chief Auditor objecting that these monies could not be attached in law the attachment was withdrawn by the Small Causes Court Judge by his order against which the Petitioner moved the High Court and obtained this Rule. The Rules of the fund provided that on retirement the monies standing to the credit of a member is to be handed over to him on demand.

Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitter for the Petitioner submitted that Act IX of 1897 as amended by Act IX of 1903 has made compulsory deposits not liable to attachment. But "compulsory deposits" is defined in sec. 2 to mean "monies . . . which are not payable on the demand of the member." R. 10 was modified by the Government which expressly recognized the right of attachment of a creditor after the member retired from service. Hence from that time the fund ceased to be compulsory deposit within the meaning of sec. 4 and was therefore attachable.

Babus D. N. Chakraverty and Surendra N. Guha as amici curie.

Held—That on the materials placed the fund was attachable after the member retired from service.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before WALMSLEY and SUHRAWARDY, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1006 of 1921. MANOBILASH BANNERJEA, Petitioner v. KUSUM KAMINI DEBI. The 13th January 1922.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 247—Order of revival of case after acquittal, legality of.

One Kusum Kamini Debi brought a complaint in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Howrah against Manobilash Bannerjea under sec. 341, I. P. C. (wrongful restraint) and summons was issued accordingly. On the day fixed for hearing neither the complainant nor the accused was present and the Deputy Magistrate Mr. D. Dutt acquitted the accused under sec. 247, Cr. P. Code. On that very day the complainant made a petition for revival on the allegation that she was not aware that the case will be tried by D. Dutt, Esq. The Magistrate in charge ordered the case to be put up before Mr. F. C. Chatterjea who on the following day admitted the application and revived the case and directed issue of fresh summons on the same charge. The accused Manobilash moved the High Court on the ground that the order of revival was bad in law and neither the Sub-Divisional Magistrate nor the trying Magistrate could revive the proceedings.

Their Lordships made the rule absolute holding that the order of revival was bad in law after the order of acquittal under sec. 247, Cr. P. C. was once passed.

Babu Lalit Mohon Bannerjea (with Babu Durga Charan Ray Chaudhuri) for the Petitioner.

Babu Girija Prasanna Ray for the Complainant Opposite Party.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Bond fide claim of right in proceeding under sec. 133, Cr. P. C., whether vests jurisdiction of Criminal Court.

We greatly apprehend that the Full Bench decision in Ram Sagar Mondal v. Alek Naskar, reported in this issue (p. 442), will go a great way towards unsettling a practice which on the whole is salutary and which has been followed without noticeable departures for several decades. There may be no difficulty in conceding (as indeed the Vakil who appeared to support this practice is said to have done) that it is putting the case too high to say that whenever a Defendant in such a proceeding sets up a claim in which he himself bond fide believes, the Magistrate's jurisdiction is entirely ousted. It may also be true, as suggested by Richardson, J., in his interesting résumé of the origin and history of the extreme doctrine of ouster of jurisdiction, that it owed its existence in England to conditions which no longer obtain in that country, and which perhaps have never prevailed in British India. It is on the other hand undoubtedly a fact, as is pointed out by Richardson, J., that the practice, as settled by a long course of decisions of the High Court, has for years been for Magistrates to desist from pursuing the procedure under Chap. X of the Criminal Procedure Code, whenever they have been satisfied that the Defendant's claim of the pathway being his private property is a bond fide one, irrespective of the further question whether such claim is reasonable or not; and we cannot but share his Lordship's doubts as to the expediency of altering this practice by a decision of a Full Bench, specially as the Legislature is at this moment engaged in revising the Code. We take it, however, that his Lordship and Newbould, J. (who concurs with him), though they join with the Chief Justice and Teunon, J., in repudiating the extreme doctrine of a bond fide claim of right depriving the Magistrate of his jurisdiction, do not condemn the practice according to which Magistrates as a rule refrain from proceeding, except in cases of urgency, and we observe with pleasure that C. C. Ghose, J., at any rate, has expressly stated that whenever the Magistrate finds that there is a real or substantial question of right to be tried between the parties, the Magistrate should stay his hand, and leave the matter to be decided by the Civil Court. In his short judgment, Teunon, J., has made no attempt to disguise his view that any reference to the bond fides of the Defendant's claim (which finds no place in the terms of the section itself) is irrelevant, and the large reliance placed by his Lordship the Chief Justice on the rule laid down in Bank of England v. Vagliano (1891) A. C. 107 at p. 144, for the interpretation of consolidating and amending statutes, leaves hardly any room for doubt that his Lordship the Chief Justice inclines towards the same view. Thus, if we have understood the judgments of their Lordships correctly, the Full Bench gives no definite lead upon the question whether the practice heretofore uniformly followed of not pushing on proceedings under sec. 133, Cr. P. C., whenever a bond fide claim of property is set up in defence is to be henceforth discontinued altogether or only judiciously followed, and if followed, in what classes of cases. This, we consider, is unfortunate. The matter we think should be taken up by the Legislature and the uncertainty removed before the revision of the Act is completed.

THE HINDU LAW OF REVERSIONS AND REVERSIONERS.

* § (ii)—Acceleration by Disclaimer, Repudiation, or Voluntary Abandonment of Inheritance.

Not only upon the demise or renunciation of worldly concerns, but upon her disclaimer of an inheritance by a limited heir it vests in the next reversionary heir alive at the time.

Indeed, as observed in Soorja v. Bhowance Deen (1), "it would be contrary to judicial usage and precedent to allow him"—the sex does not matter—"to claim or hold for his own benefit an inheritance which he disowned and repudiated when desirous of avoiding the liabilities connected therewith."

Whatever may be the motive for such disclaimer or abdication of her rights by a Hindu widow, whether it be her inability to hold and manage the inheritance by reason of her sex and habit of seclusion, or any other cause, she is thereby divested of her estate which immediately devolves upon the nearest, reversionary heir living at the time as completely as in the case of a natural dissolution.

Of course cases of disclaimer of inheritances by widows or other limited heirs are rare, but for such a disclaimer to be effective, should it ever arise, the intention must be clear and final. The line between a disclaimer of this kind, and a refusal by a widow to assert her rights, thereby endangering the reversion, cannot be drawn in the abstract, but each case must depend upon its own peculiar circumstances. In the last-mentioned case, for instance, the immediate reversioner may have any part of her estate, suffered by her to be adversely put out of her possession, reduced to her own, or get himself put into possession of the same as receiver-manager on her behalf. Thus in the case of Guncsh Dutt v. Lal Muttee Koor (2), the widow refused to assert her right to possession of her husband's estate as against an adverse holder, alleging her husband was not separate, but a member of a joint family at the time of his death. The next reversioner, the daughter in this case, was put by the Court into possession of the estate as manager during the widow's life-time (3). In cases of this kind where the reversioner himself is appointed receiver-manager by the Court, the reversion is not, it should be borne in mind, accelerated thereby. As was directed in Adi Deo v. Dukharan (1), the reversioner-manager must "file accounts in and pay the income to her (the widow) through such Court."

An adopted son may, it may be observed here, renounce his interest in the estate which became vested in him by virtue of his adoption, or may waive any of his rights therein (2), or he may renounce his status as an adopted son (3).

Upon such renunciation or waiver the reversioner who would take in default of adoption would succeed to the estate (4).

§ (iii)—Acceleration by surrender of the life-estate.

"The succession of females according to Hindu law," it was observed in Gunga Pershad Kur v. Shumbhoonath Burman (5), "is not regular succession and is not founded upon the ordinary theory of a spiritual benefit." (If they succeed at all, they do so by virtue of express texts (6) or local usage). "Therefore, if they relinquish their rights in favour of the reversioner the case is again brought back to the normal state of succession (7), the effect being to vest in him a complete title (8)."

This is technically called Acceleration of estate by surrender, or relinquishment. Thus, according to Hindu law, a widow in possession cùn relinquish and, by relinquishing, anticipate for the reversioners their period of succession (9). "Where a Hindu widow," to use the language of Tudball, J., in Rup Ram v. Rewati (10), "gives property inherited from her husband to a person who, if she were to die at once, would take the property whether with a life-estate, or a full estate, her gift would only be tantamount to relinquishment of her rights and acceleration of the persons next entitled to possession after her."

The term "surrender" has been grafted on to Hindu law from the British system of jurisprudence, but the principle of surrender itself is not a mangrel rule of law: it is well-recognized by all the Schools of Hindu law and is indigenous to our system.

"So far as the doctrine of surrender is concerned," observed Kumaraswami, J., in Nachiappa v. Rangasami (1), there is no express authority to be found for it in the Smritis or in the Mitakshara. The text of Katyana, accepted by all the commentators as authoritative, expressly states that the widow is to enjoy the estate of her husband with moderation until her death, and that after her the husband's heirs should take it. An anticipation of interest involved by the theory of relinquishment (or surrender), or a defeasance of ulterior interests by intermediate or premature acts on the part of the widow is hardly contemplated by the Smritis. As pointed out by (Golap) Sirkar, the rule probably originated from the doctrine that retirement from the world, or extinction of one's desire for property is, according to Hindu law, civil death and causes, in the same way as natural death, the extinction of her rights in property, and has the effect of accelerating the inheritance. The theory of acceleration of the estate by surrender by the widow has been evolved by the Calcutta High Court from the Dayabhaga of Jimuta Vahan."

"The only text" (on the subject), similarly observed Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in the same case [Nachiappa v. Rangasami (2)], "is that of the "Dayabhaga" (3): "Therefore," it thus runs, "those persons, who are exhibited in a passage above-cited as the next heirs, on failure of prior claimants," (i.e., nearer heirs than themselves in the line of succession)," shall, in like manner as they would have succeeded if the widow's right had never taken effect, equally succeed to the residue of the estate remaining after her use of it upon the death of the widow in whom the succession had vested."

"The above text, as pointed out by Mookerjee, J., in Debiprosad v. Golap Bhagat (1), is "comprehensive enough to include not merely the case of the death of the widow, but all cases where her right ceases." "Now the aim of the text," Mr. Justice Aiyar declares, "is to enable female heirs to divest themselves of the temporal responsibility of managing an estate during their lives, and, by surrendering possession and management, to accelerate the succession of the immediate reversioner. It, therefore stands to reason that if this object is to be achieved the whole of the estate should be surrendered. The rule should not be so worked as to place in the hands of the widow a weapon—the weapon of partial surrender "by which she can attain temporal advantages to herself, and to those whom she favours at the expense of the heir on whom the succession will devolve on her death."

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The Judicial Committee on the 27th February gave judgment in the Punjab appeal Chhajju Ram v. Neki & ors., which concerned a claim to a right of pre-emption and which incidentally raised the whole question of the powers of review of the Court under Or. 47, r. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The judgment of the Board, consisting of VISCOUNT HALDANE, VISCOUNT CAVE, LORD DUNEDIN, LORD SHAW, LORD PHILLIMORE, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMEER ALI, was delivered by VISCOUNT HALDANE. Their Lordships held that the words used in r. 1 of Or. 47 must be read as in themselves "definitive of the limits within which review to-day is permitted" and continue: "The three cases in which alone mere review is permitted are those of new material overlooked by excusable misfortune, mistake or error apparent on the face of the record, or any other sufficient reason," and they go on to interpret the words "any other sufficient reason" as meaning "a reason sufficient on grounds at least analogous to those specified immediately previously." The Board accordingly upheld the contention of the Appellants that the lower Court in setting aside on review the decision of another bench of the Chief Court had exceeded their powers. The appeal was argued ex parte by Sir George Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. B. Dubé.

The appeal from Oudh, Abdul Ghani Khan v. Musammatt Fakhr Jahan Begum and the Allahabad appeal, Chet Ram v. Ram Singh, are both part-heard.

Judgment was delivered this morning in the Patna Appeal, Khajeh Sulamian Quadir v. Nawab Sir Salimullah Bahadur. Their Lordships allowed the appeal and directed that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge should be reserved.

Two important prize decisions were given by the Judicial Committee recently in the cases of the "Blonde" and "Pellworm." The former is a ruling which affects most of the enemy shipping seized in British Ports at the outbreak of war. The Board having taken into consideration the obligations under the Hague Convention and the Treaty of Versailles held that ships under 1600 tons which had been so seized or their appraised value if lost while under requisition by the Admiralty, should be handed over to the claimants.

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before CHATTERJEA and PANTON, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2134 OF 1919. SHEIKH SAMAN BEPARI and others, Plaintiffs, Appellants v. SHEIKH IMAMUDDIN and others, Defendants, Respondents. The 2nd June 1921.

Suit for injunction by three out of five mutwalis of a wakf property—The other two joined as Defendants—The trust deed providing for disagreement—Is the suit maintainable?

The appeal arose out of a suit by the Plaintiffs to obtain an injunction restraining the Defendant No. 1, from raising a pucca building on a certain wakf property. There are five mutwalis of a wakf property, three of them were the Plaintiffs, the remaining two joined as Defendants. The trust deed provides that the mutwalis should act in unity and in case of disagreement, the matter to be placed before the congregation at the mosque and the mutwalis should do what the majority of the Panchayat would decide. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on two grounds. The lower Appellate Court on appeal held that the suit was not maintainable by three out of five mutwalis. The learned Judge held that there was disagreement between the Plaintiffs and two Defendants. The lease to Defendant No. 4 was agreed to by the Panchayat. The Plaintiffs disapproved the lease. An appeal was preferred to the High Court. It was urged on behalf of the Appellants that disagreement between the trustees took place at the time of granting the mirasi lease which was subsequent to the institution of the suit. The suit was brought in the first week of Chaitra and was decided against Defendant No. 1 who had commenced the building. Temporary injunction was issued on the 10th Chaitra and the Defendant No. 4 was granted a mirasi lease with the approval of the Panchayat by Defendant Nos. 2 and 3. On the 15th Chaitra Defendant No. 1 surrendered the holding to the mutwalis Defendant Nos. 2 and 3 and on 18th Chaitra executing a kobala in favour of Defendant No. 4 left the building. The document was alleged to be a collusive one and the Defendant No. 1 ceased to have any connection with the building. The first Court doubting the bona fides of the transaction found that the Defendant No. 1 had no connection with the building.

Held—That the Plaintiffs who are some of the mutwalis are competent to maintain the suit, having made the other trustees Defendants who by their own acts precluded themselves from being joined as Plaintiffs. The learned Judge is not right in the view he has taken. The point as to disagreement not being clear the case is sent back for further consideration.

Bengal Act IV of 1922 122vii

REVIEWS 122x

REPORTS (See Index.)

Court-fees, enhancement of.

The Bengal Court Fees Amendment Act which has introduced numerous changes in the scale of fees leviable upon documents to be presented or filed in Court comes into operation from the 1st of April next. Yet, it was only on the 29th March last that the Act was published in an extraordinary issue of the Calcutta Gazette. This, it goes without saying, will cause immense inconvenience to the litigant public and their advisers. So far as litigants and legal practitioners on the Appellate Side of the High Court are concerned, it should be observed that besides the general increase in ad valorem fee in suits and appeals the value of which exceeds Rs. 75, the most notable changes are the following:—(1) Applications or petitions presented to the High Court under sec. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure for revision of an order, when the value of the suit to which it relates does not exceed Rs. 1,000, are to be charged with a duty of Rs. 5 whilst similar applications when the value of the suit exceeds Rs. 1,000 are to be charged with Rs. 10. (2) All memorandums of appeal when not directed against a decree or an order having the force of a decree and presented to the High Court must henceforth bear a stamp of Rs. 5, in other words all appeals from orders as such are chargeable with a court-fee of Rs. 5. The impression generally prevailing that all petitions in the High Court and Vakalatnamas presented in the said Court must bear enhanced court-fee stamp is erroneous. Vakalatnamas as also petitions other than revision petitions mentioned above remain chargeable with a court-fee of Rs. 2 only as formerly. The probate duty, it should be noticed, has been enhanced, but the limit of exemption has been raised from Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 2,000. The text of the operative portion of this Act (omitting the Schedule of ad valorem fees) is printed in this number to facilitate reference.

Of equal interest to all branches of the profession practising in the High Court is the provision of the Bengal Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1922, amending Art. 30 of Sch. I of the Act of 1899, which runs as follows:—

Schedule I A.

30. Entry as an advocate, vakil and attorney on the rolls of any High Court in exercise of powers conferred on such Court by Letters Patent or by the Legal Practitioners Act. ..

(a) In the case of an advocate or vakil—seven hundred and fifty rupees.

(b) In the case of an attorney—five hundred rupees.

Exemption.

Entry of an advocate, vakil or attorney on the rolls of any High Court, when he has previously been enrolled in a High Court.

BENGAL ACT IV OF 1922.

The Bengal Court-fees (Amendment) Act, 1922.

An Act to amend the Court-fees Act, 1870, and the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, with reference to the scale of court-fees in Bengal.

WHEREAS it is necessary to revise the scale of court-fees for Bengal, by amendment of the Court-fees Act, 1870, and the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, in their application to Bengal, in the manner hereinafter appearing;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. (1) This Act may be called the Bengal Court-fees (Amendment) Act, 1922.

(2) It extends to the whole of Bengal.

(3) It shall come into force on the first day of April, 1922.

2. The Court-fees Act, 1870, as amended by subsequent legislation, and the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, as amended by subsequent legislation, shall be amended, in their application to Bengal, in the manner hereinafter provided.

3. In sec. 18 of the Court-fees Act, 1870, for the words "a fee of eight annas" the words "a fee of one rupee" shall be substituted.

4. In item viii in sec. 19 of the same Act for the words "one thousand rupees" the words "two thousand rupees" shall be substituted.

5. For Art. 1 in the first schedule to the same Act the following shall be substituted, namely:—

When the amount or Six annas.

value of the subject-matter in dispute does not exceed seventy-five rupees, for every five rupees or part thereof of such amount or value,

and when such amount or Eight annas.

value exceeds seventy-five rupees, for every five rupees or part thereof, in excess of seventy-five rupees, up to one hundred rupees,

and

when such amount or One rupee value exceeds one hundred rupees, for every ten rupees, or part thereof, in excess of one hundred rupees, up to one hundred and fifty rupees,

and

when such amount or One rupee value exceeds one hundred and fifty rupees, for every ten rupees, or part thereof, up to one thousand rupees,

and when such amount or Seven rupees value exceeds one thousand rupees, for every one hundred rupees, or part thereof, in excess of one thousand rupees, up to seven thousand five hundred rupees,

and when such amount or Fifteen value exceeds seven thousand five hundred rupees, for every two hundred and fifty rupees, or part thereof, in excess of seven thousand five hundred rupees, up to ten thousand rupees,

and when such amount or Twenty-two value exceeds ten thousand rupees, for every five hundred rupees, or part thereof, in excess of ten thousand rupees, up to twenty thousand rupees,

Plaint, etc.—contd.]

and

when such amount or Thirty-value exceeds twenty thousand rupees, for every one thousand rupees, or part thereof, in excess of twenty thousand rupees, up to fifty thousand rupees,

and

when such amount or Thirty-seven value exceeds fifty thousand rupees, for every five thousand rupees, or part thereof, in excess of fifty thousand rupees:

Provided that the maximum fee leviable on a plaint or memorandum of appeal shall be ten thousand rupees."

"1. Plaint, written statement, pleading, a set-off or counter-claim or memorandum of appeal (not otherwise provided for in this Act) or of cross-objection presented to any Civil or Revenue Court except those mentioned in section 3.

6. In the third column in Art. 6 in the same schedule to the same Act,—

(a) for the words "Four annas," opposite cl. (a) in the second column, the words "Six annas" shall be substituted; and

(b) for the words "Eight annas," opposite the first item in cl. (b) in the second column, the words "Twelve annas" shall be substituted, and for the words "One rupee," opposite the second item in that clause, the words "One rupee eight annas" shall be substituted.

7. For the entries above the proviso in the second column, and for the entries in the third column in Art. 11 in the same schedule to the same Act, the following shall be substituted, namely:—

"When the amount or value Two per centum on such of the property in respect of which the grant of probate or letters is made exceeds two thousand rupees, but does not exceed ten thousand rupees,

and when such amount or value exceeds ten thousand rupees, but does not exceed fifty thousand rupees, for the portion of such amount or value which is in excess of ten thousand rupees,

and when such amount or value exceeds fifty thousand rupees, but does not exceed a lakh of rupees, for the portion of such amount or value which is in excess of fifty thousand rupees,

• and when such amount or value exceeds a lakh of rupees, for the portion of such amount or value which is in excess of a lakh of rupees amount or value.

Three per centum on such amount or value.

Four per centum on such amount or value.

Five per centum on such amount or value."

8. For the entry in the second column in Art. 12 in the same schedule to the same Act, and for the first paragraph in the third column in the said Article, the following shall be substituted, namely:—

"When the amount or value of any debt or security specified in the certificate under section 8 of the Act exceeds one thousand rupees, but does not exceed ten thousand rupees, and

when such amount or value exceeds ten thousand rupees, but does not exceed fifty thousand rupees, for the portion of such amount or value which is in excess of ten thousand rupees, and

when such amount or value exceeds fifty thousand rupees, but does not exceed a lakh of rupees, for the portion of such amount or value which is in excess of fifty thousand rupees, and

when such amount or value exceeds a lakh of rupees, for the portion of such amount or value which is in excess of a lakh of rupees.

Two per centum on such amount or value and three per centum on the amount or value of any debt or security to which the certificate is extended under section 10 of the Act.

Three per centum on such amount or value and four-and-a-half per centum on the amount or value of any debt or security to which the certificate is extended under section 10 of the Act.

Four per centum on such amount or value and six per centum on the amount or value of any debt or security to which the certificate is extended under section 10 of the Act.

Five per centum on such amount or value and seven-and-a-half per centum on the amount or value of any debt or security to which the certificate is extended under section 10 of the Act."

9. For the table of rates of ad valorem fees leviable on the institution of suits, at the end of the same schedule to the same Act, the table set forth in the schedule to this Act shall be substituted.

10. In Art. 1 in the second schedule to the same Act—

(a) in cl. (a) after the words "Municipal Commissioner" in the third entry in the second column the words "or member of a District Board" shall be inserted;

(b) (i) for the words "One anna," opposite cl. (a) in the second column, the words "Two annas" shall be substituted;

(ii) for the words "Eight annas," opposite cl. (b) in the second column, the following shall be substituted, namely:—

"In the case of a complaint or charge of an offence presented to a criminal court one rupee, and in other cases twelve annas"; and

(iii) for the words "One rupee," opposite cl. (c) in the second column, the words "One rupee eight annas" shall be substituted.

11. For cl. (d) in the second column in Art. 1 in the same schedule to the same Act, and for the entries opposite that clause in the third column thereof, the following clause and entries shall be substituted, namely:—

"(d) (i) When presented to the High Court under sec. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for revision of an order—

(a) when the value of the ... Five rupees. suit to which the order relates does not exceed Rs. 1,000;

(b) when the value of the suit ... Ten rupees. exceeds Rs. 1,000.

(ii) When presented to the ... Two rupees." High Court otherwise than under that section.

12. In the third column in Art. 10 in the same schedule to the same Act,—

(1) for the words "Eight annas," opposite cl. (a) in the second column, the words "One rupee" shall be substituted; and

(2) for the words "One rupee," opposite cl. (b) in the second column, the words "One rupee eight annas" shall be substituted.

13. For Art. 11 in the same schedule to the same Act the following shall be substituted, namely:—

(a) (i) to any revenue Court or Executive Officer other than the High Court or Chief Controlling Revenue or Executive Authority,	Eight annas.
(ii) to any Civil Court other than a High Court,	One rupee.
(b) to a Chief Controlling Executive or Revenue Authority,	Two rupees.
(c) to a High Court	... Five rupees."

14. Above the words "Five rupees," where they occur in the third column, opposite Arts. 12 and 13 in the same schedule to the same Act, the words "Ten rupees" shall be inserted opposite Art. 12 and the bracket between Arts. 12 and 13 in the second column shall be omitted.

15. (1) The words "Ten rupees" in the third column, opposite Art. 17 in the same schedule to the same Act, and the bracket opposite that article in the second column in the same schedule shall be omitted.

(2) In the third column in the said article,—

(a) opposite entries i, ii, iv and vi, the words "Fifteen rupees" shall be inserted; and

(b) opposite entries iii and v, the words "Twenty rupees" shall be inserted.

16. In sec. 71 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882,—

(1) in cl. (a) for the words "five hundred rupees" the words "fifty rupees" shall be substituted;

(2) after cl. (a) the following shall be inserted, namely:—

"(b) when the amount or value of the subject-matter exceeds fifty rupees, but does not exceed five hundred rupees—the sum of six rupees four annas and three annas in the rupee on the excess of such amount or value over fifty rupees;"

(3) cl. (b) shall be renumbered as cl. (c) and in that clause as renumbered for the words "sixty-two rupees eight annas" the words "ninety rupees ten annas" shall be substituted, and after the words "one anna" the words "six pies" shall be inserted.

17. Nothing in this Act shall apply to any probate, letters of administration or certificate in respect of which the fee payable under the law for the time being in force has been paid prior to the commencement of this Act, but which have not issued.

Review.

THE BEGINNER AT THE BAR OR A PRACTICAL GUIDE FOR THE BEGINNERS (CIVIL). By Upendra Nath Sen Gupta. Published by A. C. Mitra, B. L., Proprietor. The Cranburgh Law Publishing Press, 164, Bow Bazar Street, Calcutta, 1921. Price Rs. 4.

In this little book the author jots down notes on various points of practice, which the practitioner in the Civil Courts in the Mofussil has to labouriously pick up in the course, perhaps, of years, to make himself an efficient pleader. The sources from which the author draws his material are the Civil Procedure Code and other enactments, Rules and Circular Orders of the High Court, judicial decisions. The Provincial Insolvency Act and the rules thereunder are reproduced. A carefully prepared subject-index furnishes the key to the large amount of miscellaneous information collected in the book. The notes upon court-fees have of course become a little out of date since the passing of the recent Amendment Act by the Bengal Council. But the book was published before these amendments were put forward for consideration by the Council. We have no doubt that the book will serve the purpose for which it has been compiled.

PROVINCIAL SMALL CAUSE COURTS ACT. By S. K. Ray Chowdhury, B. L. Rai M. C. Sarkar Bahadur & Sons, Law Publishers and Book-sellers, Calcutta. September 1921.

This is a handy and up-to-date annotation of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The notes of cases are well digested, and they include decisions of the several High Courts as also those of the Chief Courts and Courts of Judicial Commissioners. It goes without saying that the amendments of the Act up-to-date have been duly embodied. Such a book, dealing with a Statute which needs such constant handling as the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act cannot fail to be useful.

THE INDIAN LIMITATION ACT. By Hem Chandra Mitra. Revised and brought up-to-date. By B. B. Mitra, B. L., Fifth Edn., 1921. Rai M. C. Sarkar Bahadur & Sons. Law Book-sellers and Publishers. 90-2A, Harrison Road, Calcutta.

A new and revised edition of this handy commentary on the Limitation Act will, we have no doubt, hold its own, as its predecessors have done, inspite of the existence of more ambitious and at the same time more costly treatises on the same subject. The Act itself and the case notes have been brought up-to-date. The get-up of the book has also been improved.

THE SPECIFIC RELIEF ACT. By Rai Mahim C. Sarkar Bahadur. Fourth Edn. By Subodh Chander Sarkar. M. C. Sarkar & Sons. Law Publishers and Book-sellers. 90-2A, Harrison Road, Calcutta. 1922.

We welcome this new and revised edition of the late Mr. Sarkar's Commentary on the Specific Relief Act. The case-notes have been brought up-to-date. The edition has been attractively got up.

COURT-FEES AND SUITS VALUATION ACTS. By Jahnabi Charan Bhaumik, B. L. M. C. Sarkar & Sons. 90-2A, Harrison Road, Calcutta. 1921. Price Rs. 4.

This is a carefully prepared Commentary on the Court-fees and Suits Valuation Acts and a great deal more than a mere digest of cases. It is unfortunate from the author's point of view that the Court-fees Act should have been amended so soon after the publication of the work. But the amendments affect only the amount of fees chargeable and do not touch the principles of the Act which are ably discussed by the author. We have tested the work and found it quite reliable.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Proposal for doing away with racial distinction in criminal trials.

The Committee for doing away with racial distinction in criminal trials met at Delhi on the 16th of January and concluded its sittings on the 28th of February last. We understand that the Committee will meet again in Calcutta early in May to draw up the report, in view whereof we would make some suggestions for the consideration of the Committee. In the first place we do not see any reason for maintaining the present limitations on the powers of Magistrates with regard to the trial of European British subjects. There is no such restriction with regard to the trial of other Europeans and Americans. They may be tried by all Magistrates just like Indians without any restriction, the only limitations being the usual limitations with regard to the nature of the offence and their power to award adequate sentences. If European British subjects are placed on the same footing as other Europeans, Americans and Indians, the definition of High Court with special reference to the trial of European British subjects as given in sec. 4 (j) of the Code of Criminal Procedure would have to be done away with. It will also then no longer be necessary to restrict the appointment of Justices of Peace by the Government of India or the Local Governments to European British subjects, as is provided for in sec. 22 of the Code. The special provisions in Chap. XXXIII with regard to Magistrates and Sessions Judges and Assistant Sessions Judges in respect of trials of European British subjects should also be repealed. The only obstacle that stands in the way of the Indian Legislature is presented by sec. 65 of the Government of India Act which provides that the Indian Legislature is not competent to pass any law which may involve the passing of any sentence of death on a European British subject without the previous sanction of the Secretary of State for India.

Sec. 149 of the Code now provides that no Court of Sessions (other than the High Courts) is competent to pass any sentence on any European British subject other than one of imprisonment for a term exceeding one year. So for offences which cannot be adequately punished by a Sessions Judge the accused have to be committed to the High Court. This is very oppressive to the aggrieved people in the mofussil who are required to come to the Presidency towns with their witnesses from distant parts of the country. This practically places the complainant at an enormous disadvantage and the accused beyond the pale of law. Thus even in cases of murder and culpable homicide the offender can seldom be adequately punished. Sec. 65 of the Government of India Act presents to our mind no practical difficulty in removing this anomalous procedure from the Code. If the Committee would recommend the same powers on a Court of Sessions in the mofussil in respect of European British subjects, as it ordinarily exercises with regard to His Majesty's Indian subjects, and the Indian Legislature would accept such recommendations, as we have no doubt it will, the requisite sanction under sec. 65 of the Government of India Act may surely be obtained by the Government of India from the Secretary of State. Since every death-sentence has to be confirmed by the High Court, it furnishes an additional safe-guard against such sentences being lightly passed by Sessions Judges.

We presume that European British subjects would not mind it very much if the special procedure for their trial by Magistrates of particular status and of their own nationality, with the aid of a jury of which at least one half the number must be Europeans or Americans, and further the limitations on the power of even such Magistrates to pass sentence under the ordinary provisions of the law were done away with. We believe that Indian Magistrates and Judges may be trusted to deal out criminal justice to all sections of the community in the same impartial manner as they do in civil cases irrespective of any consideration of race, creed or nationality. If, however, the European British subjects in India feel any diffidence in respect of any Magistrate or Judge, for any reasonable grounds, they may apply for a transfer, under sec. 526 of the Code and there is, no doubt, that in such cases the High Court would grant a transfer. The only bone of contention between Indian public opinion and that of the European British subjects is with regard to the provisions in the Code under which the latter may claim that in cases of jury trial before a Court of Sessions or a High Court, at least one half of the jury must consist of Europeans or Americans. Having regard to the fact that a jury always consists of an odd number of persons, this means that the majority of the jury would, as a matter of course, consist of a majority of Europeans and Americans. This is the present law and sec. 450 of the Code read with sec. 462 and sec. 276 would make it clear that if the jury is properly empanelled, Europeans need not be in any larger majority than one.

The Indian public opinion is that it is a matter of very ordinary experience that in cases where a European is an accused person and an Indian is the complainant, a failure of justice takes place owing to the European members of the jury being reluctant to return a verdict of guilty against a member of their own community. Further in view of the public opinion amongst Indians that no racial distinction should be maintained between His Majesty's Indian and European British subjects, the feeling in the country is that all distinctions in the matters of criminal trials should be abolished. The fiction of trial by one's peers is not recognised by the Common Law of England. Only a few members of the English aristocracy may claim such privilege and not any commoner. Any extension of such anomalies would be contrary to the modern spirit and doctrine of equality of all in the eye of the law. To establish that equality, the criminal law must be uniform for Indians and Europeans alike. In deference to the privileges secured to European British subjects by sec. 450 of the Code, sec. 275 of the Code provides that an Indian may also claim in a trial before a Court of Sessions that the majority of the jury must consist of his own countrymen. We maintain that both sec. 450 and sec. 275 serve only to accentuate racial distinction between British subjects and both should be repealed. Perhaps, those who are maintaining that equal privileges should be secured to Indians and European British subjects are oblivious of sec. 275 and how under the existing law a bare majority of one's own nationality may be secured thereunder. We object on principle to such packing of the jury on a racial basis. Such distinction will also stand in the way of political fusion of the races in India. If, however, any European British subject or an Indian accused person feels want of confidence in a jury trial, a provision may be made in the Code that he may waive trial by a jury at his option. In such cases the law may provide an appeal on questions of facts as also, of law to the High Court. This will ensure equality in the matter of criminal trials, between all classes of His Majesty's subjects in India. No personal law can be claimed or is recognised in criminal law and that is a further reason why the present distinctions on racial grounds should be done away with.

THE HINDU LAW OF REVERSIONS AND REVERSIONERS.

The Doctrine of Surrender is apparently based on, or rather deduced from, that of Renunciation. "If the widow can accelerate the succession by Renunciation," observed Mitter, J., in Nobo Kishore Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy (1), it follows as a logical consequence that she can do so by a deed of surrender without actually renouncing the world. "The right to surrender the property to the next reversioners by a deed," said Sankar Nair, J., to the same effect in Subbiah Soshi v. Paluny Pattabin Ramayya (2), "is based on this capacity of Renunciation."

On the other hand in Rangappa v. Kamti (3), Wallis, J., seemed to regard the widow's power to accelerate as based on what is known in British Jurisprudence as the doctrine of merger.

Whether the Hindu law according to the texts or commentaries lends support to the doctrine or not, a female, holding a qualified estate, can, it is now definitely settled, validly surrender such an estate so as to enable the then immediate reversioner to enter upon the inheritance and, if a male, hold it absolutely as if the succession had opened by the death, natural or civil, of the qualified owner (1). In other words, the immediate reversioner, the "surrenderee," can hold the estate by surrender, and his heirs cannot be ousted by those who, but for such surrender, would have occupied at her death the position of heirs to the last full owner.

LONDON NOTES.

8-3-1922.

The Judicial Committee have spent the whole of the past week in hearing an appeal from Madras, Srinivasa Chariar v. Eyalappa Mudaliar. The suit was brought by worshippers of a temple at Mādavilagam claiming that certain lands were temple property and not the property of the Dharmakarta. They also alleged that the Dharmakarta had failed to keep proper accounts and had wrongly interfered in the temple ceremonies and prayed for his removal and for the framing of a scheme. The Subordinate Judge of Chingleput held that the properties did not belong to the temple but ordered the removal of the Dharmakarta on the ground that the accounts were unsatisfactory. On appeal the High Court reversed the orders of the Subordinate Judge and held that though his accounts were unsatisfactory the Dharmakarta had expended his private funds on the temple and was a fit person to retain his office.

Sir George Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes appeared for the Appellants.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Respondents.

On March 7th judgments were given by the Board in the cases of Ramalinga Annai v. Narayana Annai and L. Oppenheim & Co. v. Haji Mohammed Haneef. In each case, the appeal was allowed. Brief reference to the questions involved and Counsel who appeared in the cases were forwarded at the time of the hearing and will be found in the current volume at pp. xxxix and lxxi.

The latter appeal was re-argued before a fresh Board consisting of, VISCOUNT CAVE, LORD SHAW, LORD PHILIMORE, SIR JOHN EDGE, and Mr. AMER ALI on the 17th February and the judgment of their Lordships was delivered by VISCOUNT CAVE.

In the case of Murphy and others v. Hurley, on appeal from the Court of Appeal in Ireland, the House of Lords recently gave an interesting decision on the principle upon which notice of want of repair should be given to a landlord as a condition precedent to his liability in an action for breach of his contract. The landlord was responsible for the repair of a Sea Wall which was seriously damaged by high tides in September 1918 and the tenants' holdings were flooded. Their Lordships decided that the landlord was not entitled to receive notice from the tenants of the want of repair as he and his tenants were on equal terms as regards means of knowledge and they distinguished the case of Hugall and McLean, (1885) 33, W. R. 588.

In the Chancery Division, Russell, J., held in the case of In re Lucas, that a gift of five shillings a week each to the "oldest respectable inhabitants in Gunville" was a good charitable bequest.

On March 9th the arguments in the case of Srinivasa Chariar v. Eyalappa Mudaliar were concluded and judgment was reserved.

The hearing of an appeal from the Central Provinces, Syed Kasam v. Jorwar Singh, was commenced before the Board. The suit was for a declaration of title to possession of certain lands which were ancestral property of the Plaintiff's family. The Defendants claim title under a sale deed.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh appeared for the Appellants.

The Respondents are represented by Mr. Kenworthy Brown.

(1) Subbiah v. Palwry, I. L. R. 31 Mad. [1908] 446 (451).

Owing to the reconstitution of the Board the case stood over and the part-heard case Chet Ram v. Ram Singh was further argued on the 10th and 12th and judgment was reserved.

Judgment was delivered on the 10th March in the Madras case, K. Gopal Chetty v. T. G. Vighayaraghavachariar, allowing the appeal which was argued ex parte before the Board by Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. A. M. Talbat.

Judgment was also delivered by the Board on the 7th March in the cases of Ramalinga Annari v. Narayana Annari and Oppenheim & Co. v. Md. Hanef Zahib, which were referred to in these notes at the time of hearing. In each case the appeal was allowed.

On the 14th March judgment was delivered in Radhakrishna Ayyar v. Sundaraswamiar. Their Lordships dismissed the appeal.

On the same day their Lordships heard arguments in the Patna appeal, Girwar Pershad Singh v. Ramesar Lal Bhagal, and dismissed the appeal.

The Appeal from Bengal, Banku Behari Dhur v. Galstann, came before the Board on the 15th and 16th. The question for decision was as to the construction of the terms of a consent decree.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., Ramsay, and Kalimullah appeared for the Appellant and Sir George Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Dubé for the Respondent.

At the conclusion of the arguments their Lordships said they would consider the advice that they should tender to His Majesty.

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before RICHARDSON and B. GHOSH, JJ. CIVIL RULE No. 750 OF 1921. RAMANATH MUKERJI, Petitioner v. SIDHESWAR BANERJI, Opposite Party. The 26th January 1922.

C. P. C., Or. IX, r. 13—Application to set aside ex parte decree before the decree is drawn up and signed but after the judgment if maintainable.

The Opposite Party instituted a suit for partition against the Petitioner and obtained a preliminary decree. There was some land to the west of the ijmali property belonging exclusively to the Petitioner. A Commissioner of partition was appointed and the parties gave evidence before him as to the boundary of the ijmali property to the west. The Commissioner submitted his report on the 11th August 1920 and on the 18th August an order was passed in the absence of the Petitioner to the effect that as no objections had been preferred against the report of the Commissioner the final decree be drawn up in terms of the Commissioner's report. On the 19th August the Petitioner came to know of this order and on the 31st August he made an application under Or. IX, r. 13 to set aside the ex parte decree on the ground that he was prevented for sufficient cause from attending the Court and therefore could not prefer objections to the Commissioner's report. The final decree was prepared and signed on the 14th September 1920. Both the lower Courts held that the application under Or. IX, r. 13 was not maintainable as when it was made there was no decree in existence and the application was rejected on the preliminary point. The Petitioner then moved the High Court under sec. 115, C. P. C.

Babu Rupendra Coomar Mitter for the Petitioner submitted that there was in the eye of law a decree on the 18th August when the judgment was pronounced giving direction for the preparation of the final decree 16 I. A. 195 and 34 C. L. J. 494 referred to.

Babu Baranashi Bashi Mukerji for the Opposite Party showed cause.

Held—That the application under Or. IX, r. 13 even before the decree was drawn up and signed was maintainable.

Jury trial and racial distinction.

We stated in our last issue that even under the existing provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, if a jury is empanelled properly under the provisions of secs. 450, 452 and 275 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Europeans or Americans in such jury need not exceed the Indian element by a bare majority of one. It must be remembered that sec. 450 says that the number of such jurymen shall not be less than half. In trials before the High Court Sessions the jury consists of nine persons and before a Court of Sessions in the mofussil it is to consist of not less than three and more than nine and the number, which must be uneven, is fixed by notification by the local Government. We shall assume for illustration that the number for the High Court and the mofussil is nine and that a sufficient number of European and Indian jurors have been summoned. The practice now followed in the High Court is to empanel five European jurors to start with by drawing the lot from amongst the Europeans present and ballot for the remaining four from amongst the European and Indian jurymen. The result therefore is quite contrary to the spirit of sec. 450 and there is often a large preponderance of European jurymen. But as the High Courts are entitled to make rules in this behalf under sec. 276, the practice is very likely technically justified under this rule-making power. There is no bar in law now to confining the ballot amongst the Indian jurors present till four Indian jurors are empanelled and then the remaining five European jurors may be drawn by lot in the usual manner from amongst the Europeans and Americans present.

If the recommendation of the Removal of the Racial Distinction Committee is going to be that European British subjects are to have a bare majority of one, then this could have been done by regulating the ballot for juryman as indicated above under the rule-making power of the High Court and there was no occasion for the waste of public funds and public time by the appointment of a ponderous committee and the examination of numerous witnesses from the different parts of country. If after all it recommends what might very well have been done by the High Courts themselves, it would be a typical case of a mountain being in labour and bringing forth a moribund mouse to the disgust of the public at large. As for trial by assessors, the provisions of the law present no difficulty whatsoever. The assessors under sec. 284 of the Code need not be more than two. Sec. 450 provides that in the case of Europeans, at least half the assessors must be Europeans. So under the law as it is one Indian and one European may be chosen by the Judge as assessors. The Judge, besides, is not bound to accept the opinion of the assessors. As for the rest we presume that the committee would not be so reckless as to recommend that the absurdities of special privileges secured to European British subjects in respect of trials before Magistrates and Sessions Judges under Ch. XXXIII of the Code should be extended to Indians and to the other various races that are to be found in India. So the only sensible solution of the whole question lies in the repeal of Chap. XXXIII altogether and the amendment of the law on the lines suggested by us in our last issue.

Court-fee on plaints and affidavits.

A rather interesting point of stamp law is mooted in a letter from a correspondent which we publish in another column. From another letter received about the same time, it appears that the recent amendment of the Court Fees Act is giving rise to a question of court-fee of another character. In one instance, the day before the Amendment Act came into force, in a suit valued at Rs. 999, a court-fee was paid which fell short of the amount then payable by one anna. On that very day the Court, it is stated, made an order demanding payment of deficit court-fee calculated under the Amendment Act. How the Court did it before the Amendment Act was published and came into force, we find some difficulty in making out. The order, if made, was obviously erroneous. But assume that the deficit was discovered after the new Act came into force. Was the deficit demandable under the old or the new Act? When deficit court-fee is paid, it operates retrospectively and the plaint is viewed as presented with full court-fee as from the day when it was originally filed. It seems to us therefore that the deficit, even in such cases, is payable under the old and not under the new Act. The argument to the contrary may be formulated thus: On the day on which the short payment of court-fee was discovered, the plaint was insufficiently stamped. The Court-fees Amendment Act had already come into force then and therefore the proper court-fee payable had to be ascertained on the day when the discovery was first made, the plaint having remained invalid up to that date at any rate. But this argument assumes that plaint as originally filed was wholly invalid. But on this assumption it would seem to follow that the plaint would become operative for all purposes (for the purpose of the law of limitation, for instance) from the day on which the deficit is paid and not before. But this is not the case; the plaint on payment of deficit court-fee within the time allowed is validated retrospectively. It is otherwise, if the payment is not made within the time allowed. (Raja Pudmanam Singh v. Anant Lal Misser, F. B. 11 C. W. N. 38).

LONDON NOTES.

22-3-22.

On March 16th and 17th, the Board, composed of LORD SHAW, LORD PHILLIMORE, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMHER ALI, heard arguments in an appeal and cross-appeal from Lucknow in the suit of Rani Bijai Raj Kuar v. Thakur Jai Indar Bahadur Singh. The appeals relate to lands in a village called Chhauch which the Rani claims to be entitled to hold rent-free under the terms of her husband's Will.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Amiens Jackson appeared for the Rani and Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Thakur.

Judgment was reserved.

The same Board with the addition of VISCOUNT CAVE commenced the hearing on March 17th of another Oudh appeal, Badri Narain Singh v. Harnam Kuar.

The litigation relates to the Taluqdari estate of a Taluqdar Lal Ram Kinkar Singh, the deceased husband of the first Respondent. Ram Kinkar's predecessor in title had received a primogeniture sanad in 1863, but the estate had been placed in List IV prepared under the provisions of the Oudh Estates Act, 1869 and the main question at issue between the parties was whether in determining the succession to the estate the limitations contained in the sanad should be considered or whether placing the estate in List IV made the provisions of the sanad inapplicable.

Argument was heard on the 17th, 20th and 21st March and judgment has been reserved.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown appeared for the Appellant and Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dubé for the Respondent.

The Board delivered judgment on the 21st March in the appeal from Lucknow, Khan Bahadur Abdul Ghani Khan v. Musammatt Fakhr Jahan Begam, which was heard on February 20th, 21st and March 2nd.

The appeal was dismissed.

29-3-22.

The sittings are practically at an end. On the 23rd instant the argument in Banerjee v. Corporation of Calcutta was concluded and judgment was reserved. The suit was brought by the Appellants to restrain the Corporation from taking proceedings for the acquisition of the Appellants' property for the construction of a Dharmshala on the Kalighat Road. The suit was decreed by the Subordinate Judge who held that the proposed acquisition was "ultra vires." That decree was reversed by the District Judge and by the High Court and the Plaintiffs now appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown appeared for the Appellants and Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Hyam for the Respondents.

Pattaginta Seshayya v. Gullapalli Lakshminarayana, an appeal from Madras, was heard on the 23rd and 24th instant, and was dismissed by the Board without calling on the Respondents.

Mr. Wallach appeared for the Appellants and Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Narasimham for the Respondents.

Syed Kasam v. Jonaman Singh, an appeal from the Berar jurisdiction of the Central Provinces, was part heard, on March 9th but owing to the reconstitution of the Board was not taken up again until the 24th March. The suit was brought for a declaration of title to, and for possession of, certain lands said to be ancestral property of the Plaintiffs' family. The Defendants claimed to be entitled to it under a sale deed executed by a member of the family. The question is raised as to whether Berar is governed by the Bombay law or by the usual Mitakshara.

The Appellants were represented by Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh, the Respondents by Mr. Kenworthy Brown. At the conclusion of the arguments the Board intimated that they would consider their judgment.

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,

I shall be obliged if you will be good enough to make room for the following in an early issue of your much esteemed journal.

On account of the passing of the Bengal Stamp (Amendment) Act (III of 1922, B. C.) stamps upon affidavits are being realised at the rate of two rupees per affidavit in some of the Civil Courts in the mofussil, relying upon Art. 4 in Sch. I A of the aforesaid Act. The position requires examination. If one turns to cl. (b) of the exemptions to the aforesaid article, he will find that affidavits, when made, "for the immediate purpose of being filed or used in any Court or before the officer of any Court" are exempted from liability to stamp duty. It is, thus, clear that the Courts cannot fall back upon Art. 4 in Sch. I A of the Bengal Stamp Amendment Act for the purpose of realising stamps upon affidavits at the rate of two rupees per affidavit. We next go to the Court Fees Act. This Act is totally silent about affidavits. Then we take up the Calcutta High Court's General Rules and Circular Orders, Appellate Side (Civil), Vol. I. Here we find on page 162 (edition of 1918) that "the charge for administering the oath to the deponent in the case of any affidavit under the Code of Civil Procedure shall be one rupee in all Civil Courts in the Bengal Presidency and Assam. This charge shall be paid by means of a court-fee stamp and will be credited to Government." This amount, be it noted, is realised not as a stamp duty upon the affidavit but as a charge for administering the oath. Here arises another question. Whether it is within the jurisdiction of the High Court to levy such a fee. The Letters Patent of the Calcutta High Court is silent on this point. We next turn to the Government of India Act (9 and 10 George 5 Ch. 101). Here we find in sec. 107, cl. (c) that the powers of High Courts with respect to Subordinate Courts extend to settling tables of fees to be allowed to clerks and officers of Courts. But this fee, be it noted, is not "allowed" to officers and clerks of Court. It is credited to Government. So it is respectfully submitted that the High Court has no jurisdiction to realise this fee and credit it to Government. Then, another anomaly arises—taking for granted that the High Court has powers under sec. 107, cl. (c) of the Government of India Act to realise this fee and credit it to Government—and it is this: the payment of this fee can very safely be avoided. Sec. 139 of the Code of Civil Procedure (1908) lays down the following "In the case of any affidavit under this Code (a) any Court or Magistrate may administer the oath to the deponent." So if the deponent goes to any Magistrate not sitting as a Criminal Court, he will not have to pay the fee of Re. 1 for the Circular Orders, Civil and Criminal, speak only of "Civil and Criminal Courts in Bengal and Assam." It is thus clear that the Magistrate cannot realise this fee from the deponent either under the Circular Orders, Civil and Criminal or under the Stamp Act, for such affidavits are explicitly exempted from payment of stamp duty. Then another question arises: What is the meaning of the expression "affidavit under the Code of Civil Procedure?" Is it synonymous with affidavits filed in a Civil Court? If not, then obviously the fee of Re. 1 cannot be realised upon each and every affidavit filed in a Civil Court by virtue of the aforesaid Circular Order. These are the numerous questions which I venture to submit to the profession through the medium of your esteemed journal.

Yours, etc.,

BIRENDRA NATH SEN,
Pleader, Patuakhali.

THE PRINCIPLES OF THE HINDU LAW OF INHERITANCE (TAGORE LAW LECTURES, 1880). By Raj Kumar Sarvadhikari, B. L. Second Edition. Revised and brought up-to-date by Jyoti Prasad Sarvadhikari, M.A., B.L. Madras; The Law Book Depot, Limited, 1922.

Sir Henry Maine's brilliant contributions to the history of law ushered in an era of research in the field of historical jurisprudence comparable in some measure only to that which in the biological sciences followed the publication of Darwin's epoch-making work on the Origin of Species; and amongst Indian scholars and writers who made their mark in the quarter of a century which succeeded the publication of Maine's treatises, none appears to have been more thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the master than Raj Kumar Sarvadhikari. To carry on the work of Maine in the field of Hindu jurisprudence one had to be not merely a profound Sanskrit scholar which Raj Kumar Sarvadhikari undoubtedly was: Texts and ancient treatises are stubborn material which yield their secrets only to the touch of genius. It is because Raj Kumar Sarvadhikari was not only an erudite Sanskrit scholar but also possessed the alchemy of genius that he was able to make lasting contributions to the history of Hindu law and snatch from obscurity and hold up to light the principles which have guided the development of the law of inheritance in the two leading schools of Hindu law.

The close association of a people's laws of inheritance with its practices in the matter of obsequial offerings to the dead in the earlier stages of its social history had already been clearly outlined by Sir Henry Maine. In the first part of his lectures Raj Kumar Sarvadhikari demonstrated it in detail, so far as concerned the Hindu law of inheritance. With characteristic thoroughness, he followed up his juristic analysis of the "Sradha" ceremonies by tracing the development of the principles of the law of inheritance, which lay in germ in these ceremonies, through the texts and treatises and the changing historical circumstances of what he has called the Middle Ages of Hindu jurisprudence up to modern times, the latest legal writer dealt with being Jagannath. All this is pioneer work which has broken ground for successors to take it up at the point where he left it. It is fortunate, however, that Raj Kumar Sarvadhikari did not conclude his labours with merely tracing the history of the principles of Hindu inheritance through the Ages. In the rest of the work he proceeded to elucidate, develop and work out these principles for use and application in the determination of the many practical problems of inheritance which daily demand solution under the Dayabhaga and the Mitakshara Schools of Hindu law as administered in the Courts at the present day. It is in this latter half of the work that a critical consideration of judicial decisions assumes importance, and it is this part which has needed retouching by the present editor. True to the spirit of the author, the editor has not contented himself with merely noting down recent judicial decisions; he has examined and commented on them, as he was conscientiously bound to do, in the light of the principles laid down and expounded by the author. The pious duty which the editor took upon himself of bringing out a second edition of one of the most authoritative treatises on Hindu jurisprudence contributed from this side of India has been discharged in a manner worthy of the work itself. The greatest credit, we may add, is due to the printers and the publishers, for the get-up of the work is as near perfection as it well may be.

THE COURT FEES ACT, 1870, as amended by the Bengal Court Fees Amendment Act, IV of 1922. Dinesh Chandra Roy, M.A., B.L. As. 12.

The profession will welcome this publication which embodies the results of the amendments effected in the Act by the Bengal Court Fees Amendment Act recently passed by the Bengal Council. The amendments are indicated by being printed in Italics. So far as we are aware, this publication appears to be the first of its kind in the field and is cheap for its price.

Criminal Sessions.

Mr. Justice Rankin presides at the Second Calcutta Criminal Sessions which commences its sittings from date.

The late Mr. Boidonath Dutt.

We record with regret the death during the Easter Holidays of Mr. Boidonath Dutt, a senior Vakil of the Calcutta High Court, who enjoyed a considerable practice on the Appellate Side of the High Court, prior to his retirement, owing to failing health, a few years ago. He was a contemporary of the late Mr. Sarada Churn Mitra, and was held in high esteem by members of all three branches of the legal profession in Calcutta and by the Judges before whom he practised for his sound knowledge of law, his forensic ability and command over the English language. He was of an unobtrusive and retiring disposition and took hardly any part in public life. Appreciative references were made by the Hon'ble the Chief Justice, the Advocate-General and the Senior Government Pleader on Monday last to mark the sense of the loss sustained by the Bar and the Bench by his death.

Short-cut to Swaraj—Sec. 67A of the Government of India Act.

People who are in earnest about obtaining full responsible Government in this country will do well to study carefully the Government of India Act. In reviewing the constitution of the self-governing Dominions, which are more or less modelled on the British constitution, we pointed out that the key to the popular control in any Government consists in the control of the public purse by the representatives of the people. Once the legislature can secure control of the purse strings, the Government is bound to be responsible to the legislature. The Government of India Act, sec. 67A, furnishes quite a wide scope to the Indian legislature to bring the public purse under its control, if the people at large would support the demand made by the elected representatives in the Legislative Assembly on the 26th of January last that the Military Budget should be submitted to the vote of the Assembly. In our view of sec. 67A of the Government of India Act, it does not present any statutory difficulty to the Governor-General of India in granting the demand made by the Assembly. It was supported by the majority of the members of the Assembly—51 voting for it and only 27, mostly official members, voting against it. It is worthy of note that not only all the non-official European members voted for the motion but also some official members followed suit.

We would not quote sec. 67A of the Government of India Act but would expect our readers to refer to it. Cl. (1) says that the annual Budget of the Government of India shall be laid before the Legislature. Cl. (2) says that no proposal for the appropriation of any revenue or moneys shall be made except on the recommendation of the Governor-General. Every student of the English and Dominion constitutions knows that the Crown can alone bring proposals for expenditure before the House. This is a very old constitutional rule and is intended as a safe-guard against the legislature indulging in extravagant expenditure on private initiative. The Crown can alone propose expenditure, it is for the popular representatives to accept, reject or reduce. They cannot even enhance expenditure. So the scope of cl. (2) is precautionary and not reactionary as it is common to British and Dominion constitutions.

It is only cl. (3) which makes a reservation in respect of the practice that obtains in the House of Commons and the Dominions. This clause says that certain heads of expenditure such as interests on loan, sinking fund charges, some other expenditure prescribed by law, salaries and pensions of judges and members of the Civil Service and expenditure under the heads of (a) ecclesiastical, (b) political, (c) defence "shall not be submitted to the vote of the legislative assembly, . . . unless the Governor-General otherwise directs."

It will be seen that it places no statutory bar to the military expenditure which comes under the head of "defence" or any of the other items mentioned above being made votable, "if the Governor-General so directs." Thus it will not require any fresh Parliamentary legislation to annul the distinction between the votable and non-votable items. If the pressure of public opinion is brought to bear on the Governor-General to exercise his discretion to confer the fullest financial control in the Assembly, we doubt whether he will be able to resist the demand for any length of time. So, if political demands in this country were directed to definite issues as indicated above, the attainment of responsible Government would be comparatively an easy task.

- We may mention here that even in England interest on public debt, sinking fund charges, salaries of judges and certain items of the civil list and certain charges for the maintenance of the army and navy are treated in the manner of reserve subjects. They are paid for, as we shall explain below, out of the "Consolidated fund charges." Provisional lump grants are made for them by the House of Commons at the instance of the Government. But the details of expenditure are set out in the Appropriation Bill and every item is submitted to the vote of the House later on. No responsible legislature would deprive the judges and other officials of their salary or the country of its defence. But the legislature would certainly effect economy and retrenchment wherever practicable. It is by such means that the Legislature exercises control over the acts, policy and functions of the executive.

The joint Parliamentary Committee gave discretionary powers to the Governor-General alone and not to his Executive Council to decide when the distinction between the votable and non-votable items should be done away with. All credit is due to the Legislative Assembly for having in January last recommended to the Governor-General that the military expenditure should be submitted to the vote of the Assembly along with the civil budget. If public opinion in India had asserted itself and demanded that the recommendations of the Assembly should be given effect to by the Governor-General, we do not think that it would have been possible for the Secretary of State for India to fetter the discretion of the Governor-General under the unwarranted legal opinion of the law officers of the Crown in England. The opinion of the law officers of the Crown is neither binding on the Governor-General, nor on the Legislative Assembly and much less on us or the citizens of India. We hope, therefore, that public opinion in India will vet support the demands of the Legislative Assembly and enter a firm protest against the Governor-General not giving effect to the recommendations of the Legislative Assembly in this behalf. Those who have studied the provisions of the Government of India Act are aware that it furnishes ample scope for the attainment of responsible Government in this country, if the people of the country would demand what is due to them as of right. The joint Parliamentary Committee, as is well-known, gave much wider powers to the legislature in respect of financial control than was originally contemplated and their reservation with regard to non-votable items by the analogy of the consolidated fund charges, coupled with the discretionary power given to the Governor-General alone clearly indicates that the distinction between "votable" and "non-votable" should be done away with whenever there is a public demand for it. We need not tell H. E. Lord Reading that "discretion" does not mean whim, caprice or any arbitrary will but means fair, just and well-considered judicial opinion.

The following extract from the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly Vol. II, No. 23 (26th January 1922) will throw some light on the recommendations of the Joint Parliamentary Committee in respect of sec. 67A, cl. (3) of the Government of India.

MR. J. CHAUDHURI (Chittagong and Rajshahi Division, Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, it may be said that the recommendations of the Joint Committee are in conflict with the section on which my Honourable and learned friend now relies. I wish, therefore, to read the relevant passage from the Joint Committee's Report:

"The Committee consider it necessary (as suggested to them by the Consolidated Fund Charges in the Imperial Parliament) to exempt certain charges of a special or recurring nature which have been set out in the Bill, for example, the cost of defence, the debt charges and certain fixed salaries, from the process of being voted. But otherwise they would leave the Assembly free to criticise and vote estimates and expenditure of the Government of India."

I need only remind the Honourable the Home Member, who will very likely speak on this subject, that, whatever the Committee might have said in their report, may not now be taken into consideration for the interpretation of this section, but I am not going to be technical at all. I say there is no conflict between the recommendations of the Joint Committee and the section as eventually enacted. The section gives a discretionary power to the Governor-General. Now, the whole question is whether the Governor-General is prepared to exercise that discretionary power at the present moment, and we say that, without any misgivings, His Excellency may exercise that discretion, according to the wishes of this House. I need only mention that the Committee's recommendations are based on the analogy of the Consolidated Fund Charges in the Imperial Parliament. I shall say only a few words with regard to the expression 'Consolidated Fund Charges.' As it is, the maintenance of the Army in England does not entirely depend upon the passing of the Appropriation Bill. Here I mention this for this reason, that ours is an infant institution and, so far as practicable, we should follow the same procedure as is followed in the House of Commons. It will be impossible to maintain the Army or Navy in England if the expenditure in connection with them entirely depended upon the Appropriation Bill, or, at any rate, if it awaited the passing of the Appropriation Bill. The procedure followed in the House of Commons is this: On the 31st of March, or just before, a Consolidated Charges Bill is introduced. It does not give any detailed estimate of the Army expenditure, but it only obtains the sanction of the House, authorising the Treasury to pay out of the consolidated funds the expenditure for the Army and the Navy. If this process were not followed, many difficulties would arise. I say that, if a similar Committee was appointed here, and the Military Budget was introduced in this Assembly on analogous lines, there is no reason to apprehend that this House will not be prepared to pass a vote for sanctioning the expenditure in connection with the Army. This Consolidated Charges Bill not only brings in supplementary estimates of the expenditure which have been incurred by the Army over and above what was sanctioned in the previous year, under the Appropriation Act, but also makes provision for prospective charges. If the Military Secretary and the Finance Member are prepared to explain to the House the reasons for which this money is wanted, I do not think that this House will be wanting in its sense of responsibility to give its sanction to it. All that the House desires to do is to keep an eye over the expenditure, be that in the Military Department, or be it in the Civil or any other Department. That is the function of the representatives of the people. It is for the experts to lay their case before them and it is for the latter to criticise and suggest economy where particable.

So, I say that, with necessary safeguards, the procedure that is followed in the House of Commons may, without prejudice, be introduced into this House. It will give us training in the due discharge of our responsibility to the country and to the Government. It will have to come, and I think, it is very desirable that a beginning should be made, and the sooner the better.

Now that the Governor-General, apparently out of deference to the opinion of the British Cabinet, has not given effect to the recommendations of the Legislative Assembly, it is for the public to demand that His Excellency do give effect to it. Having regard to the supreme importance of popular financial control to the constitution we welcome Mr. A. K. Ghose's articles on "Constitutional aspect of the English Financial Administration" in which he will present the leading features of it.

CONSTITUTIONAL ASPECT OF THE ENGLISH FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION.

I.

(1) THE SERVICES.

English expenditure may be roughly divided into two main branches called the Consolidated Fund Services and the Supply Services. The former provides for the Interest and Management of the Public Debt, Payments in aid of Local Taxation, the Salaries of the Judges and certain other miscellaneous items. Everything else practically falls under the Supply Services which include the Army, Navy, and Civil Services, Customs and Inland Revenue, and Post Office. The expenditure on these branches of the Public Service is met from what are known as Exchequer issues, and Exchequer issues can only take place under formal orders passed by the Comptroller and Auditor General who has, as his guide as to what issues are admissible and can be granted by him, the "Votes" which are passed by the House of Commons in Committee of Supply.

(2) WAYS AND MEANS AND SUPPLY.

The exact procedure as to providing the necessary revenue to meet the required expenditure is that the Chancellor of the Exchequer presents to the House of Commons his "Budget" which states the estimated expenditure and revenue for the year and the proposals made by the Government of the day for any new taxes, the enhancement of old ones, or their abandonment or reduction, and the most important function of the House of Commons as regards finance is its approval in Committee of Ways and Means of the taxes by which the revenue necessary to meet the expenditure of the year is to be raised. The House of Commons has thus two separate duties. Approval in Committee of Ways and Means of the necessary taxation, and voting in Committee of Supply what amount is to be spent upon each of the "Services" of the year, except the Consolidated Fund Services which are to a large extent fixed.

(a) Supply.

The detailed estimates of the year therefore are brought forward in Committee of Supply and criticised and passed therein. To this, it may be added that it is nearly always found necessary towards the end of the year to bring in "supplementary estimates" to provide for unforeseen expenditure, and it is also usual for the Committee of Supply to pass votes on account of the Supply Services in the early spring, in anticipation of the ensuing Budget. There are thus two processes, one of which, the supplementary estimates, resembles the Indian practice of "additional grants," while the other, where part of the money is voted in anticipation of the Budget, has no counterpart in Indian procedure. These supplementary estimates and "Votes" on account are usually taken between the address at the opening of the spring session and the actual introduction of the Budget. The embodying of the votes on account of the Acts necessary to give effect to the votes will be referred to later on.

(b) Ways and Means.

The Committee of Ways and Means on the other hand decides by resolutions that certain taxes shall or shall not be levied, and when the resolutions have been carried, a bill is brought in embodying the resolutions in an Act of Parliament. This is known as the Finance Act. In theory the House of Commons controls and votes all the supplies for the particular year, but as a matter of fact a great deal of the taxation revenue is continued from year to year upon the authority of previous Finance Acts, and only a few of the taxes which are required for the service of the year are actually voted in that year, and inserted in that year's Finance Act. Any new tax, however, and any increase of an existing tax must, of necessity, be voted by the Committee and find a place in the Finance Act. As an instance of a tax which, although levied from year to year, still requires to be annually passed in Committee of Ways and Means may be mentioned the Income Tax. It is not easy to say exactly which of the taxes at any given time do not require to be renewed from year to year, but the present ordinary customs duties, except the Tea duty are of this character, although any increase therein requires of course to be passed by resolution in Committee of Ways and Means.

(c) Appropriation.

There is besides the above a third stage in the proceedings of the House of Commons in the exercise of its financial functions and this is what is known as "Appropriation." Having voted the necessary taxation and having approved of the details of national expenditure, there remains the allocation of the whole revenue of the year to the various services which have been previously approved and this is done by what is known as the Appropriation Act passed at the end of the session.

As noted above, however, it is necessary to carry on the business of administration during the interval which usually elapses before the passing of the Annual Appropriation Act, and this is done by votes of the Army, Navy and Civil Services which are embodied in a Consolidated Fund Act or if necessary by more than one. This Act (or Acts) is passed every year before the financial year begins, namely the 1st of April. The financial year ends in March 31st, and the funds provided by the Appropriation Act of the previous year are no longer available.

It remains to be added that, as regards the Consolidated Fund Services, these are voted en bloc in Committee of Supply without discussion and incorporated in a separate "Consolidated Fund Bill;" any increase or reduction however of the amount set apart for the service of the debt is included by a clause in the Finance Act.

REPORTS (See Index.)

The late Dr. A. V. Dicey.

The English mail brings news of the death, on April 7 last, of Dr. A. V. Dicey, whose name has been a household word in all parts of the British Dominions as the author of the "Law of the Constitution." An Indian writer of our acquaintance has indeed credited him with being the inventor of the English "Rule of Law," in the same sense as the Seventeenth Century scholar, Sir Henry Spelman, has been claimed to have "invented" the Feudal system, and Chief Justice Coke as the discoverer in that "tale of feudal privileges" known to English history as the Magna Carta, of a charter of all people's rights. In all his writings the late Professor combined brilliancy of presentment with great logical acumen. Though less known, yet equally remarkable and suggestive and possessing all the merits of his classical treatise on the English Constitution was his work on "Law and Opinion in England." He was a Liberal in his political views but strongly opposed to Home Rule in Ireland which he strenuously fought by speech as well as writing. A legal journal cannot, in paying tribute to the memory of the departed jurist and public man, afford to pass without notice the one purely professional treatise which came from his pen. "Dicey on Parties." Published in 1870, it is still keenly sought after in every Court within the British Dominions whenever a knotty question on the law of parties has to be argued.

Court-fee on Jaminnama to stay execution.

We think our correspondent, Mr. Ganguly, is right in contending that a Jaminnama executed to obtain a stay of execution cannot be charged with duty under both the Stamp and Court Fee Acts as recently amended. The amendments do not appear to have done more than raise the amounts of duty payable on certain documents under each of the two Acts, so that, apart from the amount of fees payable, the law remains substantially unchanged. This being so, we think that both on principle and on the authority of the decision referred to by Mr. Ganguly, such a document should be stamped under the Bengal Stamp Amendment Act, Sch. I A, Art. 57, and not under the Court Fees Act, Sch. II, Art. 6.

Right of Muktears to appear in enquiries under secs. 73 and 74 of the Registration Act.

A correspondent enquires if it is in order to permit Muktears to appear before a District Registrar or Sub-Registrar in contested cases of enquiries under sec. 73 and 74 of the Registration Act (XVI of 1908). It seems in some Districts they are not allowed to do so, but in others, in the 24-Pergannahs for instance, they do appear as a matter of practice. Our correspondent, who is himself a pleader, is of opinion that Muktears have no right to take part in inquiries which the Registrar or Sub-Registrar by law holds "as if he were a Civil Court," and he adds that in his opinion, Revenue agents also cannot appear in contested cases but may do so only, in ex parte inquiries. We cannot say for ourselves that the provisions of the Registration Act give any definite lead one way or the other upon the question; and the matter cannot be decided merely on the ground of privilege belonging to the one or the other branch of the legal profession without reference to the interests of the litigant public and without reference to the practice prevailing in the several Districts.

CONSTITUTIONAL ASPECT OF THE ENGLISH FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION.

With these various Acts, the functions of the House of Commons cease for the time being, and the next stage is the actual supply to the spending departments of the funds necessary to carry on the services of the year. But, before proceeding to describe this procedure, it may be mentioned that the revenue of the country—from which the funds required for meeting the national expenditure (except such portion as is met from borrowed money) must necessarily be eventually supplied—is, as it is collected by the departments responsible for its collection, paid into the Consolidated Fund in the Bank of England or Ireland. All expenditure, not only on what are technically called the "Consolidated Fund Services," but also on the "Supply Services," is met from the "Consolidated Fund." The fund is of course not a hoard, but a balance. The Bank can use it as any other banker can use the balance of his constituent, so long as it is forthcoming when required, this practice having an analogy in our own Indian Treasury Balances at the Presidency Banks, now the Imperial Bank.

II.

(3) ISSUE OF FUNDS FOR EXPENDITURES.

Turning then to the procedure for the supply of funds to the spending departments, this is done by means of the authority of the Comptroller and Auditor-General. This office is the creation of the Exchequer and Audit Act of 1866. He is appointed by letters patent. He and the Assistant Comptroller and Auditor both hold office during good behaviour and are only removable by the King upon address by both Houses of Parliament.

(a) Money for the Consolidated Fund Services.

When money is wanted for the Consolidated Fund Services the Treasury makes a requisition on the Comptroller and Auditor-General for a Treasury credit. That officer, if satisfied that the requisition is in accordance with the Acts which govern the expenditure, makes the order and thus unlocks the Treasury Chest. The Treasury then calls on the Bank to transfer the sums required from the Exchequer Account to that of a principal accountant, usually the Paymaster-General, and at the same time to transmit the authority for the transfer to the Comptroller and Auditor-General who is thus enabled to record the issues from the Exchequer. Of these he subsequently receives and examines an account called the Consolidated Fund Account.

(b) Money for the Supply Services.

It will be observed that the money required for the Supply Services has been granted to the Crown by Parliament, and the first step in the process of expenditure is an order under the Royal Sign Manual desiring the Treasury to authorise the Bank of England to make payments from time to time in accordance with the terms of the grant. This order is countersigned by two Lords Commissioners of the Treasury who thereby demand of the Comptroller and Auditor-General that he will give them credit for the sums required upon the Exchequer Account of the Bank. This is done by a credit order to the Bank signed by the Comptroller and Auditor-General. The Treasury then from time to time directs the Bank to transfer the sums specified in the Royal order to the Supply Account of the Paymaster-General or other principal accountant to communicate such transfers to the Comptroller and Auditor-General.

(4) CHECK ON REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE.

The above traces the revenue from the pocket of the tax-payer into the hands of those to whom payment is due for the rendering of public service. It has still to be noted how security is taken that the money issued for certain purposes is actually expended on these services. This security is obtained by the two-fold powers of the Comptroller and Auditor-General. He not only controls the issues, but receives and audits the accounts of expenditure. Every day two accounts are furnished to him, one from the Banks of England and Ireland of receipts and issues of the Consolidated Fund and one from the Revenue Department of sums paid to the Fund. These latter which are also supplied to the Treasury enable him to check the Bank account as to receipt of revenue. He also follows closely the course of expenditure, having in the huge spending departments, such as the war office, a local staff, whose audit, as regards expenditure being duly authorised and correctly charged to the proper head of service, may be said to be concurrent with the outlay. In smaller departments his audit is periodical and monthly.

(5) FINANCE AND APPROPRIATION ACCOUNTS.

Now in respect of both Consolidated Fund Services and Supply Services, Parliament receives every year Finance Accounts and Ap-

Council decision in Bajrangi Singh v. Manokarnika Baksh Singh (1), where the entire estate was "destroyed" by piece-meal alienations thereof (2), subsequently ratified by all the reversionary heirs, might lend some support to the contention raised in the pleadings in Pulin v. Bolai (3), in Debi Prasad v. Golap Bhagat (4), in Marudamuthu v. Srinirasa (5) and, lastly, in Nachiappa v. Rangasami (6), namely, that the widow should retain no interest in what was surrendered, and that, therefore, a partial surrender, provided that the surrender was absolute as to that part, was valid. "This however," said their Lordships of the Privy Council in Rangasami v. Nachiappa (7), "is quite against the principle on which the whole transaction rests. It is the effacement of the widow—an effacement which in other circumstances is effected by actual death or by civil death—which opens the estate of the deceased husband to his next heirs at that date. Now there cannot be a widow who is partly effaced and partly not so. The land mark of decision as to this (doctrine of surrender) may be taken as the case of Behari Lal v. Madho Lal Ahir Gyawal (8)."

Now it is settled for all the High Courts in India that in order to accelerate the vesting of the estate in the nearest reversioner there must be a complete, and not a partial withdrawal from that estate.

There are, it seems to me, two good reasons for this rule which lays down that a surrender must be of the whole inheritance, viz., firstly that it furnishes a practical check on the frequency of such conveyances, and, secondly that it prevents the anomaly, which would otherwise arise, of two successive classes of heirs becoming owners of the inheritance at one and the same time—the immediate reversioner by the act of surrender, and the actual reversioner by survivorship to the widow. This rule their Lordships of the Privy Council have refused to relax.

THE "EDITOR, CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES.

DEAR SIR,

I beg to request the favour of your publishing the following in the correspondence column of your esteemed journal.

Now is an instrument of obligation (Jaminama) executed in pursuance of an order of a Civil Court in order to stay execution proceedings to be stamped, whether under the Bengal Stamp Amendment Act, 1922, Art. 37, Sch. I A, or under the Bengal Court Fees Amendment Act, 1922, cl. 6, Sch. II or under both the Acts?

In this connection, I would beg to point out that their Lordships the Honourable Judges of the Calcutta High Court (agreeing, it seems, with the opinion of the Munsif of Ranaghat) ruled that such an instrument is to be stamped under the Stamp Act and not under the Court Fees Act. However, there cannot be double imposition; and it should be stamped under either of the Acts and not both. (See 21 C. W. N. 1150).

An expression of opinion by the members of the Bar will oblige

Yours faithfully,

HEM CH. GANGULY.

(2) From the judgment in Bajrangi's case (I. L. R. 30 All. 1) three important facts emerge with sufficient clearness:

(a) That the widow had sold the whole estate of her husband to a stranger for valuable consideration;

(b) That the whole body of the nearest reversioners of her husband, (indeed the whole body of reversioners), had ratified the sales and assented to them after receiving consideration for their ratification and assent;

(c) That the suit which was brought to contest the sales was brought by the sons of the consenting reversioners—per Shah Din, J., (Punjab Chief Court), in Deridas v. Rajakhan, 24 Indian Cases [1914] 417 (419).

Constitutional Aspect of the English Financial Administration ..	xcix

REPORTS (See Index.)

Benchers in making the rules intended to guard against frivolity and the freaks of fashion invading the law Courts. Anyhow female barristers so attired would not attract clients by their looks. They would not surely resemble the romantic figure of Porth.

Lady Barristers and their robe.

We have noted in these columns before, the success that intellectual young ladies have secured at the final examination for the Bar in England. Some of these ladies having expressed their desire to practise at the Bar, a mixed Committee of the Bench and the Bar went into the question of their forensic attire. The Committee have recommended a form of attire which is said to have met with the approval of the fairer sex but which would make them surely unsightly in the eyes of men. The Committee have recommended that a lady barrister should be attired as follows:—

(1) Ordinary barrister's wigs should be worn, and should completely cover and conceal the hair.

(2) Ordinary barrister's gowns should be worn.

(3) Dresses should be plain, black or very dark, high to the neck, with long sleeves, and not shorter than the gown, with high plain white collars and barrister's bands; or plain coats and skirts, may be worn, black or very dark, not shorter than the gown, with plain white shirts and high collars and barrister's bands.

The Committee in making these recommendations evidently intended that the sex of the female member of the legal profession should not be conspicuous. A woman so attired would be hard to distinguish in a profession where the members are clean-shaven like Brahmin pundits. But the ugliness of the horse-hair wig will be enhanced as it would be bigger than those of men for concealing the hair. Short frocks will not evidently be allowed. The Committee is however silent about high heels. This is evidently an oversight. We wonder if the Judges and Suit by Trustee in Bankruptcy to recover betting dues paid to book-maker by bankrupt by cheque.

In this week's London Notes there is a short report of the judgment of Astbury, J., in which he held that the Trustee in Bankruptcy is not entitled to recover from a book-maker moneys paid by cheque by a bankrupt to meet his betting losses. We confess we found some difficulty in appreciating the reasons assigned by the learned Judge in support of his conclusion. So far as we could make out the learned Judge appears to have thought that such actions even by private persons, though permissible are far from creditable, and the Trustee in Bankruptcy being an officer of the Court, the Court is justified in preventing him from pursuing a discreditable though legal claim. A Reuter's message, recently received, now announces that the Court of Appeal has reversed Mr. Justice Astbury's decision. The Master of Rolls, with whom Warrington and Younger, JJ., concurred, said, there was nothing discreditable or dishonourable, as the law stood, in the Trustee in Bankruptcy collecting the debt for distribution among the creditors of the bankrupt. The "Officer of the Court" idea is very often pushed too far and this was one instance of it.

JURISDICTION OF THE HIGH COURTS ON HABEAS CORPUS.

The jurisdiction of the Indian High Courts to issue the writ of habeas corpus is derived from the Supreme Courts, and it is, therefore, important to trace the origin and the extent of the exercise of the power by these Courts. The writ was apparently introduced into India after 1773: See the Resolution of the Court of Proprietors, 10th May 1773, cited in 1 Knapp's Reports at p. 13. The Mayor's Court did not possess the jurisdiction. When it became necessary for the Court of Queen's Bench to issue the writ to this country, special statutes were passed to give the power [Reg. v. Shaik Boodin, (1846) per O. C. 434, 446]. Owing to the difficulty of obtaining a copy of the Charter of the Recorder's Court, it is hardly possible to state with confidence whether this Court had the jurisdiction. I have found no instance of the exercise of it in the Reports available in Calcutta. The present article, therefore, deals only with the sources of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and the limitations to which it was subject from time to time.

JURISDICTION OF THE SUPREME COURT IN PRESIDENCY TOWNS FROM 1774 TO 1862.

* The powers of the Justices of the King's Bench in England to issue the writ ad subjiciendum [as to which see Black. Com. Vol. III, 131, cited in Re Ameer Khan, (1870) 6 B. L. R. 392, 445: Re Nataraju, (1912) 36 Mad. 72, 77: see also Reg. v. Shaik Boodin, (1846) per O. C. 434, 445-449] were given by the Letters Patent, 1774, cl. (4) [corresponding to the Madras Letters Patent, 1800, cl. (8) and the Bombay Letters Patent, 1823, cl. (10)] to the Supreme Court Judges individually and severally, and not to the "Court" collectively: [Reg. v. Ramgovind Mitter, (1871) Mort. 210: Reg. v. Warren Hastings, (1775) Mort. 206, 209 (Chambers, J.): Re Henrietta Brown, (1792) Mort. 212n: Re Nataraju, supra, p. 71. (cf. Reg. v. Wright, (1827) Mort. 222 (crim. information) L. R. v. Matilal, (1918) 41 Cal. 178, 195, 237 (contempts)]. But some judges held that the "Court," as such, was also so empowered (Reg. v. Warren Hastings, supra, p. 206, per Hyde, J., see Re Nataraju, supra, pp. 91-92). Though Impey, C. J., used the word "Court" (p. 209) in Warren Hastings's case and was so understood in Re Ameer Khan, (1870) 6 B. L. R. 392, 445, Chambers, J., said in Reg. v. Ramgovind Mitter, supra, that the C. J. had denied the power of the "Court," and Hyde, J. himself stated that the "Court" had never issued the writ. But a practice grew up of the hearing before the "Court" of the rule issued by a single Judge, and probably the distinction was thus ultimately ignored. The power was attributed to the "Court" almost invariably in the later decisions without any advertence to the previous distinction [Reg. v. Wright, (1827) Mort. 222, Re Justices of the Supreme Court, (1829) 1 Knapp. 1, 58: Re Ameer Khan, (1870) 6 B. L. R. 392, 445: L. R. v. Matilal, (1913) 41 Cal. 173-239 (contempts): Re Besant, (1916) 39 Mad. 1164, 1174 (certiorari)].

The Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court was generally laid under the Letters Patent (see cases supra, particularly, 6 B. L. R. 392, 445, 447: Paper on E. I. affairs vol. VI 1281, 1285, 1286 (1831): Third Report of the Select Committee of H. C. 5th appx. 1225, 1281).

The parts of the statute general in terms apply to India and afford additional reason for so construing the Letters Patent as to enable the court to issue the writ, Re Ameer Khan, p. 444.

The Calcutta Court issued the writ in some cases under the statute, but not being marked "per statulum," treated it as issued under the Common Law. Re Bancharam 1775 cited in 1 Knapp. p. 14.

(c) Under the Common Law.

The English Common Law which gives the right to the writ was introduced in Calcutta with the general body of English law (1). Jurisdiction under such law is referred to as the foundation of the writ in some cases (2).

The Supreme Court had power to issue the writ ad subjiciendum to a person within its local limits wherein it had a general jurisdiction (3) i.e., to all the inhabitants of the Presidency Towns (4) e.g., the Governor-General (5) (before the passing of 21 Geo. III c. 70). Writs ad subjiciendum issued to the Sheriff to produce a prisoner in jail in a Presidency town before the court to confess judgment (4) or swear in affidavit (5).

Exceptions.

(1) By s. 21 Geo. III C. 70, s. 1 (rep. by i. L. A. 1915) the Governor-General and Council of Bengal were exempted from the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and by s. 2 persons impleaded in such Court in any criminal process for acts done by the orders of the said authorities might plead the general issue, etc., provided (s. 3) these orders as to any British subject continued subject as before. Similar provisions were enacted as to Madras and Bombay in other statutes. (2) No writ was issued personally on the Nawab of the Carnatic acting as his own ambassador (6).

The Supreme Court also issued writs ad estificandum for production of prisoners in the Calcutta jail or Fort William (but not a detainee under Reg. III of 1818 (7) before itself or (8) or the Sadder Dewani Courts Registrar (9) or a Mofussil Court (10). Practice on such applications (11).

Writ ad respondendum issued to produce prisoner for assignment or trial before the Court (12).

JURISDICTION OF THE HIGH COURT IN PRESIDENCY TOWNS, 1862—1875.

Under 24, 25 Vic. C. 104 s. 9 the power of the Supreme Court to issue the writ of Habeas corpus was transmitted to the High Court (13); it was issued to the jail Superintendent (14) law officers (15) etc.

(b) Appropriation, Audit and Report.

The Comptroller and Auditor-General, therefore, has nothing to do with the Finance Account presented to Parliament. His functions are exercised over separate accounts of the actual expenditure of each department prepared by the Accounts Officers of the department concerned. These accounts known as the Appropriation Accounts show how the imposts or other advances obtained for expenditure have been expended. They are examined by the Comptroller and Auditor-General to ascertain whether the money has been spent in accordance with the votes of Parliament, and whether increased salaries or new offices have arisen without the previous sanction of the Treasury. Thus the Comptroller and Auditor-General acts on behalf of the House of Commons and of the Treasury, ensuring not merely that expenditure is in correspondence with votes, but that it has been made subject to the control with which Parliament has invested the Treasury. These Appropriation Accounts which contain either detailed observations or a brief list of explanations of the variations between expenditure and grant under the signature of the Accounts Officer of the Department concerned are submitted to the House of Commons by the Comptroller and Auditor-General who attaches to each account, first a certificate that the account has been examined and found correct, and secondly, a report. This latter contains the remarks of the Comptroller and Auditor-General. He comments upon (a) variations between expenditure and grants, (b) excesses over grants, and (c) irregularities. Usually his remarks are of a very brief nature and confined to (b). With regard to (c) he mentions whether irregular payments have since received the sanction of the Treasury, but sometimes he goes very much further and even interferes in such matters as the progress made in Public Works, e.g., pointing out unsatisfactory delays. He also mentions such matters as (a) any alterations made in the the methods of account, (b) disposal of stores no longer required, (c) failure to levy the proper amount of income tax, (d) frauds (e) propriety of debits to capital and revenue respectively, etc. It does not appear however that ordinarily he makes any mention of objections raised in the course of audit for which recoveries have been effected. To this it may be added that in England the more important store accounts are also subjected to a "test-audit" carried out under the instructions of the Comptroller and Auditor-General. Stock-taking is performed independently by the officers of the departments concerned, and test-audits are applied to these by the several Accounts Departments, e.g., the Army Accounts Department and the Accountant-General of the Navy. It also appears that even under this system frauds of magnitude occur, such as those connected with the thefts of metal from Chatham Dockyard in 1906. Frauds when they occur and the means taken to deal with them are specially brought to the notice of the Public Accounts Committee of the House of Commons in the Annual Appropriation Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General.

There are one or two other points to notice in regard to the supply of funds and the audit of expenditure which have not been described in detail above, and these are:—

(a) Imprest

Although for the purposes of account and audit nothing is treated as a final payment until accounted for as actually expended, yet issue made from the consolidated fund to the accounts of the various departments with the Paymaster General are treated as expenditure for the purpose of an interim account, in fact they are really "imprests".

(b) Funds outside the Exchequer Account.

Certain payments to Sub-accountants (chiefly for Army, Navy and Consular services at distant stations) are made by the Treasury direct to them or through the Paymaster General, from what is known as the Treasury Chest Fund. These are treated as advances out of the Treasury Chest Fund, which is a Banking Fund with a Capital of not less than £700,000 or more than £1,000,000, the dealings with which are regulated by Statute. These advances are reclaimed throughout the year by the Treasury at the end of the year to the Comptroller and Auditor-General. Another somewhat similar but smaller fund is the Civil Contingency Fund which also remains outside the Exchequer account.

(c) Expenditure out of receipts.

The Collectors of Revenue are authorised under certain regulations to make payments in their districts out of the funds which they collect. These may be either for expenses of their own department or for advances to other services. Thus, a Collector of customs receives on a given day £700, of which £150 is required for expenses of his department, and £100 for the army. These charges he meets and pays £450 by remitting a bill to the Customs office in London, together with vouchers for £250 expended. The £450 is paid by the Customs at once into the Consolidated fund. The two other sums will in due course be recovered out of money granted by Parliament, in one case for the Army, in the other for collection of revenue, and issued to these departments, and when recovered are paid into the consolidated fund.

It follows from the above that the Exchequer account at the Bank is not a true account of Income and Expenditure from day to day but of receipts on account and imprests, but the system in England has attained such exactness that there is very little actual difference between the receipts into and issues from the Exchequer account and the Income and Expenditure of Government, and it is therefore possible to produce what is a sufficiently accurate statement of the national income and expenditure up-to-date on any day with a few hours' notice.

REPORTS (See Index.)

President of the Bengal Legislative Council.

It has been announced in the public press that Mr. H. E. A. Cotton has been offered by the Governor of Bengal the Presidentship of the Bengal Council on the resignation of Sir Shamsul Huda owing to ill-health, and that Mr. Cotton has accepted the offer. Mr. Cotton was a member of the Calcutta Bar and is otherwise well-known in Bengal. The Cotton family is an old Anglo-Indian family who have for generations served in India and of whom Sir Henry Cotton is remembered by the people of this country with affection and high regard. Mr. H. E. A. Cotton following in the footsteps of his distinguished father lent his unqualified support to the anti-partition and reform agitation in Bengal. After he left this country and retired to England, as editor of the "India," as a member of the old Congress Committee and as a public man he has rendered conspicuous service in combating repressive and reactionary policy and in advocating the cause of constitutional reform and responsible government in India. Like Lord Lytton, Mr. H. E. A. Cotton is also an Indian by birth, having been born at Midnapur, and may not improperly be described as a Bengali. Since his return to England he has had a very active political career. He was for many years a very prominent and progressive member of the London County Council and has also for sometime been a member of the House of Commons. Having regard to his experience, ability, sympathy and progressive views in politics, we entertain no doubt that he answers all the qualifications needed in a

President of a reformed Provincial Council in India. But all the same we must say that there was no necessity for the importation of a President from England and we say this in spite of the fact that the choice has fallen on a tried friend like Mr. H. E. A. Cotton.

But in dealing with a public question we never allow considerations of personal friendship to interfere with our journalistic duties. The offer made by H. E. Lord Lytton is certainly within his constitutional powers under the Government of India Act. For the first term of three years and a year after, the Presidents of both provincial and imperial legislatures are to be nominated by the Provincial Governors and the Viceroy respectively. After that the Legislatures are to elect their own Presidents. But in the Bengal Council when it has been found that the Deputy President, Mr. Surendra Nath Roy, during the absence of the permanent President, conducted the business of the Council all through the busy winter session with conspicuous ability, we see no reason why the Governor should have gone all the way to London to get a President, when a tried man was available in Calcutta. Our progress towards Dominion Government must proceed hand in hand with the Indianisation of the services. This principle has also been accepted by the Imperial Government. The Legislative Assembly has been putting pressure on the Government of India to give speedy effect to this policy. The principle, as has been explained by some members at the Assembly, is this that for such work as may be done by Indians, persons should not be brought out from outside India. Notwithstanding our high regard for Mr. Cotton, we are bound to say that his appointment as President is a violation of the above principle. We are not prepared to make any departure with regard to a principle of such great moment to the whole of India even in favour of one of our best friends. In the other Presidencies of India, the Presidents of the Local Councils are Indians. Why should we then in Bengal go out of our way to import a President from England? The speaker of the House of Commoties sent a message to the President of the Legislative Assembly last session saying that he would be very pleased to furnish special facilities to any member of the Assembly who may visit England to study parliamentary procedure. We hope some members will from time to time avail themselves of such facilities and give a guidance to their colleagues in the Indian and Provincial Legislatures.

Corporation—Liability to Committal.

An interesting point of law was raised on a motion to quash the indictment in the case of Re Daily Mirror, Ltd. (Law Journal, March 18, 1922). It was argued that under the Grand Juries Suspension Act, 1917, an indictment could only be brought before the Court by means of a Committal for trial or on a written order of the Attorney-General or Solicitor-General. Now committal means that a person was physically in prison, therefore there was no committal here. The lower Court convicted and imposed a fine on the company but did not decide the point holding that though committal, which meant physically holding somebody in prison, was impossible in the case of the company yet the document was otherwise sufficient under the Grand Jurier Suspension Act. The Court of Appeal, however, reversed the decision holding that "the Committal in question commanded the constable to safely convey the company to His Majesty's prison at Brixton and then to deliver them to the Governor thereof with the precept"—that was a physical impossibility so the indictment lacked one of the essential preliminaries and the conviction based on it must be quashed. (Law Journal April 8, 1922).

CONSTITUTIONAL ASPECT OF THE ENGLISH FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION.

IV.

(7) THE PAYMASTER-GENERAL.

The position and functions of the Paymaster-General require some notice. No account of the detailed procedure in the Paymaster-General's office is available in India, but it may be said generally that the position he occupies is very similar to that of our Accountants-General in the Presidency Towns acting in what may be called their original jurisdiction with reference to claims arising in the Presidency. The Paymaster-General's office is or used to be divided into three branches for the examination of Army, Navy and Civil Service claims, as well as his (the Paymaster's) branches and the Book-keeper's branch. The first three are for the examination of claims, while the Paymaster's branch corresponds almost exactly with our cashier of the Presidency Pre-audit Department. The exact division of the work described may vary in detail, but the main fact that the Paymaster-General performs functions identical with those of our Presidency Pay Departments remains. He discharges claims on the authority of the department responsible for their due examination after satisfying himself that the department issuing the order for payment may properly issue such order and that the authorisations and acquittances are in proper form. For Army Effective services he pays on warrants of the War Office and on Bills of Exchange drawn on himself by officers entitled to draw them. For Navy services he pays on Bills drawn by the Admiralty as above, while payments for the Civil Services are made on quarterly, monthly, weekly or daily lists or on separate orders issued by the Treasury, Home Office, etc., etc. Non-effective services are paid on permanent orders (as in India) and the system of permanent orders is extended to certain Effective Services. Claims are paid by cheques or in cash, while those which are paid on permanent orders are checked with the registers maintained by the Paymaster-General. Bills drawn on the Treasury Chest Fund are accepted by the Paymaster-General and cashed at the Bank and the payments are repaid to the Treasury Chest account by the War Office, Admiralty, etc., out of the grants voted by Parliament. The resemblance between the Paymaster-General's duties and those of our own Accountants-General dealing with civil payments arising in the Presidency Towns is therefore practically complete, the main difference being that, while the Paymaster-General deals with all claims Civil, Military, Naval, etc., under the system prevailing in India the Military claims, (and until the other day the Public Works claims) have been separately dealt with by the account officers of that department.

(8) Account and Audit.

Lastly, with regard to account and audit. In the case of the large spending departments, e.g., the Army and the Navy, the accounts are compiled and the audit conducted by the accounting officers of the departments concerned, i.e., the Army Accounts Department and the Accountant-General of the Navy; to these accounts an appropriation audit is applied by the Comptroller and Auditor-General, but besides this the latter officer himself undertakes a detailed audit of a portion of the expenditure. The detailed audit is in this case, however, confined to a test audit of a portion, usually one-sixth of the whole expenditure; with regard to the Civil Services, the audit is conducted by the Comptroller and Auditor-General's own staff and is complete. Thus the Comptroller-General in England is himself an audit officer and his duties as such are laid down in the Exchequer and Audit Act, these duties being to see (1) Whether payments charged by an accounting department to a grant are supported by vouchers or proofs of payments, (2) (when required) whether they are supported by proper authority and (3) whether the money expended has been applied to the purposes for which such grant was intended to provide.

(9) Controlling authority in India and in England.

Now in comparing our Indian procedure and control with that of England, the first thing to bear in mind is the difference in the supreme controlling authority. In England it is the House of Commons. With them rests the responsibility for the supply of funds and also the authority for insisting upon their application in accordance with the intention of their resolutions. It is true that the Treasury, although it has no power to go beyond the provisions of each vote as a whole, exercises very wide powers within the votes granted by the House and indeed in one respect even goes beyond the Indian practice. It can sanction new appointments, transfer funds from one sub-head to another sub-head, and under sec. 43 of the Exchequer and Audit Act can even override a disallowance made by the Comptroller-General. Its action in these respects is, however, liable to examination and comment by the Public Accounts Committee of the House of Commons. That Committee receives the appropriation report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General annually and proceeds to discuss it with the aid of witnesses called from the different departments and finally reports its conclusions to the House as a whole, one of the principal witnesses being the Comptroller-General himself.

(10) In India.

In India the case is different. The supreme controlling authority is the Secretary of State for India in Council. His powers, even if regarded as delegated to him by the House of Commons, rest upon Statute Law (sec. 21 of the Government of India Act, 1919). The only control which is exercised by Parliament over his actions in respect of expenditure out of the revenues of India is first that provided by sec. 22 of the Act quoted, which prevents the revenues of India being applied to meet the expenses of any military operations carried on beyond the frontiers without the consent of both Houses, except under certain special or sudden circumstances, and second the provision of sec. 26 of the Act which requires complete accounts of the revenue and expenditure of India to be laid before both Houses annually, but it does not appear that this latter provision operates in practice to enable the House of Commons to interfere with the manner in which the Secretary of State's control is conducted in spite of sec. 2, cl. (3) which puts him completely under the control of the House itself. There is a third provision which subjects the English expenditure of the Secretary of State to audit by an Audit Officer appointed by the Crown, and although the report of that auditor has to be laid before Parliament, it may be noted that his report is directed to be made to the Secretary of State and not to the House of Commons. Any control therefore which is to be exercised in India by the chief audit authority over expenditure out of the revenues of India is exercised on behalf of the Secretary of State, and it rests with the Secretary of State to say how far the audit conducted satisfies his requirements and whether the report of that auditor should be furnished to him direct or to the Government of India. By the new Government of India Act the Auditor-General is made independent of the Government of India. A creature of the Statute, his appointment is made by the Crown and he holds his office during pleasure of the Crown. In practice, however, he is subject to the authority of the Government of India, and his reports are addressed to that body and not to the Secretary of State although copies thereof are furnished to the latter.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The recent decisions in the HOUSE OF LORDS in Dey v. Mui, (1920) 2 K. B. 346, and Sutters v. Briggs, (1921) A. C. 1, in effect decided that under the Gaming Act, 1835, a person who had paid a lost bet by cheque was entitled to recover the amount. It was anticipated that considerable litigation would result not so much at the hands of backers and bookmakers, but of trustees who by reason of their fiduciary position are apparently under an obligation to get in for the estate every asset that could be legally recovered.

An interesting judgment on the rights or duties of trustees in Bankruptcy was delivered by ASTBURY, J., on the 6th instant, in the case of Trustee of A. F. Schanton v. Pearson. In the course of his judgment the learned Judge said that no doubt the Plaintiff had a statutory right to bring an action to recover the amount of bets paid by cheque but at the same time it was the duty of the Court to prevent its officer from doing what was dishonourable. He made no reflection on the conduct of the Plaintiff who was merely trying to find out what his duty was, but considered that the debtor had induced the bookmaker to deal with him and trust him, and to continue to do so by paying his losses from time to time by cheques, he receiving his winnings in the same way. His Lordship dealt with the authorities, and held that in the circumstances of the case the action was one which it would not be honourable for an ordinary individual to prefer, and a fortiori it was not an action that should be brought by a trustee in Bankruptcy who had always been treated as an officer of the Court.

THE LAW OF LIMITATION AND ADVERSE POSSESSION. Being an exhaustive and critical Commentary on the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. Third Edition. By K. J. Rustomji, Barrister-at-Law, Lahore: Empire Law Publishing Society, Law Publishers, 1923.

We were one of the first to recognise the sterling merits of Mr. Rustomji's Commentaries on the Limitation Act, and we are not surprised that in less than seven years there should be a demand for a third edition. As was to be expected, the author has carefully followed every new development in the law of limitation, legislative or judicial, and the recently reported Privy Council decision in Vidya Varuthi v. Balusami Ayyar, I. L. R. 44 Mad. 831, (which came somewhat as a surprise, in view of previous decisions of the Judicial Committee, to the profession) is amongst the cases noticed in the Addenda. Not much need be said of a work which has already made itself indispensable to legal practitioners and judges. We have to note, however, that in the matter of mechanical execution, the book has not attained the standard of excellence which might be expected of it. As the condition of the paper market is improving, it is not unreasonable to expect that there will be a noticeable improvement in the next edition in the get-up of the work without materially adding to its price.

This is a companion hand-book to the author's Court Fees Act as recently amended, which we noticed some time ago. The manner in which the amendments have been shown and embodied is explained by the author in his preface. The book will undoubtedly prove useful.

It is no doubt a great convenience to have all these three enactments, with the latest amendments embodied or shown in their proper places, in one handy manual. The busy practitioner will find good value for the very moderate price he may have to pay for a copy.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Newspaper Posters and Election Expenses.

In the Daily Mirror case noted in our last issue, an important point of election law was raised and decided. The Daily Mirror had posted all over a certain constituency a contents bill showing the photographs of and containing eulogies of a particular candidate and they were hauled up for breach of sec. 84 of the Representation of the People Act, 1918, the material provision of which runs as follows :—

"A person other than the election agent of a candidate shall not incur any expenses on account of holding public meetings or issuing advertisements, circulars or publications for the purpose of promoting or procuring the election of any candidate at a parliamentary election, unless he is authorised in writing to do so by such election agent."

The candidate's agent had not authorised the Daily Mirror to incur any such expense and the Defendant's contention was that these posters were merely for the purpose of increasing the circulation of the newspaper. Rowlatt, J., held, that that was no answer, if they were also directed to promote or procure the election of a candidate. The jury found the Defendants guilty of the statutory offence charged and imposed a substantial fine.

We give below the corresponding section of the Indian Election Offences and Enquiries Act, 1920, for comparison as the law here is almost identical with the law in England :—

"Whoever without the general or special authority in writing of a candidate incurs or authorises expenses on account of the holding of any public meeting or upon any advertisement, circular or publication or in any other way whatsoever for the purpose of promoting or procuring the election of such candidate shall be punished with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees." There is a proviso to the section which for our purposes is immaterial.

Criminal liability of employees of Corporation.

Where the whole case was brought up before the Appellate Court, the Appellate Court held, as noted ante, that a corporation cannot be "committed" but at the same time as against the employee of the company, the Court held that he had acted "with full consciousness of what he was doing and was a party to the purpose which was being served, viz., the promotion of the candidature of Rear Admiral Sueter as a Member of Parliament," and the fact that the conviction of the company was quashed did not affect the employee's conviction. They took such a serious view of the matter that they further refused an application on the employees' behalf against the disqualification for voting and holding public office, which the conviction entailed.

The Journal of Comparative Legislation and International Law.

The February number of the Journal of Comparative Legislation and International Law contains a number of contributions of both general and special interest. Sir Tynden Macansey's article on International Labour Legislation is of topical interest and deals with the report presented by M. Albert Thomas, Director of the International Labour Office, at the conference held in October last at Geneva. The Powers of Colonial Legislatures are discussed by Professor W. Harrison Moore with special reference to the question of delegation of powers, upon which he clearly shows that the very affirmative propositions laid down in Hodge v. The Queen, 9 A. C. 117, R. v. Burah, 3 A. C. 889 and Powell v. Apollo Candle Co., 10 A. C. 282, cannot be taken to be the last words. Would the "plenary powers" of legislation conferred by Parliamentary Statutes on Colonial Legislatures authorise such legislatures when delegating legislative functions to another authority to determine its own legislative functions, either temporarily or for ever? Some restrictions upon the power of delegation must be recognised, and if so, what is the bearing on the question of such a provision as that contained in sec. 5 of the Colonial Laws Validity Act that "every representative Legislature shall have full power to make laws respecting the constitution, powers and procedure of such Legislature"? See Webb v. Outtrim, (1907) A. C. 88 and McCawley v. The King, (1920) A. C. 714. Considerations of space prevent us from doing more than barely mention The Hague Rules, 1921, contributed by Mr. C. R. Dunlop, K. C. and the very interesting resumé of the Law of Adoption among the Maoris of New Zealand by Mr. F. O. V. Acheson, LL. M., a Judge of the Native Land Court and Native Appellate Court of New Zealand. Professor Berriedale Keith speaks with authority on Mandates and contributes Notes on Imperial Constitutional Law of abiding value. These, however, do not exhaust the varied contents of the number, each item of which will repay careful perusal.

JURISDICTION OF THE HIGH COURTS IN HABEAS CORPUS.

JURISDICTION OF THE SUPREME COURT OUTSIDE THE PRESIDENCY TOWNS.

Writ ad subjiciendum.—The jurisdiction of the King's Bench to issue the writ beyond England was considered by the Bombay Supreme Court (1). But a more correct view, based on later decisions, was taken subsequently (2).

[1774—1781]. From 1774 down to the passing of 21 Geo. III c. 70 the Supreme Court of Calcutta sent its writs to persons living in the mofussil, but assumed to be subject to its jurisdiction constructively (3).

The writ thus issued to certain persons at Murshidabad to bring up a native Indian (4). It was also issued to owners of land, as persons in the service of the East India Company, and so subject to the jurisdiction of the Court (1).

[1781—1862]. The very wide construction put by the Court on 13 Geo. III c. 63, and the Letters Patent, 1774, especially in connection with its jurisdiction to issue the writ outside Calcutta, led to conflict between the Court and the Government, in consequence of which 21 Geo. III. c. 70 was passed to remove doubts as to the persons subject to the Court (2). The power to issue it outside Calcutta was not questioned by the statute (3), but restrictive provisions as to persons were introduced (4). The right was, however, preserved to British born subjects committed by the Governor-General in Council (5).

The Supreme Court had no power, under 13 Geo. III, c. 63, secs. 13, 14, the Letters Patent (1774), cl. 4, and, 21 Geo. III, c. 70, to issue the writ to a person, not in law an inhabitant of Calcutta or the factory of Fort William or their limits, and not otherwise personally subject to its jurisdiction, e.g., a native residing in Bengal, Behar and Orissa where the illegal detention also took place (6); or to a jailor or other officer, as such, of a "Native Court," [the Supreme Court having no power to discharge a person imprisoned by such Court (7)] including in the term a Native Court Martial (8).

It could not release by writ a British born person sentenced by a Company's Court competent to try the subject-matter, on the ground of erroneous assumption of jurisdiction, but only for total want of such competence (9).

The Court had power to issue the writ outside the Presidency Towns to persons subject to its civil and criminal Jurisdiction (10), e.g., to a British subject detaining any person illegally (1), [though it would not do so where the custody was legal, as under Reg. III of 1818 (2) and it would have, in consequence, to remand the prisoner (3)]: to natives constructively inhabitants of Calcutta (4): to natives in the service of the East India Company or of British subjects causing illegal detention in a private capacity (5), such natives being subject to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court (6): to British born or native jailors of the Company's Courts, being in the service of the Company and unlawfully detaining a British born subject, the Supreme Court having jurisdiction over the jailor in such cases in respect of his torts, i.e., his wrongful act of detention (7): to natives subject to its criminal jurisdiction by reason of the commission of an offence within the limits of the town though not otherwise subject, as where a master abducted a servant in Calcutta and detained him in the mofussil (8): to natives arresting and detaining a witness going from the Court to his home (9).

The Letters Patent, 1774, cl. 4 were held to have conferred the power to issue the writ outside the Presidency Towns from the time of the Supreme Court's first establishment: and these decisions settled the law, and cannot now be questioned except by a higher Court (10). The Madras Letters Patent were similarly construed (11).

Writ ad testificandum.—This writ was issued to produce, as witnesses before the Supreme Court, any one commorant in Bengal, Behar and Orissa or the annexed districts (1). It was directed to jailors to bring up natives confined in the mofussil jails (2). The Supreme Court had power to issue sub-poenas to the mofussil (3).

Writ ad respondendum.—An application was made to remove a prisoner into the custody of the sheriff for trial, but refused for want of jurisdiction in the Court collectively (4).

JURISDICTION OF THE HIGH COURT OUTSIDE THE PRESIDENCY TOWNS.

[1862—1872]. Under 24, and 25 Vic. c. 104, sec. 9, the power of the Supreme Court to issue the writ outside the Presidency Towns passed to the High Court, subject to the Letters Patent, 1865, and cl. 11 does not affect the limits within which the writ ad subjiciendum can be issued; the issuing of the writ not being a matter of Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction (5). The Madras Court has adopted the same view (6).

The Calcutta Court issued the writ in the case of private detention of a minor outside Calcutta (7).

The High Court undoubtedly possessed the inherited power to issue the writ outside the Presidency Towns till the passing of the Code of 1872, and the only question is whether it has since been abrogated.

[1872].—Sec. 81 of the Code, 1872, gave the High Court jurisdiction throughout its territorial limits and other places in the case of European British subjects (8). But by sec. 82 the jurisdiction beyond the Presidency Towns was taken away in other cases.

[1882].—Sec. 456, Code, 1882, reproduced sec. 81 of the preceding Code with alterations.

In 1912 the Madras Court held, though incidentally, that the High Court had jurisdiction, derived from cl. (8), Letters Patent, 1800, to issue the writ on any one and anywhere in the Madras Presidency (1), the restrictions on the Supreme Court's power, in respect of persons and Courts in the mofussil, having been removed by their becoming the King's subjects and the King's Courts since 1858 (2). Recently the jurisdiction was expressly affirmed by Sastri, J., who held that the general power to issue the writ outside the Presidency Towns was independent of, and not curtailed by, sec. 491, Cr. P. C. (3). The Patna (4) and Calcutta (5) Courts have left the question open: the case of Tops v. Emperor (6), infra, merely holding that the Court has no such power under sec. 491. To determine the question, the Court must consider Re Amcer Khan, (6 B. L. R. 392), Re Maharana of Lahore (Tay. 128) and Surendra Nath Banerjee v. C. J. (10 Cal. 209) (7), but principally the effect of sec. 82, Code, 1872; sec. 456, Code 1882; and the power of the Indian Legislature to take away altogether such a supreme right.

DUTY ON SECURITY-BOND.

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES.

DEAR SIR,

Your correspondent has raised a point regarding duty to be paid on security-bonds (jaminnama) given for stay of execution in your issue of the 8th May.

The point seems to have been set at rest by the ruling quoted by him, namely, 21 C. W. N. 1150. The Munsif of Ranaghat who referred the matter to the Hon'ble High Court was of opinion that as the security-bond is given under Art. 6, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act, it need not be written on non-judicial stamp paper but a court-fee stamp is necessary to be affixed on it (presumably on plain paper). This view was not accepted by the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court, who seem to have made distinctions between bonds which the parties are bound to give in pursuance of the order of the Court and those which they can furnish or not as they please. Security-bonds given for stay of execution were held to belong to the latter class, not being such as the parties were bound to give in pursuance of the order of the Court, and as such they were held to be chargeable with stamp duty only. So the provision for paying court-fee under cl. 6, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act does not apply to such bonds.

It is no doubt a fact that in some districts a practice obtains under which both the duties are paid on such bonds, but neither the law nor the ruling favours such practice. The only case in which the question of paying both the duties may arise is when the amount secured in the security-bond exceeds Rs. 1,000, and the giving of the bond is obligatory upon the party, inasmuch as in this case both Cl. (b), Art. 57 of the Bengal Stamp (Amendment) Act and Cl. 6, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act may be applied.

Yours faithfully,

RAJENDRA NATH SOM, B.L.,
Pleader, Howrah.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Rights of Ghatiyas of sacred rivers.

The Ghatiya is an institution at Benares and other places to which pilgrims resort in large numbers to bathe in the sacred rivers. What he does is to place platforms on the public ghats to facilitate the bathing; and for the use of these platforms and other small services performed by the Ghatiya for the comfort and convenience of the pilgrims, he receives remunerations. The Ghatiya's business is thus a fairly profitable one—sufficiently profitable indeed to lead to disputes between rival claimants of the business and the profits arising therefrom. But once such a dispute is taken to the law Courts, the question is immediately raised, "Has the Ghatiya any rights?"; and if so, "Are they rights of property?"

From the report of the case of Suraj Prasad v. Ganesh Ram, 1. L. R. 43 All. 581, it appears that the business of a Ghatiya at a particular ghat has sometimes been exclusively performed for generations by, and has been confined within, particular families. How this monopoly of user originated may be surmised. When pilgrims from distant places began to resort in large numbers to these bathing ghats, the demand arose for persons to look after their needs and comforts and the supply followed the demand. A Ghatiya would before long fix his station and his user of a particular ghat for plying his trade would not be interfered with by other Ghatiyas so long as there was room enough for all. As to the State or the general public interfering with the Ghatiyas whether for police or other purposes, the idea that such a user of public ghats is really a franchise, and needs to be regulated by the State or the community as such, would hardly occur in a country so unsophisticated as regards public rights as India. The rights of the Ghatiyas, if they are rights, cannot be supposed to have arisen in grant, but must have in every case had their foundation in prescription. Whether this is altogether consistent or not with principles of English law which, in present conditions, are apt to be referred to in dealing with such questions, it is certainly not politic to ignore the exclusive rights of particular families of Ghatiyas where they have grown up and have been generally admitted. But, it was argued in this case, how do you distinguish the right claimed by the Ghatiya from that which came up for consideration in Bansi v. Kanhaiya, 18 A. L. J. 983? There the right claimed was the exclusive right to receive alms at a particular ghat. The bathing in the sacred river and the giving of alms are a part and parcel of the same religious act, and the giving of alms on these occasions is by no means a casual act of benevolence. The takers of these alms (we dare not, with the Judges, call them "beggars") are instruments who directly assist the pilgrims in the acquisition of the full measure of religious merit which the bathing in the sacred river is intended to secure. The "beggar" at the sacred ghat is as much an institution as the Ghatiya. However the Judges (Mears, C. J. and Banerjee, J.) were satisfied that the case of these "beggars" bears no analogy to that of the Ghatiyas. The decision in Bansi v. Kanhaiya has by negating the exclusive right of individuals to receive all alms given at particular ghats, presumably increased the influx of beggars at ghats, so that the pilgrims can have no ground for complaint on the score of their opportunities for acquiring religious merit by distributing alms having been narrowed by it. But a similar decision with regard to Ghatiyas would have aggravated the scramble for pilgrims at sacred places to the point of endangering even their lives and limbs. The price demanded for acquiring even such plenary religious merits as bathing in the sacred rivers is expected to confer, may prove too heavy.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The Easter Sittings of the Privy Council commenced on April 27th. There are 15 Indian appeals set down for hearing, and it is anticipated that these will all be heard before the Court rises at Whitsuntide. The only appeal which is expected to have a protracted hearing is the case of Khatubai v. Md. Haji Abu which comes from Bombay and raises the question as to the law of succession which is applicable to Halai Memons of Porebunder.

On April 27th judgment was delivered by the Board in the case of Sarju Prasad Missir v. Maksudan Chowdhury, an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Patna which was dismissed with costs.

A Board consisting of LORD ATKINSON, LORD PARMOOR, LORD CARSON, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMEER ALI sat to hear the 1st case on the list which was an appeal from Madras, Lakkmisetti Basavarlingam v. L. Panidessaya. The question for determination was as to whether a partition had taken place in a Hindu joint family. Mr. J. M. Parikh (Ex parte) for the Appellants contended that the High Court was wrong in refusing to re-open part of the partition proceedings. The Board dismissed the appeal.

A question on the construction of a Parsi Will was raised in the next case, Dinbai v. Nusserwanji. The Appellant was represented by Messrs. Upjohn, K. C. and E. B. Raikes. The Respondent by Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown. At the conclusion of the argument their Lordships reserved judgment.

The case of Jagdeo Narain Singh v. Baldeo Singh consisted of 7 consolidated appeals from the High Court of Patna and raised the question whether the Respondents were tenants of the Appellants, or themselves proprietors, and whether or not the Appellants were barred by limitation from asserting their title. Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and J. K. Roy appeared for the Appellants and Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Dubé for the Respondents.

At present the Board presided over by LORD PHILLIMORE are hearing the case of Radhakrishna v. Bisheshar Sahay. This is an appeal from Patna in which the Appellants are seeking to prove that the Respondent had purchased the suit property benami after being forbidden by the Court to bid. The Respondent denies the alleged benami nature of the transaction and contends that the suit is barred by limitation. The Appellants are represented by Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., Parikh, and Abdul Majid, the Respondent by Mr. B. Dubé.

To
THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."
SIR,

May I through the courtesy of your columns draw the attention of our legislators to two much needed amendments of the procedure obtaining in the trial of criminal cases.

The first is the provision with regard to the grant of bail. Chap. XXXIV of the Criminal Procedure Code codifies the law on the subject. Under sec. 497, a Magistrate cannot grant bail to a person accused of any non-bailable offence "if there appear reasonable grounds for believing that he has been guilty of the offence of which he is accused." Beyond the fact that the term "reasonable grounds" is delightfully vague—what is reasonable to one Magistrate being quite the reverse to another—does not this provision militate against the fundamental principle of criminal jurisprudence, namely, that a person is to be considered innocent until he is proved guilty? And again refusal to grant bail in a majority of cases operates as denial of opportunity to the accused to defend himself properly. Bail, therefore, should not be refused unless the Magistrate is satisfied that if enlarged on bail the accused is likely to abscond.

The second point that I want to bring forward is with regard to the grant of copies of First Information Reports and of Statements made to Police Officers in the course of their investigation under Chap. XIV, Cr. P. C. Copies of F. I. Rs. are not granted until they are made exhibits, that is to say, until the trial has begun and in most cases proceeded some way. The result is that the accused is shut out from knowledge of the offence with which he is charged until the prosecution chooses and he is left to grope in the dark. An accused person ought to be furnished with a copy of the First Information Report at the earliest opportunity—as soon as he is apprehended or as soon as he comes to Court, so that he may be prepared from the very beginning to meet the charge. Then again the accused is not entitled to inspect or take out copies of statements made by witnesses before investigating Police Officers unless the Court after referring to the same, at the request of the accused, thinks it expedient for the interests of justice that the accused should get such copies (sec. 162). This "request" presupposes knowledge of the accused of statements made by witnesses before the police officer. But are all the witnesses examined in his presence? And how can he be armed beforehand with knowledge sufficient to impeach the credit of a witness making an amplified or totally different statement in Court unless he is allowed to inspect or to take out copies of statements made by the witness before the investigating officer? Instances are not rare in which witnesses who have only heard about an occurrence and said so before the investigating officer blossom forth into eye-witnesses in Court and whose statements but for conscientious and careful public prosecutors would pass muster.

I have only baldly stated my points: what I want to urge is that the provisions of criminal procedure should be so amended as to give in every instance the accused a sporting chance.

Yours faithfully,

PROBODH GOPAL MUKERJEE.

Recent decisions not yet reported

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before CUMING and PANTON, JJ. CIVIL RULE No. 295 of 1922. HARENDRA KUMAR ROY and others, Petitioners v. NISHI CHANDRA JALIA and others, Opposite Party. The 8th April 1922.

Limitation Act, sec. 5—Application to admit a second appeal filed out of time, when analogous appeal in time.

There were two analogous rent appeals before the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Chittagong.

Both the rent appeals were dismissed on the 27th day of September 1921 by one and the same judgment. The decree was signed on the 30th September 1921 and on that day the Plaintiff-Appellants filed an application for copies of the judgment and decree. In one case the folios were requisitioned on the 30th September 1921 while in the other case folios were requisitioned on the 3rd November 1921. The Plaintiff-Appellants supplied the folios on the 3rd November 1921 in both the cases. The copies were made ready in both the cases on the 8th November 1921. Two second appeals, viz., File Nos. 162 and 163 of 1922, were filed on the 8th January 1922 in the Hon'ble High Court. The office reported that second appeal File No. 162 was filed in time but the second appeal File No. 163 was filed out of time by four days. The Appellant-Petitioners were misled by the entry on the back of the copy of the decree of the Lower Appellate Court in connection with second appeal File No. 162 and therefore they were prevented by sufficient cause from filing the second appeal File No. 163 within time. The Petitioners then moved the High Court under sec. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act and obtained this rule:

Held—That the second appeal File No. 163 should be admitted under sec. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act.

Babu Kshitish Chandra Chakrabarti appeared for the Petitioners.

No one appeared for the Opposite Party.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before GREAVES and B. GHOSH, JJ. REV. No. 648 of 1921. SM. HARI BHABINI DEBI and another, Plaintiffs, Petitioners v. NARENDRA NATH ROY and another, Defendants, Opposite Party. The 27th February 1922.

Restoration of appeal—Whether the Court has power to restore it when dismissed under Or. 41, r. 10, C. P. C.

The facts briefly stated are these:—

The Plaintiffs' case was that the Petitioner, Sm. Hari Bhabini Devi, an old widowed lady owned and possessed a one-storied house and some adjoining land worth about Rs. 8,000 at Shibpur within the town of Howrah, and lived there with her widowed daughter Sm. Monorama Debi; and they had no male guardian to look after them. For sometime past Babu Narendra Nath Roy acted as their pleader, and was their sole adviser, who lived near their place, and in whom they placed much confidence. The Petitioners, being in need of money, took a loan of Rs. 1,000, as alleged, and executed a document which they understood to be a mortgage deed; that thereafter in 1921 Narendra obtained a decree for ejectment. Then they came to know the deed in question was an out and out sale, and instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif at Howrah for a declaration that the deed they executed was a mortgage and not a sale deed. The learned Munsif, however, dismissed the Plaintiffs' suit. Being thus aggrieved they preferred an appeal (Title Appeal No. 110 of 1921) in the Court of the Additional District Judge at Howrah on 23rd May 1921. On the 1st June 1921, Narendra, the Respondent made a petition before the District Judge, praying for security for costs of the suit as well as the appeal, then pending, to be furnished by the Appellants. No notice was served upon the Appellants. On the 3rd June 1921 the learned District Judge passed an ex parte order calling upon the Appellants to furnish security before 24th June 1921 to the extent of Rs. 300. The order-sheet, however, purported to bear the initials of one of the Appellant's pleaders. Then on 25th June, Narendra put in a petition for dismissing the appeal, and the learned Judge dismissed the appeal under Or. 41, r. 10. Then on 21st July 1921 the Appellants put in a petition for restoration of the appeal, alleging that they had no notice of the orders for security, and Narendra having already attached a decree for Rs. 800 obtained by Appellants, further security was unnecessary. The learned Judge, however, refused to restore the appeal, holding that there was no provision of law for restoring the appeal.

The Petitioners, then, obtained a rule upon the Opposite Party to shew cause why the appeal should not be restored.

Babu Manmatha Nath Ganguly, Vakil for the Petitioners.—This is a rule obtained on behalf of the two purdanashin ladies against the orders passed by the learned District Judge, dismissing the Petitioners' appeal for failure to furnish security for costs of the suit and the appeal under Or. 41, r. 10, C. P. C. The learned Judge ought to have first satisfied himself that the Appellants did get a notice of the application; and having regard to the fact that both the Appellants were purdanashin ladies it was all the more necessary that notice should have been served. It was rather an extraordinary petition, having regard to the fact that Narendra had already attached a money decree of Rs. 800 standing in favour of the Appellants.

[GREAVES, J.—You say you had no notice, but I see in the counter-affidavit it is mentioned that your pleader did sign the order.]

The pleader was not in charge of the case, and the order was never communicated to the Appellants. These orders are usually signed by pleaders whenever presented to them. I don't know whether your Lordships are going to rely upon a counter-affidavit like this. The affidavit is not in proper form. Your Lordships ought to disregard it altogether, I. L. R. 37 Cal. 259.

[GREAVES, J.—Suppose we exclude the counter-affidavit, it is a matter of record that your pleader did sign it.]

I submit that under the circumstances of the case your Lordships should consider that a notice ought to have been served upon the Petitioners. I should not be shut out from my appeal in this way. I ought to have been given an opportunity.

Then, again, I put in a petition with a security bond offering security, but that was rejected. I submit the Court had ample power to grant my prayer, and restore the appeal.

[Dr. Mitter.—When once the appeal was dismissed the Court was functus officio.]

I submit the Court has power to restore it. 13 I. A. 57, 17 I. A. 1 and 21 Bom. 576.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with Babus Peary Mohan Chatterjee, Hari Charan Ganguly and Haradhan Chatterjee) for the Opposite Party No. 1 was not called upon to reply.

M. N. G. The Rule was discharged.

REPORTS (&c. Index.)

The late Sir William Comer Petheram.

Bengal owes a special tribute to the memory of Sir William Comer Petheram, the news of whose death, at the ripe age of 87, has been received recently. He was one of the most popular Chief Justices of the Calcutta High Court. Sir Barnes Peacock, Sir Richard Couch and Sir William Garth were, perhaps, abler lawyers, but Sir William Comer Petheram was not second to any of them in maintaining the high traditions of the oldest High Court in India. Sir William was an equity lawyer and though well-versed in the technique of law, his chief look out on the Bench was to do justice. He used to judge each case on its own merits and, without burdening his judgments with case-law, he used to point out broadly how the case before him differed from the precedents cited and decide the issues of facts and law by bringing to bear on them sound general principles and the dictates of a strong common sense. He started life as a special pleader and this stood him in good stead in getting a quick grasp of the facts and the law at the hearing of appeals on the Appellate Side of the Calcutta High Court. In England he enjoyed a fairly good practice and took silk in 1880. In 1884 he came out to India as Chief Justice of the Allahabad High Court and two years later he was appointed Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court and after serving 10 years in the latter capacity he retired from India in 1896.

Although socially he was more or less of a retiring disposition, yet by the sterling qualities of his character both as a judge and a gentleman he commanded universal respect. It will be remembered that after his retirement, when his furniture and books were sold by auction, many people vied with each other for possessing such articles as his office chair, pictures, etc., as mementos. It may be asked at this distance of time what was the secret of his great popularity? It was simply this that he was absolutely independent of the executive. Many will remember the case of the Deputy Magistrate who had displeased the executive by paying no heed to considerations of policy in the trial of criminal cases and was on that account taken to task by the executive Government. Sir William Comer boldly supported his cause and extended his protection to him against such executive interference with the administration of justice. Sir William Comer never visited the Government House or the Belvedere except on ceremonial occasions or when he was invited. He used to say that a Judge had to a great extent to shun society, and humorously add that in his case it was pretty easy, since he had no daughter to marry. In his days political trials were not very common. When the Bengal Government prosecuted the editor of the Bangabashi newspaper for sedition, Sir William Comer himself presided over the Sessions at which the trial was held: when the jury returned to Court and informed the Chief Justice that they could not agree, he discharged the jury at once saying that in such an important trial he would not have any divided verdict. The Government thereupon abandoned the prosecution. We have special reasons to be grateful to him because when we approached him with the project of starting a legal journal in this city he called a meeting of the Full Court and gave us the same facilities for reporting cases as to the Editor of the Indian Law Reports.

Court-fee on landlord's application under sec. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, for enhancement of rent of tenure, recorded as not variable.

We publish in another column a letter from Mr. Profulla Kumar Das in which he has ingeniously argued that when a landlord applies under sec. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, for enhancement of rent of a tenure, which he alleges was erroneously recorded as not variable, the issue which is raised as to whether the tenure was held at a fixed or a variable rent is not an issue as to whether the tenant belongs to one class or another, within the meaning of cl. (e) to sec. 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that therefore the application is not properly chargeable with ad valorem court-fee, under the notification in that behalf issued by the Governor-General in Council. The terms of sec. 4 do undoubtedly lend support to Mr. Das's contention; but where the tenure has been recorded as bearing a fixed rent, must not the landlord have the entry amended before he can ask the Settlement Officer to enhance the rent? For in the absence of such a prayer (backed, too, by evidence to establish it) the Settlement Officer is bound to proceed upon the assumption that the entry is correct.

The application for enhancement of the rent of a tenure recorded as held at a fixed rent must therefore contain an allegation that the entry is incorrect and thus involves "a dispute regarding an entry" in the record-of-rights within the meaning of sec. 106, Bengal Tenancy Act, and would in substance be an application under sec. 105 for settlement of fair rent joined with a suit under sec. 106 for correction of an entry in the record-of-rights. If the above reasoning be correct, then the court-fee payable would be just the same as if the issue raised was treated as one arising under cl. (e) of sec. 105A of the Act, for according to Government Notification a plaint in a suit under sec. 106 must also bear ad valorem court-fee subject to the maximum of Rs. 10. It would be otherwise where the entry is that the rent is variable but the tenant upon an application of the landlord for settlement of fair rent under sec. 105 challenges the correctness of the entry. No suit is required to be instituted by the landlord in such a case under sec. 106, and whether the issue raised is one contemplated by cl. (e) of sec. 105A or not, it is not one "raised by the applicant" within the meaning of the notification cited by Mr. Das.

Ad valorem* court-fee on claims exceeding Rs. 150 in value up to Rs. 1,000.

A correspondent communicates to us his doubts as to whether the amount Rs. 18-0 stated as the proper ad valorem court-fee payable upon a claim valued at Rs. 160 in the revised table of rates of ad valorem fees appended to the Bengal Court Fees Amendment Act, IV of 1922, is not a misprint for Rs. 17-6 which according to him is the fee properly payable under the scale of fees prescribed in Art. 1 to Sch. I of the Act. We have examined the language of the article as amended by Act IV, B. C., of 1922, and are satisfied that there is no conflict between the provisions of that article and the amount stated in the table to which exception has been taken. Had the relevant clause of the article read thus: "When such amount or value exceeds one hundred and fifty rupees, for every ten rupees or part thereof in excess of one hundred and fifty rupees, up to one thousand rupees," as our correspondent assumes it to do, the proper fee payable upon a claim of Rs. 160 would have been Rs. 17-6. But the words italicised do not occur in this clause. In the other clauses, the amount of fee prescribed in the third column is made payable upon amounts in excess of the stated minimum, and this no doubt is what led our correspondent to assume that there is a similar qualification in the clause in question. That the omission was deliberate however becomes apparent from an examination of the scale of fees recorded in the third column of Sch. I which are progressively 6 as., 8 as. and Re. 1-10 as. upon amounts in excess of the stated minima, but the next item is Re. 1-2 as. and this is made payable upon all claims ranging from above Rs. 150 to Rs. 1,000 and not upon excesses over the minimum of Rs. 150. The matter upon the language of the article does not really present any difficulty, but as the mistake has been made and is likely to be repeated we have deemed it desirable to draw our readers' attention to it by this note.

COURT-FEE ON LANDLORD'S APPLICATION UNDER SEC. 105, BENGAL TENANCY ACT, FOR ENHANCEMENT OF RENT OF TENURE, ' RECORDED AS NOT VARIABLE.

To
THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."
SIR,

Will you kindly publish the following in your much-esteemed journal so that the grievance mentioned in it may attract the attention of the legal profession as well as of the Settlement Department.

In exercise of the powers conferred by sec. 105, sub-sec. (3), of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Governor-General in Council has been pleased to direct that an application made under the said section shall bear:—

(a) a stamp of eight annas for each tenant making or joining or joined in the application, and,

(b) if, at any time during the hearing of the application, an issue is raised by the applicant under sec. 105A of the said Act, in addition a stamp to the amount of an ad valorem fee chargeable under Art. 1, Sch. I, of the Court Fees Act, subject to a maximum of ten rupees. [Vide Notification No. 2254 F, issued by the Government of India in the Finance Department on the 8th August 1918, published in the Gazette of India, dated the 10th August 1918, and re-published for general information in the Calcutta Gazette, dated the 28th August 1918.]

The operation of cl. (b) of the above Government Notification is often wrongly extended to the great hardship of litigants to cases not properly coming within the purview of the clause. To cite a typical instance, additional court-fees under the clause are levied from landlords of tenure-holders at variable rent, wrongly recorded as tenure-holders at fixed rent, when they seek enhancement of rent from such tenure-holders by proceedings under sec. 105. Are additional court-fees legally leviable in these cases? The answer to the question depends upon the answer to the further question, "Is an issue under sec. 105A really raised in these cases?" Now, if in these cases an issue is at all raised under sec. 105A, it must be raised either under cl. (e) or cl. (f) of that section. Under no other clause of sec. 105A can an issue be raised in these cases. Leaving aside, therefore, all other clauses of sec. 105A, let us confine ourselves only to cls. (e) and (f) of that section and examine whether in these cases an issue is really raised under any of these two clauses. Issue is raised under cl. (e) of sec. 105A "when the tenant belongs to a class different from that to which he is shown in the record-of-rights as belonging." Issue is raised under cl. (f) of sec. 105A "when the special conditions and incidents of the tenancy, or any right of way or other easements attaching to the land have not, or has not, been recorded, or have or has been wrongly recorded." Issue under cl. (e) of sec. 105A will not therefore be raised if a tenure-holder at variable rent be a tenant of the same class as a tenure-holder at fixed rent. The question which here emerges for consideration is: Is a tenure-holder at variable rent a tenant of the same class as a tenure-holder at fixed rent? Tenure-holders including under-tenure-holders, raiyats, holding at fixed rates, occupancy raiyats, non-occupancy raiyats and under-raiyats are the only classes of tenants for the purpose of the Bengal Tenancy Act (vide sec. 4 of the Bengal Tenancy Act). Tenure-holders at variable rent do not, therefore, figure in the Act as belonging to a different class from tenure-holders at fixed rent. The fact of occupancy raiyats belonging to a different class from raiyats holding at fixed rates is apt to give rise to an impression that tenure-holders at variable rent also belong to a different class from tenure-holders at fixed rent. That it is not so and that no inference by analogy can be drawn will be clear if we consider the matter a little more closely. The only difference between a tenure-holder at variable rent and a tenure-holder at fixed rent is that the rent of the former is variable while that of the latter is fixed. There is absolutely no other difference between them. Both of them have the same powers of alienation and same rights in respect of use of land. The law with respect to their succession and liability to eviction is also the same. But the difference between an occupancy raiyat and a raiyat holding at fixed rates is not merely that the rent of the former is variable while that of the latter is fixed. A raiyat holding at fixed rates can transfer his interest (vide sec. 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act) whereas, an occupancy raiyat ordinarily cannot (vide the F. B. cases of Dayamoyi v. Anand Mohan, Sheikh Azim v. Golak Singh and Ambika Charan v. Ram Charan, 18 C. W. N. 971: s. c. 20 C. L. J. 62: s. c. I. L. R. 42 Cal. 172). A raiyat holding at fixed rates can create permanent under-raiyati leases (vide Harimohan v. Atul Krishna, 19 C. W. N. 1127; Amar Chandra Roy v. Prasanna Dassi, 25 C. W. N. 9), whereas an occupancy raiyat cannot create under-raiyati leases for more than nine years. The interest of a raiyat holding at fixed rates, unless he has also acquired a right of occupancy is not a protected interest and is liable to annulment by a purchaser at a rent sale, whereas the interest of an occupancy raiyat is a protected interest and is not liable to annulment by a purchaser at a rent sale (vide sec. 16 of the Bengal Tenancy Act). A raiyat holding at fixed rates has the right to cut and appropriate trees independently of local custom (vide Radhika Nath v. Samir Fakir, 20 C. W. N. 636), whereas the right of an occupancy raiyat to cut and appropriate trees is dependent upon local custom (vide sec. 23 of the Bengal Tenancy Act); and so on. Indeed the incidents of a raiyati holding at fixed rates resemble more those of a tenure than those of an occupancy holding. The fact of occupancy raiyats belonging to different class from raiyats holding at fixed rates does not, therefore, lead to the conclusion that tenure-holders at variable rent also belong to a different class from tenure-holders at fixed rent. That, unlike occupancy raiyats and raiyats holding at fixed rates, tenure-holders at variable rent are tenants of the same class as tenure-holders at fixed rent will also appear from the scheme of the Bengal Tenancy Act itself. Chap. II of the Act mentions the different classes of tenants. Chap. III then deals with the first class of tenants, viz., tenure-holders. Chap. IV deals with the second class of tenants, viz., raiyats holding at fixed rates. Chap. V deals with the third class of tenants, viz., occupancy raiyats. Chap. VI deals with the fourth class of tenants, viz., non-occupancy raiyats. Lastly Chap. VII deals with the fifth and last class of tenants, viz., under-raiyats. The Bengal Tenancy Act thus does not deal with tenure-holders at variable rent and at fixed rent separately as it does with occupancy raiyats and raiyats holding at fixed rates. It is therefore clear that tenure-holders at variable rent are tenants of the same class as tenure-holders at fixed rent. Consequently no issue is raised under cl. (e) of sec. 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act when the landlord alleges that a tenant recorded as a tenure-holder at fixed rent is not in reality one at fixed rent but merely one at variable rent and upon such allegation seeks enhancement of his rent under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Let us next examine if in these cases an issue is raised under cl. (f) of sec. 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Cl. (f) speaks of "special conditions and incidents of a tenancy," as distinguished from its ordinary conditions and incidents. Issue is not therefore raised under this clause when merely an ordinary incident of a tenancy is wrongly recorded. Variability or fixity of rent can by no stretch of imagination be regarded as a "special condition and incident of a tenancy." It is merely an ordinary incident. Issue is not therefore raised under cl. (f) of sec. 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act in these cases where merely tenures at variable rent have been wrongly recorded as tenures at fixed rent. The class of cases contemplated by cl. (f) of the section is indicated by the expression "any right of way or other easement attaching to the land" following the expression "special conditions and incidents of the tenancy" in the clause, for by the well-known canons of construction the two expressions must be read eiusdem generis.

But is a Revenue Officer acting within the scope of sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act competent, without taking recourse to sec. 105A of the Act, to enhance the rent of a tenure-holder at variable rent, wrongly recorded as a tenure-holder at fixed rent? That the Revenue Officer is so competent will be obvious if we for a moment consider the purpose for which the machinery provided for by sec. 105 has been intended. The machinery has been intended for settling fair and equitable rent. The issue "what should be the fair and equitable rent," if put to analysis, resolves itself into the issue "should the existing rent be allowed to continue or should it be enhanced or reduced?" The latter issue again involves the issue "Is the rent liable to variation?" Thus the issue, "Is the rent liable to variation?"—becomes one of the standard issues triable in proceedings under sec. 105. This view is also supported by rule 38, Chap. XVIII, Part VII of the Technical rules and Instructions of the Settlement Department. Now, the controversy that arises when the landlord seeks enhancement of rent from a tenure-holder recorded as one at fixed rent on the allegation that the entry in the record-of-rights is incorrect and that the tenure-holder is in reality merely one at variable rent and he is opposed by the tenure-holder on the allegation that the entry is correct and that he is in reality a tenure-holder at fixed rent is amply covered by the issue "Is the rent of the tenure-holder liable to variation?" It would therefore be meaningless technically to dispute that a Revenue Officer acting within the scope of sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is competent, without taking recourse to sec. 105A of that Act, to enhance the rent of a tenure-holder at variable rent wrongly recorded as a tenure-holder at fixed rent.

No additional court-fee under cl. (b) of the above Government notification is therefore legally leviable from landlords of tenure-holders at variable rent wrongly recorded as tenure-holders at fixed rent when they seek enhancement of rent from such tenure-holders by proceedings under sec. 105.

There are numerous other instances of similar wrong extension of the operation of cl. (b) of the above Government Notification and improper levying of additional court-fees. As this is attended with great hardship to litigants, I ask you to allow me the use of your columns to invite the attention of the legal profession as well as of the Settlement Department to this matter.

Yours faithfully,
PRAFULLA KUMAR DAS,
Pleader.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Land acquisition "awards" and appeals to the High Court and the Privy Council.

The very severe comments which the decision of the Privy Council in The Rangoon Botatoung Co., Ltd. v. The Collector, Rangoon, L. R. 39 I. A. 197; s. c. 16 C. W. N. 961, called forth at the time it was first published in India (vide 16 C. W. N. cclvii—cclix) appears to be fully justified by the events. In that case a person whose land in Rangoon City had been compulsorily acquired by Government, being dissatisfied with the amount of compensation assessed by the Collector, sought a reference to the Court under sec. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act. The reference was heard by a Bench of two Judges of the Chief Court of Burma sitting on its Original Side who confirmed the Collector's award, whereupon the claimant appealed to the King in Council. Lord Macnaghten who delivered the judgment of the Board upheld the Respondent's plea that no appeal lay on two grounds: (1) that the "award" of compensation (though judicially determined) was not a "decree" from which an appeal lay to the Privy Council; and (2) that the Court on a reference under sec. 18 of Act I of 1894 acted as "arbitrator." The "award," it was consequently held, must be taken as final except in so far as an appeal was provided by statute. The only appeal so provided was by sec. 54 of the Act, which says: "Subject to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure applicable to appeals from Original Decrees, an appeal shall lie to the High Court from the award or any part of the award of the Court in any proceedings under the Act." This special and limited right of appeal, it was said, was exhausted by an appeal to the High Court and was not enough to take the matter up to the King in Council. As to sec. 53 of the Act which provides that "save in so far as they may be inconsistent with anything contained in this Act, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply to all proceedings before the Court under this Act," this, it was stated, applied to an earlier stage of the proceeding and "seemed" to have nothing to do with an appeal from the High Court.

This decision, which we had felt compelled to traverse at almost every point, has now been "considered" by the Judicial Committee itself in Ram Chandra Rao v. Ram Chandra Rao, reported at p. 713 of this issue. A question arose in this latter case as to whether a determination by the High Court, upon appeal, in a proceeding under sec. 32 of the Land Acquisition Act, that one of the rival claimants of the compensation money had a limited and not an absolute estate in the land acquired was a "decree" and as such appealable to the Judicial Committee. Now such a dispute between rival claimants has to be heard and determined in the first instance by the Court which hears the reference under sec. 18 of the Act; and the questions of which (in view of the decision of the Privy Council in the Rangoon Botatoung Company's case) one would like to find satisfactory answers are, first, whether and if so under what provision of the law the appeal which in that case was taken to the High Court could be so taken; and, secondly, whether and under what provision of the law a further appeal could be taken to the Privy Council.

With regard to the first question, the only provision of law under which the appeal could have been taken to the High Court was sec. 54 of the Act, and unless the determination under sec. 32 of the Act was treated, as in fact it was by Mookerjee and Teunon, J.J., in Trinayani Dassi v. Krishna Lal De, 17 C. W. N. 635n, as an integral part of the "award," obviously no appeal would lie to the High Court. But once that is conceded, the decision of the Judicial Committee in the Rangoon case comes in and shuts out an appeal to the Privy Council. But it struck Lord Buckmaster, who delivered judgment in Ram Chandra Rao's case, as "strange if a controversy between two people as to the nature of their respective interests in a piece of land should enjoy certain rights of appeal which would be wholly taken away when the piece of land was represented by a sum of money paid into Court." Therefore, it had to be held, and their Lordships have so ruled in Ram Chandra Rao's case, that a determination of a dispute between interested people as to the extent of their interest in the compensation awarded is no part of the award, thus overruling the decision aforesaid of the High Court reported in 17 C. W. N. 935n and the earlier ruling of that Court in Balaram v. Sham Sunder, I. I. R. 23 Cal. 526. But if this reasoning suffices to save the appeal to the Privy Council, does it not on the other hand lead to the still greater anomaly of depriving the parties of their right to appeal to the High Court, seeing that "an appeal does not exist in the nature of things" and "must be given by express enactment" (vide observation of Bramwell, J., in 3 Q. B. D. 1, quoted with approval in the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the Rangoon case) and sec. 54 of the Act allows an appeal only from the "award"?

The decision in Ram Chandra Rao's case goes a long way towards retracing the false steps previously made in the Rangoon case, and in so far as it does so we cannot but commend it. It throws overboard in the first place, the extra-ordinary assumption that the Court in reviewing the Collector's assessment of compensation acts as "arbitrator." Secondly, it limits the definition of "award" in sec. 54 to so much of the Court's determination as states "the area of the land, the compensation to be allowed and the apportionment among persons . . . whose interests are not in dispute." But as is inseparable from decisions which seek simply to get round, instead of squarely facing and disowning a previous error, it has created other difficulties in the very process, one of which, as we have shown, is how to take an appeal to the High Court upon a question of disputed apportionment of the compensation awarded, otherwise than under sec. 54. One has either to say there is no appeal, and the disappointed claimant must go up direct to the Privy Council or not appeal at all, or ring changes upon the language of sec. 53, which the Judicial Committee appears, in the Rangoon case, to have already declared as being concerned only with the procedure in the Court hearing a reference under sec. 18 and as having nothing to do with the question of appeal. The exact language employed is that the section "applies to an earlier stage and seems to have nothing to do with an appeal from the High Court." The addition of the words italicised perhaps leaves room for the argument that sec. 53 made the appeal sections of the Civil Procedure Code also applicable to all determinations of the Court upon a reference under sec. 18 on the question of apportionment or under sec. 32 of the Act, at least up to the High Court. We hope it does, though just why it should stop there is more than we can guess.

It has to be noted, in conclusion, that the main decision in the Rangoon case has already been nullified by the action of the Indian Legislature which now by Act XIX of 1922 provides, by an amendment of sec. 26, that every award made by the Land Acquisition Court shall be deemed to be a decree and the statement of the grounds of every such award a judgment within the meaning of sec. 2, cl. (2), and sec. 2, cl. (9), respectively, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908; and, by an amendment of sec. 54 of the Act, that "subject to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, applicable to appeals from original decrees, and notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any enactment for the time being in force, an appeal shall only lie in any proceedings under this Act to the High Court from the award, or from any part of the award, of the Court and from any decree of the High Court passed in such appeal as aforesaid an appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council subject to the provisions contained in sec. 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and in Or. XLV, thereof."

PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENT IN COURT.

(By MR. SURENDRA NATH ROY, MUNSIF, NETROKONA.)

The Civil Procedure Code provides for the method in which civil suits are to be tried, and cases are tried on oral and documentary evidence. Now the question arises what documents, to be taken in as evidence, are to be produced in Court. The character of the documents suggest two main divisions; viz., those which are home made, such as account books, collection papers and those that are produced from public custody or are registered under the Registration Act. The former class of documents may be tampered with or manufactured, while there is less chance of fraud being perpetrated in relation to the latter class of documents. Again the later production of documents involves inconvenience to the other party, who is so long kept in the dark as to the documents on which his adversary relies, but even this inconvenience operates in lesser degree in relation to the latter than to the former class.

When the document is one, on which the Plaintiff sues, he must produce it in Court when the plaint is presented, and shall deliver the document to be filed with the plaint. But if the document be in the nature of an account book which is for daily use of the party, the Plaintiff is to produce a copy of the same along with the original document, and the copy is to be compared with the original and certified to that effect by the Chief Ministerial Officer of the Court. The copy with the certificate is to be presented in the record of the case along with the plaint and the original is to be returned to the Plaintiff, who is required to produce the same at the trial of the case. But with respect to documents on which the Plaintiff relies as evidence in support of his claim, whether such documents be in his possession or power or not, he is required to enter such documents in a list to be added or annexed to the plaint (1). The penalty for not observing these rules is that these documents shall not be received in evidence on his behalf at the hearing of the suit without the leave of the Court (2). The case of Gopal Chandra v. Vishnu Krishna (3), serves as a judicial exposition of this rule and it further holds that the plaint is not to be rejected on that ground. The object of the rule is to provide against false documents being set up after the institution of a suit. In those cases, therefore, where there is no doubt of the existence of a document at the date of the suit, the Court should admit the document in evidence even though the document was not produced with the plaint or entered in the list of documents annexed to the plaint (4). It is to be observed, however, that in the mofussil courts the rule as to the production of list of documents relied upon by the Plaintiff as evidence in support of his claim, is followed more in the breach than in the observance.

Then the question arises whether documents produced by any of the parties at any stage of the suit can be accepted as evidence in the case. By Or. XIII, r. 1, C. P. C., it is provided that all documents are to be produced at the first hearing of the suit, save and except documents produced for cross-examination. Then the solution of the question hinges upon the interpretation of the words "first hearing of the suit." In cases where issues are framed, the summons on the Defendant is for settlement of issues, and in other cases, summonses are issued for the final disposal of the suit. In the former class of suits the date fixed after the service of summons cannot be said to be the first hearing of the suit, while in the latter class of cases the date fixed after the service of summons is the first hearing day. But that day cannot be said to be the day of first hearing of the suit with respect to both the parties. The Defendant's contention comes in after he files his written statement and the first hearing of the suit in contentious cases must be on the day fixed for hearing after the written statement is filed. In mofussil courts, in several districts, it is found that following the practice under the old Code, on the day the written statement is filed a certain number of days are allowed in the order-sheet for the parties to produce their documents. This order seems quite unnecessary and not required by law. The parties can produce their documents on the first hearing day, and this rule has been made as a safeguard against fraud as also to give facility to the other side to know the documents and to take up the procedure for inspecting them. But in the case of Tarak Mandal v. Rai Chandra Mandal (5), it has been held that the first hearing day means the day on which the trial commences. With due deference to the learned Judge who tried the case, it seems that the interpretation given is not correct. The Bombay High Court in the case of Ranchhod v. The Secretary of State for India (6) has held that this rule has been enacted to prevent fraud by the late production of suspicious documents. The Calcutta High Court ruled to the same effect in the case of Telewar Singh v. Bhagwan Das (7). It thus comes to pass that the first hearing day must be the day fixed for hearing the suit after the written statement is filed and in cases where issues are framed, after the framing of the issues. To interpret it otherwise will be to go against the policy of the law, and the documents which are classed as home made documents must be filed on or before that date, unless the Court, for good reason to be recorded in writing accepts the same at a later stage. This stringent rule, of course, does not apply to public documents, documents produced from public custody and registered documents, whose existence on the date of the suit is beyond suspicion.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MOOKERJEE and CHOTZNER, JJ. REFERENCE UNDER THE LEGAL PRACTITIONERS ACT No. 3 of 1922. IN THE MATTER OF BABU BIMALANANDA DAS-GUPTA, Pleader. The 1st June 1922.

Legal Practitioners Act, sec. 14—Pleader suspending practice and taking service as teacher in a National College.

On January 30th 1922, the District Judge of Dacca was informed by an anonymous letter that Babu Bimalananda Das-Gupta, a pleader practising in the Court of the said District Judge, had accepted a salaried appointment in the Dacca National College and had enrolled himself as a volunteer in the Dacca Congress Committee's Office. The Judge thereupon requested the District Magistrate to enquire if the facts alleged against the Defendant were true. The Magistrate not only confirmed the information, but further informed the Judge that the pleader had been present at a meeting held in Dacca on the 30th January last in contravention of an order made by him under sec. 144, Cr. P. C., and had been arrested and tried for an offence under sec. 188, I. P. C., that he had been acquitted of the charge, but that in the course of the trial he had said to the trying Magistrate that he bore no allegiance to the British, and had no regard for the post held by the Magistrate. The Judge, therefore, took proceedings against the pleader under sec. 14, I. P. Act on the following charges:—

(1) That it was reported that the said pleader had suspended practice in July 1921 and engaged himself as a professor of Economics in the Dacca National College without the permission of the High Court;

(2) that it was reported that the said pleader was present in, and took part in, a meeting held at Dacca in contravention of the order of the District Magistrate; and

(3) that the said pleader when tried for an offence under the I. P. Code had stated to the Court that he owed no allegiance to the British, etc. The copy of the charges was served on the pleader and notice was issued to him that the charges would be taken into consideration on March 7th. He neither appeared nor shewed cause on that day, but he wrote a letter in which, if he did not admit, he did not deny the charges. He said that in the course of the trial, he did not say that he owed no allegiance to the British, but said that he owed no allegiance to the British Courts. The Judge took evidence and found the charges to be true except that the said pleader as a matter of fact stated that he owed no allegiance to the British Courts, that he had no faith in British Justice and that he had no regard for the post held by the Magistrate. On these findings, the Judge referred the matter to the High Court with the recommendation that the pleader be dismissed and directed that pending the orders of the High Court he be suspended from practice.

Their Lordships accepted the recommendation and directed that the certificate granted to the pleader be cancelled, but that, if in future his faith in British Justice returns and he applies for a certificate, the matter should be considered.

No one appeared for the Pleader.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Super-tax upon dividend payable to non-resident share-holder.

If the decision of the majority in the Reference under sec. 51 (1) of the Income Tax reported at p. 745 of this issue (The Imperial Tobacco Company of India, Ltd. v. Secretary of State for India in Council) is correct, then it discloses a serious defect of drafting in the provisions of secs. 31 to 34 of the Income Tax Act, 1918. It is perfectly clear upon the language of these sections that it was the intention of the Legislature to make income or dividend earned by non-resident persons in India chargeable with tax under the Act, and these sections were obviously framed with the object of providing the machinery by which the tax was to be assessed and realised. The persons receiving the income themselves being non-resident, the only practicable course was to hold some person in India who would be responsible for receiving for, or transmitting the dividends to, them responsible also for the tax. The idea was, in the first place, to provide, where there was an agent in India specifically appointed by such a non-resident person to receive income accruing in India, that such agent himself should be made vicariously subject to the provisions of the Act so as thereby to compel him to deduct the income or super-tax imposed upon such income from moneys he may be under an obligation to remit to his principal. But if this were all, then non-resident persons who did not specifically appoint agents in India to receive incomes on their behalf would escape, and we agree with B. B. Ghose, J., that sec. 34 of the Act was enacted to provide for such cases, and that the object of this section was to enable the Collector, after notice, to proceed inter alia against any person having business dealings with the non-resident and holding moneys payable to him, as if he were his agent although not specifically appointed to receive the same for him as such. We also agree with him that it was never the intention of the legislature to exempt dividends remitted by Companies doing business in India direct to non-resident shareholders from the tax and to leave the liability to taxation of income or dividend payable to non-resident persons to depend upon the accident of their having appointed an agent in India to receive such income or dividend for them. If, however, that be the result of the provisions of the Act as drafted, the remedy, it is clear, is in the hands of the Legislature. The amendment of the sections should be forthwith undertaken so as to prevent the object of the Act being defeated owing to bad drafting.

Retraction of libel—A suggested change in the law.

A writer in a recent issue of the Harvard Law Review (Vol. XXXV, pp. 867-870) suggests that "refusal to make a reasonable retraction" of a defamatory statement should destroy the immunity of a conditional privilege set up in defence. It is pointed out that the German law permits a Plaintiff who cannot show economic injury to secure a retraction and the Dutch law allows generally the recovery of a similar "honourable amend." In English law, however, it has primarily evidential effect. Thus the Defendant may prove a retraction to establish absence of malice; and refusal to retract may be relied on by Plaintiff as evidence of malice, malice destroying the privilege when the objected statement is proved to be false. Somewhat illogically, English law permits retraction of the libel or refusal to retract to be proved in mitigation or aggravation of damage, as the case may be.

The point of the writer, however, is that when a defamatory statement made bonâ fide on a privileged occasion is by the Plaintiff demonstrated to the Defendant to be false, the Defendant should be ready forthwith to publish a retraction. If he does not do so, he should be mulcted in damages even if he should succeed in making out that he believed the statement to be true when he originally made it. The suggested change in the law is not only reasonable, it will simplify the law and save Judges dispensing English Common Law whether in America, England or India from resorting to the highly circuitous and often disingenuous reasoning which they have to employ to do what justice demands in such cases. This of course does not mean that a retraction of a libel willingly made will, if proved, be a complete defence, in every case. This, if allowed, will encourage libellous publications in abuse of the qualified privilege now allowed by the law.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The following is the record of business in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council during the past week :—

On May 4th was heard Rai Radha Krishna v. Bisheshar Sahay, an appeal from Patna. The hearing was concluded and judgment of the Board was reserved. The main question for determination on this appeal related to the validity of an auction sale of the property in dispute. Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., J. M. Parikh and Abdul Majid appeared for the Appellant and Mr. B. Dubé for the Respondent.

Subbaraya Pillai v. Rajah Kumara Venkata Perumal, an appeal from Madras, was heard on May 4th and 5th and judgment was reserved. This was a claim for possession of certain villages which had been sold in execution of a decree obtained against the Plaintiff. The latter in his plaint contended that the purchaser was his trustee inasmuch as the purchase money had been supplied by the Plaintiff and he further claimed to be entitled to a reconveyance under an agreement. On the present appeal the construction of the agreement was in issue and also a question of limitation. Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dubé appeared for the Appellants. Mr. J. M. Parikh for the Respondents.

Damodar Narayan Choudhury v. Miller, an appeal from Patna, was heard on May 8th and judgment was reserved. The suit was instituted by the Appellants as Plaintiffs to recover possession of certain property on the ground that the Defendants who alleged themselves to be transferees of occupancy rights are merely trespassers. Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., and Sen represented the Appellants and Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Kyffin, the Respondents.

Ram Sumran Prasad v. Mt. Shyam Kumari, an appeal from Patna, was heard on the 8th and 9th May. The hearing was concluded and judgment reserved. This appeal raised a question of the powers of a Hindu widow to deal with the estate of her husband of which she is in possession. Messrs. DeGruyther and Kenworthy Brown represented the Appellants who are the reversionary heirs. Mr. Abdul Majid represented the widow and Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and H. N. Sen, others of the Respondents.

Jai Barham v. Kedar Nath Marwari, an appeal from Patna, was heard on May 9th and 11th. The hearing was concluded and judgment reserved. The present Appellants were the successful Appellants in an appeal reported in L. R. 41 I. A. 38, where an auction sale of certain landed property was set aside. The present proceedings were commenced by an application under sec. 144 of the Civil Procedure Code for restitution of mesne profits. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for restitution but that decree was reversed by the High Court. (Roe and Jwala Prasad, JJ.). Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown represented the Appellants and Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Hyam for the Respondents.

The Board, having concluded their business on the 25th instant, have risen for the Whitsun Vacation and will not sit again until the 13th June.

On May 12th the following pronouncement with regard to the delivery of judgments was made by Lord Buckmaster :—

"For the future it will not be a matter of course to read in full the reasons which support the advice that the Board tenders to His Majesty. In any case where any member of the Board desires that the reasons should be read, they will, of course, be read; and if there should be reasons known to counsel why, in their opinion, it would be desirable that the judgment should be read in full, the Board will give the most favourable consideration to any application by counsel that that should be done. After the Board has announced what is the advice that they propose to offer, the printed reasons will be handed out to the parties on each side, and to the press. If, as occasionally but not frequently occurs, counsel desire to ask questions upon the reasons, it will be open to them to do so at the mid-day adjournment, or at any other convenient time. Their Lordships, in making this change of procedure, have been influenced by considering the time that is necessarily involved in the reading of judgments which are often and necessarily long; during the last term alone very nearly a week of judicial time was occupied in that procedure. Their Lordships think that it will tend to the more expeditious despatch of business, and improve the procedure of this Board, if the rule now adumbrated be adopted."

It is understood that the above change of procedure is not intended to cause any alteration in the practice whereby counsel attend to hear judgment delivered.

It is understood that Counsel will be present as usual to hear judgment and copies of the printed judgments will be handed to them to enable them to make any submissions to the Board that they may deem necessary whether in regard to costs or otherwise.

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."
SIR,

A learned Pleader correspondent of yours, in discussing whether a decree-holder is entitled to a notice under sub-r. (2) of r. (1) of Or. 21, when a payment under an instalment decree is made into Court, concludes at page lxviii (68) of the present volume, by saying that the practice of giving such notice may safely be dispensed with. But such a conclusion is hardly warranted by true interpretation of law and the process of reasoning he employs is not, it is apprehended, altogether free from errors. For cls. (a) and (b) of sub-r. (1) of r. 1 of Or. 21, indicate the ordinary modes of payment under all kinds of decrees (an instalment decree not being excepted), other than those coming under the special provision of cl. (c). The judgment-debtor may avail himself of either of these modes and both are equally effective. He may make the payment into Court or out of Court to the decree-holder in order to secure a valid discharge of his judgment-debt, and one is the alternative of the other. But as prefaced by the word "otherwise," cl. (c) seems to exclude the former two clauses and must be taken to provide for a mode of payment contemplated in neither of them. To be more clear, this last clause appears to have been intended to meet the case of a decree which contains a special direction compelling payment by an altogether new mode. In such a case no valid discharge can be obtained unless and until the special direction is strictly complied with. Here payment neither into Court nor to the decree-holder will absolve the judgment-debtor from liability.

Such being the easy and evident interpretation of the provisions of sub-r. (1) of r. 1, it is for your readers to decide how the case of an instalment decree can be made to fall outside the scope of cls. (a) and (b) and to come under the purview of cl. (c). As regards modes of payment in the sense just pointed out, there is very little appreciable distinction between an instalment decree and one that is executable at once. An instalment decree is as much satisfied as an ordinary decree when payment is made into Court or to the decree-holder out of Court. Such a decree does not direct that payment should be made "otherwise," i.e., in a mode different from those indicated in cls. (a) and (b) so as to oust their application. It simply directs the gradual payment of decretal amount in order to avoid hardship likely to arise from its immediate enforcement and is generally silent as to where and to whom the payment should be made so that it may attract the application of cl. (c). Besides, it is as much the duty of a Court to execute its instalment decrees as those that are executable at once. The qualifying clause coming after "Court" in cl. (a) seems to have been employed to exclude any other Court whose duty it never would be to execute such decrees even when the instalments are over-due. Ordinarily therefore there is nothing in an instalment decree that can differentiate it from an ordinary one and thus justify the application of cl. (c). It is not, therefore, intelligible how in such a case the practice of giving notice can legally be dispensed with. Sub-r. (2) is new and appears to have been added not only to stop the running of interest payable under a decree but also to inform the decree-holder, in due time, that the money deposited is available for him, that he is at liberty to draw the amount and that he need not take any further legal steps for its realisation by way of execution. Now where there is no service of notice after deposit and the decree-holder applies for execution, who will be responsible for costs incurred for such infructuous steps taken? It cannot reasonably be maintained that the decree-holder should always be on his look-out to see that payments under his decree have been duly made and regulate his conduct accordingly.

As for the attempt of your correspondent to justify the abolition of the practice of giving notice on the score of hardship to indigent debtors, it would be more advisable and prudent to avail themselves of the provisions of cl. (b) and approach the decree-holder who will, in most cases, be very glad to accept the money to avoid unnecessary expenses, legal and illegal, of drawing it out from the Court. And it would be quite illegal and inequitable to dispense with this practice and thus to deprive the decree-holder of a precious legal right on this consideration alone, heedless of future complications and troubles likely to arise out of such invalid deposits.

I remain, Sir, yours truly,

BINOD BEHARI CHATTERJEE,

Pleader, Noakhali.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MOOKERJEE and CHOTNER, JJ. REFERENCE UNDER LEGAL PRACTITIONERS ACT No. I OF 1922. IN THE MATTER OF BABU APARNA CHARAN DE, Pleader. The 1st June 1922.

Legal Practitioners Act, sec. 14—Pleader did not attend Court owing to mental uneasiness for the arrest of two fellow practitioners—High Court did not accept the reference by the District Judge.

This was a reference by the District Judge of Chittagong under sec. 14 of the Letters Patent Act against pleader Babu Aparna Charan De practising in Patiya Munsif's Court. The said pleader did not attend Court on the 4th July 1921 when money suit No. 433 of 1920 in the fourth Court of the Munsif at Patiya which had been heard in part on a previous date was called on for hearing in spite of a requisition on the part of his client and without any explanation. For this reason half-an-hour of the Court's time was wasted and the client had to conduct his own case, to the prejudice of his interests, as he was unable to engage any other pleader. The explanation of the said pleader was that owing to mental uneasiness he was not in a mood to do any professional work and he did not attend Court on that day, that he had asked the client to engage another pleader, that his fees had not been paid, and that the client was not prejudiced owing to his absence. The Judge found that the mental uneasiness was due to the arrest of two fellow practitioners, viz., Mr. J. M. Sen-Gupta and Babu Mahin Chandra Das. The Judge held agreed with the Munsif who had held an inquiry that the pleader was guilty of gross neglect of duty, which comes within the scope of professional misconduct as contemplated by the Legal Practitioners Act. The Judge, however, did not think it necessary to suspend the pleader from practice pending the High Court order, since the misconduct complained of might from some points of view not be considered serious as it fortunately did not have serious consequences, and as the Munsif had stated in his report that the pleader was a leader of the local Bar and had been noted for the honesty of his dealings with his clients.

Their Lordships discharged the reference in the special circumstances of the case.

The Senior Government Pleader and the Junior Government Pleader appeared for the Crown.

Babu Norendra Kumar Das who appeared for the Pleader was not called on to reply.

REPORTS (See Index.)

High Courts' Disciplinary Jurisdiction over Pleaders for conduct not charged as unprofessional.

We have received by the last mail a full report of the proceedings before the Judicial Committee upon the application by Shankar Ganesh Dehir for leave to appeal against an order of the Court of the Judicial Commissioners of the Central Provinces and Berar suspending him from practising as a pleader. The Petitioner, it appears, had delivered certain speeches strongly condemning a certain tax, called the Mahar Baluta, and advocating its non-payment by the agriculturists of Berar to whom, these speeches were addressed. This led to the institution of proceedings under sec. 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code against him in consequence of which he was bound over to keep the peace for a term. After this order was made by the Criminal Court, the Court of the Judicial Commissioner called upon him to show cause why he should not be struck off from the Rolls and in the result the Court found that the conduct of the Petitioner for which he was bound over by the Criminal Court comes within the purview of sec. 13, cl. (f) of the Legal Practitioners Act and passed order suspending him from practising as a Pleader.

Counsel for the Petitioner wanted to argue that the order under sec. 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code itself was illegally made and was in the circumstances an abuse of the process of the Court and that even if it be assumed to have been correctly made the conduct with which he was charged did not involve any moral turpitude so as to attract the disciplinary jurisdiction of the Court under sec. 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act. Their Lordships made it clear from the very outset that they could not review the order under sec. 107, Criminal Procedure Code as it was a criminal order, and that as regards the order suspending the Petitioner from practice, once it was established that the conduct for which the Pleader was bound down was one which the Court was entitled to consider in the exercise of its disciplinary jurisdiction, their Lordships would not go into the question whether the order striking the Pleader from the Rolls was one which should have been made in the circumstances, as that was a matter entirely in the discretion of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. The only question therefore which was argued before the Board was whether the Petitioner's having incited agriculturists in his District not to pay an unpopular tax was a reasonable cause for taking disciplinary action against him under the Act.

The question whether the words "any other reasonable cause" in cl. (f) of sec. 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act is to be interpreted ejusdem generis with the matters mentioned in cls. (a) to (c) of the section was raised, but Counsel for Petitioner conceded that these words could not be confined absolutely to professional misconduct. But he contended that conduct which cannot be condemned as unprofessional must in order to attract the disciplinary jurisdiction of the Court involve some moral turpitude. He argued that making strong speeches against the payment of a tax and even advocating its nonpayment does not show moral delinquency or defect of character. There was some fencing between Counsel and some members of the Board on the question whether inciting people to acts which might lead to a disturbance of public tranquility did not necessarily involve moral delinquency, and a piquant interest was lent to this portion of the argument by the fact that Lord Carson was a member of the Board. But it appears to have been ultimately agreed that the Petitioner had not been charged with anything which merited moral disapprobation. After this it was inevitable that the idea that the Pleader was an officer of the Court and was under a special obligation as such to assist the administration of the law would be put forward in support of the Court's jurisdiction to take disciplinary action for conduct not disclosing a defect of character.

LORD SUMNER.—This man is a pleader and an officer of the Court. He assists in the administration of the law. That being so he invites and incites a very large number of people not to assist in the administration of the law but to defy it. Is that proper conduct for a man who is one of the officers of the Court?

Counsel submitted that a member of the Legal Profession is as well entitled to say that a law is an unjust law as anybody else and merely to say 'do not pay this or that tax' is not defying the law.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—That may be a perfectly simple thing for a man to do who is under no obligation to the Court, but when a man is an officer of the Court he is in the administration of the law.

And again :—

LORD BUCKMASTER.—The point here is not whether this Board would have thought that the offence was one which warranted suspension, they express no opinion whatever upon that because that is absolutely for the Court over there. The question is whether a man who is an officer of the Court and who goes beyond political agitation and adds to it a direct incitement to break the law has not been guilty of some offence which is a reasonable cause why his conduct should be considered.

Mr. Dube.—I submit it is too much to say that a professional man should be disbarred because he has been convicted of a criminal offence. It is only those offences which amount to defects of character.

LORD CARSON.—We are only saying it is a matter for the Court to consider.

Mr. Dube.—Your Lordship is familiar with strong speeches on political and religious questions.

LORD CARSON.—I have made many myself but that does not show that the Court has not a discretion if a man is brought before them.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown in opposing the application on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council relied on the Full Bench decision in 29 Cal. 890 which laid down that by cl. (f) of sec. 13, the Court had jurisdiction to consider conduct not chargeable as professional misconduct. The Board apparently accepted that decision as correct.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—Directly that is not confined to professional misconduct, then it becomes a matter on each occasion for the Court to consider that.

Mr. Dube. Not necessarily because if there is an act which does not involve any moral turpitude at all it does not come within that clause. I am asking your Lordships for special leave to consider the broad proposition that in the case of a legal practitioner if it does not involve moral delinquency it cannot come under sec. 13. I do not contend for the proposition that a Pleader of the Court can be suspended only on grounds of professional misconduct.

LORD SUMNER.—You have been quite lucid. You say professional misconduct or a criminal offence involving moral turpitude. Then your proposition is, that being the foundation of the jurisdiction where is the moral turpitude here?

Mr. Dube.—Yes.

LORD SUMNER.—You say there is no evidence of moral turpitude?

Mr. Dube.—None at all. The man is regarded by a vast number of his fellow countrymen as holding the view which was right and proper, though the Executive Government may possibly take a different view, but I submit it does not certainly involve moral turpitude.

The order of the Board which was passed at the conclusion of the arguments (on 23rd May 1922) dismissing the application for leave was delivered by Lord Buckmaster :—

LORD BUCKMASTER.—Their Lordships have carefully considered the arguments that have been advanced in support of this Petition for leave to appeal and in expressing the opinion which they hold that in accordance with the practice of this Board the Petition ought not to be granted, they expressly desire to have it understood that that opinion carries with it no manner either of approval or of reflection upon the Order that has been made against which leave to appeal is sought. That Order was entirely one for the discretion of the Court that made it, and the only matter that it has been necessary for them to consider is whether a prima facie case has been made out that establishes that there was no foundation upon which the jurisdiction could properly repose. It appears that the Petitioner was bound over by the Sub-divisional Magistrate at Basim to keep the peace for a period of one year, and that Order was confirmed by the District Magistrate and by the High Court. The offence for which he was so bound over was connected with an agitation that he was instituting against the Baluta tax and it appears that in that agitation he did not confine himself to protesting however vehemently against the tax or against its injustice, but that he urged an organised resistance to the payment of the tax, and attempted to establish a system which would have impeded and might have defeated its recovery. These circumstances led to the conviction to which reference has been made and caused his conduct as a Pleader to be brought before the Court in their jurisdiction under the Legal Practitioners Act of 1879. Their Lordships are of opinion that the circumstances to which they have referred were sufficient to found jurisdiction under sec. 13, sub-sec. (f) of that Statute, and for these reasons they think that no leave to appeal ought to be granted in this case, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

A fuller report of the judgment will be published in due course.

DOES POSSESSION FOLLOW TITLE?

(By MR. KHETRA NATH SINGH, MUNSIF,
RANCHI.)

The recent Full Bench ruling of the Patna High Court as reported in 6 P. L. J. 478 has brought into prominence the much complicated question of presumption arising in a suit for ejectment from Plaintiff's title and prior possession. Much confusion of thought arises from the fact that not only is the distinction between presumption of fact and presumption of law not always kept in view, but the cardinal difference between Art. 142 and Art. 144 of the Limitation Act is also overlooked. Again, there is no legal conception more open to a variety of meanings than the word "possession." Mr. Rustonji has drawn attention to this at page 574 of his Limitation Act (3rd Ed.). By possession, according to him, is meant possession of that character of which the property is capable. This is fully borne out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 26 C. W. N. 666 at page 670 of the Report. Lord Shaw who delivered the judgment of their Lordships observes:—

"Upon this subject of possession much importance attaches to the nature of the property itself. . . . Their Lordships sympathise with the difficulties which confronted the Courts below, as to the possession of the property under appeal and they agree with what is apparently the view of both Courts that such possession has to be interpreted according to the fairest view of what the property itself was capable of in the way of possession and what, upon a broad view would be considered an adequate assertion of title by sufficient occupation."

The difference between presumption of fact and presumption of law has been pointed out by the Hon'ble Sir Dawson-Miller, C. J. at p. 485 of the above-mentioned Patna Full Bench ruling. His Lordship observed:—

"The case of Runjeet Ram v. Goburdhun, 20 W. R. 25 (P. C.) has sometimes been taken to support the proposition that where there is no evidence of possession on either side or where the evidence of each party is unworthy of credit, possession may be presumed to accompany title." His Lordship then goes on to state:—"In my opinion that decision lends no support to such a proposition. It should be observed that (in the 20 W. R. ruling) the presumption is called in aid for the purpose of adding weight to evidence in itself credible but so shaken by adversary's testimony as to create doubt or difficulty in arriving at the truth. Where there is no evidence or only such evidence as is found to be unworthy of credit the presumption in itself does not carry the weight of proof. The presumption is one of fact and merely gives rise to a probability and can have no more weight than any other probability arising from the circumstances of the case. Unlike a presumption of law, it does not join upon the Court the necessity of drawing an inference, either conclusive or rebuttable of the existence of a fact."

The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Walsh has pointedly drawn attention to the distinction between the two above-mentioned Articles of the Limitation Act in I. L. R. 41 All 669. His Lordship states that, while under Art. 142, the burden of proof lies on the Plaintiff to prove not only his title but possession within 12 years of the suit, the burden under Art. 144 lies on his opponent in which case the Plaintiff need prove his title in the first instance, leaving the Defendant to prove how the Plaintiff lost his own title. Such being the wide difference between these two Articles, it is clear that any observation made in a case arising out of one Article, e.g., Art. 142, must be limited to that Article. Thus observations made in 6 P. L. J. 478 F. B. as embodied in the head-note of that ruling (which is, by the way, not happily worded) cannot be made applicable to any case other than under Art. 142 to which it expressly refers.

The rule of onus probandi in cases arising out of Art. 144 has been repeatedly laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in a series of rulings of which I need mention three only—viz., (1) 4 C. W. N. 597 P. C. (2) 39 Mad. 617: s. c. 20 C. W. N. 1311 and (3) 26 C. W. N. 666 P. C., mentioned above. It is worthy of note that the head-note of 4 C. W. N. has been accurately framed and though their Lordships of the Privy Council did not expressly limit the ruling to Art. 144, the head-note in so doing correctly represents the actual decision of their Lordships. 39 Mad. 617 has, however, been expressly limited to that Article as will presently appear. In the 26 C. W. N. ruling, full arguments of Counsel appearing on both sides clearly show that Art. 144 was applied. The following observations of their Lordships at pp. 631, 632 of 39 Madras, which have been quoted in more rulings than one will prove instructive in this connection.

"Nothing is better settled than that the onus of establishing title to property by reason of possession for a certain requisite period lies upon the person asserting such possession. It is too late in the day to suggest the contrary of this proposition. If it were not correct, it would be open to the possessor for a year or a day to say, 'I am here, be your title to the property ever so good, you cannot turn me out until you have demonstrated that the possession of myself and my predecessors was not long enough to fulfil all the legal conditions' Such a singular doctrine can be well illustrated by the case of India, in which the right of the Crown to vast tracts of territory including not only islands arising from the sea but great spaces of jungle lands, necessarily not under the supervision of Government officers would disappear, because there would be no evidence available to establish the state of possession for 60 years past. It would be contrary to all legal principles thus to permit the squatter to put the owner of the fundamental right to a negative proof upon the point of possession. * * * To such a situation their Lordships think that Art. 144 applies. * * * In an ordinary suit for a declaration it cannot be doubted that the onus of establishing possession for the requisite period would rest upon the Plaintiff."

Following the above ruling, it is ruled in 45 Bom. 1020 :—

"An owner of property does not lose his right to property merely because he happens not to be in possession of it for 12 years. Under sec 28 of the Limitation Act, his right is only extinguished at the determination of the period limited by the Act to him for instituting a suit for possession of property, that period cannot be determined unless it has commenced to run and until the owner is aware that some one else is in possession and is holding adversely to him." It is superfluous to say that the above observations relate to cases falling under Art. 144.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The following is the record of business transacted during the past week :—

22nd May: Chholey Lal v. Collector of Moradabad, an appeal from Allahabad, which raised a question as to whether a mortgage had or had not been duly registered. Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dubé for Appellants, Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for Respondents. Judgment was reserved.

May 22nd and 23rd: Narain Das v. Abinash Chunder (Allahabad), which raised the question whether a lease granted by the manager of a joint family was valid or not. Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Wallach for Appellant, Sir George Lowndes, K. C., and Mr. Kenworthy Brown for Respondents. The Board dismissed the appeal without calling on the Respondents.

May 23rd: In re Shanker Ganesh Dabir (Central Provinces): This was a petition for special leave to appeal from an order of the High Court suspending a pleader under sec. 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act. The Board, composed of LORDS BUCKMASTER, ATKINSON, SUMNER, CARSON and SIR JOHN EDGE, refused leave. Mr. Dubé for Petitioner, Mr. Kenworthy Brown for Opposite Party.

May 25th: Judgment was given in the following appeals :—Dinbai v. Nusserwanji (Sind). Appeal dismissed. Damodar N. Chaudhury v. Miller (Patna). Appeal allowed. Radhakrishna v. Bisheshwar Sahay (Patna). Appeal dismissed.

Port Press Co. v. Municipal Corporation of Bombay was heard on the same day (May 25th). The question raised here was as to whether the parties were entitled to come to an agreement after proceedings had been taken for the compulsory acquisition of land by the Municipality. Messrs. G. J. Talbot, K. C., and A. F. Wooten, K. C. for the Appellants, Sir George Lowndes, K. C., Messrs. W. H. Upjohn, K. C., and E. B. Raikes for the Respondents. At the conclusion of the argument LORD BUCKMASTER delivered the judgment of the Board dismissing the appeal.

Judgment was given by the Board in the following Indian Appeals on May 31st :—

Rash Sumran Prasad v. Shyam Kumari, (from Patna), the appeal was dismissed; E. Subbaraya Pillai v. Venkata Perumal, (from Madras), the appeal was allowed; Medai D. T. Midaliar v. Nainar Teran, (from Madras), the appeal was dismissed.

The next sittings commence on June 13th.

REPORTS (See Index.)

The Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Bill.

The present Code of Criminal Procedure which was passed in 1898 came up for revision when Sir George Lowndes was Law Member to the Government of India. The draft Bill was referred to two different Select Committees in succession and in the last of these Lord Sinha also served. Owing to the War and in view of the Montague-Chelmsford Reforms, the consideration of the Bill was put off till the new constitutional reforms came into operation. Soon after the reformed legislature met at Delhi, the Bill was introduced into the Council of State and a motion was adopted there for the reference of the Bill to a Joint Committee of the Council of State and of the Legislative Assembly. Thereupon the Home Member brought in a motion before the Legislative Assembly that the motion of the Council of State be given effect to by the Legislative Assembly. This motion was opposed by the non-Mahomedan Member for the Rajshahy and Chittagong Division in Bengal, on the ground that the Legislative Assembly should not be called upon to give its assent to a motion of such importance before the members of the Assembly have had an opportunity for the perusal of an important measure of legislation of this kind. A lively debate followed, after which the Government passed the motion to a division. The non-official Members, including Europeans, recognising the reasonableness of the objection, threw out the Government motion by a large majority. The result of this was that the motion that had been adopted by the Council of State for reference of the Bill to a Joint Select Committee of both Houses fell to the ground in consequence.

Jurors and pledge of secrecy.

The grand jury in England are pledged to secrecy as to what transpires between them before they come to a verdict. Every member of such jury has to take an oath in the following terms:—"The King's counsel, my fellows", and my own I will observe and keep secret." But the ordinary jurors, who are empanelled during trial, are not expressly required to swear that they would maintain secrecy as to their own individual views, and those of their other colleagues. But it is a long established practice in the English Law Courts that they should do so. In the recent Armstrong case a juror departed from this tacit understanding and communicated to a press-man what view he had taken of the case and also what transpired in the jury box. All the legal journals in England considered this to be very reprehensible. Lord Hewart, in delivering judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeal in the Armstrong case stigmatized it as "improper, deplorable and dangerous," and added that "every juryman ought to observe the obligation of secrecy which is confirmed in and imposed by the oath of the grand jurors." Ordinary jurors who assist at the trials are known as petty jurors although their duties are of a more responsible character. The grand jurors are so called because they are more numerous. Their functions are somewhat in the nature of a preliminary enquiry in a criminal case. Our legal contemporaries take the view that if such practice becomes common in these days of sensational journalism, the legislature will have to intervene. But we have more faith in the moral obligation in such matters than in any hasty legislation to check an evil which is by no means common.

The Bill was thereafter circulated amongst the Members of the Assembly during the Delhi Session of 1921 and the Bill was re-introduced in the Assembly during the Simla (September) Session of the Legislative Assembly and was referred to a Joint Committee of the Assembly and Council of State, by the Assembly. The Committee met at Simla this year on the 5th of June. It was anticipated by Government that the consideration of the Bill would take at least two months. But credit is due to all concerned in the Committee that they were able to conclude these deliberations including the drawing up and the consideration of the report in 'exactly three weeks' time. The Hon'ble Dr. Sapru, the Law Member, presided over the Committee, and the meetings were attended regularly by Sir William Vincent, Sir Binod Mitter, The Hon'ble Mr. Moncrieff Smith, Rao Bahadur Subrahmaniam Iyer, Mr. J. Chaudhuri, The Hon'ble Nawab Sir Zulfiquer Ali Khan, and occasionally by The Hon'ble Mr. Raza Ali and Sir M. Dadabhai. It is a pity that some of the nominees of the Assembly could not attend, partly owing to their being engaged in other Committees and partly owing to private engagements. The Bill comprised more than 160 clauses. Had not the Secretary of the Legislative Assembly and his staff utilized the time when the Assembly was not in Session, in preparing a very useful precis of the volumes of opinion and criticism received on the Bill and also in redrafting the clauses to a great extent in pursuance thereof, and further had not a spirit of compromise prevailed in the Committee for settling all differences of opinion, the Committee could not possibly have made such rapid progress. Of all the Committees that met at Simla this summer none can claim greater expedition and thoroughness in the disposal of their work. The criticisms of the Calcutta Bar Library and Vakils' Library were found very helpful in the disposal of the Committee's work. The Committee decided to leave alone the question of racial distinction, as the report submitted by the Racial Committee is now receiving the consideration of the Secretary of State for India and his Council. We expect that the Bill, as it has been redrafted by the Joint Committee, will be found to be a great improvement on the present Code in so far as it has been amended by it. We would have preferred, if the Legislature, instead of proceeding piece-meal, had undertaken the work of consolidation. Even if this Bill is passed at the next winter session of the Legislative Assembly, the consolidation will have to come before long.

DOES POSSESSION FOLLOW TITLE?

(By MR. KHETRA NATH SINGH, MUNSIF,

The qualities which make possession adverse are mentioned in 4 C. W. N. 597 cited above. Their Lordships at p. 600 observe :—

" But the possession required must be adequate in continuity, in publicity and in extent to show that it is possession adverse to the competitor. The Appellant does not present a case of possession for the twelve years in dispute, which has all or any of these qualities. The best attested cases of possession do not cover the whole period and apply to small portions of the ground." As pointed out in 15 C. L. 1. 281 and 5 P. L. J. 273, " no presumption of possession can be made in favour of the adverse possessor and his possession must be restricted to the land of which he has actual possession."

But the same qualities which make up adverse possession against the true owner of the property need not be exercised by the latter to destroy the character of the trespasser's adverse possession. This principle is laid down in the concluding portion of their Lordships' decision in 26 C. W. N. 666. It is as follows :—

" Standing a title in 'A,' the alleged adverse possession of 'B' must have all the qualities of adequacy, continuity, and exclusiveness which should qualify such adverse possession. But the onus of establishing these things is upon the adverse possessor. Accordingly when the holder of title proves . . . that he too has been exercising during the currency of his title various acts of possession, then the quality of these acts, even although they might have failed to constitute adverse possession as against another, may be abundantly sufficient to destroy that adequacy and interrupt that exclusiveness and continuity which is demanded from any person challenging by possession the title which he holds."

On the question of continuity of adverse possession, possession connected as of right can be tacked but possession of independent trespassers cannot be tacked. It appears that on the question of tacking possession of independent trespassers, the same rule is applicable in cases as well under Art. 142 as under Art. 144. See Mr. Rustomji's Limitation (3rd Ed.), page 646. Different views have, however, been held by Messrs. Mitra and Starling in their well-known treatise on Limitation.

The observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council just quoted above distinctly show that they are limited to a case in which the title of the Plaintiff is either admitted (as in the case of 41 All. 669) or proved (as in the case of 45 Bom. 1020); but where the origin of the title is unknown or doubtful, such isolated acts of possession, which cannot go to make a title, considering of course the nature of possession of which the property is capable, are of no avail to the Plaintiff. Thus it is ruled in the same ruling of their Lordships (i.e., 26 C. W. N. 666 P. G.) :—"Where the original title is unknown and both parties in a suit for ejectment give evidence of possession, the Court will be justified in deciding in favour of one party or the other by a comparison of the evidence judged in the light of probabilities." The same principle appears to be applicable in cases where both sides offer evidence equally well-balanced but their title is unknown or doubtful.

It is now settled law that the ordinary presumption that possession follows title arises only in the case where evidence on both sides is equally strong and well-balanced and that in such a case one, whose title is proved or admitted, succeeds.

But where the evidence produced by both the Plaintiff and the Defendant as to possession is unworthy of credit, the Plaintiff's suit fails. For this conclusion, the Hon'ble Sir John Bucknill, J., at page 525 of 6 P. L. J. 478 F. B. gives the following cogent reasons :—

"... in such class of suits (i.e., under Art. 142) it is not sufficient to enable the Plaintiff to succeed for him merely to prove that at some date antecedent to a period of 12 years prior to the institution of the suit, he had acquired some proper title to the land but that he must also prove that he was in possession within that period... where, however, there is no evidence of any value on behalf of the Plaintiff as to his possession at any time during the crucial period, the Plaintiff's case simply fails. It does not matter if the Defendant's evidence is weak or indeed if he offers no evidence at all."

The next point presents itself :—Does the Plaintiff's suit fail in a case arising out of Art. 144, where both sides' evidence of possession is unworthy of any evidence? The answer should be in the negative because the title lying in the Plaintiff, and the burden of proof as to how the Plaintiff lost his title being on the Defendant, the party on whom the burden lies, fails. See also 1 Pat. L. T. 59.

Hence, the question whether apart from the context and without considering the nature of possession of which the property is capable, the presumption of possession is to follow title cannot be satisfactorily answered, unless the allegations of the Plaintiff are first made to conform to either the one or the other of the two articles of the Limitation Act, Art. 142 and Art. 144.

(Concluded.)

IS A WRITTEN AGREEMENT FOR A LEASE COMPULSORILY REGISTRABLE?

The question whether an agreement for a lease, if embodied in a document, requires registration, deserves some consideration. Ordinarily it seems that it does not require registration, if it does not affect a present demise.

Sec. 3 of the Indian Registration Act lays down that a "lease" includes an "agreement to lease." The word used by the Legislature is "includes" and not "means." So it is clear that the Legislature has not attempted to give a definition of the term "lease." It follows then that not only a document by which a property is actually demised, but also a document by which a person gets a right to obtain a document, by which a property is demised, come within the purview of the section. It has been held in several cases that an agreement to lease is one by which a property is actually demised. But it is to be noticed that this meaning goes against the popular idea of the word agreement by which an actual demise is not contemplated.

Sec. 17, cl. (d) of the Registration Act lays down that documents which are leases of immoveable property from year to year, or for any term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rate, must be registered. If the clause be read along with sec. 3 of the Registration Act, the inference naturally follows that a written agreement for such leases mentioned in cl. (d) of sec. 17 are also compulsorily registrable.

That this was the intention of the Legislature can also be gathered from the exemption clause of sec. 17 of the Registration Act. A document creating a right to obtain a document of the description mentioned in paragraphs B and C does not require registration, as will appear from paragraph II. But cl. (h) does not affect the leases mentioned in cl. (d) and the exemption clause does not lay down anything about a document creating a right to obtain leases of the descriptions mentioned in cl. (d). The reason why the Legislature did not refer to such documents in the exemption clause is possibly that according to sec. 3, read with cl. (d) of sec. 17 of the Registration Act, such documents require registration irrespective of whether there is a present demise or not.

The view of law I have put forward above goes against the reasonings in the cases of Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapur Zemindari Co., 31 C. L. J. 298 (P. C.) and Panchanan Basu v. Chandi Charan Misra, 37 Cal. 808.

In this connection sec. 91 of the Indian Evidence Act ought to be referred to. Sec. 91 lays down that when the terms of a contract have been reduced to the form of a document no evidence shall be given in proof thereof except the document itself. When there is an unregistered agreement for a lease of the nature indicated in cl. (d) of sec. 17 of the Registration Act, that document is inadmissible in evidence under sec. 49 of the Registration Act and it follows that no other proof can be adduced of the terms of the agreement.

It should be noted here that if such written agreements are compulsorily registrable it does not necessarily follow that agreements of such leases cannot be entered into orally. Sec. 17 of the Indian Registration Act does not lay down how the transactions mentioned therein are to be effected, but it only lays down which documents are to be registered, and which, not.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The Trinity sittings of the Judicial Committee commenced on the 13th June. The list of business contains one Australian appeal, 12 from Canada and one each from the Crown Colonies of Gold Coast and Trinidad. In the Indian list there are 14 appeals, 3 from Madras, 2 each from Bombay, Patna, Punjab, and Bengal and one each from Allahabad, Oudh and Upper Burma.

Two Boards have been constituted, the one presided over by VISCOUNT HALDANE, the other members being LORDS PARMOOR and TREVE-THIN, the latter being the title adopted by the ex-Jord Chief Justice. This Board are at present hearing the appeal from the Gold Coast.

LORD DUNFEDIN, LORD PHILLIMORE, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMBER ALI comprise the other Board which is hearing Indian appeals. The first appeal to come before them was one from Madras, Palchur Sankareddi v. Palchur Mahalaksmama. The sole point for determination in this appeal is whether a Will is valid or a forgery. Sir William Failey, K. C.

and Mr. B. Dubé for the Appellants contended, on the 13th and 15th June that the Will was a forgery. Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Narsimham for the Respondents were not called upon and judgment is to be delivered on the 16th instant.

The same Board are at present hearing arguments in Data Ram Jain v. Musammal Basant Kunwar, an appeal from Allahabad, raising a question as to whether or not a promissory note was executed for consideration. The Indian Courts have differed in their findings. Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dubé appeared for the Appellants and Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and E. B. Raikes for the Respondents.

Three petitions for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council were heard on 15th June 1922 by the Board presided over by VISCOUNT HALDANE.

The first was Macmillan & Co., Ltd. v. K. and J. Cooper (Bombay). This was a case raising an important question of copyright. The Petitioner Company had published in book form extracts from North's translation of Plutarch's life of Alexander and the main question was whether this could be called an "original literary work" so as to entitle the Company to restrain other authors from making the same extracts with additions. The trial Judge decided in favour of the Company but that decision was reversed on appeal, and leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council was refused by the Appeal Court on the ground that the value of the subject-matter was below Rs. 10,000 and the matter was not a fit one for further appeal. Sir John Simon, K. C. (with him Mr. Macmillan) urged the importance of the legal question at issue and prayed for special leave to appeal. Sir George Lowndes, K. C. and E. B. Raikes opposed the application, which was however granted.

Special leave was refused in the following cases:—Sardar Hari Singh v. Sandani Lachmi Dasi (Lahore) in which Sir J. Simon, K. C. and Mr. Dubé appeared for Petitioner; and Shakir Ali v. King-Emperor in which K. Narsimham appeared for Petitioner and Kcn-worthy Brown for Opposite Party.

constitutional importance to all the Provincial Legislatures in India. But for the correct attitude of Lord Lytton, we are sure, the Bengal Council would have rejected the grant ignoring the mandate of the Government of India. That the Bengal Council has avoided a very unpleasant conflict is all the more the reason that the question should be settled for good now.

Dual Control of the Calcutta High Court and consequent constitutional conflict.

The motion for the supplementary grant of Rs. 31,000 for the Paper-book Department of the Calcutta High Court indirectly raised some very important constitutional issues. Although we are of opinion that the Bengal Council has displayed a very reasonable attitude in restoring the grant which it previously refused yet we regret that we cannot at all express our approval of the part played by the Government of India in this connection. We think it is constitutionally unjustifiable for the Central Government to direct any provincial Government to restore any grant refused by the provincial Council under the extraordinary powers given to the provincial Governor under the Government of India Act. It is evident from the speech of Lord Lytton that he found his position as responsible Governor of the province very embarrassing. The extraordinary powers of the Governor are meant to be exercised on very extraordinary occasions. The spirit of the new constitution is that he should as a rule abide by the decision of the legislature. If the constitution is not worked in this spirit, full responsible Government will never be developed in the provinces except by violent conflicts between the executive and the legislature. If, however, our provincial Governors wisely follow the course of accepting the votes of the local legislature as binding on them, responsible Government in this country may be regarded as fait accompli. The protest of the Governor of Bengal who is quite alive to his sense of responsibility to the Legislature, owing to his long Parliamentary training, deserves the serious attention of the Government of India and of the Indian public. It raises an issue which is of grave

Lord Lytton's protest raises a very grave issue as to the constitutional position of the provinces with regard to the Central Government. The scheme of the reforms is to make the provinces autonomous especially with regard to their internal administration. The course adopted by the Government of India with regard to a question of provincial grant and provincial administration is fraught with very grave constitutional consequences if it is not now nipped in the bud. We have no desire to be unfair to the Government of India but it would be our first duty to guard against any action on their part which may in the least degree trench upon the attainment of full provincial autonomy in India. We fully recognise that the action of the Government does not proceed from any desire to domineer over the provincial legislatures but arises out of a rather anomalous position that the Central Government occupies with regard to the Calcutta High Court. While the Government of India is the administrative head of the Calcutta High Court, the Government of Bengal, which has been straining every nerve to make its two ends meet, has to find money for it. We cannot, therefore, take any exception to the jealous solicitude of the Bengal Council not to sanction any increase in the administrative cost of the province.

The Government of India on the other hand have yet to make good 20 crores or more of the current year's budget deficit. It cannot, therefore, be expected that when the Calcutta High Court goes up to the Government of India for sanction of any additional establishment in connection with the paper-book or any other department, the Government of India would come to its financial assistance. We have no grievance on that account. What we say is that the Government of India are not competent to pronounce, from their position of isolation at Delhi or seclusion at Simla, any opinion or advice on any question of administration connected with the Calcutta High Court. With regard to the paper-book controversy the High Court has gone a great way to meet the representations of the section of the profession interested in it and we are sure that it will do its best to meet the wishes of the Bengal Council that the department should not be a burden on the tax-payer or oppressive to the litigants. But quite apart from that the present system of the Government of India continuing to be the administrative head of the Calcutta High Court is a constant source of inconvenience to the High Court, to the Government of India and still more to the Government of Bengal. For instance if the High Court asks for the sanction of even a small staff in any connection, the Government of India not being in touch with the Court, has to call for reports and not unoften, consult the Bengal Government and after considerable circumlocution and waste of time, grant the sanction when arrears have accumulated for months or years. It is only common sense that if the administration of the Calcutta High Court like that of the other High Courts was transferred to the Bengal Government much time and inconvenience would be saved. Further we are afraid that the present system is also interfering with the efficiency of the Bench. The Local Government is in a better position to judge of the requirements of the High Court both with regard to the personnel and the numerical strength of the Bench and of the ministerial staff connected therewith. All necessary informations connected with its administration are also readily available to the local Government. Now that the Calcutta University has been transferred to the Government of Bengal, we see no reason why the administration of the High Court should not be transferred also to the local Government. Public opinion in Bengal as also the provincial legislature will always guard against any interference by the executive with the judiciary and the Hon'ble Judges of the Calcutta High Court have always been very keen in maintaining their independence. But what we suggest will in no way interfere with the administration of justice as it concerns only questions of ways and means.

The material portion of H. E. the Governor's speech in this connection is as follows :—

"The High Court is administered by the Government of India whilst the Government of Bengal has to find the money for its expenses—an anomalous position which I will not comment upon at the moment beyond saying that so long as it continues the Government of India are in a position to give me instructions regarding the provision of funds for the High Court and they did in fact instruct me to restore the vote."

LANDLORD'S CONSENT IN EXECUTION SALES OF OCCUPANCY HOLDINGS.

[By MR. DWIJENDRA NATH PAL, MUNSIF, RAMPURHAT.]

The transferability of occupancy holdings is, inspite of a large volume of rulings around it, a perpetual riddle. The question is fraught with numerous side issues which seem to defy a correct generalisation. We have seen how the anxiously considered decision in the Full Bench case of Doyamoyi v. Ananda Mohan was held to be incorrect by the Special Bench in the case of Chandra Binode v. Sheikh Ala Baksh. Even now, the question does not altogether seem to be free from difficulty. The divergence of judicial opinion is a constant source of confusion.

The question whether a raiyat can successfully object to a sale of his holding in execution of a money decree, where the landlord is neither the decree-holder, nor has he given his consent to the sale, came up before the Patna High Court in the case of Dewan Ram Chowdhury v. Atul Munder (6 Pat. L. J. 202). The question was answered in the affirmative. It was held that the objection is a valid one and is not negatived by the decision in Chandra Binode Kundu v. Sheikh Ala Baksh (24 C. W. N. 818). Their Lordships Das and Adami, JJ., seem to have relied on the dictum in the Special Bench case that "the transfer of an occupancy holding cannot be made effective unless there be the consent of the landlord." (6 Pat. L. J., p. 207). But does this mean that an execution sale cannot be allowed to take place without the landlord's consent? Let us analyse the point.

The real innovation that has been made in the Special Bench case is the placing of voluntary and involuntary sales of occupancy holdings, on the same footing. "The life of law" we have been told, "is not logic, but experience;" but one wonders whether the decision in the aforesaid case is not a triumph of logic over the experience of about a quarter of a century. We are however not at present concerned with the reasonableness of this ruling; we must take it as the present law and a binding authority. The power of voluntary alienation of any property is no doubt the measure of its liability to involuntary alienation, but the test was perhaps for the first time applied in the Special Bench case to such an anomalous property as an occupancy holding. The Full Bench case of Doyamoyi v. Ananda Mohan had made a distinction between the two cases of transfer, on the strength of "modern authority." It laid down that a transfer of a non-transferable occupancy holding "is operative against a raiyat (a) where it is made voluntarily; (b) where it is made involuntarily and the raiyat, with knowledge, fails to set it aside." (18 C. W. N. 971 at p. 991). It was in fact held that a raiyat was not bound by an involuntary sale held without his knowledge though he was bound by a voluntary sale. An occupancy holding was, in this respect, not treated like other properties of the raiyat, so far at least as he was concerned. The right of the raiyat to object to an involuntary sale had formed the basis of several transactions and judicial decisions for about 25 years and the Full Bench decision formulated it clearly. But with the gradual recognition of the raiyat's power of voluntary alienation of his holding, the illogicalness of his right to object to an involuntary sale became manifest, and the Special Bench corrected the proposition quoted above in the following way: "The transfer of the whole or a part is operative as against the raiyat, whether it is made voluntarily or involuntarily." (24 C. W. N. p. 854). It has thus been made clear that a raiyat is as much bound by an involuntary sale as by a voluntary sale of his holding. An occupancy holding has now been placed on the same footing as the raiyat's other property, so far as the raiyat is concerned. Their Lordships of the Special Bench observed: "When voluntary and involuntary transfers are thus placed in the same category, so far as the raiyat is concerned, no difficulty can arise under sec. 60 of the Civil Procedure Code which makes saleable in execution all property over which he has disposing power." (24 C. W. N.

p. 854). It is difficult to see how the raiyat can object to an execution sale of his holding when voluntary and involuntary sales are placed on the same footing.

The question of landlord's consent would not thus arise between a raiyat and a third person, none of whom has the right to question the sale on the ground of non-transferability. The right to take such an objection is a special privilege which the law allows to the landlord alone. The raiyat will be bound by the sale, no matter whether the landlord gives his consent to it or not. He cannot be allowed to be the landlord's proxy and no objection by a proxy is maintainable in law. The objector must have a valid, independent right of objection in himself. The raiyat has been held to have no such right.

Neither can it be said that the landlord's consent is a condition precedent to a transfer of an occupancy holding. A transfer is quite valid and legal so far as the parties to the transaction are concerned. Only it does not become effective, as against the landlord so long as he does not give his consent to it. If the prior consent of the landlord is not necessary in order to effect a voluntary sale, it should not, according to the Special Bench case, be necessary in order to allow an involuntary sale. To hold otherwise would be to reiterate the distinction between voluntary and involuntary sales, which the whole object of the Special Bench case was to remove.

It thus appears that the Patna High Court ruling in Dewan Ram's case is not in line with the Special Bench case of the Calcutta High Court. As Courts in Bengal are bound to follow the ruling of the Calcutta High Court, where there are conflicting rulings of different High Courts, an objection by a raiyat to the sale of his holding in execution of a money decree, must be a thing of the past, so far as Bengal is concerned.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

On June 16th, judgment was delivered by the Board dismissing the appeal from Madras in Palchur Sankarareddi v. Palchur Mahalakshama. This appeal was briefly referred to in the Notes last week.

The case of Data Ram Jani v. Mt. Basant Kumwar was heard by a Board composed of LORDS DUNEDIN and PHILLIMORE, SIR J.

EDGE and MR. AMBER ALI on June 15, 16 and 19. The suit had been instituted by the Appellants as Plaintiffs to recover from the Respondent Rs. 21,000 alleged to be due on a promissory note. The Respondent denied the debt and denied the validity of the document sued on. Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dubé appeared for the Appellants and Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and E. B. Raikes for the Respondents. Judgment was reserved.

On June 19, judgment was delivered in the appeal from Patna, Jai Barhadri v. Kedarnath Marwari. The appeal and cross-appeal were dismissed and the order of the High Court slightly varied.

The same Board commenced the hearing of the Bombay appeal, Khatubai v. Md. Haji Abu. The question at issue in this case was as to the Law which should govern a Halai Memon who has been found by the Indian Courts to be domiciled in Porbandar. It is admitted that the Halai Memons are Mahomedans but the Respondents contend that in matters of succession they are governed by Hindu Law. The case was opened on June 19 and 20 by Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. for the Appellant (with him Mr. C. J. Farwell) and is still part-heard. Messrs. Upjohn, K. C., E. B. Raikes and Palat appeared for the Respondents.

Owing to the inability of certain members of the Board to sit during the ensuing week the further hearing of the appeal has been postponed until July 3rd.

On June 20th, before a Board composed of VISCOUNT HALDANE, VISCOUNT CAVE, LORD PARMOOR and LORD TREVENTIN the hearing was commenced of an appeal from Bengal, E. D. Sassoon & Co. v. Ramdutt Ramkissen Das, which raises a question of irregularity under sec. 9 of the Arbitration Act. Sir J. Simon, K. C. and Mr. Hyam for the Appellants and Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and J. K. Roy for the Respondents. The case remains part-heard.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MOOKERJEE and CHOTZNER, JJ. S. A. No. 1723 OF 1920. DHEERENDRA KRISHNA MUKHOPADHYA, Defendant, Appellant v. MAHENDRA NATH MUKERJI and others, Plaintiffs, Respondents. The 16th June 1922.

The Public Demands Recovery Act (III of 1913, B. C.)—Retrospective effect—Secs. 36 and 37.

The Plaintiff-Respondent brought a suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession of the suit lands after declaration that a certain certificated sale was ultra vires. The Plaintiff's case was that no road-cess was due from him, no notice was served and that for some supposed arrears his lands were put up to sale on 20th September 1907 and were purchased by the Defendant. The Defendant got his name registered and obtained possession before 1910. The Defendant-Respondent urged that the suit was barred by limitation and under secs. 36 and 37 of the Public Demands Recovery Act (III of 1913) as under the new Act the suit must be brought within one year from the date of delivery of possession. Both the Courts below found and held that the suit was not barred by limitation and that there were no arrears due from the Plaintiff and that the certificate was ultra vires:

Held—That when the suit would not have been barred by limitation under the old Act but only under the new Act, the new Act would have no retrospective effect and the suit was not barred by limitation, 20 C. W. N. 890; 17 C. W. N. 829; (1905) A. C. 369, referred to.

That no arrears being due from the Plaintiff and as such the certificate being not duly filed, secs. 36 and 37 of the Public Demands Recovery Act were no bar to the suit.

against the corporation, whose servants had given him into custody. The bye-laws of the corporation provided that a person who refused to pay his fare and whose name and residence was unknown to the officer or servant of the corporation may be arrested. The Court of first instance declined to allow the case to go to trial as in its view the corporation was not responsible for the officer's or servant's wrongful action. Thereupon the case was taken on appeal to the House of Lords.

Law Courts and protection of citizens against official high-handedness.

The English Law Courts stand high in the esteem of the people because they are so many bulwarks against the encroachment of the personal liberty of the subject by officials. The recent decision of the House of Lords in Percy v. Glasgow Corporation (26th May) would illustrate this. The Appellant, in this case, a working man, was travelling in a corporation tram car and tendered a penny in payment of his fare. The conductor refused to accept it because it was slightly battered and upon the Appellant refusing to produce another, the conductor called in an inspector, who repeated the demand but Percy persisted in his refusal. Thereupon the conductor and inspector gave the Appellant into custody on the charge of refusing to pay his fare, although the Appellant had given his name and address. The constable took the Appellant through the street to a police station and charged him there with the non-payment of fare and the tramway inspector further charged him with tendering a defaced coin. The officer in charge of the police station was not for making any mountain out of a mole-hill as the police often do in India and let the Appellant go. The Appellant then brought an action for false imprisonment (wrongful detention)

Lord Haldane in delivering judgment on behalf of his colleagues (Lords Finlay, Dunedin, Cave and Wrenbury) declared in favour of the Appellant and held that if the conductor and inspector were acting within the scope of what they were employed to do, their employers were liable. He quoted with approval the following passage from the classical work of Story on Agency regarding the liability of the principal for wrongs committed by agents:—

The principal is liable to third persons in a civil suit for the frauds, deceits, concealments, misrepresentations, torts, negligences, and other malfeasances or misfeasances, and omissions of duty of his agent in the course of his employment, although the principal did not authorise, or justify, or participate in, or indeed know of such misconduct, or even he forbade the acts, or disapproved of them.

Our contemporary of the English Law Journal says that this does not create any new law and cites Finlay v. South Metropolitan Tramway Co., (48 T. P. 329) and Moore v. Metropolitan Ry. Co., (11. R. 8 Q. B. 36) as laying down the law in somewhat similar lines. But our legal contemporary congratulates the Appellant for carrying his case to the House of Lords as it is very necessary that the officials should be reminded, now and again, that private citizens have rights as well as duties, and that public bodies who employ such officials should be kept alive also to their responsibility. The Law Courts in India would also be equally held in high regard if they would show the same concern to protect the rights and liberties of the subject, no matter how poor or humble he may be, against official high-handedness. Some members of the Bench believe that interference with executive high-handedness will make the empire go to pieces. But our apprehensions are quite the other way.

PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS IN COURT.

(By MR. KHETTRA NATH SINGH, MUNSHI, RANCHI.)

The following observations have reference to an article on the above-mentioned subject which appeared at page cxviii (118 notes) of the current volume of the Calcutta Weekly Notes.

The first enactment on the production of documentary evidence in Court was contained in sec. 128 of Act VIII of 1859. The first part of this section is reproduced in sec. 138 of Act XIV of 1882 (old C. P. C.) with the following main addition and alteration, viz., (1) "the first hearing in the suit" has been changed into "the first hearing of the suit;" (2) the words "all documents which the Court at any time before such hearing has ordered to be produced" were added for the first time in sec. 138 of the 1882 Code.

As pointed out by Blackburn, J., in Docks v. Cameron, 11 H. L. C. 443 (480), "where an Act of Parliament has received a judicial construction, putting a certain meaning on its words and the legislature in a subsequent Act in pari materia uses the same words, there is a presumption that the Legislature used those words intending to express the meaning which it knew had been put upon the same words before, and unless there is something to rebut that presumption, the Act should be construed, even if they were such that they might originally have been construed otherwise (see 26 C. W. N. at p. 707). The above being a well-known canon of interpretation of statutes, it appears that the change from "in the suit" into "of the suit" (though verbal) had been made by the Legislature to bring the law into harmony with the interpretation put upon the section by Ainslie, J., in Gour Huree v. Pran Huree, 21 W. R. 42. According to that learned Judge, the words "first hearing in the suit" are defined by sec. 139 of Act VIII, 1859 and do not mean the "first hearing on the issue." The head-note of that ruling which represents the actual decision of his Lordship runs thus:—"A party is bound under Act VIII of 1859, sec. 128 to be prepared at all points with his documentary evidence, and as soon as the Court has framed the issues which it thinks proper to lay down, at once to tender (if called upon) the documentary evidence bearing thereon." Now, did the Legislature in Act V of 1908 (new Code) make any change in the procedure under Or. XIII, rr. 1, 2? The only material change in the latter is that the words "shall produce" have been substituted for the words "shall bring with them and have in readiness at the first hearing of the suit to be produced when called for by the Court" which occurred in sec. 128 of the 1859 Code and in sec. 138 of the 1882 Code. By this change, the parties, now-a-days, shall have to produce all documentary evidence in their possession and power at the first hearing of the suit, and not merely to bring with them and to produce only when called for by the Court, as required by the provisions of the old Code. This mandatory rule appears to have been overlooked by the Subordinate Courts of this Province, as it appears from the following General Letter addressed by the Registrar of the High Court of Judicature at Patna to all District Judges:—". . . "I am directed to say that notwithstanding the instructions contained in the Courts' General Letter No. 15, dated 18th December 1919, the Judges have remarked with regret that the provisions of Or. XIII, rr. 1 and 2 of the C. P. C. are not strictly observed in many Subordinate Courts. As these provisions are mandatory, I am to request that you will be so good as to take such measures as may be necessary to ensure that the instructions contained in the Courts' General Letter above referred to are strictly observed in future." Thus, except the mandatory words mentioned above, there has not been any change in the new provision and the interpretation of the words "first hearing" made by Ainslie, J., appears to be still good law under the new Code.

DRAFTING OF LAWS.

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

DEAR SIR,

In the year 1920 the Indian Legislative Council amended certain provisions of the Limitation Act, 1908, the amendment in substance being understood by everybody (including the Hon'ble Member in charge of the Bill) to reduce from six months to 90 days the periods of limitation prescribed by Arts. 176, 177 and 179 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. It has now been judicially decided last week by a learned Judge (Harrison, J.) of the Lahore High Court, on a true interpretation of the Amending Act of 1920, that the period of limitation under Art. 177 (for an application to implead the legal representatives of a deceased Defendant or Respondent) is still six months and has not been reduced to 90 days. This decision is of a very far-reaching effect, and upsets a view of the law that has been universally maintained, not only by the Legislative Department of the Government of India, but by the profession in general and by the leading text-writers.

This is one more instance where the Legislature by their bad and unskilful drafting of an Amending Act have failed to carry out their real intention. It was only recently that Mr. Justice Marten of the Bombay High Court, while disposing of a testamentary suit between executors (Nawazbai v. Dmhai), commented upon the great inconvenience which is caused to legal practitioners (in which phrase he included himself), if important and useful alterations in the law are effected in a slipshod manner. His Lordship had had occasion to comment upon the inconvenience thus caused in one or two other cases. In one of them all the leading text-books of that period had actually overlooked the amendments which had been made by the Legislature. In another the amendment escaped the vigilance of a leading text-book writer on the subject.

It is very unfortunate that the Legislature cannot say quite clearly what it intends. One or two lines would put the matter beyond any question or argument.

LAWRENCE ROAD,

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MOOKERJEE and CHOTZNER, JJ. S. A. No. 1449 of 1920. GANES RAM, Plaintiff-Appellant v. GANPAT RAI and another, Defendants-Respondents. The 14th June 1922.

Suit for specific performance of contract to sell—Variation between pleading and proof not allowed.

The appeal arose out of a suit for specific performance of a contract to sell a house alleged to have been entered into by an agent of Defendant No. 1, Ganpat Rai, with the Plaintiff, Ganes Ram. The house, it was alleged, was subsequently sold to Defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The Defendant No. 1 repudiated the allegation, while the Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 claimed protection as bona fide purchasers for value without notice. In the trial Court, the Plaintiff produced a document which was marked Ex. 1 and purported to embody the agreement which the Plaintiff sought to specifically enforce. The trial Court held that the said document was not in existence at the date of the suit and that it had been manufactured in the course of the trial and dismissed the Plaintiff's suit. On appeal the District Judge affirmed the decree of the trial Court holding that the agent of the Defendant No. 1 had no authority to complete the contract and he did not do so. The Plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chakravarti and Kalkinkar Chakravarti for the Appellant invited the Judges to examine the correspondence between the parties which preceded the execution of the document and to hold that they disclose a completed contract between the parties.

Babus Ram Chandra Majumdar and Mahes Chandra Banerjee for Respondent No. 1— and Babu Mrityunjay Chattopadhyay for Respondents Nos. 2 and 3 objected on the ground that such a course would be to allow the Plaintiff to change his case and the result would be a variation between pleading and proof.

Held—The Plaintiff should not in any case, specially in a case for specific performance of contract, be allowed to depart from the case made in the plaint in Handkins v. Maltby (1867) L. R. 3 Ch. 188 and Mundy v. Jolliffe (1839) 5 My. and Cr. 167, referred to.

S. C. C. Appeal dismissed with costs.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MOOKERJEE and CHOTZNER, JJ. S. A. No. 1883 OF 1920. SABITRI DESHI-ANI, Appellant v. CHINTAMANI alias JUNDO DESHIANI, Respondent. The 19th July 1922.

Hindu Law, Deshis of Maldah, whether governed by—Partition between widows of joint brothers.

The Plaintiff-Respondent brought a suit for partition of inmoveable property inherited by her from her husband Gyan Deshi against the widow and minor son of Dhuba, brother of Gyan Deshi alleging that the parties were governed by the Dayabhag School of Hindu law and as such she was entitled to 8 annas share of the joint property. The Defendant's contention was that the parties were not Hindus governed by the either School of the Hindu law but their inheritance was governed by special custom by which females do not inherit but the properties pass by survivorship to the male members and that even if the partition were allowed the interest of the minor Defendants' reversioners should be safeguarded. The first Court found the title with the Plaintiff but held that it was a fit case that the partition should be disallowed to safe-guard the interest of the 'minor Defendants' reversioners. On appeal partition was allowed.

Held—(1) That there being nothing to the contrary the parties must be held to own Hindu religion and as such to be governed by the Hindu law, (2) that the Defendant had failed to prove the special custom and the parties being residents of District Maldah where the Bengal School of law prevails the Courts below were right in holding that the parties were governed by the Bengal School of Hindu law and that the Plaintiff was entitled to get partition of the property.

Babu Bijoy Kumar Bhattacharji for the Appellant.

Babu Nisith Nath Ghatik for the Respondent.

S. C. C. Appeal dismissed with costs.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MOOKERJEE and CHOTZNER, JJ. R. A. No. 61 OF 1921. RAM KAMAL SHAHA BANIK, Plaintiff-Appellant v. SYAMA SUNDER SHAHA BANIK and others, Defendant-Respondents. The 12th April 1922.

Limitation in suit for construction of Will—Whether Art. 120 applicable—Sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act—Interpretation of.

The father of the Appellant-Respondents died after having executed a Will. By the said Will after making certain provisions by way of his maintenance he devised his estate to his grandsons (son's sons), to be taken by them in certain shares. The Defendant-Respondents Syama Sunder and two others were appointed executors who shortly after the death of the testator took probate of the Will about the year 1899. The other two executors died and Defendant Syama Sunder, the surviving executor was in possession as such. In 1919 the Plaintiff instituted a suit for the construction of the Will. His case was that as all the grandsons were not born during the life-time of the testator, there was partial intestacy. The executor while admitting that the estate was not yet fully administered pleaded limitation and that the suit was barred under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The Subordinate Judge held that sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act was a bar as the Plaintiff being able to claim partition had not done so. On the question of limitation he held that Art. 120 was applicable and that time ran from the date when probate was obtained. He accordingly dismissed the suit. The Plaintiff appealed to the High Court:

Held, firstly, that Art. 120 was applicable but that time ran from day to day till the administration was complete. The suit was not therefore barred by limitation. Secondly, that sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act did not require a Plaintiff to seek all the reliefs he is entitled to.

Babus Rupendra Coomar Mitter, Navadwip Chandra Shaha and Romaprosad Mukherjee for the Appellant.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Bysack, Kanai Lal Shaha and Promotha Nath Banerjee for the Respondents.

REPORTS (See Index.)

The late Sir George Knox.

We note with regret the death of Sir George Knox, the distinguished Judge of the Allahabad High Court. His record was absolutely unique in the annals of public service in India. He was the senior-most member of the Indian Civil Service and actually sat as a Judge of the High Court for over thirty years. He entered the Indian Civil Service in the year 1864 and retired in January 1921 after having put in 56 years of service. He was appointed a Judge of the High Court in 1890 when Sir John Edge was the Chief Justice and during his term of office extending over three decades, he officiated as Chief Justice on many occasions. Besides being a sound lawyer, he had the reputation of having a fair knowledge of Sanskrit. His intimate knowledge of the customs of this country proved of incalculable advantage in the discharge of his duties. On more than one occasion Sir George was the Vice-Chancellor of the Allahabad University and in recognition of his services as such the University conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Law. After retiring from the Bench he still remained in India and passed the remainder of his life at Nainital.

The Law Membership of the Government of India:

It has been announced in a Simla communique that the Hon'ble Mr. Tej Bahadur Sapru will shortly retire from the office of the Law Member to Government of India. A good deal of speculation is rife as to his likely successor. It is not our practice to discuss hearsay statements. "Measures not men" is a motto that we have tacitly followed in our journalistic career. We are not interested in any particular person who may be appointed to this office but in the principle on which such appointments should be made. Nomination to this office is to this day made on the rather obsolete principle that the Viceroy, very likely assisted by the Members of his Executive Council, has an unfettered discretion in the selection of a colleague of his Cabinet Council. But this anomaly must go. The time is fast approaching when the Legislative Assembly will insist that the Members of the Executive Council, who may be selected by H. E. the Viceroy, must command the confidence of the Legislature or, in other words, that the principle of responsibility be introduced in the Cabinet Council of the Government of India. We may predict that the next general election in India would be fought out over the question of securing provincial autonomy for the provinces and responsibility in the Central Government. We believe that on this occasion the selection of a Member of the Executive Council in the place of the Hon'ble Mr. Sapru will be made on the principle of the distribution of patronage by the Government of India on some favoured Indian lawyers selected by turns from the different provinces of India by rotation. Bengal, Behar, Madras, United Provinces have had their turn and so it is now Bombay's chance. The Government of India is still wedded to the ma bap tradition of a paternal Government and treat us as children by giving us a slice of cake by turns. We pity the giver, and the taker no less.

The Advocate-Generalship of Bengal.

We are glad to note that Mr. S. R. Das, Bar-at-Law, has been appointed to officiate as the Advocate-General of Bengal. He was the Standing Counsel to the Government of Bengal for sometime past. Since his election to the Bengal Legislative Council he took leave and Mr. B. L. Mitter, Bar-at-Law, was officiating for him. After Mr. S. R. Das was elected to the Bengal Legislative Council, the question arose as to whether the Standing Counsel of Bengal could remain in office and at the same time retain his seat as an elected member of the Local Legislature. The question was referred to the Attorney-General in England and he was of opinion that only whole-time officials were barred from seeking election to the Local Legislature and that the Standing Counsel was not an official in that sense. Mr. S. R. Das resumed his office of Standing Counsel after that on Mr. B. L. Mitter's proceeding to England. Now that Mr. S. R. Das has been appointed to officiate as the Advocate-General of Bengal and Mr. B. L. Mitter has returned from England, it is only appropriate that he has been appointed to officiate in the place of Mr. S. R. Das.

It must not be supposed that the highest law offices in Bengal have gone to the Indians out of any preconceived policy on the part of the Local or the Imperial Governments for the Indianisation of the services in this country. It is a well-known fact that the Indian Members of the Calcutta Bar, commencing with Lord Sinha and his contemporaries, worked their position up as leaders of the Calcutta Bar by sheer merit. The Calcutta Bar had long before that been a reserve for the European Members of the English Bar. When they were replaced by Lord Sinha and his Indian colleagues, the Advocate-Generalship was first offered to Lord Sinha as a special favour. It is worthy of note that the late Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, a man of towering ability and personality, an acknowledged leader of the Calcutta Bar, who for many years was the Standing Counsel, was never appointed by the Government even to officiate as Advocate-General of Bengal.

When Lord Sinha became Law Member a fresh effort was made by the Government of India to revert to the old tradition that this prize appointment of the Calcutta Bar should go to a European. No European of the requisite qualification and standing being available locally, Mr. Kenrick, a devil of an English Solicitor-General was brought out. He was no doubt well-versed in English law but he felt somewhat like a fish out of water in dealing with cases which involved questions of land tenure or of the personal laws, usages and customs of the people of this country. A lawyer, however eminent, who has not practised in the Indian Law Courts, also feels somewhat out of his element in dealing with the codified law of the country.

The Government of India were loath to attribute his short-comings to such causes and perhaps thought that an unhappy selection was made. On the termination of his office, Government decided to make a further experiment rather than give it to a qualified Indian. Mr. Gibbons was then brought out. He was a good speaker, a man of very amiable qualities and equally well-versed in English law but he too experienced the same difficulties in doing justice to himself and the responsible duties of his office and for identical reasons. As Mr. Gibbons' term of office is about to expire, the Government of India is now convinced that the nomination of an Advocate-General of Bengal direct from the Bar in England is neither fair to the Member of the English Bar so appointed nor to the Members of the Calcutta Bar or to the interest of the Government or the people of this country. In Madras, the position of the Advocate-General has been held for a long time past by the Vakil-Advocates of the High Court. In Calcutta after Lord Sinha, this is the second occasion on which an Indian Member of the Calcutta Bar has been appointed to officiate as the Advocate-General of Bengal. Mr. S. R. Das is a very sound lawyer and also an able advocate and we are quite sure that he will be made permanent in the office.

PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS IN COURT.

(By MR. KHETTRA NATH SINGH, MUNSIF,

The meaning of the "first hearing" as used in the new Code has been interpreted by Greaves, J., in Taran v. Raj Chandra, 50 Ind. Cas. 296. His Lordship observes that those words mean the date when for the first time the case is called on for hearing and is really gone into. It is ruled by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 45 Cal. 878 at p. 889 that r. 1 does not exclude the discretion of the Court to receive any such documentary evidence at any subsequent stage and that in the case before their Lordships, the books had been filed presumably in another Court and when produced on a particular date (i.e., 27th June) they were accordingly ordered to be placed with the records. I think that what the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Greaves meant to say was that the meaning of the first hearing of a suit has to be ascertained with reference to the context, viz., for the hearing of that particular matter which is specified in the order of the Court and that it may be interpreted differently according to the context. In sec. 34 of the 1882 Code (corresponding to Or. I, r. 13), the words "first hearing" occurred and these words were not interpreted literally by the Hon'ble Chief Justice in 14 All. 524 at p. 526, but held to mean the "earliest opportunity." It is interesting to observe that the latter words have not been substituted in the corresponding provisions of the new Code, i.e., Or. I, r. 13. Hence the words "first hearing" were never construed too literally. The following observations of the Hon'ble Acting C. J. (Sir Jwala Prasad) at page 655 of 6 Pat. L. J. 650 indicate why the ambiguous word "hearing" has not been defined in the Code:—

"... it is obvious that it is used in the different rules with a view to state the different purposes for which a date for hearing of the suit is fixed. Now in Or. IX, r. 1 read with r. 3, it would appear that after the institution of the suit when the summons is issued upon the Defendant calling upon them to appear upon a particular date, that date is the first hearing of the suit, and if the parties fail to appear when the suit is called on for hearing on that date the Plaintiff's suit is dismissed for default. Various steps have to be taken by the parties in a suit in order that it may be ready for final hearing, which means the examination of witnesses, the tendering of documents, and the hearing of arguments. At the intermediate stage in order to enable or compel the parties to take necessary steps in the prosecution of the case, the Court may fix date for some particular action to be taken. Those dates are dates for the hearing of that particular matter which is specified in the order of the Court." Hence it appears that the first hearing of the suit as contained in Or. XIII, r. 1 cannot be moulded into an artificial definition. But stripped of all context, those words (according to Ainslie, J., mentioned above) are clearly defined by Or. XIV, r. 1 (5) and the parties must be ready with documentary evidence on the day the written statements are filed and issues framed. This is the ordinary rule but the Plaintiff is not expected to know the defence of the Defendant until issues are framed and hence the Court allows further time to produce documentary evidence primarily by the Plaintiff and as a matter of practice, by the Defendant also, whose duty was to have been ready with documentary evidence on the day the issues were framed. That the Court has power to order the parties to file documents on a particular day appears from the concluding line of Or. XIII, r. 1 (1) which was added for the first time in the 1882 Code and reproduced in the above rule. Hence the practice of the Mofussil Courts to give a precise date solely for the production of documentary evidence on a date subsequent to the framing of the issues, is not repugnant to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, though not expressly sanctioned by it.

That the mandatory provisions of Or. XIII, r. 1 are subject to the discretion of the Court, appears, of course, from r. 2, and it is commonplace to say that this discretion does not mean the mere caprice of the Judge but is one which should be judicially exercised. As it has been repeatedly pointed out, the main object of this rule is to prevent parties from manufacturing evidence pending the trial and not to shut out true, good and valuable evidence. If the evidence is of the latter character, the Court should always receive such evidence, provided the opponent is not taken by surprise and further opportunity is given to the latter to rebut the same; otherwise, Courts would degenerate into mere instruments of discipline instead of being what they are intended to be, tribunals for determining matters in controversy between the parties.

DRAFTING OF LAWS.

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

DEAR SIR,

Mr. K. J. Rustomji's letter, re, "Drafting of Laws" appearing in Issue No. 35 of your valuable journal is very interesting, but, I am afraid, when all the facts and circumstances of the case are considered, (I say this with all deference to Harrison, J., of the Lahore High Court and Mr. Rustomji), the view set forth in the above letter is not perhaps correct and for the following reasons:—

Before the amendment by Act XXVI (I. C.) of 1920, the entries in the second column relating to the articles in question stood as follows:—

Art. 175	Six months.
„ 176	Do.
„ 177	Do.
„ 178	Do.
„ 179	Do.

By the amendment above referred to, it was directed that "in Arts. 176, 178 and 179 for the word 'Ditto' in the second column, the words 'ninety days,' 'six months' and 'ninety days,' respectively, shall be substituted."

The entries would consequently now appear as follows:—

Art. 175	Six months.
„ 176	Ninety days.
„ 177	Do.
„ 178	Six months.
„ 179	Ninety days.

Now Mr. Rustonji seems to think that since "Ditto" of Art. 177, as it originally stood, meant six months and was not mentioned in the amending Act, it must be deemed to stand even now for what it stood for then, viz., "Six months."

That this is not a reasonable view is evident from two reasons:—

(1) It must be conceded that the word "Ditto" has and can have no independent meaning of its own, and what significance it can have may be only by reference to the immediately previous entry. It simply means "the same as the immediately previous entry," whatever that immediately previous entry may be. As the list stands at present the immediately previous entry is "Ninety days" and I do not think it will be permissible to skip that one and refer the "Ditto" of Art. 177 to the "Six months" of Art. 175.

(2) Then, again if the "Ditto" of Art. 177 means "Six months," the same argument must hold good of the "Ditto" of Art. 178. Why, then, is this "Ditto" of Art. 178 distinctly amended into "Six months," while the "Ditto" of Art. 177 is left untouched? If it had been the intention of the Legislature to keep the entries of Arts. 177 and 178 at "Six months," nothing could have been easier (and more reasonable to expect) than amending the "Ditto" of Art. 177 into "Six months" and leaving the "Ditto" of Art. 178 unaffected, thus making the latter refer to the entry against Art. 177.

I believe the view of the amendment "as understood by every body (including the Hon'ble Member in charge of the bill)" is the correct view.

Yours truly,
BIMALACHARAN DEB.

CRIMINAL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before C. C. GHOSH and CUMMING, JJ. CRIMINAL REFERENCE No. 56 OF 1922. KING-EMPEROR v. AMRITA alias TINCOWRIE DHOA, Accused. The 21st July 1922.

Cr. P. C., sec. 401—Presumption of accused's mental derangement although no such plea taken in the Lower Court—Matter brought to notice of Local Government.

The deceased child, Pulin, and Jiten his cousin were taken by Swarnamani their grand-aunt to stay in her daughter's house for Dolejatra festival. When they were coming back they were accompanied by her daughter Jadoomoni and Pulin Chandra Haldar. In the way the boys went ahead of the women. Suddenly the accused Tincowrie jumped out of the garden and tried to snatch away the bundle of clothes that Jiten was carrying. Jiten cried out and ran away. Tincowrie held Pulin by the legs and dashed his head 2 or 3 times on the ground and ran away. The child died instantaneously. Swarnamani immediately gave chase; the accused jumped into a tank close by and was caught by Swarna by throwing her Sari round the neck of the accused. The Sessions Judge of 24-Perganas disagreeing with the unanimous verdict of the jury referred the case to the High Court.

It was held that although there was no plea of insanity taken in the Lower Court, having regard to the extraordinary circumstances of the case, the presumption arises that he must have been suffering from very serious derangement of brain.

He was sentenced to transportation for life. It was directed that this should be, under sec. 401, Cr. P. C., brought to the notice of the Local Government who will decide if he should be kept under observation.

Mr. J. W. Orr appeared on behalf of the Crown in support of the rule.

Mr. Amulya Chandra Sen appeared on behalf of the Accused.

REPORTS (See Index.)

American Chief Justice Taft's speech at a Banquet by the English Bench and Bar.

Chief Justice Taft of the United States was given a banquet by the English Bench and Bar in the historic hall of the Middle Temple on Wednesday, the 5th of July last. There was a brilliant gathering. The speeches delivered by the Lord Chancellor of England and the Attorney-General were complimentary and there was nothing in them which deserves any special notice. But the reply of the American Chief Justice is both instructive and interesting. He freely acknowledged how America was indebted to England for her institutions which breathed of freedom, liberty and justice but at the same time emphasised how they had developed in America on quite independent lines since the separation. He had come to England on a self-imposed mission to see for himself how the speed of justice could be accelerated in his own country without deteriorating its quality. There are suggestions in the speech which the executive, the judiciary as also the lawyers in this country will do well to ponder over and adopt as guiding principles in the administration of the law and the development of the constitution.

Chief Justice Taft said :—

"From his earliest boyhood he had venerated the British Bench and the British Bar. His father was on the Bench, and believed in the English law reports (laughter)—and he used him in his library at home to gather the citations. Therefore he became, even before he knew any principles of law, familiar with British law reports and judgments. But never in the wildest imagination of an ambitious boy did he conceive of standing where he did that night and receiving from the Great English Bench and the English Bar such a welcome. Nowhere else in the world was a gathering like that possible. That was the shrine of English justice which had done so much in the civilization of the world. He spoke of what he knew, for he was engaged for years helping to discharge the 'white man's burden.' He was in the far Orient, and he knew how much Great Britain had contributed to the civilization of the world in the uplifting of its backward people by teaching them that under the aegis of their Empire there was such a thing as justice between man and man which was blind, a justice which had no regard to Government policy and was regardless of favour or other ulterior consequences."

We are always ready to acknowledge our indebtedness to Britain for introducing in this country a better system of administration of justice, ideas of liberty, freedom and equality in the eyes of law and in respect of civic rights, as also a wider outlook of knowledge but we deny that the gain has been one-sided only. The West is much richer to-day materially, morally and spiritually because of its prolonged contact with the East. The idea that the Orient is a "white man's burden" is, however, a myth. It is in self-interest that the West has exploited the East for centuries and is continuing to do so even to-day. It is this organised economic and political exploitation of the East by the West that has cast a "burden" on the Orient under which she is groaning for relief. The unrest in the East is but an expression of this feeling. Many of the institutions such as the law Courts and the machinery of Government with their avowed merit are much too costly for the poor people of the East. Then again the equal justice between man and man regardless of Government policy or favour about which the Chief Justice and ex-President of the United States is so very keen, exists in the Indian Empire as a matter of theory to which little regard is paid when there is any political struggle between the people and the executive for securing greater political freedom or racial equality by the former. If what Chief Justice Taft says has any reference to the existing state of things in India, it is yet far from true. If it is put forward as an ideal, we would say, that both the Government and the people ought to make an earnest effort to work up to it. Chief Justice Taft when speaking of the Orient was evidently referring to the Philippines which he visited for conferring self-government on the Philipinos.

The next portion of Chief Justice Taft's speech proceeds on firmer grounds and will prove instructive to the people of this country and dispel much unreasoned prejudice against the valued British institutions which have contributed so much to the constitutional rights and liberties of the American people and the development of democratic form of Government throughout the civilized world. The Chief Justice said :—

"In America they had inherited that ideal and a confidence that could be realized. They had inherited the Common Law and its spirit. The old maxim caveat emptor illustrated that special quality of the Common Law and indicated its spirit. It meant that every Englishman and every American who was adult and in his right mind, must stand on his own foot and look out for himself. It was that spirit of independence in the law which made men fit for self-government. That was the reason why they had succeeded so marvellously in being the greatest Colonial Empire in the modern world. What was it that characterised British and American guarantees of liberty? What was it that characterised the rights they had derived from Magna Charta, from the Petition of Rights, from the Habeas Corpus Act, the Bill of Rights and the Act of Settlement? Was it glowing eloquence and declarations in favour of individual liberty and freedom? Not a bit of it. It was the provision of the machinery by which a man might defend himself before the Courts of his country. Those declarations of rights were adjective law; they were not substantive law. They illustrated the practical character of Anglo-Saxon Government, and explained how it was that in a thousand years they had hammered out individual liberty and free government and why under the same tutelage, and following the same course, Americans were joint heirs of it. In England they had no written constitution and it might be said that in adopting one, America had departed from their great example. But they had given to America in her colonial days a written Charter under which the Government was conducted and embedded in that Charter was the doctrine of ultra vires from which they had developed the theory of their constitution and their Courts."

Then the learned speaker explained how this doctrine of ultra vires served as a constitutional check against the local and the supreme legislatures exceeding their powers. The incident out of which this constitutional safe-guard against the legislature encroaching upon the fundamental rights of the subject was evolved, is very interesting indeed. When America was a British colony, the Connecticut legislature by passing a law had sought to deprive one Mr. Winslow of a landed estate which he had inherited as heir. Winslow proposed to move the Privy Council and have the law declared ultra vires on the ground of its being contrary to the fundamental laws of the land. The local legislature thereupon put him into prison. But he escaped, moved the Privy Council and had the law declared ultra vires and the local legislature obeyed. Thus originated the constitutional check which the superior Courts in America still exercise over the local and supreme legislatures. But the jurisdiction of the American Courts in this respect is subject to strict limitations, the chief of which is that the Courts have no power to adjudicate on the laws as such. There must be a concrete case of rights affected by the law in question in which the validity of the law itself may be tested. Mr. Taft says that one of the great advantages of this system is that it has gone to promote self-restraint amongst the people as they have got accustomed to recognise that the state Courts are there to obviate local prejudice and guard against sectional interest. The law Courts in England and America have played a great part in the development of constitutional Government in both countries. We cannot see eye to eye with a school of politicians in India who would not fight against the improper use and application of some of the more arbitrary laws through the law Courts or bring pressure to bear on the legislature for their repeal. In all contests between the people and the executive, the legislature and the law Courts have in all countries and at all times vindicated public rights. The notorious Star Chamber has in course of time been transformed into the Privy Council. It is all through the love of liberty, freedom and justice amongst members of the legal profession that such bloodless battles have been won. Mr. Taft concluded his speech by paying a glowing tribute to the services rendered by American Barristers to their mother-land, "Lawyers were subject to great criticisms. . . Between 1770 and 1775 there were 150 men who entered the Inns of Court on this side from the Colonies, and out of them came the galaxy of lawyers who gave America the Declaration of Independence and Constitution and the whole Government system (cheers). Therefore it was well to be proud of their profession. When some Jack Cade said 'we would hang all the lawyers' they could say: 'well, if we are hanged you will have to get more lawyers to fill our places.'"

THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF INCOME TAX with commentary. By A. V. Viswanath Sastri, B.A., B.L., High Court Vakil, Madras. Price Rs. 6. Commercial Press, Madras.

It was early part of this year that a consolidating Act was passed by the Indian Legislature repealing earlier legislations relating to Income Tax and consolidating some of the more recent legislation and modifying the same on some of the approved principles of the English law on the subject and departing from them in certain respects, having regard to the personal laws that obtain amongst the Hindus and Mahomedans in this country. This Act also repealed the Super-Tax Act of 1920 but embodies practically all its provisions therein. The Act does not fix the rate at which income tax and super-tax are to be charged but leaves it to the Indian Legislature to fix it according to the financial requirements of the year. It was thus after the budget provision for the year 1922-23 was passed by the legislature that this Act came into operation. It is therefore very commendable that this elaborate commentary on the Act has been compiled and published within the space of three months. The annotations of the sections are both systematic and exhaustive. Quite a lot of valuable information is given with regard to the practice and procedure followed by the Income Tax Department of Government. The principle on which taxations and rates are levied on individual profits as also of trading concerns and companies are explained and supported by English and Indian decisions. The Calcutta Turf Club case and other more recent decisions have been incorporated in appropriate places. Exemptions that may be claimed under the Act are similarly treated. The expression "agricultural incomes" is one of the very knotty points and at the very outset of the Act, we find that the author has spared no pains to disentangle its intricacies. Below each section a synopsis of its chief elements are given and each is taken by turn and elaborately dealt with. We feel no hesitation in saying that the work will be found of great help not only by lawyers and businessmen but also by revenue officers.

THE LAW OF SANCTION TO PROSECUTE. By Sripati Roy, Bar-at-Law. Price Rs. 7.

This is the fourth edition of Mr. Roy's well-known book. The book has been thoroughly revised and some parts have been rearranged. The book will be found up-to-date in every respect and we have no doubt will be well-received by the profession.

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."
SIR,

I beg to send the following few lines to be inserted in your much-esteemed Weekly Notes.

The decision of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Greaves In the goods of Jnanendra Nath Ray, 26 C. W. N. 799, brings into prominence some anomaly in the Hindu law as it stands now owing to the policy of the Government not to interfere, in the matter of that, with the religion of the Hindus on the one hand and the apathy of the community concerned to reform its religion or the religious rites with the advance of society on the other. One broad fact in the decision referred to stands out clear and prominent, viz., that persons who do not profess the Hindu religion are nevertheless Hindus. The humour of it is apparent to the student of the Hindu law. Now the decision of the Hon'ble Judge is unexceptionable as we find in the Civil Marriage Act itself, though it is not referred to in the judgment, that the parties must not be related to each other in any degree of consanguinity or affinity which would according to any law to which either of them is subject, render a marriage between them illegal [Act No. III of 1872, sec. 2 (4)]. This clearly shows that the Civil Marriage Act was enacted not for the "Brahmos" but for the Hindus who do not profess the Hindu religion in certain respects. Now, how long will this state of things continue?

By the by, the ruling will open a new chapter in the Hindu law. Because, if it is not overruled, it will not be necessary to move the Legislature to pass an enactment for legalizing inter-caste marriage amongst the Hindus. The Special Marriage Act will enable the Hindus to contract such a marriage without losing the status of a Hindu.

A POINT OF STAMP LAW.

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

Is an instrument both insufficiently and improperly stamped admissible in evidence and how?

This question sometimes presents itself and it is not always easy to find a satisfactory answer.

Sec. 37 of the Stamp Act is obviously of no application as it contemplates only the cases of instruments bearing a stamp of sufficient amount though of improper description.

Can such an instrument be dealt with under sec. 35 of the Stamp Act? To do so, we must regard it as insufficiently stamped or unstamped. If the instrument is regarded as insufficiently stamped and the deficit duty (plus, of course, the penalty) be realised, no duty could, by parity of reasoning, be then realised in cases coming under sec. 37 of the Act. If duty paid in stamps of an improper description constitute a part-payment of duty under sec. 35 of the Act duty so paid ought to be regarded as a full payment under sec. 37 of the Act in cases coming under the purview of that section. The existence of sec. 37 in the Act therefore precludes the extension of the words "insufficiently stamped" in proviso (a) of sec. 35 so as to include cases of instruments both insufficiently and improperly stamped.

To regard such an instrument as unstamped would, I suppose, be putting a forced construction on the sections, inasmuch as the same instrument might then have to be regarded as unstamped for the purposes of one section and stamped for the purposes of another. An instrument, for example, coming within the purview of sec. 37 would, when and if dealt with under sec. 35 of the Act, have to be regarded as unstamped altogether. Was this the intention of the Legislature?

If it is not regarded as unstamped and if the case of an instrument both insufficiently and improperly stamped be held to be outside the scope of sec. 35 altogether, what other section is applicable? Or, is it a casus omissus?

CIVIL - APPELLATE JURISDICTION. * Before RICHARDSON and SUHRAWARDY, JJ. S. A. No. 947 of 1920. RAJA BHUPENDRA NARAYAN SINHA BAHADUR, Plaintiff-Appellant v. MIDNAPUR ZEMINDARY CO., LTD. and others, Defendants-Respondents. The 1st June 1922.

Cess—Payable under Act IX of 1880 (B. C.), sec. 41—Cess if Rajaswa.

The Plaintiff sued the Defendant Company for arrears of road-cess for the period of 1322-25 B. S. The Company held a putni taluk under the Plaintiff. The Zeminder was entitled to Rs. 80-6-3 per annum under the Cess Act but he claimed a further sum of Rs. 15-6-3 per annum on the basis of a kabuliyat. This further sum was claimed because the Zeminder was liable to pay to the Government Rs. 95-9-6 and he contended that by the terms of the putni kabuliyat the putnidar was bound to pay to the Zeminder the whole of the amount and not a part only. The main question was the correct interpretation of the terms of the kabuliyat executed 13 years before the passing of the Cess Act—whether any demand on the Zemindery for any new amount on account of "राजस्व" (which would be payable according to the terms of the kabuliyat) could be interpreted to include the cess under sec. 41 of Act IX of 1880. There was also the question whether the conduct of the parties should be looked into in construing the kabuliyat.

Held—That the conduct of the parties could be looked into in case of any ambiguity in the terms of the document. In this case the terms being reasonably clear evidence regarding the conduct of the parties was not admissible; that राजस्व meant revenue payable to sovereign authority and as such included cess and that the meaning of the word राजस्व could be brought within the provision of sec. 41 of Act IX of 1880.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Misnomer of Jurymen, if vitiates trial.

The Criminal Court of Appeal in England in dismissing Bottomley's appeal from the conviction and exemplary sentence passed against him has decided that when a jurymen was summoned under a wrong name that did not vitiate the trial. The facts were that one Symonds, who carried on business under a different name, was summoned under his business name and served in the jury under this pseudonym. Coleridge and Roche, JJ., held that as he was the man intended to be summoned, the irregularity was immaterial and did not vitiate the trial. They relied on the dictum of Darling, J., in Wakefield's case (13 Cr. App. R. 56) that "mere irregularity in calling together the jury, mere misnomer of a jurymen, is not sufficient to avoid the proceedings." This has been the law in England from the time of James I (21 Jac. I., Ch. 13, sec. 2). The English cases, as our contemporary of the English Law Journal points out, have gone far beyond this and on more than one occasion, even when the jurymen was not the man meant to be returned, have refused to declare the trial void. In Hill v. Gates (12 East. 229) a son answered to the father's name and served on the jury. Lord Ellenborough observed that if this sort of mistake were allowed to interfere with verdicts, the Court "might have to set aside half the verdicts in the Assizes." In a note to the same case, The case of a Jurymen, one Robert Curry answered to the name of Joseph Curry, and the Court refused to interfere. In the appeal of Reg v. Mellor (7 Cox. C. C., 154), heard by fourteen Judges, the Judges decided by a majority of eight to six that where one Thornby and Thorne were both on the panel, and Thorne was called, but Thornby (who was not called) answered and sat as the jury, there was no ground for interference by the Court.

Findings of fact and findings of law.

The last issue of the English Law Journal has a very outspoken article on the practice which is very common in every Court of Appeal of refusing to interfere with the decision of the Court below, when they are disinclined to do so, on the simple ground that it is based on findings of fact. But the same Appellate Court would at other times allow an appeal when it does not agree with the decision of the Court below and would upset the findings of fact alleging that the findings are not supported by any or sufficient evidence or are based on misconception of particular words or expressions of a statute, which are regarded as questions of law. Or, in other words, when it pleases the Appellate Court it rejects an appeal on the ground of its involving findings of fact and at other times it allows an appeal upsetting findings of fact interpreting them as questions of law. The occasions for the remarks of our contemporary are furnished by the decision of a Division Court of the Kings Bench, in the case of Tendering Guardians v. Woolrich Guardians.

This is what our contemporary says:—

The distinction between questions of fact and questions of law is not easy to define. One generally finds, however, that, when the High Court considers the decision of a bench of Magistrates wrong, they will, without much difficulty come to the conclusion that the question they wrongly decided was a question of law. If, on the other hand, they agree with the decision below, they usually say the question was one of fact which cannot be interfered with by the High Court. The meaning of the words used in statutes is a question of law, and the question where there was any evidence justifying the decision of the inferior Court is also one of law. These two propositions afford an easy loophole of escape from the contention that the High Court has no 'jurisdiction' to interfere with Magistrate's decisions when that contention is regarded by the High Court as inconvenient in any particular case. For, even if there is no doubt about the meaning of a statute, and the Magistrates have, in the opinion of the High Court, wrongly brought or refused to bring a particular case within that statute, the High Court will say that there was no evidence upon which the Magistrates could have based their decision. The practical result, therefore, seems to be that, if you persuade the High Court that the Magistrates have gone very wrong, you will win, whether your point is strictly one of law or fact, but that, if you can only introduce an element of doubt about the matter, you will lose.

The writer concludes by saying with reference to the case in question that if the High Court agreed with the findings of the Magistrates, they would say they had no jurisdiction to interfere. If they were of contrary opinion, they would either say that the Magistrate had misconstrued the statutory words or that there was no evidence justifying the finding. This method of reasoning, the writer observes, seems to savour very much of a "quibble" and it would be much better if the High Court were given a free hand to deal with all appeals from Magistrates, where any point of real substance is raised, without having to resort to these dubious devices.

DRAFTING OF LAWS.

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."
DEAR SIR;

I have read with interest Mr. Deb's letter in your issue of 31st ult. re the period of limitation under Art. 177 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, and I hasten to reply to it as the matter is of considerable practical importance. I cannot do better than give a few extracts from the judgment of Harrison, J., of the Lahore High Court.

"The Act of 1920 amends and alters the period of limitation under three Arts. 176, 178 and 179 making the first 90 days, the second 6 months and the third 90 days respectively. In the Unrepealed General Acts of the Governor-General in Council (1909 Ed.) the Schedule of Act is so printed that Arts. 175 to 179 all appear on the same page. In the second column opposite Art. 175 the words are "six months." Opposite following four articles the word "ditto" is printed and it is contended, and this has doubtless been the view taken hitherto, that because the word "ditto" occurs opposite Art. 177 the meaning of the Amending Act is that the limitation for Art. 176 being changed to 90 days it follows as a matter of course, the word "ditto" being left unaltered, that the period for Art. 177 is automatically changed to three months also. On the other side, reliance is placed on the Act as printed in the Government of India Gazette in 1908 in which against Art. 177 the words "six months" occur. I find that the official text of the Act of 1908, which has to be read with the Amending Act, is that contained in the Government of India Gazette of that year and inasmuch as the words "six months" there occur opposite Art. 177 and there has been no amendment of Art. 177 in the subsequent Amending Act the period of limitation under this article is still six months and remains unaltered."

It cannot be denied (and I have said so elsewhere) that the Amending Act of 1920 is very unhappily worded and has actually misled everybody, including, I am afraid, the Legislative Department of the Government of India and the Hon'ble Member who was in charge of the Bill.

Yours truly,
K. J. RUSTOMJI.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before WALMSLEY and B. B. GHOSE, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1645 OF 1920. JITENDRA NATH ROY, Defendant-Appellant v. ASHUTOSH GOSWAMI and others, Plaintiffs-Respondents. The 20th July 1922.

Abatement of rent—Ouster by title paramount—Diara proceeding.

The facts material to this report are these:—

The Plaintiffs sued the Defendant for recovery of arrears of rent due from 1320 to Aswin kist of 1323 B. S., in respect of a kaimi jama at an annual rent of Rs. 583-10-2½ p., with cesses and damages, total claim being laid at Rs. 2,776-8-10½ p. The defence, inter alia, was that 30.65 acres of land of Moujas Barankula and Ganganandapur appertaining to his tenancy were wrongly resumed by the Government in a Diara proceeding, and Rs. 80 was assessed as rent on those lands, and the Government by issuing certificates realised the said rent from the Defendant and as such the Defendant was entitled to an abatement of rent to the extent of Rs. 80. The Subordinate Judge of Faridpur held that 30.65 acres of land comprised in the Defendant's tenancy were wrongly resumed by the Government in a Diara proceeding in 1912 inasmuch as those lands formed the bed of the river Barasia at the time of the Revenue Survey and were permanently settled land included in the tenancy of the Defendant; that notices of the Diara proceedings were served upon the Plaintiffs, but they did not raise objection to the resumption proceedings, and as a result thereof were getting malikana from the Government at the rate of 5 per cent. of the rent assessed upon the Diara land, that a separate taluk had been created by the Government regarding these Diara lands, that the Plaintiffs did not appear to take settlement, and the Government was realising Rs. 80 as rent from the Defendant under the Public Demands Recovery Act. The Subordinate Judge allowed the Defendant abatement of rent to the extent of Rs. 80 for which the Defendant had been made liable to the Government, and so gave a decree to the Plaintiffs for Rs. 1,932 and odd.

On appeal by the Plaintiffs, the Additional District Judge agreeing with the findings of the Court of first instance held that both the Plaintiffs and the Defendant seemed to be under the impression at the time of the Diara proceedings that there was nothing wrong in it and they made no objection to the proceedings. The Judge, however, was of opinion that the Plaintiffs were absentee landlords and the Defendant knew the lands better than the Plaintiffs, and it was the duty of the Defendant to maintain his right and possession against trespassers, and that the Defendant should bring a suit to set aside the Diara proceeding. In this view the Judge disallowed the Defendant's claim for abatement of rent, and decreed the Plaintiffs' suit for Rs. 2,758 and odd, and directed the Plaintiffs to refund the amount received by them as malikana to the Defendant. Against this decision the Defendant preferred this second appeal.

It was contended for the Appellant that the proceedings under which he had been compelled to pay the sum of Rs. 80 per year as rent to the Government for occupying the resumed lands amounted to an ouster by a title paramount from a portion of the tenancy and that he was entitled to abatement of rent to the extent of the sum of Rs. 80.

The Respondents contended that the act of the Government was a mere trespass and as the landlord was not bound to protect the tenant from unlawful eviction by a trespasser the Defendant was not entitled to any abatement of rent as against the Plaintiffs:

Held—That under the circumstances of the case when the Plaintiffs themselves had admitted the superior title of the Government to take possession of the lands by proceedings taken under the law, the Plaintiffs could not now turn round and say that it was a mere act of trespass on the part of the Government to dispossess the Defendant from his tenure and that the Defendant was entitled to no relief; in substance it was an ouster of the Defendant from a portion of the tenancy under the Plaintiffs by a title paramount and the Defendant was therefore entitled to an abatement of rent.

The appeal was allowed; the decree of the District Judge was set aside, and that of the Munsif restored with proportionate costs in that Court as recorded by that Court. The Defendant was allowed full costs in this Court as well as in the lower Appellate Court.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MOOKERJEE and CHOTZNER, J.J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2771 OF 1920. KUNJA MOHAN CHAKRAVARTI and another, Defendants-Appellants v. MANINDRA CHANDRA ROY CHOWDHRY and another, Plaintiffs-Respondents. The 20th July 1922.

Suit for rent—Cause of action—Jurisdiction of Court to entertain suit—Sale—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 20—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 144—Rent suit may be instituted in Court where Defendant resides—Sale to be held in Court where tenure or holding is situate.

The facts material to this report are as follows—

The Plaintiffs sued the Defendants in the Munsif's Court at Kurigram to recover khas possession and udsilat upon the establishment of Plaintiffs' right by auction purchase of the Defendants' kayemi holding. The defence, inter alia, was that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to khas possession and wasilat, that they could get only the annual rent due to their share, and that the Plaintiffs fraudulently obtained a decree for rent in a different Court, and that the said decree and the sale thereunder were not binding on the Defendants.

The Court of first instance, found the following facts:—Plaintiffs obtained an ex parte rent decree in the Munsif's Court at Rangpur against the Defendants, and purchased the land in suit in execution of their rent decree for a nominal price of rupee one only. The land in suit is within the jurisdiction of Kuri-gram Court. The decretal amount was realised by attachment of the Defendants' moveables.

Upon these findings the Munsif held that though the Defendants might reside in Rangpur town but as the land in suit was outside the jurisdiction of the Rangpur Court, the Munsif at Rangpur had no jurisdiction to try the rent suit, and as such the decree and the sale of the Defendants' holding in that rent suit were void for want of jurisdiction, and that the Plaintiffs acquired no title by his alleged purchase. The Munsif, therefore, disallowed the prayer for khas possession and wasilat, and gave the Plaintiffs a decree for rent for the period in suit.

On appeal by the Plaintiffs, the District Judge of Rangpur reversed the decision of the Munsif and gave the Plaintiffs a decree for khas possession. He held that the defect of jurisdiction in the previous rent suit could not be gone into in the present suit.

Against this decision of the District Judge, the Defendants preferred this second appeal.

Their Lordships allowed the appeal, and held that the Court at Rangpur had jurisdiction to try the rent suit, but had no jurisdiction to bring the property into sale and the sale was without jurisdiction.

Their Lordships held as follows:—

Cls. (a) and (b) of sec. 20 of the Civil Procedure Code allow a landlord to institute a suit for rent where the tenant resides. This must be limited to cases where the landlord seeks a decree for money. Where, however, the landlord seeks a decree for rent as also ejectment under sec. 66, Bengal Tenancy Act, the suit must be treated as one for recovery of immoveable property within the meaning of cl. (4) of sec. 16 of the Civil Procedure Code and can consequently be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate.

The suit was consequently brought in a Court which had jurisdiction and the decree cannot be successfully impeached on that ground.

6 Bom. H. C. Reports 29, referred to.

Sec. 144, Bengal Tenancy Act merely defines the expression "cause of action" as applied to suits between landlord and tenant for the purposes of the Code of Civil Procedure.

I. L. R. 30 Cal. 453 : s. c. 7 C. W. N. 402, referred to.

The Court at Rangpur had jurisdiction over the person of the Defendant but not over the property. That Court, therefore, was not competent to bring the property into sale, and the sale was held without jurisdiction and was a nullity.

I. L. R. 38 Cal. 639 at p. 668, referred to.

It is an elementary principle of law that if a Court has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter, its judgments and orders are mere nullities and may not only be set aside at any time by the Court in which they are rendered but may be declared void by every Court in which they are presented. These principles apply not only to original Courts but also to Courts of appeal.

Jurisdiction cannot be conferred upon a Court by consent of parties and any waiver on their part cannot make up for the lack or defect of jurisdiction.

13 I. A. 134 : s. c. I. L. R. 9 All. 191 ; I. L. R. 11 Mad. 26 ; I. L. R. 36 Cal. 193, referred to.

When the Judge has no inherent jurisdiction over the subject-matter of a suit the parties cannot by their mutual consent convert it into a proper judicial process although they may constitute the Judge their arbitrator, and be bound by his decision on the merits when these are submitted to him.

The appeal was allowed. The decree of the District Judge was set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs both in the High Court and the lower Appellate Court.

Babus Surendra Chandra Sen and Dwijen-dra Krishna Dutt for the Appellants.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chakravarti for the Respondents.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Preventive powers of Magistrates.

The sections in Part IV of the Code of Criminal Procedure which are intended to prevent the commission of offences confer some very drastic powers on the Magistrates and on the police. This is necessary for the preservation of law and order but at the same time these sections should be applied with great care and caution inasmuch as they contemplate in many cases the restraining of a person in exercise of his lawful rights. Taking for example sec. 144 of the Code this section empowers a Magistrate to interfere with the performance of a lawful act when the consequence of such an act is in his opinion likely to produce the results mentioned in the section. It is the first duty of a Magistrate to secure to every person the enjoyment of his rights under the law and by measures of precaution to deter those who seek to invade the rights of others, but if he apprehends that the lawful exercise of a right may lead to civil tumult and he doubts whether he has a sufficient force available to repress such tumult or to render it innocuous, regard for the public welfare allows him temporarily to interdict the exercise of such rights.

Reported cases show that Magistrates are inclined to make use of a summary and final order under sec. 144 when the matter should have been properly dealt with under sec. 133 or 145. The matter has been very carefully and elaborately discussed in a recent judgment of the Patna High Court (Sheobalak Singh v. Kamaruddin, 1922 Pat. 241). As observed by Jwala Prasad, J., when in the course of a proceeding under sec. 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Magistrate finds that there is a bona fide dispute as to possession of a land likely to cause a breach of the peace he is bound immediately to take action under sec. 145. Sec. 145 is imperative and enjoins upon the Magistrate to start an enquiry under that section whenever he is satisfied from the police report, or otherwise, such as an enquiry under sec. 144, that a dispute exists regarding some land or water. The Magistrate cannot refuse in such a case to initiate a proceeding under sec. 145 for in that case he will be refusing to exercise jurisdiction vested in him by law and shirking the duty enjoined upon him by the section. In such a case the retention of the order under sec. 144 must lead to an irreparable injury to one of the parties who must be in actual possession of the land by his possession being interfered with, though for a short period, for "one of the objects of" sec. 144 is to prevent an obstruction, annoyance or injury to any person lawfully employed. This will obviously be an improper use of sec. 144 and an abuse of the process of the Court. This is undoubtedly the correct view of the matter although cases like Karoolal Sagarlal, 9 C. W. N. 864 and Shoraj Roy, 10 C. W. N. 288, strike a discordant note. In the coming revision of the Code the Legislature ought to settle the point so that one section may not be applied where there is another in the statute especially adapted to the occasion.

This is a matter of much greater importance than appears on the face of it. It is the valued right of a citizen in every civilised country that his person and property are not to be interfered with in any other way except in strict conformity to the law of the land and it is such unlawful interference that more than anything creates dissatisfaction in the minds of people whose natural bent of mind is to be loyal and law abiding. So far as the Magistracy is concerned it is their bounden duty to avoid abuse of the process of law which does not in any sense mean that they are not to enforce the law strictly when occasion requires but all that is wanted is that they should enforce it in strict compliance with the intentions of the statute.

LAND ACQUISITION BILL.

In view of the Bill which has been introduced in the Legislative Assembly by Mr. Ramayya Pantalu with the object of effecting a change in sec. 6 of the present Land Acquisition Act and other co-related matters, and of the opinion entertained by many that the whole Act requires careful revision in the light of the experience which has been gained since the passing of the present Act in 1894, two questions stand out very prominently for consideration by the public and the Government. The first question is whether there should be any enquiry by a statutory body of competent persons who may decide as to the suitability of any land proposed to be acquired under a declaration for its acquisition, for the purpose mentioned therein, as also, as to the reality or otherwise of the declared purpose which may have been put forward as a public purpose, for which the land is proposed to be acquired. The second question is whether if about the time of acquisitions or shortly thereafter, the declared purpose fails of its achievement, what action the Government should take with regard to the land which has either been actually acquired or is about to be acquired at public expense.

As regards the first point the Bill introduced by Mr. Ramayya Pantalu aims principally at an adequate enquiry as to the existence of any public necessity for the acquisition of the land before Government finally decides upon its acquisition. In the statement of objects and reasons in connection with his Bill, Mr. Ramayya stated that his object was to provide against "unlawful or vexatious acquisition of land." He stated that in his part of the country, i.e., in the Madras Presidency, this evil was felt as a real grievance, and while introducing his Bill, he specifically mentioned, in course of his speech, cases where private individuals who wanted to have channels cut through another's land for purposes of irrigating their own fields, applied to the Public Works Department for acquisition of lands for purposes of such channels, and the Public Works Department often took it upon themselves to acquire lands for such purposes under the Land Acquisition Act, for the sake of private individuals and at their expense. Mr. Ramayya added that this had been done in a large number of cases without the aggrieved party having any remedy whatever against a wrong application of the Act made at this initial stage of the proceedings. He has mentioned cases also where land has been acquired by Government for building temples and mosques on them, Government contributing only one anna towards the cost of acquisition, the main cost being borne by the party interested in the acquisition.

Speaking of other parts of India cases may also be cited where the Land Acquisition Act has been made use of for an alleged purpose which cannot be deemed to be public; or at any rate which makes its utility for the public at large, extremely doubtful. In the course of the debate in the Legislative Assembly in 1894 in respect of the Bill which ultimately became Act I of 1894, the question was raised whether the expression "public purpose" to be found in sec. 6 and some other sections of the Act, should be defined or not. But, while the necessity for a definition of the expression was felt by some of the Executive Officers of Government engaged in the practical working of the Act, the Council, upon a consideration of the whole question, came to the conclusion that it would be better not to attempt any definition at all in that connection. At the instance, however, of the Governments of Bombay, the Punjab and Burma, a provision was made by the Select Committee, which is now sec. 3, cl. (f) of the Act, which enables the Local Government to apply the Act for the acquisition of village-sites in those parts of the country where it may be customary for the State to provide village-sites. At the same time, it was stated in the Select Committee's Report in question, (dated 23rd March 1893)—"the Committee are in concert with the great majority of the authorities consulted, in declining to recommend any further extension of the Act."

It will, perhaps, be interesting to recall the fact, that the Hon'ble Mr. Lee-Warner moved in course of the debate an amendment to the said provision in the Bill, [now sec. 3, cl. (f) of the Act], the object of which was to give a free hand to the Government to acquire land for village-sites whenever they considered it necessary to do so, irrespective of the existence of any custom or practice for the Government to provide such village-sites, as required by the said section. But there was a strong body of opinion including that of the highest authority in the realm, against the grant of such a discretionary power to the Executive Officers of Government on the ground, (to quote the Hon'ble Mr. Lee-Warner's words), of "the general principle of the policy of limiting the power of the executive to interfere with private property, and of the consideration that the sacred rights of property would be invaded, in the case put, for the benefit of a small community." This opinion of the majority prevailed by a narrow margin, and Mr. Lee-Warner's amendment was lost. It will thus appear how the Legislature, which passed the present Act intended to protect private rights of property in cases even where it was necessary to acquire land for public purposes. The general intention of the framers of the law seems to have failed, however, of its purpose in the long run, in the absence of anything in the Act itself controlling the expression "public purpose," in the practical application of the Act by Executive Officers of Government. The result of the course taken, has been sufficiently indicated by Mr. Ramayya in his speech referred to above while introducing his Bill in the Legislative Assembly during its last session.

From my own experience I can refer to at least one case which happens to be of a far more serious nature than those referred to by Mr. Ramayya, where the Executive Officer concerned has, in his zeal to save money, attempted to acquire land under colour of the Act, knowing perfectly well that the public purpose alleged in the declaration under sec. 6 was not the real purpose, but barter of land on terms favourable to Government.

Yet, in the face of all these happenings, sec. 6 of the Land Acquisition Act places a practically insuperable bar against an aggrieved party going behind the declaration and agitating any question of importance in his favour by enacting that "the said declaration shall be conclusive evidence, that the land is needed for a public purpose or for a company, as the case may be."

No further words are necessary to demonstrate the extreme necessity of having some provision in the Act whereby, in a proper case, the reality or otherwise of a public purpose set forth in the declaration, or as to the necessity for acquiring any particular piece of land for such a purpose, can be tested by an extraneous authority. As has been pointed out by Mr. Ramayya, the grievance that exists in this connection is very real indeed.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

25-7-22. Canadian appeals have monopolised the time of the Judicial Committee for several weeks now and it is doubtful whether the remainder of the Indian list will be cleared off this term.

On the 13th and 14th July the hearing was resumed and concluded of an appeal from Bombay, Nur Mohamed Pceerbhoy v. Dinshaw Hormasji Motiwalla.

Judgment has not yet been delivered.

The suit was for specific performance of a sale of land, the agreement for sale having been made pending attachment of the property in suit which was eventually sold at an execution sale.

The Appellant who was the purchaser was represented by Sir George Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes, the Respondent who was the Plaintiff was represented by Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown.

14-7-22. A Board composed of LORDS PHILLIMORE and CARSON, SIR JOHN EDGE, MR. AMIER ALA and MR. JUSTICE DUFF dismissed the appeal from Bengal of Bholanath Sen v. Balaram Das.

The suit out of which the appeal arose was a mortgage suit instituted by the Respondent. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for the debt alone, the High Court on appeal made a decree for sale in the ordinary form.

Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Appellant.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Respondent.

25-7-22. Before VISCOUNT CAVE, LORD PHILLIMORE and the LORD JUSTICE CLERK. Mr. W. H. Upjohn, K. C., Sir George Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. B. Dubé obtained special leave to appeal to the Privy Council from the decree of the High Court at Allahabad in the suit of Narsingh Rao & Rani Kishori.

Leave had been refused by the High Court on the ground that the Indian Courts had found concurrently on questions of fact.

For the Petitioner it was urged that further evidence became available after the decree of the High Court had been passed, and that the burden of proof had been wrongly placed.

In the suit of Lingangowda Dod v. Basangowda Bistangowda Patil, Mr. Kenworthy Brown obtained special leave to appeal from a decree of the High Court at Bombay. He contended that the High Court had erred in directing that the Appellant was out of time in applyinor for a certificate and indicated an important question of law with regard to "res judicata" on which the decision of the Privy Council was invited.

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before WALMSLEY and B. B. GHOSE, JJ. SECOND APPEAL No. 2492 OF 1919. MADAN TALUKDAR, Plaintiff-Appellant v. HACHAN FAKIR and others, Defendants-Respondents. The 10th July 1922.

Custom of oral sale--How far valid.

The Plaintiff sued for recovery of possession of two plots of lands against the Defendants Hachan and others, alleging that one of these plots belonged to him and the other he got by purchase and release from its former owner Mamtaz and that he had been dispossessed by Hachan from both these lands. Hachan's defence was that Madan orally contracted with the Respondent to sell to him that plot which belonged to Madan and that with regard to the other plot Hachan was a Bargadar under Sarat Fakir to whom it was orally sold by Mamtaz's guardian when Mamtaz was a minor. Hachan brought a separate suit for specific performance of contract for sale of the first plot and contended that there was not only an oral contract but there was an actual sale for Rs. 138 by custom, by delivery of possession. The first Court dismissed Hachan's suit and decreed the suit of Madan holding that there was not an oral sale. The Appellate Court reversed the decision of the first Court with regard to both the plots excepting a portion of Plot No. 979 holding that there was nothing improbable in an oral sale by custom in a particular locality.

Babu Momatha Nath Mukerji (with him Babu Panna Lall Chatterji) for the Appellant contended that there could not be an oral sale under the Transfer of Property Act.

Babu Satis Chandra Chowdhuri for the Respondents urged that with regard to Hachan's suit for specific performance of contract it was not a question of oral sale but of oral contract of sale and a suit for specific performance of such a contract was maintainable (Walsh v. Lansdale); as regards the other plot the Appellant was bound by the facts found by the first Appellate Court.

Held—That as a custom cannot override any statute law, the order of the Appellate Court as to Madan's suit must be set aside. But Hachan should be at liberty to enforce the decree of the Lower Appellate Court regarding his suit for specific performance.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MOOKERJEE and RANKIN, JJ. R. A. No. 161 OF 1922. KALIKRISHNA ROY and another, Appellants v. MAKHAN LAL CHATTERJEE, Respondent. The 10th August 1922.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), secs. 19, 21 and 22—A legatee if entitled to letters of administration in preference to heirs of the testator.

One Bidhumukhi Debi executed a Will whereby she gave, out of her stridhan property, Rs. 1,400 to several persons including Rs. 50 to one Makhanlal, the priest of her husband's family, and directed that the executor after paying the said amount (Rs. 1,400) and paying expenses for her Sradh, would spend the balance for the worship of the idol Sree Sree Iswar Lakshmi Janardan established by the ancestors of her husband. The executor was further directed to conduct the sheba of the idol by preserving the property dedicated for such sheba. The executor did not take any probate and after his death a cousin of the testatrix took out letters of administration. On his death Makhanlal, the priest, applied for letters of administration, which were granted to him. Subsequently the grandsons of the brother of the testatrix applied for the revocation of the grant on the ground that they were heirs of the testatrix and had no notice of the proceedings. It was decided by the Lower Court that Makhan was the residuary legatee and as such would have preference over the heirs.

Held—That Makhan was not entitled to get letters of administration. Makhan was simply a priest. He could not be a shebait nor a residuary legatee. The fact that he got Rs. 50 under the Will did not raise his status higher and he ought not to have been granted letters of administration.

K. RAMALINGA
ANNAVI and anr.,
Appellants,
v.
NARAYANA AN-
NAVI and ors.,
Respondents.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Partition, clear expression of intention to separate, if effects—After notice expressing intention to separate, joint family if liable for marriage expenses of members—Father's right to give money to daughter.

Under the Hindu law, it is open to the members of a joint family to make a division and a severance of interest in respect of a part of the joint estate whilst retaining their status as a joint family and holding the rest as the properties of a joint undivided family.

Under the law of the Mitakshara, an unambiguous and definite intimation of intention on the part of one member of the family to separate himself and to enjoy his share in severally has the effect of creating a division of the interest which until then he had held in jointness. No obligation therefore lay on the joint family to provide for the expenses of the marriage of some of the Plaintiffs which took place after the latter had given to their co-parceners a notice clearly expressing such an intention but before a decree for partition was made in their suit in the Court of first instance.

The father has undoubtedly the power under the Hindu law of making, within reasonable limits, gifts of moveable property to a daughter and in one case the Judicial Committee upheld the gift of a small share of immovable property on the ground that it was not shown to be unreasonable.

These were two consolidated appeals from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated the 19th April 1915, which varied a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Tinnevely, dated the 23rd December 1912, in a partition suit instituted by Narayana Annavi and his sons Ramakrishna Subramanian and Krishnan.

The pedigree of the family and the facts leading up to the institution of the suit are fully set out in the judgment of the Board.

The three brothers, Muthuswami, Ramalinga and Lakshmivaraha constituted a joint Hindu family. Their uncle Raman adopted Ramalinga's son Ananthanarayana and the latter's widow Ramal-Ammal adopted Ramakrishna (Defendant No. 2). This adoption was declared invalid by the Court in a suit instituted in 1863 but Ramal continued in possession of her husband's property until her death in 1891.

The Plaintiffs in the present suit were Lakshmivaraha's son and grandsons, and they claimed a half share in all the suit properties, which consisted of, outstanding debts of the family money-lending business, and of houses, lands, and jewels.

The present Appellants K. Ramalinga Annavi and Dharmi Ammal in their written statements stated that the joint family had been broken up in 1895 when a complete partition was effected of everything partitioned, some few immoveables which were incapable of severance being merely retained under joint management.
They further contended that although Ramakrishna's adoption had been declared invalid he had nevertheless become incapacitated from sharing equally with the Appellant (Defendant No. 1).

The Subordinate Judge held that there was no complete partition in 1895 although the money-lending business was then wound up and the outstandings divided and he decided that Ramakrishna was entitled to his share on partition. Properties acquired jointly after 1895 were divisible in proportion to the purchase money paid.

K. RAMALINGA ANNAVI v. NARAYANA ANNAVI.

The High Court affirmed the finding that the family remained joint after 1895 but held that the Plaintiffs were entitled to a half share in the after acquired properties while the first Defendant took a fourth and the remaining fourth went to the second Defendant and his son.

Sir George Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. B. Dubé for the Appellants (Defendants Nos. 1 and 6).—In 1895 there was a partition—whether wholly or in part, it was at any rate an actual partition of all choses in action and an agreement was made to hold the immoveables in severalty. The adoption of Ramakrishna is accepted by the family as invalid so far as his rights of property are concerned but ceremonially they treat him as a member of the family and this accounts for the somewhat unusual form of partition.

As regards Defendant No. 2 the fact that property was sold to him in 1888 by his father is inconsistent with his being a member of the joint family. Moreover he resided separately. Both lower Courts have held that there was an actual separation in 1895 as to three choses in action and the Subordinate Judge has found in my favour in three other instances. He referred to Parbati Devi v. Naunihal Singh (3).

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for Narayana Annavi and his two sons.—Ex. IX on which the Appellant relies is by no means conclusive.

The fact that although it was divided up the property came back again to the joint family shows that it was always intended to be joint.

Both Courts have found that the family status was never changed.

If a member of a joint family acquires property while the family is joint there is a presumption that the acquisition was for the joint family. That presumption has never been rebutted.

Parbati Devi v. Naunihal Singh (3) is not in point. Ex. IX was not signed by me and there was no agreement here.

There may have been a partial division of the property in 1895 but that does not amount to a partition as the corporate character of the family was never dissolved.

Munni Ram Awasty v. Sheo Churn Awasty (4).

Reference was also made to Hyder Hossein v. Mahomed Hossain (5), Eshenchunder Singh v. Shamachurn Bhatlo (6) and Baboo Doorga Pershad v. Mussumat Kundun Koowar (7).

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Narasimham for Ramakrishna Annavi (Defendant No. 2).—Contended that he was entitled to share in the joint family property as a member of the joint family since his adoption had been held to be invalid. There was no power to make the gift to Ponnu.

Bachho Hurkissondas v. Mankorebai (8).

Mr. R. M. Parikh for Ponnu Ammal was not called upon.

MR. AMEER ALI.—These two consolidated appeals from a decree of the High Court of Madras arise out of a suit which was brought by the Plaintiffs in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tinnevely on the 31st January 1910, for a decree for partition in respect of certain moveable and immoveable properties together with outstandings of a money-lending business on the allegation that they and the Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 formed members of a joint undivided Mitakshara family. The following pedigree will explain the relative positions of the parties and their respective contentions.

For the convenience of reference Krishna Annavi at the head of the table may be called Krishna No. 1 and his grandson, the son of Ramalinga, as Krishna No. 2. Krishna Annavi No. 1 had two brothers, Raman and Subramania, who had separated from him in his life-time; and on his death his three sons, Muthuswami, Ramalinga and Lakshmivaraha, with their sons, continued to hold and deal with their properties as members of a joint family. Ramalinga had five sons, whose names are given in the pedigree. One of them Anantha was adopted by Raman Annavi. On his death, somewhere in the sixties, his widow Ramal Ammal purported to adopt Rama Krishna, her deceased husband's brother, as a son to him. This adoption was held by the Courts to be invalid under the Hindu law as one brother cannot adopt another as his son.

Ramal, however, remained in possession of Anantha's property until her death in 1891, when it was divided among his reversionary heirs of whom the three sons of Krishna Annavi No. 1 were the principal sharers. Subramania, the fourth son of Ramalinga, appears to have died without issue, leaving Lakshmi Ammal, his widow, who is Defendant No. 5. Rama Krishna's adoption having been set aside, he remained a member of his branch of the family and is now constituted as Defendant No. 2 in the present action for partition. His son, Ramalinga No. 2, is joined with him as Defendant No. 3. Defendant No. 1 is the son of Krishna No. 2, the second son of the first Ramalinga who died in 1909. The Defendant No. 1 was an infant at the time of suit and appears by his mother, Defendant No. 6. Muthuswami died in 1898, and Lakshmivaraha in 1909. The Plaintiff

No. 1 is the son of Lakshmi-varaha and the other two Plaintiffs are Lakshmi-varaha's grandsons. Besides the immoveable property the family held from the time of Krishna No. 1 and what they acquired after Ramal Ammal's death, they appear to have carried on a profitable money-lending business. Ramalinga had assigned to Rama Krishna (Defendant No. 2) certain properties, apparently owing to the failure of his adoption. Lakshmi-varaha had also in his life-time made certain gifts to his daughter, Ponnu Ammal, Defendant No. 4, the first Plaintiff's sister. The Plaintiffs' case is that these assignments and gifts are ineffective and inoperative, and they seek to have the properties assigned to Defendant No. 2 as above and the monies given to Defendant No. 4 by Lakshmi-varaha, included in the partition. And they allege that they are entitled to a half share; and the Defendant No. 1 and the Defendant No. 2 (with his son) to the other half. The Plaintiffs also claim that in the partition a sum of Rs. 2,000 should be allotted to them out of the joint assets for the marriages of the second and third Plaintiffs. The Defendant No. 6 is the mother of the minor Defendant No. 1 and the widow of Krishna No. 2. She is made a party to the action, on the allegation that she has appropriated to her own use a large amount of joint family funds.

In 1895, which was the crucial period in the case, there were large outstandings due to the family in respect of the money-lending business which appears to have been mainly in the hands of Krishna, the father of Defendant No. 1, as he was a man of intelligence and knew something of law. The first Defendant alleges in his written statement that in that year there was a complete division among the three brothers, the sons of Krishna No. 1, of the family properties both moveable and immoveable, including the outstandings. He accordingly maintained that the present suit for partition is unfounded. He also denied the right of the Defendant No. 2 to any share in the family properties. His case is set forth clearly in para. 14 of his written statement as follows:—

“About 16 or 17 years ago, during the life-time of Muthuswami Annami, Lakshmi-varaha Annami and Ramalinga Annami mentioned in para. 4 of the plaint, they became divided. At that time, considering the facts that since the 2nd Defendant's adoption had been adjudged to be invalid, some provision should be made for him and that the said Muthuswami Annami was unmarried and childless, and considering the welfare of the family, Rs. 5,000 was given to Muthuswami Annami in lieu of his share and a sum of Rs. 20,000 was given to the 2nd Defendant out of the remaining outstandings only. And it was settled that the father of the 1st Plaintiff and the grandfather of the 1st Defendant should equally divide between themselves the rest of the outstandings as well as the immoveable properties and they gave effect to it even during their life-time.”

Defendant No. 2, in his written statement, alleges that in 1895 the money-lending business carried on by the joint family was wound up so far as it was a joint business, and the outstandings which belonged to the joint family were divided among the different members; but that the immoveable property was not divided, nor was there a disruption of the joint family. He claims that the properties which stood in his name prior to 1895 and what he himself has acquired since belong to him exclusively. Defendant No. 4 asserted that the gifts to her were valid and could not be questioned by the Plaintiffs.

Defendant No. 5, widow of Subramania, claimed that provision should be made for her maintenance in the partition proceedings.

Upon these contentions twenty-six issues were raised for trial in the first Court. For the purpose of the present judgment, however, they resolved themselves into four main questions: (1) Whether, as the Plaintiff alleges, the family continued joint until its severance on the institution of the suit, or as the High Court seem to hold on the decree of the Subordinate Judge directing partition; (2) whether, as the first Defendant alleges, there was a complete partition between all the members of the joint family in 1895; (3) whether the second Defendant was a member of the joint family and entitled to take a share on partition; and (4) whether the properties acquired after 1895, were held jointly, as the Plaintiffs allege, or whether they were acquired and held by the members according to specific shares in proportion to the contributions made by each towards their acquisition. To these main questions should be added the following subsidiary points for determination, viz: (1) Whether the Defendant No. 2 was entitled, as he alleges, to the properties which were held in his name before 1895 and those he personally acquired after that date; (2) whether the gifts by Lakshmivahara to Ponnu Ammal are valid; and (3) whether the Plaintiff Narayana was entitled to have certain sums allotted to him on partition for the marriage of his sons?

The Subordinate Judge, on the consideration of the oral and documentary evidence, decided against the Plaintiffs in respect of his allegation that the family continued absolutely joint in all respects until the present claim. As regards the first Defendant's contention, he held that there was no complete partition in 1895, and that the arrangement in that year related only to the winding up of the family money-lending business and to the division of the outstandings. He held that there was no disruption of the joint status and that they continued undivided in respect of all the immoveable property, though the houses which each of the members occupied were allotted to the parties occupying the same. He held further that the Defendant No. 2 was entitled upon partition to his share in the joint property, and that the properties that had been held in his name prior to 1895, together with those he had acquired since, belonged to him. He held also that the properties which had been acquired after 1895 in individual names belonged to the particular person in whose name it was purchased; but that the properties which were acquired by the parties jointly were divisible in three parts in proportion to the purchase money paid by each, or where that was not indicated in proportion to the shares in the rents and issues enjoyed by each. With regard to the gifts to Ponnu Ammal by Lakshmivahara, he held them to be valid; and in respect of the claim of the Plaintiff No. 1 to have a sum of Rs. 1,000 set apart for each of his sons' marriage he held it to be untenable.

Respecting the properties in Schs. XI and XIII attached to the plaint, which the Plaintiffs had claimed as exclusively their own and in their possession, the trial Judge, towards the end of his judgment, said as follows:—

"As to the properties in plaint Schedules XI and XIII, there is no evidence on Plaintiffs' side to show that they belong to the family. Defendants 1 and 2 do not claim any right in them. If the Plaintiffs are in possession of these properties exclusively, they may enjoy them. They will be excluded from the decree."

These properties were, accordingly, not included in the decree for partition made in the first Court.

The Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court from this decision, and the Defendant No. 1 preferred a cross-appeal and one of the contentions he raised had reference to the properties in Schs. XI and XIII. It was alleged on his behalf that the Subordinate Judge was in error in holding that the first Defendant did not claim any right to them; and it was further urged that if, by any omission on the part of his guardian, no claim in fact had been preferred, he should not be prejudiced thereby. This contention was supported by an affidavit. Their Lordships will deal with this point later, after they have considered the conclusions at which the learned Judges of the High Court arrived on the main facts of the case. They have held that the claim of the Plaintiffs that the family remained joint in every respect after 1895 was well founded; and that in 1895 only three specific items of the outstandings were divided among the parties jointly entitled to the same. They held further, differing from the first Court, that although the properties acquired after 1895 in individual names belonged exclusively to the person in whose name they stood, those that had been acquired in joint names were divisible in three shares as acquisitions by members of a joint family. In other words, the learned Judges held that in these after-acquired properties, as in the ancestral immoveable properties left undivided in 1895, the Plaintiffs were entitled to a half share, the first Defendant to a one-fourth, and the second Defendant, with his son (Defendant No. 3), to the remaining one-fourth. They affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge in respect of the claim of Defendant No. 2 and upheld the validity of the gifts to Ponnu Ammal. Regarding the claim of the Plaintiffs to have separate provision made for the marriages of the second and third Plaintiffs, they disallowed it in respect of the Plaintiff No. 3, but allowed it in respect of Plaintiff No. 2, as he was married after the institution of the suit but before the decree of the Subordinate Judge; they being of opinion that the severance of the joint status did not take place until the decree for partition by the first Court.

With regard to the properties in Schs. XI and XIII, they held, apparently on the affidavit filed by Defendant No. 1, as follows:—

“The Plaintiffs claim a share of the properties in Schedules XI and XIII. The Defendants did not claim in the Lower Court any interest in them. On the ground that the Plaintiffs did not prove them to be properties belonging to the family, the suit was dismissed. We think the properties should be divided between the parties. The decree will be modified accordingly.”

They accordingly modified the decree of the Subordinate Judge and further directed that:—

“According to our findings, the houses and Manaikats, which belonged to the family in 1895-1896 will be divided as family properties. All parties bear their own costs.”

The High Court made their decree on the 29th April 1915. On the 28th March 1917, there was an application on behalf of the Plaintiffs for review of the judgment. And on the fresh arguments advanced on the review, the learned Judges amplified and enlarged their findings in favour of the Plaintiffs and made a decree in accordance with these findings. From this decree these two appeals have been preferred to His Majesty in Council, one on behalf of the first Defendant, the other on behalf of the Plaintiffs and both appeals, as already stated, have been consolidated.

The concurrent finding of the Courts in Indja that the family continued joint after the division of the outstandings in 1895 and remained in joint possession and enjoyment of the ancestral immoveable properties is not impugned now; but the decision of the High Court in respect of the transaction of 1895 is strongly challenged on behalf of the first Defendant, the son of Krishna No. 2. It is contended on his behalf that the conclusion of the High Court that in 1895, only three specific items of the outstandings were divided is against the weight of evidence and inconsistent with the general scheme of the transaction. And it is urged that the reasoning on which the division is supported in respect of the three items, applies with equal force to all the other items. It is also urged that the view the Judges of the High Court took in respect of the shares of the parties in the acquisitions made after 1895 is not in accordance with the evidence and does not proceed on right inferences from the facts.

On the Plaintiffs' side it has been contended that as it is found that the family continued to be joint, the division of the respective interest of the parties in certain outstandings in 1895 could not affect the business as a whole : or discharge the properties acquired with the monies so divided from the obligations that attached to them as acquisitions of the joint family. The Plaintiffs have also re-urged their objections to the gifts to Ponnurammal and pressed their claim to a provision for the marriages of the Plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3.

It seems to their Lordships that in the debate before the Board the difference between a complete "partition" in a joint undivided Hindu family and a partial division of interest in respect of some specific property or part of the joint properties has been overlooked. This distinction has been clearly pointed out in the judgment of Lord Westbury in the well-known case of Appovier v. Rama Subba Aijan (1), and, although the passage has often been cited, it is desirable to reproduce it here.

"But when the members of an undivided family agree among themselves with regard to particular property, that it shall thenceforth be the subject of ownership, in certain defined shares, then the character of undivided property and joint enjoyment is taken away from the subject-matter so agreed to be dealt with; and in the estate each member has thenceforth a definite and certain share, which he may claim the right to receive and to enjoy in severalty, although the property itself has not been actually severed and divided."

It will thus be seen that, under the Hindu law, it is open to the members of a joint family to make a division and a severance of interest in respect of a part of the joint estate whilst retaining their status as a joint family and holding the rest as the properties of a joint undivided family.

Both the Courts in India held as a question of fact that whatever took place in 1895, did not create a disruption of the family status. The Subordinate Judge found upon the evidence in the case that the worship had remained joint. The parties undoubtedly lived in separate dwellings, but that circumstance is explained by the fact that the family had increased in number and the original building could not accommodate all. The Subordinate Judge also points out that there was no cesser of commensality, inasmuch as all the members of the family drew their provisions from one store-room or granary as stated in the evidence.

The sole question for determination thus resolves itself into an enquiry as to the character of the division which took place in 1895-1896. Was it a mere division of three items of outstandings, or did it relate to the whole money-lending business as a joint family business? The Defendant No. 1, in support of his allegation that there was a complete winding up of the family money-lending business and a complete division of the outstandings has rested his case on Ex. IX on the record, which is a list of outstandings due to the family at that time. That list covers 27 items and consists of 4 parts; Part 1 deals with the actual outstandings, the other three deal with the allotment of the shares to the three persons who were entitled to the monies at the time and among whom, after allotment of a large sum to Defendant No. 2, the outstandings were divided. It begins with the statement: "List of outstandings due to the sons of Krishna Annavi," and goes on to say, "particulars of the total amount belonging and due to Muthuswami, Ramalinga and Lakshmivaraha, sons of Krishna Annavi"; List 2 shows the sums set apart for a certain worship; List 3 gives the particulars of the monies allotted to Muthuswami, the eldest brother; List 4 contains the particulars regarding the sum of Rs. 32,039 allotted to the share of Ramalinga; List 5 relates to the allotment of Rs. 32,038 to the share of Lakshmivaraha; and List 6 shows the particulars relating to the Rs. 21,359 allotted to Defendant No. 2. With regard to the method of division the Subordinate Judge states as follows:—

"The 1st Defendant's case is that, as Muthuswami Annavi was unmarried, he took Rs. 5,073 out of this amount and that in lieu of the 2nd Defendant's share in the family immoveable properties, he was given Rs. 21,359-14-10. A sum of Rs. 1,000 was reserved for payment as Stridhanam (to whom, it is not stated) and a sum of Rs. 524 was set apart for charity. A sum of Rs. 500 was reserved for payment of family debts. The balance, Rs. 64,000 and odd, was divided almost equally between Lakshmivaraha Annavi and Ramalinga Annavi. The total amount of outstandings set apart to Ramalinga Annavi consisting of 37 items as stated in sheet 6 of Ex. IX came to Rs. 32,039-

5-9. The total of outstandings set apart to Lakshmivaraha Annavi consisting of 26 items as stated in the 7th sheet of Ex. IX came to Rs. 32,038-10-11. The particulars of the outstandings set apart to the 2nd Defendant, Ramakrishna Annavi, are given in sheet 8 of Ex. IX. The particulars of the three items, amounting to Rs. 5,073, set apart to Muthuswami Annavi are given in the 5th sheet of Ex. IX. Ex. IX (a) purports to be the rough draft from which Ex. IX was copied."

Out of the amounts which were allotted to Ramalinga and Lakshmivaraha, the Subordinate Judge took the six principal items in order to consider the nature of the division and the circumstances connected with the subsequent application of the monies received in the transaction of 1895 by the individual members. His examination of the facts is so close and his method of treatment so clear and detailed that their Lordships feel themselves relieved of the necessity of discussing at length the mode in which the parties dealt with the different items; but a few remarks seem necessary to indicate the considerations which have weighed with their Lordships in the determination of these appeals. The largest amount shown in the list is a sum of Rs. 22,150, which was owing from a Mutt in the Tanjore District. The division of this sum was made in the following way: Rs. 8,700 were allotted to Ramalinga, Rs. 8,300 to Lakshmivaraha and Rs. 5,150 to the second Defendant. After stating these facts the Subordinate Judge proceeds to show how this money came into the hands of the persons, to whom the several sums were allotted and how these sums were applied. With regard to this amount of Rs. 22,000 the learned Judges of the High Court agree with the Subordinate Judge that the division was effective and the various sums allotted to the three parties was applied

Position of Civil Service under responsible Government.

Mr. Lloyd George in advocating the cause of the Indian Civil Service overstepped the mark and made some observations which are inconsistent with the fundamental principles of responsible Government. Responsible Government means that the executive shall be responsible to the legislature. In the provinces in India under the "dyarchical" form of Government, the ministers are responsible to the legislature. The members of the Executive Council, though not individually or collectively directly responsible to the legislature, are also in a manner indirectly responsible. As the whole of the provincial budget is open to discussion by the Legislative Council and may be voted upon by the members, the legislature indirectly exercises control over the acts and measures of the members of the Executive Council. It is only by certification that the Governor can restore the grants so withheld. The executive head of the Government never likes to be at loggerheads with the legislature. If he does he is bound to come into conflict with the legislature, and in such conflicts, the legislature is bound ultimately to win. Dyarchy has been introduced in the provinces as a transitory measure. At the next stage of development the Executive Council is bound to go. What would then be the position of the Indian Civil Service in the Provinces? They will cease to be a part of the executive and they will be entirely replaced by ministers as has been the case in the Dominions.

If some of them occupy the position of secretaries, they are bound to be under the direction of the ministers. Others in less responsible positions are also bound to be subordinates of the ministers. So the members of the Civil Service with the development of responsible Government in the provinces and later on, in the Central Government are bound to be reduced to the position of subordinate ministerial officers as they are in England and the Dominions. So Mr. Lloyd George's talk of their being the steel-frame on which the constitutional superstructure would rest is neither logical nor rational. It is mere figure of speech which we are not at all disposed to take very seriously. In no country has a structure of constitutional Government been built with such materials. Should the pushing Premier attempt any such experiment, the structure will go to pieces in no time through the pressure of public opinion in India. The Prime Minister is well-known to juggle in words and he does so sometimes to please the people of India and at other times the Indian Civil Service. But, we are sure, that neither take him very seriously. The O'Donnell circular is a much more serious and a reasonable document. The spirit of it, so far as we have been able to follow, is that as the provinces advance towards autonomy, they would prefer to organise provincial services for being self-contained and also for purposes of economy. Then there will be very little occasion for having All-India Services. So the Indian Civil Service is bound to die out in the natural course of events. Not all the eloquence of Mr. Lloyd George will be able to save it.

The present Prime Minister is a great time-server and he makes speeches to please those who can influence the colleagues of his Cabinet to bring pressure on him. In 1917 when the fate of the war was hanging in the balance, when London was in panic through frequent air-raids and the present imperialist members of the Cabinet were as conscious as every commoner in England that the war could not be won but for the help of India, Mr. Lloyd George and his colleagues were profuse in their promises for the grant of responsible Government to India. But after the war was won they have taken to quibbling over their promises and professions. Mr. Lloyd George has pursued exactly the same policy with regard to Turkey and the Moslem community in India. The more sensible section of the intellectual classes in England do not put more faith in Mr. Lloyd George's policy than we do here. Persistence in it will only mean disaster to the Empire. Since Mr. Montagu's resignation, the influence of the Sydenham party has been paramount in the British Cabinet and that would account for the irresponsible talk that the Prime Minister indulged in on the occasion of the Civil Service debate in the House of Commons.

The recent article on "Indian Problems" by Coles Pasha, C.M.G., in the June number of the Contemporary Review, shows what men who have more intimate knowledge of the East think of the Prime Minister's Indian and Eastern policy. The learned writer, referring to Mr. Montagu's resignation, thinks that it has raised him in the estimation of the Moslem leaders in India and any change of his policy by Viscount Peel will be regarded with suspicion throughout India. Then he goes on to say :—

But no matter what India may think of Mr. Montagu, statesmen like Lord Sydenham, and other Imperialists cannot forgive him for the part he played in the introduction of the Indian Reform Act, which they maintain is largely, if not entirely, responsible for the existing unrest. On the other hand, there are many, claiming to know their India equally well, who hold that but for Mr. Montagu and his reforms, our position in India would be even more critical than it is at present. Again, there are not a few who are convinced that the mishandling of the Turkish Treaty has brought about all our troubles, not only in India but throughout the Mohamedan world.

The above fairly sums up the different shades of English public opinion regarding Indian problems. In the same article the learned writer says that it is the Prime Minister and not the Cabinet who is chiefly responsible for the Turkish Treaty and it is he and not Mr. Montagu who is responsible for Indian unrest. He says :—

Although the Cabinet must be held to be collectively responsible for the Turkish Treaty, it is the Prime Minister, hypnotized by Venzeloos, who took the leading part in drawing up the conditions, forcing his views, as we now learn, on both the French and Italian Governments. We may safely conclude, therefore, that as far as the Indian Moslems are concerned, it is Lloyd George and not Mr. Montagu who is responsible for the Indian unrest.

The learned writer views the situation in the right perspective, and although we are not prepared to accept his suggestions as the best means of doing away with the dual control at present exercised by the Indian Legislatures and the Indian Civil Service, yet there can be no question that with the growth of responsible Government in India, the duties of the Indian Civil Service will be, as he says, "clerical rather than governmental." The observations of this eminent writer will show how absurd is Mr. Lloyd George's steel-frame theory of the Indian Civil Service :—

In the not very distant future the duties of the Indian civilian will be clerical rather than governmental as much of the work now performed by the Civil Service will be in the hands of the elected politicians. It may possibly be necessary to create, as in England, a "superior" and "inferior" Civil Service, but in a poor country like India the cadre of the "superior" service should certainly not correspond with the cadre of the existing Indian bureaucracy, which was framed to attract highly educated Britishers to pass a long period of their lives in foreign and not too healthy surroundings. Rather than encourage Indians to enter the existing covenanted service it would be far better to create a new service with a cadre calculated to meet the new conditions; to this newly created service Indians only should be admitted. At the same time, recruiting for the covenanted service might be limited, and reserved exclusively for Britishers who may be required to fill gaps during the transition stage, and the young men joining should be given clearly to understand to what an extent the service has been modified and what the future has in store for them. Every encouragement should be given to men actually serving to complete their periods of service, as India now requires experienced men to teach and inspect rather than young men for executive duties. It will assist if certain districts were reserved exclusively for Britishers, rather than mix British and Native executive officers in every unit. By this means the younger men can still learn their work, whilst the senior men's services can be utilised as Inspectors in districts officered entirely by natives. The Government is apparently afraid to publish the names of the civilians who are asking to go and the Press deplors the fact that so few British students are now offering to compete. This is not surprising, as little has been done to encourage the older men to remain, and the young civilians going out to India may find themselves posted to a district with constantly increasing numbers of native executive officers as their sole companions for hours of recreation or sport during the rainy season. What is required is a well-thought-out scheme of service during the transition stage, a scheme which will give the British civilians much congenial occupation for many years to come, until in fact the old order has entirely passed away.

It is not for a moment contended that India of the future will be better governed than it has been by the Covenanted Civil Service of the past, but as we are pledged to follow the policy of Home Rule, it seems to be idle now to argue that the Indians will in the long run be the sufferers. Let them find it out for themselves. At the same time it should be clearly demonstrated by both word and deed that the initiative rests with the British Government. We should refuse to be stampeded by Gandhis or allow the clock to be stopped by Die-hards who will not recognise that nations grow up as children and prefer to walk by themselves even if they occasionally fall.

His answer to the opponents of Indian Reforms in England on the ground that it has set up an oligarchy, is also very suggestive and interesting. He goes on to say :—

It is these Die-hards who are loudest in their condemnation of the Montagu Reform Act, which they maintain merely transfers our control to an oligarchy largely composed of Brahmins, and that in reality the masses are no nearer self-government than they were before Mr. Montagu went out of his way to stir up their peaceful slumbers. These gentlemen, however, fail to realise that governments cannot be anything else but oligarchies, sometimes composed of Liberals, sometimes of Conservatives, and probably in England in the near future, of Labour. The sole advantage which we in England possess is that there is always an alternative oligarchy ready at hand. When the "man in the street" gets fed up with the one he can by his vote select another, but an oligarchy of some sort he must accept, whether he likes it or not. Hitherto in India the native oligarchy has always been in opposition and has never had a chance of demonstrating its capacity to govern. In the future the trouble will be that, for some time at all events, there will be no opposition oligarchy to come to the assistance of the man in the mud-hut when he feels that the governing oligarchy is not giving him all that he is entitled to. Time and experience will remedy this, but it seems clear that until you have a native Government of some description you cannot expect a native opposition. The solution of the problem lies in creating a government oligarchy, but fostering at the same time an opposition oligarchy to keep the government oligarchy from abusing its powers. Moreover, until this opposition oligarchy is capable of taking care of the interests of the underdog, the powers of the government oligarchy must be restricted by the paramount Power. This Mr. Montagu endeavoured to do by creating the Dyarchy form of government—another way would have been by the reservation of power, taking a horizontal rather than a vertical form, and creating a nominated Chamber of Council to control the Lower House composed of elected members. This, in the opinion of the writer, would have been the better method, and it is interesting to note that, if we may judge from the reports in the Press, it is the method the Egyptian Commission revising their constitution is adopting. It is sincerely hoped that the Egyptian experiment will succeed, but fostering the opposition must not be lost sight of, even to the length of recalling Zaghlul Pasha (contrite, let us trust) to lead the opposition. Such a precedent might prove of value to India when the followers of Gandhi drop the non-co-operation movement.

LAND ACQUISITION BILL.

The question therefore at once arises what should be the machinery for testing the matter? Mr. Ramayya's Bill has no doubt been adversely commented upon from different view points. It has been allowed, by the Government of Bengal, however, that there is no provision in the Act for checking an improper acquisition, and that they would like to have a definition of the expression "public purpose" if legislation was to proceed on the lines indicated by Mr. Ramayya in his Bill, but, at the same time they have gone the length of saying that so far as they are aware, there is no real grievance in Bengal on this account. It is no wonder that the grievance should fail to attract the attention or notice of the superior officials of Government because sec. 6 of the Act stifles all scrutiny of the matter by any constituted extraneous authority, at the instance of the aggrieved party, and it is extremely unlikely that the subordinate officials who bring about such cases of improper acquisitions of land, should whether they consider their proceedings to be right or wrong, themselves go out of their way, and bring forward irregularities of their own creation to the notice of Government. As a rule, therefore, the illegality or impropriety of an acquisition, wherever it exists, lies buried in the forgotten pages of the office records.

Rules no doubt have been made for the guidance of executive officers of Government in the matter of acquisition of land for a public purpose, as in other matters, but it is unlikely that the rules themselves should lay down anything that is not in the body of the statute itself or should go to clear up doubts which may enshroud cases on the border line. The officers of Government entrusted with an undertaking, have also the inclination of their own minds to reckon with which tend to reduce uniformity of principle in the practical application of the Act.

It has been stated by an officer under the Bengal Government, just as it was said when the Bill of 1894 was under discussion that "the best test of a public purpose would be one which would justify the expenditure of public funds," and therefore a Local Government would be the best judge in the matter. For one thing, is this not arguing in a circle? Rules and good intentions notwithstanding, experience tends to shew that unless there is some extraneous authority to test, in a suitable case, whether there has been an error or not in their application in practice, lapses are bound to occur with greater frequency, and once a precedent is created, it will tend to create fresh precedents, and the provisions of the Act, interpreted in this manner will, unless otherwise checked, go to undermine what has been described as the "sacred rights of property." Further, the executive officers having once launched upon an undertaking of doubtful public purpose, are not likely to retrace their steps, and stultify themselves, as it were, by so doing. One is thus able to see how the chances stand.

Suppose W, X, Y and Z are properties which are situate side by side. W is acquired for the purposes of Government in one branch of the administration which may be described by the letter A. Declarations are issued separately for the acquisition of properties X, Y and Z, on different dates, for purposes of another administration B. But further proceedings are thereafter suspended for some two or three years. During this period of suspension circumstances change, and property Z with other properties are given up and withdrawn for acquisition under the altered circumstances, under the new conditions. W is also no longer necessary for the purposes of administration B, but is retained by Government, along with X and Y. Some five or six years after the original declaration under sec. 6, suppose the Collector under the Land Acquisition Act proposes that in order to save payment in respect of the valuable structures and other things on property Y, let property Z be again acquired putting forth in the declaration that it is wanted for purposes of administration A, but in reality to make over X to the proprietor of Y at a valuation, in exchange for that part of Y on which there are valuable structures, etc., and induce administration B to give up X, for which administration it was declared to be under acquisition, and to take Z in place of X, though the administration B cannot put property Z to any use in the immediate future; and all this is to take place under private arrangement, in lieu of money compensation. By this means and under colour of the Land Acquisition Act, some lakhs of rupees are gained by Government. Will such a proceeding come under the expression "public purpose," under the Land Acquisition Act? All this seems strange, but truth is sometimes stranger than fiction.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

3-8-22. The Judicial Committee concluded the hearing to-day of the appeal from Lahore, Khawaja Muhammed Hamid v. Mian Mahmud, and their Lordships have now risen for the Long Vacation. The next sittings are expected to commence about October 17th.

The above appeal was argued before the Board for six days and raises questions of considerable interest with regard to the religious institution at Tannsa near Deva Ismail Khan. Muhammad Suleman came to Tannsa as a young man towards the close of the 18th century and was detained by the Pir of Mahor in Bhawalpur and lived as an ascetic and teacher until his death. His grandson Allah Buksh who was apparently a very business like as well as a saintly man, had a marble mosque erected at Tannsa, and a family tomb, and other costly buildings. These buildings and other property of considerable value had been acquired from offerings made by pilgrims and paddy from a trade and agricultural pursuit in which Allah Buksh interested himself. In September 1901 Allah Buksh died, having before his death ordained his sons Hafiz Mian Musa and Mian Mahmud. Disputes arose between these two as to the right of becoming Sajjada-Nashin and as to the partition of the property. The disputes were submitted to arbitration, but before they were finally settled Musa died, and disputes arose between his son, the Appellant and Mian Mahmud the 1st Respondent which ultimately resulted in the present suit. The main points in issue were as to the right to be Sajjada-Nashin, and whether the property in dispute had been dedicated as wakf or not.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., Besant Petman and Dubé for the Appellants.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C., Messrs. E. B. Raikes and A. Reshid for the Respondents.

Judgment was reserved.

Sir John Woodroffe, Kt.

Mr. Justice Woodroffe's retirement from the Bench of the Calcutta High Court is not only an irreparable loss to the High Court but also to the country at large. He was not only an eminent Judge but also an Orientalist of no small merit. In the earlier days of the British rule when Englishmen came out to India, they had, in the then conditions of locomotion, to adopt India as their second home. Those amongst them who were of an intellectual turn of mind took to studying Oriental literature and the world is indebted to many of them for adding to its fund of knowledge, ideas and thought. Jones, Colebrooke and Wilson studied Sanskrit with the help of Brahmin Pandits on this side of India and the pioneer work that they did for popularising Sanskrit study amongst European scholars will never be forgotten. The name of Sir John Woodroffe also will go down to posterity as of one who has not lived in India in vain. To young Woodroffe when he came out to India, India was not an alien country. His father Mr. J. T. Woodroffe, who spent the best part of his life in this country, served in various capacities from a Small Cause Court Judge to that of the Advocate-General of Bengal. His ability as an advocate was next to that of none at the Calcutta Bar, where he amassed a large fortune. Young Woodroffe after completing his education at Oxford, got called to the English Bar and came out and joined the Calcutta Bar in 1889. He never felt himself out of his element in India. He was descended on his mother's side from a European family long settled in India. His uncle Mr. Hume, the public prosecutor, was a familiar figure to many of us. Mr. J. G. Woodroffe, naturally, needed no introduction when he joined the Calcutta Bar. However talented a junior may be, he does not get on at the Bar as a house on fire. He was from the very start a very industrious, earnest and determined sort of a young man. When he had no Court work one found him quietly sitting at a corner of the inner room of the Bar Library compiling his "Law of Evidence." Such an industrious and plodding young man was bound to make headway at the Bar. In 1904, when still a junior of much promise and quite young in years, he was offered and accepted a Judgeship. It was a very wise choice on his part. But for it he could not have acquired the literary reputation he has. He is the author of many legal works, amongst which, his commentaries on the Evidence Act and the Code of Civil Procedure, and his treatise on the Law of Receivers and Injunction are best known. Those who knew him as a mere lawyer and a Judge, knew very little of him. It is only his friends who know that the artist, the philosopher, and to a certain extent, the spirit of the schoolman preponderated in him. For many years he made a special study of the Vedantas and the Tantras with the help of a Brahmin Pandit. He took special care to appreciate and interpret Hindu culture from its very fountain head. He deplored English educated Indians neglecting the great culture that their ancestors had attained in the different avenues of intellectual life and accepting the modern materialistic strife as the end of this mortal life. Although we did not always see eye to eye with him as an exponent of Hindu culture yet we always appreciated the sympathetic spirit with which he interpreted it to the world. People are apt to think that he was perhaps a recluse. But those who know him intimately know that he was far from it. He was of a very cheerful and lively disposition in his private life. The natural amiability of his character, his wide culture, his artistic and literary taste gathered round him a very wide circle of friends from every community and notably from amongst the intellectuals in Bengal. He was a great patron of Indian arts and crafts and made many valuable collections of them. We wish those amongst us who claim culture and education were equally keen about them.

As a Judge, he was eminently sound and always avoided the tendency so very common amongst crude lawyers of showing off his learning. He was always patient and courteous to members of the Bar and in his own quiet way extraordinarily independent on the Bench. At times his judgments ran counter to popular views of facts as in the Midnapur case. But we doubt whether in coming to the conclusions he did, he took a partisan view. We strongly commented on his judgment, and we have reasons to believe that our comments were resented by some of his colleagues but never by him. We had a laugh over the matter when we met afterwards. He was as keen about maintaining the independence of the judiciary and safe-guarding the fundamental rights and liberties of the subject as any other Judge as his judgment in Stallman's case will show. We wish him a happy and long life and a useful career. He is now only 57 years of age.

[SIR JOHN WOODROFFE.

AREWELL AT HIGH COURT.

Sir : Sir John Woodroffe was presented with a farewell address by the members of the Vakils' Association at the High Court on Thursday last. At eleven o'clock all the Judges assembled in the Chief Justice's Court which was packed with members of the various branches of the legal profession and the public.

Babu Basanta Coomar Bose, President of the Vakils' Association, read the address which was as follows :—

MY LORD—It is with feelings of the deepest regret that we, the Vakils of this Hon'ble Court, approach your Lordship to bid you farewell on the eve of your retirement from the Bench. During your connection with this Court first as an Advocate for 15 years and then as a Judge for 18 years, you have, by your suavity of manners, your attainments and, above all, your sympathy with the people of this country, earned the esteem and gratitude of all who came in contact with you. Your strong common sense and thorough knowledge of the principles of law, combined with your unfailing courtesy, strict impartiality, and an earnest desire to do justice, made you an exemplary Judge. Your retirement will be a decided loss to the High Court of Calcutta, nay, to the whole country. Amidst your arduous duties on the Bench, you have also found time to enrich legal literature by many valuable contributions, both as commentaries and as original works. We cannot on this occasion omit to express our grateful appreciation of the good work done by you to our country in other spheres of action. The Indian Society of Oriental Art which has recently secured the recognition of the Government will bear testimony to your solicitude in the cause of the neglected arts and crafts of the East and of Indian painting and sculpture. In the domain of religious philosophy, your labours have removed the ignorant obloquy from the Brahmanic Scriptures known under the name of the Tantras, and the erudition and scholarship you have brought to bear upon your exposition of this abstruse subject cannot fail to excite wonder and admiration even of those outside the Brahmanic fold. It is not possible to enumerate here all that you have done, but we cannot help mentioning one other matter, viz., the fearless impartiality with which you repelled the aspersions cast on the civilisation of India, with its historic past, and the thoroughness with which you have done it.

In conclusion, we beg to assure you that your large heart and even temper have earned for you the name of Ajata-Shatru. We heartily wish you a long happy and brilliant future—a future in which, we doubt not, you will make further contributions to the advancement of truth and to the welfare of India.

Mr. S. R. Das, Advocate-General, on behalf of the Bar associated himself with all that was stated in the address.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chatterji, President of the Incorporated Law Society, felt it a privilege and an honour to be associated with all that had been said.

The Chief Justice said : My learned brothers and I have already on another occasion expressed our sentiments towards Mr. Justice Woodroffe. It would not therefore be seemly for me to repeat that which we have already said to him. We are glad however to have this opportunity of associating ourselves with what has been said by those who have spoken on behalf of the different branches of the legal profession. It is with great regret that we regard the retirement of our learned brother not only from the personal point of view but also from the public point of view. His retirement will undoubtedly cause a great loss to the Court. We have however the confident assurance that though he personally will not be with us, the good work which he has done in the Court and in India will provide a fitting and a lasting memorial of a learned and an upright Judge. We join with you in wishing him many years of life, in which he may enjoy the repose, which he has so well earned.

Sir John Woodroffe said :— I thank you for the address with which you have honoured me. I am indeed sorry to leave a country in which I have lived the greater part of my life, that is for some thirty-three years and which is for this and other reasons a second home to me. Though circumstances compel me to retire, I am glad that I do so with a knowledge that my work as a Judge has satisfied you and that for those and other reasons I have your good wishes. If I have been able to carry on my judicial work it is because you have been my collaborators. I thank you for your help and courtesy. What I have done is with your assistance, for the relation of Bench and Bar is that of co-operators in the work of justice. You have also spoken of my work in the propagation of a right understanding of the great civilisation of India. This also is a work of justice though in another sphere. I have been moved to undertake it by reason of my affection for the country as also because of my great debt to it both material and intellectual. This is to use a Sanskrit term my "Arsha Rina." Justice is here also correct judgment, that is the discrimination of what is true and false, of what is worthy of praise or reprobation with complete impartiality and freedom from all racial, national and credal prejudice. What I owe to India cannot be fully expressed here. I thank you for your good wishes for my future which wishes I heartily reciprocate, trusting also that I am not to-day saying a last farewell to you and your country, but that I may see both in some neighbouring years. If unhappily this be not so, I will say good bye and with it I ask you to accept my good wishes and my thanks.

LAND ACQUISITION BILL.

Before coming to a consideration of the remedy which may go to meet the situation, attention may be invited to another aspect of the question, which also seems to require serious consideration. It is, that lands are sometimes acquired for a purpose mentioned in the official declaration, but it so happens that Government have no money in hand to carry out the project, and the land for this or some other reason, sometimes lies unused for years together, after being acquired. In the meantime, the value of land, specially in the vicinity of trade centres and in and about growing towns, goes up in many instances, and the original owner is deprived, in the name of some work of public utility which may not materialise in the near future, of the benefits which might have accrued to him from his possession thereof, by carrying on his business upon it, or otherwise. A feeling is sometimes present in official circles that where land, though it may not be put to some immediate use for the public, has the chance, at some later period, of being put to public use, it would be better for the sake of public economy that it should be acquired before prices go up. Those who entertain such an idea forget that Government has the absolute right under the law to compel a private owner to part with his property at a price to be determined practically by their own officers; and therefore, for the sake of safety of the private rights of property, commercial considerations should not enter into the matter at all. Such considerations would be permissible only if Government were carried on on communistic principles and not on principles which characterise British administration. I can refer to cases where lands were acquired, say 10 or 12 years ago, for the alleged purposes of accommodation of an existing Railway, but are still lying vacant, with only a chowkidar's shed on it.

This matter is one which has an intimate bearing on the second point mentioned at the outset. But in this connection again, the acquisition of all lands being centralised in the hands of Government, and companies organised for a definite purpose, (not being independently authorised in India to acquire lands for their own purposes, as they are in England by Acts of Parliament), the solution of the questions which arise in the practical application of the Act, becomes difficult from more than one point of view. There are special provisions in the English Statute (The Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts, 1845, 1860, 1869) whereby companies having surplus or superfluous lands are required by law to sell them within the prescribed period, or where no period is prescribed within ten years from the time limited by the Special Act in question and to apply the sale proceeds to the purposes of the Special Act in question; and in default thereof, all such superfluous lands remaining unsold at the expiration of such period must thereupon vest in and become the property of the owners of the land adjoining thereto, in proportion to the extent of their lands respectively adjoining the same, etc. A right of pre-emption is also given to the original owner. [Vide Secs. 127, 128, 129 and 130 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, (8 and 9 Vict. c. 18)]. By sec. 35 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, (8 and 9 Vict. c. 20), power is given to an owner to object on the ground that some other lands near by ought to be taken, being more fit for the purpose in view, and such an objection when raised has to be decided by two Justices of the Peace. Sec. 37 provides for procedure for the hearing of such objections.

REPORTS (See Index.)

The Premier's speech.

No one need regret the resolution moved in the Council of State by Professor Kale or the decision of the Council upon it. The resolution urged the Governor-General in Council to convey to the Secretary of State for India and through him to the Government of His Imperial Majesty an expression of the keen sense of apprehension and disappointment created in the public mind in India by the Premier's speech. No attempt was made even by European members, official as well as non-official, to conceal their view that the speech of the Premier was unfortunate and had better not been made. Sir William Vincent's speech was, like those of the Viceroy's before him, apologetic. The Premier, he said, had not the remotest idea of going back upon or withdrawing from the pledges, so often given and in circumstances of such solemnity, of assisting India in obtaining responsible government, which, he defined, was government responsible to the elected representatives. The Premier's speech he affirmed was not a threat as some people thought but a warning to a party hostile to Government and hostile even to the policy of winning responsible government for India which was embodied in the pledges now said to be jeopardised by the Premier's speech. To the complaint that the official interpretation of the Premier's speech left severely alone the passages which spoke of maintaining the rule of the Civil Service in perpetuity, Sir William replied that the question of the British services would solve itself with the growth of responsible government in India. "If," he said, "You once have the assurance that you are going to have responsible Government, then everything else must follow as a matter of course. The development of self-governing institutions is the declared goal and the tendency must be for the services to adjust themselves more and more to the new and altered conditions." The Civil Services, he assured the House, would always work for the success of the Reforms. Will they? This indeed is the crux of the whole situation; and but for the clamour raised in the supposed interests of these Services in England, the Premier's speech would never have seen the light of day. Sir Alexander Murray spoke more to the point when he said he regretted that the Premier should have taken advantage of a debate in the House of Commons on the Appropriation Bill to deliver himself of a speech so liable to misinterpretation and capable of mischief-making in this country. He attributed the speech roundly to the Premier's well-known, "gift of the gab (as they say in Scotland)" which led him beyond the specific point raised in the debate and indeed beyond his knowledge of recent changes in India, and he was of opinion that the sooner the unfortunate speech was allowed to sink into oblivion the better it would be for all concerned. The uneasiness, he added, with regard to the future of the services, their pay and pensions, which naturally arose as a result of great constitutional changes and the open hostility of a certain section of the Indians in the mind of those who had worked the old system had to be removed and it was with that object that the Premier made his speech. Professor Kale who was pressed by both these speakers to withdraw his resolution having declined to do so, the resolution was put and lost. The debate made it clear that in the opinion of the Council of State the pledge of the British Government to assist India in the way towards attaining responsible government holds, in spite of the Premier's speech, that the two quarters from which there was apprehension of an attempt to wreck the Reforms were the non-co-operators on the one hand and the disgruntled members of the British Services on the other, and the Council appears for the time being at any rate to have accepted Sir William Vincent's assurance that these Services as a whole were not inimical to the Reforms—and this perhaps may be taken to represent the general sense of the people of the country who have had the opportunity of studying the Viceroy's speeches taken along with that delivered in the course of the debate by the Home Member.

The issue of the debate on the Premier's speech in the Legislative Assembly was to outward appearance dissimilar to that reached in the Council of State; and reading it as reported in the papers, one cannot resist the inference that this was due mainly to the tone of the speeches delivered from the official bench. Sir William Vincent, according to the report, "deprecated the language used with reference to that great leader of men, the Premier of Great Britain, and said that to refer to him in that way was ungrateful on the part of the Assembly which owed its existence to his Government." "Was it fair," he continued in the same pedagogic vein, "that the Premier who had paid such compliments to the Assembly should be condemned by them in return;" and not content with this, he declared that the Assembly in condemning the speech would be "biting the hand that fed them." Sir William's assurances in the Assembly with regard to the Civil Service which went further than those he gave in the Council were apparently overlooked in the atmosphere created by these maladroit demands upon the gratitude of the Assembly towards the Premier personally. The Premier's reference to the Civil Service, the Home Member thought, was intended to guard against such a collapse of the executive machinery in India as had followed the sudden removal of the organised Civil Services in Russia and Austria. Otherwise, he added the policy of Indianisation stood where it was, and His Majesty's Government's decision to retain a substantial element of the British Civil Service was not intended to conflict with the policy of the increasing association of Indians in that Service. "The steel frame," Sir William said, "consists of steel made in England as well as in India, but it will have to be of approved capacity." Sir Malcolm Hailey gave sound advice when he said that the purpose of the House in expressing dissatisfaction over the general tenor of the Premier's speech had been served and it was not necessary to express it in the form of a resolution, but its effect was spoiled by being coupled with the threat that the British people (who did not care how they talked about their leaders at Home) would resent an outside attack on such a great leader as Mr. Lloyd George, who held a unique position in Europe. The Assembly naturally refused to be treated as school children and passed the following resolution: "This Assembly recommends to the Governor-General in Council that he may be pleased to convey a message from this Assembly to His Majesty's Government through the Secretary of State for India that it views with grave concern the pronouncement made by His Majesty's Prime Minister in the House of Commons on the 2nd of August 1922 and that it considers that the tenor of the whole speech and the sentiments therein are subversive of the declarations made by His Majesty and His Majesty's Ministers and that it is calculated to create serious apprehensions in the minds of this Assembly and of the people of this country both in the matter of attaining Swaraj and of the Indianisation of its services."

LAND ACQUISITION BILL.

According to the Indian Land Acquisition Act of 1894, Government have to acquire the land for the purposes of a company, and make over possession thereof to it, and thereafter, cease to have any control over the proceedings of this company in respect of the land so acquired compulsorily. The Indian Act has no provision in it, corresponding to those of the English Statutes, and a company after it gets possession of the land, can make any commercial use of it it likes, afterwards, at the cost of the original private proprietor. This is also a point which the legislature should take in hand with a view to meet grievances that may exist in connection therewith. It must be remembered that from one point of view all companies exist for the good of the public. At the same time it is perplexing to draw the line between classes of companies which are for public purposes, and those which are not.

Complaints are sometimes heard about the Government acquiring land for public bodies, the purpose for which such bodies have been constituted not being deemed to be public in the sense in which the word is understood by many.

What is the remedy? Is Mr. Ramayya's Bill calculated to meet the situation?

It seems that the objections raised against its scheme of procedure may be classified as follows:—

(a) That the question of the purpose for which the land is proposed to be acquired, if left to the decision of the Civil Courts, will cause great delay in the acquisition proceedings, out of all proportion to the benefits, if any, that may be expected from the procedure suggested.

(b) That, generally speaking, the Civil Courts are not themselves sufficiently equipped with the necessary knowledge for a proper exercise of the functions, with which they are proposed to be entrusted in respect of the public character of the declared purpose itself, or the suitability of the land to the purpose of the acquisition. It may be noted that any evidence that may be adduced before a Civil Court with regard to such matters, is bound to be of a conflicting character, being based upon personal opinion of individuals ranged on one side or the other to a large extent. The trying Court will not, in all probability, derive much enlightenment under the circumstances from the evidence before it.

(c) The general impracticability of the scheme of Mr. Ramayya's Bill.

It must be conceded that a great deal can be said with justice in favour of the objections which have been raised against the scheme of procedure in Mr. Ramayya's Bill, although there is a body of official opinion in favour of some points in it. Whether this Bill fails to get through or not, there should, it seems clear, be a movement without delay for removing the grievances which arise out of the compulsory acquisition of lands under the existing scheme of procedure, from which the public now suffer. Any other Bill aiming at piecemeal legislation is not also likely to meet the situation. The whole machinery of the Act of 1894 seems to require revision. Government should therefore appoint a committee to investigate into the matter. In this connection the English Statutes are likely to afford helpful guidance to the Indian Legislature.

Under the new Government of India Act, local bodies are bound to spring into existence in larger numbers than before. In respect of the acquisition of land by such bodies, local committees or boards properly constituted for the purpose, should be the judges as to the public purpose necessitating the acquisition within a specified area, also, as to the suitability of any piece of land proposed to be acquired to the purpose in view, but under the executive control of the Provincial Governments. These local bodies should also decide disputes between one party and another as to whether one's land is more fitted for the purposes of the acquisition, as in England. As for larger projects such as railways, canals, or similar undertakings which are continued from one Province to another, there should be a deliberative body for the whole of India, with competent co-opted members from the Provinces, or local areas likely to be affected by the proposed acquisition, according as the need for such members may arise from time to time. As regards acquisition of land for local purposes a scheme similar to the above obtains in England. Generally speaking, there, land is acquired for a public purpose by an Act of Parliament which gives authority either to the State or to a company to acquire land for its own purposes, and the general provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts, 1845, 1860, 1869, etc., settle particular incidental questions as they arise in course of the acquisition proceedings. The preamble to the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 and 9 Vict. c. 18) explains the expediency of the scheme of the Statute by stating that "it is expedient to comprise in one general Act sundry provisions usually introduced into Acts of Parliament relative to the acquisition of lands required for undertakings or works of a public nature, and to the compensation to be made for the same, and that as well for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of repeating such provisions in each of the several acts relating to such undertakings, as for ensuring greater uniformity in the provisions themselves." In India lands not being acquired by private Acts of the Legislature, but by an executive order of Government, the need for settling disputed questions by extraneous committee, concerning the declared public character of the purpose for which the lands are acquired under circumstances similar to those in England, as also, for considering the fitness of the land itself for the declared purpose, seems to be much greater. If machinery is provided in the English Statutes for the determination or decision of incidental questions which are bound to arise in course of acquisition proceedings, there does not seem to be any reason why His Majesty's Indian subjects should be left without it in another part of the Empire.

MAYNE'S HINDU LAW AND USAGE. Ninth Edition. Revised and edited by V. M. Coult's Trotter, M. A., Bar-at-Law, one of His Majesty's Judges of the Madras High Court. Higginbothams, Ltd., Madras. 1922.

We welcome this new edition of what is to this day the standard work on Hindu Law. We congratulate the author in not attempting to improve upon the historical and ethnological sketch of the original author with which the work opens. Much of it may not be, strictly speaking, of any legal value but one who wishes to appreciate Hindu Law as it is to-day and how it came to crystallise in its present form will find it both useful and suggestive. In the previous edition, the opinions and observations of John D. Mayne in this connection were in many places altered, modified or added to by the last editor, perhaps, because, they were not acceptable to him. But Mayne's opinions as such have a value of their own and the present editor has done wisely in restoring the original text of the author. With regard to the legal portion of the work, we also thoroughly approve of the plan followed by the present learned editor in keeping to the method of the treatment of the subject by the original author. Mayne built up his treatise on Hindu Law from the case law on the subject. He culled the cardinal principles of Hindu Law from the leading cases and also traced their development through later decisions. The present editor has done well in keeping to this plan and discarding the obsolete portions from earlier decisions. He has brought the work up to date not only by reference to recent decisions but by frequent consultation with the Indian members of the Madras Bar. He has had the advantage of discussing every point of importance with Mr. K. S. Krishnaswami Ayyangar and the learned editor says that the Chapter on Inheritance is more the work of this learned San'kritist and eminent lawyer than his own. We have now a number of excellent works on Hindu Law but in our view both to the student and the lawyer Mayne's Hindu law is invaluable. The work is handy, thorough and a quite safe guide on all crucial questions of Hindu Law.

THE LAW OF CIVIL APPEALS IN BRITISH INDIA. By Dr. Nand Lal, B.A., LL.B. (Cantab), LL.D.; Lahore. Lahore Law Journal, 14, Fane Road, near High Court. 1922.

This is a portly volume of over 750 pages and deals with Appeals from Original Decrees, Appellate Decrees, Appealable Orders, Appeals to the King in Council, Pauper Appeals, Appeals from Decrees based on Awards, Letters Patent Appeals and Appeals under Special Imperial and Local Acts. It possesses all the merits and all the defects of a treatise which seeks to combine in itself both a commentary and a digest of cases. The portion dealing with appeals under Special Imperial and Local Acts in particular might have been left out with advantage (the provisions of the various Civil Courts Acts excepted), because they are entirely disconnected and cannot for that reason lend themselves for scientific treatment, and the case-notes are not, as they hardly could be, without increasing the bulk of the book beyond all reasonable limits, exhaustive. As to the rest of the work we would have preferred a treatise which dealt more intensively with principles and less extensively with individual decisions. As it is, however, the book is a monument of industry and application. There is plenty of precious metal lying about, still awaiting to be separated from an abundance of dross. Presumably the spade-work the author has accomplished in this the first edition will be followed in the next by a real commentary on the Law of Civil Appeals in British India.

THE LAW OF LEGAL PRACTITIONERS IN BRITISH INDIA. By Harendra Chandra Sinha, Pleader. Published by Bandyendra Nath Palit Vakil, 9-1, Musuhmanpara Lane, Calcutta. 1922.

At this moment when a proposal for establishing a self-contained Bar for British India is pendin. consideration by the Government and the Legislature and is engaging the attention of all branches of the legal profession in the country, the appearance of a book which seeks to put together the scattered provisions of general and local statutes and statutory and other rules of practice bearing on the subject in a coherent and orderly manner is very opportune. The subject is dealt with under the following heads: (1) Enactments relating to Legal Practitioners in British India, (2) Different classes of legal practitioners, and their functions, powers and duties, (3) Qualifications, Admission and Certificates, (4) Unqualified legal practitioners, (5) Employment of legal practitioners, (6) Touts, (7) Removal and suspension, (8) Authority to bind clients, (9) Privileges, (10) Disabilities, (11) Liabilities, (12) Remuneration, (13) Taxation of fees and costs, (14) Attorney's lien for costs. There are four appendices bearing on (i) Qualifications and admission, (ii) Fees on Taxation, (iii) Recognised clerks and (iv) Petition writers. A carefully prepared subject index completes a treatise of great merit.

DESAI'S POINT-NOTED INDEX OF CASES, JUDICIALLY NOTICED. 1811—1921. Prepared and published by Balwantrai R. Desai, Barrister. 7th Edition. 1922. Price Rs. 17.

DESAI'S Index of Cases needs no introduction. To the busy practitioner, it is literally indispensable. A new edition of it cannot but be welcome.

THE LAW OF APPROVERS. By V. P. Mahadeva Aiyar, B.A., B.L., Madras. Published by the Law Printing House and the Lawyer's Companion Office, Mount Road. 1922.

This is a handy and useful publication, dealing as it does in a systematic and orderly manner with the whole of the law on the subject. This has been discussed under the following heads:—(1) A General Introduction, (2) Tender and acceptance of pardon, (3) Forfeiture of pardon, (4) Prosecution of Approver for giving false evidence, (5) Corroboration of Approver's Evidence, (6) Value of Approver's Confessions. The treatment is rounded up by a number of appendices followed by a subject index. English precedents have been freely resorted to and light derived therefrom upon each topic. Altogether it is a compact and useful addition to the Indian Lawyer's library.

ROMAN LAW. By M. C. Naidu, Barrister-at-Law. First Edition. Rangoon. The Art Publishing Co. 1922.

Beginners and others preparing for law examinations will find this compact little book, which in many matters strikes out a line of its own helpful. We regret the numerous printing mistakes which disfigure an otherwise well got-up manual.

We welcome the second edition of Mr. Modi's excellent treatise on medical jurisprudence. When the first edition of this book was published we had occasion to speak of it very favourably and the fact that a second edition has been called for within so short a time amply shows that we were not wrong in the estimate we made of the book. In this edition the book has been thoroughly revised and additions and alterations made so as to bring it up-to-date. We have no doubt that the present edition in which the usefulness of the book has been enhanced will receive the same treatment from the legal and medical professions as the first.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before WALMSLEY, J. CIVIL REVISION NO. 217 OF 1922. THE INDIAN GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATIVE AND TRADING CO., LTD., Defendant, Petitioner v. ABDUL RAHMAN SAWDAGAR, Plaintiff, Opposite Party. The 30th August 1922.

Carriers Act, sec. 9—Liability of common carriers—Proof of negligence—Onus.

The Plaintiff consigned on 19th May 1921 several bags of potatoes from A. S. Ghat, Calcutta, by the Defendant's steamer to Chittagong via Chandpur. The steamer reached Chandpur on 24th May 1921. Owing to the strike of the A. B. Railway Company, the steamer company could not make over the goods to the Railway Company and on the same day the goods were carried by the steamer to Naraingunj where upon an examination of the goods by a doctor on 1st June 1921 the major portion of the potatoes was condemned and the rest was sold on the next day by public auction. The price fetched was offered to the Plaintiff who refused to accept the same and instituted a suit in the Small Cause Court of Chittagong for recovery of the price of the goods sent by him. The Judge held that as common carriers they are liable to pay the price as they were guilty of negligence in not having communicated with the Plaintiff when they could not make over the goods to the Railway Company and in not having daily examined the potatoes and disposed of them at once before the major portion of them became rotten :

Held—(1) That the Company continued to be common carriers as long as the goods were in their custody, (2) and that the onus of proving want of negligence was not upon the Plaintiff but on the Defendant (1921) 1 K. B. Div. 257, referred to.

Bobu Monmatha Nath Mukerji for the Petitioner.

Babus Mohini Mohan Chakravarty and Paresh Chandra Sen for the Opposite Party.

S. C. C. Rule discharged with costs.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before WOODROFFE and SUHAWARDY, JJ. CIVIL REVISION No. 591 of 1921. MAHAMMAD ISMAIL, Objector, Petitioner v. SATYESH CHANDRA SARKAR, Applicant, Opposite Party. The 9th August 1922.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 170, cl. (3)—Transferee of non-transferable occupancy holding, if has an interest voidable on the sale and is entitled to deposit.

The Petitioner landlord sought to sell the holding of his occupancy raiyat Komorndi Sheikh in execution of a rent decree. The Opposite Party who claimed to have purchased the holding from the said raiyat applied to make a deposit of the decretal amount in Court under sec. 170, cl. (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Munsif of Katwa allowed the deposit by his order, dated the 10th May 1920. The landlord appealed. The Subordinate Judge of Burdwan held following the decision in 16 C. W. N. 421, that no appeal lay against that order of the Munsif. The appeal was therefore dismissed on this preliminary ground and the learned Judge did not enter into the merits of the appeal. Against this order of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 2nd May 1921 the landlord preferred an appeal (M. A. No. 244 of 1921) under sec. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and also obtained the present rule by an application under sec. 115 of that Code. Their Lordships held that no appeal lay and interfered in revision :

Held—That the Opposite Party was not entitled to make the deposit, and the order of the Munsif allowing the deposit was set aside.

A transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding not recognised by the landlord derives no interest by transfer as against the landlord, and his interest is not therefore voidable on the sale, and so he is not entitled to make a deposit under sec. 170, cl. (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before CUMING, J.—CIVIL REVISION No. 210 of 1922. MATI BISWAS v. HARIPADA PAL. The 28th July 1922.

Suit on a hand-note—Hand-note silent as to interest—If oral evidence admissible to show contemporaneous agreement to pay interest.

The Plaintiff, Opposite Party, sued the Petitioner for the recovery of money due on a hand-note alleged to have been executed on the 9th August 1926 with interest thereon at the rate of 12 per cent per annum. In the hand-note there was no stipulation for payment of any interest, but the Plaintiff set up an oral agreement to show that the Petitioner agreed to pay interest at the rate sued for. The Judge of the Small Cause Court at Krishnagar decreed the Plaintiff's suit in full. The Defendant thereupon moved the High Court and obtained the present Rule.

Babu Mrityunjay Chattopadhyay (with Babu Sudhiranjan Rai Chaudhury) in support of the rule contended that the hand-note being silent as to any interest payable in respect of the sum advanced, the Court below was in error in admitting evidence to prove a contemporaneous oral agreement thereof in view of sec. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. Lachmi Chand v. Hemendra Prosad, 18 C. W. N. 1260 and Banyndri v. Jagannath, 1 Pat. L. J. 71 were cited in support. Umes Chandra v. Mohini Mohan, 9 C. L. R. 301 and Sowdamini v. Spalding, 12 C. L. R. 163, which seem to support the contrary contention are both distinguishable.

Babu Bireswar Bagchi, in showing cause, stated that oral agreement was admissible in view of sec. 92, Proviso (2) and illustration (a) of the Indian Evidence Act, and contended that Sowdamini v. Spalding, 12 C. L. R. 163, which was in respect of a suit on a hand-note and Lala Himmat Sahai Singh v. Llewellyn, 11 Cal. 486, supported his contention:

Held—When a document evidencing a contract is formally drawn up, it is not open to the parties to adduce evidence of any contemporaneous oral agreement adding to the document. 18 C. W. N. 1260, followed. 9 C. L. R. 301 and 12 C. L. R. 163, distinguished.

Rule made absolute.
